

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

UC-NRLF

B 3 022 018

THE SACRED BOOKS OF THE EAST

London

HENRY FROWDE

OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS WAREHOUSE
AMEN CORNER, E.C.

New York

MACMILLAN & CO., 66 FIFTH AVENUE

THE SACRED BOOKS OF THE EAST

TRANSLATED

BY VARIOUS ORIENTAL SCHOLARS

AND EDITED BY

F. MAX MÜLLER

VOL. XLV

Oxford
AT THE CLARENDON PRESS

1895

[All rights reserved]

ROSE

Oxford

PRINTED AT THE CLARENDON PRESS

BY HORACE HART, PRINTER TO THE UNIVERSITY

G A I N A S Ū T R A S

TRANSLATED FROM PRAKR/IT

BY

HERMANN JACOBI

PART II

THE UTTARÂDHYAYANA SŪTRA

THE SŪTRAKR/TÂNGA SŪTRA

Oxford

AT THE CLARENDON PRESS

1895

[All rights reserved]

505
11/11/11
v. 4/5

CONTENTS.

INTRODUCTION	PAGE xiii
------------------------	--------------

UTTARÂDHYAYANA.

LECTURE	1. On discipline (especially for pupils) . . .	1
„	2. On troubles. (About the twenty-two things that cause trouble to monks) . . .	8
„	3. The four requisites (for the attainment of beatitude)	15
„	4. Impurity. (Carefulness required for obtaining the end).	18
„	5. Death against (and with) one's will . . .	20
„	6. The false ascetic. (Wrong conduct leads to perdition, right conduct to salvation) . . .	24
„	7. The parable of the ram, &c. (illustrative of the folly of the sinner who misses his chance of reaching a more exalted state of existence)	27
„	8. Kapila's verses (in praise of good conduct) . . .	31
„	9. The Pravragyâ of king Nami. (A dialogue between him and Indra who advised him to retain the royalty)	35
„	10. The leaf of the tree. (A sermon by Mahāvira on the punishment of the sinner and the reward of the righteous)	41
„	11. The very learned (monk; his virtues and his superiority)	46
„	12. Harikêsa, (a Kândâla, turned monk; his victory over a Brahman, whom he converts) . . .	50
„	13. Kîtra and Sambhûta. (A dialogue on the vanity of worldly pleasures) . . .	56
„	14. Ishukâra. (A legend, illustrating the excellence of a monastic life)	61

	PAGE
LECTURE 15. The true monk; (how he should conduct himself)	69
„ 16. The ten conditions of perfect chastity . . .	73
„ 17. The bad Sramana ; (what a monk should avoid)	77
„ 18. Saṅgaya . (King S. turned monk; he preaches that the state of a monk is preferable to that of a king; illustrations from Gaina history) .	80
„ 19. The son of Mrigā . (On the punishment in the hells)	88
„ 20. The great duty of the Nirgranthas . (A dialogue between king Srêṇika and a monk on the happiness obtained by righteousness. The bad monk is lost)	100
„ 21. Samudrapāla , (turned monk. On the duties of a monk)	108
„ 22. Rathanēmi . (The renunciation of Arishanēmi ; his wife Rāḡmatī exhorts Rathanēmi) . .	112
„ 23. Kēsi and Gautama . (The followers of Pārsva are brought over to the church of Mahāvīra)	119
„ 24. The Samitis (and the Guptis)	129
„ 25. The true sacrifice. (Gayaghōsha , the monk, converts Vigayaghōsha , the Brahman) . .	136
„ 26. The correct behaviour (of monks during the several parts of day and night)	142
„ 27. The bad bullocks (compared to bad pupils by Garga)	149
„ 28. The road to final deliverance. (On the fundamental principles of Gainism) . .	152
„ 29. The exertion in righteousness. (On the seventy-three articles necessary for reaching perfection)	158
„ 30. The road of penance. (On external and internal austerities).	174
„ 31. Mode of life. (A list of articles of the Gaina faith according to the number of their subdivisions)	180
„ 32. The causes of carelessness; (what excites the passions and produces Karman)	184

	PAGE
LECTURE 33. The nature of Karman, (and the subdivisions of it)	192
„ 34. On Lēsyā	196
„ 35. The houseless monk. (The chief duties of a monk)	203
„ 36. On living beings and things without life. (The contents of this Lecture are detailed in note 2, pp. 206, 207)	206

SŪTRAKR/TAṄGA.

FIRST BOOK.

LECTURE 1. The doctrine. (On some heretical doctrines)	235-248
Chapter 1. (Materialists, v. 8; Vedāntins, v. 9; other materialists, vv. 11, 12; Akriyāvādins, v. 13; forerunners of the Vaisēshikas, v. 15; Bauddhas, v. 17; Gāṇḍāyās , v. 18)	235
Chapter 2. (Fatalists, vv. 1-3; Agnostics, v. 17; Kriyāvādins, v. 24; Buddhists, vv. 25-28, cf. p. 414)	239
Chapter 3. (Paurāṇikas, vv. 6-8; the followers of Gōśāla, vv. 11, 12; Vainayikas, v. 14)	243
Chapter 4. (Some popular beliefs, vv. 6, 7. Conclusion)	246
„ 2. The destruction of Karman; (how to lead a holy life)	249-261
Chapter 1	249
Chapter 2	253
Chapter 3	257
„ 3. The knowledge of troubles	261-271
Chapter 1. (A monk encounters many difficulties)	261
Chapter 2. (He is tempted back to domestic life)	263
Chapter 3. (He easily desponds. The opinion refuted that a monk should not provide a sick brother with food)	265

	PAGE
LECTURE 3. Chapter 4. (Several objections removed) .	268
„ 4. Knowledge of women	271-278
Chapter 1. (How women tempt a monk) .	271
Chapter 2. (How they treat him afterwards) .	275
„ 5. Description of the hells	279-286
Chapter 1	279
Chapter 2	283
„ 6. Praise of Mahāvīra	287
„ 7. Description of the wicked. (No living beings should be destroyed; no merit in ablutions and tending the sacrificial fire. A monk should not be selfish)	292
„ 8. On exertion. (Exertion not leading to works recommended)	297
„ 9. The Law. (What a monk should abstain from)	301
„ 10. Carefulness. (Some more injunctions and prohibitions)	306
„ 11. The Path. (The same subject continued and concluded)	310
„ 12. The creed. (On the four heresies: Agnos- ticism, v. 2; Vinayavāda, v. 3; Akriyāvāda, vv. 4-10; Kriyāvāda, v. 11 ff.)	315
„ 13. The real truth. (Some duties of a pious monk)	320
„ 14. The Nirgrantha. (The same subject con- tinued)	324
„ 15. The Yamakas. (Miscellaneous topics treated in artificial verses)	329
„ 16. The song. (On the virtues of a true monk) .	333

SECOND BOOK.

LECTURE 1. The Lotus. (The parable of the Lotus. The Materialists, § 14 ff. Another school of Materialists and the forerunners of the Vaisēshikas, § 20 ff. The Vēdāntins, § 25 ff. The fatalists, § 30 ff. Exhortation to follow the true Law, § 35 ff.)	335
--	-----

	PAGE
LECTURE 2. On activity. (The twelve kinds of committing sin, and sinless actions. Some wicked practices described, § 25 ff. Some more wicked practices, § 60 ff. Right conduct of monks, § 69 ff.; of laymen, § 75 ff. Refutation of the 363 heretical philosophical schools, § 79 ff. Conclusion)	355
„ 3. Knowledge of food. (On the generation of living beings).	388
„ 4. Renunciation of activity. (An action is sinful though it be done unconsciously)	398
„ 5. Freedom from error; (what should be maintained and what not)	405
„ 6. Âdraka; (his dispute with Gôrâla, a Buddhist, a Vêdic priest, a Vêdântin, and a Hastitâpasa)	409
„ 7. Nâlandâ. (Udaka, a follower of Pârsva, is converted by Gautama)	419
INDEX OF NAMES AND SUBJECTS	437
INDEX OF SANSKRIT AND PRÂKRIT WORDS	443

Transliteration of Oriental Alphabets adopted for the Translations of the Sacred Books of the East	453
---	-----

INTRODUCTION

TEN years have elapsed since the first part of my translation of Gaina Sûtras appeared. During that decennium many and very important additions to our knowledge of Gainism and its history have been made by a small number of excellent scholars. The text of the canonical books, together with good commentaries in Sanskrit and Guzeratî, has been made accessible in fair editions published by native scholars in India. Critical editions of two of them have been published by Professors Leumann¹ and Hoernle²; and the latter scholar has added a careful translation and ample illustrations to his edition of the text. A general survey of the whole Gaina literature has been given by Professor Weber in his catalogue of the Berlin Manuscripts³ and in his learned treatise⁴ on the sacred literature of the Gainas. The development of Gaina learning and science has been studied by Professor Leumann, and some Gaina legends and their relations to those of the Brahmins and Buddhists have been investigated by the same scholar⁵. An important document for our knowledge of the old history of the Svêtâmbara sect has been edited

¹ Das Aupapâtika Sûtra, in the Abhandlungen für die Kunde des Morgenlandes, vol. viii; and Dasavaikâlîka Sûtra und Niryukti, in the Journal of the German Oriental Society, vol. xlv.

² The Uvâsaga Dasâo: (in the Bibliotheca Indica), vol. i. Text and Commentary, Calcutta, 1890; vol. ii. Translation, 1888.

³ Berlin, 1888 and 1892.

⁴ In the Indische Studien, vol. xvi, p. 211 ff., and xvii, p. 1 ff.; translated in the Indian Antiquary and edited separately, Bombay, 1893.

⁵ In the Actes du VI Congrès International des Orientalistes, section Arienne, p. 469 ff., in the 5th and 6th vols. of the Wiener Zeitschrift für die Kunde des Morgenlandes, and in the 48th vol. of the Journal of the German Oriental Society.

by myself¹, and the history of some of their Gakkhas has been made known from their lists of teachers by Hoernle and Klatt. The last-named scholar, whom we have all but lost by this time, has prepared a biographical dictionary of all Gaina writers and historical persons, and he has issued specimens of this great Onomasticon, while Hofrat Bühler has written a detailed biography of the famous encyclopaedist Hēmaṅdra². The same scholar has deciphered the ancient inscriptions, and discussed the sculptures excavated by Dr. Führer at Mathurā³, and the important inscriptions at Sravana Belgola have been edited by Mr. Lewis Rice⁴; M. A. Barth has reviewed our knowledge of Gainism⁵, and likewise Bühler in a short paper⁶. Lastly Bhandarkar has given a most valuable sketch of the whole of Gainism⁷. All these additions to our knowledge of Gainism (and I have but mentioned the most remarkable ones) have shed so much clear light on the whole subject that little room is left now for mere guesswork, and the true historical and philological method can be applied to all its parts. Still some of the principal problems require elucidation, while the proffered solution of others is not accepted by all scholars. I, therefore, gladly avail myself of this opportunity to discuss some of the disputed points, for the settling of which the works translated in this volume offer valuable materials.

It is now admitted by all that Nātaputta (Gñātriputra), who is commonly called Mahāvīra or Vardhamāna, was a contemporary of Buddha; and that the *Niganthas*⁸

¹ The Parisishāparvan by Hēmaṅdra, Bibliotheca Indica.

² Denkschriften der philos.-histor. Classe der kaiserl. Akademie der Wissenschaften, vol. xxxvii, p. 171 ff.

³ Wiener Zeitschrift für die Kunde des Morgenlandes, vols. ii and iii. Epigraphia Indica, vols. i and ii.

⁴ Bangalore, 1889.

⁵ The Religions of India. Bulletin des Religions de l'Inde, 1889-94.

⁶ Über die indische Secte der Jaina. Wien, 1887.

⁷ Report for 1883-84.

⁸ Nigantha is apparently the original form of the word, since it is thus spelled in the Asōka inscription, in Pāli, and occasionally by the Gainas, though the phonetic laws of all three idioms would have given preference to the form niggantha, the more frequent spelling in Gaina works.

(Nirgranthas), now better known under the name of Gainas or Ārhatas, already existed as an important sect at the time when the Buddhist church was being founded. But it is still open to doubt whether the religion of the early Nirgranthas was essentially the same as that taught in the canonical and other books of the present Gainas, or underwent a great change up to the time of the composition of the Siddhānta. In order to come nearer the solution of this question, it may be desirable to collect from the published Buddhist works, as the oldest witnesses we can summon, all available information about the Niganthas, their doctrines and religious practices.

In the Āṅguttara Nikāya, III, 74, a learned prince of the Likkhavis of Vaisālī, *Abhaya*¹, gives the following account of some Nigantha doctrines: 'The Nigantha Nātaputta, sir, who knows and sees all things, who claims perfect knowledge and faith (in the following terms): "walking and standing, sleeping or waking, I am always possessed of perfect knowledge and faith;" teaches the annihilation by austerities of the old Karman, and the prevention by inactivity of new Karman. When Karman ceases, misery ceases; when misery ceases, perception ceases; when perception ceases, every misery will come to an end. In this way a man is saved by pure annihilation of sin (niggarā) which is really effective.'

The Gaina counterpart to these tenets can be collected from the Uttarādhyayana XXIX. 'By austerities he cuts off Karman,' § 27. 'By renouncing activity he obtains inactivity; by ceasing to act he acquires no new Karman, and destroys the Karman he had acquired before,' § 37. The last stages in this process are fully described in §§ 71,

¹ There are apparently two persons of this name. The other Abhaya, a son of king Śrēṇika, was a patron of the Gainas, and is frequently mentioned in their legends and in the canonical books. In the Magghima Nikāya 58 (Abhayakumāra Sutta) it is related that the Nigantha Nātaputta made him engage in a disputation with Buddha. The question was so adroitly framed that whether the answer was Yes or No, it involved Buddha in self-contradiction. But the plan did not succeed, and Abhaya was converted by Buddha. There is nothing in this account to elucidate the doctrines of Nātaputta.

72. And again, in XXXII, v. 7, we read : ' Karman is the root of birth and death, and birth and death they call misery.' The nearly identical verses 34, 47, 60, 73, 86, 99 may be thus condensed : ' But a man who is indifferent to the object of the senses, and to the feelings of the mind [this comes nearest to the Buddhist vêdanâ perception], is free from sorrows ; though still in the Samsâra, he is not afflicted by that long succession of pains. just as the leaf of the Lotus (is not moistened) by water.'

The above assertion that Nâtaputta claimed the possession of perfect knowledge and faith, requires no further proof ; for it is one of the fundamental dogmas of the Gainas.

Another piece of information about Nigantha doctrines may be gathered from the Mahāvagga VI, 31 (S. B. E., vol. xvii, p. 108 ff.) There a story is told of Sîha¹, the general of the Likkhavis, who was a lay disciple of Nâtaputta. He wanted to pay the Buddha a visit, but Nâtaputta tried to dissuade him from it, because the Niganthas held the Kriyâvâda, while the Buddha taught the Akriyâvâda. Sîha, however, setting his master's prohibition at naught, went to the Buddha on his own account, and was, of course, converted by him. Now the statement that the Niganthas embraced the Kriyâvâda is borne out by our texts ; for in the Sûtrakṛitāṅga I, 12, 21, below, p. 319, it is said that a perfect ascetic 'is entitled to expound the Kriyâvâda ;' and this doctrine is thus expressed in the Ākārāṅga Sûtra I, 1, 1, 4 (part i, p. 2) : 'He believes in soul, believes in the world, believes in reward, believes in action (believed to be our own doing in such judgments as these) : " I did it ;" " I shall cause another to do it ;" " I shall allow another to do it." '

Another lay disciple of Mahāvîra, converted by the Buddha, was Upâli. As narrated in the Magghima Nikâya 56, he ventured upon a dispute with him whether the sins of the mind are heaviest, as the Buddha teaches, or the sins of the body, as the Nigantha Nātaputta contends. In the beginning of the discourse Upāli states that his master uses the term danda, punishment, for what is commonly called kamma, deed, act. This is true, though not quite to the letter; for the word kamma occurs also in the Gaina Sūtras in that sense. The term danda, however, is at least as frequently used. Thus, in the Sūtrakṛitāṅga II, 2, p. 357 ff., the thirteen kinds of 'committing sins' are treated of, and in the first five cases the word which I have translated 'committing sins' is in the original danda-samādāne, and in the remaining cases kiriyaṭhāne, i.e. kriyāsthāna.

¹ The name Sîha occurs in the Bhagavatî (Calcutta edition, p. 1267, see Hoernle, Uvâsaga Dasâo Appendix, p. 10) as that of a disciple of Mahāvîra ; but as he was a monk, he cannot be identified with his namesake in the Mahāvagga.

The Nigantha Upāli goes on to explain that there are three dandas, the danda of body, that of speech, and that of mind. This agrees with the Gaina doctrine expressed in nearly the same words in the Sthānāṅga Sūtra, 3rd uddēsaka (see Indian Antiquary, IX, p. 159).

The second statement of Upāli, that the Niganthas consider sins of the body more important than sins of the mind, is in perfect harmony with Gaina views. For in the Sūtrakṛitāṅga II, 4, p. 398 ff., the question is discussed whether sins may be committed unconsciously, and it is boldly answered in the affirmative (compare note 6, p. 399); and in the Sixth Lecture of the same book (p. 414) the Buddhists are severely ridiculed for maintaining that it depends on the intention of the man whether a deed of his be a sin or not.

In the Āṅguttara Nikāya III, 70, 3, some practices of Nigantha laymen are discussed. I translate the passage thus: 'O Visākhā, there is a class of Samānas who are called Niganthas. They exhort a Sāvaka thus: "Well, sir, you must desist from doing injury to beings in the East beyond a yōgana from here, or to those in the West, North, South, always beyond a yōgana from here." In this way they enjoin tenderness by making him spare some living beings; in this way they enjoin cruelty by making him not spare other living beings.' It is not difficult to recognise under these words the Digvirati vow of the Gainas, which consists in laying down the limits beyond which one shall not travel nor do business in the different directions. A man who keeps this vow cannot, of course, do any harm to beings beyond the limits within which he is obliged to keep. This is so distorted by the hostile sect as to lay the rule under discussion open to blame. We cannot expect one sect to give a fair and honest exposition of the tenets of their opponents; it is but natural that they should put them in such a form as to make the objections to be raised against them all the better applicable. The Gainas were not a whit better in this respect than the Bauddhas, and they have retorted upon them in the same way; witness their misrepresentation of the Buddhist idea that a deed becomes a sin only through the sinful intention of the doer, in a passage in the present volume, p. 414, v. 26 ff., where the sound principle of the Buddhists is ridiculed by applying it to a fictitious and almost absurd case.

The passage in the Āṅguttara Nikāya, which we have just discussed, goes on as follows: 'On the Upôsatha day they exhort a Sāvaka thus: "Well, sir, take off all your clothes and declare: I belong to nobody, and nobody belongs to me." Now his parents know him to be their son, and he knows them to be his parents. His son or wife know him to be their father or husband, and he knows them to be his son or wife. His slaves and servants know him to be their master, and he knows them to be his slaves and servants. Therefore (the Niganthas) make him use lying speech at the time when he makes the above declarations. On this account I charge him with lying speech. After the lapse of that night he enjoys pleasures (by means of things) that were not freely given. On this account I charge him with taking of what is not freely given.'

According to this statement, the duties of a Nigantha layman became, during the Upôsatha days, equal to those of a monk; it was on common days only that the difference between layman and monk was realised. This description, however, does not quite agree with the Pôsaha rules of the Gainas. Bhandarkar gives the following definition of Pôsaha according to the Tattvārthasāradīpikā, which agrees with what we know about it from other sources: 'Pôsaha, i.e. to observe a fast or eat once only or one dish only on the two holy days (the eighth and the fourteenth of each fortnight), after having given up bathing, unguents, ornaments, company of women, odours, incense, lights, &c., and assumed renunciation as an ornament.' Though the Pôsaha observances of the present Gainas are apparently more severe than those of the Buddhists, still they fall short of the above description of the Nigantha rules; for a Gaina layman does not, to my knowledge, take off his clothes during the Pôsaha days, though he discards all ornaments and every kind of luxury; nor must he pronounce any formula of renunciation similar to that which the monks utter on entering the order. Therefore, unless the Buddhist account contains some mistake or a gross misstatement, it would appear that the Gainas have abated somewhat in their rigidity with regard to the duties of laymen.

Buddhaghôsa, in his commentary on the Brahmagāla Sutta, Dīgha Nikāya I, 2, 38¹, mentions the Niganthas as holding the opinion, discussed in the text, that the soul has no colour, in contradistinction to the Āgīvikas, who divide mankind into six classes according to the colour of the Ātman; both Niganthas and Āgīvikas, however, agree in maintaining that the soul continues to exist after death and is free from ailments (arôḡô). Whatever may be the exact meaning of the last expression, it is clear that the above description squares with the opinions of the Gainas about the nature of the soul, as described below, p. 172 f.

In another passage (l.c. p. 168) Buddhaghôsa says that Nigantha Nātaputta considers cold water to be possessed of life (so kira sītôdakê sattasaññi hôti), for which reason he does not use it. This doctrine of the Gainas is so generally known that I need not bring forward any quotation from the Sûtras in support of its genuineness.

This is nearly all the information on the doctrines of the ancient Niganthas which I have been able to gather from the Pāli texts. Though it is less than we desire, its value is not to be underrated. For with one exception all the doctrines and usages of the ancient Niganthas mentioned agree with those of the present Gainas, and they comprise some of the fundamental ideas of Gainism. It is therefore not probable that the doctrines of the Gainas have undergone a great change in the interval between the quoted Buddhist records and the composition of the Gaina canon.

¹ Sumaṅgala Vilāsinī, p. 119 of the Pali Text Society edition.

I have purposely deferred the discussion of the classical passage on the doctrines of Nigantha Nātaputta, because it leads us to a new line of inquiry. The passage in question occurs in the Sāmaññaphala Sutta of the *Dīgha Nikāya*¹. I translate it in accordance with Buddhaghōsa's comment in the Sumaṅgala Vilāsinī. 'Here, great king, a Nigantha is protected by restraint in four directions (kāṭu-yāmasamvarasamvutō). How, great king, is a Nigantha protected by restraint in four directions? Here, great king, a Nigantha abstains from all (cold) water, he abstains from all bad deeds, by abstinence from all bad deeds he is free from sins, he realises abstinence from all bad deeds. In this way, great king, a Nigantha is protected by restraint in four directions. And, great king, because he is thus protected, the Nigantha Nātaputta's soul is exalted, is restrained, is well settled².'—This is, certainly, not an accurate nor an exhaustive description of the Gaina creed, though it contains nothing alien from it, and successfully imitates the language of the Gaina Sūtras. As I have already explained elsewhere³, I think the term kāṭu-yāmasamvarasamvutō has been misunderstood not only by the commentator, but also by the author of the text. For

¹ Page 57 of the edition in the Pali Text Society.

² The translations of Gogerly and of Burnouf in Grimblot, Sept Suttas Pālis, were made without the help of a commentary, and may, therefore, be passed by. It is, however, open to doubt whether Buddhaghōsa has drawn his information from genuine tradition, or had to rely on conjectures of his own.

³ See my paper, 'On Mahāvīra and his Predecessors,' in the Indian Antiquary, IX, 158 ff., where some of the above problems have been treated.

the Pāli kātuyāma is equivalent to the Prākṛit kātug-gāma, a well-known Gaina term which denotes the four vows of Pārśva in contradistinction to the five vows (pañcā mahāvaya) of Mahāvīra. Here, then, the Buddhists, I suppose, have made a mistake in ascribing to Nātaputta Mahāvīra a doctrine which properly belonged to his predecessor Pārśva. This is a significant mistake; for the Buddhists could not have used the above term as descriptive of the Nigantha creed unless they had heard it from followers of Pārśva, and they would not have used it if the reforms of Mahāvīra had already been generally adopted by the Niganthas at the time of the Buddha. I, therefore, look on this blunder of the Buddhists as a proof for the correctness of the Gaina tradition, that followers of Pārśva actually existed at the time of Mahāvīra.

Before following up this line of inquiry, I have to call attention to another significant blunder of the Buddhists: they call Nātaputta an Aggivêśana, i.e. Agnivaśyâyana; according to the Gainas, however, he was a Kāśyapa, and we may credit them in such particulars about their own Tīrthakara. But Sudharman, his chief disciple, who in the Sûtras is made the expounder of his creed, was an Agnivaśyâyana, and as he played a prominent part in the propagation of the Gaina religion, the disciple may often have been confounded by outsiders with the master, so that the Gôtra of the former was erroneously assigned to the latter. Thus by a double blunder the Buddhists attest the existence of Mahāvīra's predecessor Pārśva and of his chief disciple Sudharman.

That Pārśva was a historical person, is now admitted by all as very probable; indeed, his followers, especially Kêsi¹, who seems to have been the leader of the sect at the time of Mahāvīra, are frequently mentioned in Gaina Sûtras in such a matter-of-fact way, as to give us no reason for doubting the authenticity of those records. The legend in the Uttarādhyayana, Lecture XXIII, how the union of the old and the new church was effected, is of much interest in this respect. Kēsi and Gautama, the representatives and leaders of the two branches of the Gaina church, both at the head of their pupils, meet in a park near Srāvastī; the differences in their creed concerning the number of great vows, and the use or disuse of clothes are explained away without further discussion, and full harmony with regard to the fundamental ethical ideas is satisfactorily established by the readiness with which allegorical expressions of the one speaker are understood and explained by the other. There seems to have been some estrangement, but no hostility between the two branches of the church; and though the members of the older branch invariably are made to adopt the Law of Mahāvīra, 'which enjoins five vows,' it may be imagined that they continued in some of their old practices, especially with regard to the use of clothes, which Mahāvīra had abandoned. On this assumption we can account for the division of the church in Svêtāmbaras and Digambaras, about the origin of which both sects have contradictory legends¹. There was apparently no sudden rupture; but an original diversity (such as e.g. subsists now between the several Gakkhas of the Svêtāmbaras) ripened into division, and in the end brought about the great schism.

¹ In the Râguprasnî Pārśva has a discussion with king Paësi and converts him, see Actes du VI Congrès International des Orientalistes, vol. iii, p. 490 ff.

The records in the Buddhist Canon are not repugnant to our views about the existence of the Niganthas before Nātaputta; for the Niganthas must have been an important sect at the time when Buddhism took its rise. This may be inferred from the fact that they are so frequently mentioned in the Pitakas as opponents or converts of Buddha and his disciples; and as it is nowhere said or even merely implied that the Niganthas were a newly-founded sect, we may conclude that they had already existed a considerable time before the advent of the Buddha. This conclusion is supported by another fact. Makkhali Gôsāla, a contemporary of Buddha and Mahāvīra, divided mankind into six classes¹. Of these, according to Buddhaghōsa², the third class contains the Niganthas. Gōsāla probably would not have ranked them as a separate, i. e. fundamental subdivision of mankind, if they had only recently come into existence. He must have looked upon them as a very important, and at the same time, an old sect, in the same way in which, in my opinion, the early Buddhists looked upon them. As a last argument in favour of my theory I may mention that in the Magghima Nikāya 35, a disputation between the Buddha and Sakkaka, the son of a Nigantha, is narrated. Sakkaka is not a Nigantha himself, as he boasts of having vanquished Nātaputta in disputation³, and, moreover, the tenets he defends are not those of the Gainas. Now when a famous controversialist, whose father was a Nigantha, was a contemporary of the Buddha, the Niganthas can scarcely have been a sect founded during Buddha's life.

¹ See my paper on the origin of the Svêtāmbara and Digambara sects in the Journal of the German Oriental Society, vol. xxxviii, p. 1 ff.

Let us now confront the records of the Gainas about the philosophical doctrines of heretics, which they had to combat, with such as the Buddhists describe. In the Sūtrakrītāṅga II, 1, 15 (p. 339 f.) and 21 f. (p. 343) two materialistic theories which have much in common are spoken of. The first passage treats of the opinion of those who contend that the body and the soul are one and the same thing; the second passage is concerned with the doctrine that the five elements are eternal and constitute everything. The adherents of either philosophy maintain that it is no sin to kill living beings. Similar opinions are, in the Sāmaññaphala Sutta, ascribed to Pūraṇa Kassapa and Agita Kēsakambalī. The former denies that there is such a thing as sin or merit. Agita Kēsakambalī holds that nothing real corresponds to the current transcendental ideas. He moreover maintains: 'Man (purisô) consists of the four elements; when he dies, earth returns to earth, water to water, fire to fire, wind to wind, and the organs of sense merge into air (or space)¹. Four bearers with the hearse carry the corpse to the place of cremation (or, while it is burned) they make lamentations; the dove-coloured bones remain, the offerings are reduced to ashes.' The last passage recurs with few alterations in the Sûtrakṛitāṅga, p. 340: 'Other men carry the corpse away to burn it. When it has been consumed by fire, only dove-coloured bones remain, and the four bearers return with the hearse to their village².'

¹ Sāmaññaphala Sutta, Dīgha Nikāya II, 20.

² Sumaṅgala Vilāsinī, p. 162. Buddhaghōsa expressly states that Gōsāla reckoned the Niganthas lower than his own lay disciples, who form the fourth class.—As Buddhaghōsa does not take umbrage at Gōsāla's reckoning the Bhikkhus still lower, it is clear that he did not identify the Bhikkhus with the Buddhist monks.

³ See p. 250 of the Pali Text Society edition.

In connection with the second materialistic system (p. 343, § 22, and p. 237 f., vv. 15, 16) a variety of it is mentioned, which adds the permanent Ātman or soul as a sixth to the five permanent elements. This seems to have been a primitive or a popular form of the philosophy which we now know under the name of Vaisêshika. To this school of philosophy we must perhaps assign Pakudha Kakâyana of Buddhist record. He maintained³ that there are seven eternal, unchangeable, mutually independent things: the four elements, pleasure, pain, and the soul. As they have no influence upon one another, it is impossible to do any real harm to anybody. I confess that to maintain the eternal existence of pleasure and pain (sukha and dukkha) and to deny their influence on the soul, seems to me absurd; but the Buddhists have perhaps misstated the original tenets. At any rate, the views of Pakudha Kakâyana

¹ Ākāra; it is not reckoned as a fifth element in the Buddhist account, but it is so in that of the Gainas, see below, p. 343, and p. 237, verse 15. This is a verbal, rather than a material difference.

² I put here the original texts side by side so that their likeness may be more obvious:

âsandipañkamâ purisâ matam âdâya gakkhanti yâva âlâhanâ padâni paññâpentî, kâpôtakâni attâhîni bhavanti, bhassantâ hutiyô.

âdahanâe parêhi niggai, aganigghâmitê sarîre kavôtavannâim attâhîni âsandipañkamâ purisâ gâmam pakkâgakkhanti.

³ Loc. cit., p. 56.

come under the denomination of Akriyāvāda; and in this they differ from the Vaisēshika proper, which is a Kriyāvāda system. As these two terms are frequently used both by Buddhists and Gainas, it will not be amiss to define them more accurately. Kriyāvāda is the doctrine which teaches that the soul acts or is affected by acts. Under this head comes Gainism, and of Brahmanical philosophies Vaisēshika and Nyāya (which, however, are not expressly quoted in the canonical books of either Buddhists or Gainas), and apparently a great many systems of which the names have not been preserved, but the existence of which is implied in our texts. Akriyāvāda is the doctrine which teaches either that a soul does not exist, or that it does not act or is not affected by acts. Under this subdivision fall the different schools of materialists; of Brahmanical philosophies the Vēdānta, Sāṅkhya, and Yōga; and the Buddhists. Of the latter the doctrines of the Kṣhāṇikavādins and the Sūnyavādins are alluded to in Sūtrakṛitāṅga I, 14, verses 4 and 7. It may be mentioned here that the Vēdāntists or their opinions are frequently mentioned in the Siddhānta; in the Sūtrakṛitāṅga the Vēdānta is the third heresy described in the First Lecture of the Second Book, p. 344; it is also adverted to in the Sixth Lecture, p. 417. But as no professor of it was among the six heretical teachers (titthiya) of the Buddhists, we may pass them over here¹.

The fourth heresy discussed in the First Lecture of the Second Book of the Sūtrakṛitāṅga² is Fatalism. In the Sāmaññaphala Sutta this system is expounded by Makkhali Gōsāla in the following words³: 'Great king, there is no cause, nor any previously existing principle productive of the pollution of sentient beings; their defilement is uncaused and unproduced by anything previously existing. There is no cause nor any previously existing principle productive of the purity of sentient beings : their purity is uncaused and unproduced by anything previously existing. For their production there is nothing that results from the conduct of the individuals, nothing from the actions of others, nothing from human effort : they result neither from power nor effort, neither from manly fortitude nor manly energy. Every sentient being, every insect, every living thing, whether animal or vegetable¹, is destitute of intrinsic force, power, or energy, but, being held by the necessity of its nature, experiences happiness or misery in the six forms of existence, &c.' The explanation of these doctrines in the Sûtrakṛitāṅga (l.c.), though less wordy, comes to the same ; it does not, however, expressly ascribe them to Gôśāla, the son of Makkhali.

¹ It is worthy of remark that the Vēdāntists play no conspicuous part, if any, among Buddha's opponents. As they were, however, the foremost of Brahmanical philosophers, we must conclude that Brahmins of learning held aloof from the classes of society to which the new religion appealed.

² Page 345 f., see also p. 239.

³ Grimblot, Sept Suttas Pālis, p. 170.

The Gainas enumerate four principal schools of philosophy² : Kriyāvāda, Akriyāvāda, Agñānavāda, and Vainayikavāda. The views of the Agñānikas, or Agnostics, are not clearly stated in the texts, and the explanation of the commentators of all these philosophies which I have given in note 2, p. 83, is vague and misleading. But from Buddhist writings we may form a pretty correct idea of what Agnosticism was like. It is, according to the Sāmaññaphala Sutta, the doctrine of Saṅgaya Bêlatthiputta, and is there stated in the following way³ : ' If you inquire of me whether there be a future state of being, I answer : If I experience a future state of existence, I will then explain the nature of that state. If they inquire, Is it after this manner ? that is not my concern. Is it after that fashion? that is not my concern. Is it different from these? that is not my concern. Is it not? that is not my concern. No, is it not? It is no concern of mine.' In the same way he e. g. refuses a definite answer to the questions whether the Tathâgata is after death, or is not; is and is not at the same time, is not nor is not at the same time. It is evident that the Agnostics examined all modes of expression of the existence or non-existence of a thing, and if it were anything transcendental or beyond human experience, they negatived all those modes of expression.

¹ In the original: sabbê sattâ, sabbê pâṇâ, sabbê bhûtâ, sabbê g'ivâ. The same enumeration frequently occurs in Gaina Sûtras, and has, in my translation, been abbreviated in 'all classes of living beings.' Buddhaghôsa's explanation has been thus rendered by Hoernle, Uvâsaga Dasâo, Appendix II, p. 16: 'In the term all beings (sabbê sattâ) he comprises camels, oxen, asses, and other animals without exception. The term all sensitive beings (sabbê pâṇâ) he uses to denote those with one sense, those with two senses, and so forth. The term all generated beings (sabbê bhûtâ) he uses with reference to those that are generated or produced from an egg or from the womb. The term all living beings (sabbê g'ivâ) he uses with reference to rice, barley, wheat, and so forth ; in these he conceives that there is life, because it is their nature to grow.'

² See pp. 83, 291, 316, 385.

³ Grimblot, l. c., p. 174.

The records of the Buddhists and Gainas about the philosophical ideas current at the time of the Buddha and Mahāvîra, meagre though they be, are of the greatest importance to the historian of that epoch. For they show us the ground on which, and the materials with which, a religious reformer had to build his system. The similarity between some of those 'heretical' doctrines on the one side, and Gaina or Buddhist ideas on the other, is very suggestive, and favours the assumption that the Buddha, as well as Mahāvîra, owed some of his conceptions to these very heretics, and formulated others under the influence of the controversies which were continually going on with them. Thus, I think, that in opposition to the Agnosticism of Sañgaya, Mahāvîra has established the Syâdvâda. For as the Agñānavâda declares that of a thing beyond our experience the existence, or non-existence or simultaneous existence and non-existence, can neither be affirmed nor denied, so in a similar way, but one leading to contrary results, the Syâdvâda declares that 'you can affirm the existence of a thing from one point of view (syâd asti), deny it from another (syâd nâsti); and affirm both existence and non-existence with reference to it at different times (syâd asti nâsti). If you should think of affirming existence and non-existence at the same time from the same point of view, you must say that the thing cannot be spoken of (syâd avaktavyaḥ). Similarly, under certain circumstances, the affirmation of existence is not possible (syād asti avaktavyaḥ); of non-existence (syān nāsti avaktavyaḥ); and also of both (syād asti nāsti avaktavyaḥ)¹.

This is the famous Saptabhaṅginaya of the Gainas. Would any philosopher have enunciated such truisms, unless they served to silence some dangerous opponents? The subtle discussions of the Agnostics had probably bewildered and misled many of their contemporaries. Consequently the Syādvāda must have appeared to them as a happy way leading out of the maze of the Agñānavāda. It was the weapon with which the Agnostics assailed the enemy, turned against themselves. Who knows how many of their followers went over to Mahāvīra's creed convinced by the truth of the Saptabhaṅginaya!

We can trace, I imagine, the influence of Agnosticism also in the doctrine of the Buddha about the Nirvāṇa, as it is stated in Pāli books. Professor Oldenberg was the first to draw attention to the decisive passages which prove beyond the possibility of doubt that the Buddha declined answering the question whether the Tathāgata (i.e. the liberated soul, or rather principle of individuality) is after death or not. If the public of his time had not been accustomed to be told that some things, and those of the greatest interest, were beyond the ken of the human mind, and had not acquiesced in such answers, it certainly would not have lent a willing ear to a religious reformer who declined to speak out on what in Brahmanical philosophy is considered the end and goal of all speculations. As it is, Agnosticism seems to have prepared the way for the Buddhist doctrine of the Nirvāṇa². It is worthy of note

¹ Bhandarkar, Report for 1883-4, p. 95 f.

² The reticence of Buddha on the nature of the Nirvāṇa may have been wise at his time; but it was fraught with very important results for the development of the church. For his followers, having to hold their own against such split-hair dialecticians as the Brahmanical philosophers, were almost driven to enunciate more explicit ideas about the great problem which the founder of the church had left unsolved. The tendency to supply the crowning stone to an edifice which appeared to have been left unfinished by the hand of the master, led to the division of the community into numerous that in a dialogue between king Pasénadi and the nun Khêmâ, told in the Samyutta Nikâya, and translated by Oldenberg, the king puts his questions about the existence or non-existence of the Tathâgata after death in the same formulas which Saṅgaya is made to use in the passage translated above from the Sâmaññaphala Sutta.

In support of my assumption that the Buddha was influenced by contemporary Agnosticism, I may adduce a tradition incorporated in the Mahāvagga I, 23 and 24. There we are told that the most distinguished pair of his disciples, Sâriputta and Moggallâna, had, previously to their conversion, been adherents of Saṅgaya, and had brought over to Buddha 250 disciples of their former teacher. This happened not long after Buddha's reaching Bôdhi, i.e. at the very beginning of the new sect, when its founder must have been willing, in order to win pupils, to treat prevalent opinions with all due consideration.

The greatest influence on the development of Mahāvîra's doctrines must, I believe, be ascribed to Gôsâla, the son of Makkhali. A history of his life, contained in the Bhagavatî XV, 1, has been briefly translated by Hoernle in the Appendix to his translation of the Uvâsaga Dasâo. It is there recorded that Gôsâla lived six years together with Mahāvîra as his disciple, practising asceticism, but afterwards separated from him, started a Law of his own, and set up as a Gina, the leader of the Āgīvikas. The Buddhist records, however, speak of him as the successor of Nanda Vakkha and Kisa Samkikka, and of his sect, the akêlaka paribbâgakas, as a long-established order of monks. We have no reason to doubt the statement of the Gainas, that Mahāvîra and Gôsâla for some time practised austerities together; but the relation between them probably was different from what the Gainas would have us believe. I suppose, and shall now bring forward some arguments in favour of my opinion, that Mahāvîra and Gôsâla assosects soon after the Nirvâṇa of Buddha. We need not wonder therefore that in Ceylon, which is at such a distance from the centre of Brahmanical learning, Buddhists could retain the doctrine of the Nirvâṇa in its original form.

ciated with the intention of combining their sects and fusing them into one. The fact that these two teachers lived together for a long period, presupposes, it would appear, some similarity between their opinions. I have already pointed out above, in the note on p. xxvi, that the expression sabbê sattâ sabbê pâṇâ sabbê bhûtâ sabbê gīvâ is common to both Gôśāla and the Gainas, and from the commentary we learn that the division of animals into ékēndriyas, dvīndriyas, &c., which is so common in Gaina texts, was also used by Gôśāla. The curious and almost paradoxical Gaina doctrine of the six Lēśyās closely resembles, as Professor Leumann was the first to perceive, Gôśāla's division of mankind into six classes; but in this particular I am inclined to believe that the Gainas borrowed the idea from the Āgīvikas and altered it so as to bring it into harmony with the rest of their own doctrines. With regard to the rules of conduct the collective evidence obtainable is such as to amount nearly to proof that Mahāvīra borrowed the more rigid rules from Gôśāla. For as stated in the Uttarādhyayana XXIII, 13, p. 121, the Law of Pārsva allowed monks to wear an under and upper garment, but the Law of Vardhamāna forbade clothes. A term¹ for naked friar, frequently met with in the Gaina Sūtras, is akēlaka, literally 'unclothed.' Now the Buddhists distinguish between Akēlakas and Niganthas; e.g. in Buddha-ghôsa's commentary on the *Dhammapadam*² it is said of some Bhikkhus that they gave the preference to the Niganthas before the Akēlakas, because the latter are stark naked (sabbasô apatikkhannâ), while the Niganthas use some sort of cover³ 'for the sake of decency,' as was wrongly assumed by those Bhikkhus. The Buddhists denote by Akêlaka the followers of Makkhali Gôsâla and his two predecessors Kisa Samkikka and Nanda Vakkha, and have preserved an account of their religious practices in the Magghima Nikâya 36. There Sakkaka, the son of a Nigantha, whom we are already acquainted with, explains the meaning of kâyabhâvanâ, bodily purity, by referring to the conduct of the Akêlakas. Some details of Sakkaka's account are unintelligible in the absence of a commentary, but many are quite clear, and bear a close resemblance to well-known Gaina usages. Thus the Akêlakas, like the Gaina monks, may not accept an invitation for dinner; they are forbidden food that is abhihata or uddissakata, which terms are, in all likelihood, identical with adhyâhrîta and auddêsika of the Gainas (see p. 132, note); they are not allowed to eat meat or to drink liquor. 'Some beg only in one house and accept but one morsel of food, some in more up to seven; some live upon one donation of food, some on more up to seven.' Similar to these are some practices of Gaina monks described in the Kalpa Sûtra, 'Rules for Yatis,' § 26, part i, p. 300, and below, p. 176 f., verses 15 and 19. The following practice of the Akêlakas is identically the same as that observed by the Gainas: 'some eat but one meal every day, or every second day¹, &c., up to every half month.' All the rules of the Akêlakas are either identical with those of the Gainas or extremely like them, and dictated, so to say, by the same spirit. And still Sakkaka does not quote the Niganthas as a standard of 'bodily purity,' though he was the son of a Nigantha, and therefore must have known their religious practices. This curious fact may most easily be accounted for by our assuming that the original Niganthas, of whom the Buddhist records usually speak, were not the section of the church, which submitted to the more rigid rules of Mahāvira, but those followers of Pârsva, who, without forming a hostile party, yet continued, I imagine, to retain within the united church some particular usages of the old one¹. As those rigid rules formed no part of the ancient creed, and Mahāvīra, therefore, must have introduced them, it is probable that he borrowed them from the Akēlakas or Āgīvikas, the followers of Gōsāla, with whom he is said to have lived in close companionship for six years practising austerities. We may regard Mahāvīra's adoption of some religious ideas and practices of the Āgīvikas as concessions made to them in order to win over Gōsāla and his disciples. This plan seems to have succeeded for some time; but at last the allied teachers quarrelled, it may be supposed, on the question who was to be the leader of the united sects. Mahāvīra's position apparently was strengthened by his temporary association with Gōsāla, but the latter seems to have lost by it, if we are to believe the account of the Gainas, and his tragic end must have been a severe blow to the prospects of his sect.

¹ Another term is Ginakalpika, which may be rendered: adopting the standard of the Ginas. The Svêtâmbaras say that the Ginakalpa was early replaced by the Sthavirakalpa, which allows the use of clothes.

² Fausböll's edition, p. 398.

³ The words sēsakam purimasamappitâ va patikkhādentī are not quite clear, but the contrast leaves no doubt about what is meant. Sēsaka is, I believe, the Pāli for sīsnaka. If this is right, the above words may be translated: 'they cover the pudenda wearing (a cloth) about the forepart (of their body).'

¹ These fasts are called by the Gainas kautthabhatta, khattabhatta, &c. (see e.g. Aupapâtika Sûtra, ed. Leumann, § 301A); and monks observing them, kautthabhattiya, khattabhattiya, &c. (see e.g. Kalpa Sûtra, 'Rules for Yatis,' § 21 ff.)

Mahāvīra probably borrowed much more from other sects than we shall ever be able to prove. It must have been easy to add new doctrines to the Gaina creed, as it scarcely forms a system in the true sense of the word. Each sect, or fraction of a sect, which was united with the Gaina church by the successful policy of Mahāvīra², may have brought with it some of its favourite speculations, and most probably its favourite saints too, who were recognised as Kakravartins or Tīrthakaras. This is, of course, a mere conjecture of mine; but it would account for the strange hagiology of the Gainas, and in the absence of any trace of direct evidence we are driven to rely upon guesses, and those deserve the preference which are the most plausible. For the rest, however, of the hypotheses which I have tried to establish in the preceding pages, I claim a higher degree of probability. For on the one hand I do no violence to the tradition of the Gainas, which in the absence of documents deserves most careful attention, and on the other, I assume but what under the given circumstances would have been most likely to happen. The cardinal feature in my construction of the early history of the Gaina church consists in my turning to account the alleged existence of followers of Pârsva in the time of Mahāvira, a tradition which seems to be almost unanimously accepted by modern scholars.

¹ As I have said above and in note 2, p. 119, this difference has probably given rise to the division of the church into Svêtāmbaras and Digambaras. But these two branches have not directly grown out of the party of Pârsva and that of Mahāvīra; for both recognise Mahāvīra as a Tīrthakara.

² Mahāvīra must have been a great man in his way, and an eminent leader among his contemporaries; he owed the position of a Tīrthakara probably not so much to the sanctity of his life, as to his success in propagating his creed.

If Gainism dates from an early period, and is older than Buddha and Mahāvira, we may expect to find marks of its antiquity in the character of Gaina philosophy. Such a mark is the animistic belief that nearly everything is possessed of a soul; not only have plants their own souls, but particles of earth, cold water, fire, and wind also. Now ethnology teaches us that the animistic theory forms the basis of many beliefs that have been called the philosophy of savages; that it is more and more relinquished or changed into purer anthropomorphism as civilisation advances. If, therefore, Gaina ethics are for their greater part based on primitive animism, it must have extensively existed in large classes of Indian society when Gainism was first originated. This must have happened at a very early time, when higher forms of religious beliefs and cults had not yet, more generally, taken hold of the Indian mind.

Another mark of antiquity Gainism has in common with the oldest Brahmanical philosophies, Vêdânta and Sânkhya. For at this early epoch in the development of metaphysics, the Category of Quality is not yet clearly and distinctly conceived, but it is just evolving, as it were, out of the Category of Substance: things which we recognise as qualities are constantly mistaken for and mixed up with substances. Thus in the Vêdânta the highest Brahman is not possessed of pure existence, intellect, and joy as qualities of his nature, but Brahman is existence, intellect, and joy itself. In the Sāṅkhya the nature of purusha or soul is similarly defined as being intelligence or light; and the three guṇas are described as goodness, energy, and delusion, or light, colour, and darkness; yet these guṇas are not qualities in our sense of the word, but, as Professor Garbe adequately calls them, constituents of primitive matter. It is quite in accordance with this way of thinking that the ancient Gaina texts usually speak only of substances, dravyas, and their development or modifications, paryāyas; and when they mention guṇas, qualities, besides, which however is done but rarely in the Sûtras and regularly in comparatively modern books only, this seems to be a later innovation due to the influence which the philosophy and terminology of Nyāya-Vaiśeṣika gradually gained over the scientific thoughts of the Hindus. For at the side of paryāya, development or modification, there seems to be no room for an independent category 'quality,' since paryāya is the state in which a thing, dravya, is at any moment of its existence, and this must, therefore, include qualities, as seems to be actually the view embodied in the oldest text. Another instance of the Gainas applying the category 'substance' to things which are beyond its sphere, and come rather under that of 'quality,' is seen in their treating merit and demerit, dharma and adharma, as kinds of substances with which the soul comes into contact¹; for they are regarded as co-extensive with the world, not unlike space, which even the Vaiśeṣikas count as a substance. If the categories of substance and quality had already been clearly distinguished from one another, and had been recognised as correlative terms, as they are in Vaiśeṣika philosophy (which defines substance as the substratum of qualities, and quality as that which is inherent in substance), Gainism would almost certainly not have adopted such confused ideas as those just expounded.

¹ That this was the primitive conception of the Vedic Hindus has been noted by Oldenberg, Die Religion des Veda, p. 317 f.

From the preceding remarks it will be evident that I do not agree with Bhandarkar¹, who claims a late origin for Gainism, because, on some points, it entertains the same views as the Vaisêshika. The Vaisêshika philosophy may be briefly described as a philosophical treatment and systematical arrangement of those general concepts and ideas which were incorporated in the language, and formed therefore the mental property common to all who spoke or knew Sanskrit. The first attempts to arrive at such a natural philosophy may have been made at an early epoch ; but the perfection of the system, as taught in the aphorisms of Kanâda, could not be reached till after many centuries of patient mental labour and continuous philosophical discussion. In the interval between the origin and the final establishment of the system those borrowings may have taken place of which, rightly or wrongly, the Gainas may be accused. I must, however, remark that Bhandarkar believes the Gainas to hold, on the points presently to be discussed, a view 'which is of the nature of a compromise between the Sâmkhyas and the Vêdântins on the one hand and the Vaisêshika on the other.' But for our discussion it makes no difference whether direct borrowing or a compromise between two conflicting views be assumed. The points in question are the following : (1) both Gainism and Vaisêshika embrace the Kriyâvâda, i.e. they maintain that the soul is directly affected by actions, passions, &c. ; (2) both advocate the doctrine of asatkârya, i.e. that the product is different from its material cause, while the Vêdânta and Sâmkhya hold that they are the same (satkârya) ; (3) that they distinguish qualities from their substratum (dravya). The latter item has been discussed above ; we have to deal, therefore, with the first two only. It will be seen that the opinions under (1) and (2) are the common-sense views ; for that we are directly affected by passions, and that the product is different from its cause, e.g. the tree from the seed, will always and everywhere be the primâ faciê conclusion of an unbiassed mind, or rather will appear as the simple statement of what common experience teaches. Such opinions cannot be regarded as characteristic marks of a certain philosophy, and their occurrence in another system need not be explained by the assumption of borrowing. The case would be different if a paradoxical opinion were found in two different schools; for a paradoxical opinion is most likely the product of but one school, and, when once established, it may be adopted by another. But such opinions of the Vaisêshika, as are the result of a peculiar train of reasoning, e.g. that space (dis) and air (âkâsa) are two separate substances, do not recur in Gainism. For in it, as well as in the older Brahmanical systems, Vêdânta and Sâṅkhya, space and air are not yet distinguished from one another, but âkâsa is made to serve for both.

¹ See his Report for 1883-84, p. 101 f.

Some other instances of difference in fundamental doctrines between Vaisêshikas and Gainas are, that according to the former the souls are infinite and all-pervading, while to the latter they are of limited dimensions, and that the Vaisêshikas make dharma and adharma qualities of the soul, while, as has been said above, the Gainas look on them as a sort of substances. In one point, however, there is some resemblance between a paradoxical Vaisêshika opinion and a distinct Gaina doctrine. According to the Vaisêshika there are four kinds of bodies: bodies of earth, as those of men, animals, &c.; bodies of water in the world of Varuṇa; bodies of fire in the world of Agni; and bodies of wind in the world of Vâyu. This curious opinion has its counterpart in Gainism; for the Gainas, too, assume Earth-bodies, Water-bodies, Fire-bodies, and Wind-bodies. However, these elementary bodies are the elements or the most minute particles of them, inhabited by particular souls. This hylozoistic doctrine is, as I have said above, the outcome of primitive animism, while the Vaisêshika opinion, though probably derived from the same current of thought, is an adaptation of it to popular mythology. I make no doubt that the Gaina opinion is much more primitive and belongs to an older stage in the development of philosophical thought than the Vaisêshika assumption of four kinds of bodies.

Though I am of opinion that between Vaisêshika and Gainism no such connection existed as could be proved by borrowings of the one system from the other, still I am ready to admit that they are related to each other by a kind of affinity of ideas. For the fundamental ideas of the Vêdântins and Sâṅkhyas go directly counter to those of the Gainas, and the latter could not adopt them without breaking with their religion. But they could go a part of their way together with the Vaisêshika, and still retain their religious persuasion. We need, therefore, not wonder that among the writers on the Nyâya-Vaisêshika some names of Gainas occur. The Gainas themselves go still farther, and maintain that the Vaisêshika philosophy was established by a schismatical teacher of theirs, Kāḷaluya Rôhagutta of the Kausika Gôtra, with whom originated the sixth schism of the Gainas, the Trairâsika-matam, in 544 A.V.¹ (18 A.D.) The details of this system given in the Âvâryaka, vv. 77-83, are apparently reproduced from Kaṇâda's Vaisêshika Darsana; for they consist in the enumeration of the six (not seven) categories with their subdivisions, among which that of qualities contains but seventeen items (not twenty-four), and those identical with Vaisêshika Darsana I, 1, 6.

I believe that in this case, as in many others, the Gainas claim more honour than is their due in connecting every Indian celebrity with the history of their creed. My reason for doubting the correctness of the above Gaina legend is the following. The Vaisêshika philosophy is reckoned as one of the orthodox Brahmanical philosophies, and it has chiefly, though not exclusively, been cultivated by orthodox Hindus. We have, therefore, no reason for doubting that they have misstated the name and Gôtra of the author of the Sûtras, viz. Kaṇâda of the Kâryapa Gôtra. No trace has been found in Brahmanical literature that the name of the real author of the Vaisēshika was Rôhagupta, and his Gôtra the Kausika Gôtra ; nor can Rôhagupta and Kânâda be taken as different names of the same person, because their Gôtras also differ. Kânâda, follower of Kanâda, means etymologically crow-eater, owl ; hence his system has been nicknamed Aulûkya Darsana, owl-philosophy¹. In Rôhagupta's second name, Kuluya, which stands for *Shadulûka*², allusion is made to the 'owl,' probably to the Kânâdas ; but the Gainas refer ulûka to the Gôtra of the Rôhagupta, viz. Kausika³, which word also means owl. As the unanimous tradition of the Brahmans deserves the preference before that of the Gainas, we can most easily account for the latter by assuming that Rôhagupta did not invent, but only adopted the Vaisēshika philosophy to support his schismatical views.

¹ See Indische Studien, vol. xvii, p. 116 ff.

About the two works translated in this volume, the Uttarādhyayana and Sûtrakṛitāṅga, I have little to add to the remarks of Professor Weber in the Indische Studien, vol. xvi, p. 259 ff., and vol. xvii, p. 43 ff. The Sûtrakṛitāṅga is probably the older of the two, as it is the second Āṅga, and the Āṅgas obtain the foremost rank among the canonical books of the Gainas, while the Uttarādhyayana, the first Mûlasûtra, belongs to the last section of the Siddhânta. According to the summary in the fourth Āṅga the object of the Sûtrakṛitāṅga is to fortify young monks against the heretical opinions of alien teachers, to confirm them in the right faith, and to lead them to the highest good. This description is correct on the whole, but not exhaustive, as will be seen by going over our table of contents. The work opens with the refutation of heretical doctrines, and the same object is again treated at greater length in the

¹ See my edition of the Kalpa Sûtra, p. 119.

² Literally Six-owl. The number six refers to the six categories of the Vaisēshika.

³ Part i, p. 290. But in the legend translated by Professor Leumann, l. c., p. 121, his Gôtra is called K'âulû.

First Lecture of the Second Book. It is followed in the First Book by Lectures on a holy life in general, on the difficulties a monk has to overcome, especially the temptations thrown in his way, the punishment of the unholy, and the praise of Mahāvīra as the standard of righteousness. Then come some Lectures on cognate subjects. The Second Book, which is almost entirely in prose, treats of similar subjects, but without any apparent connection of its parts. It may therefore be considered as supplementary, and as a later addition to the First Book. The latter was apparently intended as a guide for young monks¹. Its form, too, seems adapted to this purpose; for it lays some claim to poetical art in the variety of the metres employed, and in the artificial character of some verses. It may, therefore, be considered as the composition of one author, while the Second Book is a collection of tracts which treat on the subjects discussed in the first.

The Uttarādhyayana resembles the Sūtrakṛitāṅga with regard to its object and part of the subjects treated; but it is of greater extent than the original part of the Sūtrakṛitāṅga, and the plan of the work is carried out with more skill. Its intention is to instruct a young monk in his principal duties, to commend an ascetic life by precepts and examples, to warn him against the dangers in his spiritual career, and to give some theoretical information. The heretical doctrines are only occasionally alluded to, not fully discussed; apparently the dangers expected from that quarter grew less in the same measure as time advanced and the institutions of the sect were more firmly established. Of more importance to a young monk seems to have been an accurate knowledge of animate and inanimate things, as a rather long treatise on this subject has been added at the end of the book.—Though there is an apparent plan in the selection and arrangement of the single Lectures, still it is open to doubt whether they were all composed by one author, or only selected from the traditional literature, written or oral, which among the Gainas, as everywhere else, must have preceded the formation of a canon. I am inclined to adopt the latter alternative, because there is a greater variety of treatment and style in the different parts than seems compatible with the supposition of one author, and because a similar origin must be assumed for many works of the present canon.

¹ According to an old tradition (see Indische Studien, vol. xvi, p. 223) the Sūtrakṛitāṅga is studied in the fourth year after the ordination of a monk.

At what time the works under discussion were composed or brought into their present shape is a problem which cannot be satisfactorily solved. As, however, the reader of the present volume will naturally expect the translator to give expression to his personal conviction on this point, I give my opinion with all reserve, viz. that most parts, tracts, or treatises of which the canonical books consist, are old; that the redaction of the Aṅgas took place at an early period (tradition places it under Bhadrabâhu); that the other works of the Siddhânta were collected in course of time, probably in the first centuries before our era, and that additions or alterations may have been made in the canonical works till the time of their first edition under Devardhigaṇin (980 A.V. = 454 A.D.)

I have based my translation of the Uttarâdhyayana and Sûtrakṛitâṅga on the text adopted by the oldest commentators I could consult. This text differs little from that of the MSS. and the printed editions. I had prepared a text of my own from some MSS. at my disposal, and this has served to check the printed text.

The Calcutta edition of the Uttarâdhyayana (Samvat 1936 = 1879 A.D.) contains, besides a Guzeratî gloss, the Sûtra-dipikâ of Lakshmiṣvallabha, pupil of Lakshmîkîrtigaṇin of the Kharatara Gakkha. Older than this commentary is the Tîkā of Dêvendra, which I have made my principal guide. It was composed in Samvat 1179 or 1123 A.D., and is confessedly an abstract from Sântyâkârya's Vṛitti, which I have not used. But I have had at my disposal an illuminated old MS. of the Avakûri, belonging to the Strassburg University Library. This work is apparently an abstract from the Vṛitti of Sântyaġārya, as in a great many passages it almost verbally agrees with Dêvendra's work.

The Bombay edition of the Sûtrakṛitāṅga (Samvat 1936 or 1880 A. D.) contains three commentaries: (1) Silāṅka's Tīkā, in which is incorporated Bhadrabāhu's Niryukti. This is the oldest commentary extant; but it was not without predecessors, as Silāṅka occasionally alludes to old commentators. Silāṅka lived in the second half of the ninth century A. D., as he is said to have finished his commentary on the Ākārāṅga Sûtra in the Saka year 798 or 876 A. D. (2) The Dîpika, an abstract from the last by Harshakula, which was composed in Samvat 1583 or 1517 A. D. I have also used a MS. of the Dîpika in my possession. (3) Pâsakaṇḍra's Bâlâvabôdha, a Guzerati gloss.—My principal guide was, of course, Silāṅka; when he and Harshakula agree, I refer to them in my notes as the 'commentators;' I name Silāṅka when his remark in question has been omitted by Harshakula, and I quote the latter when he gives some original matter of interest. I may add that one of my MSS. is covered with marginal and interlinear glosses which have now and then given me some help in ascertaining the meaning of the text.

H. JACOBI.

Bonn :
November, 1894.

ADDITIONAL NOTE.

I may here add a remark on the Parable of the Three Merchants, see p. 29 f., which agrees with Matthew xxv. 14 and Luke xix. 11. It seems, however, to have had a still greater resemblance to the version of the parable in The Gospel according to the Hebrews, as will appear from the following passage from Eusebius' Theophania (ed. Migne's Patrologia Graeca, iv. 155), translated by Nicholson, The Gospel according to the Hebrews (London, 1879): 'The Gospel, which comes to us in Hebrew characters, has directed the threat not against the hider, but against the abandoned liver. For it has included three servants, one which devoured the substance with harlots and flute-women, one which multiplied, and one which hid the talent: one was accepted, one only blamed, and one shut up in prison.' I owe this quotation to my colleague Arnold Meyer.

Taking into consideration (1) that the Gaina version contains only the essential elements of the parable, which in the Gospels are developed into a full story; and (2) that it is expressly stated in the Uttarādhyaṇa VII, 15 that 'this parable is taken from common life,' I think it probable that the Parable of the Three Merchants was invented in India, and not in Palestine.

H. J.

UTTARÂDHYAYANA.

UTTARÂDHYAYANA.

FIRST LECTURE.

ON DISCIPLINE.

I shall explain in due order the discipline of a houseless monk, who has got rid of all worldly ties. Listen to me. (1)

A monk who, on receiving an order¹ from his superior², walks up to him, watching his nods and motions, is called well-behaved. (2)

But a monk who, on receiving an order from his superior, does not walk up to him, being insubordinate and inattentive, is called ill-behaved. (3)

As a bitch with sore ears is driven away every-

¹ Âṇā-niddēsa-karê. Âṇā is the order itself; niddēsa, the assent to it.

² The original has the plural instead of the singular. It takes great liberties in this respect, and the commentators constantly call to help a vaṭanavyatyaya or līṅgavyatyaya, exchange of number or gender, as the case may be. It is impossible in the translation to follow the original in this respect, and useless to note all such grammatical blunders. The conclusion we may draw from them is that in the spoken language many grammatical forms which in the literary language continued to be used, were on the point of dying out or had already actually become obsolete. I am almost sure that the vernacular of the time when the Sūtras were composed began to drop the distinction between the singular and plural in the verb. It was, however, artificially revived in the literary Māhārāṣhṭri of later days.

where, thus a bad, insubordinate, and talkative (pupil) is turned out. (4)

As a pig leaves a trough filled with grain to feed on faeces, so a brute (of a man) turns away from virtue, and takes to evil ways. (5)

Hearing a man thus compared to a dog and a pig, he who desires his own welfare, should adhere to good conduct. (6)

Therefore be eager for discipline, that you may acquire righteousness; a son of the wise¹, who desires liberation², will not be turned away from anywhere. (7)

One should always be meek, and not be talkative in the presence of the wise; one should acquire valuable knowledge, and avoid what is worthless. (8)

When reprimanded a wise man should not be angry, but he should be of a forbearing mood; he should not associate, laugh, and play with mean men. (9)

He should do nothing mean³, nor talk much; but after having learned his lesson, he should meditate by himself. (10)

¹ Buddhaputta. Buddha is here and in the sequel explained by âkârya, teacher. The word is in the crude form, not in the inflected form, as the nominative would not suit the metre. Liberties of this kind are frequently met with in our text.

² Niôga//î = niyôgarthin. It is always explained and usually means môkshârthin. But here and in verse 20 niyôga has perhaps its common meaning: appointment, order. In that case we must translate: he who waits for an order.

³ Kandâliya, literally, he should not demean himself like a Kândâla. The commentators, however, divide the word in kanda, violent, hot, and alika, untrue, false. This explanation is too artificial to be accepted, though the meaning comes to the same thing.

If he by chance does anything mean, he should never deny it, but if he has done it, he should say : 'I have done it;' if he has not done it, 'I have not done it.' (11)

He should not, in every case, wait for the express command (of the teacher) like an unbroken horse for the whip (of the rider), but like a broken horse which sees the whip (of the rider) he should commit no evil act. (12)

Disobedient, rough speaking, ill-behaved pupils will exasperate even a gentle teacher; but those will soon win even a hot-tempered teacher who humour him and are polite. (13)

He should not speak unasked, and asked he should not tell a lie; he should not give way to his anger, and bear with indifference pleasant and unpleasant occurrences. (14)

Subdue your Self, for the Self is difficult to subdue; if your Self is subdued, you will be happy in this world and in the next. (15)

Better it is that I should subdue my Self by self-control and penance, than be subdued by others with fetters and corporal punishment. (16)

He should never do anything disagreeable to the wise¹, neither in words nor deeds, neither openly nor secretly. (17)

He should not (sit) by the side of the teacher, nor before him, nor behind him; he should not touch (the teacher's) thigh with his own, nor answer his call from the couch. (18)

A well-behaved monk should not sit on his hams²,

¹ Buddhāṇam, i.e. the superiors.

² Palhatthiyā = paryastikā: so that his clothes cover his knees and shanks.

nor cross his arms¹, nor stretch out his legs, nor stand (too) close to his teacher. (19)

If spoken to by the superior, he should never remain silent, but should consider it as a favour; asking for his command², he should always politely approach his teacher. (20)

If the teacher speaks little or much, he should never grow impatient; but an intelligent pupil should rise from his seat and answer (the teacher's) call modestly and attentively. (21)

He should never ask a question when sitting on his stool or his bed, but rising from his seat³ and coming near, he should ask him with folded hands. (22)

When a pupil who observes the above rules of conduct, questions the teacher about the sacred text, its meaning, or both, he should deliver it according to tradition. (23)

A monk should avoid untruth, nor should he speak positively (about future things, his plans, &c.); he should avoid sinful speech, and always keep free from deceit. (24)

He should not tell anything sinful or meaningless⁴

¹ Pakshapinda.

² Niyâga//hî or niôga//hî. The commentator explains it, as in verse 7, by 'desiring liberation.'

³ Ukkudûô. The commentator explains it by muktâsanaḥ, kâranataḥ pâdapuṣṭhanâdigataḥ.

⁴ In illustration of this the commentator (Dêvendra) quotes the following verse: êsha bandhyâsutô yâti khapushpakṛitasêkharah | mṛigatrishnâmbhasi snâtaḥ sasarîṅgadhanurdharaḥ || There goes the son of a barren woman, bearing a chaplet of sky-flowers, having bathed in the water of a fata morgana, and carrying a bow made of a hare's horn.

or hurtful, neither for his own sake nor for anybody else's, nor without such a motive. (25).

In barbers' shops¹ or houses, on the ground separating two houses, or on the highway a single monk should not stand with a single woman, nor should he converse with her. (26)

Any instruction the wise ones² may give me in a kind or a rough way, I shall devotedly accept, thinking that it is for my benefit. (27)

(The teacher's) instruction, his manner of giving it, and his blaming evil acts are considered blissful by the intelligent, but hateful by the bad monk. (28)

Wise, fearless monks consider even a rough instruction as a benefit, but the fools hate it, though it produces patience and purity of mind. (29)

He should occupy a low, firm seat, which does not rock; seldom rising and never without a cause, he should sit motionless. (30)

At the right time a monk should sally forth, and he should return at the right time; avoiding to do anything out of time, he should do what is appropriate for each period of the day. (31)

A monk should not approach (dining people) sitting in a row, but should collect alms that are freely given; having begged according to the sanctioned rules, he should eat a moderate portion at the proper time. (32)

A monk should wait (for his alms) alone, not too far from other monks, nor too near them, but so that he is not seen by another party; another monk should not pass him to get the start of him. (33)

¹ Samara, explained by the commentator barbers' shop or smithy, with the addition that it includes all places of low people.

² Buddhāṇ.

Neither boldly erect nor humbly bowing down, standing neither too close by nor too far off, a monk should accept permitted¹ food that was prepared for somebody else². (34)

In a place that is covered above and sheltered on all sides, where there are no living beings nor seeds, a monk should eat in company, restrained and undressed. (35)

A monk should avoid as unallowed such food as is well dressed, or well cooked, or well cut, or such in which is much seasoning, or which is very rich, or very much flavoured, or much sweetened³. (36)

(The teacher) takes delight in instructing a clever (pupil), just as the rider (in managng) a well-broken horse; but he tires to instruct a foolish (pupil), just as the rider (tires to manage) an unbroken horse. (37)

(A bad pupil thinks :) 'I get but knocks and boxes on the ear, hard words and blows;' and he believes a teacher who instructs him well, to be a malevolent man. (38)

A good pupil has the best opinion (of his teacher), thinking that he treats him like his son or brother or a near relation⁴; but a malevolent pupil imagines himself treated like a slave. (39)

He should not provoke his teacher's anger, nor

¹ Phâsuya, translated prâsuka, and explained : free from living beings.

² Parakaḍa, prepared for the householder or some other person, but not for the monk himself.

³ The translation of the terms in this verse is rather conjectural, notwithstanding the explanations in the commentary.

⁴ I translate according to the interpretation of the commentator, which is probably right; but the text sets all rules of grammar at defiance.

should he himself grow angry; he should not offend the teacher nor irritate him by proclaiming his faults¹. (40)

Perceiving the teacher's anger one should pacify him by kindness, appease him with folded hands, and promise not to do wrong again. (41)

He who adopts the conduct which the wise ones² have attained by their virtues and always practised, will not incur blame. (42)

Guessing the teacher's thoughts and the purport of his words, one should express one's assent, and execute (what he desires to be done). (43)

An excellent pupil needs no express directions, or he is (at least) quickly directed; he always carries out his duties as he is told. (44)

An intelligent man who has learned (the sacred texts) takes his duties upon himself³, and he becomes renowned in the world; as the earth is the dwelling of all beings, so he will be a dwelling of all duties. (45)

When the worthy teachers, who are thoroughly enlightened and from early times well versed in conduct⁴, are satisfied (with a pupil), they will make over to him their extensive and weighty⁵ knowledge of the sacred texts. (46)

His knowledge will be honoured, his doubts will be removed, he will gladden the heart of his teacher

¹ Literally, search for the goad.

² Buddha.

³ Namati, literally, bows down.

⁴ Puvvasamthuya = pûrvasamstuta. Besides the meaning rendered in my translation the commentator proposes another: already famous.

⁵ Atthiya = arthika, having an object or purpose, viz. môksha; it is therefore frequently rendered: leading to liberation.

by his good acts ; kept in safety by the performance of austerities and by meditation, being as it were a great light, he will keep the five vows. (47)

Honoured by gods, Gandharvas, and men, he will, on leaving this body which consists of dirt and impurities, become either an eternal Siddha¹, or a god of great power and small imperfections. (48)

Thus I say².

SECOND LECTURE.

ON TROUBLES³.

O long-lived (Gambûsvâmin)! I (Sudharman) have heard the following Discourse⁴ from the Venerable (Mahâvîra) :

Here⁵, forsooth, the Venerable Ascetic Mahâvîra of the Kâsyapa Gôtra has declared twenty-two troubles which a monk must learn and know, bear and conquer, in order not to be vanquished by them when he lives the life of a wandering mendicant.

¹ I. e. a liberated or perfected soul.

² Ti bēmi = iti bravîmi. These words serve to mark the end of every chapter in all canonical books ; compare the Latin dixi.

³ Parîsaha, that which may cause trouble to an ascetic, and which must be cheerfully borne.

⁴ The commentator (Dêvendra) says that when Mahâvîra spoke, he was understood by all creatures, whatever was their language. He quotes the following verse : dêvâ dêvîm narâ nârîm sabarâs kâpi sâbarîm | tiryakô pi ka tairasîm mênirê bhagavadgiram || The gods, men, Sabaras, and animals took the language of the Lord for their own. Cf. Acts ii. 11.

⁵ I. e. in our creed or religion. This is generally the meaning of the word iha, here, opening a sentence.

These, then, are the twenty-two troubles declared by the Venerable Ascetic Mahāvīra, which a monk must learn and know, bear and conquer, in order not to be vanquished by them when he lives the life of a wandering mendicant :

1. digaññā (gugupsā)-parisahā, hunger ;
2. pivāsā (pipāsā)-p., thirst ;
3. sīya (śīta)-p., cold ;
4. usina (ushna)-p., heat ;
5. daṃsamāsaya (daṃsamāsaka)-p., gad-flies, and gnats¹ ;
6. akēla-p., nakedness² ;
7. arati-p., to be discontented with the objects of control.
8. itthī (strī)-p., women ;
9. kariyā (kāryā)-p., erratic life ;
10. nisthiyā (naishēdhikī)-p., place for study ;
11. seggā (sayyā)-p., lodging ;
12. akkōsa (ākrōsa)-p., abuse ;
13. vaha (vadha)-p., corporal punishment ;
14. gāyanā (yājanā)-p., to ask for something ;
15. alābha-p., to be refused ;
16. rōga-p., illness ;
17. tana-phāsa (trīnaśpāsa), pricking of grass ;
18. galla-p., dirt ;
19. sakkārapurakkāra (satkārapurakkāra)-p., kind and respectful treatment ;
20. paññā (pragñā)-p., understanding ;
21. annāna (agñāna)-p., ignorance ;
22. sammatta (samyaktva)-p., righteousness.

¹ This is to include all biting or stinging insects, as lice, &c.

² This is binding on the Ginakālpikas only, not on common monks.

¹The enumeration of the troubles has been delivered by the Kâsyapa², I shall explain them to you in due order. Listen to me. (1)

1. Though his body be weakened by hunger, a monk who is strong (in self-control) and does penance, should not cut or cause another to cut (anything to be eaten), nor cook it or cause another to cook it. (2)

Though emaciated like the joint of a crow's (leg) and covered with a network of veins, he should know the permitted measure of food and drink, and wander about with a cheerful mind. (3)

2. Though overcome by thirst, he should drink no cold water, restrained by shame and aversion (from forbidden things); he should try to get distilled³ water. (4)

Wandering about on deserted ways, in pain, thirsty, with dry throat, and distressed, he should bear this trouble (of thirst). (5)

3. If a restrained, austere ascetic occasionally suffers from cold on his wanderings, he should not walk beyond the (prescribed) time, remembering the teaching of the Gina. (6)

'I have no shelter and nothing to cover my skin, therefore I shall make a fire to warm myself;' such a thought should not be entertained by a monk. (7)

¹ The preceding part of this lecture is in prose, the rest is in śloka. The numbers placed before the verses refer to the above enumeration of the troubles. It will be seen that two stanzas are allotted to each of them.

² I.e. Mahāvīra, who belonged to the Gôtra of Kâsyapa.

³ Vigada = vikṛīta. It means water which by boiling or some other process has become so changed that it may be regarded as lifeless.

4. If he suffers from the heat of hot things, or from the heat of his body, or from the heat of summer, he should not lament the loss of comfort. (8)

A wise man, suffering from heat, should not long for a bath, or pour water over his body, or fan himself. (9)

5. Suffering from insects a great sage remains undisturbed. As an elephant at the head of the battle kills the enemy, so does a hero (in self-control conquer the internal foe). (10)

He should not scare away (insects), nor keep them off, nor be in the least provoked to passion by them. Tolerate living beings, do not kill them, though they eat your flesh and blood. (11)

6. 'My clothes being torn, I shall (soon) go naked,' or 'I shall get a new suit;' such thoughts should not be entertained by a monk. (12)

At one time he will have no clothes, at another he will have some; knowing this to be a salutary rule, a wise (monk) should not complain about it. (13)

7. A houseless and poor monk who wanders from village to village may become tired of ascetic life: he should bear this trouble. (14)

A sage should turn away from this discontent; he should wander about free from sins, guarded in himself, a tabernacle (as it were) of the Law, doing no actions, and perfectly passionless. (15)

8. In this world men have a natural liking for women; he who knows (and renounces) them, will easily perform his duties as a Sramana. (16)

A wise man who knows that women are a slough, as it were, will get no harm from them, but will wander about searching for the Self. (17)

9. Alone, living on allowed food¹, he should wander about, bearing all troubles, in a village or a town or a market-place or a capital. (18)

Different (from other men) a monk should wander about, he should acquire no property; but not being attached to householders, he should live without a fixed residence. (19)

10. In a burial-place, or a deserted house, or below a tree he should sit down, alone, without moving, and he should not drive away any one. (20)

Sitting there he should brave all dangers; when seized with fear, he should not rise and go to some other place. (21)

11. A monk who does penance and is strong (in self-control), will not be affected beyond measure by good or bad lodgings, but an evil-minded monk will. (22)

Having obtained a good or bad lodging in an empty house², he should stay there thinking: 'What does it matter for one night?' (23)

12. If a layman abuses a monk, he should not grow angry against him; because he would be like a child³, a monk should not grow angry. (24)

If a monk hears bad words, cruel and rankling ones, he should silently overlook them, and not take them to heart. (25)

13. A monk should not be angry if beaten, nor should he therefore entertain sinful thoughts; knowing patience to be the highest good, a monk should meditate on the Law. (26)

¹ Lâdha; see also note on XVII, 2.

² I. e. in which there are no women.

³ Or like an ignorant man, bâla.

If somebody strikes a restrained, resigned Sramana somewhere, he should think: 'I have not lost my life.' (27)

14. It will always cause difficulties to a houseless monk to get everything by begging, and nothing without begging. (28)

The hand (of the giver) is not always kindly stretched out to a monk when he is on his begging tour; but he should not think that it would be better to live as a householder. (29)

15. He should beg food from the householder when his dinner is ready; a wise man should not care whether he gets alms or not. (30)

'I get nothing to-day, perhaps I shall get something to-morrow;' a monk who thinks thus, will not be grieved by his want of success. (31)

16. If any misfortune¹ happens and he suffers pain, he should cheerfully steady his mind, and bear the ills that attack him. (32)

He should not long for medical treatment, but he should continue to search for the welfare of his soul; thus he will be a true Sramana by neither acting himself nor causing others to act. (33)

17. When a naked, rough, restrained ascetic lies on the grass, his body will be hurt. (34)

In the sun his pain will grow insupportable; still a monk, though hurt by the grass, will not use clothes². (35)

18. When by the heat of summer his body sweats and is covered with dirt and dust, a wise monk should not lament his loss of comfort. (36)

¹ Viz. if he falls sick.

² Tantuga, what is manufactured from threads.

He should bear (all this), waiting for the destruction of his Karman¹, (and practising) the noble, excellent Law; he should carry the filth on his body till he expires. (37)

19. It may be that a gentleman salutes a monk, or rises from his seat on his approach, or invites him (to accept alms in his house): a monk should evince no predilection for men of this sort, who show him such marks of respect. (38)

Not resentful, having few wants, begging from strangers, and not being dainty, a wise man should not long for pleasant things, nor be sorry afterwards (for not having got them). (39)

20. 'Forsooth, in bygone times I have done actions productive of ignorance, for I do not remember them when asked by anybody anywhere².' (40)

'Afterwards, however, actions productive of ignorance take effect.' Therefore comfort yourself, knowing the consequences of actions. (41)

21. 'It was of no use to turn away from the lust of the senses and to live restrainedly, for I do not properly recognise good and bad things.' (42)

'Though in practising austerities and religious observances I live according to strict rules, still the hindrances to knowledge will not go off.' (43)

22. A monk should not think: 'There is, indeed, no life to come, nor an exalted state to be acquired by penances; in short, I have been deceived.' (44)

A monk should not think: 'Those lied who said that there were, are, and will be Ginas.' (45)

¹ Nirgarâ.

² The commentators refer the word 'anywhere' to the place or object of the former actions.

All these troubles have been declared by the Kâsyapa. A monk should not be vanquished by them, when attacked by any anywhere.

Thus I say.

THIRD LECTURE.

THE FOUR REQUISITES.

Four things of paramount value are difficult to obtain here by a living being: human birth, instruction in the Law, belief in it, and energy in self-control. (1)

I. The universe is peopled by manifold creatures, who are, in this Samsâra, born in different families and castes for having done various actions. (2)

Sometimes they go to the world of the gods, sometimes to the hells, sometimes they become Asuras in accordance with their actions. (3)

Sometimes they become Kshattriyas, or Kandâlas and Bukkasas, or worms and moths, or (insects called) Kunthu¹ and ants. (4)

Thus living beings of sinful actions, who are born again and again in ever-recurring births, are not disgusted with the Samsâra, but they are like warriors (never tired of the battle of life). (5)

Living beings bewildered through the influence of their actions, distressed and suffering pains, undergo misery in non-human births. (6)

But by the cessation of Karman, perchance, living

¹ About the Kunthu see below, Thirty-sixth Lecture, v. 138 and note.

beings will reach in due time a pure state and be born as men. (7)

II. And though they be born with a human body, it will be difficult for them to hear the Law, having heard which they will do penances, combat their passions and abstain from killing living beings. (8)

III. And though, by chance, they may hear the Law, it will be difficult for them to believe in it; many who are shown the right way, stray from it. (9)

IV. And though they have heard the Law and believe in it, it is difficult for them to fulfill it strenuously; many who approve of the religion, do not adopt it. (10)

Having been born as a man, having heard the Law, believing in it, and fulfilling it strenuously, an ascetic should restrain himself and shake off sinfulness. (11)

The pious obtain purity, and the pure stand firmly in the Law: (the soul afterwards) reaches the highest Nirvâṇa, being like unto a fire fed with ghee. (12)

Leave off the causes of sin, acquire fame through patience! (A man who acts up to this) will rise to the upper regions after having left this body of clay. (13)

The Yakshas who are gifted with various virtues, (live in the heavenly regions, situated) one above the other, shining forth like the great luminaries, and hoping never to descend thence. (14)

Intent on enjoying divine pleasures and changing their form at will, they live in the upper Kalpa heavens many centuries of former¹ years. (15)

¹ One 'former' (pûrva) year consists of 7,560 millions of common years. The idea that years were longer when the world was still young, is apparently suggested by the experience which everybody will have made, that a year seemed to us an enormously long time when we were young, and the same space of time

The Yakshas, having remained there according to their merit, descend thence at the expiration of their life and are born as men.

Men are of ten kinds. (16)

Fields and houses, gold, cattle, slaves and servants: where these four goods, the causes of pleasure, are present, in such families he is born¹. (17)

He will have friends and relations, be of good family, of fine complexion, healthy, wise, noble, famous, and powerful. (18)

After having enjoyed, at their proper time, the unrivalled pleasures of human life, he will obtain true knowledge by his pure religious merit acquired in a former life. (19) appears to us shorter and shorter as we advance in life. A similar analogy with our life has probably caused the belief in the four ages of the world, shared by the Hindus and the ancients. For does not childhood to most of us appear the happiest period of our life, and youth better still than the time of full-grown manhood? As in retrospect our life appears to us, so primitive man imagines the life of the world to have been: the first age was the best and the longest, and the following ages grew worse and worse, and became shorter at the same time. This primitive conceit was by the ancients combined with the conceit of the year, so that the four ages were compared with the four seasons of the year. Something similar seems to have happened in India, where, however, there are three or six seasons. For the Gainas seem to have originally divided one Eon into six minor periods. Now the year was frequently compared to a wheel, and this second metaphor was worked out by the Gainas. They named the six minor periods aras, literally spokes of a wheel, and divided the whole Eon into one descending part (of the wheel), avasarpinî, and one rising part, utsarpinî. These Avasarpinîs and Utsarpinîs are probably a later improvement, and the Eon originally contained but six Aras. But if there were indeed twelve Aras from the beginning, they must have been suggested by the twelve months of the year.

¹ This is the first of the ten kinds of men mentioned above; the remaining nine are enumerated in the following verse.

Perceiving that the four requisites are difficult to obtain, he will apply himself to self-control, and when by penances he has shaken off the remnant of Karman, he will become an eternal Siddha. (20)

Thus I say.

FOURTH LECTURE.

IMPURITY.

You cannot prolong your life¹, therefore be not careless; you are past help when old age approaches. Consider this: what (protection) will careless people get, who kill living beings and do not exert themselves? (1)

Men who adhering to wrong principles acquire wealth by evil deeds, will lose it, falling into the snares (of their passions) and being held captive by their hatred. (2)

As the burglar² caught in the breach of the wall perishes by the work the sinner himself had executed, thus people in this life and the next cannot escape the effect of their own actions. (3)

If a man living in the Samsâra does an action for the sake of somebody else, or one by which he himself also profits, then, at the time of reaping the fruit of his actions, his relations will not act as true relations (i.e. will not come to his help). (4)

¹ A similar expression is used in Sûtrakṛtiânga I, 2, 2, 21.

² Dêvendra relates two stories of burglars, one of which is supposed to be hinted at in the text. It comes to this. A burglar is caught, in the breach he had excavated, by the owner of the house, who takes hold of his feet protruding from the breach. But the burglar's companion tries to drag him out from the other side of the wall. In this position he is smashed by the upper part of the wall coming down.

Wealth will not protect a careless man in this world and the next. Though he had seen the right way, he does not see it, even as one in the dark whose lamp has suddenly been put out. (5)

Though others sleep, be thou awake! Like a wise man, trust nobody, but be always on the alert; for dangerous is the time and weak the body. Be always watchful like a *Bhârunda*¹ bird! (6)

A monk should step carefully in his walk (i.e. in his life), supposing everything to be a snare for him. First he must bestow care on his life till he wins the stake (viz. enlightenment), and afterwards he should despise it, annihilating his sins. (7)

By conquering his will, (a monk) reaches liberation, as a well-broken horse which is clad in harness (goes to battle). Be watchful in your young years; for thereby a monk quickly obtains liberation. (8)

‘If he does not get (victory over his will) early, he will get it afterwards;’ such reasoning² presupposes the eternity of human life. But such a man despairs when his life draws to its close, and the dissolution of his body approaches. (9)

One cannot quickly arrive at discernment; therefore one should exert one’s self, abstain from pleasures, understand the world, be impartial like a sage, and guard one's self : (thus) never be careless. (10)

¹ Each of these birds has two necks and three legs.

² Upamâ. Literally translated: ‘this is the comparison of those who contend that life is eternal.’ The commentator gives a forced interpretation of the first part of the verse to bring about a comparison. But the meaning ‘comparison’ will not suit the context, the word must here mean: conclusion, reasoning.

A Sramana who again and again suppresses the effects of delusion, and controls himself, will be affected in a rough way by external things ; but a monk should not hate them in his mind. (11)

External things weaken the intellect and allure many ; therefore keep them out of your mind. Keep off delusion, remove pride, do not practise deceit, leave off greed. (12)

Heretics who are impure and vain, are always subject to love and hate, and are wholly under the influence (of their passions). Despising them as unholy men, desire virtues till the end of your life. (13)

Thus I say.

FIFTH LECTURE.

DEATH AGAINST ONE'S WILL.

In this ocean (of life) with its currents (viz. births) difficult to cross, one man has reached the opposite shore ; one wise man has given an answer to the following question. (1)

These two ways of life ending with death have been declared : death with one's will, and death against one's will. (2)

Death against one's will is that of ignorant men, and it happens (to the same individual) many times. Death with one's will is that of wise men, and at best ¹ it happens but once. (3)

¹ Viz. in the case of a Kêvalin. Other sages die this death seven or eight times before reaching mukti.

Mahāvira has (thus) described the first kind in which an ignorant man, being attached to pleasures, does very cruel actions. (4)

A man attached to pleasures and amusements will be caught in the trap (of deceit). (He thinks): 'I never saw the next world, but I have seen with my own eyes the pleasures of this life.' (5)

'The pleasures of this life are (as it were) in your hand, but the future ones are uncertain¹. Who knows whether there is a next world or not?' (6)

The fool boasts: 'I shall have the company of (most) men².' But by his love of pleasures and amusements he will come to grief. (7)

Then he begins to act cruelly against movable and immovable beings, and he kills living beings with a purpose or without. (8)

An ignorant man kills, lies, deceives, calumniates, dissembles, drinks liquor, and eats meat, thinking that this is the right thing to do. (9)

Overbearing in acts and words, desirous for wealth and women, he accumulates sins in two ways³, just as a young snake gathers dust (both on and in its body). (10)

Then he suffers ill and is attacked by disease; and he is in dread of the next world when he reflects on his deeds. (11)

I have heard of the places in hell, and of the destination of the sinner, where the fools who do cruel deeds will suffer violently. (12)

¹ Kālikā, doubtful as regards the time when they will be enjoyed.

² I. e. I shall do as people generally do, viz. enjoy pleasures.

³ Viz. By his acts and thoughts.

Then going to the place where he is to be born again according to his deeds, he feels remorse, as I have heard (from my teacher). (13)

As a charioteer, who against his better judgment leaves the smooth highway and gets on a rugged road, repents when the axle breaks; so the fool, who transgresses the Law and embraces unrighteousness, repents in the hour of death, like (the charioteer) over the broken axle. (14, 15)

Then when death comes at last, the fool trembles in fear; he dies the 'death against one's will,' (having lost his chance) like a gambler vanquished by Kali. (16)

Thus has been explained the fools' 'death against one's will;' now hear from me the wise men's 'death with one's will!' (17)

Full of peace and without injury to any one is, as I have heard (from my teachers), the death of the virtuous who control themselves and subdue their senses¹. (18)

(Such a death) does not fall to the lot of every monk, nor of every householder; for the morality of householders is of various character, and that of monks is not always good throughout. (19)

Some householders are superior to some monks in self-control; but the saints are superior to all householders in self-control. (20)

Bark and skin (of a goat), nakedness, twisted

¹ Samgayânam vusîmao = samyatânâm vasyavatâm. Vusîmao is gen. sing., it is here used in juxtaposition with a word in gen. plur. Such an irregularity would of course be impossible in classical Prâkrîṭ, but the authors of metrical Gâna Sûtras take such liberties with grammar that we must put up with any faulty expression, though it would be easy to correct it by a conjecture.

hair, baldness—these (outward tokens) will not save a sinful ascetic. (21)

A sinner, though he be a mendicant (friar), will not escape hell; but a pious man, whether monk or householder, ascends to heaven. (22)

A faithful man should practise¹ the rules of conduct for householders; he should never neglect the Pôsaḥa fast² in both fortnights, not even for a single night. (23)

When under such discipline he lives piously even as a householder, he will, on quitting flesh and bones³, share the world of the Yakshas. (24)

Now a restrained monk will become one of the two: either one free from all misery or a god of great power. (25)

To the highest regions, in due order, to those where there is no delusion, and to those which are full of light, where the glorious (gods dwell)—who have long life, great power, great lustre, who can change their shape at will, who are beautiful as on their first day, and have the brilliancy of many suns—to such places go those who are trained in self-control and penance, monks or householders, who have obtained liberation by absence of passion. (26–28)

Having heard (this) from the venerable men who control themselves and subdue their senses, the virtuous and the learned do not tremble in the hour of death. (29)

¹ Kâḥṇa phâsaê=kâyêṇa sprisêṭ, literally, touch with his body.

² The Pôsaḥa of the Gainas corresponds to the Upôsaṭha of the Buddhists. Hoernle in note 87 of his translation of the Uvâsaḡa Dasô (Bibliotheca Indica) says of the Pôsaḥa: it is distinguished by the four abstinences (uvavâsa) from food (âhâra), bodily attentions (sarîrasatkâra), sexual intercourse (abrahma) and daily work (vyâpâra).

³ Literally, skin and joints.

A wise man having weighed (both kinds of death) and chosen the better one (taught in) the Law of Compassion, will become calm through patience, with an undisturbed mind (at the time of death). (30)

When the right time (to prepare for death) has arrived, a faithful (monk) should in the presence (of his teacher) suppress all emotions (of fear or joy) and wait for the dissolution of his body. (31)

When the time for quitting the body has come, a sage dies the 'death with one's will,' according to one of the three methods¹. (32)

Thus I say.

SIXTH LECTURE.

THE FALSE ASCETIC².

All men who are ignorant of the Truth are subject to pain; in the endless Samsâra they suffer in many ways. (1)

Therefore a wise man, who considers well the ways that lead to bondage³ and birth, should ¹ These three methods are (1) bhaktapratyâkhyâna, (2) îṅgi-tamarana, (3) pâdapôpagamana. They are fully described in the Âtârâṅga Sûtra I, 7, 8, 7 ff., see part i, p. 75 f.

² Khuddâganiyantiḥḡgam = Kshullakanirgranthîyam. Kshullaka originally means 'small, young,' but I do not see that the contents of this lecture support this translation, though the commentators would seem to favour it.

³ Dêvendra here quotes the following Sanskrit verse : Kalatrani-gadam dattvâ na samtushṭaḥ pragâpatiḥ bhûyô-py apatyarûpêna dadâti galasrîṅkhalam. The creator was not satisfied when he had given (to man) the wife as a fetter, he added a chain round his neck in the form of children.

himself search for the truth, and be kind towards all creatures. (2)

‘Mother, father, daughter-in-law, brother, wife, and sons will not be able to help me, when I suffer for my own deeds¹.’ (3)

This truth should be taken to heart² by a man of pure faith; he should (therefore) cut off greed and love, and not hanker after his former connections. (4)

Cows and horses, jewels and earrings, cattle, slaves and servants: all these (possessions) you must give up in order to obtain the power of changing your form at will. (5)³

Everything that happens to somebody, affects him personally; therefore, knowing the creatures’ love of their own self, do not deprive them of their life, but cease from endangering and combating them. (6)

Seeing that to accept (presents) leads to hell, one should not accept even a blade of grass; only to preserve one’s life⁴ one should eat the food that is put in one’s own alms-bowl. (7)

Here some are of opinion that they will be delivered from all misery by merely attending the teacher⁵, without abstaining from sins. (8)

¹ This verse recurs in Sûtrakṛitāṅga I, 9, 5.

² Sapêhâê pâsê = svaprêkshayâ pasyêt, he should look at it with his mind or reflectively. However sapêhâê is usually the absolute participle samprêkshya. The meaning is the same in both cases.

³ Some MSS. insert here the following verse: ‘Movables and immovables, corn, and furniture can not deliver a man from pain, who is suffering for his deeds.’

⁴ This is according to the commentators the meaning of the word dôguññî = gugupsin.

⁵ Âyariyam vidittânam. The commentator makes this out

Acknowledging the truth about bondage and liberation, but talking only, not acting (in accordance with these tenets), they seek comfort for themselves in mighty words. (9)

Clever talking will not work salvation; how should philosophical instruction do it? Fools, though sinking lower and lower through their sins, believe themselves to be wise men. (10)

They are (going) a long way in the endless Sam-sâra; therefore looking out carefully one should wander about carefully¹. (11)

Choosing what is beyond and above (this world, viz. liberation), one should never desire (worldly objects), but sustain one's body only to be able to annihilate one's Karman. (12)

Those will reap pains who, in thoughts, words, or acts, are attached to their body, to colours, and to forms. (13)

Recognising the cause of Karman, one should wander about waiting for one's death; (knowing) the permitted quantity of food and drink, one should eat (such food as has been) prepared (by the householders for their own consumption). (14)

An ascetic should not lay by any store, not even so little as the grease (sticking to his alms-bowl); but as a bird with its plumage², so he with his alms-bowl should wander about without desires. (15) to mean: by learning only what right conduct (âkârikam) is, without living up to it. But it is obvious that the author intends a censure upon the Gñanamârگا.

¹ As usual this phrase means: one should conduct one's self so as to commit no sin.

² There is a pun in the original on the word patta, which means plumes (patra) and alms-bowl (pâtra).

Receiving alms in a manner to avoid faults¹, and controlling one's self, one should wander about in a village (&c.) without a fixed residence; careful among the careless one should beg one's food. (16)

Thus has spoken the Arhat Gñâtrîputra, the venerable native of *Vaisâlî*², who possesses the highest knowledge and who possesses the highest faith, who possesses (at the same time) the highest knowledge and the highest faith. (17)

Thus I say.

SEVENTH LECTURE.

THE PARABLE OF THE RAM, ETC.

As somebody, to provide for (the arrival of) a guest, brings up a young ram, gives it rice and gram³, and brings it up in his yard; (1)

Then when it is grown up and big, fat and of a large belly, fattened and of a plump body, it is ready for the guest. (2)

As long as no guest comes, the poor (animal) lives; but as soon as a guest arrives, its head is cut off, and it is eaten. (3)

As this ram is well treated for the sake of

¹ This is the êshanâsamiti. On the samitis see below, Twelfth Lecture, 2.

² Vêsaliê = Vaisâlîka. See my remarks on this statement in part i, introduction, p. xi, and Hoernle's notes in his translation of the Uvâsaga Dasô, p. 3 ff.

³ Yavasa, explained by mudgamâshâdi. Mutton of gram-fed sheep is greatly appreciated in India.

a guest, even so an ignorant, great sinner longs (as it were) for life in hell. (4)

An ignorant man kills, tells lies, robs on the highway, steals foreign goods, deceives, (always thinking of some one) whom he could plunder, the villain. (5)

He is desirous of women and pleasures, he enters on undertakings and business, drinks liquor, eats meat, becomes strong, a subduer of foes. (6)

He eats crisp goats' meat, his belly grows, and his veins swell with blood—but he gains nothing but life in hell, just as the ram is only fed to be killed for the sake of a guest. (7)

After having enjoyed pleasant seats, beds, carriages, riches, and pleasures, after having squandered his wealth which he had so much trouble in gaining, and after having committed many sins, he will, under the burden of his Karman, and believing only in the visible world, be grieved in the hour of death like the ram¹ at the arrival of a guest. (8, 9)

Then the sinner who has been killing living beings, at the end of his life falls from his state², and against his will he goes to the world of the Asuras, to the dark place. (10)

As a man for the sake of one Kâkint³ (risks and) loses a thousand (Kârshâpanas), or as the king lost his kingdom (and life) by eating a mango-fruit which he was strictly forbidden (by his physician)⁴: (11)

¹ Aya = aga, literally goat.

² Kuya = kyuta is said of one who is born after his death in a lower sphere than that in which he lived before.

³ According to the commentators the eightieth part of a rupee.

⁴ The commentators relate 'old stories' to explain allusions in the text; they will, however, be intelligible without further comment, though I do not contend that those stories were not really old and known to the author of the Sûtra.

Even so are human pleasures compared with the pleasures of the gods: divine life and pleasures surpass (the former) a thousand times and more. (12)

Those endowed with excellent knowledge live many *nayutas*¹ of years; so great a loss suffer the fools in a life of less than a hundred years! (13)

Three merchants set out on their travels, each with his capital; one of them gained there much, the second returned with his capital, and the third merchant came home after having lost his capital. This parable² is taken from common life; learn (to apply it) to the Law. (14, 15)

The capital is human life, the gain is heaven; through the loss of that capital man must be born as a denizen of hell or a brute animal. (16)

These are the two courses open to the sinner; they consist in misery, as corporal punishment, &c.; for the slave to his lusts³ has forfeited human life and divine life. (17)

Having once forfeited them, he will have to endure these two states of misery; it will be

¹ A nayuta or niyuta is equal to 49,786,136,000,000,000,000,000,000,000.

It is derived in the following way:

1 pûrvânga = 8,400,000

1 pûrva = 8,400,000 pûrvângas.

1 nayutânga = 8,400,000 pûrvas.

1 nayuta = 8,400,000 nayutângas.

² This parable closely corresponds to Matth. xxv. 14, Luke xix. 11. I need not here discuss the problems raised by this coincidence since they will, as I hear, be fully treated by Herr Hüttemann, a pupil of Professor Leumann of Strassburg.

³ Lôlayâsadhê = lôlatâsa/ha. The commentator takes lôlatâ for lôla and makes the word a karmadhâraya. I think that the word sa/ha which originally means 'one who deceives others' is used here in the sense 'one who deceives himself.'

difficult for him to attain an upward course¹ for a long time to come. (18)

Considering what is at stake, one should weigh (the chances of) the sinner and of the virtuous man (in one's mind).

He who brings back his capital, is (to be compared to) one who is born again as a man. (19)

Those men who through the exercise of various virtues² become pious householders, will be born again as men; for all beings will reap the fruit of their actions. (20)

But he who increases his capital, is (to be compared to) one who practises eminent virtues; the virtuous, excellent man cheerfully attains the state of gods³. (21)

When one thus knows that a (virtuous) monk or householder will be gladdened (by his gain), how, then, should a man, whilst he is losing (his chance), not be conscious of his losing it? (22)

As a drop of water at the top of a blade of Kusa-grass dwindles down to naught when compared with the ocean, so do human pleasures when compared with divine pleasures. (23)

The pleasures in this very limited life of men are like (the water at) the top of a blade of Kusa-grass; for the sake of what will a man not care to gain and ¹ I. e. birth as a man or a god.

² Sikshâ. The commentator quotes the following passage in Prâkrîti: Souls gain human birth through four causes: (1) a kind disposition (prakṛtibhadratâ), (2) love of discipline (prakṛtivistivînatâ), (3) compassion (sânu-krośanatâ), and (4) want of envy (amatsarîtatâ).

³ For a higher rank than that of a god, e. g. that of a Kêvalin, cannot, in the present state of the world, be attained.

to keep (so precious a good which he risks to lose)? (24)

He who has not renounced pleasure, will miss his aim (i.e. the true end of his soul); for though he has been taught the right way, he will go astray again and again. (25)

But he who has renounced pleasure, will not miss his aim; (he will think): I have learned that, by getting rid of this vile body, I shall become a god. (26)

He will be born among men where there is wealth, beauty, glory, fame, long life, and eminent happiness. (27)

See the folly of the sinner who practises unrighteousness: turning away from the Law, the great sinner will be born in hell. (28)

See the wisdom of the wise man who follows the true Law: turning away from unrighteousness, the virtuous man will be born as a god. (29)

A wise man weighs in his mind the state of the sinner and that of the virtuous man; quitting the state of the sinner, a sage realises that of the virtuous. (30)

Thus I say.

EIGHTH LECTURE.

KAPILA'S VERSES¹.

By what acts can I escape a sorrowful lot in this unstable ineternal Samsâra, which is full of misery? (1)

¹ This lecture is ascribed to Kapila. According to an old story, told in the commentary, he was the son of Kâsyapa, a Brahman

Quitting your former connections place your affection on nothing ; a monk who loves not even those who love him, will be freed from sin and hatred. (2)

Then the best of sages, who is exempt from of Kaurâmbî, and his wife Yará. When Kâsyapa died, his place was given to another man. His wife then sent her boy to Srâvastî to study under Indradatta, a friend of his father's. That man was willing to instruct the boy, and procured him board and lodging in a rich merchant's house. Kapila, however, soon fell in love with the servant-girl who was appointed to his service. Once, at a festival kept by her caste, the girl in tears told him that she could not take part in the festivity as she had no money to buy ornaments. To get some she asked him to go to Dhana, a merchant, who used to give two pieces of gold to the man who saluted him first in the morning. Accordingly Kapila set out in the night, but was taken up by the police and brought before the king, Prasênagit. The student made a clear breast before the king, who was so pleased with him that he promised to give him whatever he should ask. Kapila went in the garden to consider what he should ask ; and the more he thought about it, the more he raised the sum which he believed he wanted, till it came to be ten thousand millions. But then, all of a sudden, the light came upon him ; he began to repent of the sinful life he had led up to that time, and tearing out his hair he became a Svayamsambuddha. Returning to the king, he pronounced verse 17 : The more you get, &c., and giving him the Dharmalâbha, he went his way. He practised austerities and acquired superior knowledge, by dint of which he came to know that in a wood, eighteen leagues from Râgagrîha, lived a gang of five hundred robbers, under a chief Bala-bhadra. These men, he knew, would become converts to the right faith ; accordingly he went to the wood where they lived. He was made prisoner, and brought before the leader of the robbers. To have some fun out of him they ordered him to dance, and on his objecting that there was none to play up, they all clapped their hands to beat the time. He then sang the first stanza of this lecture, by which some robbers were converted, and he continued to sing, repeating this stanza after each following verse (as dhr uva), till at last all the robbers were converted.

delusion and possesses perfect knowledge and faith, speaks for the benefit and eternal welfare, and for the final liberation of all beings. (3)

All fetters (of the soul), and all hatred, everything of this kind, should a monk cast aside; he should not be attached to any pleasures, examining them well and taking care of himself. (4)

A stupid, ignorant sinner who never fixes his thoughts on the soul's benefit and eternal welfare, but sinks down through hatred and the temptation of lust, will be ensnared as a fly is caught on glue. (5)

It is difficult to cast aside the pleasures of life, weak men will not easily give them up; but there are pious ascetics (sâdhu) who get over the impassable (Samsâra) as merchants cross the sea. (6)

Some there are who call themselves Sramanas, though they are like the beasts ignorant of (the prohibition of) killing living beings; the stupid sinners go to hell through their superstitious beliefs¹. (7)

One should not permit (or consent to) the killing of living beings; then he will perhaps be delivered from all misery; thus have spoken the preceptors who have proclaimed the Law of ascetics. (8)

A careful man who does not injure living beings, is called 'circumspect' (samita). The sinful Karman will quit him as water quits raised ground. (9)

In thoughts, words, and acts he should do

¹ The commentator quotes the following words: brahmanê brâhmanam âlabhêta, indrâya kshattram, marudbhyô vaisyam, tapasê sâdram, and explains them: he who kills a Brâhmana will acquire Brahma knowledge.

nothing injurious to beings who people the world, whether they move or not. (10)

He should know what alms may be accepted, and should strictly keep these rules; a monk should beg food only for the sustenance of life, and should not be dainty. (11)

He should eat what tastes badly, cold food, old beans, Vakkasa Pulâga, and for the sustenance of his life he should eat Manghu (ground badara). (12)

Those who interpret the marks of the body, and dreams, and who know the foreboding changes in the body (aṅga vidyâ)¹, are not to be called Śramaṇas; thus the preceptors have declared. (13)

Those who do not take their life under discipline, who cease from meditation and ascetic practices², and who are desirous of pleasures, amusements, and good fare, will be born again as Asuras. (14)

And when they rise (in another birth) from the world of the Asuras, they err about, for a long time, in the Saṃsâra; those whose souls are sullied by many sins, will hardly ever attain Bôdhi. (15)

And if somebody should give the whole earth to one man, he would not have enough; so difficult is it to satisfy anybody. (16)

The more you get, the more you want; your desires increase with your means. Though two mâshas would do to supply your want, still you would scarcely think ten millions sufficient. (17)

¹ See the note on verse 17 of the Fifteenth Lecture.

² Samâdhiyôgâh. Samâdhi is concentration of the mind, and the yôgâs are, in this connection, the operations (vyâpâra) of mind, speech, and body conducive to it.

Do not desire (women), those female demons¹, on whose breasts grow two lumps of flesh, who continually change their mind, who entice men, and then make a sport of them as of slaves. (18)

A houseless (monk) should not desire women, he should turn away from females; learning thoroughly the Law, a monk should strictly keep its rules. (19)

This Law has been taught by Kapila of pure knowledge; those who follow it, will be saved and will gain both worlds. (20)

Thus I say.

NINTH LECTURE.

THE PRAVRAGYÂ OF KING NAMÎ².

After (Nami) had descended from the world of the gods, and had been born as a man, he put an end to the influence of delusion, and remembered his former birth. (1)

Remembering his former birth, king Nami

¹ Râkshasîs in the original.

² The Life of king Nami and his Bôdhi is told in the commentary. The *Prâkrî*t text of this romance is printed in my 'Ausgewählte Erzählungen in Mâhârâsh/ri,' Leipzig, 1886, p. 41 ff. Nami is one of the four simultaneous Pratyêkabuddhas, i.e. one of those saints who reach the highest stage of knowledge by an effort of their own, not through regular instruction and religious discipline. The Pratyêkabuddhas or Svayamsambuddhas (Sahasambuddha in *Prâkrî*t) do not, however, propagate the true Law, as the Tîrthakaras do. As the legend of Nami is not materially connected with our text, I need not give an abstract of it here.

became a Svayamsambuddha in the true Law, and placing his son on the throne he retired from the world. (2)

After having enjoyed, in the company of the beautiful ladies of his seraglio, excellent pleasures which match those of the heavens, king Nami became enlightened and gave up his pleasures. (3)

Having given up the town and country of Mithilâ, his army, seraglio, and all his retinue, the venerable man retired from the world and resorted to a lonely place. (4)

When the royal Seer Nami retired from the world, at the occasion of his Pravragyâ there was an uproar in Mithilâ. (5)

To the royal Seer who had reached the excellent stage of Pravragyâ, Sakra in the guise of a Brâhmana addressed the following words: (6)

‘Why is now Mithilâ¹ full of uproar? Dreadful noises are heard from palaces and houses.’ (7)

On hearing this, the royal Seer Nami, pursuing his reasons and arguments, answered the king of the gods thus: (8)

‘In Mithilâ is the sacred² tree Manôrama, full of leaves, flowers, and fruits, which sheds a cool shadow; this tree is always a favourite resort of many (birds). (9)

¹ The text has Mahilâê, which is against the metre. The locative makes the construction needlessly involved.

² Kêiê, kaitya. The commentator interprets it as meaning udyâna, park; but to make good his interpretation he takes va~~kk~~ê for an instrumental plural instead of a nominative singular. The context itself seems to militate against this interpretation; for it is natural to say of a tree that it has many leaves, but it is rather strained to say the same of a park.

‘ Now, as this sacred tree Manôrama is shaken by the storm, the birds, suffering, destitute of refuge, and miserable, scream aloud.’ (10)

On hearing this, the king of gods, pursuing his reasons and arguments, answered the royal Seer Nami thus : (11)

“ This is fire and storm, your palace is on fire ! Reverend sir, why do you not look after your seraglio ? ” (12)

Nami answered (see verse 8) : (13)

‘ Happy are we, happy live we who call nothing our own ; when Mithilâ is on fire, nothing is burned that belongs to me. (14)

‘ To a monk who has left his sons and wives, and who has ceased to act, nothing pleasant can occur, nor anything unpleasant. (15)

‘ There is much happiness for the sage, for the houseless monk, who is free from all ties, and knows himself to be single and unconnected (with the rest of the world).’ (16)

Indra answered (see verse 11) : (17)

“ Erect a wall, gates, and battlements ; dig a moat ; construct sataghnts¹ : then you will be ² a Kshattriya.” (18)

Nami answered (see verse 8) : (19)

‘ Making Faith his fortress, Penance and Self-control the bolt (of its gate), Patience its strong wall, so that guarded in three ways³ it is impregnable ; making Zeal his bow, its string Carefulness in walking (iriyâ), and its top (where the string is

¹ An instrument for defending a town.

² Gakkhasi. The commentator explains this as an imperative, but there is no necessity for it.

³ Tigutta, this is a pun on the three guptis.

fastened) Content, he should bend (this bow) with Truth, piercing with the arrow, Penance, (the foe's) mail, Karman—(in this way) a sage will be the victor in battle and get rid of the Samsâra.' (20-22)

Indra answered (see verse 11): (23)

"Build palaces, excellent houses¹, and turrets; thus you will be a Kshattriya." (24)

Nami answered (see verse 8): (25)

'He who builds his house on the road, will certainly get into trouble; wherever he wants to go, there he may take up his lodgings.' (26)

Indra answered (see verse 11): (27)

"Punishing thieves and robbers, cut-purses and burglars, you should establish public safety; thus you will be a Kshattriya." (28)

Nami answered (see verse 8): (29)

'Men frequently apply punishment wrongly: the innocent are put in prison, and the perpetrator of the crime is set at liberty.' (30)

Indra answered (see verse 11): (31)

"O king, bring into subjection all princes who do not acknowledge you; thus you will be a true Kshattriya." (32)

Nami answered (see verse 8): (33)

'Though a man should conquer thousands and thousands of valiant (foes), greater will be his victory if he conquers nobody but himself. (34)

'Fight with your Self; why fight with external foes? He who conquers himself through himself, will obtain happiness. (35)

'The five senses, anger, pride, delusion, and greed

¹ Vardhamânagṛiḥa; the houses which are so called, belong to the best kind, see Varâha Mihira, Bṛihat Samhitâ 53, 36.

—difficult to conquer is one's self; but when that is conquered, everything is conquered!¹ (36)

Indra answered (see verse 11): (37)

"Offer great sacrifices, feed Sramanas and Brâhmanas, give alms, enjoy yourself, and offer sacrifices: thus you will be a true Kshattriya." (38)

Nami answered: (39)

'Though a man should give, every month, thousands and thousands of cows, better will be he who controls himself, though he give no alms.' (40)

Indra answered: (41)

"You have left the dreadful âsrama (that of the householder)² and are wanting to enter another; (remain what you were), O king, and be content with observing the Pôsaha-days." (42)

Nami answered: (43)

'If an ignorant man should eat but a blade of Kusa-grass every month, (the merit of his penance) will not equal the sixteenth part of his who possesses the Law as it has been taught.' (44)

Indra answered: (45)

"Multiply your gold and silver, your jewels and

¹ The first line of this verse is in the Âryâ-metre, the second in Anushûbh; the whole will not construe, but the meaning is clear. There are numerous instances in which the metre changes in the same stanza from Âryâ to Anushûbh, and vice versa, so frequent they are that we are forced to admit the fact that the authors of these metrical texts did not shrink from taking such liberties.

² Ghôrâsama. A Gaina author cannot forbear to name things from his religious point of looking at them. Thus only can it be explained that here Indra is made to apply to the âsrama of the householder an attribute which not he but his opponent could have used. Our verse is, however, probably only a later addition, as it has not the burden of the verses put into the mouth of Indra.

pearls, your copper, fine robes, and carriages, and your treasury; then you will be a true Kshatriya." (46)

Nami answered: (47)

'If there were numberless mountains of gold and silver, as big as Kailâsa, they would not satisfy a greedy man; for his avidity is boundless like space. (48)

'Knowing that the earth with its crops of rice and barley, with its gold and cattle, that all this put together will not satisfy one single man, one should practise austerities.' (49)

Indra answered: (50)

"A miracle! O king, you give up those wonderful pleasures, in search of imaginary objects; your very hope will cause your ruin." (51)

Nami answered: (52)

'Pleasures are the thorn that rankles, pleasures are poison, pleasures are like a venomous snake; he who is desirous of pleasures will not get them, and will come to a bad end at last. (53)

'He will sink through anger; he will go down through pride; delusion will block up his path; through greed he will incur dangers in both worlds.' (54)

Throwing off the guise of a Brâhmaṇa, and making visible his true form, Sakra saluted him respectfully and praised him with these sweet words: (55)

"Bravo! you have conquered anger; bravo! you have vanquished pride; bravo! you have banished delusion; bravo! you have subdued greed. (56)

"Bravo for your simplicity, O saint! bravo for your humility, O saint! bravo for your perfect patience! bravo for your perfect liberation! (57)

“Here (on earth) you are the highest man, Reverend sir, and hereafter you will be the highest; exempt from all blemishes you will reach Perfection, a higher state than which there is none in this world.” (58)

Thus praising the royal Seer, Sakra in perfect faith kept his right side towards him and paid reverence to him, again and again. (59)

After having adored the best sage's feet marked by the Kakra and the *Aṅkusa*¹, he flew up through the air, with his crown and his earrings prettily trembling. (60)

Nami humbled himself; enjoined by Sakra in person, the king of Vidēha left the house, and took upon him Sramanahood. (61)

Thus act the enlightened, the wise, the clever ones; they turn away from pleasures, as did Nami, the royal Seer. (62)

Thus I say.

TENTH LECTURE².

THE LEAF OF THE TREE.

As the fallow leaf of the tree falls to the ground, when its days are gone, even so the life of men (will come to its close); Gautama, be careful all the while! (1)

¹ The wheel and the hook.

² This is a sermon delivered by Mahāvīra to his disciple Indrabhūti, who belonged to the Gôtama Gôtra. In the commentary a lengthy legend is given how Gautama came to want this instruction. As it is not necessary for understanding the contents of this lecture, I may pass it over.

As a dew-drop dangling on the top of a blade of Kusa-grass lasts but a short time, even so the life of men; Gautama, be careful all the while! (2)

As life is so fleet and existence so precarious, wipe off the sins you ever committed; Gautama, &c. (3)

A rare chance, in the long course of time, is human birth for a living being; hard are the consequences of actions; Gautama, &c. (4)

When the soul has once got into an earth-body¹, it may remain in the same state as long as an Asamkhya²; Gautama, &c. (5)

When the soul has once got into a water-body, &c. (all as in verse 5). (6)

When a soul has once got into a fire-body, &c. (all as in verse 5). (7)

When the soul has once got into a wind-body, &c. (all as in verse 5). (8)

When the soul has once got into a vegetable-body, it remains long in that state, for an endless time, after which its lot is not much bettered³; Gautama, &c. (9)

When the soul has once got into a body of a Dvîndriya (i.e. a being possessing two organs of ¹ Verses 5-9 treat of the êkêndriyas or beings which possess but one organ of sense, that of touch. A full description of them as well as of the dvîndriyas, &c. is given in the last lecture.

² The periods called asamkhya are measured by utsarpinîs and avasarpinîs which correspond to the kalpas of the Hindus, but greatly exaggerated. An asamkhya is the longest time (ukhôsam = utkarsham) which a soul may be doomed to live in earth-bodies; see below, XXXVI, 81 ff.

³ This is, according to the commentary, the meaning of duranta.

sense), it may remain in the same state as long as a period called *samkhyêya*¹; Gautama, &c. (10)

When the soul has once got into a body of a Trîndriya (i.e. a being possessing three organs of sense), it, &c. (all as in verse 10). (11)

When the soul has once got into a body of a Katurindriya (i.e. a being possessing four organs of sense), it, &c. (all as in verse 10). (12)

When the soul has once got into a body of a Pañcêndriya (i.e. a being possessing five organs of sense), it may remain in the same state as long as seven or eight births; Gautama, &c. (13)

When the soul has once got into the body of a god or of a denizen of hell, it may remain in that state one whole life; Gautama, &c. (14)

Thus the soul which suffers for its carelessness, is driven about in the Samsâra by its good and bad Karman; Gautama, &c. (15)

Though one be born as a man, it is a rare chance to become an Ârya; for many are the Dasyus and Mlêkhas; Gautama, &c. (16)

Though one be born as an Ârya, it is a rare chance to possess all five organs of sense; for we see many who lack one organ or other; Gautama, &c. (17)

Though he may possess all five organs of sense, still it is a rare chance to be instructed in the best Law; for people follow heretical teachers; Gautama, &c. (18)

Though he may have been instructed in the right Law, still it is a rare chance to believe in it; for many people are heretics; Gautama, &c. (19)

¹ A samkhigga, i.e. samkhyêya, is a period which can be measured by thousands of years.

Though one believe in the Law, he will rarely practise it; for people are engrossed by pleasures; Gautama, &c. (20)

When your body grows old, and your hair turns white, the power of your ears decreases; Gautama, &c. (21)

When your body grows old, and your hair turns white, the power of your eyes decreases; Gautama, &c. (22)

When your body grows old, and your hair turns white, the power of your nose decreases. (23)

When your body grows old, and your hair turns white, the power of your tongue decreases. (24)

When your body grows old, and your hair turns white, the power of your touch decreases. (25)

When your body grows old, and your hair turns white, all your powers decrease. (26)

Despondency, the king's evil, cholera, mortal diseases of many kinds befall you; your body wastes and decays; Gautama, &c. (27)

Cast aside from you all attachments, as the (leaves of) a lotus let drop off the autumnal¹ water, exempt from every attachment, Gautama, be careful all the while! (28)

Give up your wealth and your wife; you have entered the state of the houseless; do not, as it were, return to your vomit; Gautama, &c. (29)

Leave your friends and relations, the large fortune you have amassed; do not desire them a second time; Gautama, &c. (30)

¹ This attribute is here given to 'water,' because in autumn the water becomes pure, and even the purest water has no hold upon the leaves of a lotus; thus a saint should give up even the best and dearest attachment.

There is now no Gina¹, but there is a highly esteemed guide to show the way; now being on the right path, Gautama, be careful all the while! (31)

Now you have entered on the path from which the thorns have been cleared, the great path; walk in the right path; Gautama, &c. (32)

Do not get into an uneven road like a weak burden-bearer; for you will repent of it afterwards; Gautama, &c. (33)

You have crossed the great ocean; why do you halt so near the shore? make haste to get on the other side; Gautama, &c. (34)

Going through the same religious practices as perfected saints², you will reach the world of perfection, Gautama, where there is safety and perfect happiness; Gautama, &c. (35)

The enlightened³ and liberated monk should control himself, whether he be in a village or a town, and he should preach to all⁴ the road of peace; Gautama, &c. (36)

Having heard the Buddha's⁵ well-delivered

¹ As this assertion cannot be put in the mouth of Mahāvīra, this verse must be set down as a later addition—or perhaps as a blunder of the poet similar to that noted before, in IX, 42.

² This seems, according to the commentary, to be the meaning of the phrase akalêvarasênim ūsiyâ. Akalêvarasrêṇī is said to mean as much as kshapakasrêṇī.

³ Buddha.

⁴ Bûhaê = vrimhayêt; literally, propagate.

⁵ Here the word buddha is used as a title; but its use is very restricted, scarcely going beyond that of a common epithet. This is just what we otherwise should have to assume in order to explain the use by the Bauddhas of that word to denote the founder of their sect. In the Sûtrakṛitāṅga II, 6, 28 Buddha, in the plural, actually denotes the prophets of the Buddhists.

sermon, adorned by illustrations, Gautama cut off love and hatred and reached perfection. (37)

Thus I say.

ELEVENTH LECTURE.

THE VERY LEARNED.

I shall explain, in due order, the right discipline of a houseless monk who has got rid of all worldly ties. Listen to me. (1)

He who is ignorant of the truth, egoistical, greedy, without self-discipline, and who talks loosely, is called ill-behaved and void of learning. (2)

There are five causes which render wholesome discipline impossible : egoism, delusion, carelessness, illness, and idleness : (3)

For eight causes discipline is called virtue, viz. : not to be fond of mirth, to control one's self, not to speak evil of others, not to be without discipline, not to be of wrong discipline, not to be covetous, not to be choleric, to love the truth ; for their influence discipline is called virtue. (4, 5)

A monk who is liable to the following fourteen charges, is called ill-behaved, and does not reach Nirvâna : (6)

If he is frequently angry ; if he perseveres in his wrath ; if he spurns friendly advice ; if he is proud of his learning ; if he finds fault with others ; if he is angry even with friends ; if he speaks evil even of a good friend behind his back ; if he is positive in his assertions ; if he is malicious, egoistical, greedy, without self-discipline; if he does not share with others; if he is always unkind: then he is called ill-behaved. (7-9)

But for the following fifteen good qualities he is called well-behaved: if he is always humble, steady, free from deceit and curiosity; if he abuses nobody; if he does not persevere in his wrath; if he listens to friendly advice; if he is not proud of his learning; if he does not find fault with others; if he is not angry with friends; if he speaks well even of a bad friend behind his back; if he abstains from quarrels and rows; if he is enlightened, polite, decent, and quiet: then he is called well-behaved. (10-13)

He who always acknowledges his allegiance to his teacher¹, who has religious zeal and ardour for study, who is kind in words and actions, deserves to be instructed. (14)

As water put into a shell shines with a doubled brilliancy, so do the piety, fame, and knowledge of a very learned monk. (15)

As a trained Kambôga-steed, whom no noise frightens², exceeds all other horses in speed, so a very learned monk is superior to all others³. (16)

As a valiant hero bestriding a trained horse, with heralds singing out to his right and left, (has no equal)⁴, neither has a very learned monk. (17)

¹ Literally, who always remains in his teacher's kula.

² Kanthaka. The horse of Buddha is called Kanthaka; our passage shows that the word is not a proper noun, but an appellative.

³ This is the burden of all verses down to verse 30.

⁴ I have supplied these words here and in the following verses. The commentators try to do without them, and labour to point out qualities of the monk, which correspond to the attributes of the subject of the comparison.

As a strong and irresistible elephant of sixty years, surrounded by his females, (has no equal), neither has a very learned monk. (18)

As a sharp-horned, strong-necked bullock, the leader of the herd, is a fine sight, so is a very learned monk. (19)

As a proud lion with sharp fangs, who brooks no assault, is superior to all animals, so is a very learned monk (superior to all men). (20)

As Vâsudêva, the god with the conch, discus, and club, who fights with an irresistible strength, (has no equal), neither has a very learned monk. (21)

As a universal monarch with his fourfold army and great power, the possessor of the fourteen attributes of a king, (has no equal), neither has a very learned monk. (22)

As Sakra the thousand-eyed, the wielder of the thunderbolt, the fortress-destroyer, the king of gods, (has no equal), neither has a very learned monk. (23)

As the rising sun, the dispeller of darkness, who burns as it were with light, (has no equal), neither has a very learned monk. (24)

As the moon, the queen of the stars, surrounded by the asterisms, when she is full at full-moon, (has no equal), neither has a very learned monk. (25)

As a well-guarded storehouse of merchants, which is filled with grain of many kinds, (has no equal), neither has a very learned monk. (26)

As the best of *Gambû*¹ trees, called Sudarsanâ,

¹ Eugenia Jambu. According to the commentators the very tree is meant from which Gambûdvîpa took its name. They make of the presiding (ânâdhiya) deity, the god Anâdrita. I am not prepared to say that there is such a god as Anâdrita. The name looks suspicious. I think ânâdhiya is equal to âgñâsthita.

which is the abode of the presiding deity, (has no equal), neither has a very learned monk. (27)

As the best of rivers, the ocean-flowing stream Sitâ¹ with its dark waters, (has no equal), neither has a very learned monk. (28)

As the best of hills, high mount Mandara, on which various plants shed a bright lustre, (has no equal), neither has a very learned monk. (29)

As the ocean of inexhaustible water, the delight of Svayambhû², which is full of precious things of many kinds, (has no equal), neither has a very learned monk. (30)

Monks who equal the ocean in depth, who are difficult to overcome, are frightened by nobody (or nothing), and are not easily assailed, who are full of extensive learning and take care of themselves, will go to the highest place, after their Karman has been annihilated. (31)

Therefore, seeker after the highest truth, study the sacred lore, in order to cause yourself and others to attain perfection. (32)

Thus I say.

¹ According to the cosmography of the Gainas the Sitâ is a river which takes its rise in the Nîla range and falls into the Eastern ocean. The Nîla is the fourth of the six parallel mountain-barriers, the southernmost of which is the Himâlaya. (Trailôkya Dîpikâ, Umâsvâtis' Tattvârthâdhigama Sûtra, &c.)

² This epithet apparently refers to Vishnu's sleeping on the ocean.

TWELFTH LECTURE ¹.

HARIKÊSA.

Harikêsa-Bala was born in a family of Svapâkas (Kândâlas); he became a monk and a sage, possessed of the highest virtues, who had subdued his senses. (1)

He observed the rules with regard to walking, begging, speaking, easing nature, and receiving and keeping (of things necessary for a monk)², controlled himself, and was always attentive (to his duty). (2)

He protected from sin his thoughts, speech, and body³, and subdued his senses.

¹ The commentators relate a legend of the principal figure in the following lecture. We may skip his former births and begin with his last. Near the Ganges lived Balakôsh/ha, chief of a Kândâla tribe, called Harikêsa (the yellow-haired). With his wife Gaurî he had a son Bala, who in the course of time became a Gaina monk and a great Rîshi. On his wanderings he once stayed in the Tinduga-grove near Benares, the presiding deity of which, a Yaksha, became his most fervent follower. One day Bhadrâ, king Kausalika's daughter, came to the Yaksha's shrine and paid homage to the idol. But seeing the dirty monk, she did not conceal her aversion. The Yaksha, however, to punish her for her want of respect for the holy man, possessed her. As no physician or conjurer could cure her madness, the Yaksha, by whom she was possessed, said she would recover only if she were offered as bride to Bala, the monk. The king agreeing, Bhadrâ became sound as before and went to the monk to choose him for her husband. Bala of course refused her. She was then married by the king to his Purôhita, Rudradêva, whose sacrifice-enclosure is the scene of the occurrences related in the Twelfth Lecture.

² These are the five Samitis. Compare Bhandarkar, Report on the Search for Sanskrit Manuscripts for 1883-84, p. 98, note †.

³ These are the three Guptis. Compare Bhandarkar, loc. cit. p. 100, note *.

Once on his begging tour, he approached the enclosure of a Brahmanical sacrifice. (3)

When (the priests) saw him coming up, emaciated by austerities, in a miserable condition, and with the poorest outfit, they laughed at him, the ruffians. (4)

Stuck up by pride of birth, those killers of animals, who did not subdue their senses, the unchaste sinners, made the following speech : (5)

‘Who is that dandy coming there? he is swarthy, dreadful, with a turned-up nose, miserably clad, a very devil¹ of a dirty man, with a filthy cloth put on his neck? (6)

‘Who are you, you monster? or for what purpose have you come here? you miserably clad devil of a dirty man! go, get away! why stand you there?’ (7)

At this turn the Yaksha, who lived in the Tinduka-tree, had compassion on the great sage, and making his own body invisible spoke the following words: (8)

“I am a chaste Sramana, controlling myself; I have no property, nothing belonging to me, and do not cook my food; I have come for food which is dressed for somebody else at the time when I call. (9)

“You give away, eat, and consume plenty of food; know that I subsist by begging; let the mendicant get what is left of the rest.” (10)

‘The dinner has been prepared for Brâhmanas, it has been got ready especially for ourselves and for us exclusively; we shall not give you such food and drink; why stand you there?' (11)

¹ Pisâka. A full description of a Pisâka is given in the Uvâsaga Dasâo, § 94 of Hoernle's edition.

"The husbandmen throw the corn on high ground and on low ground¹, hoping (for a return). For the like motive give unto me; I may be the field which may produce merit (as the return for your benevolence)." (12)

'All the world knows that we are (as it were) the field on which gifts sown grow up as merit; Brâhmaṇas of pure birth and knowledge are the blessed fields.' (13)

"Those who are full of anger and pride, who kill, lie, steal, and own property, are Brâhmaṇas without pure birth and knowledge; they are very bad fields. (14)

"You are only the bearer of words as it were, you do not understand their meaning, though you have learned the Vêdas. The saints call at high and lowly (houses); they are the blessed fields." (15)

'Detractor of the learned doctors, how dare you speak thus in our presence! This food and drink should rather rot, than we should give it you, Nirgrantha².' (16)

"If you do not give me what I ask for, I who observe the Samitis, who am protected by the Guptis³, who subdue my senses, what benefit, then, will you gain by your sacrifices?" (17)

'Are here no Kshattriyas, no priests who tend the fire, no teachers with their disciples, who will

¹ This reminds one of the biblical parable of the sower.

² The word Nirgrantha has here, besides its common meaning, Gaiṇa monk, another derived from its etymological meaning, 'without any tie, without restraint,' i.e. shameless.

³ For Samiti and Gupti see notes 2 and 3 on p. 50.

beat him with a stick, or pelt him with a nut, take him by the neck, and drive him off?' (18)

On these words of the teachers, many young fellows rushed forward, and they all beat the sage with sticks, canes, and whips. (19)

At that turn king Kausalika's daughter, Bhadrâ, of faultless body, saw that the monk was beaten, and appeased the angry youngsters. (20)

'He is the very man to whom the king, impelled by the devil (who possessed me), had given me, but who would not think of me; he is the sage whom princes and gods adore, who has refused me. (21)

'He is that austere ascetic, of noble nature, who subdues his senses and controls himself; the chaste man, who would not accept me when my own father, king Kausalika, gave me to him. (22)

'He is the man of great fame and might, of awful piety and power; do not injure him who cannot be injured, lest he consume you all by the fire (of his virtue).' (23)

When the Yakshas heard these well-spoken words of (the Purôhita's) wife Bhadrâ, they came to the assistance of the sage, and kept the young men off. (24)

Appearing in the air with hideous shapes, the Asuras beat the people. When Bhadrâ saw them with rent bodies spitting blood, she spoke again thus: (25)

'You may as well dig rocks with your nails, or eat iron with your teeth, or kick fire with your feet, as treat contemptuously a monk. (26)

'Like a poisonous snake is a great sage of severe austerities, of tremendous piety and power; like a swarm of moths you will rush into a fire, if you beat a monk on his begging tour. (27)

‘Prostrate yourself before him for protection, you together with all of them, if you want to save your life and your property; for in his wrath he might reduce the world to ashes.’ (28)

When the Brâhmana saw the disciples bowing their back and head, and holding out their hands, not minding their occupation; with streaming eyes, spitting blood, looking upwards, their eyes and tongues protruding, like as many logs of wood, he became heartbroken and dejected, and together with his wife he appeased the sage: ‘Forgive us our injury and abuse, sir! (29, 30)

‘Forgive, sir, these ignorant, stupid boys, that they injured you; sages are exceedingly gracious, nor are the saints inclined to wrath.’ (31)

“There is not the least hatred in me, neither now, nor before, nor in future. The Yakshas attend upon me, therefore they have beaten the boys.” (32)

‘You know the truth and the Law; you are not angry, compassionate sage; we take refuge at your feet, we together with all of them. (33)

‘We worship you, mighty sir; there is nothing in you that we do not worship; eat this dish of boiled rice seasoned with many condiments. (34)

‘I have got plenty of food; eat it to do us a favour!’ The noble (monk) said ‘yes,’ and took food and drink after having fasted a whole month. (35)

At that moment the gods caused a rain of perfumed water and flowers, and showered down heavenly treasures; they struck the drums, and in the air they praised the gift. (36)

‘The value of penance has become visible, birth appears of no value! Look at the holy Harikêsa, the son of a Svapâka, whose power is so great.' (37)

"O Brâhmanas, why do you tend the fire, and seek external purity by water? The clever ones say that external purity which you seek for, is not the right thing. (38)

"You (use) Kusa-grass, sacrificial poles, straw and wood, you touch water in the evening and in the morning; thereby you injure living beings, and in your ignorance you commit sins again and again." (39)

'How should we sacrifice, O monk, and how avoid sinful actions? Tell us, ascetic, whom the Yakshas hold in honour, what do the clever ones declare to be the right method of sacrificing?' (40)

"Doing no injury to living beings of the six orders, abstaining from lying and from taking what is not freely given, renouncing property, women, pride, and deceit, men should live under self-restraint. (41)

"He who is well protected by the five *Samvaras*¹ and is not attached to this life, who abandons his body², who is pure and does not care for his body, wins the great victory, the best of offerings." (42)

'Where is your fire, your fireplace, your sacrificial ladle? where the dried cowdung (used as fuel)? Without these things, what kind of priests can the monks be? What oblations do you offer to the fire?' (43)

¹ Samvara is preventing, by means of the Samitis and Guptis, the âsrava, or flowing in of the Karman upon the soul. Bhandarkar, loc. cit. p. 106.

² This is the Kâyôtsarga, the posture of a man standing with all his limbs immovable, by which he fortifies himself against sins, &c.

“Penance is my fire; life my fireplace; right exertion is my sacrificial ladle; the body the dried cowdung; Karman is my fuel; self-control, right exertion, and tranquillity are the oblations, praised by the sages, which I offer.” (44)

‘Where is your pond, and where the holy bathing-place? how do you make your ablutions or get rid of impurity? Tell us, O restrained monk whom the Yakshas hold in honour; we desire to learn it from you.’ (45)

“The Law is my pond, celibacy my holy bathing-place, which is not turbid, and throughout clear for the soul¹; there I make ablutions; pure, clean, and thoroughly cooled I get rid of hatred² (or impurity). (46)

“The clever ones have discovered such bathing, it is the great bath praised by the seers, in which the great seers bathe, and, pure and clean, they obtain the highest place.” (47)

Thus I say.

THIRTEENTH LECTURE.

KĪTRA AND SAMBHŪTA³.

Being contemptuously treated for the sake of his birth (as a Kāṇḍāla) Sambhūta took, in Hastināpura, ¹ Attapasannalēsa = ātmaprasannalēśya, ‘in which the Lēśyā is favourable for the soul.’ The Lēśyā is comparable to the subtle body of the orthodox philosophy. The theory of the Lēśyā forms the subject of the Thirty-fourth Lecture.

² Dōsa, which means hatred (dvēsha) and impurity (dōsha).

³ The stories about Kītra and Sambhūta and the fate they the sinful resolution (to become a universal monarch in some later birth); descending from the heavenly region Padmagulma, he was born of Kulant in Kâmpilya as Brahmadatta; Kitra, however, was born in the town Purimatâla in the great family of a merchant; when he had heard the Law, he entered the order. (1, 2)

In the town Kâmpilya, both Sambhûta and Kitra (as they were called in a former birth) met again and told each other the reward they had realised for their good and bad actions. (3)

The universal monarch Brahmadatta, the powerful and glorious king, respectfully addressed the following words to him (who had been) his brother (in a former birth): (4)

‘We were brothers once, kind to each other, loving each other, wishing well to each other. (5)

‘We were slaves in the country of the Dasârnas, then antelopes on mount Kâlaṅgara, then geese on the shore of Mṛitagangâ, and Svapâkas in the land of Kâsi. (6)

‘And we were gods having great power, in the regions of the gods. This is our sixth birth, in which we are separated from each other.’ (7)

“Karman is produced by sinful thoughts, and you have entertained them, O king; it is by the influence of this Karman that we were separated.” (8) underwent in many births are common to Brahmins, Gainas, and Buddhists. The whole subject has been exhaustively dealt with by Prof. Leumann in two learned papers in the Wiener Zeitschrift für die Kunde des Morgenlandes, vol. v, pp. 1 ff., 111 ff., where an analysis of the various documents which relate this legend is given, and the Prâkrit text of the Thirteenth and Fourteenth Lectures together with a German translation is published. For all details, therefore, the reader is referred to Prof. Leumann's papers.

‘I had done actions derived from truth and purity, and now I enjoy their effect; is this also true in your case, Kiṭra?’ (9)

“Every good deed will bear its fruit to men; there is no escape from the effect of one’s actions. Through riches and the highest pleasures my soul has got the reward for its virtues. (10)

“Know, Sambhūta, that you have got the reward of your virtues in the shape of great wealth and prosperity; but know, O king, that is just so with Kiṭra; he also obtained prosperity and splendour. (11)

“A song of deep meaning condensed in words has been repeated in the midst of a crowd of men, (having heard) which monks of piety and virtues exert themselves in this (religion): I have become a Sramaṇa.” (12)

‘Renowned are my beautiful palaces Ukka, Udaya, Madhu, Karka, and Brahman: this house, full of treasures and containing the finest products of the Pañcāśālas, O *Kiṭra*¹, regard it as your own! (13)

‘Surround yourself with women who dance, and sing, and make music; enjoy these pleasures, O monk; I deem renunciation a hard thing.’ (14)

As the virtuous Kiṭra, for old friendship’s sake, loved the king who was attached to sensual pleasures, and as he had at heart his welfare, he spoke to him the following words: (15)

“All singing is but prattle, all dancing is but

¹ The commentator constructs Kiṭra with dhanappabhūya: full of manifold treasures; but Prof. Leumann is probably right in taking it as a vocative.

mocking, all ornaments are but a burden, all pleasures produce but pains. (16)

“O king, pleasures which the ignorant like, but which produce pains, do not delight pious monks who care not for pleasure, but are intent on the virtues of right conduct. (17)

“Excellent king, the lowest caste of men is that of the Svapâkas, to which we twice belonged; as such we were loathed by all people, and we lived in the hamlets of Svapâkas. (18)

“In that miserable birth we lived in the hamlets of Svapâkas, detested by all people; then we acquired the Karman (the fruit of which we now enjoy). (19)

“You are now a king of great power and prosperity, enjoying the reward of your good actions; put from you the transitory pleasures, and enter the order for the sake of the highest good¹! (20)

“He who in this life has done no good actions and has not practised the Law, repents of it in the next world when he has become a prey to Death. (21)

“As a lion takes hold of an antelope, so Death leads off a man in his last hour; neither mother, nor father, nor brother will, at that time, save a particle (of his life). (22)

“Neither his kinsmen, nor his friends, nor his sons, nor his relations will share his suffering, he alone has to bear it; for the Karman follows the doer. (23)

“Leaving behind bipeds and quadrupeds, his fields, his house, his wealth, his corn, and everything;

¹ Âdâna, explained kāritradharma.

against his will, and accompanied only by his Karman¹, he enters a new existence, either a good or a bad one. (24)

“When they have burned with fire on the funeral pile his forlorn, helpless corpse, his wife and sons and kinsfolk will choose another man to provide for them. (25)

“Life drags on (towards death) continuously²; old age carries off the vigour of man. King of the Pañchâlas, mark my words: do no fearful actions.” (26)

‘I, too, know just as well as you, O saint, what you have told me in your speech: pleasures will get a hold on men and are not easily abandoned by such as we are, sir. (27)

‘O Kîtra, in Hastinâpura³ I saw the powerful king (Sanatkumâra), and I took that sinful resolution in my desire for sensual pleasures. (28)

‘And since I did not repent of it, this has come of it, that I still long for sensual pleasures, though I know the Law. (29)

‘As an elephant, sinking down in a quagmire,

¹ This might be translated, as Professor Leumann suggests: possessing Karman as the germ (of his future destiny); still I prefer the meaning vouched for by the commentators, because karmabîga generally means the germ, i.e. cause of Karman, see below, Thirty-second Lecture, verse 7.

² See Professor Leumann's remarks on this verse, l. c., p. 137 f.

³ When Sunandâ, wife of Sanatkumâra, paid homage to Sambhûta, then a Gaina monk, and touched his feet with the curls of her soft hair, he was possessed by the desire to become a universal monarch in reward for his penances. This is the nidâna of which the text speaks, and what I render in this connection by ‘taking a resolution.’ For the story itself, see my Ausgewählte Erzählungen in Mâhârâshtrî, p. 5 f.

sees the raised ground but does not get to the shore, so do we who long for sensual pleasures, not follow the path of monks. (30)

‘Time elapses and quickly pass the days; the pleasures of men are not permanent; they come to a man and leave him just as a bird leaves a tree void of fruit.’ (31)

“If you are unable to abandon pleasure, then do noble actions, O king; following the Law, have compassion on all creatures: then you will become a god on entering a new existence. (32)

“If you have no intention of abandoning pleasure, and still long for undertakings and property, my long talk has been to no purpose. I go, king, farewell.” (33)

And Brahmadata, king of the Pañkâlas, did not act on the counsel of the saint; he enjoyed the highest pleasure, and (afterwards) sank into the deepest hell. (34)

But Kîtra the great sage, of excellent conduct and penance, was indifferent to pleasure; after he had practised the highest self-control, he reached the highest place of perfection. (35)

Thus I say.

FOURTEENTH LECTURE.

ISHUKÂRA.

Having been gods in a former existence and lived in the same heavenly region, some were born (here below) in the ancient, wealthy, and famous town called Ishukâra¹, which is beautiful like heaven. (1)

By a remnant of the merit they had acquired in their former life, they were born in noble families. Disgusted with the world and afraid of the Samsâra, they abandoned (pleasures, &c.) and took refuge in the path of the Ginas. (2)

Two males remained bachelors, (the third became) the Purôhita (Bhrigu), (the fourth) his wife Yasâ, (the fifth) the widely-famed king Ishukâra, and (the sixth) his wife Kamalâvatî. (3)

Overcome by fear of birth, old age, and death, their mind intent on pilgrimage, and hoping to escape the Wheel of Births, they examined pleasures and abandoned them. (4)

Both dear sons of the Brahmanical Purôhita, who was intent on works, remembered their former birth, and the penance and self-control they had then practised. (5)

Averse to human and heavenly pleasures, desiring liberation, and full of faith, they went to their father and spoke thus: (6)

‘Seeing that the lot of man is transitory and precarious, and that his life lasts not long, we take no delight in domestic life; we bid you farewell: we shall turn monks!’ (7)

In order to dissuade them from a life of austerities, the father replied to those (would-be) monks: ‘Those versed in the Vêdas say that there will be no better world for men without sons. (8)

‘My sons, after you have studied the Vêdas, and fed the priests, after you have placed your own sons

¹ In Prâkrîṭ Usuyâra (or Isuyâra). According to the Prâkrîṭ legend given in the commentary it was in the Kuru country.

at the head of your house, and after you have enjoyed life together with your wives, then you may depart to the woods as praiseworthy sages.' (9)

The young men perceiving that the Purôhita was wholly consumed, as it were, by the fire of grief, which was fed by his individual inclinations and blown into a huge flame by the wind of delusion; that he suffered much and talked a great deal in many ways; that he tried to persuade them by degrees, and that he would even bribe them with money and with objects of desire, (spoke) these words : (10, 11)

"The study of the Vêdas will not save you; the feeding of Brâhmanas will lead you from darkness to darkness, and the birth of sons will not save you. Who will assent to what you said? (12)

"Pleasures bring only a moment's happiness, but suffering for a very long time, intense suffering, but slight happiness; they are an obstacle to the liberation from existence, and are a very mine of evils. (13)

"While a man walks about without abandoning pleasures, and grieves day and night, while he is anxious about other people, and seeks for wealth, he comes to old age and death. (14)

"I have this, and I have not that; I must do this, and I should not do that! While he talks in this strain, the robbers (viz. time) drag him away. What foolishness is this!" (15)

'Great wealth and women, a family and exquisite pleasures: for such things people practise austerities. All this you may have for your asking.' (16)

"What avail riches for the practice of religion, what a family, what pleasures? We shall become Sramanas, possessed of many virtues, and wander about collecting alms." (17)

'As fire is produced in the Arazi-wood, as butter in milk, and oil in sesamum seed, so, my sons, is the soul¹ produced in the body; (all these things) did not exist before, they came into existence, and then they perish; but they are not permanent.' (18)

"(The soul) cannot be apprehended by the senses, because it possesses no corporeal form², and since it possesses no corporeal form it is eternal. The fetter of the soul has been ascertained to be caused by its bad qualities, and this fetter is called the cause of worldly existence. (19)

"Thus being ignorant of the Law, we formerly did sinful actions, and through our wrong-mindedness we were kept back and retained (from entering the order). We shall not again act in the same way. (20)

"As mankind is harassed (by the one), and taken hold of (by the other), and as the unfailing ones go by, we take no delight in the life of a householder." (21)

'Who harasses the world? who takes hold of it?

¹ Sattâ in the original; it is rendered sattva by the commentators. Perhaps sattâ is the Prâkrî for svâtâmâ; at any rate, the context of the next verse proves that soul is intended.

² Amûrta. In later philosophy mûrtatva is defined as the possessing of definite and limited form (parikkhinnaparimânavattvam) or the possessing of action (kriyâvattvam or vegavattvam). Amûrta dravya are with the Vaiseshikas: the air (âkâsa), time, space, and Âtman. These are also called nityadravya. Amûrta is here apparently synonymous with arûpin, formless, compare XXXVI, 4, where dharma, adharma, akâsa, and kâla are enumerated as the 'formless things without life.'

whom do you call unfailing? My sons, I am anxious to learn this.' (22)

"Mankind is harassed by Death; it is taken hold of by Old Age; the days¹ are called unfailing: know this, Father! (23)

"The day that goes by will never return; the days elapse without profit to him who acts contrary to the Law. (24)

"The day that goes by will never return; the days elapse with much profit to him who acts up to the Law." (25)

'Having lived together in one place, and both parties² having acquired righteousness, we shall, O my sons, afterwards go forth (as monks) and beg alms from house to house.' (26)

"He who can call Death his friend, or who can escape him, or who knows that he will not die, might perhaps decide: this shall be done to-morrow. (27)

"We will even now adopt the Law, after the adoption of which we shall not be born again. The future has nothing in store for us (which we have not experienced already). Faith will enable us to put aside attachment." (28)

(Bhrigu speaks to his wife Vâsishthî.) 'Domestic

¹ Literally, the nights. It seems to have been the custom at the time when the Sûtras were composed, to reckon the time by nights, though the reckoning by days is not quite uninstanced in the Sûtras.

² This is the explanation of duhaô by the commentators, who apparently think that the parents and the sons are meant. The word in question is originally an adverb, but it is also (cf. Thirteenth Lecture, verse 18) taken by the commentator as a numeral, and rendered dvayôh. A genitive of the dual occurs in XIX, 90.

life ceases (to have attraction) for one who has lost his sons ; Vâsishṭhi, the time has arrived for me to turn mendicant friar. As long as a tree retains its branches, it is really a tree ; when they are lopped off, it is called a trunk. (29)

‘As a bird without its wings, as a king in battle without his followers, as a merchant on a boat without his goods, even so am I without my sons.’ (30)

“You have brought together all these objects of desire, and have collected many exquisitely pleasant things. Let us, therefore, fully enjoy the pleasures ; afterwards we shall go forth on the road of salvation.” (31)

‘We have finished enjoying pleasures, my dear ; our life is drawing to its close. I do not abandon pleasures for the sake of an unholy life ; but looking with indifference on gain and loss, on happiness and suffering, I shall lead the life of a monk.’ (32)

“May you not remember your brothers (when it is too late) like an old goose swimming against the current. Enjoy the pleasures together with me. A mendicant’s life is misery.” (33)

‘My dear, as a snake casts off the slough of its body and goes along free and easy, even so have my sons abandoned pleasure. Why should I, being left alone, not follow them ? (34)

‘As the fish Rôhita¹ breaks through a weak net, even so wise men of exemplary character and famous for their austerities abandon pleasure and live as mendicants. (35)

“As the herons fly through the air and the geese too, who had rent the net, even so my sons and my husband depart. Why should I, being left alone, not follow them?" (36)

¹ Cyprinus Rohita.

When the queen had heard that the Purôhita with his wife and sons had entered the order, abandoning pleasures and all his large property, she spoke to the king: (37)

'A man who returns, as it were, to the vomit, is not praised; but you want to confiscate¹ the property left by the Brâhmana. (38)

'If the whole world and all treasures were yours, you would still not be satisfied, nor would all this be able to save you. (39)

'Whenever you die, O king, and leave all pleasant things behind, the Law alone, and nothing else in this world, will save you, O monarch. (40)

'As a bird dislikes the cage, so do I (dislike the world). I shall live as a nun, without offspring, poor, upright, without desire, without love of gain, and without hatred. (41)

'As when by a conflagration of a forest animals are burned, other beasts greatly rejoice, being under the influence of love and hate; even so we, fools that we are, being attached to pleasure, do not perceive that the world is consumed by the fire of love and hatred. (42, 43)

'Those who have enjoyed pleasures, and have renounced them, move about like the wind, and go wherever they please, like the birds unchecked in their flight. (44)

'When they² are caught, and held by my hand,

¹ It was considered a privilege of the king to confiscate the property of a man who had no heir; compare Gautama XXVIII, 42, Vasishtha XVII, 83-86, &c.

² This apparently refers to the birds mentioned in the last verse.

sir, they struggle; we shall be like them, if we are attached to pleasures. (45)

‘As an unbaited (bird)¹ sees a baited one caught in the snare, even so shall we avoid every bait and walk about, not baited by anything. (46)

‘Being aware that pleasures are causes for the continuance of worldly existence, as illustrated in (the above) similes of the greedy man, one should be cautious and stir as little as possible, like a snake in the presence of Suparna. (47)

‘Like an elephant who has broken his fetters, go to your proper destination. O great king Ishukâri; this is the wholesome truth I have learned. (48)

‘Leave your large kingdom and the pleasures which are so dear to all; abandon what pleases the senses, and what attracts; be without attachment and property; learn thoroughly the Law and give up all amusements; then practise famous and severe penance, being of firm energy².’ (49, 50)

The commentators labour to interpret them as ‘pleasures,’ but that will not make good sense.

¹ Kulala in the original. Kulâla in Sanskrit denotes the wild cock, Phasianus Gallus. The word seems to be derived from kulâya by assimilation of the y to the preceding consonant, compare salilâ for saliyâ = saritâ = sarit. In the sense of bird the word kulâla seems to be used in the well-known stanza of Bhartṛhari: brahmâ yena kulâlavan niyamito brahmândabhândô-dare, unless here kulâla is an early corruption for kulâyin.

² The commentators assign these verses to the two sons of Bhrigu; but then the verses do not construe. Besides the mention of the ‘large kingdom’ in the first line seems to prove that the king, and not the Brahmins, is to be understood as the person addressed. In the last line I separate pagiggḥaha kkhâyam (scil. tavam), instead of pagiggḥa ahakkhâyam. It is, however, just possible that the next verse is to be connected with the preceding ones; in that case, we must read pagiggḥa and interpret it in conformity with the scholiast as a gerund.

In this way all (these) professors of the Law gradually obtained enlightenment, being frightened by birth and death, and seeking for the end of misery. (51)

Their doubts about the true doctrine were dispersed, and they realised the Bhâvanâs¹; in a short time they reached the end of misery. (52)

The king and the queen, the Brahmanical Purôhita, his wife, and his sons, they all reached perfection. (53)

Thus I say.

FIFTEENTH LECTURE.

THE TRUE MONK².

He who adopts the Law in the intention to live as a monk, should live in company (with other monks), upright, and free from desire; he should abandon his former connections, and not longing for pleasures, he should wander about as an unknown beggar: then he is a true monk. (1)

Free from love he should live, a model of

¹ The bhâvanâs are certain meditations which are conducive to the purity of the soul. They are treated at length in a work by Hêmaçandra, called Bhavabhâvanâ, which seems to be rather popular with the Svêtâmbaras. The Digambaras seem to call them Anuprêkshâs. A work in Prâkrîṭ by Subhaçandra, called Kârttikêyanuprêkshâ, is epitomised in Bhandarkar's Report for 1883-84, p. 113 ff.

² The name of this lecture, sa bhikkhû, is derived from the burden which runs through the whole of it and winds up every verse.

righteousness¹, abstaining from sins, versed in the sacred lore, protecting his soul (from every wrong), wise, hardy, observing everything; he who is attached to nothing, is a true monk. (2)

Ignorant of abuse and injury, a steadfast monk should be a model of righteousness, always protecting his soul (from sins), neither rash nor passionate; when he endures everything, then he is a true monk. (3)

He who is content with lowly beds and lodgings, bears heat and cold, flies and gnats, is neither rash nor passionate, and endures everything, he is a true monk. (4)

He does not expect respectful treatment, nor hospitality, nor reverence, nor, indeed, praises; he controls himself, keeps the vows, practises austerities, lives together with other monks, meditates on his soul; this is a true monk. (5)

If he does not care for his life, or abandons every delusion, if he avoids men and women, always practises austerities, and does not betray any curiosity, then he is a true monk. (6)

He who does not profess and live on divination from cuts and shreds², from sounds on the earth or in the air, from dreams, from diagrams, sticks, and

¹ Lâdhê, explained sadanush/hânatayâ pradhânaḥ. Lâdha is also the name of a country in western Bengal, inhabited, at Mahāvîra's time, by uncivilised tribes, see part i, p. 84, note 1. The etymology of both words is doubtful.

² Compare the note on p. 161 of part i. The 71st chapter of Varāha Mihira's Bṛihat Saṃhitā treats of vastrakḥêda, rents, &c. of clothes; the 51st, of aṅgavidyâ, forebodings from the body; and the 53rd, of vâstuvidyâ, property of buildings; chapters 88, 90, and 95 are devoted to the forebodings from the cries of birds, female jackals, and crows.

properties of buildings, from changes in the body, from the meaning¹ of the cries (of animals)—he is a true monk. (7)

Spells, roots, every kind of medical treatment, emetics, purgatives, fumigation, anointing of the eye, and bathing, the patient's lamentation, and his consolation—he who abstains from all these things, is a true monk. (8)

He who does not praise, or pay attention to, the warriors, Ugras², princes, Brâhmanas, Bhôgas, and artists of all sorts, who abstains from this, he is a true monk. (9)

He who does not, for earthly gain, improve his acquaintance with householders, with whom he fell in as a monk, or was in friendly relation before that time, he is a true monk. (10)

A Nirgrantha is forbidden to take from householders, if they do not give it themselves, bed, lodging,

¹ A conjectural rendering of vigaya, which cannot be taken in its ordinary meaning 'victory.' The commentary explains it ru-bhâsubhanirûpañâbhyâsah.—Notice the absence of astrology from the above list of prophetic arts practised by strolling friars apparently to insinuate themselves into the good graces of laymen and women. If Greek nativity had already risen to importance, it certainly would have been mentioned. For it has ever since held a firm hold on the Hindu mind.—This remark also applies to XX, 45. But in Sûtrakṛitāṅga I, 12, 9, astrology (saṃvakkhara) is mentioned; it is, however, the ancient astrology of the Hindus, not the Greek one.

² The Ugras and Bhôgas were Kshatriyas. The former were, according to the Gainas, descendants of those whom Rishabha, the first Tîrthakara, appointed to the office of kôtwals or prefects of towns, while the Bhôgas were descendants from those whom Rishabha acknowledged as persons deserving of honour. Comp. Hoernle, Uvâsaga Dasâo, Appendix, p. 58, and my edition of the Kalpa Sûtra, p. 103, note on § 18.

drink, food, or any dainties and spices; he who is not angry at such occasions, he is a true monk. (11)

If a monk gets any food and drink, or dainties and spices, and does not feel compassion (on a sick fellow-monk) in thoughts, words, and deeds, (then he is not a true monk)¹; but if he has his thoughts, words, and acts under strict discipline, then he is a true monk. (12)

Dish-water², barley-pap, cold sour gruel³, water in which barley has been washed: such loathsome food and drink he should not despise, but call at the lowliest houses (for alms); then he is a true monk. (13)

There are many voices on the earth, of gods, of men, and of beasts, dreadful, frightful, and awful noises; if he hears them without trembling, then he is a true monk. (14)

He who understands all religious disputations, [who lives together with fellow-monks]⁴, who practises self-discipline⁵, who meditates on his soul, who is wise, hardy, and observes everything, who

¹ The commentators supply these words; something to that purport is wanted to make out a consistent meaning, but there is not so much as a hint of it in the text itself. As it stands now, the meaning would be just the opposite of that given in the translation, which is in better accordance with the established custom.

² Âyâмага, it is rendered âkâmakâ in Sanskrit, and explained avasrâvana, i.e. avasrâvana. See also Leumann, Aupapâtika Sûtra, Glossar s.v.

³ Sauvîra, explained kâṅgika, the water of boiled rice in a state of spontaneous fermentation.

⁴ This is a later addition, proved to be such by the metre, though the commentators comment upon it.

⁵ Khêyânugaê. The commentators explain khêda by samyama.

is calm, and does not hurt anybody, he is a true monk. (15)

He who, not living by any art, without house, without friends, subduing his senses, free from all ties, sinless, and eating but little, leaves the house and lives single, he is a true monk. (16)

Thus I say.

SIXTEENTH LECTURE.

THE TEN CONDITIONS OF PERFECT CHASTITY.

O long-lived (Gambûsvâmin)! I (Sudharman) have heard the following Discourse from the Venerable (Mahâvîra) :

Here¹, indeed, the venerable Sthaviras have declared ten conditions for the realisation of celibacy, by hearing and understanding which the monks will reach a high degree of self-discipline, of *Samvara*², and of contemplation, will be well protected (by the three Guptis), will guard their senses, guard their chastity, and will thus never be remiss (in the attendance on their religious duties).

What, then, are those ten conditions for the realisation of celibacy as declared by the venerable Sthaviras, by hearing and understanding which the monks will reach a high degree of self-discipline, of

¹ The word 'here' is explained as meaning 'in this religion of the Gainas.' See p. 8, note 5.

² Samvara is the stopping of the âsravas by means of the Samitis and Guptis, see above, p. 55, note 1.

Samvara, and of contemplation, will be well protected (by the three Guptis), will guard their senses, guard their chastity, and will thus never be remiss (in the attendance on their religious duties)?

These, then, are the ten conditions for the realisation of celibacy, &c. (all down to) duties.

1. A Nirgrantha may occupy various places for sleep or rest¹; but a Nirgrantha should not occupy places, for sleep or rest, frequented by women, cattle, or eunuchs. The preceptor has explained the reason for this. If a Nirgrantha occupies places for sleep or rest, frequented by women, cattle, or eunuchs, then, though he be chaste, there may arise a doubt with regard to his chastity, or a sensual desire, or a feeling of remorse, or he will break the rules, or he will become a slave to passion, or he will acquire a dangerous illness of long duration, or he will desert the faith which the Kêvalin has proclaimed. Therefore a Nirgrantha should not occupy places, for sleep or rest, frequented by women, cattle, or eunuchs.

2. A Nirgrantha should not converse with women². The preceptor has explained the reason for this. If a Nirgrantha converses with women, &c. (all as above).

3. A Nirgrantha should not sit together with women on the same seat. The preceptor has explained the reason for this. If a Nirgrantha sits on the same seat with women, &c. (all as above).

¹ Literally, beds and seats.

² This might also be rendered: he should not talk about women.

4. A Nirgrantha should not look at, or contemplate, the charms and beauties of women. (The rest similar as above.)

5. A Nirgrantha should not, behind a screen, or curtain, or wall, listen to the screeching or screaming or singing or laughing or giggling or crying of women. (The rest similar as above.)

6. A Nirgrantha should not recall to his memory the pleasure and amusements which in the past he enjoyed together with women. (The rest similar as above.)

7. A Nirgrantha should not eat well-dressed food. (The rest similar as above.)

8. A Nirgrantha should not eat or drink to excess. (The rest similar as above.)

9. A Nirgrantha should not wear ornaments. The preceptor has explained the reason for this. If he wears ornaments, or adorns his body, he might become an object of desire to women. When he is an object of desire to women, then, &c. (the rest as in 1).

10. A Nirgrantha should not care for sounds, colours, tastes, smells, and feelings. (The rest similar as above.)

Here are some verses (to the same effect)¹:

A monk should take up a detached lodging, free from, and not frequented by women, to preserve his chastity. (1)

A chaste monk should avoid talking with women, which delights the mind and foment love and passion. (2)

¹ The preceding part of this lecture is in prose.

A chaste monk should always avoid the company of, and frequent conversation with women. (3)

A chaste monk should avoid observing the body, limbs, and figure of women, their pleasant prattle and oglings. (4)

A chaste monk should avoid listening to the screeching, screaming, singing, laughing, giggling, and crying of women. (5)

A chaste monk should never recall to his mind how he had laughed and played with women, and had enjoyed them, how they became jealous, and what tricks he played to frighten them. (6)

A chaste monk should always avoid well-dressed food and drink which will soon raise his sensuality. (7)

A chaste monk should always eat his food, collected according to the rules, for the sustenance of life, in the prescribed quantity, and at the right time; concentrated in his thoughts he should not eat to excess. (8)

A chaste monk should abstain from ornaments, he should not adorn his body after the fashion of amorous people. (9)

He should always abstain from the five orders of pleasant things: sounds, colours, smells, tastes, and feelings of touch. (10)

A lodging frequented by women, their pleasant talk, their company, and looking at their charms; (11)

Their screeching, screaming, singing, and laughing, eating and sleeping together with them; well-dressed food and drink, or partaking of them to excess; (12)

And ornaments and finery¹: these pleasant things,

¹ Iṭṭham ka, i.e. ishṭam ka. The commentators connect the which are hard to leave, are like the poison Tâlapuṭa¹, for a man who seeks after the true Self. (13)

He should, once for all, abandon pleasant things which are hard to leave; and concentrated in his thoughts he should avoid whatever casts a doubt on his chastity. (14)

A monk should be the steadfast charioteer, as it were, of the Law in the park of the Law², a vessel of righteousness, content, restrained, attentive to the duties of a chaste monk. (15)

The gods, Dânavas, Gandharvas, Yakshas, Râkshasas, and Kinnaras pay homage to a chaste monk who performs his difficult duties. (16)

This unchangeable, permanent, and eternal Law has been proclaimed by the Ginas; through it the Siddhas have reached perfection, and others will reach it. (17)

Thus I say.

SEVENTEENTH LECTURE.

THE BAD SRAMANA.

A Nirgrantha who has entered the order, who has learned the Law, who has received religious words with the second part of the sentence. By giving to ka the meaning of api they interpret the two words in question as meaning 'though very pleasant.'

¹ Tâlauḍa. According to the Dîpikâ it is a poison which kills by merely touching the palate (tâlukasparsanamâtrâd êva); but this is a mere guess prompted by a wrong etymology. Tâlauḍa stands perhaps for tâlakûṭa, which may have been a variant of kâlakûṭa, the deadly poison swallowed by Siva.

² Here we have twice the same word dhammârâmê, which discipline, and who has obtained the benefit of Bôdhi which is difficult to obtain, may perhaps afterwards begin to live as he likes. (1)

(He will say :) I have a good bed and wherewithal to cover me; I obtain food and drink; I know everything that comes to pass, friend; why then should I study, sir? (2)

He who, after entering the order, always sleeps, eats, and drinks as much as he likes, and lives comfortably, is called a bad Sramana. (3)

The sinner who despises the learning and discipline which his preceptor and teachers have taught him, is called a bad Sramana. (4)

He who does not, as he should, strive to please his preceptor and teachers, and does not, in his arrogance, treat them with respect, is called a bad Sramana. (5)

He who hurts living beings, seeds, and sprouts, who does not control himself, though he believes himself well-controlled, is called a bad Sramana. (6)

He who uses a bed, a plank, a chair, a seat, or his duster¹, without having well wiped these things, is called a bad Sramana. (7)

He who walks with great haste and without care, being overbearing and fierce, is called a bad Sramana. (8)

I have once translated 'park of the Law,' and then 'vessel of righteousness.' It is obvious that a play on this word is intended, though I may have failed to hit the meaning of the author.

¹ Pâdakambala, usually called ragôharana. One commentator suggests, as a possible rendering, pâtrakambala 'a cloth to cover his almsbowl.'

He who carelessly inspects things¹, throwing down his duster at random, not being attentive to the inspection of things, is called a bad Sramana. (9)

He who carelessly inspects things, his attention being absorbed by what he hears, who always slights his teachers, is called a bad Sramana. (10)

He who is deceitful, talkative, arrogant, greedy, who does not control himself, nor share (his food, &c. with those who are in want), and is not of an amiable disposition, is called a bad Sramana. (11)

He who is a controversialist, and ill-behaved, who perverts the truth, and delights in quarrels and contentions, is called a bad Sramana. (12)

He who sits down on a weak, shaking seat wherever he lists, and is not careful in sitting down, is called a bad Sramana. (13)

He who sleeps with dusty feet and does not inspect his couch, being careless about his bed, is called a bad Sramana. (14)

He who eats milk, curds, and other things produced from milk, and does not practise austerities, is called a bad Sramana. (15)

He who eats after sunset, and when admonished, makes an angry reply, is called a bad Sramana. (16)

He who leaves his own teacher, and follows heretical ones, who continuously changes his school², being of a bad disposition, is called a bad Sramana. (17)

¹ It is a monk's duty closely to inspect everything that he uses or comes in contact with, in order to avoid hurting inadvertently anything considered to possess life. This is called paḍilêhâ.

² Gāṇaṅganika, according to the commentators one who attaches himself to another gana every half-year.

He who has left his own house, and busies himself in another's house, who lives by fortune-telling, is called a bad Sramana. (18)

He who eats the food of his relations, and does not like living by alms¹, who reposes on the seat of the householder, is called a bad Sramana. (19)

Such a monk, who, like the heretics², does not protect himself from sins, who though having the appearance (of a monk) is the lowest among his worthy brethren, is despised in this world like poison; he is nobody in this world and in that beyond. (20)

But he who always avoids these sins, and is pious amongst his brethren, is welcomed in this world like nectar; he conquers this world and the next³. (21)

Thus I say.

EIGHTEENTH LECTURE.

SAÑGAYA⁴.

In the town of Kâmpilya there was a king, named Sañgaya, who possessed numerous troops and war-chariots; once he went a-hunting. (1)

¹ Sâ mudâniya, explained bhaiksham.

² Pañkakusîla, literally, those who practise the five wrong sîlas, whereby probably those are denoted who do not keep the five great vows of the Gainas. Note that the Buddhists too have their pañkasîla. They could therefore have been called pañkakusîla by the Gainas.

³ The text is not settled in the last line; but there can be no doubt about the meaning.

⁴ The commentators Sanskritise this name in Samyata. But however appropriate it may be to a Gaina, it certainly does not

He was surrounded on all sides by a large host of horses, elephants, chariots, and footmen. (2)

He chased the deer on horseback in the Kêsarapark of Kâmpilya ; and intent on his sport he killed there the frightened deer. (3)

Now in the Kêsarapark there was a houseless ascetic intent on sacred study and meditating on the Law. (4)

Annihilating sinful inclinations¹, he meditated in the Âsphôta-bower². But the king killed the deer that fled to him. (5)

Now the king on horseback came quickly there ; he saw the killed deer and saw the monk there. (6)

The king in his consternation (thought) 'I had nearly hurt the monk ; ill-fated and cruel me that is mad for the sport.' (7)

Having dismissed his horse, the king bowed respectfully to the monk's feet (saying), 'Forgive me this, Reverend sir.' (8)

But the venerable monk, being plunged in silent meditation, made no reply to the king, who, therefore, was seized with fear. (9)

'I am Sañgaya ; answer me, Reverend sir ; a monk might by the fire of his wrath reduce millions of men to ashes.' (10)

'Be without fear, O king ; but grant safety to others also ; in this transient world of living beings, why are you addicted to cruelty ? (11)

look like a king's name. The Sanskrit form of the name was probably Sañgaya or Sringaya, both of which frequently occur in Sanskrit literature.

¹ To render âsrava.

² Apphōva in the original ; there are several plants which are called âsphôta.

‘As you must, of necessity, one day part with everything, in this transient world of living beings, why do you cling to kingly power ? (12)

‘Transient like a stroke of lightning are life and beauty, which you love so much ; you do not comprehend what will benefit you in the next life. (13)

‘Wives and children, friends and relations, all are dependent on a man during his life ; but they will not follow him in death. (14)

‘The sons, in great sorrow, will remove the corpse of their father (to the cemetery) ; and so will parents do with their sons and relations ; O king, do penance ! (15)

‘O king, other men, glad, and pleased, and well attired, will enjoy the riches (the deceased) had amassed, and will dally with the wives he had so well guarded. (16)

‘And whatever actions he has done, good or wicked ones, with their Karman he will depart to his next existence.’ (17)

Then the king was taught the Law by this monk, and was filled with a great desire for purity, and disregard of worldly objects. (18)

Saṅgaya gave up his kingly power and adopted the faith of the Gīnas in the presence of the venerable monk Gardabhāli. (19)

A Kshattriya, who had abandoned his kingdom and had turned monk, said to him : ‘As you look so happy in outward appearance, you must have peace of mind. (20)

‘What is your name, to which Gôtra do you belong, and why have you become an ascetic¹ ?

¹ Literally, a Brahman.

How do you venerate the enlightened ones¹, and how did you come to be called a well-behaved (monk)?' (21)

"My name is Sañgaya ; I belong to the Gôtra of Gôtama ; my teacher is Gardabhâli, who is conversant with the sacred lore and good conduct. (22)

"O great sage, the man of limited knowledge talks foolishly on these four heads², viz. the existence of the soul, its non-existence, idolatry, and the inefficiency of knowledge. (23)

"This has been declared by him who is enlightened, wise, liberated, conversant with the sacred lore and good conduct, who is truthful and of right energy. (24)

"Men who commit sins will go to hell ; but those who have walked the road of righteousness, will obtain a place in heaven. (25)

"All this delusive talk (of the heretics) is untrue and without any meaning ; I live and walk about according to the rules of self-control. (26)

¹ Buddhê, explained âkâryân, preceptors.

² These are the four great heresies: (1) that of the kriyâvâdinas, who maintain that the soul exists; (2) that of the akriyâvâdinas, who hold the reverse of the preceding doctrine; (3) that of the vainayikas, which seems to be identical with salvation by bhakti; (4) that of the agñânavâdinas, who contend that knowledge is not necessary for salvation, but tapas; this seems identical with the karmapatha. The commentators explain kriyâvâdina 'those who believe the soul or âtman to be characterised by the verb to be (i.e. by a permanent and unchangeable existence), and ascribe to it such qualities as ubiquity or non-ubiquity, activity or non-activity.' This they treat as heresy, but from Mahāvagga VI, 31, 2 (vol. xvii, p. 109) it is evident that the Gainas were considered kriyâvâdins. The akriyâvâda is also identified with the kṣhanikavâda or doctrine, usually ascribed to Buddhists, that everything has but a momentary existence and is in the next moment replaced by a facsimile of itself. About these heresies compare the Sûtrakṛitāṅga I, 12 ; II, 2, 77.

“ I know all these heresies to be contemptible ; I know that there will be a life hereafter, and I know my Self. (27)

“ I was an illustrious god in the Mahâprâva heaven, and reached old age as we here would say of a man who is a hundred years old ; but in heaven, hundred years consist of as many Mahâpâlîs of Pâlîs¹. (28)

“ Descending from the Brahmalôka, I was born as a man. I know exactly the length of my life as well as that of other men. (29)

“ A monk should abandon the manifold doctrines (of heretics), and his own fancies, and such deeds as are productive of evil everywhere. One should live up to this wisdom². (30)

“ I keep clear of the (superstitious) questions and the spells of laymen, exerting myself day and night (in the true religion). Thinking thus, one should practise austerities. (31)

“ And what you of a pure mind asked me just now, that has been revealed by the enlightened one³ ; such knowledge makes part of the creed of the Gînas. (32)

“ A wise man believes in the existence of the soul⁴,

¹ According to the commentary a pâlî seems to be what is commonly called palyôpamâ, and mahâpâlî a sâgarôpamâ. However the longest life of a god in Brahmalôka is but ten Sâgarôpamâs, see below, XXXVI, 225. The construction of the verse is very involved, but the drift of it cannot be mistaken.

² ii viggâm anusamkharê. I believe that viggâm here stands for vidvân, as in the following verse. The meaning would then be, ‘knowing this one should live as a monk.’

³ Buddha.

⁴ The Gînas do not deny the existence of the soul, but the unalterable character of the soul. Hence they object to the kriyâvâda.

he avoids the heresy of the non-existence of the soul; possessing true faith one should practise the very difficult Law according to the faith. (33)

"Having learned this pure creed, which is adorned by truth and righteousness, Bharata¹ gave up Bharatavarsha and all pleasures, and entered the order. (34)

"King Sagara² also gave up the ocean-girt Bharatavarsha and his unrivalled kingly power, and reached perfection through his compassion. (35)

"After having given up Bharatavarsha, the famous universal monarch of great power, called Maghavan³, entered the order. (36)

"King Sanatkumâra⁴, a universal monarch of great power, placed his son on the throne, and then practised austerities. (37)

"Sânti⁵, a universal monarch of great power, the

¹ Bharata was the eldest son of Rîshabha, the first Tîrthakara. He became the first Kakravartin, or universal monarch, and resided in Ayôdhyâ. At his renunciation he was ordered by Indra himself to pluck out five handfuls of his hair as is the custom of Gaina monks on entering the order.

² Sagara, king of Ayôdhyâ, was, according to the legend contained in the commentary (see R. Fick, Eine jainistische Bearbeitung der Sagara-Sage, Kiel, 1889), the younger brother of Agita, the second Tîrthakara. He became the second Kakravartin, and, in the end, he was ordained by Agita. The Gaina legend seems to be but a strangely distorted version of the story of Sagara told in the first book of the Râmâyana.

³ Maghavan, son of king Samudravigaya of Srâvastî, and his wife Bhadrâ, became the third Kakravartin.

⁴ Sanatkumâra, son of king Asvasêna of Hastinâpura, and his wife Sahadêvî, became the fourth Kakravartin. The adventures of Sanatkumâra are told in a Prâkrit legend, which I have published in my Ausgewählte Erzählungen in Mâhârâsh'rif, Leipzig, 1886, p. 20 ff.

⁵ Sânti was the sixteenth Tîrthakara, Kunthu the seventeenth, and bringer of peace to the world, gave up Bharatavarsha and reached perfection. (38)

“King Kunthu, the bull of the Aikshvâka race, the widely famed lord, reached perfection. (39)

“King Ara, after he had given up the sea-girt Bharatavarsha, reached perfection on becoming exempt from defilement. (40)

“After having given up his large kingdom, his army and war-chariots, his exquisite pleasures, Mahâpadma¹ practised austerities. (41)

“Having brought the (whole) earth under his sceptre, king Harishêna², who humbled the pride (of other kings), reached perfection. (42)

“Gaya³, together with thousands of kings, renouncing the world, practised self-restraint. He

Ara the eighteenth Tīrthakara. Kunthu sounds strange for a proper name. I think it just possible that it is a popular or Prākṛit corruption of Kakutstha, who was an Aikshvâka. As is well known, Râma is frequently called after him Kâkutsstha, and so are other kings of the same line, in which he stands as the twenty-fifth according to the list in the Râmâyana I, 70.

¹ Mahâpadma was the ninth Kakravartin. His elder brother was Vishṇukumâra, who was ordained by Suvrata, a disciple of Munisuvrata, the twentieth Tīrthakara. He wrenched the sovereignty of the world from Namuḁi, minister of his father Padmôttara, who had ascended the throne, by making him promise as much of his territory as he could cover with three strides. This is the Brahmanical story of Vishṇu and Bali, for whom the Gainas have substituted Namuḁi. According to them the minister Namuḁi was, in a disputation, defeated by the Gaina monks, and to revenge himself on them, he ordered them to quit his kingdom as soon as he got it.—Mahâpadma's residence was Hastinâpura.

² Harishêna, son of king Mahâhari of Kâmpilya, became the tenth Kakravartin.

³ Gaya, son of king Samudravigaya of Râgagriha, became the eleventh Kakravartin.

reached perfection which has been taught by the Ginas. (43)

"Dasârṇabhadra¹, giving up his flourishing kingdom of Dasârṇa, turned monk; he renounced the world, being directed to do so by Sakra himself. (44)

"Karakandu was king of Kalinga; Dvimukha, of Pañkâla; Nami, of Vidêha; Naggati (or rather Nagnagit), of Gândhâra². (45)

"Nami humbled himself, being directed to do so by Sakra himself; the king of Vidêha left the house and became a Sramana. (46)

"These bulls of kings have adopted the faith of the Ginas; after having placed their sons on the throne, they exerted themselves as Sramanas. (47)

"Udâyana³, the bull of the kings of Sauvîra, renounced the world and turned monk; he entered the order and reached perfection. (48)

"And thus the king of Kâsi⁴, exerting himself for the best truth, abandoned all pleasures, and hewed down, as it were, his Karman like a forest. (49)

"And thus king Vigaya⁵, whose sins were not quite annihilated⁶, turned monk after he, the famous man, had quitted his excellent kingdom. (50)

¹ King Dasârṇabhadra was a contemporary of Mahāvîra.

² These are the four Pratyêkabuddhas; see p. 35, note 2.

³ The story of Udâyana (or perhaps Uddâyana) will be found in my Ausgewählte Erzählungen in Mâhârâsh/rî, p. 28 ff. He was contemporary with Mahāvîra.

⁴ He was Nandana, the seventh Baladêva, son of king Agnisikha of Benares.

⁵ He was the son of king Brahmarâga of Dvârakâvatî, and eldest brother of the Vâsudêva Dviprîshṭa or Dvipushṭi.

⁶ To render ana//hâkitti, of which the commentators offer several explanations, rendering it anârttâkîrti and anash/akîrti. A various reading âna//hâkitti is mentioned, and explained âgñâ-artha-âkîrti.

“And thus the royal seer Mahâbala¹ practised severe penance with an undistracted mind, and took upon himself the glory (of self-control). (51)

“Why should a wise man, for bad reasons, live on earth like a madman, since those persons (mentioned above) who reached eminence, exerted themselves strongly? (52)

“I have spoken true words able to promote virtue; some have been saved, some are being saved, and some will be saved. (53)

“Why should a wise man, for bad reasons, bring affliction upon himself? He who has become free from all ties and sins, will reach perfection.” (54)

Thus I say.

NINETEENTH LECTURE.

THE SON OF MRIGÂ.

In the pleasant town of Sugrîva, which is adorned with parks and gardens, there was the king Balabhadra and Mrigâ, the principal queen. (1)

Their son Balasri, also known as Mrigâputra (i. e. son of Mrigâ), the darling of his father and mother, was crown-prince, a (future) lord of ascetics. (2)

In his palace Nandana he dallied with his wives, like the god Dôgundaga², always happy in his mind. (3)

¹ Mahâbala was the son of king Bala of Hastinâpura. He lived at the time of Vimala, the thirteenth Tîrthakara.

² According to the commentators the Dôgundaka gods are the trâyastriṃsa gods. The Sanskrit of dôgundaga would be dvikundaka.

Standing at a window of his palace¹, the floor of which was inlaid with precious stones and jewels, he looked down on the squares, places, and roads of the town. (4)

Once he saw pass there a restrained Sramana, who practised penance, self-restraint, and self-control, who was full of virtues, and a very mine of good qualities. (5)

Mrigâputra regarded him with fixed eyes, trying to remember where he had seen the same man before. (6)

While he looked at the saint, and his mind became pure, the remembrance of his former birth came upon him as he was plunged in doubt. (7)

When the remembrance of his former birth came upon the illustrious Mrigâputra, he remembered his previous birth and his having been then a Sramana. (8)

Being not delighted with pleasures, but devoted to self-control, he went to his father and mother, and spoke as follows : (9)

‘I have learned the five great vows ; (I know) the suffering (that awaits the sinner) in hell or in an existence as a brute ; I have ceased to take delight in the large ocean (of the Samsâra) ; therefore, O mother, allow me to enter the order. (10)

‘O mother, O father, I have enjoyed pleasures which are like poisonous fruit : their consequences are painful, as they entail continuous suffering. (11)

‘This body is not permanent, it is impure and of impure origin ; it is but a transitory residence (of the soul) and a miserable vessel of suffering. (12)

¹ I separate the words pâsây-âlôyana//hiô. The commentators take them for a compound ; but then the preceding part of the sentence would not construe. It is an irregular sandhi, instances of which, however, are not unfrequent.

‘I take no delight in this transitory body which one must leave sooner or later, and which is like foam or a bubble. (13)

‘And this vain human life, an abode of illness and disease, which is swallowed up by old age and death, does not please me even for a moment. (14)

‘Birth is misery, old age is misery, and so are disease and death, and ah, nothing but misery is the Samsâra, in which men suffer distress. (15)

‘Leaving behind my fields, house, and gold, my son and wife, and my relations, leaving my body I needs must, one day, depart. (16)

‘As the effect of Kimpâka-fruit¹ is anything but good, so the effect of pleasures enjoyed is anything but good. (17)

‘He who starts on a long journey with no provisions, will come to grief on his way there, suffering from hunger and thirst. (18)

‘Thus he who without having followed the Law, starts for the next world, will come to grief on his way there, suffering from illness and disease. (19)

‘He who starts on a long journey with provisions, will be happy on his way there, not suffering from hunger and thirst. (20)

‘Thus he who after having followed the Law, starts for the next world, will be happy on his journey there, being exempt from Karman and suffering. (21)

‘As when a house is on fire, the landlord carries away valuable things and leaves behind those of

¹ Cucumis Colocynthus.

no value ; so when the whole world is on fire, as it were, by old age and death, I shall save my Self, if you will permit me.' (22, 23)

To him his parents said : "Son, difficult to perform are the duties of a Sramana ; a monk must possess thousands of virtues. (24)

"Impartiality towards all beings in the world, whether friends or enemies, and abstention from injury to living beings throughout the whole life : this is a difficult duty. (25)

"To be never careless in abstaining from falsehood, and to be always careful to speak wholesome truth : this is a difficult duty. (26)

"To abstain from taking of what is not given, even of a toothpick, &c. ; and to accept only alms free from faults : this is a difficult duty. (27)

"To abstain from unchastity after one has tasted sensual pleasures, and to keep the severe vow of chastity : this is a very difficult duty. (28)

"To give up all claims on wealth, corn, and servants, to abstain from all undertakings, and not to own anything : this is a very difficult duty. (29)

"Not to eat at night any food of the four kinds¹, not to put away for later use or to keep a store (of things one wants) : this is a very difficult duty. (30)

"Hunger and thirst, heat and cold, molestation by flies and gnats, insults, miserable lodgings, pricking grass, and uncleanness, blows and threats, corporal punishment and imprisonment, the mendicant's life and fruitless begging : all this is misery. (31, 32)

"Such a life is like that of pigeons (always afraid of dangers); painful is the plucking out of one's hair; difficult is the vow of chastity and hard to keep (even) for a noble man. (33)

¹ I.e. food, drink, dainties, and spices.

"My son, you are accustomed to comfort, you are tender and cleanly¹; you are not able, my son, to live as a Sramana. (34)

"No repose as long as life lasts; the great burden of duty is heavy like a load of iron, which is difficult to be carried, O son. (35)

"As it is difficult to cross the heavenly Ganges, or to swim against the current, or to swim with one's arms over the sea, so it is difficult to get over the ocean of duties. (36)

"Self-control is untasteful like a mouthful of sand, and to practise penance is as difficult as to walk on the edge of a sword. (37)

"It is difficult (always to observe the rules of) right conduct with one's eyes for ever open like (those of) a snake², O son; it is difficult to eat iron grains, as it were. (38)

"As it is very difficult to swallow burning fire, so is it difficult for a young man to live as a Sramana. (39)

"As it is difficult to fill a bag³ with wind,

¹ Literally, well washed or bathed.

² This appears to be the meaning of the words ahîv-êganta-di//hîê. We might perhaps take *ahîv for ahivam = ahivat, in which case the construction of the sentence would be grammatically correct. An alternative rendering would be: '(A monk) like a snake must have his eyes always open on the difficult conduct, O son.' It is a well-known fact that snakes cannot shut their eyes as other animals.

³ Kotthala, a Dêśi-word for kuśûla, granary, see Hêmañdra, Dêśi Kôsha 2, 48. The commentators render it by 'cloth.'

so is it difficult for a weak man to live as a Sramaṇa. (40)

“As it is difficult to weigh Mount Mandara in a balance, so it is difficult to live as a Sramaṇa with a steady and fearless mind. (41)

“As it is difficult to swim over the sea with one’s arms, so it is difficult for one whose mind is not pacified, (to cross) the ocean of restraint. (42)

“Enjoy the fivefold¹ human pleasures. After you have done enjoying pleasures, O son, you may adopt the Law.” (43)

He answered: ‘O father and mother, it is even thus as you have plainly told; but in this world nothing is difficult for one who is free from desire. (44)

‘An infinite number of times have I suffered dreadful pains of body and mind, repeatedly misery and dangers. (45)

‘In the Samsāra, which is a mine of dangers and a wilderness of old age and death, I have undergone dreadful births and deaths. (46)

‘Though fire be hot here, it is infinitely more so there (viz. in hell)²; in hell I have undergone suffering from heat. (47)

‘Though there may be cold here, it is of infinitely greater intensity there; in hell I have undergone suffering from cold. (48)

¹ Viz. those of the five senses.

² The description of hell is a favourite theme with the monks of all ages and all religions; and the Gaiṇa monks are not behind others in the treatment of this gruesome subject. A detailed description of the different hells will be found in the fifth lecture of the first book of the Sūtrakṛitāṅga. I remember a yati showing me, with much complacency, a manuscript of the latter work adorned with lively illustrations of the most exquisite tortures.

‘An infinite number of times have I been roasted over a blazing fire in an oven, screaming loud, head down and feet aloft. (49)

‘In the desert which is like a forest on fire, on the Vagravâlukâ and the Kadambavâlukâ¹ rivers, I have been roasted an infinite number of times. (50)

‘Being suspended upside down over a boiler, shrieking, with no relation to help me, I was cut to pieces with various saws², an infinite number of times. (51)

‘I have suffered agonies when I was fastened with fetters on the huge Sâlmâlî tree, bristling with very sharp thorns, and then pushed up and down. (52)

‘An infinite number of times have I been crushed like sugar-cane in presses, shrieking horribly, to atone for my sins, great sinner that I was. (53)

‘By black and spotted wild dogs³ I have, ever so many times, been thrown down, torn to pieces, and lacerated, screaming and writhing. (54)

‘When I was born in hell for my sins, I was cut, pierced, and hacked to pieces with swords and daggers, with darts and javelins. (55)

‘I have been forcibly yoked to a car of red-hot iron full of fuel⁴, I have been driven on with a goad

¹ These are two rivers in hell; the sand of the one consists of vagra (either steel-filings or diamonds), and that of the other, of turmeric.

² Karavattakarakayâîhim = karapattrakrakaâdibhih.

³ Kôlasunaya, explained by sûkarasvan, hog-dog, which may be a kind of hog or dog, probably the latter.

⁴ Samilâ gue. The commentators render gue by yuga and yuta, and do not explain samilâ, which they treat as a Sanskrit word. I think it is the Prâkrî of samidh, compare viggulâ = vidyut, salilâ = sarit.

and thongs, and have been knocked down like an antelope¹. (56)

‘On piles, in a blazing fire, I have forcibly been burnt and roasted like a buffalo, in atonement for my sins. (57)

‘An infinite number of times have I violently been lacerated by birds whose bills were of iron and shaped like tongs, by devilish vultures². (58)

‘Suffering from thirst I ran towards the river Vaitaraṇī to drink its water, but in it I was killed (as it were) by blades of razors³. (59)

‘When suffering from the heat, I went into the forest in which the trees have a foliage of daggers; I have, ever so many times, been cut to pieces by the dropping dagger-leaves. (60)

‘An infinite number of times have I suffered hopelessly from mallets and knives, forks and maces, which broke my limbs. (61)

‘Ever so many times have I been slit, cut, mangled, and skinned with keen-edged razors, knives, and shears. (62)

‘As⁴ an antelope I have, against my will, been

¹ Roggho = riśya, see Hēmakandra, Dēś Kōsha 7, 12.

² Dhaṅka grīdhra. The commentators offer no explanation of dhaṅka, but only say that they are not real vultures as there are no animals in hell. Therefore they must be vaikriya, i.e., in our case, demons who have adopted the shape of vultures.

³ The water of the river Vaitaraṇī consists of a very caustic acid.

⁴ Here and in the following verses the suffering of Mrigāputra as an animal and a plant seems to be described. But in verse 68 the scene is again laid in hell. The first word in verse 63, &c., ‘as,’ would literally be ‘like’ (viva in the original text), but in rendering it by ‘like,’ we have to assume that as a denizen of hell he is treated in the manner described, which seems rather strained.

caught, bound, and fastened in snares and traps, and frequently I have been killed. (63)

‘As a fish I have, against my will, been caught with hooks and in bow-nets; I have therein been scraped, slit, and killed, an infinite number of times. (64)

‘As a bird I have been caught by hawks, trapped in nets, and bound with bird-lime, and I have been killed, an infinite number of times. (65)

‘As a tree I have been felled, slit, sawn into planks, and stripped of the bark by carpenters with axes¹, hatchets, &c., an infinite number of times. (66)

‘As iron I have been malleated, cut, torn, and filed by blacksmiths², an infinite number of times. (67)

‘I have been made to drink hissing molten copper, iron, tin, and lead under horrid shrieks, an infinite number of times. (68)

‘You like meat minced or roasted; I have been made to eat, ever so many times, poisoned meat, and red-hot to boot. (69)

‘You like wine, liquor, spirits, and honey³; I have been made to drink burning fat and blood. (70)

‘Always frightened, trembling, distressed, and suffering, I have experienced the most exquisite pain and misery. (71)

‘I have experienced in hell sharp, acute and

¹ Kuhâdâ = kuṭhâra; comp. pihâda = piḥara. The form kuhâra occurs in Guzeratî, Sindhî, and Panjâbî.

² Kumâra; this is obviously the modern kamâr ‘blacksmith’ (derived from karmakâra); and it is of interest to find this form in an old text like the Uttarâdhyayana.

³ To render surâ, sîdhu, mairêya, and madhu.

severe, horrible, intolerable, dreadful, and formidable pain. (72)

‘O father, infinitely more painful is the suffering in hell than any suffering in the world of men. (73)

‘In every kind of existence I have undergone suffering which was not interrupted by a moment’s reprieve.’ (74)

To him his parents said : “Son, a man is free to enter the order, but it causes misery to a Sramana that he may not remedy any ailments.” (75)

He answered : ‘O father and mother, it is even thus as you have plainly told ; but who takes care of beasts and birds in the woods ? (76)

‘As a wild animal¹ by itself roams about in the woods, thus I shall practise the Law by controlling myself and doing penance. (77)

‘When in a large forest a wild animal falls very sick at the foot of a tree, who is there to cure it ? (78)

‘Or who will give it medicine ? or who will inquire after its health ? or who will get food and drink for it, and feed it ? (79)

‘When it is in perfect health, it will roam about in woods and on (the shores of) lakes in search of food and drink. (80)

‘When it has eaten and drunk in woods and lakes, it will walk about and go to rest according to the habits of wild animals. (81)

‘In the same way a pious monk goes to many places and walks about just as the animals, but afterwards he goes to the upper regions. (82)

¹ Miga = mṛiga, literally ‘antelope ;’ but here as frequently the word has apparently the more general meaning ‘wild animal.’

‘As a wild animal goes by itself to many places, lives in many places, and always gets its food; thus a monk on his begging-tour should not despise nor blame (the food he gets). (83)

‘I shall imitate this life of animals.’ “Well, my son, as you please.” With his parents’ permission he gave up all his property. (84)

‘I shall imitate this life of animals, which makes one free from all misery, if you will permit me.’ “Go, my son, as you please.” (85)

When he had thus made his parents repeat their permission, he gave up for ever his claims in any property, just as the snake casts off its slough. (86)

His power and wealth, his friends, wives, sons, and relations he gave up as if he shook off the dust from his feet, and then he went forth. (87)

He observed the five great vows, practised the five Samitis, and was protected by the three Guptis¹; he exerted himself to do mental as well as bodily penance. (88)

He was without property, without egoism, without attachment, without conceit², impartial towards all beings, whether they move or not. (89)

He was indifferent to success or failure (in begging), to happiness and misery, to life and death, to blame and praise, to honour and insult. (90)

He turned away from conceit and passions, from injurious, hurtful, and dangerous actions³, from gaiety and sadness; he was free from sins and fetters. (91)

¹ See notes 2 and 3 on p. 50.

² Gârava = gaurava or garva. Dîpikâ : riddhigârava-rasagârava-sâtâgârava iti garvatrayarahitaḥ.

³ To render *danḍasallabhaḥ*su.

He had no interest in this world and no interest in the next world; he was indifferent to unpleasant and pleasant things ¹, to eating and fasting. (92)

He prevented the influx of Karman (âsrava) through all bad channels ²; by meditating upon himself he obtained praiseworthy self-purification and sacred knowledge. (93)

Thus he thoroughly purified himself by knowledge, right conduct, faith, penance, and pure meditations, and after having lived many years as a Sramana, he reached perfection after breaking his fast once only every month. (94, 95)

Thus act the enlightened ones, the learned, the clever; like Mṛigâputra they turn away from pleasures. (96)

When you have heard the words of the illustrious and famous son of Mṛigâ, his perfect practise of austerities, and his liberation, famous in the three worlds, you will despise wealth, the cause of misery, and the fetter of egoism, the cause of many dangers, and you will bear the excellent and pleasant yoke of the Law that leads to the great happiness of Nirvâna. (97, 98)

Thus I say.

¹ Vâsîkandanakappô. The author of the Avaâturi explains this phrase thus: he did not like more a man who anoints himself with sandal than a mason. Apparently he gives to vâsa the meaning 'dwelling;' but I think that the juxtaposition of kandana calls for a word denoting a bad-smelling substance, perhaps 'ordure.'

² Literally 'door.' The meaning of the line will be fully rendered and the simile at least partially be preserved by the following less literal translation: he shut the door, as it were, to evil influences. For the âsrava, see above, p. 55, note 1.

TWENTIETH LECTURE.

THE GREAT DUTY OF THE NIRGRANTHAS.

Piously adoring the perfected and the restrained saints, listen to my true instruction which (teaches the real) profit (of men), religion, and liberation¹. (1)

King *Srênika*², the ruler of Magadha, who possessed many precious things, once made a pleasure-excursion to the *Mandîkukshi Kaitya*³. (2)

It was a park like Nandana⁴, with trees and creepers of many kinds, peopled by various birds, and full of various flowers. (3)

There he saw a restrained and concentrated saint sitting below a tree, who looked delicate and accustomed to comfort. (4)

When the king saw his figure, his astonishment at that ascetic's figure was very great and unequalled. (5)

'O his colour, O his figure, O the loveliness of the noble man, O his tranquillity, O his perfection, O his disregard for pleasures!' (6)

¹ Atthadhammagaim = arthadharmagati. I think this equal to artha dharma mōksha, though the commentators offer a different explanation by making gati mean gñāna. The phrase is derived from the typical expression kāmārthadharmamōksha by leaving out kāma, which of course could not be admitted by ascetics.

² He is identical with Bimbisāra of the Buddhists; see my edition of the Kalpa Sūtra, introduction, p. 2.

³ The following verses prove that kaitya denotes park here as the word is explained by the scholiast in IX, 9.

⁴ Nandana is Indra's park.

Adoring his feet and keeping him on his right side (he sat down), neither too far off nor too close by, and asked him with his hands clasped : (7)

‘ Though a young nobleman, you have entered the order ; in an age fit for pleasure you exert yourself as a Sramana, O ascetic ; I want to hear you explain this.’ (8)

“ I am without a protector, O great king ; there is nobody to protect me, I know no friend nor any one to have sympathy with me.” (9)

Then king Srênika, the ruler of Magadha, laughed : ‘ How should there be nobody to protect one so accomplished as you ?’ (10)

‘ I am the protector of religious men ¹ ; O monk ; enjoy pleasures together with your friends and relations ; for it is a rare chance to be born as a human being.’ (11)

“ You yourself are without a protector, Srênika, ruler of Magadha ; and as you are without a protector, how can you protect anybody else ?” (12)

When the saint had addressed this unprecedented speech to the king, who was greatly moved and astonished, and struck with astonishment, (he answered) ² : (13)

‘ I have horses, elephants, and subjects, a town and a seraglio, power and command : enjoy human pleasures. (14)

‘ In possession of so great means, which permit the owner to enjoy all pleasures, how could he be without protection? Reverend sir, you speak untruth.' (15)

¹ Bhadantânām.

² The verb is wanting in this verse, and there is an apparent tautology in the words as they now stand. This is an obvious mark of a corruption in the text, which, however, I do not know how to remove by a plausible conjecture.

"O king, you do not know the meaning and origin¹ of (the word) 'without protection,' nor how one comes to be without protection or with protection, O ruler of men. (16)

"Hear, O great king, with an undistracted mind in what way a man can be said to be 'without protection,' and with what purpose I have said all this. (17)

"There is a town Kausâmbî by name, which is among towns what Indra² is (among the gods); there lived my father, who possessed great wealth. (18)

"In my childhood, O great king, I caught a very bad eye-disease and a severe burning fever in all my limbs, O ruler of men. (19)

"My eyes ached as if a cruel enemy thrust a sharp tool in the hollow of my body. (20)

"In the back, the heart³, and the head, I suffered

¹ Pottham or pokkham. The commentators are at a loss to give an etymology of this word, or rather have a choice of them to offer, which comes to the same thing, and proves that nothing certain was known. If potthâ is the correct form, it may be derived from pra + ut + sthâ, and mean 'origin;' if pokkâ or pukâ is the right spelling it is prikkâ, and may mean 'etymology.'

² Purâna purabhêdanî. As usual the commentators give a purely etymological explanation. But it is obvious that purabhêdana must have a similar meaning as purandara = Indra, or purabhid Siva. The latter word occurs in later literature only, and, besides, Siva does not yet seem to have been generally acknowledged as the supreme god, when and where the Gâna Sûtras were composed. The Vedic word pûrbhid, 'destroyer of castles,' also presents itself as an analogy; though it is not yet the exclusive epithet of a god, it is frequently applied to Indra.

³ To render antarikâ or antarittha. The Guzeraï translation renders it hrîdaya.

dreadful and very keen pains equal to a stroke of lightning. (21)

“Then the best physicians came to my help, who cure by their medical art and by spells, who were versed in their science, and well knew spells and roots. (22)

“They tried to cure me according to the fourfold science¹ which they had been taught; but they could not rid me of my pains: hence I say that I am without protection. (23)

“My father would have spent all he possessed, for my sake; but he could not rid me of my pains, hence I say that I am without protection. (24)

“My mother, O great king, was agonized with grief about her son; but she could not, &c. (25)

“O great king, my own brothers, the elder and younger ones, could not rid me of my pains, &c. (26)

“O great king, my own sisters, the elder and younger ones, could not, &c. (27)

“O great king, my loving and faithful wife moistened my breast with the tears of her eyes. (28)

“The poor lady did not eat, nor drink, nor bathe, nor use perfumes, wreaths, and anointment, with my knowledge or without it. (29)

“O great king, she did not leave² my side even for a moment; but she could not rid me of my pains, hence I say that I am without protection. (30)

“Then I said: It is very hard to bear pains again and again in the endless Circle of Births. (31)

¹ Kâuppâya=Katuhpâda. Four branches of medical science are intended.

² Phi//ai=bhrasyati, Hemakandra's Prākṛit Grammar, iv, 177.

“If I, for once, shall get rid of these great pains, I shall become a houseless monk, calm, restrained, and ceasing to act. (32)

“While I thought so, I fell asleep, O ruler of men; and after that night my pains had vanished. (33)

“Then in the morning of the next day I took leave of my relations and became a houseless monk, calm, restrained, and ceasing to act. (34)

“Thus I became the protector of myself and of others besides, of all living beings, whether they move or not. (35)

“My own Self is the river Vaitarant¹, my own Self the Sâlmali tree¹; my own Self is the miraculous cow Kâmaduh, my own Self the park Nandana. (36)

“My own Self is the doer and undoer of misery and happiness; my own Self, friend and foe, according as I act well or badly. (37)

“But there is still another want of protection, O king; hear, therefore, O king, attentively with concentrated thoughts, how some easily discouraged men go astray after having adopted the Law of the Nirgranthas². (38)

“If an ordained monk, through carelessness, does not strictly keep the great vows, if he does not restrain himself, but desires pleasure, then his fetters will not be completely cut off. (39)

“One who does not pay constant attention to his walking, his speaking, his begging, his receiving and keeping (of things necessary for a monk), and his

¹ See above, p. 94.

² The verses 38–53 are apparently a later addition because (1) the subject treated in them is not connected with that of the foregoing part, and (2) they are composed in a different metre.

easing nature ¹, does not follow the road trod by the Lord. (40)

“ One who for a long time wears a shaven crown and mortifies himself, but who is careless with regard to the vows, and neglects penance and self-control, will not be a winner in the battle (of life). (41)

“ He is empty like a clenched ² fist, (of no value) like an uncoined ³ false Kârshâpana or like a piece of glass resembling turquoise, he is held lightly by men of discernment. (42)

“ He who has the character of a sinner, though he lays great stress on the outward signs of his calling ⁴ as a means of living ; he who does not control himself, though he pretends to do so ; will come to grief for a long time. (43)

“ As the poison Kâlakûta kills him who drinks it ; as a weapon cuts him who awkwardly handles it ; as a Vêtâla kills him who does not lay him ; so the Law harms him who mixes it up with sensuality. (44)

“ He who practises divination from bodily marks and dreams, who is well versed in augury and superstitious rites, who gains a sinful living by practising magic tricks ⁵, will have no refuge at the time (of retribution). (45)

“ The sinner, always wretched, goes from darkness

¹ These are the five Samitis, see above, p. 50.

² Pollâ or pullâ, explained antaḥ-sushira ‘hollow in the middle.’

³ Ayantita = ayantrita. My translation is but conjectural. Perhaps the regular coins are not meant, but stamped lumps of metal, which were current long before coins were introduced.

⁴ Literally, ‘the flag of the seers ;’ the broom &c. are meant.

⁵ Kuhêdaviggâ.

to darkness, to utter misery; the unholy man who breaks the rules of monks, rushes, as it were, to hell, and to be born again as a brute. (46)

"He who accepts forbidden alms, viz. such food as he himself asks for, as has been bought for his sake, or as he gets regularly (as by right and custom), who like fire devours everything, will go to hell from here, after having sinned. (47)

"A cut-throat enemy will not do him such harm as his own perversity will do him; the man without pity will feel repentance in the hour of death. (48)

"In vain he adopts nakedness, who errs about matters of paramount interest; neither this world nor the next will be his; he is a loser in both respects in the world. (49)

"Thus the self-willed sinner who leaves the road of the highest Ginas, who with the appetite of an osprey is desirous of pleasure, will grieve in useless sorrow. (50)

"A wise man who hears this discourse, an instruction full of precious wisdom, and who deserts every path of the wicked, should walk the road of the great Nirgranthas. (51)

"He who possesses virtuous conduct and life, who has practised the best self-control, who keeps from sinful influences¹, and who has destroyed his Karman, will reach (in the end) the greatest, best, and permanent place (viz. mukti). (52)

Thus the austere and calm, great ascetic and great sage who kept great vows and possessed great fame, preached at great length this great sermon: the great duty of the Nirgranthas. (53)

¹ Nirâsava = nirâsrava. For the âsravas, see p. 55, note 1.

And king Srêṇika, pleased, spoke thus: 'You have truly shown what it is to be without protection. (54)

'You have made the best use of human birth, you have made a true gain, O great sage, you are a protector (of mankind at large) and of your relations, for you have entered the path of the best Gīnas. (55)

'You are the protector of all unprotected beings, O ascetic; I ask you to forgive me: I desire you to put me right. (56)

'That by asking you I have disturbed your meditation, and that I invited you to enjoy pleasures, all this you must forgive me.' (57)

When the lion of kings had thus, with the greatest devotion, praised the lion of houseless monks, he, together with his wives, servants, and relations, became a staunch believer in the Law, with a pure mind. (58)

The ruler of men, with the hair on his body joyfully erected, bowed his head (to the monk), keeping him on his right side, and departed. (59)

And the other, rich in virtues, protected by the three Guptis, and abstaining from injuring (living beings) in the three ways (viz. by thought, words, and acts), travelled about on the earth, free like a bird, and exempt from delusion. (60)

Thus I say.

TWENTY-FIRST LECTURE.

SAMUDRAPÂLA.

In Kampâ there lived a Srâvaka, the merchant Pâlita, who was a disciple of the noble and venerable Mahâvîra. (1)

As a Srâvaka he was well versed in the doctrines of the Nirgranthas. Once he went by boat to the town of Pihunda on business. (2)

A merchant gave him his daughter while he was doing business in Pihunda. When she was big with child, he took her with him on his returning home. (3)

Now the wife of Pâlita was delivered of a child at sea; as the boy was born at sea (samudra), he was named Samudrapâla. (4)

Our merchant, the Srâvaka, went leisurely to Kampâ, to his house; in his house the boy grew up surrounded by comfort. (5)

He studied the seventy-two arts, and acquired knowledge of the world¹; he was in the bloom of youth, and had a fine figure and good looks. (6)

His father procured him a beautiful wife, Rûpint, with whom he amused himself in his pleasant palace, like a Dôgundaga god². (7)

Once upon a time he saw from the window of his palace a man sentenced to death, dressed for execution, on his way to the place of execution. (8)

¹ To render nîtikôvida.

² For Dôgundaga, see above, p. 88, note 2.

Agitated by what he saw, Samudrapâla spoke thus: 'Of wicked actions this is the bad result.' (9)

He became enlightened at once, the venerable man, and he was immensely agitated; he took leave of his parents, and entered the state of houselessness. (10)

Abandoning the great distress to which the worldly¹ are liable, the great delusion, and whatever causes fear, one should adopt the Law of monks², the vows, the virtues, and the (endurance of) calamities. (11)

One should keep the five great vows, viz. not to kill, to speak the truth, not to steal, to be chaste, to have no property whatever; a wise man should follow the Law taught by the Ginas. (12)

A monk should have compassion on all beings, should be of a forbearing character, should be restrained and chaste, and abstaining from everything sinful; he should live with his senses under control. (13)

Now and then³ he should travel in one country,

¹ Saggantha = sagrantha, which is obviously the opposite of nirgrantha. The commentators correct samgamtha in samgam ka. The original reading is in MS. B. A. has samgamtha, and so had C. originally, but it corrects the tha into ka. According to the commentators we should translate: abandoning worldly attachment which causes great distress, great delusion, black (Lêryâ), and dangers, one should, &c.

² Paryâya-dharma. Paryâya means a state under which a substance presents itself. Here is meant the state of the soul in pravragyâ, i.e. srâmanya-paryâya; compare the expressions khadmastha-paryâya and kêvali-paryâya. Paryâya-dharma is here equal to pravragyâ-dharma, Law of the monks.

³ Kâlêna kâlam, the commentators supply kurvan, and explain the passage as follows: kâlêna, i.e. in a paurushî (four taking into consideration its resources and his own ability; like a lion he should not be frightened by any noise; and whatever words he hears, he should not make an improper reply. (14)

In utter indifference he should walk about, and bear everything, be it pleasant or unpleasant; he should not approve of everything everywhere, nor care for¹ respectful treatment or blame. (15)

There are many opinions here among men, which a monk places in their true light; there will rise many dangerous and dreadful calamities, caused by gods, men, or animals, which are difficult to be borne and cause easily-discouraged men to sink under them; but a monk who comes in contact with them will not be afraid, like a stately elephant at the head of the battle. (16, 17)

Cold and heat, flies and gnats, unpleasant feelings, and many diseases attack the body; without flinching² he should bear them, and should hours) less one quarter of it, kâlam, i.e. what is proper for the time. The meaning would be 'doing at every time what is proper or prescribed to do at it.' But this explanation looks very artificial; I think that the expression kalêna kâlam is an adverb of the same type as maggham magghêna and many others.

¹ Samgae. This word may be samyata in this place; but in verse 20, where the same line occurs again, it cannot be so interpreted, because there the word samgae occurs twice; once it has the meaning of samgata, but in the passage under discussion it must be a verb, and it is rendered there saṅgayet = saṅgam kuryât by the commentators.

² Akukkuô, translated akukûga, derived from the root kûg 'to warble, to groan;' it would therefore mean 'without complaint.' But in I, 30 we have appakukkuê, derived from the root kuḥ 'to bend, to be crooked,' and it is rendered alpaspadana. The same meaning applies in the present case.

not recall to his memory the pleasures he once enjoyed. (18)

Giving up love, hatred, and delusion, a monk who is always careful and who is steadfast even as Mount Mêru cannot be shaken by the storm, should bear calamities, guarding himself. (19)

A great sage should be neither too elevated by pride nor too humble, he should not care for respectful treatment nor blame; an ascetic who has ceased (to act), will by means of his simplicity enter the path of Nirvâṇa. (20)

He is neither grieved nor pleased (by anything)¹, he abandons his relations with men, he ceases (to act), is intent on the benefit of his soul, he strives for the highest good (viz. mukti), and uses the means to reach it, free from sorrow, egoism, and any kind of property. (21)

A merciful (monk) should use beds distant from others, which are not got ready for his sake² nor strewn (with leaves or things considered to be possessed of life); he should sustain such hardships as the sages are accustomed to. (22)

The great sage (Samudrapâla), understanding the sacred lore and practising completely the best Law, shone forth like the sun in the sky, being possessed of the highest knowledge and glory. (23)

Having annihilated his Karman both meritorious

¹ This is the meaning commonly given to the frequently occurring phrase arairaisahe. Another interpretation is: saṃyamâ-saṃyamavishayê, tâbhyâm na bâdhatê.

² Nirôvalêvâi = nirupalipta. By upalêpa may be meant 'dirt,' but the author of the Avatâri explains upalêpa as consisting in abhishvaṅga 'affection.' It is almost impossible to render satisfactorily so vague an expression.

and sinful, being steadfast ¹, and free from all fetters, Samudrapâla crossed the ocean-like Flood of worldly existence and obtained exemption from transmigration. (24)

Thus I say.

TWENTY-SECOND LECTURE.

RATHANÊMI.

In the town of Sauryapura ² there was a powerful king, Vasudêva by name, who possessed the characteristic marks of a king. (1)

He had two wives, Rôhini and Dêvaki; each of them had a beloved son, Râma and Kêśava. (2)

In the town of Sauryapura there was (another) powerful king, Samudravigaya by name, who possessed the characteristic marks of a king. (3)

His wife was Sivâ by name; and her famous son was the venerable Arishṭanêmi, the saviour of the world and the lord of ascetics. (4)

This Arishṭanêmi, who was gifted with an excellent voice and possessed the thousand and eight lucky marks of the body, was a Gautama, and his skin was black. (5)

His body was strong like that of a bull, and hard

¹ Nirangana = samyamê niskala, immovable with regard to self-control.

² According to the Brahmanical account Vasudêva lived in Mathurâ. The name given to the town by the Gainas is apparently derived from Sauri, an epithet of Krishna, whose grandfather was Sûra. Soriyapura may be Saurikapura or Sauryapura. The latter rendering adopted by our commentators is based on a wrong etymology.

like steel; he was well proportioned, and had a belly like that of a fish.

Kêśava asked the girl Râgimati¹ in marriage for him. (6)

Now this daughter of an excellent king² was virtuous and well looking; she possessed all lucky marks of the body, and shone forth like the lightning Saudâmant. (7)

Her father said to the powerful Vâsudêva: 'Let the prince come here that I may give him my daughter.' (8)

He had taken a bath containing all (lucky) herbs, and had performed the customary ceremonies; he wore a suit of heavenly clothes and was decked out with ornaments. (9)

Riding on the best mast elephant³ of Vâsudêva he looked beautiful, like a jewel worn on the head. (10)

He sat under a raised umbrella, fanned by two chowries, and he was surrounded on all sides by a host of Dasârhas⁴ and by a complete army drawn

¹ Râimaî, Râimaî, and Râyamati are the forms of her name in Prâkrîṭ; the spellings Râgimati and Râgamati are also met with in Sanskrit.

² Viz. Ugrasêna. He was placed on the throne by Kṛishṇa on the death of Kamsa, cf. Vishṇu Purâṇa V, 21. He and Dêvaka were the sons of Âhuka, Kamsa was a son of Ugrasêna, and Dêvaki a daughter of Dêvaka, loc. cit. IV, 14. According to the legend of Kṛishṇa, as told by the Brahmans and Gainas, Garâsandha afterwards repeatedly attacked Mathurâ. Kṛishṇa therefore built Dvâarakâ on the shore of the western ocean, and sent thither the Yâdava tribe, loc. cit. V, 22 and 23. The events narrated in the text must be understood to have occurred in Dvâarakâ, as is evident from verse 21.

³ Gandhahastin, an elephant of the best class, whose very smell is sufficient, as is believed, to frighten common elephants, see verse 15.

⁴ Dasâra in Prâkrîṭ. They are a clan descended from Yadu.

up in rank and file, while the heavenly sound of musical instruments reached the sky. (11, 12)

With such pomp and splendour the hero of the *Vrishni*s started from his own palace. (13)

On his way he saw animals, kept in cages and enclosures, overcome by fear and looking miserable. (14)

Seeing them on the point of being killed for the sake of their flesh, and to be eaten afterwards, the great sage spoke to his charioteer¹ thus: (15)

‘Why are² all these animals, which desire to be happy, kept in cages and enclosures?’ (16)

Then the charioteer answered: ‘Lucky are these animals because at thy wedding they will furnish food for many people.’ (17)

Having heard these words, which announced the slaughter of many animals, the great sage, full of compassion and kindness to living beings, meditated thus: (18)

‘If for my sake many living beings are killed, I shall not obtain happiness in the next world.’ (19)

Then the famous man presented the charioteer with his pair of earrings, his neck-chain, and all his ornaments. (20)

When he had formed his resolution, the gods

¹ In verse 10 Arish/anêmi rides on an elephant, but in the sequel he is supposed to travel in a car. Unless the poet can be charged with having made this blunder, which I think just possible, verse 10 must be considered a later addition.

² The form of the verb akkkahim for akkkhanti is worthy of note, because him as ending of the third person plural belongs to Apabhramsa. It is interesting to find a true Apabhramsa form in a text so old as ours, for it seems to prove that at all times Apabhramsa went along with the common Prakrit, a vulgar or low with a high middle-Indian language.

descended (from heaven), according to the established custom, to celebrate, with great pomp together with their retinue, the event of his renunciation. (21)

Surrounded by gods and men, and sitting on an excellent palankin, the Venerable One left Dvârakâ and ascended mount Raivataka ¹. (22)

On arriving at the park he descended from his excellent palankin, surrounded by a crowd of thousands, and then his renunciation took place, while the moon was in conjunction with Kîtrâ ². (23)

Then he himself plucked out his delightfully-perfumed, soft, and curled hair in five handfuls. (24)

And Vâsudêva said to that subduer of the senses, who had plucked out his hair: 'O lord of ascetics, may you soon obtain what you wish and desire. (25)

'Increase in knowledge, faith, and right conduct, in forbearance and perfection !' (26)

In this manner Râma and Kêśava, the Dasârhas, and many people paid homage to Arish/anêmi and then returned to the town of Dvârakâ. (27)

When the daughter of the king heard of the ordination of the Gina, laughter and gaiety forsook her, and she was overwhelmed with affliction ³. (28)

¹ Raivataka is mount Gîrnâr in Kaśhiawâd. The hill is one of the most sacred places of the Gainas, and is covered with temples of the Ginas. It is also sacred to the Hindus on account of its connection with the history of Krîṣṇa. The poetical description of mount Raivataka forms the subject of the fourth sarga of the Sirupâlavadhâ by Mâgha.

² The lunar mansion, the chief star of which is Spica or α Virginis.

³ The lamentation of Râgîmatî on her husband's becoming an ascetic forms the subject of a curious Sanskrit poem called Nêmi-dûtakâvya, by Vikrama, son of Saṅghana, which has been edited in

Râgīmatī thought: 'Shame upon my life, that I have been forsaken by him! it is better I should turn nun.' (29)

Firm and decided she cut off her tresses which were black like bees and dressed with a brush and comb¹. (30)

And Vāsudēva said to her who had cut off her hair, and subdued her senses: 'Lady, cross the dreadful ocean of the Samsāra without difficulty!' (31)

When she had entered the order, the virtuous and very learned lady induced there many people, her relations and servants, to enter the order too. (32)

On her way to mount Raivataka it began to rain; her clothes being wet, she entered a cave and waited there in the darkness while it was raining. (33)

She took off her clothes and was naked as she was born, thus she was seen by Rathanēmi², whose the Kāvya-mâlâ of 1886. It is what is technically called a sama-syâpûraṇa or gloss. The last line of each stanza is taken from the Mêghadûta of Kâlidâsa, and the first three lines are added by the poet to make the whole fit the circumstances of his tale.

¹ Kukkaphanaga, in Sanskrit kûrṅaphanaka. According to the scholiasts phanaka is a comb made of bamboo.—I have translated, 'cut off her tresses,' but literally it is: 'plucked out her hair.' However, I do not think that women also are to pluck out their hair.

² Rathanēmi was her husband's elder brother. According to a legend told in Haribhadra's Tīkā of the Daravai-kâlīka Sûtra (see Leumann in the Journal of the German Oriental Society, vol. 46, p. 597), Rathanēmi fell in love with Râgīmatī. But that lady in order to make him see his wrong, vomited a sweet beverage she had drunk, in a cup and offered it him. On his turning away with disgust she explained to him her meaning: she too had been vomited, as it were, by Arishanēmi, notwithstanding which he wanted to have her. She then taught him the Gaina creed, and he became a monk.

(peace of) mind became (thereby) disturbed; and afterwards she saw him. (34)

She was frightened when she discovered herself alone with the monk; folding her arms over her breast she sank down trembling. (35)

When the prince, Samudravigaya's son, saw her frightened and trembling, he spoke the following words: (36)

'I am Rathanêmi, O dear, beautiful, sweetly-speaking lady! Do accept me for your lover, O slender one¹, you shall have no cause to complain. (37)

'Come, let us enjoy pleasures, for it is a rare chance to be born a human being; after we have enjoyed pleasures, we shall enter on the path of the Ginas.' (38)

When Râgîmatî perceived that Rathanêmi's strength of will was broken, and temptation had got the better of him, she did not lose her presence of mind and defended her Self on that occasion. (39)

The daughter of the best king, true to self-control and her vows, maintained the honour of her clan and family, and her virtue, and spoke to him: (40)

'If you owned the beauty of Vaisramana², the pleasing manners of Nalakûbara³, if you were like Purandara⁴ himself, I should have no desire for you. (41)

Suyanu = sutanu. This may, however, be a proper name, a synonym of Râgîmatî, for according to the Harivamśa 209 and the Vishṇu Purāṇa IV, 14, Sutanu was a daughter of Ugrasêna.

² Vaisramana is a Prâkrîṭ spelling for Vaisravana = Kubêra.

³ Nalakûbara is Vaisramana's son.

⁴ Indra.

‘Fie upon you, famous knight, who want to quaff the vomited drink for the sake of this life ; it would be better for you to die¹. (42)

‘I am the daughter of the Bhôga-king², and you are an Andhakav^rishni ; being born in a noble family let us not become like Gandhana-snakes³; firmly practise self-control ! (43)

‘If you fall in love with every woman you see, you will be without hold like the Hat^ha-plant⁴, driven before the wind. (44)

‘As a herdsman or a keeper of goods does not own the things (he has the care of), so you will not truly own Sramanahood.’ (45)

Having heard these well-spoken words of the virtuous lady, he returned to the Law like an elephant driven by the hook⁵. (46)

Protected in thoughts, words, and acts, subduing his senses and keeping the vows, he practised true Sramanahood throughout life. (47)

¹ The verses 42, 43, 44, 46 have been received in the Dasavai-kâlîka Sûtra II, 7-10, see Leumann’s edition of that Sûtra quoted in the note, p. 116. A metrical German translation will be found in the same place.

² On the Bhôgas see p. 71, note 2. It is perhaps here misspelt for Bhôga. In the Vishnu Purâna, Kamsa, Ugrasêna’s son, is twice called Bhôgarâga (see Wilson’s translation, ed. Hall, vol. iv, pp. 260, 271), in contradiction to the common tradition which makes him an Andhaka, compare Patañjali on Pânini IV, 1, 114.

³ There are said to be two kinds of snakes, the gandhana and the agandhana. The former can be made to suck the poison from the wound they have inflicted ; the other will rather die than do so. Cf. Leumann, loc. cit., p. 597, note *.

⁴ Pistia Stratiotes, an aquatic plant.

⁵ Dêvendra here refers to the story of the Nûpurapandita, of which he gives a small portion in Prâkrit. The whole story is related in the Parishishaparvan of Hêmatandra, see the introduction to my edition of that work in the Bibliotheca Indica.

After practising severe austerities both of them became Kêvalins, and having completely annihilated their Karman, they reached the highest perfection. (48)

Thus act the enlightened, the wise, the clever ones; they turn from pleasures as did this best of men¹. (49)

Thus I say.

TWENTY-THIRD LECTURE ².

KÊSI AND GAUTAMA.

There was a Gina, Pârsva³ by name, an Arhat, worshipped by the people, who was thoroughly enlightened and omniscient, a prophet of the Law, and a Gina. (1)

And there was a famous disciple of this Light of the World, the young Sramana Kêsi, who had completely mastered the sciences and right conduct. (2)

¹ Compare the last verse of the Ninth Lecture.

² In this lecture we have a very interesting legend about the way in which the union of the old church of Pârsva and the new church of Mahâvîra was brought about. A revival of this ancient difference seems to have caused the united church afterwards to divide again into the present Svêtâmbara and Digambara sects. They do not continue the two primitive churches, but seem to have grown out of the united church.

³ Pârsva is the last but one Tîrthakara, his Nirvâna took place 250 years before that of Mahâvîra. This statement, which has been generally accepted, is, however, in seeming contradiction to the account of our text, according to which a disciple of Pârsva, who is called a young monk kumâra-sramana, met Gautama, i.e. Sudharman, the disciple of Mahâvîra. We therefore must take the word disciple, sîse, as paramparâsishya, that is not in its literal sense. See note 3, p. 122.

He possessed the light of Sruta and Avadhi knowledge¹, and was surrounded by a crowd of disciples; wandering from village to village he arrived in the town of Srâvastî. (3)

In the district of that town there is a park, called Tinduka; there he took up his abode in a pure place to live and sleep in. (4)

Now at that time there lived the Prophet of the Law, the Gina, who in the whole world is known as the venerable Vardhamâna. (5)

And there was a famous disciple of this Light of the World, the venerable Gautama by name, who had completely mastered the sciences and right conduct. (6)

He knew the twelve Ângas, was enlightened, and was surrounded by a crowd of disciples; wandering from village to village he too arrived in Srâvastî. (7)

In the district of that town there is a park Kôshthaka; there he took up his abode in a pure place to live and sleep in. (8)

The young Sramana Kêsi and the famous Gautama, both lived there, protecting themselves (by the Guptis) and being careful. (9)

The pupils of both, who controlled themselves, who practised austerities, who possessed virtues, and who protected their Self, made the following reflection: (10)

¹ These are the second and third kinds of knowledge according to the Gaina classification. Sruta is the knowledge derived from the sacred books, and avadhi is limited or conditioned knowledge. See Bhandarkar, Report, p. 106.

‘Is our Law the right one, or is the other Law¹ the right one? are our conduct and doctrines right, or the other? (11)

‘The Law as taught by the great sage Pârsva, which recognises but four vows², or the Law taught by Vardhamâna, which enjoins five vows? (12)

‘The Law which forbids clothes (for a monk), or that which (allows) an under and upper garment? Both pursuing the same end, what has caused their difference?’ (13)

Knowing the thoughts of their pupils, both Kêsi and Gautama made up their minds to meet each other. (14)

Gautama, knowing what is proper and what is due to the older section (of the church), went to the Tinduka park, accompanied by the crowd, his pupils. (15)

When Kêsi, the young monk, saw Gautama approach, he received him with all becoming attention. (16)

He at once offered Gautama the four pure kinds of straw and hay³ to sit upon. (17)

Kêsi, the young Sramana, and the famous Gautama, sitting together, shone forth with a lustre like that of sun and moon. (18)

There assembled many heretics out of curiosity, and many thousands of laymen; (19)

Gods, Dânavas, Gandharvas, Yakshas, Râkshasas,

¹ Viz. the Law of Pârsva or the Law of Mahāvîra.

² Hence it is called kâuggâma kâturyâma. Chastity (maithunaviramana) was not explicitly enumerated, but it was understood to be contained in the fourth commandment: to have no property (aparigraha).

³ The four kinds of straw are: sâlî vîhî koddava râлага, to which is added hay: ranne tanâni.

and Kinnaras (assembled there), and there came together invisible ghosts¹ too. (20)

Kêsi said to Gautama, 'I want to ask you something, holy man.' Then to these words of Kêsi Gautama made the following reply: "Sir, ask whatever you like." Then with his permission Kêsi spoke to Gautama: (21, 22)

'The Law taught by the great sage Pârsva, recognises but four vows, whilst that of Vardhamâna enjoins five. (23)

'Both Laws pursuing the same end, what has caused this difference? Have you no misgivings about this twofold Law, O wise man?' (24)

Then to these words of Kêsi Gautama made the following reply: "Wisdom recognises the truth of the Law and the ascertainment of true things. (25)

"The first² saints were simple but slow of understanding, the last saints prevaricating and slow of understanding, those between the two simple and wise; hence there are two forms of the Law³. (26)

¹ Bhûya = bhûta, explained Vyantara. The vantara or vânamantara are a class of ghosts. The second part of the word apparently is tara 'crossing,' and the first seems to contain an accusative vam or vânamam which may be connected with viha or vyôman 'air.'

² Those under the first Tîrthakaras.

³ The meaning of this explanation is as follows. As the vow of chastity is not explicitly mentioned among Pârsva's four vows, but was understood to be implicitly enjoined by them, it follows that only such men as were of an upright disposition and quick understanding would not go astray by observing the four vows literally, i. e. by not abstaining from sexual intercourse, as it was not expressly forbidden.—The argumentation in the text presupposes a decay of the morals of the monastic order to have occurred between Pârsva and Mahâvîra, and this is possible only on the assumption of a sufficient interval of time having

“The first could but with difficulty understand the precepts of the Law, and the last could only with difficulty observe them, but those between them easily understood and observed them.” (27)

‘Well, Gautama, you possess wisdom, you have destroyed my doubt; but I have another doubt which you must explain to me, Gautama. (28)

‘The Law taught by Vardhamāna forbids clothes, but that of the great sage Pārśva allows an under and upper garment. (29)

‘Both Laws pursuing the same end, what has caused this difference? Have you no misgivings about this twofold Law, O wise man?’ (30)

To these words of Kêśi Gautama made the following reply: “Deciding the matter by their superior knowledge, (the Tîrthakaras) have fixed what is necessary for carrying out the Law. (31)

“The various outward marks (of religious men) have been introduced in order that people might recognise them as such; the reason for the characteristic marks is their usefulness for religious life and their distinguishing character. (32)

“Now the opinion (of the Tîrthakaras) is that knowledge, faith, and right conduct are the true causes of final liberation, (and not the outward marks).” (33)

‘Well, Gautama, you possess wisdom, you have destroyed my doubt; but I have another doubt, which you must explain to me, Gautama. (34)

‘Gautama, you stand in the midst of many elapsed between the last two Tîrthakaras. And this perfectly agrees with the common tradition that Mahāvîra came 250 years after Pārśva.

thousand (foes) who make an attack on you ; how have you vanquished them ¹ ?' (35)

"By vanquishing one, five are vanquished ; by vanquishing five, ten are vanquished ; by this tenfold victory, I vanquish all foes." (36)

Kêsi said to Gautama : 'Whom do you call a foe ?' To these words of Kêsi Gautama made the following reply : (37)

"Self is the one invincible foe, (together with the four) cardinal passions ², (viz. anger, pride, deceit, and greed, they are five) and the (five) senses (make ten). These (foes), O great sage, I have regularly vanquished." (38)

'Well, Gautama, &c. (as in verse 28). (39)

'We see many beings in this world who are bound by fetters ; how have you got rid of your fetters and are set free, O sage ?' (40)

"Having cut off all fetters, and having destroyed them by the right means, I have got rid of my fetters and am set free, O sage." (41)

Kêsi said to Gautama : 'What do you call fetters ?'

¹ This question does not refer to the difference in doctrines between Pârsva and Mahâvîra, but is discussed here, as the commentator states, for the benefit of the pupils of both sages who are engaged in conversation. I think, however, that this and the following questions are asked and answered here by the disciples of the two Tîrthakaras for a better reason than that given by the scholiast. For in them the leading topics of Gainism are treated in a symbolical way. Gautama at once understands the true meaning of the similes and interprets them to the satisfaction of Kêsi. In this way the unity in doctrine subsisting between the Law of Pârsva and that of Mahâvîra is demonstrated to the hearers of the dispute, after the differences had been explained away.

² Kashâya.

To these words of Kêsi Gautama made the following reply : (42)

“Love, hatred, &c., are heavy fetters, attachment is a dangerous one; having regularly destroyed them, I live up to the rules of conduct.” (43)

‘Well, Gautama, &c. (as in verse 28). (44)

‘O Gautama, in the innermost heart there grows a plant which brings forth poisonous fruit; how have you torn it out?’ (45)

“I have thoroughly clipped that plant, and torn it out altogether with its roots; thus I have got rid of the poisonous fruit.” (46)

Kêsi said to Gautama, ‘What do you call that plant?’ To these words of Kêsi Gautama made the following reply : (47)

“Love of existence is that dreadful plant which brings forth dreadful fruit; having regularly torn it out, I live pleasantly.” (48)

‘Well, Gautama, &c. (as in verse 28). (49)

‘Gautama, there is blazing up a frightful fire which burns¹ the embodied beings; how have you put it out?’ (50)

“Taking water, excellent water, from (the river) produced by the great cloud, I always pour it over my body; thus sprinkled the fire does not burn me.” (51)

Kêsi said to Gautama, ‘What do you call the fire?’ To these words of Kêsi Gautama made the following reply : (52)

“The passions are the fire; knowledge, a virtuous life, and penances are the water; sprinkled

¹ In the original ‘fire’ is put in the plural because the four kashâyas or cardinal passions are denoted by it.

with the drops of knowledge the fire of the passions is extinguished and does not burn me." (53)

'Well, Gautama, &c. (as in verse 28). (54)

'The unruly, dreadful, bad horse, on which you sit, runs about, Gautama ! how comes it to pass that it does not run off with you ?' (55)

"I govern it well in its course by the bridle of knowledge ; it does not go astray with me, it keeps to the right path." (56)

Kêsi said to Gautama, 'What do you call this horse ?' To these words of Kêsi Gautama made the following reply : (57)

"The mind is that unruly, dreadful, bad horse ; I govern it by the discipline of the Law (so that it becomes a well-) trained Kambôga-¹steed". (58)

'Well, Gautama, &c. (as in verse 28). (59)

'There are many bad roads in this world, which lead men astray ; how do you avoid, Gautama, going astray as you are on the road ?' (60)

"They all are known to me, those who are in the right path and those who have chosen a wrong path ; therefore I do not go astray, O sage !" (61)

Kêsi said to Gautama, 'What do you call the path ?' To these words of Kêsi Gautama made the following reply : (62)

"The heterodox and the heretics have all chosen a wrong path ; the right path is that taught by the Gînas ; it is the most excellent path." (63)

'Well, Gautama, &c. (as in verse 28). (64)

'Is there a shelter, a refuge, a firm ground for the beings carried away by the great flood of water ? do you know the island, O Gautama ?' (65)

¹ Kanthaka, see above, p. 47, note 2.

“There is a large, great island in the midst of water, which is not inundated by the great flood of water.” (66)

Kêsi said to Gautama, ‘What do you call this island?’ To these words of Kêsi Gautama made the following reply: (67)

“The flood is old age and death, which carry away living beings; Law is the island, the firm ground, the refuge, the most excellent shelter.” (68)

‘Well, Gautama, &c. (as in verse 28). (69)

‘On the ocean with its many currents there drifts a boat; how will you, Gautama, on board of it reach the opposite shore?’ (70)

“A boat that leaks will not reach the opposite shore; but a boat that does not leak, will reach it.” (71)

Kêsi said to Gautama, ‘What do you call this boat?’ To these words of Kêsi Gautama made the following reply: (72)

“The body is the boat, life is the sailor, and the Circle of Births is the ocean which is crossed by the great sages.” (73)

‘Well, Gautama, &c. (as in verse 28). (74)

‘In this dreadfully dark gloom there live many beings; who will bring light into the whole world of living beings?’ (75)

“The spotless sun has risen which illuminates the whole world; he will bring light into the whole world of living beings.” (76)

Kêsi said to Gautama, ‘What do you call this sun?’ To these words of Kêsi Gautama made the following reply: (77)

“Risen has he who put an end to the Circle of Births, the omniscient Gina, the luminary, who brings light into the whole world of living beings." (78)

'Well, Gautama, &c. (as in verse 28). (79)

'Do you, O sage, know a safe, happy, and quiet place for living beings which suffer from pains¹ of body and mind?' (80)

"There is a safe place in view of all, but difficult of approach, where there is no old age nor death, no pain nor disease." (81)

Kêsi said to Gautama, 'What is this place called?' To these words of Kêsi Gautama made the following reply: (82)

"It is what is called Nirvâṇa, or freedom from pain, or perfection, which is in view of all; it is the safe, happy, and quiet place which the great sages reach. (83)

"That is the eternal place, in view of all, but difficult of approach. Those sages who reach it are free from sorrows, they have put an end to the stream of existence." (84)

'Well, Gautama, you possess wisdom, you have destroyed my doubt; obeisance to you, who are not troubled by doubts, who are the ocean, as it were, of all Sûtras.' (85)

After his doubt had been solved, Kêsi, of enormous sanctity, bowed his head to the famous Gautama. (86)

And in the pleasant (Tinduka park) he sincerely adopted the Law of the five vows, which was proclaimed by the first Tirthakara, according to the teaching of the last Tirthakara. (87)

¹ Mânasê dukkhê stands for mânasêhim dukkhêhim. It is an interesting instance of the dropping of case affixes, which probably was more frequent in the vernacular.

In that meeting of Kêsi and Gautama, knowledge and virtuous conduct were for ever brought to eminence, and subjects of the greatest importance were settled. (88)

The whole assembly was greatly pleased and fixed their thoughts on the right way. They praised Kêsi and Gautama: 'May the venerable ones show us favour!' (89)

Thus I say.

TWENTY-FOURTH LECTURE.

THE SAMITIS.

The eight articles¹ of the creed are the Samitis and the Guptis; there are five Samitis and three Guptis. (1)

The Samitis² are: 1. īryâ-samiti (going by paths trodden by men, beasts, carts, &c., and looking carefully so as not to occasion the death of any living creature); 2. bhâshâ-samiti (gentle, salutary, sweet, righteous speech); 3. êshanâ-samiti (receiving alms in a manner to avoid the forty-two faults that are laid down); 4. âdâna-samiti (receiving and keeping of the things necessary for religious exercises, after having carefully examined them); 5. uḥkâra-samiti (performing the operations of nature in an unfrequented place). The three Guptis (which are here included in the term Samiti in its wider application) are: 1. mano-gupti (preventing the mind from wandering in the forest of sensual pleasures by employing it in contemplation, study, &c.); 2. vâg-gupti (preventing the tongue from saying bad things by a vow of silence, &c.); 3. kâya-gupti (putting the body in an immovable posture as in the case of Kâyôtsarga). (2)

¹ The word I have rendered 'article' is mâyâ, the Sanskrit form of which may be mâtâ or mâtrâ. The word is derived from the root mâ 'to find room in,' and denotes that which includes in itself other things, see verse 3. The word may also mean mâtri 'mother,' as Weber understands it. But this is an obviously intentional double meaning.

² The definitions placed in parentheses in the text are taken from Bhandarkar's Report for 1883-1884, p. 98, note †, p. 100, note *.

The eight Samitis are thus briefly enumerated, in which the whole creed taught by the Ginas and set forth in the twelve Ângas, is comprehended. (3)

1. The walking of a well-disciplined monk should be pure in four respects: in respect to 1. the cause¹; 2. the time; 3. the road; 4. the effort². (4)

The cause is: knowledge, faith, and right conduct; the time is day-time; the road excludes bad ways. (5)

The effort is fourfold, viz. as regards: 1. substance, 2. place, 3. time, and 4. condition of mind. Hear me explain them. (6)

With regard to substance: the (walking monk) should look with his eyes; with regard to place: the space of a yuga (i.e. four hastas or cubits); with regard to time: as long as he walks; and with regard to condition of mind: carefully³. (7)

He walks carefully who pays attention only to ¹ Âlambana, literally support; explained: supported by which the mind becomes pure.

² Gâyanâ = yatna; it consists chiefly in compassion with living creatures (gîvadayâ).

³ Upayukta.

his walk and his body (executing it), whilst he avoids attending to the objects of sense, but (minds) his study, the latter in all five ways¹. (8)

2. To give way to : anger, pride, deceit and greed, laughter, fear, loquacity and slander²; these eight faults should a well-disciplined monk avoid; he should use blameless and concise speech at the proper time. (9, 10)

3. As regards begging³, a monk should avoid the faults in the search⁴, in the receiving⁵, and in the use⁶ of the three kinds of objects, viz. food, articles of use, and lodging. (11)

A zealous monk should avoid in the first (i.e. in the search for alms) the faults occasioned either by the giver (udgama) or by the receiver (utpâdana); in the second (i.e. in the receiving of alms) the faults inherent in the receiving; and in the use of the articles received, the four faults⁷. (12)

¹ The 'five ways' are vâkanâ, &c., as explained in the Twenty-ninth Lecture, §§ 19-23, below, p. 165 f. The commentators supply kuryât 'he should carry on his study.'

² Vikahâ = vikathâ, which does not occur in common Sanskrit. Perhaps it stands for vikatthâ 'boasting.'

³ Ēshanâ.

⁴ Gavêshanâ.

⁵ Grahanâishanâ.

⁶ Paribhōgaishanâ.

⁷ There are altogether forty-six faults to be avoided. As they are frequently alluded to in the sacred texts, a systematical enumeration and description of them according to the Dīpikā will be useful.

There are sixteen udgama-dōshas by which food, &c. becomes unfit for a Gaṇa monk :

1. Ādhākarmika, the fault inherent in food, &c., which a layman has prepared especially for religious mendicants of whatever sect.

2. Auddêrika, is food, &c., which a layman has prepared for a particular monk.

4. If a monk takes up or lays down the two kinds of things belonging to his general and supple-

3. Pûtika, is food, &c., which is pure on the whole, but contains particles impure on account of the first fault.

4. Unmisra, is food, &c., of which a part only had been especially prepared for the monk in question.

5. Sthâpanâkarmika, is food, &c., which has been reserved for the monk.

6. Prâbhrîtika, is food, &c., which has been prepared for some festivity.

7. Prâduḥkarana, when the layman has to light a lamp in order to fetch the alms for the monk.

8. Krîta, when he has to buy the things.

9. Prâmitya, when he has to fetch a ladle (ṛuddhâraka) in order to draw out the food, &c.

10. Parâvrîtî, when he replaces bad particles of the food by good ones, and vice versa.

11. Adhyâhrîta, when he has to fetch the food, &c., from some distance.

12. Udbhinna, when he has to open locks before he gets at the food, &c.

13. Mâlâhrîta, when he has to take the food, &c., from some raised or underground place.

14. Âkṣhidya, when the food, &c., was taken by force from somebody.

15. Anisrîṣṭa, when a man gives from a store he possesses in common with other men, without asking their permission.

16. Adhyavapûra, when the mendicant calls while the dinner is being cooked, and for his sake more food is put in the pot on the fire.

(Some of these faults are enumerated in the Aupapâtika Sûtra, § 96, III.)

There are sixteen utpâdana-dôshas; or such faults as are occasioned by the monk's using some means to make the layman give him alms:

1. Dhâtrîkarman, when the monk plays with the layman's children.

2. Dûtakarman, when he gives him information about what his people are doing.

3. Nimitta, when he speaks in praise of almsgiving.

4. Âgîvikâ, when he makes his birth and family known to him.

mentary¹ outfit, he should proceed in the following way. (13)

5. Vapaṅka, when he expatiates upon his misery.
6. Kikitsā, when he cures sick people.
7. Krôdhapinda, when he extorts alms by threats.
8. Mānapinda, when he tells the layman that he has laid a wager with other monks that he would get alms from him.
9. Mâyâpinda, when he employs tricks or buffoonery in order to procure alms.
10. Lôbhapinda, when he goes begging from a desire of good fare.
11. Samstava-pinda, when he flatters the layman.
12. Vidyâpinda, when he makes a show of his learning; or when he conjures a god from whom to get alms.
13. Mantradôsha, when he obliges the layman in some way or other.
14. Kûrnayôga, when he makes himself invisible and then takes away the food, &c.
15. Yôgapinda, when he teaches people spells, tricks, &c.
16. Mûlakarman, when he teaches them how to obviate evils by roots, charms, &c.

There are ten faults of grahanaishanâ:

1. Saṅkita, when a monk accepts alms from a frightened layman.
2. Mrakshita, when the food is soiled (kharanṣita) by animate or inanimate matter.
3. Nikshipta, when the food is placed among animate things.
4. Pihita, when animate food is covered with inanimate matter, and vice versa.
5. Samhrîta, when the layman has to take out the thing to be given from one vessel and puts it into another.
6. Dâyaka, when the condition or occupation of the giver forbids accepting alms from him.
7. Unmisrita, when the layman mixes up pure with impure food.
8. Aparita (?), when one joint possessor gives away from the store against the other's will.
9. Lipta, when the layman gives food, &c., with a ladle or his hand, soiled with milk, butter, &c.
10. Kḥardita, when in giving alms he spills milk, &c.

¹ See next page.

A zealous monk should wipe the thing after having inspected it with his eyes, and then he should take it up or put it down, having the Samiti in both respects². (14)

5. Excrements, urine, saliva, mucus, uncleanness of the body, offals of food, waste things, his own body (when he is about to die), and everything of this description (is to be disposed of in the way to be described). (15)

[A place may be not frequented and not seen (by people), or not frequented but seen, or frequented and not seen, or frequented and seen. (16)]³

In a place neither frequented nor seen by other people, which offers no obstacles to self-control, which is even, not covered with grass or leaves⁴, and has

There are four faults of paribhōgaishanâ :

1. Samyôganâ, when the monk puts together the ingredients for a good meal.

2. Apramâna, when he accepts a greater than the prescribed quantity of food.

3. Îngâla, when he praises a rich man for his good fare, or dhûma, when he blames a poor man for his bad fare.

4. Akâraṇa, when he eats choice food on other occasions than those laid down in the sacred texts.

¹ Aughika and aupagrahika. The former is explained sâ mudâyika, the other denotes such things as are wanted occasionally only, as a stick. I cannot make out with certainty from the commentaries whether the broom is reckoned among the former or the latter.

² This means, according to the commentator, either in taking up or putting down, or with respect to the ôgha and aupagrahika outfit, or with respect to substance and condition of mind.

³ This verse, which is in a different metre (Âryâ), is apparently a later addition, and has probably been taken from an old commentary, the Kûrvi or the Bhâshya.

⁴ Agghusirê = asushirê, not perforated, not having holes. I translate according to the author of the Avaṭṭuri. The literal been brought into its present condition¹ not long ago, which is spacious, has an inanimate surface-layer², not too near (the village, &c.), not perforated by holes, and is exempt from insects and seeds—in such a place he should leave his excrements, &c. (17, 18)

The five Samitis are thus briefly enumerated, I shall now explain in due order the three Guptis³. (19)

1. There is, 1. truth ; 2. untruth ; 3. a mixture of truth and untruth ; 4. a mixture of what is not true, and what is not untrue. The Gupti of mind refers to all four⁴. (20)

A zealous monk should prevent his mind from desires for the misfortune of somebody else⁵, from thoughts on acts which cause misery to living beings⁶, and from thoughts on acts which cause their destruction⁷. (21)

2. The Gupti of speech is also of four kinds (referring to the four divisions as in verse 20). (22)

A zealous monk should prevent his speech from (expressing) desires, &c. (as in verse 21). (23)

3. In standing, sitting, lying down, jumping, going, and in the use of his organs, a zealous monk should prevent his body from intimating obnoxious desires, translation would give a wrong idea, as it would come to the same as the word bilavargita in the next verse.

¹ I. e. where the ground has been cleared not long ago by burning the grass, &c.

² Ôgâdâhê, where the animate ground is covered by at least five digits of inanimate matter.

³ Viz. of mind (20, 21), of speech (22, 23), and of the body (24, 25).

⁴ See part i, p. 150, note 2.

⁵ Samrambha.

⁶ Samârambha.

⁷ Ârambha.

from doing acts which cause misery to living beings, or which cause their destruction. (24, 25)

These are the five Samitis for the practice of the religious life, and the Guptis for the prevention of everything sinful. (26)

This is the essence of the creed, which a sage should thoroughly put into practice; such a wise man will soon get beyond the Circle of Births. (27)

Thus I say.

TWENTY-FIFTH LECTURE.

THE TRUE SACRIFICE.

There was a famous Brâhmana, Gayaghôsha by name, who was born in a Brâhmanical family, but who was pledged to the performing of the yamas¹. (1)

This great sage, who subdued all his senses, and who walked on the right road, came, on his wandering from village to village, to the town of Benares. (2)

There outside of Benares he took up his lodgings in a pleasant park; there he took up his abode in a pure place to live and sleep in. (3)

At the same time a Brâhmana, versed in the Vêdas, Vigayaghôsha by name, offered a sacrifice in that town. (4)

Now this houseless (monk) at the end of a fast of a month's duration, went to the sacrifice of Vigayaghôsha to beg alms. (5)

¹ Yama etymologically means 'restraint'; here it denotes the great vows of the Gainas; cf. XXIII, 12, p. 121 and note 2.

The priest wanted to turn the approaching monk off: 'I shall not give you alms, mendicant, beg somewhere else. (6)

'Priests who are versed in the Vêdas and are chaste as behoves offerers, who are versed in the *Gyôti-shânga*¹ and are well grounded in the sacrificial science, who are able to save themselves and others, such priests ought to be presented with food and all they desire.' (7, 8)

When the great sage was thus refused by the priest, he was neither angry nor pleased, as he always strove for the highest good. (9)

Not to obtain food, or drink, or whatever else he wanted, but to save these people he spoke the following words: (10)

"You do not know what is most essential² in the Vêdas, nor in sacrifices, nor in the heavenly bodies³, nor in duties⁴. (11)

"Nor do you know those who are able to save themselves and others; but if you do, then speak out!" (12)

The priest did not make a reply to defend himself against his insinuation; but he and all there assembled joined their hands and questioned the great sage: (13)

'Tell us the most essential subject in the Vêdas, and tell us what is most essential in the sacrifice;

¹ It is worthy of note that, according to the opinion of our author, the knowledge of astronomy, as taught in the Gyôtisha, was one of the principal accomplishments of a priest. This quality of a priest must therefore have been more conspicuous to an outsider than Brâhmanical books would make us believe.

² To render muha = mukha.

³ Nakshatra.

⁴ Dharma.

tell us the first of the heavenly bodies, and tell us the best of dharmas. (14)

‘Who are able to save themselves and others (viz. tell me). I ask you to solve this my doubt, O saint.’ (15)

“The most essential subject in the Vêdas is the agnihôtra, and that of the sacrifice is the purpose of the sacrifice¹; the first of the heavenly bodies is the moon, and the best of dharmas is that of Kâsyapa (i. e. Rîshabha). (16)

“The beautiful (gods) with joined hands praise and worship the highest Lord (i. e. the Tîrthakara) as the planets, &c., (praise) the moon. (17)

“The ignorant (priests) pretend to know the sacrifice, those whose Brâhmanical excellence consists in (false) science; they shroud themselves in study and penance, being like fire covered by ashes. (18)

“He who is called by people a Brâhmana and is worshipped like fire (is no true Brâhmana). But him we call a true Brâhmana, whom the wise point out as such. (19)

“He who has no worldly attachment after entering the order, who does not repent of having become a monk², and who takes delight in the noble words, him we call a Brâhmana. (20)

“He who is exempt from love, hatred, and fear,

¹ Gannatîhî vêyasâ muham = yagñârthî vedasâm mukham. According to the Dîpikâ sacrifice here means the ten virtues: truth, penance, content, patience, right conduct, simplicity, faith, constancy, not injuring anything, and Samvara.

² According to the commentators we should translate: He who does not embrace (his people) on meeting them, and is not sorry on leaving them.

(and who shines forth) like burnished gold, purified in fire¹, him we call a Brâhmana. (21)

"A lean, self-subduing ascetic, who reduces his flesh and blood, who is pious and has reached Nirvâna, him we call a Brâhmana. (22)

"He who thoroughly knows living beings, whether they move or not, and does not injure them in any of the three ways², him we call a Brâhmana. (23)

"He who does not speak untruth from anger or for fun, from greed or from fear, him we call a Brâhmana. (24)

"He who does not take anything that is not given him, be it sentient or not sentient, small or large, him we call a Brâhmana. (25)

"He who does not carnally love divine, human, or animal beings, in thoughts, words, or acts, him we call a Brâhmana. (26)

"He who is not defiled by pleasures as a lotus growing in the water is not wetted by it, him we call a Brâhmana. (27)

"He who is not greedy, who lives unknown, who has no house and no property, and who has no friendship with householders, him we call a Brâhmana. (28)

"He who has given up his former connections (with his parents, &c.), with his kinsmen and relations, and who is not given to pleasure, him we call a Brâhmana. (29)

¹ Niddhantamalapâvagam. The commentator assumes a transposition of the members in this compound. Such irregular compounds are not unfrequent in our Prâkrîṭ. If, however, pâvaga stands for pâpaka, the compound would be regular, and would refer not to 'gold,' but to the person described. In that case we must translate: whose impurities and sins had been annihilated.

² I. e. by thoughts, words, and acts.

“The binding of animals (to the sacrificial pole), all the Vêdas, and sacrifices, being causes of sin, cannot save the sinner; for his works (or Karman) are very powerful. (30)

“One does not become a Sramana by the tonsure, nor a Brâhmana by the sacred syllable ôm, nor a Muni by living in the woods, nor a Tâpasa by wearing (clothes of) Kusa-grass and bark. (31)

“One becomes a Sramana by equanimity, a Brâhmana by chastity, a Muni by knowledge, and a Tâpasa by penance. (32)

“By one's actions one becomes a Brâhmana, or a Kshattriya, or a Vaisya, or a Sûdra. (33)

“The Enlightened One has declared these (good qualities) through which one becomes a (true) Snâtaka¹; him who is exempt from all Karman, we call a Brâhmana. (34)

“The most excellent twice-born men² who possess these good qualities, are able to save themselves and others.” (35)

When thus his doubt had been solved, Vigaya-ghôsha, the Brâhmana, assented³ to the great sage Gayaghôsha and to his (speech). (36)

Vigaya-ghôsha, pleased, folded his hands and spoke

¹ Snâtaka denotes a Brahman who has finished his studies; it here means as much as ‘a perfect sage.’

² A various reading in one MS. adds, ‘Ginas and Brâhmanas’ before dvigas.

³ Samudâya tayam tam tu. The text is evidently corrupted. Samudâya stands, according to the commentators, for samâdâya, but there is no finite verb with which to construe the absolute participle, either expressed or easily supplied. Perhaps we must read samuvâya vayam = samuvâka vaḥas; for the perfect is retained in some cases. However, if this conjecture be right, the next line would be superfluous.

as follows: 'You have well declared to me what true Brâhmanahood consists in. (37)

'You are a sacrificer of sacrifices, you are the most learned of those who know the Vêdas, you know the Gyôtishânga, you know perfectly the Law. (38)

'You are able to save yourself and others; therefore do us the honour to accept our alms, O best of monks.' (39)

"I do not want any alms; but, O Brâhmana, enter the order at once, lest you should be drifted about on the dreadful ocean of the Samsâra, whose eddies are dangers. (40)

"There is glue (as it were) in pleasure: those who are not given to pleasure, are not soiled by it; those who love pleasures, must wander about in the Samsâra; those who do not, will be liberated. (41)

"If you take two clods of clay, one wet, the other dry, and fling them against the wall, the wet one will stick to it. (42)

"Thus foolish men, who love pleasure, will be fastened (to Karman), but the passionless will not, even as the dry clod of clay (does not stick to the wall)." (43)

When Vigayaghôsha had learned the excellent Law from the houseless Gayaghôsha, he entered the order. (44)

Gayaghôsha and Vigayaghôsha both annihilated their Karman by self-control and penance, and reached the highest perfection. (45)

Thus I say.

TWENTY-SIXTH LECTURE.

THE CORRECT BEHAVIOUR.

I shall declare the correct behaviour (sâmâkâri) which causes freedom from all misery; by practising it the Nirgranthas have crossed the ocean of Samsâra. (1)

The correct behaviour of monks consists of (the following) ten parts: 1. âvasyikâ; 2. naishêdhikî; 3. âprikkhanâ; 4. pratiprikkhanâ; 5. khandanâ; 6. ikkhâkâra; 7. mithyâkâra; 8. tathâkâra; 9. abhyutthâna; 10. upasampad. (2-4)

The âvasyikâ is required when he leaves a room (or the presence of other monks on some necessary business); the naishêdhikî, on entering a place; âprikkhanâ, (or asking the superior's permission) for what he is to do himself; pratiprikkhanâ, for what somebody else is to do; khandanâ, (or placing at the disposal of other monks) the things one has got; ikkhâkâra, in the execution (of one's intention by oneself or somebody else); mithyâkâra, in the blaming oneself (for sins committed); tathâkâra, (assent) in making a promise; abhyutthâna, in serving those who deserve respect; and upasampad, in placing oneself under another teacher. Thus the twice fivefold behaviour has been declared. (5-7)

After sunrise during the first quarter (of the first Paurushî)¹ he should inspect (and clean) his things and pay his respects to the superior. (8)

Then, with his hands joined, he should ask him :

¹ The southern half of the sky or horizon, between east and west, is divided into four quarters, each of which corresponds in time to a paurushî, the fourth part of a day or a night.

‘What shall I do now? I want to be employed, sir, in doing some work or in studying.’ (9)

If he is ordered to do some work, he should do it without tiring; if he is ordered to study, he should do it without allowing himself to be affected by any pains. (10)

A clever monk should divide the day into four (equal) parts (called paurushî), and fulfil his duties (uttaraguna) in all four parts. (11)

In the first Paurushî he should study, in the second he should meditate, in the third he should go on his begging-tour, and in the fourth he should study again. (12)

In the month Âshâdha the Paurushî (of the night) contains two feet (pada)¹; in the month Pausha, four; in the months Kaitra and Âsvayuga, three. (13)

(The Paurushî) increases or decreases a digit² (aṅgula) every week, two digits every fortnight, four digits every month. (14)

The dark fortnight of Âshâdha, Bhâdrapada, Kârttika, Pausha, Phâlguna, and Vaisâkha are known as *avamarâtrâs*³. (15)

¹ A paurushî is the fourth part of a day or a night; about the time of the equinoxes, when the day as well as the night contains twelve hours, the paurushî contains three hours. At the same time, in the months Kaitra and Âsvina, as we learn from our verse, the paurushî has three feet, padas. The pada therefore is equal to one hour exactly. The duration of the night at the summer solstice was therefore estimated at eight hours and at the winter solstice at sixteen, just as in the Vedic Gyôtisha.

² A digit, aṅgula, is apparently the twelfth part of a foot, pada = one hour. The digit is therefore equal to five minutes.

³ The fortnights, mentioned in the text, consist of fourteen days only, the remaining ones of fifteen days. In this way the lunar year is made to consist of 354 days.

In the quarter of the year comprising the three months Gyêsthâmûla, Âshâdha, and Srâvana, the (morning-) inspection is to last six digits (beyond $\frac{1}{4}$ Paurushî); in the second quarter, eight; in the third, ten; in the fourth, eight¹. (16)

A clever monk should divide the night too into four parts, and fulfil his duties (uttaraguna) in all four parts. (17)

In the first Paurushî he should study, in the second he should meditate, in the third he should leave off sleep, and in the fourth he should study again. (18)

When the nakshatra which leads the night² has reached the first quarter of the heaven, at dawn he should cease to study. (19)

When a small part of the quarter is left³, in which the (leading) nakshatra stands, during that space of time, being considered intermediate⁴ (between two) days, a monk should watch. (20)

In the first quarter (of the first Paurushî) he should inspect (and clean) his things, pay his respects to his superior, and then begin to study, not allowing himself to be affected by any pains⁵. (21)

¹ Or thirty, forty, fifty, forty minutes respectively.

² I.e. the nakshatra which is in opposition to the sun, and accordingly rises at the same time with the setting sun, and sets with the rising sun, compare Râmâyana III, 16, 12.

³ I.e. is about to set.

⁴ Vêrattiya, translated vairâtrika; but there is no such word in Sanskrit. It apparently stands for dvairâtrika, belonging to two days. As the Hindus reckon the day from sunrise, the time immediately preceding it may be considered to belong to two days.

⁵ Compare verse 8.

In the (last) quarter of the first Pauruṣṭī, after paying his respect to the Guru, a monk should inspect his almsbowl, without, however, performing the Kāla-pratikramaṇa¹. (22)

He should first inspect his mouth-cloth², then his broom³, and taking the broom in his hand he should inspect his cloth. (23)

Standing upright he holds his cloth firmly and inspects it first leisurely, then he spreads it, and at last he wipes it. (24)

(He should spread the cloth) without shaking or crushing it, in such a way as to make the folds disappear, and to avoid friction of its parts against each other; he should fold it up six times in length, and nine times in breadth, and then he should remove living beings with his hand (spreading the cloth on the palm of his hand)⁴. (25)

He must avoid want of attention: 1. in beginning his work; 2. in taking up the corners of the cloth; 3. in folding it up; 4. in shaking out the dust; 5. in putting it down (on some other piece of cloth); 6. in sitting upon the haunches⁵. (26)

¹ I.e. expiation of sins concerning time, cf. Bhandarkar's Report, p. 98, note †. It seems to consist in Kāyōtsarga.

² This is a piece of muslin which the Gaiṇa monks place before their mouth in speaking, in order to prevent insects being drawn in the mouth by the breath.

³ It is here called gôkṣhaga = gukṣhaka, originally a bunch of peacocks' feathers, it is so still, if I am not mistaken, with the Digambaras, whilst the Svêtâmbaras use other materials, especially cotton threads.

⁴ Much in my translation is conjectural. There are some technicalities in these verses which I fail to understand clearly, notwithstanding the explanations of the scholiasts.

⁵ Vêdikâ.

(One must further avoid) to hold the cloth loosely, or at one corner, or so as to let it flap, or so as to subject it to friction, or so as to shake it in different ways, or if one has made a mistake in the number of foldings (see verse 25) to count (aloud or with the help of the fingers, &c.)¹ (27)

There should be neither too little nor too much of inspection, nor an exchange (of the things to be inspected); this is the right way to do (the inspection), all other methods are wrong:— (28)

(This is) if one engaged in inspecting his things converses or gossips (with anybody), renounces something², teaches another his lesson, or receives his own lesson from another, (he neglects his inspection). (29)

He who is careful in the inspection, protects the six kinds of living beings, viz. the earth-bodies, water-bodies, fire-bodies, wind-bodies, plants, and animals. (30)

He who is careless in the inspection, injures the six kinds of living beings (just enumerated)³. (31)

In the third Pauruṣh he should beg food and drink, (he may do so) for any of the following six reasons: (32)

¹ I am not sure of having hit the true meaning. The commentators reckon this counting as a fault, while the text itself seems to enjoin it.

² Dēi paṭṭakkhānam. The meaning is, I believe, that during the time of inspection one should not make up one's mind to abstain from this or that because one is to devote one's whole attention to the inspection of one's things.

³ The Dīpikā places this verse before the last and construes it with verse 29, making out the following meaning: if one, engaged in inspecting his things, converses or gossips, &c., then, being careless in the inspection, he injures, &c.

1. To prevent an illness; 2. to serve the Guru; 3. to be able to comply with the rules about walking¹; 4. to be able to comply with the rules of self-control²; 5. to save one's life; 6. to be able to meditate on the Law. (33)

A zealous Nirgrantha or Nirgranthi may omit to beg food for the following six reasons, when it will not be considered a transgression of his duties: (34)

1. In case of illness; 2. in case of a disaster; 3. to preserve one's chastity and the Guptis; 4. out of compassion for living beings; 5. in the interest of penance; 6. to make an end of one's life³. (35)

Taking his whole outfit a monk should inspect it with his eye; he then may walk about, but not beyond half a Yôgana. (36)

In the fourth Paurushî he should put away his almsbowl (after having eaten his meal), and then begins his study which reveals all existent things. (37)

In the last quarter of the fourth Paurushî he should pay his reverence to the Guru, and after having performed Kâla-pratikramana⁴, he should inspect his lodging. (38)

A zealous monk should also inspect the place where to discharge his excrements and urine, and then (till the sun sets) he should go through Kâyôt-sarga without allowing himself to be affected by any pains. (39)

¹ Iriya//hâê; for one will not be careful about walking (îryâ-samitî) if too hungry or thirsty.

² For one might eat forbidden food if too hungry.

³ It may be remarked here that the verses 15, 16, 19, 20, 24, 26, 27, 29, 33, 34, 35 are in the Âryâ-metre while the rest of the lecture is in Ślôka.

⁴ Compare note 1, p. 145.

Then he should, in due order, reflect on all transgressions he has committed during the day, with regard to knowledge, faith, and conduct. (40)

Having finished Kâyôtsarga, and paid his reverence to the Guru, he should, in due order, confess his transgressions committed during the day. (41)

Then having recited the Pratikramana Sûtra¹, and having annihilated his sins, he should pay his reverence to the Guru (asking absolution)², and go through Kâyôtsarga without allowing himself to be affected by any pains. (42)

Having finished Kâyôtsarga, and paid his reverence to the Guru, he should pronounce the customary (three) praises, and then wait for the proper time. (43)

In the first Paurushî (of the night) he should study; in the second he should meditate; in the third he should leave off sleep; and in the fourth he should study again³. (44)

In the fourth Paurushî he should wait for the proper time and then begin to study without waking the householders. (45)

In the last quarter of the fourth Paurushî he should pay his reverence to the Guru, and performing Kâla-pratikramana⁴ he should wait for the proper time. (46)

When the (time for) Kâyôtsarga has arrived, he ¹ Padîkamittu = pratikramya, explained pratikramana-sûtram uktvâ.

² According to the Dîpikâ: having repeated the three Gâthâs beginning âriyauvagghâya.

³ This verse is the same as verse 18, except a verbal difference in the last line.

⁴ Padîkamittu kâlassa, see p. 145, note 1. The Dîpikâ here explains this phrase by: doing acts proper for that time.

should go through it, without allowing himself to be affected by any pains. (47)

Then he should, in due order, reflect on all transgressions he has committed during the night with regard to knowledge, faith, and conduct. (48)

Having finished Kâyôtsarga and paid his reverence to the Guru, he should, in due order, confess his transgressions committed during the night. (49)

Then having recited the Pratikramana Sûtra &c. (see verse 41). (50)

He should consider what kind of austerities he will undertake. Having finished his Kâyôtsarga, he pays his reverence to the Guru. (51)

Having finished Kâyôtsarga and paid his reverence to the Guru, he should practise those austerities which he has decided upon, and praise the perfected saints. (52)

Thus has been summarily declared the correct behaviour, by practising which many souls have crossed the ocean of Samsâra. (53)

Thus I say.

TWENTY-SEVENTH LECTURE.

THE BAD BULLOCKS.

There was a Sthavira and Ganadhara¹, the learned sage Garga. This leader of the Gana once made the following reflections : (1)

‘ He who rides in a car, crosses a wilderness ; he

¹ Gana seems to correspond to the modern Gakkha ; see part i, p. 288, note 2. Ganadhara, therefore, does not denote here, as usual, a disciple of Tîrthakara.

who rides, as it were, in (the car of) religious exercise, crosses the Samsâra. (2)

‘But he who puts bad bullocks¹ before his car, will be tired out with beating them; he will feel vexation, and his goad will be broken (at last). (3)

‘(A bad bullock) will bite its mate in the tail; it will wound the other²; it will break the pin of the yoke³, or it will leave the road. (4)

‘It will fall down on its side, or sit down, or lie down; it will jump up or caper, or it will obstinately make for a young cow. (5)

‘It will furiously advance with its head lowered for an attack, or angrily go backward; it will stand still as if dead, or run at full speed. (6)

‘The cursed beast⁴ will rend asunder the rope, or in its unruliness break the yoke; and roaring it will break loose and run off. (7)

‘Just as bad bullocks are when put before a car, so are bad pupils when yoked, as it were, to the car of the Law; they break down through want of zeal. (8)

‘Some attach great importance⁵ to their success;

¹ Khalumka = galivrishabha. Gali is explained in the dictionaries: a strong but lazy bull. In verse 16 we meet with galigaddaha = galigardabha, as synonymous with khalumka.

² The commentator understands the first line of this verse as having reference to the angry driver. But though an angry driver will perhaps, for all I know, put his bullock's tail to his teeth, still it is harder to supply another subject in the first line than in the second, and in the following verses.

³ Samilâ = yugarandhrakîlaka, Avatûri.

⁴ Kîmâla = gâra, see Hemakandra, Dêśi Kôsha 3, 27. It is a coarse term, which I replace by another, though probably the language of our coach-drivers might supply us with a more idiomatic rendering.

⁵ Gârava, cf. p. 98, note 2.

some to their good fare; some to their comfort; some nurse their anger. (9)

‘Some are averse to begging; some are afraid of insults and are stuck up; (how can) I convince them by reasons and arguments’¹(?) (10)

‘(A bad pupil) makes objections, and points out (imagined) difficulties; he frequently acts in opposition to the words of the superiors. (11)

‘(He will say if sent to a lady): “She does not know me, she will give me nothing; I suppose she will be gone out; send some other monk there.” (12)

‘If sent on an errand, they do not do what they were bidden², but stroll about wherever they like; or deporting themselves like servants of the king³, they knit their brows (when speaking to other people). (13)

‘After they have been instructed, admitted into the order, and nourished with food and drink, they disperse in all directions like geese whose wings have grown.’ (14)

Now this driver (viz. Garga), who had to deal with bad bullocks, thought: ‘What have I to do with bad pupils? I am disheartened. (15)

‘As are bad pupils, so are bad bullocks; I shall leave these lazy donkeys, and shall practise severe austerities.’ (16)

¹ The metre of this verse seems to have originally been Âryâ, but an attempt has been made to change it into Anush/ubh. We meet here with the interesting form anusâsammî (read anusasammi) = anusâsmi.

² This seems to be the meaning of the word paliumkanti. The commentators say, after other explanations, that they pretend not to have met the person to whom they were sent.

³ Râgavet/him va mannantâ; vet/hi=vish/i, hire.

That noble man, who was full of kindness, grave, and always meditating, wandered about on the earth, leading a virtuous life. (17)

Thus I say.

TWENTY-EIGHTH LECTURE.

THE ROAD TO FINAL DELIVERANCE.

Learn the true road leading to final deliverance, which the Ginas have taught; it depends on four causes and is characterised by right knowledge and faith. (1)

I. Right knowledge; II. Faith; III. Conduct; and IV. Austerities; this is the road taught by the Ginas who possess the best knowledge. (2)

Right knowledge, faith, conduct, and austerities; beings who follow this road, will obtain beatitude. (3)

I. Knowledge is fivefold: 1. Sruta, knowledge derived from the sacred books; 2. Âbhinibôdhika, perception¹; 3. Avadhi, supernatural knowledge; 4. *Manahparyâya*², knowledge of the thoughts of other people; 5. Kêvala, the highest, unlimited knowledge. (4)

¹ This is usually called mati, and is placed before sruta. The same enumeration recurs in XXXIII, 4, p. 193. Umâsvâti in Môksha Sûtra I, 14, gives the following synonyms of mati: smṛiti, kintâ, abhinibôdhika.

² Mananânâma.

This is the fivefold knowledge. The wise ones have taught the knowledge of substances, qualities, and all developments¹. (5)

Substance is the substrate of qualities ; the qualities are inherent in one substance ; but the characteristic of developments is that they inhere in either (viz. substances or qualities). (6)

Dharma, Adharma, space, time, matter, and souls (are the six kinds of substances²) ; they make up this world, as has been taught by the Ginas who possess the best knowledge. (7)

Dharma, Adharma, and space are each one substance only ; but time, matter, and souls are an infinite number of substances. (8)

The characteristic of Dharma is motion, that of Adharma immobility, and that of space³, which contains all other substances, is to make room (for everything)⁴. (9)

The characteristic of time is duration⁵, that of soul the realisation⁶ of knowledge, faith, happiness, and misery. (10)

The characteristic of Soul is knowledge, faith, conduct, austerities, energy, and realisation (of its developments). (11)

The characteristic of matter is sound, darkness,

¹ Dravya, guṇa, paryāya (paggava in Gaina Prākṛit). Guṇa, quality, is generally not admitted by the Gainas as a separate category, see Śīlāṅka's refutation of the Vaiśeṣika doctrines at the end of his comments on Sūtrakṛitāṅga I, 12 (Bombay edition, p. 482).

² They are frequently called astikāyas, or realities.

³ It is here called nabhas instead of ākāśa.

⁴ Avagāha.

⁵ Vartanā.

⁶ Upayōga.

lustre (of jewels, &c.), light, shade, sunshine ; colour, taste, smell, and touch. (12)

The characteristic of development is singleness, separateness¹, number, form, conjunction, and disjunction. (13)

1. gīva, Soul; 2. agīva, the inanimate things; 3. bandha, the binding of the soul by Karman; 4. punya, merit; 5. pāpa, demerit; 6. âsrava, that which causes the soul to be affected by sins; 7. saṃvara, the prevention of âsrava by watchfulness; 8. the annihilation of Karman; 9. final deliverance: these are the nine truths (or categories). (14)

He who verily believes the true teaching of the (above nine) fundamental truths, possesses righteousness. (15)

II. Faith is produced by 1. nisarga, nature; 2. upadêsa, instruction; 3. âgñâ, command; 4. sûtra, study of the sûtras; 5. bīga, suggestion; 6. abhiḡama, comprehension of the meaning of the sacred lore; 7. viśtâra, complete course of study; 8. kriyâ, religious exercise; 9. saṃkshêpa, brief exposition; 10. dharma, the Law. (16)

1. He who truly comprehends, by a spontaneous effort of his mind², (the nature of) soul, inanimate things, merit, and demerit, and who puts an end to sinful influences³, (believes by) nature. (17)

He who spontaneously believes the four truths (explicitly mentioned in the last verse), which the

¹ Singleness (êkatva) makes a thing appear as one thing, separateness (prithaktva) as different from others.

² Sahasamuiya = svayamsamudita. It is usually rendered sahasammati.

³ Âsravasaṃvara, see above, verse 14, 6 and 7.

Ginas have taught, (thinking) they are of this and not of a different nature, believes by nature. (18)

2. But he who believes these truths, having learned them from somebody else, either a *Kḥadmastha*¹ or a Gina, believes by instruction. (19)

3. He who has got rid of love, hate, delusion, and ignorance, and believes because he is told to do so, believes by command. (20)

4. He who obtains righteousness by (the study of) the Sūtras, either Aṅgas or other works², believes by the study of Sūtras. (21)

5. He who by correctly comprehending one truth arrives at the comprehension of more—just as a drop of oil expands on the surface of water—believes by suggestion. (22)

6. He who truly knows the sacred lore, viz. the eleven Aṅgas, the *Prakīrṇas*³, and the Dṛśhtivāda, believes by the comprehension of the sacred lore. (23)

7. He who understands the true nature of all substances by means of all proofs (pramāṇa) and *nayas*⁴, believes by a complete course of study. (24)

8. He who sincerely performs (all duties implied)

¹ A kḥadmastha is one who has not yet obtained Kēvala, or the highest knowledge; he is in the two gunasthānas (the fourteen stages in the development of the soul from the lowest to the highest) characterised as 1. upasāntamōha, and 2. kshīnamōha; viz. 1. that in which delusion is only temporarily separated from the soul, and 2. that in which delusion is finally destroyed.

² Bāhira; apparently the same works are intended which are elsewhere called anāṅgapravishṭa.

³ The original has the singular.

⁴ The seven nayas are 'points of view or principles with reference to which certain judgments are arrived at or arrangements made.' Bhandarkar, Report, p. 112.

by right knowledge, faith, and conduct, by asceticism and discipline, and by all Samitis and Guptis, believes by religious exercise. (25)

9. He who though not versed in the sacred doctrines¹ nor acquainted with other systems², holds no wrong doctrines, believes by brief exposition. (26)

10. He who believes in the truth³ of the realities⁴, the Sûtras, and conduct, as it has been explained by the Ginas, believes by the Law. (27)

Right belief depends on the acquaintance with truth⁵, on the devotion to those who know the truth, and on the avoiding of schismatical and heretical tenets. (28)

There is no (right) conduct without right belief⁶, and it must be cultivated (for obtaining) right faith; righteousness and conduct originate together, or righteousness precedes (conduct). (29)

Without (right) faith there is no (right) knowledge, without (right) knowledge there is no virtuous conduct⁷, without virtues there is no deliverance⁸, and without deliverance there is no perfection. (30)

(The excellence of faith depends on the following) eight points: 1. that one has no doubts (about the truth of the tenets); 2. that one has no preference (for heterodox tenets); 3. that one does not doubt

¹ Pravaṇana.

² E. g. that of Kapila, &c., Comm.

³ Dharma.

⁴ Astikâya; see note on verse 7.

⁵ I. e. true things as soul, &c.

⁶ Samyaktva 'righteousness.'

⁷ Karanaguna. The commentators make this a dvandva compound, and interpret karana as vratâdi, and guna as pindavisuddhi, &c.

⁸ By deliverance I have rendered môksha, and by final perfection nirvâna. Môksha denotes freedom from Karman, a condition which in Brâhmanical philosophy is called gîvanmukti.

its saving qualities¹; 4. that one is not shaken in the right belief (because heretical sects are more prosperous); 5. that one praises (the pious); 6. that one encourages (weak brethren); 7. that one supports or loves the confessors of the Law; 8. that one endeavours to exalt it. (31)

III. Conduct, which produces the destruction of all Karman, is 1. *sâmâyika*², the avoidance of everything sinful; 2. kêdôpasthâpana, the initiation of a novice; 3. parihâravisuddhika, purity produced by peculiar austerities³; 4. sûkshma samparâya, reduction of desire; 5. akashâya yathâkhyâta, annihilation of sinfulness according to the precepts of the Arhats, as well in the case of a Khadmastha as of a Gina. (32, 33)

IV. Austerities are twofold: external and internal; both external and internal austerities are sixfold. (34)

By knowledge one knows things, by faith one believes in them, by conduct one gets (freedom from Karman), and by austerities one reaches purity. (35)

Having by control and austerities destroyed their Karman, great sages, whose purpose is to get rid of all misery, proceed to (perfection).

Thus I say.

¹ Nivvitigikêkâ=nirvikikitsa. According to the commentary it may stand for nir-vid-gugupsâ 'without loathing the saints.'

² See Bhandarkar, Report, p. 98, note †.

³ The Dîpikâ contains the following details. Nine monks resolve to live together for eighteen months. They make one of their number their superior, kalpasthita, four become parihârikas, and the remaining four serve them (anuparihârikas). After six months the parihârikas become anuparihârikas and vice versa. After another six months the kalpasthita does penance and all the other monks serve him as anuparihârikas.

TWENTY-NINTH LECTURE.

THE EXERTION IN RIGHTEOUSNESS.

O long-lived (Gambûsvâmin)! I (Sudharman) have heard the following discourse from the venerable (Mahâvira).

Here, forsooth, the Venerable Ascetic Mahâvira, of the Kasyapa Gôtra, has delivered this lecture called the exertion in righteousness. Many creatures, who truly believe in the subject (taught in this lecture), put their faith in it, give credence to it, accept it, practise it, comply with it, study it, understand it, learn it, and act up to it according to the precept (of the Ginas)¹—have obtained perfection, enlightenment, deliverance, final beatitude, and have put an end to all misery.

This lecture treats of the following subjects :

1. samvêga, longing for liberation ;
2. nirvêda, disregard of worldly objects ;
3. dharmaśraddhâ, desire of the Law ;
4. gurusâdharmikasusrûshanâ, obedience to co-religionists and to the Guru.
5. âlôkanâ, confession of sins before the Guru ;
6. nindâ, repenting of one's sins to oneself ;
7. garhâ, repenting of one's sins before the Guru ;

¹ Here we have no less than ten verbs, many of which are synonyms, with probably no well-defined difference in their meaning. This heaping of synonymous words is a peculiarity of the archaic style. The commentators always labour hard to assign to each word an appropriate meaning, but by sometimes offering different sets of explanations they show that their ingenuity of interpretation was not backed by tradition.

8. sāmâyika, moral and intellectual purity of the soul ;
9. ṣaturvimsatistava, adoration of the twenty-four Ginas ;
10. vandana, paying reverence to the Guru ;
11. pratikramana, expiation of sins ;
12. kâyôtsarga, a particular position of the body ;
13. pratyâkhyâna, self-denial ;
14. stavastutimaṅgala, praises and hymns ;
15. kâlasya pratyupêkshanâ, keeping the right time ;
16. prâyasṣittakarana, practising penance ;
17. kshamâpana, begging forgiveness ;
18. svâdhyâya, study ;
19. vâkanâ, recital of the sacred texts ;
20. pariprikkhanâ, questioning (the teacher) ;
21. parâvartanâ, repetition ;
22. anuprêkshâ, pondering ;
23. dharmakathâ, religious discourse ;
24. srutasyârâdhanâ, acquisition of sacred knowledge ;
25. êkâgramanaṣsannivêsanâ, concentration of thoughts ;
26. samyama, control ;
27. tapas, austerities ;
28. vyavadâna, cutting off the Karman ;
29. sukhâsâta, renouncing pleasure ;
30. apratibaddhatâ, mental independence ;
31. viṣitrasayanâsanasêvanâ, using unfrequented lodgings and beds ;
32. vinivartanâ, turning from the world ;
33. sambhôgapratyâkhyâna, renouncing collection of alms in one district only ;

34. upadhipratyâkhyâna, renouncing articles of use ;
35. âhârapratyâkhyâna, renouncing food ;
36. kashâyapratyâkhyâna, conquering the passions ;
37. yôgapratyâkhyâna, renouncing activity ;
38. sarîrapratyâkhyâna, renouncing the body ;
39. sahâyapratyâkhyâna, renouncing company ;
40. bhaktapratyâkhyâna, renouncing all food ;
41. sadbhâvapratyâkhyâna, perfect renunciation ;
42. pratirûpatâ, conforming to the standard ;
43. vaiyâvṛitya, doing service ;
44. sarvagunasampûrnatâ, fulfilling all virtues ;
45. vitarâgatâ, freedom from passion ;
46. kshânti, patience ;
47. mukti, freedom from greed ;
48. ârgava, simplicity ;
49. mârdava, humility ;
50. bhâvasatya, sincerity of mind ;
51. karanasatya, sincerity of religious practice ;
52. yôgasatya, sincerity of acting ;
53. manôguptatâ, watchfulness of the mind ;
54. vâg-guptatâ, watchfulness of the speech ;
55. kâyaguptatâ, watchfulness of the body ;
56. manasamâdhâranâ, discipline of the mind ;
57. vâksamâdhâranâ, discipline of the speech ;
58. kâyasamâdhâranâ, discipline of the body ;
59. gñânasampannatâ, possession of knowledge ;
60. darsanasampannatâ, possession of faith ;
61. kâritrasampannatâ, possession of conduct ;

62. srôtrêndriyanigraha, subduing the ear ;
63. ākshurindriyanigraha, subduing the eye ;
64. ghrânêndriyanigraha, subduing the organ of smell ;
65. gihvêndriyanigraha, subduing the tongue ;
66. sparsanêndriyanigraha, subduing the organ of touch ;
67. krôdhavigaya, conquering anger ;
68. mānavigaya, conquering pride ;
69. mâyâvigaya, conquering deceit ;
70. lôbhavigaya, conquering greed ;
71. prêmadvêshamithyâdarsanavigaya, conquering love, hate, and wrong belief ;
72. sailêst, stability ;
73. akarmatâ, freedom from Karman.

1. Sir, what does the soul obtain by the longing for liberation ? By the longing for liberation the soul obtains an intense desire of the Law ; by an intense desire of the Law he quickly arrives at an (increased) longing for liberation ; he destroys anger, pride, deceit, and greed, which reproduce themselves infinitely ; he acquires no (bad) Karman, and ridding himself of wrong belief which is the consequence of the latter, he becomes possessed of right faith ; by the purity of faith some will reach perfection after one birth ; nobody, however, who has got this purity, will be born more than thrice before he reaches perfection. (1)

2. Sir, what does the soul obtain by disregard of worldly objects¹ ? By disregard of worldly objects the soul quickly feels disgust for pleasures enjoyed by gods, men, and animals ; he becomes indifferent to all objects ; thereby he ceases to engage in any undertakings, in consequence of which he leaves the road of Samsâra and enters the road to perfection. (2)

¹ Or aversion to the Circle of Births.

3. Sir¹, what does the soul obtain by the desire of the Law? By the desire of the Law the soul becomes indifferent to pleasures and happiness to which he was attached ; he abandons the life of householders, and as a houseless monk he puts an end to all pains of body and mind, which consist in (the suffering of) cutting, piercing, union (with unpleasant things), &c. ; and he obtains unchecked happiness. (3)

4. By obedience to co-religionists and to the Guru the soul obtains discipline (vinaya). By discipline and avoidance of misconduct (towards the teacher²) he avoids being reborn as a denizen of hell, an animal, a (low) man, or a (bad) god ; by zealous praise of, devotion to, and respect for (the Guru) he obtains birth as a (good) man or god, gains perfection and beatitude, does all praiseworthy actions prescribed by discipline, and prevails upon others to adopt discipline. (4)

5. By confession of sins (before the Guru) the soul gets rid of the thorns, as it were, of deceit, misapplied austerities³, and wrong belief, which obstruct the way to final liberation and cause an endless migration of the soul ; he obtains simplicity, whereby the soul which is free from deceit does not acquire that Karman which results in his having a carnal desire for a woman or eunuch⁴, and annihilates such Karman as he had acquired before. (5)

¹ In this way all paragraphs up to § 72 open with a question of always the same form. I drop the question in the sequel.

² Atyâsâtana.

³ Nidâna, cf. p. 60, n. 2.

⁴ This is the meaning of the words itthîvêya napumsaga-

6. By repenting of one's sins to oneself the soul obtains repentance, and becoming indifferent by repentance he prepares for himself an (ascending) scale of virtues ¹, by which he destroys the Karman resulting from delusion. (6)

7. By repenting of one's sins before the Guru the soul obtains humiliation; feeling humiliated, he will leave off all blameable occupations ², and apply himself to praiseworthy occupations, whereby a houseless monk will stop infinite disabling ³ developments. (7)

8. By moral and intellectual purity (literally, equilibrium) the soul ceases from sinful occupations. (8)

9. By the adoration of the twenty-four Ginas the soul arrives at purity of faith. (9)

10. By paying reverence (to the Guru) the soul destroys such Karman as leads to birth in low families, and acquires such Karman as leads to birth in noble families; he wins the affection of people, which results in his being looked upon as an authority, and he brings about general goodwill. (10)

11. By expiation of sins he obviates transgressions of the vows; thereby he stops the Âsravas, preserves a pure conduct, practises the eight articles ⁴, does not neglect (the practice of control), and pays great attention to it. (11)

vêyam = strîvêda, napumsakavêda, as explained by the commentators on XXXII, 102.

¹ Karanagunasrêdhîm pratipadyatê. It is difficult to render this phrase adequately; the meaning is that by successively destroying moral impurities one arrives at higher and higher virtues.

² Yôga, i.e. the cause of the production of Karman.

³ Ghâti, compare Bhandarkar, Report, p. 93, note *.

⁴ See Twenty-fourth Lecture, p. 129 ff.

12. By Kâyôtsarga he gets rid of past and present (transgressions which require) Prâyasçitta¹; thereby his mind is set at ease like a porter who is eased of his burden; and engaging in praiseworthy contemplation he enjoys happiness. (12)

13. By self-denial he shuts, as it were, the doors of the Âsravas; by self-denial he prevents desires rising in him; by prevention of desires he becomes, as it were, indifferent and cool towards all objects. (13)

14. By praises and hymns he obtains the wisdom consisting in knowledge, faith, and conduct; thereby he gains such improvement, that he will put an end to his worldly existence², (or) be born afterwards in one of the Kalpas and Vimânas³. (14)

15. By keeping the right time he destroys the Karman which obstructs right knowledge. (15)

16. By practising Prâyasçitta¹ he gets rid of sins, and commits no transgressions; he who correctly practises Prâyasçitta, gains the road and the reward of the road⁴, he wins the reward of good conduct. (16)

17. By begging forgiveness he obtains happiness of mind; thereby he acquires a kind disposition towards all kinds of living beings⁵; by this

¹ Expiatory rites, âlôkanâ, &c.

² Antakriyâ, explained by mukti.

³ The Kalpas and the Vimânas are the heavens of the Vaimânika gods, see below, p. 226.

⁴ By road is meant the means of acquiring right knowledge, and by the reward of the road, right knowledge. The reward of good conduct is mukti.

⁵ Savvapânabhûyagîvasattâ. The prânas possess from two to four organs of sense, the gîvas five, the bhûtas are plants, and the sattvas are all remaining beings.

kind disposition he obtains purity of character and freedom from fear. (17)

18. By study he destroys the Karman which obstructs right knowledge. (18)

19. By the recital of the sacred texts he obtains destruction of Karman, and contributes to preserve the sacred lore, whereby he acquires the Law of the Tīrtha¹, which again leads him to the complete destruction of Karman, and to the final annihilation of worldly existence. (19)

20. By questioning (the teacher) he arrives at a correct comprehension of the Sūtra and its meaning, and he puts an end to the Karman which produces doubts and delusion. (20)

21. By repetition he reproduces the sounds (i. e. syllables) and commits them to memory. (21)

22. By pondering (on what he has learned) he loosens the firm hold which the seven kinds of Karman, except the Âyushka² (have upon the soul); he shortens their duration when it was to be a long one; he mitigates their power when it was intense; (he reduces their sphere of action when it was a wide one)³; he may either acquire Âyushka-karman or not, but he no more accumulates Karman which produces unpleasant feelings, and he quickly crosses the very large forest of the fourfold Samsâra, which is without beginning and end. (22)

¹ According to the commentaries, by Tīrtha are meant the Ġaṇadharas.

² Concerning the eight kinds of Karman, see XXXIII, 2 and 3, p. 192. Âyushka is that Karman which determines the length of time which one is to live. A somewhat different explanation of this Karman is given by Bhandarkar, loc. cit., p. 97, note.

³ The passage in question is an addition in some MSS., as the commentators tell us. The meaning seems to be that the Karman which was attached to many parts of the soul is restricted to fewer places by the influence of the purity superinduced on the soul by pondering.

23. By religious discourses he obtains destruction of the Karman; by religious discourses he exalts the creed, and by exalting the creed he acquires Karman, which secures, for the future, permanent bliss. (23)

24. By acquisition of sacred knowledge he destroys ignorance, and will not be corrupted by worldliness. (24)

25. By concentration of his thoughts he obtains stability of the mind. (25)

26. By control he obtains freedom from sins. (26)

27. By austerities he cuts off the *Karman*¹. (27)

28. By cutting off the Karman he obtains (the fourth stage of pure meditation characterised by) freedom from actions, by doing no actions he will obtain perfection, enlightenment, deliverance, and final beatitude, and will put an end to all misery. (28)

29. By renouncing pleasures he obtains freedom from false longing, whereby he becomes compassionate, humble, free from sorrow, and destroys the Karman produced by delusion regarding conduct. (29)

30. By mental independence he gets rid of attachment, whereby he will concentrate his thoughts (on the Law), and will for ever be without attachment and fondness (for worldly things). (30)

31. By using unfrequented lodgings and beds he obtains the Gupti of conduct, whereby he will use

¹ Vyavadâna is the cutting off of the Karman and the subsequent purity of the soul.

allowed food, be steady in his conduct, be exclusively delighted with (control), obtain a yearning for deliverance, and cut off the tie of the eightfold Karman. (31)

32. By turning from the world he will strive to do no bad actions, and will eliminate his already acquired Karman by its destruction; then he will cross the forest of the fourfold Samsāra. (32)

33. By renouncing collection of alms in one district only¹ he overcomes obstacles²; unchecked by them he exerts himself to attain liberation; he is content with the alms he gets, and does not hope for, care for, wish, desire, or covet those of a fellow-monk; not envying other monks he takes up a separate, agreeable lodging³. (33)

34. By renouncing articles of use⁴ he obtains successful study; without articles of use he becomes exempt from desires, and does not suffer misery. (34)

35. By renouncing (forbidden) food he ceases to act for the sustenance of his life; ceasing to act for the sustenance of his life he does not suffer misery when without food. (35)

36. By conquering his passions he becomes free from passions; thereby he becomes indifferent to happiness and pains. (36)

37. By renouncing activity he obtains inactivity, by ceasing to act he acquires no new Karman, and destroys the Karman he had acquired before. (37)

38. By renouncing his body he acquires the pre-eminent virtues of the Siddhas, by the possession

¹ Sambhōga = ĕkamandalyām āhāraḥ.

² Ālambanā, glānatādi.

³ Dukkaṃ suhaseggaṃ uvasampaggittānaṃ viharai.

⁴ Except such as are obligatory, e.g. his broom, the mukha-vastrikā, &c.

of which he goes to the highest region of the universe, and becomes absolutely happy. (38)

39. By renouncing company he obtains singleness; being single and concentrating his mind, he avoids disputes, quarrels, passions, and censoriousness, and he acquires a high degree of control, of Samvara, and of carefulness¹. (39)

40. By renouncing all food he prevents his being born again many hundreds of times. (40)

41. By perfect renunciation² he enters the final (fourth stage of pure meditation), whence there is no return; a monk who is in that state, destroys the four remnants of Karman which even a Kêvalin possesses, viz. vêdantya, âyushka, nâman, and *gôtra*³; and then he will put an end to all misery. (41)

42. By conforming to the standard of monks⁴ he obtains ease, thereby he will be careful, wear openly the excellent badges of the order, be of perfect righteousness, possess firmness and the Samitis, inspire all beings with confidence, mind but few things⁵, subdue his senses, and practise, in a high degree, the Samitis and austerities. (42)

43. By doing service he acquires the Karman

¹ Samâhiê = samâhita or samâdhimân.

² Sadbhâva pratyâkhyâna. The Dîpikâ gives the following explanation: he makes the renunciation in such a way that he need not make it a second time.

³ Vêdanîya is that Karman which produces effects that must be experienced, as pleasure or pain; âyushka is the Karman that determines the length of life; nâman and gôtra cause him to be born as such or such an individual in this or that family; see Thirty-third Lecture, verses 2 and 3, p. 192 f.

⁴ Explained: sthavirakalpasâdhuvêshadhâritvam.

⁵ Appaḍilêha = alpapratiyupêksha; he has to inspect few things, because he uses only few.

which brings about for him the nâman and gôtra of a Tîrthakara. (43)

44. By fulfilling all virtues he secures that he will not be born again; thereby he will become exempt from pains of the body and mind. (44)

45. By freedom from passion he cuts off the ties of attachment and desire; thereby he becomes indifferent to all agreeable and disagreeable sounds, touches, colours, and smells. (45)

46. By patience he overcomes troubles. (46)

47. By freedom from greed he obtains voluntary poverty, whereby he will become inaccessible to desire for property. (47)

48. By simplicity he will become upright in actions, thoughts, and speech, and he will become veracious; thereby he will truly practise the Law. (48)

49. By humility he will acquire freedom from self-conceit; thereby he will become of a kind and meek disposition, and avoid the eight kinds of pride. (49)

50. By sincerity of mind he obtains purity of mind, which will cause him to exert himself for the fulfilment of the Law which the Ginas have proclaimed; and he will practise the Law in the next world too. (50)

51. By sincerity in religious practice he obtains proficiency in it; being proficient in it he will act up to his words. (51)

52. By sincerity of acting he will become pure in his actions. (52)

53. By watchfulness¹ of the mind he concentrates his thoughts; thereby he truly practises control. (53)

¹ Gupti.

54. By watchfulness of speech he keeps free from prevarication; thereby he enables his mind to act properly. (54)

55. By watchfulness of the body he obtains *Samvara*¹; thereby he prevents sinful Âsravas. (55)

56. By discipline of the mind he obtains concentration of his thoughts; thereby he obtains development of knowledge, which produces righteousness and annihilates wrong belief. (56)

57. By discipline of the speech he obtains development of faith, whereby he acquires facility of becoming enlightened, and destroys preventing causes. (57)

58. By discipline of the body he obtains development of conduct, which causes him to conduct himself according to the regulation; thereby he destroys the four remnants of Karman which even a Kêvalin possesses²; after that he obtains perfection, enlightenment, deliverance, and final beatitude, and he puts an end to all misery. (58)

59. By possession of knowledge he acquires an understanding of words and their meaning; thereby he will not perish in the forest of the fourfold Samsâra; as a needle with its thread will not be lost, thus the soul possessing the sacred lore³ will not be lost in the Samsâra; he performs all prescribed actions relating to knowledge, discipline, austerities, and conduct, and well versed in his own and in heterodox creeds he will become invincible. (59)

¹ For Samvara and Âsrava, see above, p. 55, note 1, and p. 73, note 2.

² See above, § 41.

³ Here is a pun on the word sutta=sûtra, which means thread and Sûtra, sacred lore, or knowledge acquired by the study of the Sûtras.

60. By possession of faith he annihilates wrong belief which is the cause of worldly existence, and he will not lose his inner light; but he endues his Self with the highest knowledge and faith, and purifies it¹. (60)

61. By possession of conduct he obtains a stability like that of the king of mountains² (viz. Mêru), whereby a houseless monk destroys the four remnants of Karman which even a Kêvalin possesses; after that he obtains perfection, enlightenment, deliverance, and final beatitude, and puts an end to all misery. (61)

62. By subduing the organ of hearing he overcomes his delight with or aversion to all pleasant or unpleasant sounds, he acquires no Karman produced thereby, and destroys the Karman he had acquired before. (62)

63-66. (All this applies also to his) subduing the organs of sight, of smelling, of tasting, and of touch (with regard to) pleasant colours, smells, tastes, and touches. (63-66)

67. By conquering anger he obtains patience; he acquires no Karman productive of anger³, and destroys the Karman he had acquired before. (67)

68. By conquering pride he obtains simplicity, &c. (as in 67, substituting pride for anger). (68)

69. By conquering deceit he obtains humility, &c. (as in 67, substituting deceit for anger). (69)

¹ I.e. makes it contain nothing foreign to its own nature.

² Sêlêsi = sailêsi; sailêsa is Mêru, and its avasthâ, or condition, is sailêsi.

³ Or, perhaps, which results in experiencing anger.

70. By conquering greed he obtains content, &c. (as in 67, substituting greed for anger). (70)

71. By conquering love, hate, and wrong belief he exerts himself for right knowledge, faith, and conduct, then he will cut off the fetters of the eightfold Karman ; he will first destroy the twenty-eight kinds¹ of Karman, which are productive of delusion; (then) the five kinds of obstruction to right knowledge², the nine kinds of obstruction to right faith³, and the five kinds of obstacles (called Antarâya): the last three remnants of Karman he destroys simultaneously; afterwards he obtains absolute knowledge and faith, which is supreme, full, complete, unchecked, clear, faultless, and giving light (or penetrating) the whole universe; and while he still acts⁴, he acquires but such Karman as is inseparable from religious acts⁵; the pleasant feelings (produced by it) last but two moments: in the first moment it is acquired, in the second it is experienced, and in the third it is destroyed; this Karman is produced, comes into contact (with the soul), takes rise, is experienced, and is destroyed; for all time to come he is exempt from Karman. (71)

72. Then⁶ when his life is spent up to less than

¹ There are sixteen kashâyas, nine nô-kashâyas, and three môhanfiyas.

² These are the obstacles to the five kinds of knowledge: mati, sruta, avadhi, manahparyâya, kêvala.

³ They are: the obstacles to âakshurdarsana, to âakshurdarsana, to avadhidarsana, and to kêvaladarsana, and five kinds of sleep (nidrâ). Concerning Antarâya, see p. 193.

⁴ Sayôgin, i.e. while he has not yet reached the fourteenth gunasthâna, the state of a Kêvalin.

⁵ Airyapathika.

⁶ I.e. when he has become a Kêvalin, as described in the preceding paragraph.

half a muhūrta, he discontinues to act, and enters upon the (third degree of) pure meditation¹, from which there is no relapse (to lower degrees), and which requires most subtile functions only (of his organs); he first stops the functions of his mind, then the functions of speech, then those of the body, at last he ceases to breathe. During the time required for pronouncing five short syllables, he is engaged in the final pure meditation, in which all functions (of his organs) have ceased, and he simultaneously annihilates the four remnants of Karman, viz. vêdaniya, âyushka, nâman, and gôtra². (72)

73. Then having, by all methods, got rid of his audârîka, kârmaṇa (and taigasa) bodies, the soul takes the form of a straight line, goes in one moment, without touching anything and taking up no space, (upwards to the highest Âkâsa), and there develops into its natural form, obtains perfection, enlightenment, deliverance, and final beatitude, and puts an end to all misery. (73)

This indeed is the subject of the lecture called exertion in righteousness, which the Venerable Ascetic Mahāvîra has told, declared, explained, demonstrated. (74)

Thus I say.

¹ Sukladhyâna.

² See note on § 41.

THIRTIETH LECTURE.

THE ROAD OF PENANCE.

Now hear with concentrated mind, how a monk destroys by austerities the bad Karman which he had acquired by love and hatred. (1)

By abstaining 1. from destroying life; 2. from lying; 3. from taking anything which is not given; 4. from all sexual indulgence; 5. from having any property; and 6. from eating at night, the soul becomes free from Âsravas¹. (2)

By possessing the five Samitis and the three Guptis, by freedom from passions, by subduing the senses, by vanquishing conceit², and by avoiding delusions, the soul becomes free from Âsravas. (3)

Hear attentively how a monk destroys (the Karman) acquired by love and hatred in the absence of the above-mentioned (virtues). (4)

As a large tank, when its supply of water has been stopped, gradually dries up by the consumption of the water and by evaporation, so the Karman of a monk, which he acquired in millions³ of births, is annihilated by austerities, if there is no influx of bad Karman. (5, 6)

Austerities are of two kinds: external and internal;

¹ Karmôpâdânahêtavas, that through which the soul becomes affected by Karman.

² Agârava = agaurava; but it is here explained, free from garva, cf. p. 98, note 2.

³ Literally krores, i.e. ten millions.

external austerities are of six kinds, and internal are of six kinds¹. (7)

External austerities are :

1. anasana, fasting; 2. avamôdarikâ, abstinence²; 3. bhikshâkaryâ, collecting alms; 4. rasa-parityâga, abstention from dainty food; 5. kâya-klêsa, mortification of the flesh; 6. samlinatâ, taking care of one's limbs³. (8)

1. Fasting is of two kinds: a. itvara, temporary, and b. maranâkâla, fasting which precedes, and ends with death. Temporary fasting is either such in which a desire (for food) is present, or such in which no such desire exists. (9)

a. The temporary fasting is briefly of six kinds: 1. in the form of a line⁴; 2. in the form of a square; 3. in the form of a cube; 4. of a sixth power; 5. of a twelfth power; 6. of any arrangement. Temporary fasting (can be practised) for different objects which one has in mind. (10, 11)

¹ Comp. Aupapâtika Sûtra, ed. Leumann, p. 38 ff. The general division is the same, but the subdivision differs in many details.

² Gradual reduction of food, from a full meal of thirty-two morsels to one of one morsel.

³ Âṅgôpâṅgâdikam samvṛitya pravartanam, T'ikâ.

⁴ The meaning of this singular statement is as follows. If four fasts of two, three, four, and five days are performed in this order, they form a line. If this set of fasts is four times repeated, each time beginning with a different number, we get sixteen fasts; they form a square, viz. :

1 . 2 . 3 . 4

2 . 3 . 4 . 1

3 . 4 . 1 . 2

4 . 1 . 2 . 3

The next class contains 64 fasts, the fourth 4,096, the fifth 16,777,216 fasts. Fasts of the last class require 700,000 years at least, and must be assumed to be restricted to former Tîrthakaras, whose lives lasted enormous periods of time.

b. Fasting which is to precede death, is of two kinds with regard to the motions of the body : with change (of position) and without change. (12)

And again it is twofold : admitting of relief¹, or not ; one may either leave the place (which one has chosen to die in), or not leave it ; in both cases one may not take any food. (13)

2. Abstinence is briefly of five kinds : with regard to a. substance ; b. place ; c. time ; d. state of mind ; e. development. (14)

a. He who takes less food than he usually does², in the extreme case but one mouthful, performs abstinence with regard to substance. (15)

b. (Place means) a village, a scotfree town³, a capital, a camp of merchants⁴, a mine, a settlement of a wild tribe⁵, a place with an earth wall⁶, a poor town⁷, a town with a harbour⁸, a large town⁹, an isolated town¹⁰, and an open town¹¹. (16)

¹ Saparikarma = vaiyâvṛtyasahita. This leads to iṅginī-marana and bhaktapratyakhyāna; the aparikarma to pādapôpagamana (i.e. prâypôpagamana); comp. part i, p. 72.

² Thirty-two mouthfuls is the usual quantity of food of men, twenty-eight that of women. A mouthful is of the size of an egg.

³ Nagara, where no taxes (na kara) are levied, while villages pay eighteen taxes.

⁴ Nigama, or a place where many merchants dwell.

⁵ Pallī.

⁶ Khêṣa.

⁷ Karvaṣa. According to the dictionary, it means 'market-town;' but the commentators render it by kunagara, or say that it is karvaṣaganâvâsa, the dwelling-place of the Karvaṣa people.

⁸ Drôṇamukha, a town to which there is access by water and land, like Bhrīgukakṣha or Tāmralipti.

⁹ Paṭṭana.

¹⁰ Maṭamba, a town which is more than three and a half yôganas distant from the next village.

¹¹ Sambâdha, prabhûtaḥâturvarṇyanivâsa.

In a hermitage, a vihâra¹, a halting-place for procession², a resting-place for travellers³, a station of herdsmen, a camp on high ground, a caravan's camp, a fortified place of refuge. (17)

In gardens, on roads, in houses—all this is meant by place. In these and similar places he may (wander about). In this way he performs abstinence with regard to place. (18)

1. pêlâ, 2. ardhapêlâ, 3. gômûtrikâ, 4. pataṅga-vîthikâ, 5. sambûkâvartta, 6. âyatam-gatvâ-pratyâgata⁴. (19)

c. Abstinence with reference to time (is observed by him) who goes about in that time of the four Paurushîs of the day (which he selects for that purpose). (20)

Or if he collects alms in a part of the third Paurushî, or in its last quarter, then he observes abstinence with reference to time. (21)

d. Abstinence with reference to state of mind (is observed by him) who accepts alms from a woman or man, from an adorned or unadorned person, from one of any age or dress, of any temper or colour: if that person does not change his disposition or condition⁵. (22, 23)

¹ A dwelling-place of Bhikshus, or a dêvagrîha.

² Sannivêsa.

³ Samâga.

⁴ These are terms for different kinds of collecting alms; it is called pêlâ (box), when one begs successively at four houses forming the corners of an imaginary square; gômûtrikâ, when he takes the houses in a zigzag line; pataṅgavîthikâ (cricket's walk), when he goes to houses at a great distance from one another; sambûkâvartta (the windings of a conch), when he goes in a spiral line, either toward the centre (abhyantara) or from the centre outward (bahis); âyatam-gatvâ-pratyâgata, when he first goes straight on and then returns.

⁵ I give the traditional explanation of the verses, as handed

e. A monk who observes abstinence according to the particulars which have been enumerated with regard to substance, place, time, and state of mind, observes abstinence with regard to development¹ too. (24)

3. With regard to collecting alms there are the eight principal ways² how to collect them; the seven êshanâs (or modes of begging) and other self-imposed restrictions. (25)

4. Abstention from dainty food means abstention from such highly nourishing³ food and drink as milk, curds, ghee, &c. (26)

5. Mortification of the flesh consists in the different postures as Virâsana, &c., which benefit the soul, and which are difficult to perform. (27)

6. Using unfrequented lodgings and beds consists in living and sleeping in separate and down in the commentaries. If we might set it aside, I should translate: abstinence with reference to disposition is observed by him who in collecting alms preserves the same disposition, whether he has to do with a woman or man, &c.

¹ For development (paggava = paryâya) denotes any form or phase of existence which anything can assume. Therefore all particulars of place, e.g. are developments of Place. As all restrictions of place, &c., indirectly diminish the food obtainable by a monk, they also come under the head Abstinence.

² According to the commentator, these are the six kinds enumerated in verse 19. Sambûkâvartta is of two kinds, as explained in the note; the eighth kind is rigvî, or the common way of begging. These eight ways have reference to the houses in which they collect alms. The seven êshanâs refer to the quality or quantity of the food; their names are given in the Tikâ, partly in Prâkrî, partly in Sanskrit: 1. samsaithâ; 2. asamsaithâ; 3. uddhadâ; 4. alpalêpikâ; 5. udgrîhîâ; 6. pragrîhîâ; 7. uggîhî-tadharmâ. According to another passage: 1. is samsprîshâ, 3. uddhrîta, 5. avagrîhîta.

³ Pranîta, explained pushîkara.

unfrequented places where there are neither women nor cattle. (28)

Thus external austerities have been briefly explained ; I shall now explain internal austerities in due order. (29)

Internal austerities are :

1. prâyasâkitta, expiation of sins ;
2. vinaya, politeness ;
3. vaiyâvrîtya, serving the Guru ;
4. svâdhyâya, study ;
5. dhyâna, meditation ;
6. *vyutsarga*¹, abandoning of the body. (30)

1. Expiation of sins is tenfold, what must be confessed², &c. ; this is to be strictly observed by a monk ; this is called expiation of sins. (31)

2. Politeness consists in rising (from one's seat), folding of the hands, offering of a seat, loving the Guru, and cordial obedience. (32)

3. There are ten³ kinds of service, as serving the Âkârya, &c.⁴ ; doing service consists in giving one's assistance as well as one is able. (33)

4. Study is fivefold : 1. saying or learning one's lesson ; 2. (questioning the teacher about it) ; 3. repetition ; 4. pondering ; 5. religious discourse. (34)

¹ Viôsagga, viussaga, viusagga. It is usually rendered vyutsarga, but the Sanskrit prototype is vyavasarga, as Leumann has pointed out, l.c., p. 152.

² Compare Aupapâtika Sûtra, ed. Leumann, p. 40.

³ Ibidem, p. 42.

⁴ They are enumerated in the following Gâthâ : âyariya-uvaggâhê thêra-tavassî-gilâna-sêhâna | sâhammiya-kula-gana-saṅgha-saṃgayam tam iha kâyavvam. The ten persons or body of persons entitled to 'service' are : 1. âkârya ; 2. upâdhyâya ; 3. sthavira ; 4. tapasvin ; 5. glâna ; 6. saiksha ; 7. sâdharmika ; 8. kula ; 9. gana ; 10. saṅgha.

5. Abstaining to meditate on painful and sinful things¹, one should, with a collected mind, engage in pure meditations on the Law; this the wise call meditation. (35)

6. If a monk remains motionless when lying down, sitting, or standing upright, this is called abandoning of the body, which is the sixth kind (of internal austerities). (36)

If a sage truly performs these two kinds of austerities, he will soon be thoroughly released from the Circle of Births. (37)

Thus I say.

THIRTY-FIRST LECTURE.

MODE OF LIFE².

I shall declare the mode of life that benefits the soul; by practising it many souls have crossed the ocean of Samsâra. (1)

One should desist from one thing, and practise another: desist from neglect of self-control, and practise self-control. (2)

Love and hatred are two evils which produce bad

¹ This is the ârtaraudradhyâna.

² This lecture offers many difficulties to the translator, as it contains scarcely more than a dry list of articles of the Gâina faith. To fully understand or interpret it would require an accurate knowledge of the complete religious system of the Gâinas, to which we can lay no claim at present. The order in which the articles are given follows the number of their subdivisions. In some cases the number is not given in the Sûtra, but is supplied by the commentary.

Karman ; if a monk always avoids them, he will not stand within the circle (of transmigration). (3)

A monk who always avoids the thrice threefold hurtful, conceited, and delusive acts¹, will not stand in the circle (of transmigration). (4)

A monk who well bears calamities produced by gods, animals, or men, will not stand, &c. (5)

A monk who always avoids the (four) different kinds of praises², passions, expressions (of the emotions)³, and (of the four) meditations the two sinful ones, will not stand, &c. (6)

A monk who always exerts himself⁴ with regard to the (five) vows, the (five) objects of sense, the (five) Samitis, and (five) actions⁵, will not stand, &c. (7)

A monk who always exerts himself with regard to the six lēsyās⁶, the six kinds of bodies, and the six (regular functions as) eating⁷, will not stand, &c. (8)

A monk who always exerts himself with regard to the (seven) rules of accepting alms⁸, and the seven causes of danger (to other men) will not stand, &c. (9)

¹ Compare XIX, 91, and XXX, 3. Hurtful acts (danda) are threefold, as referring to thoughts, words, and acts ; conceited acts (gāraṇa), as pride of riches, of taste (rasa), and of pleasure or fashion (sātā) ; delusive acts (śalya), as mâyā, nidāna, and mithyādarsana.

² Vikatthā.

³ Samgñā.

⁴ Yatatē 'exerts himself ;' supply 'to avoid, to know, or to do,' as the case may require.

⁵ Kriyā ; they are : 1. kāyikī ; 2. adhikaraṇikī ; 3. prādvēṣhikī ; 4. paritāpanikī, and 5. prāṇātipātikī.

⁶ On the lēsyās see Thirty-fourth Lecture, p. 196 ff.

⁷ From the commentaries I learn two more of these six kāraṇas : vēdana and vaiyāvṛitya. I cannot say which are the remaining three.

⁸ They are enumerated in note 2 on XXX, 25, p. 178.

A monk who always exerts himself with regard to the (eight) objects of pride¹, to that which protects his chastity², and to the tenfold Law of the monks³. (10)

A monk who always exerts himself with regard to the (eleven) duties of the upâsakas, and the (twelve) duties of the bhikshus⁴, will not stand, &c. (11)

A monk who always exerts himself with regard to the (thirteen) actions (productive of Karman), to the various (fourteen) kinds of living beings, and the (fifteen) places of punishment of the wicked⁵, will not stand, &c. (12)

A monk who always exerts himself with regard to the sixteen Gâthâs⁶, and to the (seventeen kinds of) neglect of self-control, will not stand, &c. (13)

A monk who always exerts himself with regard to the (eighteen kinds of) continence, to the (nineteen) *gñâtâdhyayanas*⁷, and the (twenty) cases for not concentrating one's thoughts, will not, &c. (14)

¹ Viz. caste, family, beauty, &c. ; see Sûtrakṛit. II, 2, 17.

² Brahmagupti. This is of nine kinds.

³ Bhikshudharma. It consists of Nos. 46-49, 26, 27, of Lecture XXIX, truth, purity, poverty, and chastity.

⁴ The details given in the commentary (Dêvendra) partly differ from the description of the twelve duties of Srâvakas, and the ten duties of Bhikshus given by Bhandarkar from the Kârttikâyânu-prêkshâ, see his Report, p. 114 ff.

⁵ Paramâdhârmika. My translation is based on the enumeration of fifteen words, among which the names of some well-known hells occur.

⁶ The sixteen lectures of the first part of the Sûtrakṛitânga, the last of which is called Gâthâ, are meant by the sixteen Gâthâs. The whole book contains twenty-three lectures as stated in verse 16.

⁷ The first śrutaskandha of the Gñâtâdharmakathâ, which contains nineteen adhyayanas, is intended by gñâtâdhyayana.

A monk who always exerts himself with regard to the twenty-one forbidden ¹ actions, and the twenty-two troubles ², will not stand, &c. (15)

A monk who always exerts himself with regard to the twenty-three (lectures of the) Sûtrakṛitāṅga, and to the gods whose number exceeds by an unit ³ (the number of the lectures of the Sûtrakṛitāṅga), will not stand, &c. (16)

A monk who always exerts himself with regard to the twenty-five clauses ⁴, and (to the recitation of the twenty-six) chapters of the Daśās, &c. ⁵, will not stand, &c. (17)

A monk who always exerts himself with regard to the (twenty-seven) virtues of the laity, and the (twenty-eight lectures of the) Prakalpa ⁶, will not stand, &c. (18)

A monk who always exerts himself with regard to the (twenty-nine) causes of wrong knowledge, and the (thirty) causes of delusion, will not stand, &c. (19)

A monk who always exerts himself with regard to the (thirty-one) qualities of Siddhas, &c., the (thirty-

¹ Sabala, because they 'variegate' the conduct. The actions meant are sitting on an unwiped seat, &c.

² Paṛisaha, see above, p. 9 ff.

³ Rûpa. The twenty-four gods are: ten Bhavanapatis, eight Vyantaras, five Gyôṭishkas, one Vaimânika; or the 24 prophets.

⁴ Bhâvanâ, the subdivisions of the five great vows, see part i, p. 189 ff.

⁵ The Daśâsrutaskandha, Bṛhat Kalpa, and Vyavahâra Sûtras are meant, which together contain twenty-six uddêśas.

⁶ I.e. the Âtârâṅga Sûtra; it now contains but twenty-four lectures, but is said to have originally contained four more, see part i, introduction, p. xlix f. These four lectures were: Mahâparinnâ, Ugghâya, Anugghâya, Ârôḍhanâ.

two) Yôgas¹, and thirty-three Âsâtanâs², will not stand, &c. (20)

A clever monk who always exerts himself with regard to the above-mentioned points, will soon be thoroughly released from the Circle of Births (21)

Thus I say.

THIRTY-SECOND LECTURE.

THE CAUSES OF CARELESSNESS.

With attentive mind hear me explain for your benefit the deliverance from the beginningless time, together with its causes³, and from all misery : a truly wholesome subject. (1)

By the teaching of true⁴ knowledge, by the avoidance of ignorance and delusion, and by the destruction of love and hatred, one arrives at final deliverance which is nothing but bliss. (2)

This is the road to it : to serve the Gurus and the old (teachers), to avoid throughout foolish people, to ¹ The pure operations of mind, speech, and body.

² As far as I can make out from the enumeration in the commentary, they are articles regulating the intercourse between monks, especially pupils and teacher.

³ By beginningless time the Samsâra is meant ; its causes are the kashâyas or cardinal passions, and avirati.

⁴ Sakkaṣsa=satyasya. This is a various reading ; the received text has savvassa. The commentators give the following explanation : by the property of knowledge to make everything known—this indicates that knowledge is the cause of mōksha.

apply oneself earnestly to study, and to ponder zealously on the meaning of the Sûtras. (3)

A Sramana engaged in austerities, who longs for righteousness¹, should eat the proper quantity of allowed food, should select a companion of right understanding, and should live in a place suited to seclusion. (4)

If he does not meet with a clever companion who surpasses or equals him in virtue, he should live by himself, abstaining from sins and not devoted to pleasures. (5)

As the crane² is produced from an egg, and the egg is produced from a crane, so they call desire³ the origin of delusion, and delusion the origin of desire. (6)

Love and hatred are caused by Karman, and they say that Karman has its origin in delusion; Karman is the root of birth and death, and birth and death they call misery. (7)

Misery ceases on the absence of delusion, delusion ceases on the absence of desire, desire ceases on the absence of greed, greed ceases on the absence of property. (8)

I shall explain in due order the means which must be adopted by him who wants to thoroughly uproot love, hatred, and delusion. (9)

Pleasant food⁴ should not be enjoyed with preference, for it generally makes men over-strong⁵; and desires rush upon the strong, like birds upon a tree with sweet fruits. (10)

¹ Samâdhi; the Dîpikâ explains it by gñânadarsana-kâri-tralâbha.

² Balâka.

³ Trishnâ.

⁴ Rasâ.

⁵ Driptikara.

As in a forest, full of fuel, a fire fanned by the wind cannot be extinguished, so the fire (as it were) of the senses of him who eats as he lists; it does not benefit any chaste man. (11)

The mind of those who always live in unfrequented lodgings, who eat low food, and who subdue their senses, will not be attacked by the foe, Love, who is vanquished as disease is by medicine. (12)

As it is not safe for mice to live near the dwelling of a cat, so a chaste (monk) cannot stay in a house inhabited by women. (13)

A Sramana, engaged in penance, should not allow himself to watch the shape, beauty, coquetry, laughter, prattle, gestures, and glances of women, nor retain a recollection of them in his mind. (14)

Not to look at, nor to long for, not to think of, nor to praise, womankind: this is becoming the meditation of the noble ones, and it is always wholesome to those who delight in chastity. (15)

Though those who possess the three Guptis, cannot be disturbed even by well-adorned goddesses, still it is recommended to monks to live by themselves, as this is wholesome in every way. (16)

To a man who longs for liberation, who is afraid of the Samsâra, and lives according to the Law, nothing in the world offers so many difficulties¹ as women who delight the mind of the ignorant. (17)

To those who have overcome the attachment (to women), all others will offer no difficulties²; even as to those who have crossed the great ocean, no river, though big like the Ganges, (will offer any difficulty). (18)

¹ Duttara.

² Suuttara.

From desire of pleasure arises the misery of the whole world, the gods included ; whatever misery of body and mind there is, the dispassionate will put an end to it. (19)

As the fruit of the Kimpâka¹ is beautiful in taste and colour, when eaten ; but destroys the life when digested, (being) poison ; similar in their effect are pleasures. (20)

A Sramana, engaged in austerities, who longs for righteousness², should not fix his thoughts on the pleasant objects of the senses, nor turn his mind from them, if they be unpleasant. (21)

‘Colour’ attracts the eye ; it is the pleasant cause of Love, but the unpleasant cause of Hatred³ ; he who is indifferent to them (viz. colours), is called dispassionate. (22)

The eye perceives ‘colour,’ and ‘colour’ attracts the eye ; the cause of Love is pleasant, and the cause of Hatred is unpleasant. (23)

He who is passionately fond of ‘colours,’ will come to untimely ruin ; just as an impassioned moth which is attracted by the light rushes into death. (24)

He who passionately hates (a colour), will at the same moment suffer pain. It is the fault of an undisciplined man that he is annoyed (by a colour) ; it is not the ‘colour’ itself that annoys him. (25)

¹ Trichosanthes Palmata, or Cucumis Colocynthus.

² Compare verse 4.

³ Love and Hatred must of course be understood in their widest meaning. The same remark applies to the term ‘colour,’ which according to Hindu terminology denotes everything that is perceived by the eye. The first three sentences are, in the original, dependent on verbs as vadanti, âhus. I have, here and elsewhere, dropped them in the translation.

He who is very fond of a lovely 'colour,' hates all others; hence a fool will suffer misery, but a dispassionate sage is not affected by it. (26)

He who has a passion for 'colours¹,' will kill many movable and immovable beings; a passionate fool, intent on his personal interest, pains and torments those beings in many ways. (27)

How can a man who passionately desires 'colours²,' be happy while he gets, keeps, uses, loses, and misses (those things). Even when he enjoys them, he is never satisfied. (28)

When he is not satisfied with those 'colours,' and his craving for them grows stronger and stronger, he will become discontented, and unhappy by dint of his discontent; misled by greed he will take another's property. (29)

When he is overcome by violent desire, takes another's property, and is not satisfied with those 'colours' and their possession, then his deceit and falsehood increase on account of his greed; yet he will not get rid of his misery. (30)

After and before he has lied³, and when he is on the point of lying, he feels infinitely unhappy. Thus when he takes another's property, and is (after all) not satisfied by the 'colours' (he has obtained), he becomes unhappy, and nobody will protect him¹. (31)

¹ Rûvânugâsânuga = rûpa-anuga-âsâ-anuga. This division of the compound looks artificial; I should prefer to divide rûva-anugâsa-anuga = rûpa-anukarsha-anuga; literally, possessed of attraction by colours.

² Rûvanuvâêna pariggahêna. Parigraha is explained as the desire to possess them.

³ Instead of 'lying,' we can also adopt the rendering 'stealing,' as the word in the original mûsa may stand either for mri'shâ, or for mûsha.

How, then, can a man who is devoted to 'colours,' ever derive any happiness from anything? He suffers pain at the time of their enjoyment to procure which he had suffered misery. (32)

In the same way he who hates 'colours,' incurs a long succession of pains; when his mind is filled with hatred, he accumulates Karman which in the end again produces misery. (33)

But a man who is indifferent to 'colours,' is free from sorrows; though still in the Samsâra, he is not affected by that long succession of pains, just as the leaf of the Lotus (is not moistened) by water. (34)

[The whole set of verses 22-34 is, with few alterations, five times repeated in the original in order to apply to the other organs of sense.

Verses 35-47 treat of sounds; 'sound' is to be substituted for 'colour,' 'ear' for 'eye.'

The last line of verse 37, which corresponds to verse 24, runs thus:

As an impassioned deer allured (by a song) rushes into death, without being satisfied with the sound.

In the same way verses 48-60 apply to 'smells'; substitute 'smell' and 'organ of smell.'

Verses 61-73 apply to tastes; substitute 'tastes' and 'tongue.'

Verses 74-86 apply to touches; substitute 'touches' and 'body.'

Verses 87-99 apply to feelings; substitute 'feelings' and 'mind.'

¹ Anissa = anisra. Nisrâ does not occur in common Sanskrit; it is rendered avash/ambha by the commentators.

The lines corresponding to the comparison in verse 24, run as follows :

Just as an impassioned snake which is allured by the smell of a drug, when it comes out of its hole. (50)

Just as an impassioned fish which is eager to swallow the bait, has its body transfixed by a hook. (63)

Just as an impassioned buffalo who dives in cold water, is taken hold of by a crocodile and dies. (76)

Just as an impassioned elephant who is inflamed by carnal desires, is turned from his way by a female elephant (and is captured and at last killed in battle). (89)]

Thus the objects of the senses and of the mind cause pain to passionate men, but they never in the least cause any pain to the dispassionate. (100)

Pleasant things (by themselves) do not cause indifference nor emotions (as anger, &c.); but by either hating or loving them, a man undergoes such a change through delusion. (101)

Anger, pride, deceit, greed ; disgust, aversion to self-control and delight in sensual things¹; mirth, fear, sorrow, carnal desire for women, men, or both ; all these manifold passions arise in him who is attached to pleasures ; and so do other emotions produced by those (before mentioned) arise in him who is to be pitied, who (ought to be) ashamed of himself, and who is hateful. (102, 103)

¹ Arati and rati. Compare note on XXI, 21, where I have adopted another translation suited to the context. The first four numbers contain the cardinal passions ; the rest the emotions which are called nô-kashâya.

A monk should not desire a companion, not (even) one who is able to perform his religious duties; nor, if he regrets having taken the vows, (should he desire for) a worldly reward of his austerities¹. Such emotions of an infinite variety arise in one who is the slave of his senses. (104)

Desiring happiness and being submerged in the ocean of delusion, he forms many plans for warding off misery; and for their sake an impassioned man exerts himself. (105)

But all kinds of objects of the senses, sounds, &c., will cause to the indifferent neither a pleasant nor an unpleasant feeling. (106)

He who endeavours to recognise the vanity of all desires², will arrive at perfect indifference. When he ceases to desire the objects (of the senses), his desire for pleasures will become extinct. (107)

The dispassionate man who has performed all duties will quickly remove the obstructions to right knowledge and to right faith, and whatever Karman produces obstruction (to righteousness). (108)

Then he knows and sees all things, he is free from delusion and hindrances, his Āsravas have gone, ¹ My translation follows the interpretation of the commentators. The original runs thus: Kappam na ikkhiḅḅa saḥāyaliḅḅū paḅḅhānutāvēṇa tavappabhāvaṃ. The meaning they have made out is very unsatisfactory. There is a remarkable various reading in MS. C not noticed by the scholiasts: saḥāyalakḅḅim = svabhāvalakṣhmīm. If this was the original reading, the meaning of the line, in which however I must leave the word kappam untranslated, would come to this: a monk who regrets having taken the vows should not desire personal power as the reward for his penance. Kalpa, according to the commentators, is one who is able to perform his religious duties; a kalpa is contrasted with a śishya, novice.

² Samkalpavikalpanāsu upasthitasya.

and he is proficient in meditation and concentration of thoughts, and being pure he will arrive at beatitude when his life is spent. (109)

He will get rid of all misery which always afflicts mankind; recovered from the long illness, as it were, and glorious, he becomes infinitely happy, and obtains the (final) aim. (110)

We have taught the way how to become exempt from all misery which arises since time without beginning; those beings who follow it will in their time become infinitely happy. (111)

Thus I say.

THIRTY-THIRD LECTURE.

THE NATURE OF KARMAN.

I shall now in due order explain the eight kinds of Karman, bound by which the soul turns round and round in the Circle of Births. (1)

The eight kinds of Karman are briefly the following:

1. Gñânâvaranīya (which acts as an obstruction to right knowledge);
2. Darsanâvaranīya (which acts as an obstruction to right faith);
3. Vêdanīya (which leads to experiencing pain or pleasure);
4. Môhanīya (which leads to delusion);
5. Âyukkarman (which determines the length of life);

6. Nâman (which determines the name or individuality of the embodied soul);

7. Gôtra (which determines his Gôtra);

8. Antarâya (which prevents one's entrance on the path that leads to eternal bliss¹). (2, 3)

1. Obstruction of knowledge is fivefold (viz. obstruction to):

a. Sruta, knowledge derived from the sacred books;

b. Âbhinibôdhika, perception;

c. Avadhigñâna, supernatural knowledge;

d. Manaḥparyâya, knowledge of the thoughts of other people;

e. Kêvala, the highest, unlimited knowledge. (4)

2. The nine kinds of obstruction to right faith are :

1. sleep; 2. activity; 3. very deep sleep; 4. a high degree of activity²; 5. a state of deep-rooted greed; 6-9 refer to faith in the objects of the first three and the last kinds of knowledge. (5, 6)

3. Vêdântya is twofold, pleasure and pain; there are many subdivisions of pleasure and so there are of pain also. (7)

4. Môhanîya is twofold as referring to faith and to conduct; the first is threefold, the second twofold. (8)

The three kinds of Môhanîya referring to faith are : 1. right faith; 2. wrong faith; 3. faith partly right and partly wrong. (9)

¹ Compare Bhandarkar, Report, p. 93, note *.

² Nos. 1-4 are nidrâ, praḥalâ, nidrânidrâ, praḥalâpraḥalâ; I render the etymological meaning of these words. According to the Dîpikâ, however, they have a different meaning: nidrâ means the state of agreeable waking; praḥalâ, the slumber of a standing or sitting person; nidrânidrâ, deep sleep; praḥalâpraḥalâ, sleep of a person in motion. Nos. 6 and 7 are here called kakkhu and aḥakkhu, instead of âbhinibôdhika and sruta.

The two kinds of Môhaniya referring to conduct are : 1. what is experienced in the form of the four cardinal passions ; 2. what is experienced in the form of feelings different from them. (10)

The first kind of this Karman is sixteenfold, the second sevenfold or ninefold ¹. (11)

5. Âyushka is fourfold as referring to 1. denizens of hell ; 2. brute creation ; 3. men ; 4. gods. (12)

6. Nâman is twofold, good and bad ; there are many subdivisions of the good variety, and so there are of the bad one also ². (13)

7. Gôtra is twofold, high and low ; the first is eightfold, and so is the second also. (14)

8. Antarâya is fivefold as preventing : 1. gifts ; 2. profit ; 3. momentary enjoyment ; 4. continuous enjoyment ³ ; and 5. power. (15)

Thus the division of Karman and the subdivisions have been told.

Now hear their number of atoms ⁴, place, time, and development. (16)

¹ The divisions of the second Karman are the feelings or emotions enumerated in the 102nd verse of the last lecture, from disgust onward. There are seven of them, if desire for women, men, or both, is reckoned as one item, but nine, if it is reckoned as three. The sixteen divisions of the Karman produced by the cardinal passions are arrived at by subdividing each of the four passions with reference to 1. anantânubandha ; 2. pratyâkhyâna ; 3. apratyâkhyâna ; 4. samgvalana.

² In the Dipikâ 103 subdivisions are enumerated ; they correspond to our genera.

³ 3. Bhôga, 4. upabhôga ; bhôga is enjoyment of flowers, food, &c. ; upabhôga, that of one's house, wife, &c. The Karman in question brings about an obstruction to the enjoyment, &c., though all other circumstances be favourable.

⁴ The Karman is considered to consist, like other substances, of atoms, here called pradêsa point. The word I have translated

The number of atoms of every Karman is infinite; it is (infinitely) greater than (the number) of fettered¹ souls, but less than that of the perfected ones. (17)

The Karman in the six directions of space² binds all souls, and it binds the whole soul in all its parts in every possible way. (18)

The longest duration (of Karman) is thirty Krores of Krores of Sâgarôpamâs³, and the shortest a part of a muhûrta. (19)

This holds good with both Âvaran̄tyas, with Vêdantiya and Antarâya. (20)

The longest duration of Môhantiya is seventy Krores of Krores of Sâgarôpamâs, and the shortest a part of a muhûrta. (21)

The longest duration of Âyushka is thirty-three Krores of Krores of Sâgarôpamâs, and the shortest a part of a muhûrta. (22)

The longest duration of Nâman and Gôtra is twenty Krores of Krores of Sâgarôpamâs, and the shortest eight muhûrtas. (23)

The number of perfected souls is infinite, and that number of atoms is paêśaggam = pradêśâgram, which is rendered paramânuparimâna.

¹ Gan̄hiyasatta = granthigasattva.

² The six directions of space are the four cardinal points, zenith and nadir. The commentators quote scripture that êkêndriyas, or beings with one organ of sense, are bound by Karman in three and more directions. The true meaning of this statement is beyond my grasp.—The Dîpikâ explains how Karman acts on the soul. The soul absorbs all material particles of a suitable nature (especially the karmapudgalas) with which it comes into contact, i.e. all that are in the same space with the soul, and assimilates them in the form of g̃hânâvaran̄tiya, &c., just as fire consumes everything within its reach, but nothing beyond it.

³ I.e. 3,000,000,000,000,000 Sâgarôpamâs.

of the subdivisions of Karman¹ is also (infinite); the number of atoms in all these (subdivisions) exceeds (the number) of all souls. (24)

Therefore a wise man should know the different subdivisions of these Karmans, and should exert himself to prevent and to destroy them. (25)

Thus I say.

THIRTY-FOURTH LECTURE.

ON LÊSYÂ².

I shall deliver in due order the Lecture on Lêsyâ; hear the nature of the six Lêsyâs (produced by) Karman. (1)

¹ Anubhâga, explained karmarasavisêsha.

² The lêsyâs (adhyavasâya visêshâh) are different conditions produced in the soul by the influence of different Karman; they are therefore not dependent on the nature of the soul, but on the Karman which accompanies the soul, and are, as it were, the reflection of the Karman on the soul, as stated in the following verse from the Avatûri: krishnâdidravayasâkivyât parinâmô ya âtmanaḥ, spaṣikasyêva tatrâyam lêsyâsabdaḥ pravartate || 'The alteration produced on the soul, just as on a crystal by the presence of black things, &c., is denoted by the word lêsyâ.' The Lêsyâ, or, according to the above explanation, what produces Lêsyâ, is a subtile substance accompanying the soul; to it are attributed the qualities described in this lecture.—The word lêśā is derived from klêsa; this etymology appears rather fanciful, but I think it may be right. For the Lêsyâs seem to be the Klêsas, which affect the soul, conceived as a kind of substance. The Sanskrit term Lêsyâ is of course a hybrid word. It must, however, be stated that lêśā occurs also in the meaning 'colour,' e.g. Sûtrakṛt. I, 6, 13, and that the Prâkrît of klêsa is kilêsa.

Hear 1. the names, 2. colours, 3. tastes, 4. smells, 5. touches, 6. degrees, 7. character, 8. variety, 9. duration, 10. result, and 11. life of the Lêsya's. (2)

1. They are named in the following order : black, blue, grey, red, yellow, and white. (3)

2. The black Lêsya has the colour of a rain-cloud, a buffalo's horn, (the fruit of) Rishîaka¹, or the eye of the wagtail. (4)

The blue Lêsya has the colour of the blue Asôka², the tail of the Kâsha³, or of lapis lazuli. (5)

The grey Lêsya has the colour of the flower of Atasi⁴, the feathers of the Kôkila, or the collar of pigeons. (6)

The red Lêsya has the colour of vermillion, the rising sun, or the bill of a parrot. (7)

The yellow Lêsya has the colour of orpiment, turmeric, or the flowers of Sana⁵ and Asana⁶. (8)

The white Lêsya has the colour of a conch-shell, the anka-stone⁷, Kunda-flowers⁸, flowing milk, silver, or a necklace of pearls. (9)

3. The taste of the black Lêsya is infinitely more bitter than that of Tumbaka⁹, (the fruit of the) Nimb-tree¹⁰, or of Rôhini. (10)

¹ Sapindus Detergens.

² It is not the common Asôka, Jonesia Asoka, which has red flowers.

³ Corarias Indica, blue jay; according to some, a kingfisher.

⁴ Linum Usitatissimum, whose flowers are blue.—The word for grey is kâû = kâpôta; in the comm., however, it is described as kimkit krishnâ, kimkil lôhitâ, which would be rather brown. But the description given in our verse leaves no doubt that grey colour is intended.

⁵ Crotonaria Juncea.

⁶ Terminalia Tomentosa.

⁷ Anka, manivirêsha.

⁸ Jasminum Multiflorum.

⁹ The gourd Lagenaria Vulgaris.

¹⁰ Azadirachta Indica.

The taste of the blue Lêsya is infinitely more pungent than Trikaṭuka¹ and Hastipippali. (11)

The taste of grey Lêsya is infinitely sourer than that of unripe Mango and Kapittha². (12)

The taste of red Lêsya is infinitely more pleasant than that of ripe Mango and Kapittha. (13)

The taste of yellow Lêsya is infinitely better than that of excellent wine and various liquors, honey and Mairêyaka³. (14)

The taste of white Lêsya is infinitely better than that of dates, grapes, milk, candied and pounded sugar. (15)

The smell of the bad Lêsya's (viz. the three first) is infinitely worse than that of the corpse of a cow, dog, or snake. (16)

The smell of the three good Lêsya's is infinitely more pleasant than that of fragrant flowers and of perfumes when they are pounded. (17)

5. The touch of the bad Lêsya's is infinitely worse than that of a saw, the tongue of a cow, or leaf of the Teak tree. (18)

The touch of the three good Lêsya's is infinitely more pleasant than that of cotton, butter, or Śiṛisha-flowers⁴. (19)

6. The degrees⁵ of the Lêsya's are three, or nine,

¹ The aggregate of three spices, &c., black and long pepper and dry ginger.

² Feronia Elephantum.

³ A kind of intoxicating drink, extracted from the blossoms of Lythrum Fruticosum, with sugar, &c.

⁴ Acacia Sirisa.

⁵ The Lêsya's may possess their qualities in a low, middle, or high degree; each of these degrees is again threefold, viz. low, middle, and high. In this way the subdivision is carried on up to 243.

or twenty-seven, or eighty-one, or two hundred and forty-three. (20)

7. A man who acts on the impulse of the five Āsravas¹, does not possess the three Guptis, has not ceased to injure the six (kinds of living beings), commits cruel acts, is wicked and violent, is afraid of no consequences², is mischievous and does not subdue his senses—a man of such habits develops the black Lēsyā. (21, 22)

A man of the following qualities: envy, anger, want of self-control, ignorance, deceit, want of modesty, greed, hatred, wickedness, carelessness, love of enjoyment; a man who pursues pleasures and does not abstain from sinful undertakings, who is wicked and violent—a man of such habits develops the blue Lēsyā. (23, 24)

A man who is dishonest in words and acts, who is base, not upright, a dissembler and deceiver³, a heretic, a vile man, a talker of hurtful and sinful things, a thief, and full of jealousy—a man of such habits develops the grey Lēsyā. (25, 26)

A man who is humble, steadfast, free from deceit and inquisitiveness, well disciplined, restrained, attentive to his study and duties⁴, who loves the Law and keeps it, who is afraid of forbidden things and strives after the highest good—a man of such habits develops the red Lēsyā. (27, 28)

A man who has but little anger, pride, deceit, and greed, whose mind is at ease, who controls himself,

¹ I.e. commits the five great sins.—The following verses give the character—lakṣhaṇa—of the Lēsyās.

² This is, according to the comm., the meaning of the word niddhamdhasaparīṇāṃ.

³ Paliuñṇakaga-uvāhiya = pratikuñṇakaka-upadhika.

⁴ Yôgavān upadāṇavān.

who is attentive to his study and duties, who speaks but little, is calm, and subdues his senses—a man of such habits develops the yellow Lêsya. (29, 30)

A man who abstains from constant thinking about his misery and about sinful deeds, but engages in meditation on the Law and truth only¹, whose mind is at ease, who controls himself, who practises the Samitis and Guptis, whether he be still subject to passion or free from passion, is calm, and subdues his senses—a man of such habits develops the white Lêsya. (31, 32)

8. There are as many varieties² of Lêsya³s as there are Samayas³ in the innumerable Avasarpinis and Utsarpinis, and as there are countless worlds. (33)

9. Half a muhūrta is the shortest, and thirty-three Sâgarôpamâs plus one muhūrta is the longest duration of the black Lêsya. (34)

Half a muhūrta is the shortest, and ten Sâgarôpamâs plus one Palyôpamâ and a part of an Asamkhyêya is the longest duration of the blue Lêsya. (35)

Half a muhūrta is the shortest, and three Sâgarôpamâs plus one Palyôpamâ and a part of an Asamkhyêya is the longest duration of the grey Lêsya. (36)

Half a muhūrta is the shortest, and two Sâgarôpamâs plus one Palyôpamâ and a part of an Asamkhyêya is the longest duration of the red Lêsya. (37)

Half a muhūrta is the shortest, and ten Sâgarôpamâs plus one muhūrta is the longest duration of the yellow Lêsya. (38)

¹ Literally: who avoids the ârta and raudra dhyânas, and practises the dharma and sukla dhyânas. These terms cannot be adequately translated; the reader may therefore be referred for details to Bhandarkar's Report, p. 110 ff.

² Thânâim sthânâni.

³ Samaya is the smallest division of time=instant, moment.

Half a muhūrta is the shortest, and thirty-three Sâgarôpamâs plus one muhūrta is the longest duration of the white Lêsya. (39)

I have described above the duration of the Lêsya generally; I shall now detail their duration in the four walks of mundane existence¹. (40)

The shortest duration of the grey Lêsya (of a denizen of hell) is ten thousand years, the longest three Sâgarôpamâs plus one Palyôpamâ and part of an Asamkhyêya. (41)

The shortest duration of the blue Lêsya (of a denizen of hell) is three Sâgarôpamâs plus one Palyôpamâ and a part of an Asamkhyêya, the longest ten Sâgarôpamâs plus one Palyôpamâ and a part of an Asamkhyêya. (42)

The shortest duration of the black Lêsya (of a denizen of hell) is ten Sâgarôpamâs plus one Palyôpamâ and a part of an Asamkhyêya, the longest thirty-three Sâgarôpamâs. (43)

I have described the duration of the Lêsya of denizens of hell; I shall now describe that of animals, men, and gods. (44)

The duration of any of the Lêsya except the best (viz. white one) is less than a muhūrta for (the lowest organisms), animals, and men². (45)

Half a muhūrta is the shortest duration of the white Lêsya (of animals and men), and the longest a Krore of former years³ less nine years. (46)

¹ Viz. as denizens of hell, brutes, men, and gods. Only the three first Lêsya lead to being born in hell.

² The consequence of this statement appears to be that at the expiration of the Lêsya a new one is produced. The commentators, however, are not explicit on this head.

³ About the former years, see above, p. 16, note 1.

I have described the duration of the Lêsýâs of animals and men, I shall now describe that of the gods. (47)

The shortest duration of the black Lêsýâ is ten thousand years, the longest a Palyôpamâ and (a part of) an Asamkhyêya. (48)

The shortest duration of the blue Lêsýâ is equal to the longest of the black one plus one Samaya; the longest is one Palyôpamâ plus a (greater part of) an Asamkhyêya. (49)

The shortest duration of the grey Lêsýâ is equal to the longest of the blue one plus one Samaya; the longest is one Palyôpamâ plus (a still greater part of) an Asamkhyêya. (50)

I shall now describe the red Lêsýâ as it is with gods, Bhavanapatis, Vyantaras, Gyôtishkas, and Vaimânikas. (51)

The shortest duration of the red Lêsýâ is one Palyôpamâ, the longest two Sâgarôpamâs plus one Palyôpamâ and a part of an Asamkhyêya¹. (52)

The shortest duration of the red Lêsýâ is ten thousand years, the longest two Sâgarôpamâs plus one Palyôpamâ and a part of an Asamkhyêya. (53)

The longest duration of the red Lêsýâ plus one Samaya is equal to the shortest of the yellow Lêsýâ; its longest, however, is ten muhûrtas longer. (54)

The longest duration of the yellow Lêsýâ plus one Samaya is equal to the shortest of the white Lêsýâ; the longest, however, is thirty-three muhûrtas longer. (55)

10. The black, blue, and grey Lêsýâs are the ¹ This verse seems to lay down the duration of the Lêsýâ in the case of common gods, while the next one applies to Bhavanapatis, &c.

lowest Lâsyâs; through them the soul is brought into miserable courses of life. (56)

The red, yellow, and white Lâsyâs are the good Lâsyâs; through them the soul is brought into happy courses of life. (57)

11. In the first moment of these Lâsyâs when they are joined (with the soul), the latter is not born into a new existence¹. (58)

In the last moment of all these Lâsyâs when they are joined (with the soul), the latter is not born into a new existence. (59)

While the last muhûrta is running and a part of it is still to come, the souls with their Lâsyâs developed, go to a new birth. (60)

A wise man should, therefore, know the nature of these Lâsyâs; he should avoid the bad ones and obtain the good ones. (61)

Thus I say.

THIRTY-FIFTH LECTURE.

THE HOUSELESS MONK.

Learn from me, with attentive minds, the road shown by the wise ones², which leads a monk who follows it, to the end of all misery. (1)

¹ The question treated rather darkly in the next three verses is, according to the comm., the following:—Every individual dies in the same Lâsyâ in which he is born. When his Lâsyâ ends with his life, then the soul must get a new Lâsyâ. Our verses state at which time the new Lâsyâ comes into existence or is joined with the soul.

² Buddhêhi.

Giving up the life in a house, and taking Pravrâgyâ, a sage should know and renounce those attachments which take hold of men. (2)

A restrained monk should abstain from killing, lying, stealing, carnal intercourse, from desire, love, and greed. (3)

Even in his thoughts a monk should not long for a pleasant painted house filled with the fragrance of garlands and frankincense, secured by doors, and decorated with a white ceiling-cloth¹. (4)

For in such a dwelling a monk will find it difficult to prevent his senses from increased desire and passion. (5)

He should be content to live on a burial-place, in a deserted house, below a tree, in solitude, or in a place which had been prepared for the sake of somebody else². (6)

A well-controlled monk should live in a pure place, which is not too much crowded, and where no women live. (7)

He should not build a house, nor cause others to erect one; for many living beings both movable and immovable, both subtle and gross, are seen to be killed when a house is being built; therefore a monk should abstain from building a house. (8, 9)

The same holds good with the cooking of food and drink, or with one's causing them to be cooked. Out of compassion for living beings one should not cook nor cause another to cook. (10)

Beings which live in water, corn, or in earth and

¹ Ullôva = ullôka.

² Parakada = parakṛita, explained parair âtmârtham kṛita.

wood, are destroyed in food and drink; therefore a monk should cause nobody to cook. (11)

There is nothing so dangerous as fire, for it spreads in all directions and is able to destroy many beings; one should therefore not light a fire. (12)

Even in his thoughts a monk should not long for gold and silver; indifferent alike to dirt and gold he abstains from buying and selling. (13)

If he buys, he becomes a buyer; if he sells, he becomes a merchant; a monk is not to engage in buying and selling. (14)

A monk who is to live on alms, should beg and not buy; buying and selling is a great sin; but to live on alms is benefitting. (15)

He should collect his alms in small parts according to the Sûtras and so as to avoid faults; a monk should contentedly go on his begging-tour, whether he get alms or not. (16)

A great sage should not eat for the sake of the pleasant taste (of the food) but for the sustenance of life, being not dainty nor eager for good fare, restraining his tongue, and being without cupidity. (17)

Even in his thoughts he should not desire to be presented with flowers, to be offered a seat, to be eloquently greeted, or to be offered presents, or to get a magnificent welcome and treatment. (18)

He should meditate on true things only¹, committing no sins and having no property; he should walk about careless of his body till his end arrives. (19)

Rejecting food when the time of his death arrives,

¹ Sukla dhyâna, see note 1, p. 200.

and leaving the human body, he becomes his own master¹, and is liberated from misery. (20)

Without property, without egoism, free from passions and the Âsravas, he obtains absolute knowledge, and reaches eternal beatitude. (21)

Thus I say.

THIRTY-SIXTH LECTURE.

ON LIVING BEINGS AND THINGS WITHOUT LIFE².

Now learn from me with attentive minds the division of Living Beings and Things without life³, which a monk must know who is to exert himself in self-control. (1)

¹ By the destruction of the vîryântarâya.

² It will perhaps not be amiss to give a systematic list of the subjects treated in this lecture. The numbers refer to the verses.

A. Things without life, 3-48.

(1) Without form, 5-9.

(2) With form, 10-48.

B. Living Beings, 48-246.

(1) Perfected souls, 50-68.

(2) Mundane Beings, 69-246.

a. Immovable Beings, 71-106.

a. Earth Lives, 71-84.

β. Water Lives, 85-92.

γ. Plants, 93-106.

δ. Movable Beings, 108-246.

a. Fire Lives, 109-117.

β. Wind Lives, 118-126.

γ. Beings with an organic body, 127-246.

³ See next page.

The Living Beings and the Things without life make up this world (Lôka); but the space where only Things without life are found is called the Non-world (Alôka). (2)

The Living Beings and the Things without life will be described with reference to 1. substance, 2. place, 3. time, and 4. development. (3)

A. Things without life.

Things without life are 1. possessing form, 2. formless; the formless things are of ten kinds, those possessing form are of four kinds. (4)

(1) The ten kinds of formless things: 1. Dharma, 2. its divisions, 3. its indivisible parts; 4. Adharma, 5. its divisions, 6. its indivisible parts; 7. space,

-
- i. With two organs of sense, 128-136.
 - ii. With three organs of sense, 137-145.
 - iii. With four organs of sense, 146-155.
 - iv. With five organs of sense, 156-246.
 - a. Denizens of hell, 157-170.
 - ð. Animals (vertebratae), 171-193.
 - 1. Aquatic, 171-178.
 - 2. Terrestrial, 179-186.
 - 3. Aerial, 187-193.
 - c. Men, 194-202.
 - d. Gods, 203-246.
 - 1. Bhavanavâsin, 205, 218.
 - 2. Vyantara, 206, 219.
 - 3. Gyôtishka, 207, 220.
 - 4. Vaimânika, 208, 221-246.
 - a'. Living in Kalpas, 209, 210, 221-232.
 - ð'. Living above the Kalpas, 211.
 - a'. Graivêyakas, 212, 213, 233-241.
 - ð'. Anuttaras, 214-217, 242, 243.

Appendix, 247-267.

³ Gîva and agîva. The former is defined in the Dîpikâ as upayôgavân in accordance with our text, XXVIII, 10; the latter is also called pudgala.

8. its divisions, 9. its indivisible parts, and 10. time¹. (5, 6)

Dharma and Adharma are co-extensive with the World (Lôka); space fills the World and the Non-world (Alôka); time exists in what is called the place of time². (7)

Dharma, Adharma, and Space are ever without beginning and end. (8)

And time also, if regarded as a continuous flow³, is called so (i. e. without beginning and end); but with regard to an individual thing it has a beginning and an end. (9)

(2) The four kinds of things possessing form are 1. compound things, 2. their divisions, 3. their indivisible parts, and 4. atoms⁴. (10)

Compound things and atoms occur as individual things and apart (or different from others)⁵, in the whole world and in parts of the world; this is their distribution with regard to place. (11)

Subtile things occur all over the world, gross things only in a part of it.

¹ It is here called addhâ-samaya, which may be translated real-time. It has no divisions or parts as the other things, because of time only the present moment is existent. And a moment cannot be divided.

² Time is only present in the two and a half continents inhabited by men, and the oceans belonging to them; beyond this sphere there is no time or, as the Dîpikâ correctly remarks, no divisions of time.

³ Samtatim pappa = samtatim prâpya.

⁴ According to the Dîpikâ, we should have but two divisions, viz.: 1. compound things (skandha, aggregates of atoms), and 2. not aggregated atoms; for Nos. 2 and 3 of our text are but subdivisions of No. 1.

⁵ Ēgattêna puhuttêna = êkatvêna prîthaktvêna.

I shall now give their fourfold division with regard to time. (12)

With regard to the continuous flow (or development of a thing) it is without beginning and without end; but with regard to its existence (as an individual thing) it has both a beginning and an end¹. (13)

The longest duration of Things without life possessing form is an immeasurable² period; the shortest one Samaya. (14)

The longest interruption³ in the existence of Things without life possessing form is an endless time; the shortest one Samaya. (15)

Their development is fivefold: with regard to 1. colour, 2. smell, 3. taste, 4. touch, and 5. figure. (16)

Those which develop with regard to colour are of five kinds: 1. black, 2. blue, 3. red, 4. yellow, 5. white. (17)

Those which develop with regard to smell are of two kinds: 1. sweet-smelling substances, and 2. of bad smell. (18)

Those which develop with regard to taste are of five kinds: 1. bitter, 2. pungent, 3. astringent, 4. sour, and 5. sweet. (19)

Those which develop with regard to touch are of eight kinds: 1. hard, 2. soft, 3. heavy, 4. light, 5. cold, 6. hot, 7. smooth, and 8. rough.

¹ The meaning of this verse is that a thing, as far as its material cause is concerned, has always existed, and will ever exist under one form or other, but that the individual thing in its present form has but a limited existence.

² Asamkhakâlam. See above, p. 42, note 2.

³ Antaram; the interval between the thing being removed from its proper scene and reaching it again (Avakâuri and Dîpikâ).

In this way the substances have been declared, which develop with regard to touch. (20, 21)

Those which develop with regard to figure are of five kinds : 1. globular, 2. circular, 3. triangular, 4. square, and 5. long. (22)

Things of black colour are subdivided with regard to smell, taste, touch, and figure. (23)

The same subdivision holds good with blue, red, yellow, and white things. (24-27¹)

Things of sweet smell are subdivided with regard to colour, taste, touch, and figure ; things of bad smell are similarly subdivided. (28, 29)

Things of bitter taste are subdivided with regard to colour, smell, touch, and figure. (30)

The same subdivision holds good with pungent, astringent, sour, and sweet things. (31-34)

Things of hard touch are subdivided with regard to colour, smell, taste, and figure. (35).

The same subdivision holds good with soft, heavy, light, cold, hot, smooth, and rough things. (36-42)

Things of globular figure are subdivided with regard to colour, smell, taste, and touch. (43)

The same subdivision holds good with circular, triangular, square, and long things. (44-47)

Thus the division of Things without life has briefly been told.

B. Living Beings.

I shall now, in due order, deliver the division of living beings. (48)

Living beings are of two kinds : 1. those still

¹ Each verse has the same form as 23, only that another colour is substituted for black. In the same way the subdivisions of smells, &c., are given. I give the first verse of each class and abbreviate the rest.

belonging to the Samsâra, and 2. the perfected souls (siddhas). The latter are of many kinds; hear me explain them. (49)

(1) The perfected souls are those of women, men, hermaphrodites, of orthodox, heterodox, and householders. (50)

Perfection is reached by people of the greatest, smallest, and middle size¹, on high places, underground, on the surface of the earth, in the ocean, and in water (of rivers, &c.). (51)

Ten hermaphrodites reach, at the same time, perfection, twenty women, one hundred and eight men; four householders, ten heterodox, and one hundred and eight orthodox monks. (52, 53)

Two individuals of the greatest size reach perfection (simultaneously), four of the smallest size, and one hundred and eight of the middle size. (54)

Four individuals reach perfection (simultaneously) on high places, two in the ocean, three in water, twenty underground, and one hundred and eight on the surface of the earth. (55)

From where are the perfected souls debarred? Where do the perfected souls reside? Where do they leave their bodies, and where do they go, on reaching perfection? (56)

Perfected souls are debarred from the non-world (Alôka); they reside on the top of the world; they leave their bodies here (below), and go there, on reaching perfection. (57)

Twelve Yôganas above the (Vimâna) Sarvârtha is ¹ The greatest size (ôgâhanâ) of men is 500 dhanus, or 2,000 cubits, the smallest one cubit.

the place called Īshatprāgbhāra¹, which has the form of an umbrella; (there the perfected souls go). (58)

It is forty-five hundred thousand Yôḡanas long, and as many broad, and it is somewhat more than three times as many in circumference. (59)

Its thickness is eight Yôḡanas, it is greatest in the middle, and decreases² toward the margin, till it is thinner than the wing of a fly. (60)

This place, by nature pure, consisting of white gold, resembles in form an open umbrella, as has been said by the best of Gīnas. (61)

(Above it) is a pure blessed place (called Sītā), which is white like a conch-shell, the añka-stone³, and Kunda-flowers; a Yôḡana thence is the end of the world. (62)

The perfected souls penetrate the sixth part⁴ of the uppermost Krôṣa of the (above-mentioned) Yôḡana. (63)

There at the top of the world reside the blessed perfected souls, rid of all transmigration, and arrived at the excellent state of perfection. (64)

The dimension of a perfected soul is two-thirds of the height which the individual had in his last existence. (65)

The perfected souls, considered singly, (as individuals) have a beginning but no end; considered

¹ Similar details are given in the Aupapâtika Sûtra (ed. Leumann, § 163 f.).

² According to the commentator, who quotes scripture, it decreases an aṅgula every Yôḡana.

³ Compare XXXIV, 9 and note. The commentators here treat añka as a separate substance without offering any explanation. The Dīpikā writes sītā instead of sītā.

⁴ Or $333\frac{1}{3}$ dhanus.

collectively¹ (as a class) they have neither a beginning nor an end. (66)

They have no (visible) form, they consist of Life throughout, they are developed into knowledge and faith, and they possess paramount happiness which admits of no comparison. (67)

They all dwell in one part of the world, and have developed into knowledge and faith, they have crossed the boundary of the Samsâra, and reached the excellent state of perfection. (68)

(2) Living beings which still belong to the Sam-sâra, are of two kinds : a. movable, and b. immovable ones : the immovable ones are of three kinds : (69)

a. Earth Lives, β. Water Lives, and γ. plants ; these are the three kinds of immovable living beings ; now learn from me their subdivision. (70)

a. The Earth Lives are of two kinds : subtile and gross ; and both of them are either fully developed or undeveloped. (71)

The gross and fully developed are of two kinds : viz. smooth or rough. The smooth ones are of seven kinds : (72)

Black, blue, red, yellow, white, pale dust, and clay.

The rough ones are of thirty-six kinds : (73)

Earth, gravel, sand, stones, rocks, rock-salt², iron, copper, tin, lead, silver, gold, and diamond ; (74)

Orpiment, vermilion, realgar, *Sâsaka*³, antimony,

¹ The words translated, 'considered singly' and 'considered collectively,' are êgattêna and puhuttêna = êkatvêna and pri-thaktvêna. Their usual meaning has been given in verse 11.

² Lavanâsê?

³ Not in our dictionaries ; the commentators only say that it is a kind of mineral, dhâtuvisêsha. I give the Sanskrit names of coral, Abhrapaṭala, Abhravāluka; these are varieties of gross (Earth-) bodies and kinds of precious stones. (75)

Hyacinth, natron, Aṅka, crystal, Lôhitāksha, emerald, Masâragalla, Bhugamôḥaka, and sapphire; (76)

Kandana, red chalk, Hamsagarbha, *Pulaka*¹, and sulphur; Kandraprabha, lapis lazuli, Galakânta, and *Sûryakânta*². (77)

These thirty-six kinds of 'rough earth' have been enumerated. The 'subtile earth' is but of one kind, as there is no variety. (78)

The subtile species is distributed all over the world, but the gross one (is found) in a part of the world only.

I shall now give their fourfold division with regard to time. (79)

With regard to the continuous flow (or development of an earth-body) it is without a beginning and end; but with regard to its existence in its present form it has both a beginning and end. (80)

Twenty-two thousand years is the longest duration of the Earth Lives; its shortest is less than a muhūrta. (81)

The longest duration of the body of Earth Lives, if they do not leave that (kind of) body³, is an the stones, which cannot be identified with certainty, or are not contained in the index of R. Garbe's work on the Indian minerals, Leipzig, 1882.

¹ A medicinal earth, commonly called Kaṅkush/ḥa.

² The enumeration contains thirty-nine, instead of thirty-six items, as stated in verses 73 and 76.

³ The meaning seems to be that souls of earth-bodies live in immeasurable time; the shortest is less than one muhūrta. (82)

The longest interval between an Earth Life's leaving its body (till its return to it), is an endless time; the shortest less than one Muhūrta. (83)

Their varieties, caused by (difference of) colour, smell, taste, touch, figure, and place, are (counted) by thousands. (84)

β. The Water Lives are of two kinds: subtile and gross ones; and both of them are either fully developed or undeveloped. (85)

The gross and fully developed ones are of five kinds: pure water, dew, exudations, fog, and ice. (86)

The 'subtile water' is of one kind, as there is no variety. The subtile species is distributed all over the world, but the gross one (is found) in a part of the world only. (87)

With regard to the continuous flow, &c. (as in verse 80).

Seven thousand years is the longest duration of the life of Water Lives, &c. (as in verse 81). (All that has been said of Earth Lives in verses 82-84 is verbally repeated here of 'Water Lives.') (88-92)

γ. Plants are of two kinds: subtile and gross ones; and both of them are either fully developed or undeveloped. (93)

The gross and fully developed plants are of two kinds: either many have one body in common, or each has its own body. (94)

Those who severally have their own body are of earth-bodies, the time stated in verse 82, while the length of each separate existence is determined in verse 81.

many kinds: trees, shrubby plants¹, shrubs², big plants³, creeping plants⁴, grass⁵; (95)

Palms⁶, plants of knotty stems or stalks⁷, mushrooms⁸, water-plants, annual plants⁹, and herbs¹⁰. These are called plants possessing severally their own body. (96)

Those plants of which many have one body in common are of many kinds¹¹: Âluya¹², Mûlaya¹³, ginger; (97)

Harilî, Sirilî, Sassirilî, Gâvaî, Kêyakandalî¹⁴, onion, garlic, plantain-tree, Kuḍuvvaya¹⁵; (98)

¹ Gukkha; it is explained to denote such plants from the single root or bulb of which come forth many stalks, e.g. Vrintâka, Solanum Melongena.

² Gulma, similar to the preceding class, but bringing forth twigs or stems, instead of stalks, e.g. Navamâlikâ, Jasminum Sambac, Kanavîra, &c.

³ Latâ, as Lotus, Pandanus, &c.

⁴ Vallî, as gourds, Piper Betel, &c.

⁵ Trina, grass. But of the two examples given in the commentary, guṅḡuka is not in our dictionaries, and Arguna denotes usually a tree, Terminalia Arjuna.

⁶ Valaya; so called from their foliation.

⁷ Parvaga, as sugar-cane.

⁸ Kuhana, plants which cause the earth to burst, as sarpa-khatra, mushroom (toad-stool).

⁹ Ôshadhi, such plants as die after having brought forth seed, as rice, &c.

¹⁰ Haritakâya, as tandulêya, &c.

¹¹ The plants in the following list are, according to the commentary, mostly bulbs, 'well known in the countries where they grow.' Many of them are not in our dictionaries. I give the *Prâkrî*t form of their names, and note the Sanskrit equivalent when it can be identified.

¹² Âluka, Amorphophallus Campanulatus. ¹³ Mûlaka, radish.

¹⁴ A various reading has for the last two words (which might be differently divided), âpaikkêikandalî. The Kandalî, the plantain-tree, occurs in the next line again.

¹⁵ A various reading is Kuḍambaya.

Lôhinhûya, Thihûya, Tuhaga, Kanha¹, Vaggakanda², Sûranaya³; (99)

Assakanni⁴, Sihakanni, Musundhi, turmeric, and many others besides. (100)

The subtile plants are of one kind, as there is no variety. Subtile plants are distributed all over the world, gross plants (are found) in a part of the world only. (101)

With regard to the continuous flow, &c. (as in verse 80). (102)

Ten thousand years is the longest duration of the life of plants, &c. (All as in verses 81-84. Substitute plants, which are here called vanaspati and panaka, for Earth-bodies.) (103-106)

Thus the three kinds of immovable living beings have briefly been told. I shall now explain in due order the three kinds of movable living beings. (107)

6. The movable beings are a. the Fire Lives, β. the Wind Lives, and γ. those with an organic body; these are the three kinds of movable beings. Learn from me their subdivision. (108)

a. The Fire Lives are of two kinds: subtile and gross ones; and both of them are either fully developed or undeveloped. (109)

The gross and fully developed ones are of many kinds: coal, burning chaff, fire, and flame of fire; (110)

Meteors, and lightning, and many other kinds besides.

¹ Krishnakanda, Nymphaea Rubra.

² Vagrakanda of the Sanskrit Koshas.

³ Sûrana, Arum Campanulatum.

⁴ Asvakarnâ. Asvakarna is a tree, Vatika Robusta.

The subtile Fire Lives are but of one kind, as there is no variety. (111)

The subtile species, &c. (see verses 79-84. Substitute Fire Lives for Earth Lives. In verses 114 f., corresponding to verses 81, 89, and 103, read: 'the longest duration of the life of Fire Lives is three days,' &c.; the rest as above). (112-117)

β. The Wind Lives are of two kinds, &c. (as in verse 109). (118)

The gross and fully developed ones are of five kinds: squalls¹, whirlwinds², thick winds³, high winds, low winds; (119)

And the *Samvartaka*⁴ wind, &c.; thus they are of many kinds⁵.

The subtile Wind Lives are but of one kind, as there is no variety. (120)

The subtile species, &c. (as above 79-84. Substitute Wind Lives for Earth Lives. In verse 123, corresponding to 114, read: 'the longest duration of the life of Wind Lives is three thousand years;' the rest as above). (121-126)

¹ Utkalikâ, intermittent winds. ² Maṇḍalikâ = vâṭôlî.

³ According to the comm. these winds blow on the oceans which are situated below the Ratnaprabhâ-hell, or which support the heavenly Vimânas, and have the density of snow. Perhaps the notion is similar to that of the Hindu astronomers, who fancied that the heavenly bodies were set in motion by cords of wind called pravaha. See Sûrya Siddhânta II, 3.

⁴ This seems to be the hurricane which causes the periodical destruction of the world. But Dêvendra says: 'Samvartaka is a wind which carries grass, &c., from the outside into a particular place.'

⁵ Though in the preceding verse it was said that there are five kinds of wind, six are enumerated, and more are implied by the '&c.'

γ. Movable beings with organic bodies (i.e. animals) are of four kinds: i. those possessing two organs of sense, ii. those with three organs, iii. those with four organs, iv. those with five organs. (127)

i. Beings with two organs of sense are of two kinds: subtile and gross ones. Both are either fully developed or undeveloped. Learn from me their subdivision ¹. (128)

Worms, Sômaṅgala, Alasa ², Mâivâhaya ³, Vâsîmuha ⁴, shells, conches, Saṅkhâṇaga ⁵; (129)

Pallôya, Anullaya, cowries, leeches, Gâlaga, and Kandana ⁶. (130)

These and others are the many kinds of beings with two organs of sense. All of them live in a part of the world only, they do not live everywhere. (131)

With regard to the continuous flow, &c. (as in verse 80). (132)

¹ As many of these lower animals are not known to us, I give the Prâkrîṭ names of those which I cannot identify. Dêvendra says: 'Some of them are well known, the remaining ones are to be explained according to tradition.' The explanation of this passage in the Avaṭṭuri is fuller.

² A small poisonous animal. Petersburg Dictionary, s. v. According to the Gîvaviṭâra Vṛitti V, 16, they are earth-snakes (bhûnâga), which originate in the rainy season when the sun is in Aśleshâ, i.e. about the beginning of July.

³ Mâtrivâhaka. According to the description of the Avaṭṭuri, the larvae of Phryganeae seem intended. According to the Gîvaviṭâra Vṛitti, they are called kûḍêlî in Guzeratî.

⁴ Vâsîmukha, explained: Whose mouth is like a chisel or adze. There are many insects, e.g. the Curculionidae, which suit this description.

⁵ Saṅkhâṇaka, 'very small, conch-like animals.'

⁶ Kandana = Akâvṛiksha (?). According to the Gîvaviṭâra Vṛitti V, 16, they are animals living in water and on land, and are called Aksha in the vernacular (samayabhâshâ).

The duration of the life of beings with two organs of sense is twelve years at the utmost; the shortest is less than a muhūrta. (133)

The longest duration of the body of beings with two organs of sense is a Samkhyêya (or measurable time) if they do not leave that (kind of) body; the shortest is less than one muhūrta. (134)

135, 136 = 83, 84. Substitute 'beings with two organs of sense' for Earth Lives.

ii. Beings with three organs of sense are of two kinds: subtile and gross ones. Both are either fully developed or undeveloped. Learn from me their subdivision. (137)

Kunthu¹, ants, bugs, Ukkala, white ants, Tana-hâra, Kattahâra, *Mâlûga*², Pattahâra; (138)

Duga shining like lead, which originate in the kernel of the cotton-seed, Sadâvarî, centipedes, Indagâiya; (139)

Cochineal, &c. Thus they are of many kinds.

All of them live in a part of the world only, they do not live everywhere. (140)

141-145 = 132-136. (Substitute 'beings with three organs of sense.' The longest duration, &c., is forty-nine days, verse 142 = 133.)

iii. Beings with four organs of sense are of two kinds: subtile and gross ones. Both are either

¹ Kunthu or animalcules are also called Amuddharî, see concerning them, Kalpa Sûtra, Rules for Yatis, § 44, part i, p. 304.—I give in the text the Prâkrit form of the words I cannot identify.

² Mâlûka is the name of a plant, Ocimum Sanctum. It must, of course, here denote some animal.—The Gîvavikâra enumerates many other animals, lice, bugs, different kinds of larvae living in dung, corn, &c.—The trinahâra, kâsh/hahâra, and patrahâra seem to denote different kinds of ants.

developed or undeveloped. Learn from me their subdivision. (146)

Andhiya, Pottiyâ, flies, mosquitoes, bees, moths, Dhiṅkana and Kaṅkana; (147)

Kukkudâ¹, Singirîḍḍi, Nandâvatta², scorpions, Dôla, crickets, Virali, Akkhivêhaya; (148)

Akkhila, Sâhaya Akkhirôdaya, Vikitta, Vikittapattaya³, Uhm̐galiyâ, Galakârî, Niyâ, and Tantavagâiyâ. (149)

These and others are the beings with four organs of sense. All of them, &c. (the rest as in verses 131-136. Substitute 'beings with four organs of sense.' The longest duration, &c., is six months, verse 152 = 133). (150-155)

iv. Beings with five organs of sense are of four kinds: denizens of hell, animals⁴, men, and gods. (156).

a. Denizens of hell are of seven kinds according to the seven hells; they are called Ratnâbha, Sarkarâbha, Vâlukâbha; (157)

Paṅkâbha, Dhûmâbha, Tamâ, and Tamatamâ. Thus the seven kinds of denizens of hell have been enumerated. (158)

All the (denizens of hell) live in a part of the ¹ Kukkuḍa is given in the dictionaries as the name of a small lizard.

² Nandâvatta occurs elsewhere as the name of a particular fish, and of a shell. It can be neither of these in our passage, as both animals belong to other classes than the Katurindriyas.

³ Etymologically: with many-coloured wings. Probably butterflies are intended.

⁴ Tirikkha = tiryak. Apparently only the higher animals are intended by this term, the lower animals, from the insects downwards, being enumerated in the preceding classes of beings.

world only; they do not live everywhere, &c. (as in verses 79 and 80). (159, 160)

In the first hell the longest duration of their life is one Sâgarôpamâ; the shortest is ten thousand years. (161)

In the second hell the longest duration of their life is three Sâgarôpamâs; the shortest is one Sâgarôpamâ¹. (162)

In the third hell the longest duration of their life is seven Sâgarôpamâs; the shortest is three Sâgarôpamâs. (163)

In the fourth hell the longest duration of their life is ten Sâgarôpamâs; the shortest is seven Sâgarôpamâs. (164)

In the fifth hell the longest duration of their life is seventeen Sâgarôpamâs; the shortest is ten Sâgarôpamâs. (165)

In the sixth hell the longest duration of their life is twenty-two Sâgarôpamâs; the shortest is seventeen Sâgarôpamâs. (166)

In the seventh hell the longest duration of their life is thirty-three Sâgarôpamâs; the shortest is twenty-two Sâgarôpamâs. (167)

The length of the life of denizens of hell is also that of their continuance in the same kind of body, with regard both to the longest and shortest duration of it. (168)

Verses 169, 170 = 83, 84. (Substitute, denizens of hell.)

b. The animals which possess five organs of sense are of two kinds, those which originate by gene-

¹ It will be seen that the longest duration of life in each hell is always equal to the shortest in the preceding one.

ratio *aequivoca*¹, and those which are born from the womb. (171)

Either of them are again of three kinds: 1. aquatic, 2. terrestrial, and 3. aerial animals. Learn from me their subdivision. (172)

1. Fishes, tortoises, crocodiles, Makaras, and Gangetic porpoises are the five kinds of aquatic animals. (173)

174, 175 = 159, 160.

The longest duration of the life of aquatic animals is one Kṛoṇe of former years²; the shortest is less than one muhūrta. (176)

The longest duration of the aquatic animals' continuance in the (same kind of body) is from two to nine³ Kṛoṇes of former years. (177)

178 = 83.

2. Quadrupeds and reptiles are the two kinds of terrestrial animals. The quadrupeds are of four kinds; listen to my description of them: (179)

(1) Solidungular animals, as horses, &c.;

(2) Biungular animals, as cows, &c.;

(3) Multiungular animals, as elephants, &c.;

(4) Animals having toes with nails, as lions, &c. (180)

The reptiles are of two kinds: 1. those which walk on their arms, as lizards, &c., and 2. those which move on their breast, as snakes, &c. Both are again of many kinds. (181)

¹ Sammûrkkhima. They grow by assimilating the materials in their surrounding. According to a second explanation, their internal organ does not fully develop.

² See page 16, note 1.

³ This is, according to the Avakūṛi, the meaning of pūhuttam prithaktvam.

182, 183 = 159, 160.

The longest duration of the life of terrestrial animals is three Palyôpamâs; the shortest is less than one muhûrta. (184)

The longest duration of the terrestrial animals' continuance in the (same kind of) body is three Palyôpamâs plus from two to nine Krores of former years; the shortest is less than one muhûrta. (185)

186 = 83.

3. Winged animals are of four kinds: those with membranous wings¹, those with feathered wings, those with wings in the shape of a box², and those (which sit on) outspread wings³. (187)

188, 189 = 159, 160.

The longest duration of the life of aerial animals is an Asamkhyêya-part of a Palyôpamâ⁴; the shortest is less than one muhûrta. (190)

The longest duration (of the aerial animals' continuance in the same kind of body) is an Asamkhyêya-part of a Palyôpamâ plus from two to nine Krores of former years; the shortest is less than one muhûrta. (191)

192, 193 = 159, 160.

c. Men are of two kinds; listen to my description of them: men originating by generatio aequivoca⁵, and men born from the womb. (194)

Those who are born from the womb are of three ¹ E.g. the karmaka/akas or bats.

² Samudga. These interesting birds are said to live outside the Mânushôttara, or world inhabited by men.

³ The comm. do not tell us what kind of birds is intended.

⁴ The comm. do not explain this expression; the meaning, therefore, is doubtful. I give a literal translation of it in this and the next verse.

⁵ See page 223, note 1, on verse 171.

kinds: those living in the Karmabhûmi¹, those living in the Akarmabhûmi, and those living on the minor continents². (195)

They have, in the same order, fifteen³, thirty⁴, and twenty-eight subdivisions. These are the numbers handed down. (196)

Men originating by generatio aequivoca are of as many kinds. They all live but in a part of the world. (197)

Verses 198–202 = 183–186. (Substitute, 'men' for 'terrestrial animals'.)

d. Gods are of four kinds; listen to my description of them: 1. Bhaumêyikas; 2. Vyantaras; 3. Gyôtishkas; 4. Vaimânikas. (203)

There are ten kinds of Bhavanavâsins (= Bhaumêyikas), eight of those who live in woods (= Vyantaras), five of Gyôtishkas, and two of Vaimânikas. (204)

1. The Bhavanavâsins are: the Asura-, Nâga-, Suvarṇa-, Vidyut-, Agni-, Dvîpa-, Udadhi-, Vâta-, and Ghaṇika-(Kumâras⁵). (205)

2. The eight kinds of Vyantaras are: Pisâkas,

¹ Concerning Karmabhûmi, see part i, p. 195, note 1. The Avaṭṭuri places the Akarmabhûmi first, but the next verse proves that it originally stood in the second place.

² These are seven groups of islands situated off the eastern and western ends of the Himâlaya, which are inhabited by fabulous races.

³ According to the Avaṭṭuri, there are five kinds in Bharata, five in Airāvata, and five in Vidêha.

⁴ Viz. five in each of the six Akarmabhûmis: Haimavata, Hari-varsha, Hairanyavata, Dêvakuru, and Uttarakuru.

⁵ According to the commentaries the word kumâra is to be supplied after each of the ten names.

Bhûtas, Yakshas, Râkshasas, Kinnaras, Kimpurushas, Mahôragas, and Gandharvas. (206)

3. The moons, the suns, the Nakshatras, the planets, and the hosts of stars are the fivefold dwellings of the Gyôdishkas. (207)

4. The Vaimânika gods are of two kinds :
α'. those who are born in the heavenly Kalpas, and β'. those who are born in the regions above them¹. (208)

α'. The former are of twelve kinds : those who live in (the following Kalpas, after which they are named) : Saudharma, Îsâna, Sanatkumâra, Mâhendra, Brahmâlôka, and Lantaka ; (209)

Mahâsukla, Sahasrâra, Ânata, Prânata², Âraṇa, and Akyuta. These are the gods who are born in Kalpas. (210) β'. The gods who are born in the regions above the Kalpas are of two kinds : α'. the Graivêyakas³, and β'. the Anuttaras⁴. The Graivêyakas are of nine kinds. (211)

α'. The lowest of the lowest, the middle of the lowest, the highest of the lowest, the lowest of the middle ; (212)

The middle of the middle, the highest of the middle, the lowest of the highest, the middle of the highest ; (213)

The highest of the highest. These are the Graivêyaka gods.

¹ They are termed Kalpôpaga and Kalpâtîta.

² I am not sure that these are the correct Sanskrit forms of the two last Kalpas ; the original has Âṇaya and Pânaya.

³ I.e. those who live on the neck (grîva), i.e. on the upper part of the universe.

⁴ I.e. those above whom there dwell no other gods.

β'. The Vigayas, the Vaigayantas, the Gayantas, the Aparâgitas (214)

And the Sarvârthasiddhas: these are the five kinds of Anuttara gods.

These and others besides are the many kinds of Vaimânika gods. (215-217 = 159-160)

The longest duration of the life of the Bhau-mêyika gods is somewhat more than a Sâgarôpamâ, the smallest ten thousand years. (218)

The longest duration of the life of the Vyantaras is one Palyôpamâ, the shortest is ten thousand years. (219)

The longest duration of the life of the Gyôtishkas is one Palyôpamâ plus one hundred thousand years, the shortest is the eighth part of a Palyôpamâ. (220)

The longest duration of life in the Saudharma-kalpa is two Sâgarôpamâs, the shortest is one Palyôpamâ. (221)

(In the same way (a) the longest, and (b) the shortest duration of life in the remaining Kalpas and heavenly regions is given in the original. I give in the sequel the substance only of each verse.)

In Îsâna Kalpa (a) is somewhat more than a Sâgarôpamâ, (b) somewhat more than a Palyôpamâ. (222)

In Sanatkumâra Kalpa (a) is seven, (b) two Sâgarôpamâs. (223)

In Mâhendra Kalpa (a) is somewhat more than seven Sâgarôpamâs, (b) somewhat more than two. (224)

In Brahmalôka Kalpa (a) is ten Sâgarôpamâs, (b) seven. (225)

In Lantaka Kalpa (a) is fourteen Sâgarôpamâs, (b) ten. (226)

In Mahâsukla Kalpa (a) is seventeen Sâgarôpamâs, (b) fourteen¹. (227)

In Sahasrâra Kalpa (a) is eighteen Sâgarôpamâs, (b) seventeen. (228)

In Ânata Kalpa (a) is nineteen Sâgarôpamâs, (b) eighteen. (229)

In Prânata Kalpa (a) is twenty Sâgarôpamâs, (b) nineteen. (230)

In Ârana Kalpa (a) is twenty-one Sâgarôpamâs, (b) twenty. (231)

In Akÿuta Kalpa (a) is twenty-two Sâgarôpamâs, (b) twenty-one. (232)

In the first (Graivâyika region) (a) is twenty-three Sâgarôpamâs, (b) twenty-two. (233)

In the second (Graivâyika region) (a) is twenty-four Sâgarôpamâs, (b) twenty-three. (234)

In the third (Graivâyika region) (a) is twenty-five Sâgarôpamâs, (b) twenty-four. (235)

In the fourth (Graivâyika region) (a) is twenty-six Sâgarôpamâs, (b) twenty-five. (236)

In the fifth (Graivâyika region) (a) is twenty-seven Sâgarôpamâs, (b) twenty-six. (237)

In the sixth (Graivâyika region) (a) is twenty-eight Sâgarôpamâs, (b) twenty-seven. (238)

In the seventh (Graivâyika region) (a) is twenty-nine Sâgarôpamâs, (b) twenty-eight. (239)

In the eighth (Graivâyika region) (a) is thirty Sâgarôpamâs, (b) twenty-nine. (240)

In the ninth (Graivâyika region) (a) is thirty-one Sâgarôpamâs, (b) thirty. (241)

In the four heavens (of the Anuttara gods), be-

¹ From this verse to verse 241 the length of life increases by one Sâgarôpamâ in each following class of gods.

ginning with Vigaya¹, (a) is thirty-three Sâgarô-pamâs, (b) thirty-one. (242)

In the great Vimâna Sarvârtha(siddha) there is no difference between the longest and shortest duration of life, but it is always thirty-three Sâgarô-pamâs. (243)

The longest and shortest duration of the gods' (continuance in the same kind of) body is equal to that which has been given for their life. (244, 245², 246 = 159, 160)

We have described the Living Beings, the worldly and the perfected ones, and we have described the Lifeless Things, those possessing form and those without form. (247)

Having thus learned (the nature of) living beings and lifeless things which is in accordance with the principles of reasoning³, and believing in it, a sage should delight in self-control. (248)

After having lived as a Sramana many years, a sage should mortify himself⁴ by the following religious exercises. (249)

The longest duration of the mortification is twelve years; the middle, one year; and the shortest, six months. (250)

¹ Viz. Vigaya, Vaigayanta, Gayanta, and Aparâgita.

² Two MSS. (A and D) insert after verses 245 the following two verses: The longest interval between a Graivâyika's leaving his rank in Ânata, &c., and being again born to it, is an endless time, the shortest is from two to nine years. In the case of Anuttara gods the longest interval is a Sâgarôpamâ plus one Samkhyêya, the shortest is from two to nine years.

³ Naya.

⁴ The last self-mortification, samlekhanâ, which is to end with death, is intended here. Some details about it will be found in part i, p. 74 ^α.

In the first four years he should abstain from dressed food¹, in the second four years he should keep various fasts. (251)

During two years he should eat Âkâmla² at the end of every second fast; in the following half year he should keep not too long fasts. (252)

In the second half of the year he should keep long fasts. During the whole year he should eat but small portions of Âkâmla². (253)

During the (last) year a sage should make the ends of two consecutive fasts meet³, and should break his fast after half a month or a whole month, (till he dies). (254)

The following (Bhâvanâs), Kandarpa-, Âbhiyôgika-, Kilvisha-, Môha-, and Asuratva-(Bhâvanâs⁴), will lead to evil ways (i. e. bad births); they are obnoxious at the time of death. (255)

Those souls who cherish heretical opinions, commit sins, and kill living beings, will not reach Bôdhi at the time of death. (256)

Those souls who cherish orthodox opinions, do not commit sins, and are enveloped in white Lêsya, will reach Bôdhi at the time of death. (257)

¹ Vigat-niggôhana. The meaning is that at the end of his fasts a monk should eat âkâmla, nirvikritika, &c. In the Avatûri a verse from the Nisithakûrni is quoted, which gives the same rule for the second four years.

² Âyâma = âkâmla. Is this the same thing as the âyâмага = âkâmakâ mentioned XV, 13? See above, p. 72, note 2.

³ Kôdisahiyam âyamam = kôdisahitam âkâmlam. The commentators give two explanations of this phrase: (1) Having fasted one day, one should take âkâmla on the next day; (2) one should on the second day continue to abstain from âkâmla.

⁴ The definition of these technical terms is given below, verses 262 ff.

Those souls who cherish heretical opinions, commit sins, and are enveloped in black Lêsyâ, will not reach Bôdhi at the time of death. (258)

Those who love the creed of the Ginas and piously practise it, will be pure and free from the soil (of passions), and will (in due time) get out of the Circle of Births. (259)

The miserable men who do not know the creed of the Ginas, will many times commit unholy suicide and die against their will. (260)

Those who are well versed in the sacred lore and possess much knowledge, who awaken piety (in others) and appreciate their good qualities, are for this very reason worthy to hear the doctrine of salvation¹. (261)

He who by ribaldry and buffoonery, by his comical habits and appearance, by jests and words amuses other people, realises the Kandarpa-Bhâvanâ. (262)

Those who practise spells and besmear their body with ashes for the sake of pleasure, amusement, or power, realise the *Âbhiyôgika-Bhâvanâ*². (263)

The deceitful man who reviles the sacred lore, the Kêvalins, the teacher of the Law, the Saṅgha, and the monks, realises the Kilvishika-Bhâvanâ. (264)

He who is continuously angry, and who puts his faith in prognostics, realises the Asuratva-Bhâvanâ. (265)

Those who use weapons, eat poison, throw them-

¹ Âlôkanâ = sramanaphalam. The Avatûri renders the last phrase: 'They are able to bring about the salvation of others.' The original, however, has sôum, 'to hear.'

² The Abhiyôgidêvas are genii who serve the gods. This Bhâvanâ leads to being born as an Abhiyôgidêva; the next two Bhâvanâs, as a Kilvishadêva and an Asura.

selves into fire or water, and use things not prescribed by the rules of good conduct, are liable to be born and to die again and again. (Such persons realise the Môha-Bhâvanâ.) (266)

The enlightened and liberated Gñâtri(putra) has thus delivered Thirty-six Lectures of the Uttarâdhyayana¹, which the pious² approve of. (267)

¹ Uttaragghâê in the original. The commentators give uttara here the meaning pradhâna, 'best, prominent.' The same explanation is given by the scholiast on the Nandî (Weber, Sacred Literature of the Jains, p. 124). Perhaps the name refers to the tradition that Mahāvîra recited at the time of his death the thirty-six aputtiha-vâgaranâim, which are identified by one commentator of the Kalpa Sûtra (Lives of the Ginas, § 147) with the Uttarâdhyayana; for uttara also means 'last.'

² Bhavasiddhîya=bhavasiddhika, explained by bhavya.

SŪTRAKRITÂṄGA.

SÛTRAKRITÂNGA.

FIRST BOOK¹.

FIRST LECTURE,

CALLED

THE DOCTRINE ².

FIRST CHAPTER.

One should know what causes the bondage of Soul, and knowing (it) one should remove³ it.

(Gambûsvâmin asked Sudharman):

What causes the bondage (of Soul) according to Mahâvîra? and what must one know in order to remove it? (1)

(Sudharman answered):

He who owns even a small property in living or lifeless things⁴, or consents to others holding it, will not be delivered from misery. (2)

¹ Srutaskandha. Its Sanskrit title mentioned by Śilânka is Gâthâshôḍaśaka, i.e. the book whose Sixteenth Lecture is called Gâthâ. It is mentioned in the Uttarâdhyayana XXXI, 13 by the name of the sixteen Gâthas; see above, p. 182.

² Samaya. This title is not found in MSS. at the end of the lecture, but it is given by the author of the Niryukti (verse 29). The subject of this lecture is more fully treated in §§ 15-33 of the First Lecture of the Second Book.

³ Tiu//iggâ. The commentators translate this word trô/ayêt, but the true Sanskrit original is ativartêta, as is evident from the form atiu//anti in I, 2, 22.

⁴ Living and lifeless things as we understand these words, not

If a man kills living beings, or causes other men to kill them, or consents to their killing them, his iniquity will go on increasing. (3)

A sinner who makes the interests of his kinsmen¹ and companions his own, will suffer much; for the number of those whose interest he takes to heart constantly increases. (4)

All this, his wealth and his nearest relations, cannot protect him (from future misery); knowing (this) and (the value of) life, he will get rid of Karman. (5)

Some men², Sramanas and Brâhmanas, who ignore and deny these true words³, adhere (to their own tenets), and are given to pleasures. (6)

Some⁴ profess (the exclusive belief in) the five gross elements: earth, water, fire, wind, and air. (7)

‘These five gross elements (are the original causes of things), from them arises another (thing, viz. âtman)⁵; for on the dissolution of the (five elements) living beings cease to exist. (8)

as the Gainas do. The original has: kittamantam akittam vâ, beings possessed of intellect, and things without intellect. The latter are, according to Gaina notions, living beings gîva as well as inanimate matter.

¹ Literally, those in whose family he is born. Silânka, the author of the oldest Tikâ on the Sûtrakritāṅga, names the Râsh/rakûtas or Râthors in order to illustrate what is meant by ‘family.’

² According to Silânka the Bauddhas, Bârhaspatyas, and others are intended.

³ Grantha, passage in a book. The verses 2-5 are intended.

⁴ They are the Nâstikas or Kârvâkas.

⁵ In other words the Âtman is produced by the elements. But there is, it would seem, but one Âtman, for in verses 11, 12, we have another heretical philosophy which acknowledged a plurality of transient âtmans.

‘And as the Earth, though it is but one pile, presents many forms, so the intelligent (principle, viz. the âtman) appears under various forms as the universe¹.’ (9)

Thus say some fools. (But how can they explain on their theory that) the man engaging in undertakings, who has committed a sin, will himself suffer severe pain²? (10)

‘Everybody, fool or sage, has an individual soul. These souls exist (as long as the body), but after death they are no more; there are no souls which are born again. (11)

‘There is neither virtue nor vice, there is no world beyond; on the dissolution of the body the individual ceases to be.’ (12)

‘When a man acts or causes another to act, it is not his soul (âtman) which acts or causes to act³.’ Thus they (viz. the adherents of the Sânkhya philosophy) boldly proclaim. (13)

How can those who hold such opinions explain (the variety of existence in) the world? They go from darkness to utter darkness, being fools and engaged in works. (14)

Some⁴ say that there are five elements and that

¹ This is the doctrine of the Vêdântins.

² If there were but one âtman common to all men, the fruit of works done by one man might accrue to another. For the âtman is the substratum of merit and demerit.

³ Though there is no doubt about the meaning of this passage, still the construction is so elliptic that I may have failed to understand the connection of the parts of the sentence.

⁴ This is the opinion expressed by Karaka and in the early law-books, see Professor Jolly’s paper in the Transactions of the Ninth International Congress of Orientalists, vol. i, p. 456. Silânka ascribes it to the *Sânkhya*s and *Saivâdhikârin*s.

the soul is a sixth (substance), but they contend that the soul and the world (i.e. the five elements) are eternal. (15)

‘These (six substances) do not perish neither (without nor with a cause); the non-existent does not come into existence, but all things are eternal by their very nature¹.’ (16)

Some fools² say that there are five skandhas of momentary existence. They do not admit that (the soul) is different from, nor identical³ with (the elements), that it is produced from a cause (i.e. the elements), nor that it is without a cause (i.e. that it is eternal). (17)

The *Gāṇayas*⁴ say that there are four elements : earth, water, fire, and wind, which combined form the body (or soul?). (18)

(All these heretics say): ‘Those who dwell in houses, in woods, or on hills, will be delivered from all misery if they adopt our creed.’ (19)

¹ Niyatībhāvam āgayā. Niyatī is explained by nityabhāva.

² Viz. the Bauddhas. The five skandhas are explained in the commentary as follows: 1. rūpaskandha, or substances and their qualities; 2. vêdanâskandha, feelings, as pleasure and pain; 3. vigñânaskandha, perceptions of the qualities of things; 4. saṃgñâskandha, perception and knowledge of things; 5. saṃskâraskandha, merit and demerit.

³ Identical, i.e. a product of the elements as the Kârvâkas maintain.

⁴ Gāṇaya, which is explained in the Dīpikā by gñânaka = panditammanya, denotes the Bauddhas. I think that the word may be derived from yâna ‘vehicle,’ which the Buddhist used to designate the two sections of the church, viz. the Hīnayâna and Mahâyâna schools. The commentator quotes a various reading: âvarê for gāṇayâ, and explains it as referring to another sect of Bauddhas than those spoken of in the preceding verse. Silânka comments on the reading avvarê first, and then on gāṇaya.

But they do not cross the Flood of Life, who, ignoring the true relation of things, and not versed in the true Law, hold the above heretical opinions. (20)

They do not reach the end of the Samsâra, who, ignoring, &c. (21)

They do not reach the end of transmigration, who, &c. (22)

They do not put an end to birth, who, &c. (23)

They do not put an end to misery, who, &c. (24)

They do not put an end to death, who, &c. (25)

They will again and again experience manifold pains in this ring¹ of the earth, which is full of death, disease, and old age. (26)

The highest Gina, Mahâvîra the Gñâtriputra, has said that they will undergo births without number, being placed in all sorts of existences. (27)

Thus I say.

SECOND CHAPTER.

Again some² say: 'It is proved that there are individual souls; they experience pleasure and pain; and (on dying) they lose their state of life. (1)

'But misery (and pleasure) is not caused by (the souls) themselves; how could it be caused by other (agents, as time, &c.)? Pleasure and misery, final beatitude³ and temporal (pleasure and pain) are not ¹ Kakravâla.

² They are the fatalists whose peculiar opinions are stated in verses 2 and 3.

³ Sêhiyam = saiddhikam, i.e. môkshê bhavam sukham. Another explanation of the commentator makes saiddhika those pleasures which depend on external causes, as wreaths, sandal, &c., and asaiddhika the pleasures of the mind.

caused by (the souls) themselves, nor by others ; but the individual souls experience them ; it is the lot assigned them by destiny.' This is what they (i.e. the fatalists) say. (2, 3)

Those who proclaim these opinions, are fools who fancy themselves learned ; they have no knowledge, and do not understand that things depend partly on fate, and partly on human exertion ¹. (4)

Thus (say) some heretics² ; they are very bold men ; if they act up to their principles, they will never be delivered from misery. (5)

As the swift deer who are destitute of protection, are frightened where there is no danger, and not frightened where there is danger ; (6)

(As) they dread safe places, but do not dread traps ; they are bewildered by ignorance and fear, and run hither and thither ; (7)

If they did jump over the noose or pass under it, they would escape from the snare ; but the stupid animal does not notice ³ it ; (8)

The unhappy animal, being of a weak intellect, runs into the dangerous (place), is caught in the snare, &c., and is killed there ; (9)

So some unworthy Sramanas who hold wrong doctrines are afraid of what is free from danger, and are not afraid of real dangers. (10)

The fools dread the preaching of the Law, but they do not dread works, being without discernment and knowledge. (11)

¹ To render niyatâniyatam.

² Pâsattha, usually translated pâṣvastha 'outsider,' those who do not acknowledge true arguments; another rendering is pâṣastha 'held in bondage.'

³ Dêhati = pasyati. The form dekkhati occurs in the Prâkrit of plays.

Shaking off greed¹, pride², deceit³, and wrath⁴, one becomes free from Karman. This is a subject (which an ignorant man, like) a brute animal, does not attend to. (12)

The unworthy heretics who do not acknowledge this, will incur death an endless number of times, like deer caught in a snare. (13)

All Brâhmanas and Sramanas contend that they possess the knowledge (of the truth), but the creatures in the whole world do not know anything. (14)

As a Mlêkkha⁵ repeats what an Ârya has said, but does not understand the meaning, merely repeating his words, so the ignorant, though pretending to possess knowledge, do not know the truth, just as an uninstructed Mlêkkha. (15, 16)

The speculations of the Agnostics cannot lead to knowledge; they cannot reach the truth by themselves, still less teach it to other men. (17)

As when a man in a wood who does not know it, follows a guide who also does not know it, both being unacquainted (with the place), come to great trouble; (18)

As when one blind man is the guide of another, the man walks a great distance, loses his way, or follows a wrong way; (19)

Thus some who search after salvation and pretend

¹ Savvappaga = sarvâtmaka, lôbha.

² Viukkassa = vyutkarsha, mâna.

³ Nâma = mâyâ.

⁴ Appattiya = krôdha.

⁵ It is worthy of note that the Mlêkkhas here are represented as not understanding the language of the Âryas.

to practise the (true) Law, follow the false Law and do not arrive at the thoroughly right (thing, viz. self-control). (20)

Thus some (wrong philosophers) do not apply to others for arguments, but they continue to err because they believe their own arguments to be right¹. (21)

Thus arguing according to their light, and ignorant about what is right and wrong, they do not get out of misery as birds do not get out of their cage. (22)

They praise their own creed and blame that of their opponents, but those who act in this respect the part of philosophers, will be kept confined in the Circle of Births². (23)

There is the doctrine of the Kriyāvādins³, which has been previously explained; it augments the misery of worldly existence of those who do not well consider the nature of acts. (24)

‘He who intends (to kill) a living being but does not do it by (an act of) his body, and he who unknowingly kills one, both are affected by that act through a slight contact (with it) only, but the demerit (in their case) is not fully developed⁴.’ (25)

¹ The last part of the verse might also be translated: ‘because these fools believe the subject to be cleared up (maṅgū) by their own arguments.’

² There is a play on the words viussanti and viussiyā, in the last line of this verse viussanti is a denominative verb from viusa=vidvān, and is translated vidvān ivā karati. Viussiya =vi+ut+srita.

³ See above, p. 83. Śīlāṅka defines the Kriyāvādins here as men who contend that the principal means of reaching Mōksha is kaitiyakarma, the construction of sanctuaries.

⁴ An intentional killing of a living being must actually take place in order to induce the Karman on the soul. If one of the essential conditions which constitute the guilt of slaughter (hiṁsā),

‘There are three ways of committing sins: by one’s own activity, by commission, by approval (of the deed). (26)

‘These are the three ways of committing sins. Thus by purity of the heart one reaches Nirvâṇa. (27)

‘A layman may kill his son (during a famine) and eat him; a wise (monk) who partakes of the meat, will not be defiled by the sin¹.’ (28)

The mind of those who sin in thoughts is not pure; they are wrong, they do not conduct themselves carefully². (29)

Men attached to pleasure, who think that the above-mentioned doctrines will save them, commit sins. (30)

As a blind-born man getting into a leaky boat, wants to reach the shore, but is drowned during the passage³, so some unworthy, heretical Sramanas wish to get beyond the Circle of Births, but they are whirled round in it. (31, 32)

Thus I say.

THIRD CHAPTER.

If a monk should eat forbidden food which a pious (layman) has prepared for some guest, and which food has been mixed up with even thousand (times more is wanting the Karman is still produced; however, it does not take a firm hold of the soul, but merely ‘touches’ it. This is of course the opinion of the Kriyāvādins.

¹ According to Śilāṅka the father too would not be guilty; but this interpretation is against good sense and grammar.

² This is the answer of the Siddhāntin to the foregoing propositions.

³ The same verse recurs below, I, 11, 30.

pure food)¹, he would be neither monk nor layman. (1)

Sramanas who do not comprehend this and do not know what is dangerous, who care for the pleasures of the moment only, will suffer death an endless number of times, like big² fishes who when the water rises are by the water (deposited) on dry land and are killed (there), poor things, by hungry dhaṅkas and herons. (2-4)

We hear also of another error of some (philosophers) : some say that the world has been created (or is governed)³ by the gods, others, by Brahman. (5)

Some⁴ say that it has been created by the Īsvara, others that it was produced from chaos, &c., this world with living beings and lifeless things, with its variety of pleasure and pain. (6)

The great *Rishi*⁵ said, that the world has been created by Svayambhū; Māra originated Māyā, therefore the world (appears to be) uneternal. (7)

Some Brāhmanas and Sramanas say that the

¹ This might also be translated: 'though the food passes through the hands of a thousand men before he accepts it.'

² Vēsāliya = vaisālika. The commentators offer three explanations of this word, (1) marine, visālaḥ samudras tatra-bhavāḥ; (2) belonging to the genus called visāla; (3) big, visāla.

³ Dēvauttē. This is either dēvair upaḥ, sown, i.e. produced by the gods, or dēvair guptaḥ, governed by the gods.

⁴ The adherents of the Yōga and Sāṅkhya philosophy, or the theistical and atheistical followers of the latter, are apparently meant by 'some' and 'others.'

⁵ The commentators unfortunately have not preserved the name of the great Rishi; they identify Svayambhū with Vishṇu 'or some one else.' This Svayambhū, afraid that the earth should become overcrowded, called to help Yama, alias Māra, who with the help of Māyā makes the creatures appear to die.

universe was produced from the (primeval) egg, and He (Brahman) created the things. These ignorant men speak untruth. (8)

Those who on arguments of their own maintain that the world has been created, do not know the truth. Nor will (the world) ever perish. (9)

Know that misery arises from wicked deeds¹. How can those who do not know the origin (of misery) know its prevention? (10)

Some say that the soul (of him who is) pure will become free from bad Karman (on reaching beatitude), but that in that state it will again become defiled through pleasant excitement or hate. (11)

(According to them²) he who has lived on earth as a restrained monk, will afterwards become free from Karman. As clear water which was free from defilement becomes again defiled, so (will be the soul). (12)

A wise man should consider that these (heretics) do not lead a life of chastity, and that all these disputants proclaim their own creed in opposition (to the others). (13)

(Others³ maintain that) perfection can only be reached by their method of religious life, not otherwise; and that even before (that time) they have

¹ It is not given us by any of the above-mentioned agents whom the opponents believe to have created the world.

² According to Sīlāṅka the followers of Gōśāla and the Trairāśikas are meant. The latter are the Gaiṇa followers of the Vairēshika philosophy. The Trairāśika Sākhā was founded by Khaluka Rôhagupta, see part i, p. 290. The name Trairāśika is said to have been given to these philosophers because they admit a third state besides those of the bound and of the liberated.

³ According to Sīlāṅka the Saivas and Ekadāṇḍins are meant.

their senses under control and possess everything to be wished for¹. (14)

Some say that they will be perfected and sound. On the head of Perfection some men are infatuated with their own doctrines. (15)

But these uncontrolled (men) will whirl round in the beginningless (Circle of Births); after a Kalpa they will rise from their sphere to become the lowest of Asuras². (16)

Thus I say.

FOURTH CHAPTER.

These (philosophers) who are vanquished (by their passions) cannot help you in cases where a sinner perishes³; though having given up their former occupations they will give advice in worldly matters. (1)

A wise monk who fully appreciates this, should not mix with those (heretics); without conceit and not attached to them a sage should lead a life equally removed (from love and hate). (2)

Some say that those who own possessions and engage in undertakings (may reach perfection); but a monk should take his refuge to those who neither own possessions nor engage in undertakings. (3)

A wise man should beg food which has been

¹ They acquire the eight siddhis or magical powers.

² I translate the words ihânâ âsurakivvisiyâ according to the explanation of the commentary. But they may also mean: from the sphere of Asuras and sinners.

³ A various reading first commented upon by Silânka is: bâlâ panditamâninô, being ignorant men who fancy themselves learned.

prepared (for somebody else), and he should accept what is freely given him, without greed and passions; he should abstain from overbearing behaviour¹. (4)

He should know the talk of people: some say things which are the outcome of a wrong understanding and are but opinions of others repeated. (5)

'The world is boundless and eternal, it exists from eternity and does not perish²; (another) bold philosopher³ says that the world is limited, but eternal. (6)

'Some say that the knowledge (of the highest authority) is unlimited; but the same bold philosopher says that it is limited in every way⁴.' (7)

Some beings have motion, others not; it depends on certain conditions whether they are in the one state or in the other. (8)

(E.g. big creatures) have one form of bodily existence and then another⁵. But all are subject to pain; hence they should not be killed. (9)

This is the quintessence of wisdom: not to kill anything. Know this to be the legitimate conclusion

¹ Omâna = apamâna.

² According to Sîlânka the eternity of things means, with these philosophers, that one thing always retains the same genus or gâti, e. g. that he who was a man in this life will again be a man in the next.

³ According to the commentators Vyâsa is intended. The doctrine referred to in the text is that of the Purânas.

⁴ The commentators interpret this verse as if not two philosophical opinions but only one was spoken of. Unlimited knowledge is according to them different from omniscience; in the second part of the sentence 'limited' refers to the sleep of Brahman during which he is unconscious.

⁵ Men are some time embryos, then young men, then old men.

from the principle of the reciprocity with regard to non-killing¹. (10)

Living (according to the rules of conduct), and without greed, one should take care of the highest good².

In walking, in sitting and lying down, and in food and drink : with regard to these three points a monk should always control himself.

And he should leave off pride³, wrath⁴, deceit⁵, and greed⁶. (11, 12)

Possessing the Samitis and being protected by the five Samvaras, a pious monk should live, till he reaches perfection, as a man free from fetters among those bound in fetters (viz. the householders). (13)

Thus I say.

¹ Ahimsâsamayam = ahimsâsamatâm, viz. as you do not wish to be killed, so others do not wish to be killed. The last part of the sentence might also be translated : know this to be the real meaning of the Law (samaya) of ahimsâ. The same verse recurs I, 11, 10.

² Âdâna, right knowledge, right faith, and right conduct.

³ Ukkasa = utkarsha, mâna.

⁴ Galana = gvalana, krôdha.

⁵ Nûma = mâyâ.

⁶ Maggâattha = madhyastha, lôbha. Compare the similar expressions in I, 1, 2, 12, above, p. 241, notes 1-4, and I, 2, 2, 29, below, p. 257.

SECOND LECTURE¹,

CALLED

THE DESTRUCTION OF KARMAN.

FIRST CHAPTER.

(Rishabha said to his sons):

Acquire perfect knowledge of the Law! why do you not study it? It is difficult to obtain instruction in it after this life. The days (that are gone by) will never return, nor is it easy a second time to obtain human birth. (1)

See, young and old men, even children in the mother's womb die. As a hawk catches a quail, so (life) will end when its time is spent². (2)

¹ The name of this lecture, which occurs in its last line, is vêyâlîya, because, as the author of the Niryukti remarks, it treats on vidârika, destruction (of Karman), and because it is composed in the Vaitâlîya metre. For either word, vaidârika (or rather vaidâlîka, cf. karmavidalana) and vaitâlîya may, in Gaina Prâkrîṭ, become vêyâlîya or vêtâlîya. A play of words was apparently intended; it would have been impossible, if both words had not become identical in sound. We may, therefore, conclude that the language of the author obeyed the same phonetic laws as the Gaina Prâkrîṭ exhibited in our MSS., or in other words, that the text has been written down in about the same language in which it was originally composed. The name of the Fifteenth Lecture leads to the same inference; for it is called gamaṭîya (yamakîya) because each of its verses contains the verbal ornament called yamaka, and because it opens with the words gam aṭîyam (yad atîtam).

² One MS. here inserts gîvâṇa gîviyam, the life of living beings.

(A man) may suffer for the sake of his parents ; he will not easily obtain happiness after this life. A pious man should consider these causes of danger and cease to act. (3)

For in this world living beings suffer individually for their deeds ; for the deed they have done themselves, they obtain (punishment), and will not get over it before they have felt it. (4)

Even gods, Gandharvas, Râkshasas, and Asuras ; animals who live on earth, and snakes ; kings, common people, merchants, and Brâhmaṇas : they all must leave their rank and suffer. (5)

Notwithstanding their pleasures and relations, all men must suffer in due time the fruit of their works ; as a cocoa-nut detaching itself from its stalk (falls down), so (life) will end when its time is spent. (6)

Even a very learned or virtuous man, or a Brâhmaṇa or an ascetic, will be severely punished for his deed when he is given to actions of deceit¹. (7)

See, those (heretics) who search for the knowledge of truth, but who do not cross the Samsâra, talk only about the highest good (without reaching it).

How will you understand what is near you and what is beyond²? In the meanwhile you suffer for your deeds. (8)

He who walks about naked and lean, he who eats only once after a month, if he is filled with deceit, will be born an endless number of times. (9)

¹ Abhinâma.

² According to Sîlânka, this world and the next, or domestic life and monachism, or the Samsâra and Môksha are meant by the expression 'what is near you and what is beyond.'

Man, cease from sins! For the life of men will come to an end¹. Men who are drowned (in lust, as it were), and addicted to pleasure will, for want of control, be deluded². (10)

Exert and control yourself! For it is not easy to walk on ways where there are minutely small animals. Follow the commandments which the Arhats have well proclaimed³. (11)

Heroes (of faith) who desist (from sins) and exert themselves aright, who subdue wrath, fear, &c., will never kill living beings; they desist from sins and are entirely happy. (12)

It is not myself alone who suffers, all creatures in the world suffer; this a wise man⁴ should consider, and he should patiently bear (such calamities) as befall him, without giving way to his passions. (13)

As a wall covered with a plastering (of dried cow-dung)⁵ is by a shock made thin, so (a monk) should make his body lean by fasting, &c. He should ¹ Paliyantam. Another explanation of this word, preferred by the commentators, is palyôpamasya antar: within, i.e. something shorter than a Palyôpamâ.

² Or, acquire Karman which is to result in delusion.

³ According to the commentators: practise (control) according to the sâsana (i.e. sûtras); this has been well declared by the Arhats.

⁴ Sahie. This word is explained sometimes by svahita, intent on his spiritual welfare, sometimes by hitena gñânâdinâ sahitaḥ, possessed of knowledge, &c. I translate it 'wise,' and derive the word from Sanskrit sahrîdaya, the correct Prâkrîṭ for which would be sahiyae.

⁵ Cow-dung is stuck, in the form of flat round cakes, against a wall to dry there. When the cakes are dried a little shake is sufficient to make them come down, whereby the wall will be restored to its original shape and dimensions.

abstain from slaughter of living beings. This is the Law proclaimed by the Sage. (14)

As a bird covered with dust removes the grey powder by shaking itself, so a worthy and austere Brāhmaṇa¹, who does penance, annihilates his Karman. (15)

Young and old people claim a houseless Sramana as their own, though he begs according to the Law, observes the rules of conduct, and performs austerities. People will even cry themselves hoarse, but they will not captivate him. (16)

Whatever they will do to move his pity, however they will cry about their son, they will not captivate a worthy and virtuous monk or make him return to domestic life. (17)

Though they tempt him with pleasures, and though they should bind him and carry him home, if he does not care for a (worldly) life, they will not captivate him or make him return to domestic life. (18)

His father and mother, his children and wife who claim him, will admonish him : 'See, you are our supporter ; care not for the next world in order to support us.' (19)

Some people are (foolishly) attached to others, and are thereby deluded ; the unrighteous make them adopt unrighteousness, and they exult in their wickedness. (20)

Therefore a worthy and wise man should be careful, ceasing from sin and being entirely happy. The virtuous heroes of faith (have chosen) the great road, the right and certain path to perfection. (21)

¹ Māhana = brāhmaṇa. The commentator derives the word from mā and root han! The word is a synonym of muni, with which it frequently occurs in the same verse and has then been left out in the translation.

He who has entered the road leading to the destruction (of Karman)¹, who controls his mind, speech, and body, who has given up his possessions and relations and all undertakings, should walk about subduing his senses. (22)

SECOND CHAPTER.

A sage thinks that he should leave off sins just as (a snake) leaves its slough; and he is not proud of his Gôtra and other advantages; or is there any use in blaming others? (1)

A man who insults another will long whirl in the Circle of Births; to blame others is not good. Considering this a sage is not conceited. (2)

He who is independent, and he who is the servant of a servant, if they but observe the Vow of Silence², they have no reason to be ashamed; (therefore a monk) should behave equally towards all. (3)

Indifferent and pure with regard to every kind of control, a Sramana should walk about; he who entertains pure thoughts during his whole life, dies as a worthy and wise man. (4)

The sage who sees the far-off (goal, viz. liberation), past and future things, will practise indifference, though he suffer corporal punishment and be beaten. (5)

Possessing perfect wisdom, a sage always vanquishes (his passions); he correctly expounds the

¹ Vêyâliya-maggam.

² Maunapada.

Law; he never neglects even the smallest (duty); he is neither angry nor proud. (6)

A man who controls himself according to (the Law), which is praised by many people, and is not bound by any worldly ties, who is always pure like a lake, proclaims the Law of Kâsyapa. (7)

Seeing that numerous living beings lead an individual life, and that every one feels (pleasure and pain) just as the others, a wise man who observes the Vow of Silence, leaves off (injuring them). (8)

A sage has completely mastered the Law, and has ceased to do actions; but the selfish grieve, they will not (thereby) recover their (lost) property¹. (9)

Know that it (viz. property) entails pains in this world, and very great pains² in the next. Who will lead a domestic life when he knows that everything must perish? (10)

One should know (and renounce) the great attachment (to the world), and respect and honours on earth; (for conceit) is a very thin thorn difficult to pull out. A wise man, therefore, should abandon worldliness³. (11)

A monk should perform postures (as Kâyôtsarga, &c.) alone on his seat, and alone on his couch he should meditate; excelling in the performance of austerities, guarded in words, and restrained in thoughts. (12)

¹ Sîlânka quotes a verse which the Nâgârguṇīyas insert here; compare part i, p. 32, note 2.

² I take duhaṃduha for a kind of intensive form of duha.

³ This is a rather dark verse. Sîlânka, after explaining it, quotes the verse as it was read by the Nâgârguṇīyas, which may be rendered thus: Respect and honours are a great obstacle, this he should know; be the thorn small (or) difficult to pull out, a wise man should remove it by the (means we are about to describe).

An ascetic does not shut the door of a deserted house (where he puts up), nor does he open it; when asked he returns no (rude) answer; he cuts no grass, nor does he strew it (on the ground for a couch). (13)

Where (he is) at sunset, there he calmly (performs his duties); a sage bears pleasant and unpleasant things, be there insects, or wild beasts, or snakes. (14)

He bears the three kinds of calamities arising from beasts, men, and gods. A great sage will not be seized with a shivering, &c.¹, when he stays in a deserted house. (15)

He should not fear for his life, nor should he desire to be praised (for his courage). Fearful things will frighten the mind of a monk who stays in a deserted house. (16)

They say that he who is very well disciplined, who protects others, who lives in a place removed from other people, who is not frightened by dangers, possesses right conduct, &c. (17)

A monk who uses warm or hot water², who follows the Law, and loathes (wrong conduct), will by intercourse with bad kings become deficient in his devotion though he be ever so virtuous. (18)

When a monk quarrels and uses very bad language, he will suffer great spiritual loss; therefore a wise man should not quarrel. (19)

He who abstains from cold water², who plans (or undertakes) nothing, and has ceased from even the smallest actions, who does not eat food out of the dish of a householder, possesses right conduct, &c. (20)

¹ Literally, horripilation. By the ' &c.' the other outward signs of horror are indicated.

² It should be kept in mind that Gaina monks are forbidden to use cold water, because it is considered to possess life.

Though life cannot be prolonged, as the saying is¹, still foolish people sin recklessly; a foolish man is filled to the brim (as it were) with sins. Considering this a sage is not conceited. (21)

By self-invented rites common people seek holiness², they are full of deceit and shrouded (as it were) in delusion. But a monk is holy² through his innocence, he allows no troubles³ to influence his words, (thoughts, and acts). (22)

As a clever gambler, playing at dice, is not vanquished, since he casts the Kṛita, but not Kali, nor Trêta, nor Dvâpara; (23)

So adopt for your welfare the best and highest Law which has been proclaimed in this world by the Saviour, as the clever (gambler casts) the Kṛita, and avoids the other casts. (24)

I have heard that sensual pleasures are said to have the strongest hold on men; but those who abstain from them follow the Law of Kâsyapa. (25)

Those who follow the Law that has been proclaimed by Gñâtrika, the great seer⁴, are virtuous and righteous; they confirm each other in the Law. (26)

Take no heed of the seductive (pleasures), endeavour to shake off delusion. Those who are not subdued by the wicked (pleasures), know meditation to be their duty⁵. (27)

¹ Compare Uttarâdhyayana IV, 1, above p. 18. The same words recur below, I, 2, 3, 10, p. 259.

² Palêti = praliyatê.

³ Literally, cold and heat.

⁴ Mahâvîra.

⁵ Âhitam, literally, has been declared. The commentators explain the word as â-hitam, thoroughly good, or âtmani vyavasthitam, placed in the soul.

A monk should not tell stories, nor ask idle questions, nor gossip¹. But, knowing the highest Law, he should perform his religious duties, and regard nothing his own. (28)

A monk should not indulge deceit², greed³, pride⁴, and wrath⁵. Those are virtuous who have arrived at the right understanding of these passions, and who have well practised control⁶. (29)

(A monk) should be free from attachment, wise, controlling himself, seeking the Law, earnest in the performance of austerities, and subduing his senses. It is difficult to obtain the soul's benefit. (30)

Right conduct, &c., which has been taught by the Gñātrika, the sage who knew everything in the whole world, has either not been learned or not been truly practised (by creatures now in distress). (31)

Many men who thought this Law to be the highest good and conducive to their spiritual welfare, obeyed their preceptors, ceased from works, and have crossed the great flood (of worldly existence). (32)

Thus I say.

THIRD CHAPTER.

If a monk who abstains from actions, suffers pain (for acts done) through ignorance, that Karman will ¹ Samprasāraṇa?

² Khanna = māyā.

³ Pasamsa = prasamsā, lōbha.

⁴ Ukkāsa = utkarsha, māna.

⁵ Pagāsa = prakāsa, krōdha.

⁶ Dhuya = dhūta. The word preceding this is sugōsiyam = gushṭam, sēvitam. A various reading is sugḥōsiyam, which means 'who have well annihilated their Karman (dhūta).'

be annihilated through control. The wise reach (perfection) getting rid of death. (1)

Those who resist the seductions¹ are placed on a line with those who have crossed the Samsāra. Therefore look up (at beatitude as the end in view). Those (virtuous men) regard pleasures as equal to diseases. (2)

Men of princely rank wear precious things imported by merchants; likened (to these precious things) are the excellent great vows together with (the prohibition of) eating at night. (3)

Pleasure-seeking men who are greedy and are absorbed by amusements, are reckless and like the wretched; they do not know that meditation (has been enjoined as) a duty. (4)

As a bullock which is hurt and urged on by the driver² becomes weak, and at last, when its strength is exhausted and it is unable to move, sinks down; (5)

So he who knows the pursuit of pleasures, must sooner or later give up their enjoyment (lest they drag him down³). He who is still surrounded by pleasant things⁴, should not love pleasures, whether he obtains them, or for some reason or other does not obtain them. (6)

Lest the lot of the wicked should fall to you, escape (the influence of the senses), and discipline yourself! The wicked will much and strongly grieve, groan, and wail. (7)

¹ Vinnavanā = viṅṇāpanā, explained striyaḥ.

² Instead of 'driver' and 'bullock' we might translate 'hunter' and 'deer.'

³ He should not be engrossed by them as the bullock sinks down beneath its burden.

⁴ To render kāmī.

See, life in this world (is transient); though your life lasts a hundred years, you die as a short-lived man; mind that (your) years swiftly pass. Nevertheless greedy men are attached to pleasures. (8)

Those who engage in undertakings, who work the perdition of their souls, and who kill (living beings), will go to the world of the wicked, to the abode of the Asuras for a long time (to dwell there). (9)

Though life cannot be prolonged, as the saying is¹, still foolish people sin recklessly (thinking): 'We are only concerned with the present time; who has seen the next world and returned thence?' (10)

Believe in the words of him who sees (everything), you who are blind, as it were, you whose sight is blinded, ah, whose sight is obstructed by your works which result in delusion! (11)

The unhappy again and again suffer from delusion; therefore have done with praise and honours! A wise ascetic should consider that living beings are like himself (as regards love of life, aversion to pain, &c.). (12)

The man also who still lives in the house, should, in accordance with his creed², be merciful to living beings; we are bidden to be fair and equal with all; (thereby even a householder) goes to the world of the gods. (13)

Being instructed in the creed of the Lord, exert yourself in the truth (i.e. in control)! A monk who has thoroughly subdued his selfishness should collect pure alms. (14)

Knowing the truth, one should live up to it,

¹ Compare p. 256, note 1.

² Ânupûrvyâ.

seeking the Law, earnest in the performance of austerities, possessing the Guptis, being accomplished, one should always exert oneself, intent on the soul's benefit, and desiring the highest good (viz. liberation). (15)

The fool thinks that his wealth, cattle, and relations will save him ; they him, or he them. But they are no help, no protection. (16)

When calamity befalls him, or the end of his life draws near, he must go and come alone ; the wise believe that there is nothing to protect him. (17)

All living beings owe their present form of existence to their own Karman ; timid, wicked, suffering latent misery, they err about (in the Circle of Births), subject to birth, old age, and death. (18)

He should know that the present time is the best opportunity to mend, and that an awakening is difficult to obtain. A wise man should be aware of this¹. The (first) *Gina*² has said this, and so the remaining ones (will) say it. (19)

O ye monks, the virtuous (Ginas) that have been and will be, the followers of the Law of Kâsyapa³, they all have commended these virtues. (20)

Do not kill living beings in the threefold way⁴, being intent on your spiritual welfare and abstaining from sins. In this way numberless men have reached

¹ A various reading mentioned in the commentary is ahiyâsaê, 'he should bear (all troubles).'

² The whole lecture is put by the commentators in the mouth of Rîshabha.

³ The first and last Tîrthakaras belonged to the Kâsyapa Gôtra.

⁴ I.e. by your own acts, by order, and by assent ; or by thoughts, words, and acts.

perfection, and others, who live now, and who are to come, (will reach it). (21)

Thus spoke the Arhat Gñâtriputra, the reverend, famous native of *Vaisâli*¹, who possessed the highest knowledge and the highest faith, who possessed (simultaneously) the highest knowledge and faith.

Thus I say.

THIRD LECTURE,

CALLED

THE KNOWLEDGE OF TROUBLES ².

FIRST CHAPTER.

A man believes himself a hero as long as he does not behold the foe, as did Sisupâla (before he beheld) the valorously-fighting, great warrior ³. (1)

They go forward to the head of the battle; but when the fight has begun the mother will not recognise her son, and he will be mangled by his foe. (2)

So a novice, who as yet has not suffered pains and is not yet used to a mendicant's life, believes himself a hero till he practises austerities ⁴. (3)

¹ See my remarks in part i, Introduction, p. xi. This passage in prose appended to the metrical text seems to contradict the supposition of the commentators that the whole lecture was pronounced by Rishabha.

² Compare Uttarâdhyayana II, above, p. 9 ff.

³ Viz. Krishna. Krishna's victory over Sisupâla is told in the Mahâbhârata, Sabhâparvan, Sisupâlavadha (eighth parvan). It forms the subject of Mâgha's famous poem Sisupâlavadha.

⁴ Lûham = rûksham, i.e. samyamam, control.

When during the winter they suffer from cold and draughts, the weak become disheartened like Kshatriyas who have lost their kingdom. (4)

When they suffer from the heat of summer, sad and thirsty, the weak become disheartened like fish in shallow water. (5)

It is painful never to take anything but what is freely given, and begging is a hard task. Common people say that (men become monks) because they will not work and are wretched. (6)

Weak men who are unable (to bear) these insults in villages or towns, become disheartened like cowards in the battle. (7)

Perchance a snarling dog will bite a hungry monk ; in that case the weak will become disheartened like animals burnt by fire. (8)

Some who hate (the monks), revile them : ' Those who lead such a (miserable) life (as monks do), atone but (for their sins in a former life).' (9)

Some call them names, as ' naked, lowest of beggars, baldhead, scabby, filthy, nasty.' (10)

Those who behave in this way and do not know better, go from darkness to utter darkness, being fools and shrouded in delusion¹. (11)

When bitten by flies and gnats, and unable (to bear) the pricking of grass, (they will begin to doubt), ' I have not seen the next world, all may end with death² ! ' (12)

Some weak men who suffer from the plucking out of the hair, and who are unable to preserve their chastity, will become disheartened like fish transfixed by a spear³. (13)

¹ Compare I, 1, 1, 14.

² Compare I, 3, 3, 6.

³ Kêṭana, perhaps ' caught with the hook.'

Some low people who lead a life of iniquity, and entertain heretical opinions, being subject to love and hatred, injure a monk. (14)

Some fools in outlying countries take a pious monk for a spy or a thief, bind him, and insult him with angry words. (15)

A weak monk being hurt with a stick or a fist or a fruit, remembers his (kind) relations, just as a woman who in a passion has left (her husband and house). (16)

All these hardships are difficult to bear; the weak return to their house (when they cannot bear them), like elephants covered with arrows (break down). (17)

Thus I say.

SECOND CHAPTER.

There are some tender affections which monks cannot easily overcome. On their account some become disheartened, and are unable to practise control. (1)

His relations on seeing him will surround him and cry: 'Child, we have brought you up, (now) support us! O dear! why will you leave us? (2)

'Child, your father is an old man; your sister is still very young; (and here), O dear, are your own brothers from the same mother; why will you leave us? (3)

'Support your mother and father, thus you will win this world; it is a duty in this world to protect one's mother. (4)

'The old people are kind-spoken; your sons, child, are very young; you have married your wife; (take care) that she will not go to another man. (5)

‘Come, child, let us go home; we can do all the work, you need not (do it); the next time we shall take care (that you will not be overburdened with work); child, let us meanwhile go to our house. (6)

‘Afterwards you may go again; by this (visit of yours) you will not cease to be a Sramana; who will hinder you to practise control when you have done with worldly desires¹? (7)

‘All your outstanding debts we have divided between us, and we shall give you the money (required for) business.’ (8)

In this way (his relations) come to him, lamenting, and try to persuade him. Held fast by his attachment for his relations, he quickly returns to his house. (9)

As a creeper encircles a tree growing in the forest, so his relations press him hard that he should leave off control. (10)

He is held fast by his attachment for his relations. So the keepers always follow a newly-caught elephant, and a cow which has just calved never goes far (from the calf). (11)

Men do not (easily) get over this attachment, as (they do not get over) the ocean². For its sake the weak suffer pains, being engrossed by their attachment for their relations. (12)

But a monk should renounce it; for every attachment is but a cause of sin. He should not desire life, having been instructed in the best Law. (13)

There are these whirlpools which have been

¹ Akâmagam. Another explanation is, if you are not willing (to do domestic work).

² Pâtâla, explained by samudra.

pointed out by Kâsyapa : the wise keep clear of them, but the ignorant go down in them. (14)

Kings and ministers of kings, Brâhmanas and Kshattriyas try with pleasant things to seduce a monk who leads a holy life. (15)

(They try to seduce him) with elephants, horses, chariots, and cars, with pleasure-trips (saying to him) : ' Enjoy these excellent pleasures, great sage, we worship you ! (16)

' Clothes, perfumes, ornaments, women, and beds : enjoy these pleasures, friend, we worship you ! (17)

' All the vows which you, holy man, have kept while a monk, are compatible with your living in a house. (18)

' It will be no sin, for you have wandered about long (enough).' In this way they try to tempt him, as men decoy a pig with wild rice. (19)

Weak men who are exhorted to live as monks, but who are unable to practise control, break down like weak (bullocks carrying a heavy burden) uphill. (20)

Unable to practise the rough (i.e. control), and harassed by the austerities, weak men break down, like old oxen in going uphill. (21)

When men who are greedy, attached to women, and who love pleasures, are tempted in the way described above, they return to their houses. (22)

Thus I say.

THIRD CHAPTER.

As at the time of the battle the coward looks behind him for a ditch, thicket, or other hiding-place¹, (thinking that) nobody knows who will win ; (1)

¹ Nâma = prakṣhannam, giriguhâdikam.

‘A moment’s moment will bring the decision¹; when we lose, we shall fly.’ Thus thinks the coward. (2)

So some Sramanas, knowing themselves to be weak, have recourse to worldly sciences² when they see that they will suffer want. (3)

(They say): ‘Who knows what will cause my loss of sanctity, women or water? When we are questioned, we shall speak out (i.e. show our knowledge). We have no (other) resource (in case of need)!’ (4)

They are cautious, like those who look out for a ditch, &c. Those who doubt (their ability for control) are like men ignorant of the way. (5)

But famous warriors, leaders of heroes at the time of the battle, do not look behind them; (they think) what if all end with death? (6)

A monk who exerts himself in a similar way, should slip off the ties that bind him to his house. Putting aside all undertakings, he should wander about for the welfare of his soul. (7)

Some revile a monk who leads a holy life. But these revilers are far off from perfection³. (8)

(The revilers say), ‘You live just as the laymen do, being attached to one another, for (e.g.) you beg alms for a sick man and give it him. (9)

‘Therefore you still have an attachment, being obedient to the will of one another; you have not the purity produced by the right path, and have not got beyond the Circle of Births.’ (10)

Now a monk who knows (the truth about) Môksha

¹ Literally, a moment of a moment of moments will be such.

² As grammar, astrology, medicine, &c.

³ Samâhi, explained môksha, compare first note in the Tenth Lecture.

should answer them¹: 'You speak thus, wavering between two ways of life (viz. that of householders and monks). (11)

'You eat out of the vessels² (of householders, and make them) bring food for a sick brother; you eat seeds and drink cold water³, and what has been especially prepared (for you when sick). (12)

'You are infected by great faults, you are void of discrimination, and your resolutions are bad. It is not good to scratch a wound too much, for it will grow worse⁴.' (13)

They should be instructed in the truth by one who knows it and is free from passions⁵: 'Yours is not the right way, you speak and act without consideration. (14)

'This your talk is weak, like the top of a bamboo, (when you say: a sick brother) may eat the food brought by a householder, but not that brought by a monk! (15)

'(And when you say that) our religious precepts are wholesome only for householders (not for monks, we reply that our prophet had) no such (inconsistent) ideas when he taught (his Law).' (16)

When (these heretics) cannot prove (their assertion) by any arguments they give up the discussion, and fall back on their bold (assertion). (17)

¹ According to Sīlāṅka the Āgīvikas or the Digambaras are intended.

² For these heretics carry the principle of absolute poverty so far as to reject even the use of almsbowls.

³ Bīgôḍaka.

⁴ The meaning is that the overdoing of the principle of poverty is just as harmful as the scratching of a wound.

⁵ Apaḍinna = apratigṇa, explained by rāgadvêsharahita.

Overcome by their passions and infected by untruth, (these men) have recourse to bad language, as the (savage) *Tañkana*¹ (when beaten) have recourse to their hills. (18)

The argumentation of a monk whose mind is at rest² should possess many good qualities. He should proceed in such a way as not to exasperate his opponent. (19)

Following this Law which has been proclaimed by the Kâsyapa, a sound monk should carefully attend a sick brother. (20)

Knowing the beautiful Law, a wise and thoroughly restrained monk should bear all hardships and wander about till he reaches final liberation. (21)

Thus I say.

FOURTH CHAPTER.

Some say that in old times great men, rich in religious penance, have reached perfection though they drank (cold) water (and ate fruits and roots). Ignorant men (who hear such assertions) are led astray (by them). (1)

‘Nami, the king of Vidêha, ate nothing, Râmagupta did eat, Bâhuka drank (cold) water, and so did *Târâgana*³, the seer. (2)

‘Âsila, Dêvala, the great sage Dvîpâyana, and ¹ This hill tribe lived somewhere in the north-east of Madhyadêsa, see Petersburg Dictionary, s. v.

² Attasamâhiê = âtmasamâdhika.

³ Concerning Nami, see above, p. 35, note 2. Râmagupta may be another name of Râma. Instead of Târâgana Śilânka writes Nârâyana.

Pârâsara did drink (cold) water, and did eat seeds and sprouts¹. (3)

‘I have heard that in old times these renowned and well-known great men ate seeds and drank water, and have reached perfection.’ (4)

When weak (monks hear such assertions) they become disheartened, as donkeys break down under their burden; in case of danger they retreat (and perish) like men who walk on crutches². (5)

Some³ say: Pleasant things are produced from pleasant things⁴. (They are those who disdain) the noble path and the renowned highest good. (6)

Do not, by disdaining it, lose much for the sake of little. If you do not give up this (wrong law), you will repent of it as the man did who carried iron (a long way) believing it to be silver. (7)

(And so will) those who kill living beings, who do not abstain from untrue speech, who take what is not freely given them, who enjoy sexual pleasures, and who own property. (8)

¹ Âsila is not known from other sources; perhaps Asita is meant, and Âsila Dêvila stands for Asita Dêvala. Concerning Dvîpâyana, the Pârâsara, compare Journal of the German Oriental Society, vol. 42, p. 495. But in the Aupapâtika Sûtra (ed. Leumann, § 76) Pârâsara and Dvîpâyana are two distinct persons.

² Pîdhasappî = pîḥasarpin. Sîlânka comments on the reading pîḥasappî, i.e. prîṣṭhasarpin; but he makes out no good meaning.

³ According to the commentators the Buddhists are intended. They quote some verses in illustration of the pushîmârğa of the Buddhists, one of which is not yet known I believe. It runs thus: manunnam bhôyanam bhukkâ manunnam sayanâsanam | manunnamsi agâramsî manunnam ghâyae munî || ‘Having enjoyed a pleasant dinner, and a pleasant seat and bed, a munî in a pleasant house meditates on pleasant things.’

⁴ Viz. Môksha, a pleasant thing, is arrived at through a comfortable life, another pleasant thing.

Some unworthy heretics¹, slaves of women, ignorant men who are averse to the Law of the Gīnas, speak thus: (9)

‘As the squeezing of a blister or boil (causes relief) for some time, (and has no dangerous consequences), so it is with (the enjoyment of) charming women. How could there be any sin in it? (10)

‘As a ram drinks the quiet water², so, &c. (the rest as in verse 10). (11)

‘As the bird Piṅga³ drinks the quiet water (flying), &c. (the rest as in verse 10).’ (12)

So say some unworthy heretics who entertain false doctrines, and who long for pleasures, as the ewe⁴ for her kid. (13)

Those who do not think of the future, but only enjoy the present, will repent of it afterwards when their life or their youth is gone. (14)

But those who exert themselves at the proper time, feel no remorse afterwards; these heroes who have got rid of their fetters, do not long for life. (15)

As Vaitaraṇī, the river (of hell), is difficult to pass, so in this world women are to the unwise (a temptation) difficult to overcome. (16)

Those who have given up intercourse with women

¹ Pāsāttha = pārsvastha.

² The meaning seems to be that by the ram’s drinking the water is not disturbed.

³ Explained by kapiṅgala, the francoline partridge.

⁴ Pūyaṇā (pūtana, who is ever desirous of young), explained either by sākinī ‘hog’ or gaddarikā ‘ewe.’ The commentators relate the following anecdote. In order to find out which animal loved its young ones best, their young ones were placed at the bottom of a well. Their mothers assembled round the brink and howled, but the ewe threw herself recklessly into the well. Therefore the ewe excels the other animals in maternal love.

and have left off adorning themselves, are well established in control, because they have renounced everything. (17)

As merchants go over the sea, so they will cross the flood (of Samsâra), where living beings despond and suffer pains because of their own deeds. (18)

A monk who knows this, will live as a virtuous man guarded by the Samitis; he will abstain from untrue speech, and not take what is not freely given him. (19)

He should cease to injure living beings whether they move or not, on high, below, and on earth. For this has been called the Nirvâna, which consists in peace¹. (20) 21, 22 = I, 3, 3, 20 and 21.

Thus I say.

FOURTH. LECTURE²,

CALLED

KNOWLEDGE OF WOMEN.

FIRST CHAPTER.

A monk who has left his mother and father and all worldly ties, (determines) to walk about alone and wise, to abstain from sexual pleasures, and to ask for a secluded place (where to lodge). (1)

¹ See below, I, 11, 11.

² This whole adhyayana is composed in the archaic form of Âryâ, of which I have treated at length in the thirty-eighth volume of the Journal of the German Oriental Society, p. 594. The same metre occurs also in the Suttanipâta of the Buddhists (ed. Fausböll, 26 f., 170 ff.), a fact which I was not aware of when I wrote the paper just referred to.

With clever pretences women make up to him, however foolish they be ; they know how to contrive that some monks will become intimate with them. (2)

They will often sit down at his side ; they always put on fine clothes ; they will show him the lower part of their body, and the armpit, when lifting up their arms, so that he will follow them about. (3)

And occasionally a woman¹ will tempt him to a comfortable couch or bed. But he should know these things to be as many traps under various disguises. (4)

He should not look at them, nor should he consent to anything inconsiderate, nor walk together with them ; thus he will well guard himself. (5)

Inviting a monk and winning his confidence, they offer themselves to him. But he should know, and fly from these temptations² in their various forms. (6)

Meekly and politely they approach him with their manifold arts to win his heart ; and talking sweetly in confidential conversation they make him do (what they like). (7)

As (men by baiting) with a piece of flesh a fearless single lion get him into a trap, so women may capture an ascetic though he be careful. (8)

And then they make him do what they like, even as a wheelwright gradually turns the felly of a wheel. As an antelope caught in a snare, so he does not get out of it, however he struggles. (9)

Afterwards he will feel remorse like one who has drunk milk mixed with poison ; considering the ¹ The original has the plural itthîḥ, but the metre requires itthî in the singular.

² Literally 'sounds,' which stands for objects of the senses in general.

consequences, a worthy monk should have no intercourse with women. (10)

Therefore he should avoid women, knowing them to be like a poisoned thorn. He is no Nirgrantha who without companion (goes into) houses, being a slave (to passion) and preaches (his religion). (11)

Those who are attached to this sinful (intercourse) must be reckoned among the wicked. Even a monk who practises severe austerities should avoid the company of women. (12)

A monk should have no intercourse with his daughters and daughters-in-law, with nurses or female slaves, or with grown-up girls. (13)

When the relations and friends see (the intimacy of a monk with a girl), they become angry (saying) : 'All creatures love pleasures ; you are a man, protect and support her.' (14)

But some become angry even when they see an innocent Sramana, and suspect the fidelity of their wives because of the dishes they serve up¹. (15)

Those who have intercourse with (women) have already ceased to practise meditation ; Sramanas, therefore, for the benefit of their souls, do not go to the apartments (of women). (16)

Though many leave the house, some (of them) arrive but at a middling position (between householder and monk) ; they merely talk of the path to perfection. The force of sinners is talking. (17)

In the assembly he pronounces holy (words), yet secretly he commits sins ; but the wise know him to be a deceiver and great rogue. (18)

¹ There is a saying in German : Eine verliebte Köchin versalzt den Brei, 'a cook in love spoils the soup.' The commentators put different constructions on the last part of the sentence.

The sinner does not confess his wrong, but rather boasts of it when reprimanded. Though he is admonished not to act as most men do, he becomes weak again and again. (19)

Some men of great intelligence who perform their duties as supporters of women, get into their power, though they be well acquainted with the *Strīvêda*¹. (20)

(The adulterers') hands and feet are cut off, their skin and flesh are torn off, they are roasted alive, and acid is poured into their wounds. (21)

Their ears and nose are cut off, and their throats cut ; (all this) they will suffer, but though suffering here for their sins they will not promise not to do² the same again. (22)

All this some have learned, and it has been well demonstrated in the Strīvêda. Though (people) know it, they do wrong (impelled) by Karman. (23)

One man (women) have in their heart, another in their words, and another still in their actions. Therefore a monk should not trust women, knowing that they are full of deceit. (24)

A young woman, putting on fine ornaments and clothes, will say to a Sramana : ' I shall give up (my former way of life) and practise the rough (viz. control). Reverend sir, teach me the Law ! ' (25)

Or by professing herself a lay-disciple and co-religionist of the Sramanas, (she will try to make a friend of him). As a pot filled with lac (will melt)

¹ I. e. Kâmasâstra, or rather the part of it treating on courtezans, Vaisika, that had been composed by Dattaka. He is mentioned by the commentators in an anecdote they relate ad v. 24.

² The original has kâhinti ' they will do ; ' it must be kâham ti ' I shall do.'

near the fire, so even a wise (monk) will fall through intercourse with women. (26)

A pot filled with lac thrown into the fire melts quickly and is destroyed; so monks are lost through intercourse with women. (27)

Some commit sins (with a girl), but when questioned about it, they say: 'I have done no sin; she only slept in my lap (like my daughter).' (28)

This is a second folly of the sinner that he obstinately denies what he has done. He commits a twofold sin, since, for the sake of his reputation, he falls again¹. (29)

(Some women) will say, by way of invitation, to a good-looking, self-knowing monk: 'Holy man, accept a robe, an almsbowl, food or drink (at our house)!' (30)

He should regard their words like wild rice², and should not desire to call at (their) house; for a fool who is bound in the fetters of sensuality will be subject to delusion again and again. (31)

Thus I say.

SECOND CHAPTER.

A monk, living single³, should not fall in love; if he loves pleasures, he should again become indifferent. Now hear the pleasures of Sramanas, which some monks enjoy. (1)

When a monk breaks the law, dotes (on a woman), and is absorbed by that passion, she afterwards

¹ Visannêsi. Vishanna is explained as amyama.

² Wherewith pigs are decoyed, see above, p. 265, verse 19.

³ Ôê = êkaḥ, explained: free from love and hate.

scolds him¹, lifts her foot, and tramples on his head. (2)

‘O monk, if you will not live with me as a woman who has still her hair, I shall tear it out; but do not live separated from me.’ (3)

But when they have captured him, they send him on all sorts of errands²: ‘Look (for the bodkin to) carve the bottle-gourd³, fetch some nice fruit. (4)

‘(Bring) wood to cook the vegetables, or that we may light a fire at night; paint my feet⁴, come and meanwhile rub my back! (5)

‘Look after my clothes, bring food and drink, get me some perfume, a broom, a barber⁵ (to shave my head)! (6)

‘Give me the collyrium-box, my ornaments, the lute, Lōdhra-powder⁶, a Lōdhra-flower, the Vēṇu-palāsika-lute⁷, a pill! (7)

‘A Utpalakushṭa⁸, Tagara⁹-powder, and aloe pounded together with Uśtra¹⁰, oil for anointing the

¹ Paribhindiyaṇa = paribhidya.

² The following verses are interesting as they afford us a glimpse of a Hindu household some 2,000 years ago. We find here a curious list of domestic furniture and other things of common use.

³ Alābukkkhegga = alābukkkhēdam pippalakādi sastram.

⁴ Or, scour my pots.

⁵ Kāsavaga = kāsyaṇa, explained nāpita. The word is probably derived from the root kash ‘to scrape.’ According to Sīlāṅka verses 5–6 refer to things used by monks and nuns.

⁶ Symplocos Racemosa, the bark of which is used in dyeing.

⁷ This is a thin piece of bamboo or bark held between the teeth and with the left hand, and played by the right hand just like a Vīṇā. (Sīlāṅka.)

⁸ Probably Costus Speciosus. ⁹ Tabernaemontana Coronaria.

¹⁰ Andropogon Muricatus.

face, baskets of bamboo wickerwork to put my things in! (8)

‘Reach me the lip-salve, fetch the umbrella and slippers, the knife to cut the string, have my robe dyed bluish! (9)

‘Give me the pot to cook the vegetables in, Myrobalans¹, the jar to fetch water in, the stick to paint the mark upon the forehead, the pin to apply collyrium (to the eyelids), or the fan when it is hot! (10)

‘Fetch me the pincers², the comb, the ribbon to bind up the hair, reach me the looking-glass, put the tooth-brush near me! (11)

‘Fetch me areca-nut and betel, needle and thread, the chamber-pot, the winnowing basket, the mortar, the pot for liquefying natron³! (12)

‘Give me the vessel (used in worshipping the gods⁴), the water-pot. Friend, dig a privy. Fetch the bow for our son, the bullock for the Srâmanêra! (13)

‘The small pot, the drum, and the ball of cloth for the boy (to play with). Sramana, the rainy season is at hand, look after the house and the stores! (14)

‘(Fetch) the chair with woven twine seat⁵, the wooden shoes⁶ to walk on!’ Pregnant women order

¹ They are used in bathing.

² To tear out the hair growing in the nose.

³ Used in India instead of soap for cleaning linen.

⁴ Kandâlaka, a copper vessel used in worship. The name was current in Mathurâ at the time when Silânka wrote or the author from whose work he copied this remark.

⁵ See Grierson, Bihar Peasant Life, § 632.

⁶ Pâulla; either the wooden sandals or slippers made of Muṅga grass.

their husbands about like slaves to fulfil their craving. (15)

When a son, the reward (of their wedded life), is born, (the mother bids the father) to hold the baby, or to give it her. Thus some supporters of their sons have to carry burdens like camels. (16)

Getting up in the night they lull the baby asleep¹ like nurses; and though they are ashamed of themselves, they wash the clothes like washermen². (17)

This has been done by many men who for the sake of pleasures have stooped so low; they become the equals of slaves, animals, servants, beasts of burden—mere nobodies. (18)

One should not mind the entreaties of women, but abstain from their friendship and company. These pleasures which are derived therefrom are called causes of blamable actions. (19)

Restraining himself by the thought that these dangerous (pleasures) will not be to his benefit, a monk should abstain from women, and commit no unnatural crime³. (20)

A wise and learned monk whose soul is in a pure condition (Lāsyā), will abstain from doing work for others; in thoughts, words, and actions he will bear all troubles. (21)

The hero (of faith) who has vanquished sin and delusion, has said all this. A monk, therefore, whose soul is pure (and free from sins) should wander about till he reaches final liberation. (22)

Thus I say.

¹ Sīlāṅka gives a specimen of a lullaby without meaning and metre.

² Hamsa, explained ragaka.

³ No itthim no pasum bhikkhū no sayapāninā niliggeggā.

FIFTH LECTURE,

CALLED

DESCRIPTION OF THE HELLS.

FIRST CHAPTER.

I once asked the Kêvalin, the great sage¹: What is the punishment in the hells? Knowing it, O sage, tell it me who do not know it! How do sinners go to hell? (1)

When I thus questioned the illustrious Kâsyapa, the omniscient one² spoke as follows: I shall describe the truly insupportable pains where there is distress and (the punishment of) evil deeds. (2)

Those cruel sinners who, from a desire of (worldly) life, commit bad deeds, will sink into the dreadful hell which is full of dense darkness and great suffering. (3)

He who always kills movable and immovable beings for the sake of his own comfort, who injures them, who takes what is not freely given, who does not learn what is to be practised (viz. control); (4)

The impudent sinner, who injures many beings without relenting³, will go to hell; at the end of his life he will sink to the (place of) darkness; head downwards he comes to the place of torture. (5)

They hear the cries of the punishers: Beat, cut,

¹ I. e. Mahâvîra. Sudharman speaks to Gambûsvâmin.

² Âsupanna = âsupragña 'quickly comprehending.' I usually render this word 'intelligent,' when it is used of common monks.

³ Anivvû = anirvritaḥ.

split, burn him! The prisoners in hell lose their senses from fright, and do not know in what direction to run. (6)

Going to a place like a burning heap of coals on fire, and being burnt they cry horribly; they remain there long, shrieking aloud. (7)

Have you heard of the horrible (river) Vaitaraṇī, whose cutting waves are like sharp razors¹? They cross the horrible Vaitaraṇī, being urged on by arrows, and wounded with spears. (8)

The punishers pierce them with darts; they go in the boat, losing their memory; others pierce them with long pikes and tridents, and throw them on the ground. (9)

Some, round whose neck big stones are tied, are drowned in deep water. Others again roll about in the Kadambavālukā (river)² or in burning chaff, and are roasted in it. (10)

And they come to the great impassable hell, full of agony, called Asūrya (i.e. where the sun does not shine), where there is great darkness, where fires, placed above, below, and all around, are blazing. (11)

There, as in a cave, being roasted on the fire, he is burned, having lost the reminiscence (of his sins) and consciousness of everything else; always suffering (he comes) to that miserable hot place that is ever ready (for the punishment of evildoers)³. (12)

¹ Silāṅka says that the water of this river is alkali and hot blood; compare Uttarādhyayana XIX, 59, above p. 95.

² See the note on Uttarādhyayana XIX, 50, above p. 94, note 1.

³ The last two lines recur in verse 21 with the only difference that there kaśinam stands for kaluṇam in this place; yet the commentators offer a different explanation in the second place. In my translation I follow their interpretation both times.

There the cruel punishers have lighted four fires, and roast the sinners; they are roasted there like fishes put on the fire alive. (13)

The prisoners in hell come to the dreadful place called Santakshana¹ (i.e. cutting), where the cruel punishers tie their hands and feet, and with axes in their hands cut them like wooden planks. (14)

And they turn the writhing victims round, and stew them, like living fishes, in an iron caldron filled with their own blood, their limbs covered with ordure, their heads smashed. (15)

They are not reduced to ashes there, and they do not die of their enormous pains; undergoing this punishment², the miserable men suffer for their misdeeds. (16)

And there in the place, where there is constant shivering, they resort to a large burning fire; but they find no relief in that place of torture; the tormentors torture them still³. (17)

There is heard everywhere the noise of painfully uttered cries even as in the street of a town. Those whose bad Karman takes effect (viz. the punishers), violently torment again and again those whose bad Karman takes effect also (viz. the punished). (18)

They deprive the sinner of his life; I shall truly tell you how this is done. The wicked (punishers) remind by (similar) punishment (their victims) of all sins they had committed in a former life⁴. (19)

Being killed they are thrown into a hell which is ¹ Here and in similar places the commentators do not take the word as a proper name, but as an epithet.

² Anubhâga.

³ Or, with burning fire they roast them.

⁴ See Uttarâdhyayana XIX, 69 ff., above p. 96.

full of boiling filth. There they stay eating filth, and they are eaten by vermin. (20)

And there is an always crowded, hot place, which men deserve for their great sins, and which is full of misery¹. (The punishers) put them in shackles, beat their bodies, and torment them (by perforating) their skulls with drills. (21)

They cut off the sinner's nose with a razor, they cut off both his ears and lips; they pull out his tongue a span's length and torment (him by piercing it) with sharp pikes. (22)

There the sinners dripping (with blood) whine day and night even as the dry leaves of a palm-tree (agitated by the wind). Their blood, matter, and flesh are dropping off while they are roasted, their bodies being besmeared with natron. (23)

Have you heard of the large, erected caldron of more than man's size, full of blood and matter, which is extremely heated by a fresh fire, in which blood and matter are boiling? (24)

The sinners are thrown into it and boiled there, while they utter horrid cries of agony; they are made to drink molten lead and copper when they are thirsty, and they shriek still more horribly. (25)

Those evildoers who have here forfeited their souls' (happiness) for the sake of small (pleasures), and have been born in the lowest births during hundred thousands of 'former years,' will stay in this (hell). Their punishment will be adequate to their deeds. (26)

The wicked who have committed crimes will ¹ Compare note on verse 12. The same lines recur in the next chapter, verse 13. The commentator gives the same explanation there as here.

atone for them, deprived of all pleasant and lovely objects, by dwelling in the stinking crowded hell, a scene of pain, which is full of flesh (&c.). (27)

Thus I say.

SECOND CHAPTER.

I shall now truly tell you another kind of perpetual suffering, how the sinners who have committed crimes suffer for the deeds they have done in their former lives. (1)

Tying their hands and feet the (punishers) cut open their belly with razors and knives; taking hold of the mangled body of the sinner, they forcibly tear the skin off his back. (2)

They cut off his arms at the armpits; they force his mouth wide open and scald it; they yoke the sinner to a car and drive him, and growing angry¹ they pierce his back with a goad. (3)

The (sinners) walk over ground burning and glowing like red-hot iron; scorched they shriek horribly, being urged on with arrows² and put to a red-hot yoke. (4)

The sinners are driven over slippery ground which is like a road of red-hot iron; in this dreadful place (the ministers of hell) make them go forward like slaves (beating them) with sticks. (5)

Proceeding in this intolerable (hell) they are crushed by rocks tumbling down. There is the ¹ Ârussa = ârushya, here and in a similar passage (verse 15) the commentators explain it, 'making him angry, exasperating him.' They have misunderstood rahaṃsi in the second line, rendering it rahasi; it is of course = rathê.

² Usu = ishu, explained by âravisêsha 'a kind of awl.'

(caldron) Santāpanī¹, where evildoers suffer for a long time. (6)

They throw the sinners into caldrons and boil them; scalded they rise thence again; devilish crows² feed on them and (so do) other beasts having claws devour them. (7)

There is a place of smokeless fire in the form of a pile³ where (the sinners) greatly distressed shriek horribly; head downwards they are lacerated and cut into pieces with iron knives. (8)

Tied up and skinned they are devoured by steel-nibbed birds; it is the hell called Samgṭvant, where life is long, and where men of an evil mind are tortured. (9)

The (punishers) pierce them with sharp pikes as people do with a captured pig. Transfixed by a pike the (sinners) shriek horribly; suffering both (bodily and mentally) they feel nothing but pains. (10)

There is a great place always on fire, where fires burn without fuel; there for a long time stay the evildoers shrieking aloud. (11)

Setting on fire large piles, they thrust into them (a sinner) who will cry horribly; as butter thrown in the fire melts, so does the evildoer there. (12)

And there is an always crowded, hot place which one deserves for one's great sins, and which is full of misery. There (the punishers) tie (the sinner's)

¹ Or, it is (the hell) called Santāpanī. My translation in the text agrees with Śīlāṅka's interpretation.

² Compare Uttarādhyayana XIX, 58, p. 95.

³ Samūsiyam nāma. This might also be rendered, 'called Samukkkhrita.' But the commentators do not take samūsiya for a proper name.

hands and feet, and belabour him with sticks like an enemy. (13)

They break the sinner's back with a weapon, and smash his skull with iron clubs; their bodies are split and sawn like a plank; and tortured with red-hot awls (the sinners) are subjected (to cruelties). (14)

Cruel evildoers¹, urged on with arrows, and put to work (by the punishers), carry burdens in the way of elephants; two or three (punishers) get on one (victim) and growing angry² hurt his vital parts. (15)

The sinners are driven over the large, slippery, and thorny ground; tightly bound with straps³ they lose their senses; the revenging (punishers) cut them into pieces⁴, and throw them about like a bali-sacrifice. (16)

There is a dreadful mountain towering high up in the air, called Vaitālika⁵, where the evildoers are tortured for more than a thousand hours. (17)

Tortured, the sinners shriek, suffering day and night; in this horrid, great hell, which is full of implements of torture, they are put to a cruel death. (18)

Full of wrath, like their enemies in a former life,

¹ Ruddaasāhukammī = raudra-asādhū-karmāṇaḥ. Sīlāṅka thinks that the ministers of hell are meant; but then the verse will not construe.

² See note on verse 3.

³ Vivaddhatappēhiṃ, in a marginal gloss, explained: baddhvā karmabandhanaiḥ. But it might also be vivṛiddhatāpaiḥ 'under increased tortures.'

⁴ Koṭṭa = kuṭayitvā.

⁵ Vêtāliya. The commentators render it vaikriya 'produced by magic,' and moreover explain the word as an epithet, not as a proper name.

(the punishers) crush them with hammers and clubs. With mangled bodies, and vomiting blood, they fall to the ground, head foremost. (19)

There are the ever hungry¹, savage, always wrathful, great jackals by whom the evildoers bound with shackles are devoured. (20)

There is the dreadful, slimy river, which is always flowing and full of molten iron; in this very dreadful river (the sinners) must descend one by one². (21)

These pains are suffered without interruption by the sinner who stays there for a long time. There is no escape from the torture; he must, himself and alone, suffer the pains. (22)

Whatever cruelty he has done in a former birth, the same will be inflicted on him in the Circle of Births. Having been born in an extremely miserable state of life, the sufferer experiences infinite pain. (23)

A wise man hearing of these hells should not kill any living being in the whole world; believing in true doctrines and renouncing all property he should know the world, but not become a slave to it. (24)

Knowing the endless Circle of Births³ with regard to animals, men, and gods, and the reward they will get; knowing all this, (a wise man) should wait for his decease, practising meanwhile self-control. (25)

Thus I say.

¹ Anâsiyâ, anasitâh. This might also be taken as the name of the jackals.

² Êgâyatâ, explained êkakinah.

³ Kauranta.

SIXTH LECTURE,

CALLED

PRAISE OF MAHĀVĪRA.

Sramanas and Brāhmanas, householders and heretics, have asked (me): Who is he that proclaimed this unrivalled truly wholesome Law, which was (put forward) with true knowledge¹? (1)

What was the knowledge, what the faith, and what the conduct of the Gñātriputra? If you know it truly, O monk, tell us as you have heard it, as it was told you! (2)

This wise and clever great sage possessed infinite knowledge and infinite faith. Learn and think about the Law and the piety of the glorious man who lived before our eyes²! (3)

This wise man had explored all beings, whether they move or not, on high, below, and on earth, as well as the eternal and transient things. Like a lamp he put the Law in a true light. (4)

He sees everything; his knowledge has got beyond (the four lower stages)³; he has no impurity; he is virtuous, of a fixed mind, the highest, the ¹ The question is supposed to be addressed by Gambûsvâmin to Sudharman.

² Kakkhupahê tñiyassa = kakkshuḥpathê sthitasya, literally, 'who stood (or stands) in the path of the eyes.' We are scarcely entitled to infer from this phrase that the author had actually seen Mahāvīra as tradition would make us believe.

³ Abhibhūya-nānī. Concerning the five stages or kinds of knowledge, see above, p. 152. The Kēvala knowledge is intended.

wisest in the whole world ; he has broken from all ties ; he is above danger and the necessity to continue life¹. (5)

Omniscient, wandering about without a home, crossing the flood (of the Samsâra), wise, and of an unlimited perception, without an equal, he shines forth (or he does penance) like the sun, and he illumines the darkness like a brilliant fire. (6)

The omniscient² sage, Kâsyapa, has proclaimed this highest Law of the Ginas ; he, the illustrious one, is prominent (among men) like the thousand-eyed Indra among the gods of heaven. (7)

His knowledge is inexhaustible like the (water of the) sea ; he has no limits and is pure like the great ocean ; he is free from passion, unfettered, and brilliant like Sakra, the lord of the gods. (8)

By his vigour he is the most vigorous ; as Sudarsana (Mêru), the best of all mountains, or as heaven, a very mine of delight, he shines forth endowed with many virtues. (9)

(Mêru) a hundred thousand yôḡanas high, with three tiers³, with the Pandaga (-wood) as its flag, rising ninety-nine thousand yôḡanas above the ground, and reaching one thousand below it ; (10)

It touches the sky and is immersed in the earth ; round it revolve the suns⁴ ; it has the colour of gold, and contains many Nandana (parks)⁵ ; on it the Mahêndras enjoy themselves. (11)

¹ To render anâyuh.

² Âsupanna = âsupragṇa, literally, 'quickly witted ;' the word is usually explained by kêvalin.

³ Kandaka, one of stone, one of gold, and one of turquoise.

⁴ As is well known the Gainas assume a plurality of suns.

⁵ The names of these four parks are, according to the com-

This mountain is distinguished by (many) names ; it has the colour of burnished gold ; it is the greatest of all mountains, difficult to ascend on account of its rocks ; this excellent mountain is like a part of the earth on fire. (12)

The king of mountains, standing in the centre of the earth, is seen in a pure light¹ like that of the sun. With such beauty shines forth this many-coloured, lovely (mountain), which is crowned with radiance. (13)

Thus is described the glory of mount Sudarsana, the great mountain ; similar to it is the Sramana Gñâtriputra, who is noble, glorious, full of faith, knowledge, and virtue. (14)

As *Nishadha*² is the best of long-stretched mountains, and Ruḥaka of circular ones, so is he (Mahāvira) among sages the wisest in the world, according to the declaration of the wise ones. (15)

After having taught the highest Law he practised the highest contemplation³, which is the purest of pure, pure without a flaw, thoroughly white (as it were) like mother-of-pearl and the moon. (16)

Having annihilated all his Karman, the great sage by his knowledge, virtue, and faith reached mentary, Sâlavana, Nandanavana, Saumanasavana, and Pandaka (or Pânduka) vana. The first is at the foot of Mêru, the second 500 *yôgan*s above it, the third 62,000 above the second, and the fourth 36,000 above the last, i. e. at the very top.

¹ Suddha-lessê = suddhalêsyâ. Here lêsyâ is equal to têgas.

² Nishadha and Ruḥaka are two fabulous chains of mountains situated beyond Gambûdvîpa.

³ This is the sukla dhyâna. As sukla, which I translate 'pure,' originally means 'white,' the comparison with the moon is natural in the original.

the insurpassable, highest perfection, a state which has a beginning but no end. (17)

As the Sālmālī, in which the *Suparna*¹ gods take their delight, is most famous among trees, as Nandana is among parks, so is the Omniscient most famous through his knowledge and virtue. (18)

As thunder is the loudest of sounds, as the moon is the most glorious of heavenly bodies, as sandal is the best of perfumes, so of monks is he who had renounced all wishes or plans. (19)

As (the ocean on which sleeps) Svayambhū is the best of seas, as Dharaṇendra is the best of Nāgas, as the juice of sugarcane is, as it were, the flag of juices, so is he (Mahāvīra) the flag of monks by his austerities. (20)

As Airāvata is the best of elephants, the lion of beasts, Gaṅgā of rivers, as Garuda, *Vēnudēva*², is the best of birds, so is Gñātriputra the best of those who have taught the Nirvāna. (21)

As *Vishvaksēna*³ is the most famous of warriors, as the lotus is the best of flowers, as Dantavakra is the best of Kshatriyas, so Vardhamāna is the best of sages. (22)

As giving safety is the best of gifts, as the best of true speeches is that which causes no dis-

¹ They belong to the Bhavanapatis, see above, p. 225.

² The commentator says that Vēnudēva is another name of Garuda. Vēnu stands perhaps for venhu = vishnu; but I do not know that Garuda ever was directly identified with Vishnu.

³ Visasēna. Vishvaksēna is a name of Krishna. The commentators make Virvasēna of Visasēna, and seem to take it as a synonym of lakravartin or universal monarch. Dantavakra is mentioned in my 'Ausgewählte Erzählungen,' p. 35, line 36.

tress, as chastity is the highest of austerities, so is the Sramana Gñâtriputra the highest of men. (23)

As the Lavasaptamas¹ are the highest of those gods who live very long, as the palace Saudharman is the best of heavenly abodes, as Nirvâna is the chief object of the Law, so there is no wiser man than Gñâtriputra. (24)

He (bears everything) like the earth; he annihilates (his Karman); he is free from greed; he, the Omniscient, does not keep store (of anything); he has crossed the ocean of life like the sea: he, the Hero, who grants protection to all, and whose perception is infinite. (25)

Having conquered the passions which defile the soul: wrath, pride, deceit, and greed, the Arhat, the great sage, does not commit any wrong, nor does he cause it to be committed. (26)

He understood the doctrines of the Kriyâvâdins, of the Akriyâvâdins, of the Vainayikas, and of the *Agñânavâdins*²; he had mastered all philosophical systems, and he practised control as long as he lived. (27)

He abstained³ from women, and from eating at night, he practised austerities for the removal of pain, he knew this world and that beyond; the lord renounced³ everything at every time. (28)

Having heard and believing in the Law, which has been proclaimed and taught by the Arhat, and has been demonstrated with arguments, people will either make an end of their mundane existence, or they will become like Indra, the king of gods. (29)

¹ The commentator identifies them with the fifth class of Anuttara gods (see Uttarâdhyayana XXXVI, 215, above p. 227), and explains the name by saying 'if they lived seven lavas longer, they would reach perfection.'

² Concerning these four principal heresies see note on Uttarâdhyayana XVIII, 23, above p. 83.

³ Vâriya, literally 'forbade.'

Thus I say.

SEVENTH LECTURE,

CALLED

DESCRIPTION OF THE WICKED.

Earth, water, fire, wind; grass, trees, and corn; and the movable beings, (viz.) the oviparous, viviparous, those generated from dirt, and those generated in fluids¹; (1)

These classes (of living beings) have been declared (by the Ginas); know and understand that they (all desire) happiness; by (hurting) these beings (men) do harm to their own souls, and will again and again be born as one of them. (2)

Every being born high or low in the scale of the living creation, among movable and immovable beings, will meet with its death. Whatever sins the evildoer commits in every birth, for them he must die². (3)

¹ The last two classes are, according to the commentators, (1) lice, bugs, &c.; (2) beings like cotton threads in thick milk, sour barley gruel, &c. Apparently vibrios are meant.

² Miggati = mîyatê. Another rendering offered by Sîlânka is 'he will be filled (by Karman).'

In this world or in the next (the sinners suffer themselves what they have inflicted on other beings), a hundred times, or (suffer) other punishment. Living in the Samsâra they ever acquire new Karman, and suffer for their misdeeds. (4)

Some leave their mother and father to live as Sramanas, but they use fire; (the prophet) says: 'People are wicked who kill beings for the sake of their own pleasure.' (5)

He who lights a fire, kills living beings; he who extinguishes it, kills the fire. Therefore a wise man who well considers the Law, should light no fire. (6)

Earth contains life, and water contains life; jumping (or flying) insects fall in (the fire); dirt-born vermin¹ (and beings) living in wood: all these beings are burned by lighting a fire. (7)

Sprouts are beings possessed of natural development², their bodies (require) nourishment, and all have their individual life. Reckless men who cut them down out of regard for their own pleasure, destroy many living beings. (8)

By destroying seeds, when young or grown up, a careless man does harm to his own soul. (The prophet) says: 'People are wicked who destroy seeds for the sake of their own pleasure.' (9)

¹ Viz. insects originated in dung, &c. used as fuel.

² Vilambaga; the commentators in explanation of this word say that plants, like men, go through all states of development, youth, ripe age, old age, &c. I think vilambaga is derived from viḍambaka, they imitate (the development of animals). For if I understand Sīlânka aright, a plant contains a great many bhûtas or beings, each localised in a certain part of the plant, as roots, &c. This is, according to him, the meaning of pudhōsiyāni, rendered in the text 'have their individual life.'

Men die as embryos, or as babies who do not yet talk, or who do so already; other men, as boys wearing five tufts of hair¹, or as youths, or in middle age: at the expiration of their life all leave the body and die. (10)

Wake up, men! If we look at the dangers (to which he is exposed) a fool has not much chance to obtain human birth; always suffering like men in fever, people will go to utter misery. (11)

Some say that perfection is reached by abstaining from the seasoner of food (viz. salt)², others by the use of cold water (i.e. by ablutions)³, others again by (tending) a fire⁴. (12)

Perfection is not reached by bathing in the morning, nor by abstention from acids and salt; but by drinking liquor or eating meat or garlic men obtain another state of existence (than perfection). (13)

Those who, touching water in the morning and evening, contend that perfection is obtained through water (are easily refuted). For if perfection could be obtained by contact with water, many beings living in water must have reached perfection: (14)

Fishes, tortoises, aquatic snakes, cormorants,

¹ Pañkasikha. It usually denotes certain ascetics: but Śilāṅka here renders it kumāra 'boy.'

² Śilāṅka notices two different readings: (1) āhārasappañka-gavagganenaṃ, by abstaining from food seasoned with one of the five kinds of salt (viz. saindhava, sauvarkāla, viḍa, rauma, sāmudra); (2) āhāraḥ pañkagaḥ, by abstaining from five kinds of food: garlic, onion, young camels' milk, beef, liquor.

³ Śilāṅka mentions the Vāribhadrakas, a subdivision of the Bhāgavatas, as belonging to this category. He states elsewhere that they eat saivala (Vallisneria Octandra) and frequently bathe, wash themselves, and drink water.

⁴ Viz. Tāpasas and Brāhmanas.

otters¹, and demons living in water. The clever ones declare those to be wrong who maintain that perfection may be obtained through water. (15)

If water did wash off the impure Karman, it must take off merit too. But this (assertion of the heretics) has no foundation but their wish. As a blind man follows a guide (and misses his goal), so a fool (who makes ablutions, &c. as a means of reaching Mōksha) kills living beings. (16)

If water did wash off the sins of him who committed them, some would have obtained perfection who killed water-beings. Therefore he is wrong who maintains the attainment of perfection through water. (17)

Those who, lighting fire in the morning and evening, contend that perfection is obtained through fire (are easily refuted). For if thereby perfection could be obtained, mechanics also, who use fire, would be liberated. (18)

Perfection cannot be established by such gratuitous assertions; those who have not learned the truth will come to harm. A wise man, who knows the truth, should know and understand that all beings desire happiness. (19)

All creatures who have committed sins wail, suffer, and tremble. Considering this a wise monk who has ceased to sin, and guards his own self, should abstain from violence with regard to movable and (immovable) beings. (20)

He who keeps a store of rightly-obtained food and eats it; he who makes ablutions with pure water,

¹ U//a or u//ha, explained as 'a kind of aquatic animal;' the Sanskrit prototype is apparently udra, but the commentators render it ush/ra!

contracting his limbs; he who washes and adorns his clothes, is far from being a naked monk. (21)

A wise man, seeing that it is sinful (to use) water, should live of pure water, till he is liberated from the *Samsâra*¹; not eating seeds and bulbs, he abstains from bathing, &c., and from women. (22)

He who, after having left father, mother, house, sons, cattle, and wealth, visits houses where he gets nice food, is far from being a Sramana. (23)

He who visits houses where he gets nice food, who professes the Law, desirous only of filling his belly, and brags (of himself) for the sake of food, is not equal to the hundredth part of an Ārya. (24)

A miserable man, who becomes a monk in order to get food from others, and a flatterer by the desire of filling his belly, will, in no remote future, come to harm, even as a boar greedy of wild rice². (25)

The servile man says pleasing things for the sake of food, drink, and other things: but wrong belief and bad conduct are worthless like chaff. (26)

He should beg where he is unknown, and maintain himself by it; he should not seek fame and respect by his austerities; he should not desire (pleasant) sounds and colours, but conquer his longing for all kinds of pleasures. (27)

A monk should avoid every attachment and bear every pain, be full (of wisdom), not greedy, wander about homeless, give assurance of safety (to all beings), and be free from passions. (28)

(In order to be able) to practise control³ a monk should eat; he should desire to get rid of sin; if he

¹ Āi = âdi.

² Cf. p. 265, verse 19.

³ Bhârassa gâyâ = bhârasya (= śamyamasya) yâtâ.

suffers pain, he should have recourse to control, and subdue the foe at the head of the battle, as it were. (29)

Though beaten he should be like a plank¹; he should wait for the advent of death; having annihilated his Karman he should not again mix with the world, but be rather like a car whose axle is broken. (30)

Thus I say.

EIGHTH LECTURE,

CALLED

ON EXERTION².

It is said that two definitions of exertion are given; but in what does the exertion of the virtuous consist, and how is it defined? (1)

Some say that it consists in works, and the pious (say that it consists) in abstention from works. Men appear divided into two classes from this point of view. (2)

Carelessness is called (the cause of) Karman, carefulness that of the contrary (viz. absence of Karman); when the one or the other is predicated

¹ Phalagâvata//hi = phalagavad avatash/aḥ. Śīlāṅka gives the following explanation: As a plank planed on both sides becomes thin, so a sādhu, by reducing his body by exterior and interior tapas, grows thin, of weak body.

² Vīrya; it is the power or virtue of a thing.

(of a man, he is called) either a fool or a wise man. (3)

Some learn sciences¹ which teach the destruction of living beings, others study spells for killing all sorts of creatures. (4)

Deceivers practise deceit in order to procure themselves pleasures and amusement ; they kill, cut, and dismember (beings) for the sake of their own comfort. (5)

The careless (commit sins) by thoughts, words, and acts, with regard to this and the next world, both (by doing the act themselves and by making others do it). (6)

A cruel² man does cruel acts and is thereby involved in other cruelties ; but sinful undertakings will in the end bring about misery. (7)

Sinners, subject to love and hate and doing wrong, acquire Karman arising from passions³ and commit many sins. (8)

Thus the 'exertion leading to works' of the sinners has been described ; now learn from me the wise men's 'exertion not leading to works.' (9)

A pious monk, who is free from bonds and has severed all fetters, annihilates his bad Karman, and removes definitely the thorn (of sin). (10)

Following the right doctrine he exerts himself ; as one becomes more and more the receptacle

¹ Sattha = sâstra or sastra. On the latter alternative we must translate '(practice of) arms.'

² Vêri = vairin, gîvôpamardakârin.

³ Karma is of two kinds, airyapathika, arising from 'walking,' i.e. from those actions which are indispensable to a virtuous life or the conduct of monks, and sâmparâyika, arising from the passions.

of misery, so his bad thoughts (or sinfulness) increase. (11)

Those who have good places (in heaven, &c.) must surely leave them (some time). We live together with relations and friends but a limited time. (12)

Considering this, a wise man should conquer his greed, and enter upon the noble (path), which contains all virtues and is not blamed¹. (13)

Whether he know the pith of the Law by intuition or through instruction, a houseless (monk) should exert himself and abstain from sins. (14)

When a wise man, in whatever way, comes to know that the apportioned space of his life draws towards its end, he should in the meantime quickly learn the method (of dying a religious death)². (15)

As a tortoise draws its limbs into its own body, so a wise man should cover, as it were, his sins with his own meditation. (16)

He should draw in, as it were, his hands and feet, his mind and five organs of sense, the effect of his bad Karman, and every bad use of language. (17)

The virtuous exert themselves with regard to the distant end (viz. Liberation³). One should live

¹ Savvadhammagôvīyam. According to the commentator the meaning of this phrase is: which is not blamed or shown to be wrong by all (heretical) Laws.

² See Uttarādhyāyana, Fifth Lecture.

³ Śīlāṅka quotes and comments upon four different readings of the first line of this verse, the last of which is rendered above as it is the textus receptus of the Dīpikā. (1) Abstaining from even small pride and from deceit, one, &c. (2) 'Great' for 'even small.' (3) I have heard from some men: This is the valour of the virtuous man, that, &c. After this verse Śīlāṅka quotes another which, he says, is not found in MSS. of the text, but indifferent to one's own happiness, calm, and without any attachment. (18)

Do not kill living beings, do not take what is not freely given, do not talk false, treacherous speech! This is the Law of him who is rich in control. (19)

Do not desire by words or thoughts what is a transgression (of the Law); guarding yourself in all ways, and subduing (the senses), practise control. (20)

A man who guards his self and subdues his senses, abhors all sins, past, present, and future ones. (21)

Benighted men of wrong faith, (though) they be renowned as heroes, exert themselves in a bad way, which will have, in all respects, evil consequences for them. (22)

Wise men of right faith, who are renowned heroes, exert themselves in a good way which will have no (evil) consequences whatever for them. (23)

Penance is of no good if performed by noble men who have turned monks (for the sake of fame); but that penance of which nobody else knows anything (is meritorious). Do not spread your own fame¹! (24)

A pious man should eat little, drink little, talk little; he should always exert himself, being calm, indifferent, a subduer (of his senses), and free from greed. (25)

Meditating and performing religious practices, is found in the Tīkā. It is, however, the identical verse I, 3, 4, 20, see above, p. 271, which occurs again I, 11, 11.

¹ Compare Matthew vi. 1-6.

abandoning his body, regarding forbearance as the paramount duty, a monk should wander about till he obtains liberation. (26)

Thus I say.

NINTH LECTURE,

CALLED

THE LAW.

What is the Law that has been preached by the wise Brâhmana ¹ (i.e. Mahâvîra)? Learn from me the noble Law of the Gînas as it is. (1)

Brâhmanas, Kshattriyas, Vaisyas, Kândâlas, Vukkasas, hunters ², merchants ³, Sûdras, and others who are accustomed to do acts ; (2)

The iniquity ⁴ of all these men who cling to property goes on increasing ; for those who procure themselves pleasures by sinful acts will not get rid of misery. (3)

After a man has done acts which cause the death of living beings, his pleasure-seeking relations take possession of his wealth, whilst the doer of the acts must suffer for them. (4)

'Mother, father, daughter-in-law, brother, wife, and sons will not be able to help me, when I suffer for my own deeds ⁵.' (5)

¹ The word brâhmana (mâhara) is here, as in many other passages, a mere honorific title which could be rendered by 'ascetic.'

² Êsiya.

³ Vêsiya.

⁴ Vêra = vaira.

⁵ This verse recurs in Uttarâdhyayana VI, 3 ; above, p. 25.

Taking to heart this truth from which flow the most important truths, a monk, without property and without egoism, should follow the teaching of the Ginas. (6)

Leaving his wealth, sons, relations, and property, leaving sorrow that never ceases, (a monk) should wander about without any worldly interests. (7)

Earth, water, fire, and wind; grass, trees, and corn; oviparous animals, the two kinds of viviparous¹ animals; beings engendered in fluids and in dirt, and plants; (8)

These six classes of living beings a wise man should know and treat tenderly, in thoughts, words, and acts; he should neither do actions nor desire property whereby he might do them any harm. (9)

Untrue speech, sexual intercourse, personal property, taking things that are not freely given: all these causes of injury to living beings a wise man should abstain from. (10)

Deceit², greed³, anger⁴, and pride⁵: combat these causes of sin; a wise man should abstain from them. (11)

Washing, dyeing, making urine, evacuation of the bowels, vomiting, anointing of the eyes, and whatever is contrary to the rules of conduct⁶: from all this a wise man should abstain. (12)

¹ Pôyagarâû = pôtagarâyû, i.e. born alive (as elephants, &c.) and born together with the chorion (as cows, &c.)

² Paliuṣṣana = parikuṣṣana, i.e. mâyâ.

³ Bhayana = bhagana, i.e. lôbha.

⁴ Thandillâ, i.e. krôdha.

⁵ Ussayana = ukkṣraya, i.e. mâna. These four passions are named here from the way in which they are supposed to act upon the soul. Similar names occurred above, p. 248, notes 3-6.

⁶ Palimantha.

Perfumes, wreaths, bathing, cleansing of the teeth, property, actions referring to women : from all this a wise man should abstain. (13)

Alms that have been prepared, or bought, or stolen, or brought for the sake of a monk, or alms that contain particles of the above mentioned, or such alms as are unacceptable (for one cause or other), from all these a wise man should abstain. (14)

Invigorating food, anointing of the eyes, greed, damaging others, washing (one's limbs), (rubbing them with) Lôdhra-powder, &c. : from all this a wise man should abstain. (15)

Deliberating with laymen, praising their work, answering their questions, eating the householder's meals : from all this a wise man should abstain. (16)

He should not learn to play chess¹, he should not speak anything forbidden by the Law ; a wise man should abstain from fights and quarrels. (17)

Shoes, an umbrella, dice, chowries, working for another, helping each other : from all this a wise man should abstain. (18)

A monk should not void his excrements or urine among plants ; he should never rinse his mouth (even) with distilled water after having removed (everything endowed with life). (19)

He should never eat or drink out of a householder's vessel ; nor wear his clothes, especially if he is a naked monk : from all this a wise man should abstain. (20)

¹ Ash/âpada. This does not necessarily, in this place, mean chess-board, but any game played on a similar chequered board may be intended. The earliest unmistakable mention of chess, that I have met with, occurs in Ratnâkara's Haravigaya XII, 9, a mahâkâvya written in the first half of the ninth century A.D. in Kashmir.—Another explanation of ashâvayam is arthapadam = arthasâstram 'means of acquiring property.'

A stool or bed or a seat in a house, asking of news and recollection (of past sports) : from all this a wise man should abstain. (21)

Fame, glory, and renown ; honours and respectful treatment ; all pleasures in the whole world : from all this a wise man should abstain. (22)

A monk (should be content) with such food and drink as will sustain his life ; he should give a portion of it to others : [from all this a wise man should abstain¹.] (23)

Thus spoke the Nirgrantha, the great sage Mahāvira ; he who possesses infinite knowledge and faith has taught the Law and the sacred texts². (24)

In speaking (a monk) should use as few words as possible ; he should not delight in another's foibles ; he should avoid deceiving speech³, and should answer after ripe reflection. (25)

One will repent of having used the third kind of speech⁴ ; a secret should not be made known. This is the Nirgrantha's commandment. (26)

¹ The last part of this verse is here repeated from the preceding ones ; but it is quite out of place here.

² Here apparently ended the original treatise ; the following verses are not directly connected with it.

³ Mâi/hânam, always rendered mâtristhânam. I think it is a regular corruption for mâyâsthânam. The second syllable of the word becomes short before two consonants, and then the ya was changed into i with which it is almost interchangeable.

⁴ The four kinds of speech are (1) true speech, (2) untrue speech, (3) speech partly true and partly untrue, (4) speech which is neither true nor untrue, see part i, p. 150.—Inaccurate statements are intended here.

(A monk) should not call one names¹, nor 'friend,' nor by his Gôtra; 'thou, thou' is vulgar; never address one by 'thou!' (27)

A virtuous monk should never keep company (with the wicked); for thereby he incurs dangers (for his conduct) disguised as pleasures. A wise man should be aware of them. (28)

(A monk) should not stay in the house of a householder except by constraint; nor should he amuse himself too long (by looking) at the sports of the children of the village². (29)

Not desirous of fine things, he should wander about, exerting himself; not careless in his conduct, he should bear whatever pains he has to suffer. (30)

If beaten, he should not be angry; if abused, he should not fly into a passion; with a placid mind he should bear everything and not make a great noise. (31)

He should not enjoy pleasures though they offer themselves; for thus he is said (to reach) discernment. He should always practise what is right to do in the presence of the enlightened ones. (32)

He should obey and serve a wise and pious teacher, (such teachers) as are heroes (of faith), who search for the benefit of their souls, are firm in control, and subdue their senses. (33)

These men, who do not see the light (as it were) in domestic life, are the beloved of the people; these heroes, free from bondage, do not desire life. (34)

¹ Hôlâ, which is said to be a Dêsi word of abuse. The same word occurs also in the Âkârânga Sûtra, see part i, p. 151, where I translated it by 'loon.'

² According to Silânka: (he should not join) the sports of the children of a village, nor amuse himself too long.

They do not long for sensual pleasures, they do not engage in works. All that (the heretics) always talk about, is opposed to the right faith. (35)

Excessive pride and deceit, all worldly vanities : all this a wise man knows and renounces, and thus brings about his final Liberation. (36)

Thus I say.

TENTH LECTURE,

CALLED

CAREFULNESS¹.

The wise (Arhat) having pondered on the Law proclaimed it ; learn from me correctly what is carefulness. A monk who forms no resolutions and is possessed of carefulness, should wander about, giving no offence to any creature ; (1)

To no living beings, whether they move or not, whether above or below or on earth, by putting a strain upon them by his hands or feet². Nor should he take from householders anything that is not freely given. (2)

Having mastered the Law and got rid of carelessness, he should live on allowed food³, and treat

¹ Samâhi = samâdhi. This word has not only the meaning 'meditation,' but also a much wider one. Here it is explained as 'the means of obtaining Mōksha.' I have chosen 'carefulness,' because it is less technical than 'control,' which I have used in other places.

² The first part of verse 2 to be construed with the last part of the preceding verse.

³ Lâdhe.

all beings as he himself would be treated ; he should not expose himself to guilt by his desire for life ; a monk who performs austerities should not keep any store. (3)

Restraining his senses from women, a sage should wander about free from all worldly ties. See, every creature and every being suffers pain and is afflicted. (4)

Doing harm to these beings, an ignorant man becomes involved in sins. Sin is committed by injuring (beings), and one sins also by employing others (in such acts). (5)

He too who leads a miserable life, commits sin. Therefore (the Ginas) have enjoined thorough carefulness. One should know the truth, delight in control and sound judgment, cease from injuring beings, and be of a settled mind. (6)

Looking at all people with an impartial mind, one should not do anything to please or to harm them. After a virtuous beginning some become miserable and lose heart, (since) they desire honour and fame. (7)

Desiring unallowed¹ food and accepting such, the sinner, careless in his conduct, is attached to women, and tries to acquire property. (8)

Given to violent deeds he accumulates (Karman) ; on his decease he (meets with) really distressing misery. Therefore a wise man considers well the Law ; a sage wanders about free from all worldly ties. (9)

He should not expose himself to guilt by his desire for life, but he should wander about without any attachment. Speaking after due consideration, and combating his worldly desires, he should say nothing that involves slaughter of living beings. (10)

¹ Ahâgada=yathâkrîta; cf. p. 131, note 7, 1.

He should not desire unallowed food, and he should not mix with people who desire such ; he should mortify his flesh, thinking (of his duty), and giving up his sorrows without regard (to worldly interests). (11)

Try to realise that you are single and alone ; thereby you will obtain Liberation ; mind, this is no false assertion ! This Liberation is not anything unreal, but the best thing. An ascetic is free from anger, and delights in the truth. (12)

Abstain from sexual intercourse with women, do not acquire property ; a man possessed of carefulness will, beyond doubt, be a saviour (to others) in all circumstances. (13)

A monk having conquered aversion to control and delight in sensual objects¹, should bear all troubles caused by (pricking) grass, cold, heat, and insects ; he should endure pleasant and unpleasant smells. (14)

Guarding his speech and possessed of carefulness, acquiring (pure) Lēsyā², he should wander about ; he should not thatch a house for himself or for others, nor behave towards other people like a householder. (15)

Questioned by somebody who maintains the unchangeable character of the soul³, he should expound the true (doctrine) ; those who engage in works and

¹ This is, according to Śyāṅka, the meaning of the words araim raim vā, see, however, above, p. 111, note 1.

² See Uttarādhyayana, Lecture XXXIV.

³ A kiriyaâyā = akriyâtman.

are held in worldly bondage, do not know the Law which leads to Liberation. (16)

Men here have various opinions ; (they adhere) to the doctrine of the Kriyâvâdins and Akriyâvâdins. The iniquity of an unrestrained sinner, who after having been born injures the body (of beings to procure his own happiness), goes on increasing. (17)

Forgetting that his life will have an end, a rash and foolish man is full of selfishness ; he toils day and night, greedy of wealth, as if he never should grow old or die. (18)

Leave wealth and cattle, all relations and dear friends ! (A man) always talks (about these things), and he is infatuated with them ; but other people will take away his wealth. (19)

As smaller beasts keep at a distance from a lion, being afraid of him, so a wise man keeps aloof from sin, well considering the Law. (20)

A wise man who has become awakened should turn away from sin, when he considers the evils arising from slaughter and the great dangers entailed by his cruel disposition. (21)

A sage setting out for the real good¹ (viz. Liberation), should not speak untruth ; this (rule, they say,) comprises Nirvâṇa and the whole of carefulness. He should not do works, nor cause others to do them, nor assent to others doing them. (22)

When he gets pure (food), he should not be affected (by love or hate), and he should not be too fond (of such food) nor long for it. A pious monk, free from bonds, should wander about desiring neither honours nor fame. (23)

¹ Attagâmi = âptagâmin. Âpta is either Môksha as assumed in my translation, or it denotes the 'highest authority ;' in the latter case we can translate : who proceeds on the right path.

A monk who has left the house and is free from desires should abandon his body, annihilating his sins; he should not desire life nor death, and walk about, having got beyond the Circle (of Births)¹. (24)

Thus I say.

ELEVENTH LECTURE,

CALLED

THE PATH.

What is the Path that has been preached by the wise Brāhmaṇa² (i. e. Mahāvītra), having correctly entered upon which path a man crosses the flood (of Samsāra) which is difficult to pass? (1)

O monk and great sage, tell us this best path which leads to liberation from all misery, as you know it! (2)

Tell us how we should describe that path, if somebody, a god or a man, should ask us about it! (3)

If somebody, a god or a man, ask you about it, tell them the truth about the path. Listen to me! (4)

The very difficult (path) explained by the Kāśyapa, following which some men from this earth

¹ Or, the fetter of sin.

² See note on IX, 1.

have formerly passed over (the Samsāra) like traders over the ocean¹, pass over it (even now), and will pass over it in future; (this path which) I have learned, I shall explain in due order; men, listen to me! (5, 6)

Earth-lives are individual beings, so are water-lives, fire-lives, and wind-lives; grass, trees, corn; (7)

And the remaining, (viz.) the movable beings; thus are enumerated the six classes of living beings; these are all the living beings, there are no more besides. (8)

A wise man should study them with all means of philosophical research. All beings hate pains; therefore one should not kill them. (9)

This is the quintessence of wisdom: not to kill anything. Know this to be the legitimate conclusion from the principle of the reciprocity with regard to non-killing². (10)

He should cease to injure living beings whether they move or not, on high, below, and on earth. For this has been called the Nirvāṇa, which consists in peace³. (11)

Master (of his senses) and avoiding wrong, he should do no harm to anybody, neither by thoughts, nor words, nor acts. (12)

A wise man who restrains his senses and possesses great knowledge, should accept such things as are freely given him, being always circumspect with regard to the accepting of alms, and abstaining from what he is forbidden to accept. (13)

¹ The same simile occurs also in I, 3, 4, 18, above p. 271.

² The same verse occurred above, I, 1, 4, 10, p. 247.

³ We have had the same verse above, I, 3, 4, 20, p. 271.

A true monk should not accept such food and drink as has been especially prepared for him along with slaughter of living beings. (14)

He should not partake of a meal which contains but a particle of forbidden food¹: this is the Law of him who is rich in control. Whatever (food a monk) suspects (to be impure), he may not eat. (15)

A man who guards his soul and subdues his senses, should never assent to anybody killing beings.—In towns and villages cases (will occur, which place) the faithful (in a dilemma)². (16)

Hearing the talk of people, one should not say, 'this is a good action,' nor 'this is a bad action.' For there is an objection (to either answer). (17)

He should not say that it is meritorious, because he ought to save those beings, whether they move or not, which are killed there for the sake of making a gift. (18)

Nor should he say that it is not meritorious, because he would then prevent those for whose sake the food and drink in question is prepared, to get their due. (19)

Those who praise the gift, are accessory³ to the killing of beings; those who forbid it, deprive (others) of the means of subsistence. (20)

Those, however, who give neither answer, viz.

¹ This is the meaning of the phrase pâtikarma na sêvêta.

² When well-meaning people sink a well, offer a sacrifice, or feed persons, &c.

³ Literally, wish.

that it is meritorious, or is not so, do not expose themselves to guilt, and will reach Beatitude¹. (21)

Knowing that Beatitude is the best thing as the moon is among the stars, a sage always restrained and subduing his senses brings about Beatitude. (22)

A pious man² shows an island to the beings which are carried away (by the flood of the Samsâra) and suffer for their deeds. This place of safety has been proclaimed (by the Tirthakaras). (23)

He who guards his soul, subdues his senses, puts a stop to the current (of the Samsâra), and is free from Âsravas³, is (entitled to) expound the pure, complete, unparalleled Law. (24)

Those who do not know this (Law), are not awakened, though they fancy themselves awakened; believing themselves awakened, they are beyond the boundary of right faith⁴. (25)

Eating seeds and drinking cold water⁵ and what

¹ Sîlânka quotes the following Sanskrit verse to show the application of the maxim to the digging of a well: satyam vaprêshu sîtam sasikaradhavalam vâri pîtvâ prakâmam vyukhhinnârêshatrîshnâh pramuditamanasaḥ prânisârthâ bhavanti | sôsham nîtê galaughê dinakarakiranair yânti anantâ vinâram tēnô-dâsīnabhâvam vragati muniganaḥ kûpavaprâdikâryê || 'Forsooth, when living beings drink to their hearts' content the cool water of ditches, which is white like the moon, their thirst is completely allayed and their heart is gladdened; but when all the water is dried up by the rays of the sun, numberless creatures must die; therefore the sages decline every interest in the construction of wells and ditches.'

² The commentators connect sâhu as adjective with dîvam, and supply Tirthakara, &c. as subject.

³ See above, p. 55, note 1.

⁴ Samâdhi.

⁵ Vîôdaga = bîgôdaka.

has been especially prepared for them, they enter upon meditation ¹, but are ignorant of the truth, and do not possess carefulness. (26)

As dhaṅkas, herons, ospreys, cormorants, and pheasants meditate upon capturing fish, (which is) a sinful and very low meditation, so some heretical, unworthy Sramanas contemplate the pursuit of pleasures; (they are) sinful and very low like herons. (27, 28)

Here some weak-minded persons, abusing the pure path, enter upon a wrong path. They thereby will go to misery and destruction. (29)

As a blind-born man getting into a leaky boat wants to reach the shore, but is drowned during the passage ²; so some unworthy, heretical Sramanas, having got into the full current (of the Samsâra), will incur great danger. (30, 31)

But knowing this Law which has been proclaimed by the Kâsyapa, (a monk) crosses the dreadful current (of the Samsâra), and wanders about intent on the benefit of his soul. (32)

Indifferent to worldly objects, a man should wander about treating all creatures in the world so as he himself would be treated. (33)

A wise man knowing (and renouncing) excessive pride and deceit, (in short) giving up all (causes of worldly existence), brings about his Liberation ³. (34)

He acquires good qualities, and leaves off bad qualities; a monk, who vigorously practises austerities, avoids anger and pride. (35)

The Buddhas ⁴ that were, and the Buddhas that ¹ Comp. I, 3, 3, 12.

² Verses 30, 31 a=I, 1, 2, 31, 32 a.

³ The first line of this verse occurred in I, 9, 36.

⁴ Here Buddha is a synonym for Tîrthakara.

will be, they (as it were) have Peace as their foundation, even as all things have the earth for their foundation. (36)

And if any accidents whatever befall him who has gained that (foundation), he will not be overpowered by them as a mountain by the storm¹. (37)

A restrained, very learned, and wise (monk) should accept such alms as are freely given him, being free from passions and waiting for his end. This is the doctrine of the Kêvalin. (38)

Thus I say.

TWELFTH LECTURE,

CALLED

THE CREED ².

There are four (heretical) creeds³ which the disputants severally uphold: 1. the Kriyâvâda, 2. the Akriyâvâda, 3. the Vinayavâda, and 4. the Agñânavâda. (1)

The agnostics⁴, though they (pretend to) be

¹ Śilânka says that by exercise the power of resistance will be increased, and in confirmation of this he relates the well-known story of the herdsman who daily carried a calf from its birth till it was two years old.

² Samôsarana = samavasarana. This word and the verb samôsarai are commonly used when Mahâvîra preaches to a meeting (mêlâpaka) gathered round him.

³ Compare Uttarâdhyayana XVIII, 23, above p. 83, note 2.

⁴ Annâniyâ = agñânikâs, the followers of the fourth sect.

clever, reason incoherently, and do not get beyond the confusion of their ideas. Ignorant (teachers) speak to ignorant (pupils), and without reflection they speak untruth. (2)

Believing truth to be untruth, and calling a bad man good, the various upholders of Vinaya, asked about it, explain their tenet ¹. (3)

Without perceiving the truth they speak thus: this object (viz. Mōksha) is realised by us thus (viz. by Vinaya). The Akriyāvādins who deny Karman ², do not admit that the action (of the soul is transmitted to) the future moments ³. (4)

They become involved in contradiction in their own assertions; they falter in their speech and are unable to repeat what is said to them ⁴. This (their opinion) has a valiant counter-opinion, this (our opinion) has no valiant counter-opinion; and Karman has six sources ⁵. (5)

The Akriyāvādins who do not understand the truth, bring forward various opinions; many men

¹ Viz. that Mōksha is arrived at through Vinaya, discipline.

² Lavāvasaṅkī. Lava is explained by karman, and avasaṅkī by apasartum sīlam yêshām tē.

³ The meaning is that as everything has but a momentary existence, there is no connection between the thing as it is now, and as it will be in the next moment. This is a doctrine of the Bauddhas. But the Sāṅkhyas are also reckoned among the Akriyāvādins, because, according to them, the ātman does not act.

⁴ Sīlāṅka in commenting upon this passage has to say a good deal about the Bauddhas. It is perhaps of interest that he mentions their 500 Gātakas, and not thirty-four which is the recognised number of Gātakas according to the Northern Buddhist. How Sīlāṅka came to a knowledge of the numbers of Gātakas accepted by the Southern Buddhists, I cannot tell.

⁵ Viz. the six Āsravas.

believing in them will whirl round in the endless Circle of Births. (6)

‘There rises no sun, nor does it set; there waxes no moon, nor does it wane; there are no rivers running, nor any winds blowing; the whole world is ascertained to be unreal¹.’ (7)

As a blind man, though he have a light, does not see colours, &c., because he is deprived of his eye(sight), so the Akriyâvâdin, having a perverted intellect, does not recognise the action (of the soul) though it does exist. (8)

Many men in this world who have studied astrology, the art of interpreting dreams, divination from diagrams, augury, divination from bodily marks, and from portents, and the eight branches (of divination from omens), know the future². (9)

(The opponents say that) some forecasts are true, and the prophecies of others prove wrong; therefore they do not study those sciences, but they profess to know the world, fools though they be³. (10)

The (Kriyâvâdins) Sramanas and Brâhmanas understanding the world (according to their lights), speak thus: misery is produced by one’s own works, not by those of somebody else (viz. fate, creator, &c.)⁴. But right knowledge and conduct lead to liberation. (11)

¹ This is the opinion of the Sûnyavâdins, who are considered to belong to the Akriyâvâdins, because they deny all actions, even such as are perceived by everybody (Sîlânka).

² This would be impossible if the whole world was unreal.

³ A various reading, commented upon by the scholiasts, runs thus: âham su viggâpalimokkham êva, ‘they say that one must give up science.’

⁴ The Kriyâvâdins contend, according to Sîlânka, that works alone, by themselves, without knowledge, lead to Môksha.

The (Tirthakaras), being (as it were) the eyes of the world and its leaders, teach the path which is salutary to men; they have declared that the world is eternal inasmuch as creatures are (for ever) living in it, O ye men! (12)

The Rākshasas and the dwellers in Yama's world, the troops¹ of Asuras and Gandharvas, and the spirits that walk the air, and individual beings²: they will all be born again and again. (13)

(The Samsāra) which is compared to the boundless flood of water, know it to be impassable and of very long duration on account of repeated births³. Men therein, seduced by their senses and by women, are born again and again both (as movable and immovable beings). (14)

The sinners cannot annihilate their works by new works; the pious annihilate their works by abstention from works; the wise and happy men who got rid of the effects of greed, do not commit sins. (15)

They know the past, present, and future ways of the world; they are leaders of other men, but follow no leader; they are awakened, and put an end to mundane existence. (16)

Averse to injury of living beings, they do not act, nor cause others to act. Always restraining them-

¹ Kāya. The commentators explain this word as denoting the earth-bodies, &c., but from the context it will be seen that it refers to Asuras and Gandharvas, and must be translated by 'troops.'

² Pudhō siyâ = prīthak sritâḥ; according to Śīlāṅka, prīthivyâsritâḥ. This expression is generally used to denote the lower order of beings.

³ To render bhavagahana.

selves, those pious men practise control, and some become heroes through their knowledge. (17)

He regards small beings and large beings, the whole world as equal to himself; he comprehends the immense world, and being awakened he controls himself among the careless. (18)

Those who have learned (the truth) by themselves or from others, are able (to save) themselves and others. One should always honour a man, who is like a light and makes manifest the Law after having well considered it. (19)

He who knows himself and the world; who knows where (the creatures) go, and whence they will not return; who knows what is eternal, and what is transient; birth and death, and the future existences of men; (20)

He who knows the tortures of beings below (i. e. in hell); who knows the influx of sin and its stoppage¹; who knows misery and its annihilation,—he is entitled to expound the Kriyâvâda², (21)

Being not attached to sounds and colours, indifferent to tastes and smells, not desiring life nor death, guarded by control, and exempt from the Circle (of Births). (22)

Thus I say.

¹ Âsrava and samvara.

² It is evident that the Gainas considered themselves Kriyâvâdins. I had overlooked this passage when penning the note on p. 83.

THIRTEENTH LECTURE,

CALLED

THE REAL TRUTH.

I shall now expound, in accordance with truth, the various qualities of men ; I shall explain the virtue and peace of the good, the vices and the unrest of the wicked. (1)

Having learned the Law from men who exert themselves day and night, from the Tathâgatas¹, they neglect the conduct in which they had been instructed, and speak rudely to their teacher. (2)

Those who explain the pure doctrine according to their individual opinion, falsify it in repeating (it after their teachers) ; those who speak untruth from pride of knowledge, are not capable of many virtues. (3)

Those who on being questioned conceal the truth, defraud themselves of the real good. These bad men who believe themselves good and are full of deceit, will go to endless punishment. (4)

He who is of a wrathful disposition and calls everything by its true name², who renews a composed quarrel, will, like a blind man groping his way with

¹ According to the commentators, Gaiṇa teachers, inclusive of the schismatical ones, are intended. Tathâgata is a synonym of Tîrthakara and Buddha ; but it is less frequently used by the Gaiṇas than by the Bauddhas with whom it is of very common occurrence.

² Gagāṇhabhâsî = gagadarthabhâshin. Sîlânka proposes also gayâarthabhâshin, who speaks dogmatically.

a stick, do harm to himself, being still subject to passion and possessing evil Karman. (5)

He who is quarrelsome and talks improperly, is not impartial nor beyond the reach of deceit¹; but he who executes the commands (of his teacher) and controls himself, sees nothing but the truth and is exempt from deceit. (6)

He who conforms to admonitions however many he receives, is kindly spoken, subtile, manly, noble, and a well-doer; (such a man) is impartial and beyond the reach of deceit. (7)

He who believes himself rich in control, or inconsiderately vaunts his knowledge, or fancies himself purified by austerities, will look upon other men as shadows. (8)

He is always turned round by delusion, and has no place in the Gôtra where the Vow of Silence is practised (viz. in the Gaina church), who not being awakened puts himself forward in order to gain honours through something different from control. (9)

A Brâhmaṇa or Kshattriya by birth, a scion of the Ugra² race or a Liṅṅhavi³, who enters the order eating alms given him by others, is not stuck up on account of his renowned Gôtra. (10)

His pedigree on his mother's and on his father's

¹ Aghaṅghapatta. Ghaṅghâ (tempest) = mâyâ.

² Concerning the Ugras, see above, p. 71, note 2.

³ Liṅṅhai. According to the Gainas the Liṅṅhavi and Mallakis were the chiefs of Kâsi and Kôśala. They seem to have succeeded the Aikshvâkas, who ruled there in the times of the Râmâyana. The Liṅṅhavis became a powerful race, who held the supreme power in Eastern India during many centuries after the beginning of our era.

side will be of no use to him, nothing will but right knowledge and conduct: when after becoming a monk he acts like a householder, he will not succeed in obtaining final Liberation. (11)

If a poor monk subsisting on the meanest food is attached to vanities, desires fame, and not being awakened, (makes his monkhood) a means of subsistence, he will suffer again and again (in the Circle of Births). (12)

A monk, who is eloquent, speaks very well, has bright ideas, is clever, possesses a fine intellect, and has purified his soul, may (perhaps) despise other men on account of his intellect. (13)

Thus an intelligent monk who puts himself forward, has not yet realised carefulness; or rather he is a weak-minded man who elated by his success blames other men. (14)

A monk should combat pride of genius, pride of sanctity, pride of birth, and (pride of good) living, which is enumerated as the fourth; such a man is wise and of the right stuff. (15)

The wise leave off these kinds of pride, the pious do not cultivate them; the great sages are above all such things as Gôtra (&c.), and they ascend to the place where there is no Gôtra at all (viz. to Môksha). (16)

A monk who looks upon his body as on a corpse and fully understands the Law, will on entering a village or a town distinguish between what may be accepted and what may not, and will not be greedy of food or drink. (17)

A monk having conquered aversion to control and delight in sensual objects, living in company with many brethren or leading a single life, should silently repeat to himself: 'A man must come and go (according to his Karman) alone' (i. e. without deriving any help from others). (18)

Knowing it by intuition or having learned it from others, one should teach the Law which is a benefit to men; the pious are not given to blameable sinful practices. (19)

If (a monk preaches the Law to some one) whose disposition he has not ascertained, that man, not believing (what he is taught), will become angry, and may wound him in a way that will shorten or end his life. When he knows their disposition, he (may teach) others the truth. (20)

A wise man by suppressing his Karman and his will should renounce his interest in everything else. (For) through the objects of sight (i.e. senses) which are causes of danger, men come to harm. Knowing the truth with regard to movable and immovable beings (a monk should exert himself)¹. (21)

Not desiring honour or fame, he should say nothing to anybody either to please or to irritate him. Avoiding all evils, a monk should without embarrassment and passion (preach the Law). (22)

Well considering (his duties) in accordance with truth, abstaining from doing injury to living beings, not desiring life nor death, he should wander about released from the Circle (of Births). (23)

Thus I say.

¹ The commentators make out the following meaning: A wise (preacher) should ascertain (his hearers') occupations and inclinations, and then (try to) better their evil disposition. Through the objects of sight which are causes of danger, men are led astray. A wise man knowing (the disposition of his hearers should preach the Law which is wholesome) to all living beings whether they move or not.

FOURTEENTH LECTURE,

. CALLED

THE NIRGRANTHA.

He who has given up all worldly ties and is instructed in our creed, should practise chastity, exerting himself; obeying the commands (of his teacher) he should make himself well acquainted with the conduct; a clever (monk) should avoid carelessness. (1)

As (birds of prey), e. g. Dhāṅkas, carry off a fluttering young bird whose wings are not yet grown, when it attempts to fly from the nest, but is not able to do so, because it is too young and its wings are not yet grown; (2)

Just as they carry off a young bird whose wings are not yet grown, so many unprincipled men will seduce a novice who has not yet mastered the Law, thinking that they can get him in their power, when they have made him leave (the Gakkha)¹. (3)

A good man should long to live with his teacher in order to perform his duties², knowing that he who does not live with his teacher will not put an end to his mundane existence. Making manifest

¹ Nissāriyam = niśāritam. I follow in the text the interpretation of the commentators. But I think that instead of mannamānā we must read, as in the preceding verse, mannamānam; and translate: believing himself rich in control (vāsimam) though he be still wanting in strength (nissāriyam).

² Samāhim.

the conduct of the virtuous, an intelligent (monk) should not leave the (company of his teacher). (4)

(A monk) who complies with the rules for Yatis¹ as regards postures, lying down, sitting, and exertion, who is thoroughly acquainted with the Samitis and Guptis, should in teaching others explain each single (point of conduct). (5)

Whether he hears (pleasant) sounds or dreadful ones, he should not allow himself to be influenced by them, and persevere in control; nor should a monk be sleepy or careless, but by every means he should get rid of doubts. (6)

If admonished by a young or an old monk, by one above him or one of equal age, he should not retort against him², being perfectly free from passion; for one who is (as it were) carried away (by the stream of the Samsâra), will not get to its opposite shore. (7)

(He should not become angry) if (doing anything wrong) his own creed is quoted against him by a heretic, or if he is corrected by (somebody else) be he young or old, or by a female slave engaged in low work or carrying a jar, or by some householder. (8)

He should not be angry with them nor do them any harm, nor say a single hard word to them, but he should promise not to commit the same sin again; for this is better than to do wrong. (9)

As to one who has lost his way in the wood, others who have not, (show it, thus some) teach the ¹ Susâdhuyukta.

² Sammam tayam thiratô nâ-bhigakkhê. I translate according to the commentators, as I am unable to understand the words in the text.

path which is salutary to men. Therefore (he should think): this is for my good that those who know put me right. (10)

Now he who has lost his way should treat with all honour him who has not. This simile has been explained by the Prophet. Having learned what is right one should practise it. (11)

As a guide in a dark night does not find the way since he cannot see it, but recognises the way when it has become light by the rising of the sun; (12)

So a novice who has not mastered the Law, does not know the Law, not being awakened; but afterwards he knows it well through the words of the Ginas, as with his eye (the wanderer sees the way) after sunrise. (13)

Always restrained with regard to movable and immovable beings which are on high, below, and on earth, (a monk) should wander about entertaining no hostile thoughts (towards them) and being steadfast (in control). (14)

At the right time he may put a question about living beings to a well-conducted (monk), who will explain the conduct of the virtuous; and what he hears he should follow and treasure up in his heart, thinking that it is the doctrine of the Kêvalins. (15)

Living in this (company of the teacher) and protecting (himself or other beings) in the three ways (viz. in thoughts, words, and acts), he (gets) peace and the annihilation (of sins) as they say. Thus speak those who know the three worlds, and they do not again commit faults! (16)

A monk by hearing the desired Truth gets bright ideas and becomes a clever (teacher); desiring the highest good and practising austerities and silence, he will obtain final Liberation (living on) pure (food). (17)

Those who having investigated the Law expound it, are awakened and put an end to mundane existence; able to liberate both (themselves and others), they answer the well-deliberated questions. (18)

He does not conceal (the truth) nor falsify it; he should not indulge his pride and (desire for) fame; being wise he should not joke, nor pronounce benedictions. (19)

Averse to injury of living beings, he does not disgrace his calling¹ by the use of spells; a good man does not desire anything from other people, and he does not give utterance to heretical doctrines. (20)

A monk living single should not ridicule heretical doctrines, and should avoid hard words though they be true; he should not be vain, nor brag, but he should without embarrassment and passion (preach the Law). (21)

A monk should be modest² though he be of a fearless mind; he should expound the Syâdvâda³; he should use the two (permitted) kinds of speech⁴, living among virtuous men, impartial and wise. (22)

He who follows (the instruction) may believe something untrue; (one should) kindly (tell him) 'It is thus or thus.' One should never hurt him by

¹ Gôtra, explained by mauna.

² Saṅkiggiyâ = saṅkyêta.

³ Vibhagyavâda. The saptabhaṅgīnaya or seven modes of assertion are intended by the expression in the text. See Bhandarkar, Report, 1883-84, p. 95.

⁴ See above, p. 304, note 4. The first and fourth kinds of speech are here intended.

outrageous language, nor give long-winded explanations of difficult passages. (23)

(If the pupil does not understand his short explanation), he should explain at greater length. When the pupil has heard it, he will correctly understand the Truth. A monk should utter pure speech, which is in accordance with the creed (of the Ginas), and should declare the distinction of sin. (24)

He should well learn the (sacred texts) as they have been revealed; he should endeavour (to teach the creed), but he should not speak unduly long. A faithful man who is able to explain the entire creed¹ will not corrupt the faith. (25)

He should not pervert nor render obscure (the truth); he should fabricate neither text nor meaning, being a saviour; being devoted to the Teacher and considering well his words, he delivers faithfully what he has learned. (26)

He who correctly knows the sacred texts, who practises austerities, who understands all details of the Law, who is an authentic interpreter, clever, and learned—such a man is competent to explain the entire creed. (27)

Thus I say.

¹ Samâhi = samâdhi.

FIFTEENTH LECTURE,

CALLED

THE YAMAKAS¹.

What is past, present, and to come, all this is known to the Leader, the Saviour, who annihilates the hindrances to right faith. (1)

The annihilator of doubt knows the incomparable (Law); he, the expounder of the incomparable (Law), is not inclined towards this or that (heretical doctrine). (2).

On this or that (article of the creed he has) the correct opinion; hence he is rightly called a true (man); he who always possesses the truth, is kind towards his fellow-creatures. (3)

Towards your fellow-creatures be not hostile: that is the Law of him who is rich in control; he who is rich in control renounces everything, and in this (world meditates on the) reflections on life². (4)

¹ This lecture has been named from its opening words gamañyam, which also means, consisting of yamakas (compare Journal of the German Oriental Society, vol. xl, p. 101). For in this lecture each verse or line opens with a word repeated from the end of the preceding one. This artifice is technically called srīṅkhala-yamaka, or chain-yamaka, a term which seems to be contained in another name of our lecture, mentioned by the author of the Niryukti (verse 28), viz. ādāniya-saṅkalīyā. For saṅkalīyā is the Prākṛit for srīṅkhala (e.g. in our text I, 5, 2, 20), though Śīlāṅka here renders it wrongly saṅkalita; and ādāniya by itself is used as a name of our lecture.

² These are the twelve bhāvanās or meditations on the vanity of life and the world in general, and on the excellence of the Law, &c.

He whose soul is purified by meditating on those reflections is compared to a ship in water ; like a ship reaching the shore he gets beyond misery. (5)

A wise man gets beyond it who knows the sins of this world ; sinful acts are got rid of by him who does not undertake any new acts. (6)

He who does not undertake new acts does not acquire Karman, and he verily understands (Karman); understanding it he becomes a Great Hero ¹, who is not born (again) and does not die. (7)

A Great Hero, who has no Karman, does not die.—As the wind extinguishes a light, (so he puts down) the lovely women in this world. (8)

Those men whom women do not seduce, value Mōksha most ; those men are free from bondage and do not desire life. (9)

Turning from worldly life, they reach the goal by pious acts ; by their pious acts they are directed (towards Liberation), and they show the way to others. (10)

The preaching of the Law (has different effect) on different creatures ; he who is rich in control, is treated with honour ², but does not care for it ; he exerts himself, subdues his senses, is firm, and abstains from sexual intercourse. (11)

(He should not yield to temptations as a pig which) is decoyed by wild rice, being proof against sins, and free from faults. Being free from faults he always ¹ Mahāvīra.

² Pūyanāsaē, explained by pūganā-āsvādaka. I should prefer pūgā-nāśaka, who abolished the worship of gods, in which case the following word anāsaē = an-āśaya might be rendered : he makes no plans.

subdues his senses, and has reached the incomparable cession of Karman¹. (12)

Knowing the incomparable (control), he should not be hostile towards anybody, in thoughts, words, or deeds, having eyes (to see everything). (13)

He truly is the eye of men who (dwells so to speak) on the end² of desire; on its end (i. e. edge) glides the razor, on its end (i. e. rim) rolls the wheel. (14)

Because the wise use the ends (of things, i. e. bad food, &c.), they are called 'makers of an end' here. Here in the world of men we are men to fulfil the Law. (15)

In this creed which surpasses the world, (men) become perfected saints or gods, as I have heard; and I have heard that outside the rank of men this is not so³. (16)

Some (heretics) have said that they (viz. the gods) put an end to misery⁴; but others (Gainas) have repeatedly said that this (human) body is not easily obtained. (17)

To one whose soul has left (human life), it is not easy again to obtain instruction (in the Law), nor is such a mental disposition which they declare appropriate for adopting the Law⁵. (18)

How can it even be imagined that he should

¹ Sandhipattê. Sandhi is explained Karmavivaralakṣaṇam bhâvasandhim.

² There is a play on the word 'end' in this and the next verse which to a modern mind savours more of the absurd than the profound.

³ Perfection cannot be obtained by other creatures than men.

⁴ I. e. reach final beatitude.

⁵ The words as they are preserved do not construe; the meaning, however, must have been about what I have given in the translation.

be born again, who professes the pure, complete, unparalleled Law, and is a receptacle of the unparalleled Law? (19)

How could the wise Tathāgatas be born again, the Tathāgatas who engage in no undertakings, the supreme, the eyes of the world? (20)

And there has been declared by the Kāśyapa the supreme condition¹, by realising which some happy and wise men reach excellence. (21)

A wise man who has gained strength (in control) which leads to the expiation of sins, annihilates his former works, and does not do new ones. (22)

The Great Hero does no actions which are the effects of former sins. By his actions he is directed (towards Mōksha), abstaining from works which are entailed by birth². (23)

That which all saints value highly (viz. control), destroys the thorn (viz. Karman); practising it some have been liberated, and others have become gods. (24)

There have been wise men, and there will be pious men, who having come to the end and made manifest the end of the incomprehensible path, have been liberated. (25)

Thus I say.

¹ Viz. control.

² Gammayam. The commentators explain it yan matam; but I think it is = ganmagam.

SIXTEENTH LECTURE,

CALLED

THE SONG ¹.

Now the Venerable One said : He who thus subdues his senses, who is well qualified (for his task) ² and abandons his body, is to be called a Brâhmana, a Sramana, a Bhikshu, a Nirgrantha. (The pupil) replied : Why is he who thus subdues his senses, who is well qualified (for his task) and abandons his body, to be called a Brâhmana, a Sramana, a Bhikshu, a Nirgrantha? Tell this, O great sage! (1)

He is a Brâhmana for this reason that he has ceased from all sinful actions, viz. love, hate, quarrel, calumny, backbiting, reviling of others, aversion to control, and love of pleasures, deceit, untruth, and the sin of wrong belief; that he possesses the Samitis, always exerts himself, is not angry, nor proud. (2)

He is a Sramana for this reason that he is not hampered by any obstacles, that he is free from desires, (abstaining from) property, killing, telling lies, and sexual intercourse; (and from) wrath, pride, deceit, greed, love, and hate: thus giving up every passion that involves him in sin, (such as) killing of beings. (Such a man) deserves the name of a Sramana, who subdues (moreover) his senses, is well qualified (for his task), and abandons his body. (3)

¹ Gâhâ = gâthâ. In this lecture, which is in prose as regards form and contents, there is nothing that could justify the title given it.

² Daviê = dravya.

He is a Bhikshu for this reason that he is not conceited, but modest, and obedient (to his Guru), that he subdues his senses, is well qualified (for his task), and abandons his body, that he sustains all troubles and calamities, that he practises with a pure mind the (prescribed) conduct, exerts himself well, is steadfast, and eats but a moderate quantity¹ of food which is given him by others. (Such a man) deserves the name of a Bhikshu. (4)

He is a Nirgrantha for this reason that he is single², knowing the absolute (âtman), awakened, proof against sins, well disciplined; that he possesses the Samitis and equanimity, knows the true nature of the Self, is wise, has renounced the causes of sin both (objectively and subjectively³), does not desire honour, respect, and hospitality, but searches and knows the Law, endeavours to gain Liberation, and lives restrained. (Such a man) deserves the name of a Nirgrantha, who subdues his senses, is well qualified (for his task), and abandons his body. (5)

Know this to be thus as I have told you, because I am the Saviour. (6)

Thus I say.

¹ Samkhâya. The commentator takes this word as a gerund and explains it : knowing (the vanity of the world).

² Êka, i.e. free from love and hate.

³ Dravyatô bhâvatas ka.

SECOND BOOK¹.

FIRST LECTURE²,

CALLED

THE LOTUS.

O long-lived (Gambûsvâmin)! I (Sudharman) have heard the following Discourse from the Venerable (Mahāvīra). We now come to the Lecture called 'the Lotus.' The contents of it are as follows: (1)

There is a lotus-pool containing much water and mud, very full and complete, answering to the idea (one has of a lotus-pool), full of white lotuses, delightful, conspicuous, magnificent, and splendid. (2)

And everywhere all over the lotus-pool there grew many white lotuses, the best of Nymphaeas, as we are told, in beautiful array, tall, brilliant, of fine colour, smell, taste, and touch, (&c., all down to) splendid. (3)

And in the very middle of this lotus-pool there grew one big white lotus, the best of Nymphaeas,

¹ With the exception of the fifth and sixth lectures, the whole Book (śrutaskandha) is in prose. I have adhered to the subdivision of the lectures exhibited in the Bombay edition, which, on the whole, agrees with that of most MSS.

² The lectures of this Book are called, according to the Nir-yukti, Great (mahā) Lectures.

as we are told, in an excellent position, tall, (&c., all down to) splendid. (4)

[§§ 3 and 4 are to be repeated with the word 'all' or 'whole' added to 'lotus-pool' ¹.] (5)

Now there came a man from the Eastern quarter to the lotus-pool, and standing on the bank of it he saw that one big white lotus, (&c., as above). Now this man spoke thus: 'I am a knowing, clever, well-informed, discerning, wise, not foolish man, who keeps the way, knows the way, and is acquainted with the direction and bent of the way. I shall fetch that white lotus, the best of all Nymphaeas.' Having said this the man entered the lotus-pool. And the more he proceeded, the more the water and the mud (seemed to) extend. He had left the shore, and he did not come up to the white lotus, the best of Nymphaeas, he could not get back to this bank, nor to the opposite one, but in the middle of the lotus-pool he stuck in the mud. (6)

This was the first man. Now (we shall describe) the second man. There came a man from the Southern quarter to the lotus-pool, and standing on the bank of it he saw that one big white lotus (&c., all as above). There he saw one man who had left the shore, but had not come up to the white lotus, the best of Nymphaeas, who could not get back to his bank, nor to the opposite one, but stuck in the mud in the middle of the lotus-pool. Now the second man spoke of the first man thus: 'This man is not knowing, not clever, (&c., see above, all down to) not acquainted with the direction and bent of the way.' For that man said : ' I am a knowing, (&c., all down to) I shall fetch that white lotus, the best of Nymphaeas.' But this white lotus, the best of Nymphaeas, cannot be got in the way this man tried. (7)

¹ In the text the words savvāvanti ka nam are prefixed to the text of §§ 3 and 4. I give the explanation of Silāṅka.

' However, I am a knowing, clever, (&c., all down to the end of the paragraph) he stuck in the mud.' This was the second man. (The same thing happened to a third and a fourth man, who came from the Western and Northern quarters respectively, and saw two and three men respectively sticking in the mud. Some MSS. give the story at length, others abbreviate it.) (8, 9)

Now a monk living on low food and desiring to get to the shore (of the Samsâra), knowing, clever, (&c., all down to) acquainted with the direction and bent of the way, came to that lotus-pool from some one of the four quarters or from one of the intermediate points (of the compass). Standing on the bank of the lotus-pool he saw the one big white lotus, (&c., as above). And he saw there those four men who having left the shore, (&c., all as above) stuck in the mud. Then the monk said : ' These men are not knowing, (&c., all down to) not acquainted with the direction and bent of the way ; for these men thought : We shall fetch that white lotus, the best of Nymphaeas. But this white lotus, the best of Nymphaeas, cannot be got in the way these men tried. I am a monk living on low food, (&c., all down to) acquainted with the direction and bent of the way. I shall fetch that white lotus, the best of Nymphaeas.' Having said this the monk did not enter the lotus-pool ; but standing on the bank of it he raised his voice : ' Fly up,

O white lotus, best of Nymphaeas!' . And the white lotus, the best of Nymphaeas, flew up. (10)

I have told you, O long-lived Sramanas, a simile¹; you must comprehend the meaning of it². The Nirgrantha monks and nuns worshipped and praised the Venerable Ascetic Mahāvīra, and then spoke thus: 'You have told, O long-lived Sramana, the simile, but we do not comprehend its meaning, O long-lived Sramana!' The Venerable Ascetic Mahāvīra addressed the crowd of Nirgrantha monks and nuns, and spoke thus: Ah, you long-lived Sramanas! I shall tell, declare, explain, expound, and demonstrate it with its meaning, reasons, and arguments. Thus I say: (11)

O long-lived Sramanas³, meaning⁴ the world I spoke of the lotus-pool. Meaning Karman I spoke of the water. Meaning pleasures and amusements I spoke of the mud. Meaning people in general I spoke of those many white lotuses, the best of Nymphaeas. Meaning the king I spoke of the one big white lotus, the best of Nymphaeas. Meaning heretical teachers I spoke of those four men. Meaning the Law I spoke of the monk. Meaning the church⁵ I spoke of the bank. Meaning the preaching of the Law I spoke of (the monk's) voice. Meaning Nirvāṇa I spoke of (the lotus') flying up. Meaning these things, O long-lived Sramanas, I told this (simile). (12)

¹ Nâê = gñâtam, literally, that which is known.

² In the text the sentence closes with bhante, a word frequently used in addressing members of the order.

³ These words are in the original repeated in each of the following sentences. I drop them in the translation.

⁴ Appâhātu = âtmany âhrītya, literally, having in my mind.

⁵ Dharmatīrtha.

Here in the East, West, North, and South many men have been born according to their merit, as inhabitants of this our world, viz. some as Âryas, some as non-Âryas, some in noble families, some in low families, some as big men, some as small men, some of good complexion, some of bad complexion, some as handsome men, some as ugly men. And of these men one man is king, who is strong like the great Himavat, Malaya, Mandara, and Mahêndra mountains, (&c., all down to) who governs his kingdom in which all riots and mutinies have been suppressed¹.

And this king had an assembly of Ugras² and sons of Ugras, Bhôgas² and sons of Bhôgas, Aikshvâkas and sons of Aikshvâkas, Gñâtris and sons of Gñâtris, Kauravas and sons of Kauravas, warriors and sons of warriors, Brâhmanas and sons of Brâhmanas, Likkhavis and sons of Likkhavis, commanders and sons of commanders, generals and sons of generals. (13)

And of these men some one³ is full of faith. Forsooth, the Sramanas or Brâhmanas made up their mind to go to him. Being professors of some religion (they thought) 'We shall teach him our religion.' (And they said): 'Know this, dear sir, that we explain and teach this religion well. (14)

'Upwards from the soles of the feet, downwards

¹ This is one of the varṇaka or typical descriptions which are so frequent in the canonical books. The full text is given in the Aupapâtika Sûtra, ed. Leumann, § 11, p. 26 f. Of the many meanings the word varṇaka may have, 'masterpiece' seems the one in which it must be taken here. Many varṇakas are, partly at least, composed in a curious metre which I have named Hypermetron, see Indische Studien, vol. xvii, pp. 389 ff.

² Concerning the Ugras and Bhôgas compare note 2 on p. 71.

³ Apparently the king is meant.

from the tips of the hair on the head, within the skin's surface is (what is called) Soul¹, or what is the same, the Ātman. The whole soul lives; when this (body) is dead, it does not live. It lasts as long as the body lasts, it does not outlast the destruction (of the body). With it (viz. the body) ends life. Other men carry it (viz. the corpse) away to burn it. When it has been consumed by fire, only dove-coloured bones remain, and the four bearers return with the hearse to their village. Therefore there is and exists no (soul different from the body). Those who believe that there is and exists no (such soul), speak the truth. Those who maintain that the soul is something different from the body, cannot tell whether the soul (as separated from the body) is long or small, whether globular or circular or triangular or square or sexagonal or octagonal or long, whether black or blue or red or yellow or white, whether of sweet smell or of bad smell, whether bitter or pungent or astringent or sour or sweet, whether hard or soft or heavy or light or cold or hot or smooth or rough. Those, therefore, who believe that there is and exists no soul, speak the truth. Those who maintain that the soul is something different from the body, do not see the following (objections): (15)

‘As a man draws a sword from the scabbard and shows it (you, saying): “Friend, this is the sword, and that is the scabbard,” so nobody can draw (the soul from the body) and show it (you, saying): “Friend, this is the soul, and that is the body.” As a man draws a fibre from a stalk of Muñga grass and shows it (you, saying): “Friend, this is the stalk, and that is the fibre;” or takes a bone out of the flesh, or the seed of *Âmalaka*¹ from the palm of his hand, or a particle of fresh butter out of coagulated milk, and shows you both things separately²; or as he presses oil from the seed of *Atasi*³, and shows the oil and oil-cake separately, or as he presses the juice from the sugar-cane, and shows the juice and the molasses⁴ separately, so nobody can show you the soul and the body separately. The same applies also when fire is churned from Arañi-wood. Those who believe that there is and exists no soul, speak the truth. Those who say that the soul is different from the body, are wrong.' (16)

¹ Gīva.

This murderer says: 'Kill, dig, slay, burn, cook, cut or break to pieces, destroy! Life ends here; there is no world beyond.'

These (Nâstikas) cannot inform⁵ you on the following points: whether an action is good or bad, meritorious or not, well done or not well done, whether one reaches perfection or not, whether one goes to hell or not. Thus undertaking various works they engage in various pleasures and amusements for their own enjoyment. (17)

Thus some shameless men becoming monks propagate a Law of their own. And others believe it, put their faith in it, adopt it, (saying :) 'Well, you speak the truth, O Brâhmaṇa, (or) O Sramaṇa! We shall present you with food, drink, spices, and sweetmeats, with a robe, a bowl, or a broom.'

¹ Emblica Myrobalanos.

² I have somewhat condensed this passage.

³ Ayau//asī in Prâkr̥t; it is Linum Usitatissimum.

⁴ Kṣhōya. See Grierson, Peasant Life of Bihar, p. 236. The word is apparently derived from root kshud.

⁵ Paḍivēdenti = prativēdayanti. The commentators, however, explain it as 'understand.'

Some have been induced to honour them, some have made (their proselytes) to honour them. (18)

Before (entering an order) they were determined to become Sramanas, houseless, poor monks who would have neither sons nor cattle, to eat only what should be given them by others, and to commit no sins. After having entered their order they do not cease (from sins), they themselves commit sins, they cause others to commit sins, and they assent to another's committing sins. Thus they are given to pleasures, amusements, and sensual lust; they are greedy, fettered, passionate, covetous, the slaves of love and hate; therefore they cannot free themselves (from the Circle of Births), nor free anybody else from it, nor free any other of the four kinds of living beings from it. They have left their former occupations, but have not entered the noble path. They cannot return (to worldly life), nor get beyond it; they stick (as it were) in pleasures and amusements. Thus I have treated of the first man (as one who believes that) soul and body are one and the same thing. (19)

Now I shall treat of the second man¹ (as one who believes that) everything consists of the five elements.

Here in the East, (&c., see §§ 13, 14, all down to) teach this religion well. (20)

‘There are five elements² through which we explain

¹ According to the commentators the Lôkâyatikas or the *Sânkhya*s are intended. The latter explain the whole world as developed from the Prâkrîti or chaos, and contend that the âtman does not act. The Lôkâyatikas deny the separate existence of the âtman, and maintain that the elements are called âtman when they manifest intellect (kaitanya).

² Mahabbhûta=mahâbhûta.

whether an action is good or bad, (&c., see § 18, all down to) hell or not. Everything down to a blade of grass (consists of them). (21)

‘And one should know the intermixture¹ of the elements by an enumeration of them. Earth is the first element, water the second, fire the third, wind the fourth, and air the fifth. These five elements are not created, directly or indirectly, nor made; they are not effects nor products; they are without beginning and end; they always produce effects, are independent of a directing cause or everything else; they are eternal. Some, however, say that there is a Self besides the five elements. What is, does not perish; from nothing nothing comes. (22)

‘All living beings, all things, the whole world consists of nothing but these (five elements). They are the primary cause of the world, even down to a blade of grass. (23)

‘A man buys and causes to buy, kills and causes to kill, cooks and causes to cook, he may even sell and kill a man. Know, that even in this case he does not do wrong.’

These (Nāstikas) cannot inform you, (&c., see §§ 15–18, all down to) they stick (as it were) in pleasures and amusements.

Thus I have treated of the second man (who believes that) everything consists of the five elements. (24)

Now I shall treat of the third man (who believes that) the Self² is the cause of everything.

¹ Samavâya.

² The word used in the text is îsara=îsvara, but afterwards purisa=purusha is used in its place. Both words are synonymous

Here in the East, (&c., see §§ 12, 13, all down to) teach this religion well. (25)

‘Here all things have the Self for their cause and their object, they are produced by the Self, they are manifested by the Self, they are intimately connected with the Self, they are bound up in the Self.

‘As, for instance, a tumour is generated in the body, grows with the body, is not separate from the body, but is bound up in the body : so all things have the Self for their cause, (&c., all as above).

‘As, for instance, a feeling of indisposition is generated in the body, grows with the body, is never separate from the body, but is bound up in the body : so all things have the Self for their cause, (&c., all as above).

‘As, for instance, an anthill is made of earth, grows through earth, is not separate from earth, but is bound up in earth : so all things, (&c., all as above).

‘As, for instance, a tree springs up on earth, grows on earth, is not separate from earth, but is bound up in earth : so all things, (&c., all as above).

‘As, for instance, a lotus springs up in earth, grows on earth, is not separate from earth, but is bound up in earth : so all things, (&c., all as above).

‘As, for instance, a mass of water is produced by water, grows through water, is not separate from water, but is bound up in water : so all things, (&c., all as above).

‘As, for instance, a water-bubble is produced in water, grows in water, is not separate from water, with âtman, the first may denote the highest âtman as in the Yôga philosophy, or the paramâtman as in the Vêdânta.

but is bound up in water : so all things, (&c., all as above). (26)

‘ And the twelve Āṅgas, the Canon of the *Gauṇins*¹, which has been taught, produced, and declared by the Sramanas, the Nirgranthas, viz. the Ātārāṅga (all down to) the Drishṭivāda, is wrong, not true, not a representation of the truth ; but this (our doctrine) is correct, is true, is a representation of the truth.’

The (heretics in question) make this assertion, they uphold this assertion, they (try to) establish this assertion.

Therefore they cannot get out of the misery produced by this (error), even as a bird cannot get out of its cage. (27)

These (heretics) cannot inform you, (&c., see §§ 16–19, all down to) they stick, as it were, in pleasures and amusements.

Thus I have treated of the third man (who believes that) the Self is the cause of everything. (28)

Now I shall treat of the fourth man who believes that Fate is the cause of everything.

Here in the East, (&c., see §§ 12, 13, all down to) teach this religion well. (29)

‘ There are two (kinds of) men. One man admits action, another man does not admit action. Both men, he who admits action, and he who does not admit action, are alike, their case is the same, because they are actuated by the same force². (30)

¹ Gaṇipidaga.

² Viz. Fate. For it is their destiny to entertain one belief or the other, and they are not amenable to it. This is the interpretation of the commentators. But to the phrase kāraṇam āpanna they give here a meaning different from that in the following paragraphs. I therefore propose the following translation of the end of the

‘An ignorant man thinks about the cause as follows : “When I suffer, grieve, blame myself, grow feeble¹, am afflicted, or undergo great pain, I have caused it ; or when another man suffers, &c., he has caused it.” Thus an ignorant man thinks himself or another man to be the cause of what he or the other man experiences. (31)

‘A wise man thinks about the cause as follows : “When I suffer, &c., I did not cause it ; and when another man suffers, &c., he did not cause it².”

‘A wise man thinks thus³ about the cause of what he himself or another man experiences. I say this : “Movable or immovable beings in all the four quarters thus (i.e. by the will of Fate) come to have a body, to undergo the vicissitudes of life, to lose their body, to arrive at some state of existence, to experience pleasure and pain⁴.”’

Entertaining such opinions these (heretics) cannot inform you, (&c., as in § 17, down to the end). (32)

These worthless men entertain such opinions, and believe in them till they cannot return, (&c., as in § 19 down to) amusements.

paragraph : ‘are equally (wrong), (err) alike as regards the cause (of actions).’

¹ Tippāmi, explained ‘lose strength of body.’ The word cannot be trīpyāmi, because it means ‘I am satisfied.’ The word is probably derived from the root tik ‘to kill.’ Tippāmi would be an irregular passive, just as sippāmi from sik, see Zeitschrift für vergleichende Sprachforschung, vol. xxvii, p. 250. Leumann, Aupapātika Sūtra, glossary s.v. tippaṇayā, explains this word by ‘crying’ on the authority of Abhayadēva. Either meaning suits the passages where it occurs in our text.

² But Fate is the cause.

³ That is to say, that Fate distributes pleasure and pain.

⁴ I render the rather ambiguous expressions in the original according to the interpretation of the commentators.

I have treated of the fourth man who believes that Fate is the cause of everything. (33)

These four men, differing in intellect, will, character, opinions, taste, undertakings, and plans, have left their former occupations, but have not entered the noble path. They cannot return (to worldly life) nor get beyond it; they stick (as it were) in pleasures and amusements. (34)

I say : here in the East, West, North, and South there are some men, viz. Âryas, non-Âryas, (&c., as in § 13, all down to) ugly men. They own small or large houses and fields, they own few or many servants and peasants. Being born in such-like families, they renounce (their possessions) and lead a mendicant's life. Some leave their kinsmen and their property to lead a mendicant's life; others, who have no kinsmen nor property, lead a mendicant's life. Whether they have kinsmen and property or not, they renounce them and lead a mendicant's life. (35)

Previously, however, they thought thus : ' Here, indeed, a man, who is on the point of turning monk, makes the following reflections with regard to different things : I possess fields, houses, silver, gold, riches, corn, copper, clothes, real valuable property, as riches, gold, precious stones, jewels, pearls, conches, stones, corals, rubies¹. I enjoy sounds, colours, smells, tastes, and feelings of touch. These pleasures and amusements belong to me, and I belong to them.' (36)

A wise man, previously, should thus think to

¹ The same enumeration of valuable things occurs elsewhere, e. g. Kalpa Sûtra, Lives of the Gînas, § 90.

himself: 'Here, indeed, some painful illness or disease might befall me, unwished for, unpleasant, disagreeable, nasty¹, painful and not at all pleasant. O ye dear pleasures, take upon you this painful illness or disease, unwished for, unpleasant, disagreeable, nasty, painful and not at all pleasant, that I may not suffer, grieve, blame myself, grow feeble, be afflicted, and undergo great pain². Deliver me from this painful illness or disease, (&c., all as above).' But this desire of his has never yet been fulfilled. (37)

Here, in this life, pleasures and amusements are not able to help or to save one. Sometimes a man first forsakes pleasures and amusements, sometimes they first forsake him. Pleasures and amusements are one thing, and I am another. Why then should we be infatuated with pleasures and amusements which are alien (to our being)? Taking this into consideration, we shall give up pleasures and amusements. A wise man thinks them alien to himself. (38)

There are things more intimately connected with me, viz. my mother, father, brother, sister, wife, children, grandchildren, daughters-in-law, servants, friends, kinsmen, companions, and acquaintances. These my relations belong to me, and I belong to them. A wise man, previously, should think thus to himself: 'Here, indeed, some painful illness or disease might befall me, (&c., all as in § 37 down to the end, but substitute "relations" for "pleasures"). (39)

¹ The original has six synonyms for disagreeable, which it is impossible to render adequately in English.

² The same words occurred in § 31.

‘Or some painful illness or disease, unwished for, (&c., all down to) not at all pleasant might befall my dear relations. I will take upon me this painful illness or disease, &c., that they may not suffer, (all down to) undergo great pain. I will deliver them from this painful illness or disease.’ But this desire of his has never yet been fulfilled. For one man cannot take upon himself the pains of another; one man cannot experience what another has done¹. (40)

Individually a man is born, individually he dies, individually he falls (from this state of existence), individually he rises (to another)². His passions³, consciousness, intellect, perceptions, and impressions belong to the individual exclusively. Here, indeed, the bonds of relationship are not able to help nor save one. (All as in § 38 down to the end; substitute ‘bonds of relationship’ for ‘pleasures and amusements.’) (41)

There are things more intimately connected with me, viz. my hands, feet, arms, legs, head, belly, character, life, strength, colour, skin, complexion, ear, eye, nose, tongue, and touch; they are part and parcel of me. But I grow old with regard to life, strength, (all down to) touch. The strong joints become loose, the body is furrowed with wrinkles, the black hair turns white, even this dear body which has grown with food, must be relinquished in due time.

¹ I.e. his Karman.

² According to the commentators the last two passages should be translated: ‘individually he leaves (his possessions, &c.), individually he is joined (to them).’

³ Ghaṅghā = kalaha.

Making such reflections, a monk should lead a mendicant's life and know that all things are divided into living beings and things without life, (and living beings again into) movable and immovable ones. (42)

Here, indeed, householders are killers (of beings) and acquirers of property, and so are even some Sramanas and Brāhmanas. They themselves kill movable and immovable living beings, have them killed by another person, or consent to another's killing them. (43)

Here, indeed, householders are killers (of beings) and acquirers of property, and so are even some Sramanas and Brāhmanas. They themselves acquire sentient or senseless objects of pleasure, have them acquired by another person, or consent to another's acquiring them. (44)

Here, indeed, householders are killers (of beings) and acquirers of property, and so are even some Sramanas and Brāhmanas. But I am no killer (of beings) nor an acquirer of property. Relying upon¹ householders and such Sramanas and Brāhmanas as are killers (of beings) and acquirers of property, we shall lead a life of chastity. (He should, however, part company with them.) (The pupil asks): What is the reason thereof? (The teacher answers): As before (their ordination they were killers of beings), so (they will be) afterwards, and vice versâ. It is evident that (householders) do not abstain (from sins) nor exert themselves (in control); and (as monks) they will relapse into the same (bad habits). (45)

¹ Nissâe=nirayâ, explained âsrayêna.

The householders and those Sramanas and Brāhmanas, who are killers (of beings) and acquirers of property, commit sins both (from love and hatred). But a monk who takes this into consideration, should lead a life subject to neither (love nor hatred). (46)

I say: in the East, West, North, and South (a true monk) will have renounced works, be exempt from works, will have put an end to them. This has been taught (by the prophets, &c.). (47)

The Venerable One has declared that the cause (of sins) are the six classes of living beings, earth-lives, &c. As is my pain when I am knocked or struck with a stick, bone, fist, clod, or potsherd; or menaced, beaten, burned, tormented, or deprived of life; and as I feel every pain and agony from death down to the pulling out of a hair: in the same way, be sure of this, all kinds of living beings feel the same pain and agony, &c., as I, when they are ill-treated in the same way¹. For this reason all sorts of living beings should not be beaten, nor treated with violence, nor abused, nor tormented, nor deprived of life². (48)

I say: the Arhats and Bhagavats of the past, present, and future, all say thus, speak thus, declare thus, explain thus: all sorts of living beings should not be slain, nor treated with violence, nor abused, nor tormented, nor driven away. This constant, permanent, eternal, true Law has been taught by wise men who comprehend all things. Thus a monk abstains from (the five cardinal sins:) slaughter of living beings, &c. He does not clean his teeth with a tooth-brush ¹, he does not accept collyrium, emetics, and perfumes. (49)

¹ The text repeats the phrases just translated.

² The same words form the text of the homily in Âṣṭāṅga I, 4.

A monk who does not act, nor kill, who is free from wrath, pride, deceit, and greed, who is calm and happy, should not entertain the following wish : May I, after my departure from this world, by dint of my intellect, knowledge, memory, learning, or of the performance of austerities, religious duties, chastity, or of this habit to eat no more than is necessary to sustain life, become a god at whose command are all objects of pleasure, or a perfected saint who is exempt from pain and misery. (Through his austerities) he may obtain his object, or he may not obtain it. (50)

A monk should not be infatuated with sounds, colours, smells, tastes, and feelings of touch ; he should abstain from wrath, pride, deceit, and greed, from love, hate, quarrel, calumny, reviling of others, aversion to control and delight in sensual things, deceit and untruth, and the sin of wrong belief. In this way a monk ceases to acquire gross Karman, controls himself, and abstains from sins. (51)

He does not kill movable or immovable beings, nor has them killed by another person, nor does he consent to another's killing them. In this way a monk ceases to acquire gross Karman, controls himself, and abstains from sins. (52)

He does not acquire sentient or senseless objects of pleasure, nor has them acquired by another person, nor does he consent to another's acquiring them. In this way, (&c., all as above). (53)

¹ Or rather a piece of wood with which the Hindus rub their teeth.

He does no actions arising from sinful causes¹, nor has them done by another person, nor does he consent to another's doing them. In this way (&c., all as above). (54)

A monk should not take food, drink, dainties, and spices when he knows that (the householder) to satisfy him, or for the sake of a co-religionist, has bought or stolen or taken it, though it was not given nor to be taken, but was taken by force, by acting sinfully towards all sorts of living beings²; nor does he cause another person to eat it, nor does he consent to another's eating it. In this way (&c., all as above). (55)

A monk may think as follows : The (householders) have the means (to procure food for those) for whose sake it is prepared; viz. for himself³, his sons, daughters, daughters-in-law, nurses, relations, chiefs, male and female slaves, male and female servants; for a treat of sweetmeats, for a supper, for a breakfast the collation has been prepared. This food is to be eaten by some people, it is prepared by some one else, it is destined for some one else, it is free from the faults occasioned either by the giver or by the receiver or by the act of receiving it⁴, rendered pure⁵, rendered free from living matter⁶, wholly free from living things⁷, it has been begged, has been given to the monk on account of his profession⁸,

¹ Sâmparâyika. The commentators say: ta k ka pradvêshaninnavamâtsaryântarâyâsâtanôpaghâtair badhyatê.

² Compare Âkârânga Sûtra II, 1, 1, 11.

³ Apparently the householder is intended.

⁴ Udgama, utpâdanâ, êshanâ. See above, p. 131, note 7.

⁵ Sastrâtîtam.

⁶ Sastraparinâmitam.

⁷ Avihimsitam.

⁸ Vaishikam.

it has been collected in small bits¹, it is food fit for a learned monk, it is lawful to eat it at the present occasion, it is of the prescribed quantity, it greases, as it were, the axle of the carriage and anoints the sore, being just sufficient to enable one to practise control and to carry the burden of it; he should consume that food (without delay) even as the snake returning to its hole; that is to say: one should eat when it is time for eating, drink when it is time for drinking, dress when it is time for dressing, seek cover when it is time for seeking cover, and sleep when it is time for sleeping. (56)

A monk who knows the proper measure (in all things) travelling in one direction or other, should teach, explain, and praise (the Law), preach it unto those who exert themselves well, and to those who do not, to all who come to listen. (He should preach to them): indifference for the peace of mind, cessation of passion, Nirvāṇa, purity, simplicity, humility, freedom from bonds². He should preach the Law which prohibits to kill any living being, after having well considered it. (57)

When a monk preaches the Law, he should preach it not for the sake of food, drink, clothes, resting-place, or lodging, nor for any objects of pleasure; but he should preach the Law indefatigably, for no other motive than the annihilation of Karman. (58)

Those heroes of faith who are instructed in the Law by such a monk and exert themselves well, are possessed of all (virtues), abstain from all (sins), cease from all (passions), conduct themselves well in every way, and reach final beatitude. (59)

¹ Samudānikam, i.e. as bees collect honey from many flowers. Cf. p. 80, note 1.

² Compare Âkārāṅga Sūtra I, 7, 4, 1, part i, p. 68, note 3.

Such a monk searches the Law, knows the Law, and endeavours to gain Liberation; as it has been said: 'He may get the white lotus, the best of Nymphaeus, or he may not get it.' Such a monk knows and renounces actions, worldly occupations, and the life of a householder; he is free from passions, possesses the Samitis, is wise, always exerts himself; he is to be called: a Sramana, a Brâhmaṇa, calm, a subduer of his senses, guarding himself, liberated, a seer, a sage, virtuous, wise, a monk, living on low food, desiring to get to the shore (of the Samsâra), fulfilling the general and particular virtues¹. (60)

Thus I say.

SECOND LECTURE,

CALLED

ON ACTIVITY².

O long-lived (Gambûsvâmin)! I (Sudharman) have heard the following Discourse from the Venerable (Mahâvîra). We now come to the Lecture called 'on Activity.' The contents of it are as follows:

¹ Karṇakaraṇapâravid. Karṇa is explained by mûlaguṇa, karṇa by uttaraguṇa. The mûlaguṇas consist in the observance of the five vows, the uttaraguṇas are the five Samitis, the three Guptis, &c., in short, the duties of a monk.

² Kiriyâ/hânê = kriyâsthânam, literally, the subject of activity.

It treats, briefly, of two subjects : merit and demerit. (The former is when the Self is) at rest, (the latter, when it is) in disturbance¹. (1)

Now the explanation² of the first subject, viz. demerit, is as follows. Here in the East, West, North, and South, (&c., all as in II, 1, 12, down to) ugly men. (2)

And as regards committing of sin³, among denizens of hell, brute animals, gods, men, and whatever other suchlike beings there be, the sentient beings feel⁴ the pain. (3)

And these beings practise the following thirteen kinds of activity—

1. sinning for one's interest ;
2. sinning without a personal interest ;
3. sinning by slaying ;
4. sinning through accident ;
5. sinning by an error of sight ;
6. sinning by lying ;
7. sinning by taking what is not freely given ;
8. sinning by a mere conceit ;
9. sinning through pride ;
10. sinning through bad treatment of one's friends ;
11. sinning through deceit ;
12. sinning through greed ;
13. actions referring to a religious life. (4)

¹ Upasānta and anupasānta.

² Vibhaṅga, more literally, case.

³ Dandasamādāna, explained pāpôpādāna.

⁴ A difference is made between feeling (anubhavanti) and knowing (vidanti): (1) the saṅgḥins or rational beings feel and know impressions; (2) the Siddhas only know them; (3) the reasonless beings only feel them; (4) things without life neither know nor feel them. Sentient beings are those in Nos. 1 and 3.

1. The first kind of committing sins is that prompted by a motive. This is the case when a man for his own sake, for the sake of his relations, his house, his family, his friends, for the sake of Nāgas, Bhûtas, or Yakshas does injury to movable or immovable beings, or has it done by another person, or consents to another's doing it. Thereby the bad Karman accrues to him. This is the first kind of committing sins, that prompted by a motive. (5)

2. We now treat of the second kind of committing sins, viz. that which is not prompted by personal interest. This is the case when a man slays, kills, cuts, pierces, hacks, mangles, or puts to death movable living beings, not because he wants their body, skin, flesh, blood, heart, bile, feathers of their tail, tail, big or small horns, teeth, tusks, nails, sinews, bones, or marrow; nor because he has been wounded by them, or is wounded, or will be wounded; nor in order to support his children, or to feed his cattle, or to enlarge his houses, nor for the maintenance of Sramanas and Brâhmanas, nor for the benefit of his body; setting aside reason a fool acquires the habit of cruelty, being a wanton killer. (6)

This is the case when a man slays, &c. (see above) immovable living beings as Ikkata-reed, Kathina, Gantuka-grass, Para-grass¹, Mòksha-trees², grass, Kusa-grass, Kuḥḥaka³, Pappaka⁴, or straw, not ¹ Compare Âtârânga Sûtra II, 2, 3, 18, note 1. One MS. reads êraga for para-grass. Êraka is the name of a reed.

² Mòksha is the name of a tree = mushkaka. The Âtârânga and one of our MSS. have mōraga, peacocks' feathers. But that is out of place here.

³ Kuḥḥaka is a white water-lily. The Âtârânga Sûtra has kuḥḥaka = kûrḥaka, brush.

⁴ Paktaka in the Âtârânga Sûtra.

in order to support his children, (&c., all down to) wanton killer. (7)

Or when a man on a marsh, a lake, a sheet of water, a pasture-ground, a place surrounded by a ditch, a moat, a thicket, stronghold¹ in a thicket, forest, stronghold in a forest, [mountain, stronghold on a mountain²], piles up grass and lights a fire, or has it lighted by another person, or consents to another's lighting it. Thereby the bad Karman accrues to him. This is the second kind of committing sins, that prompted by no personal interest. (8)

3. We now treat of the third kind of committing sins, called slaying. This is the case when a man thinking that some one has hurt, hurts, or will hurt him, or one of his people, or somebody else, or one of that person's people, kills movable and immovable beings, has them killed by another person, or consents to another's killing them. Thereby the bad Karman accrues to him. This is the third kind of committing sins, called slaying. (9)

4. We now treat of the fourth kind of committing sins, called accidental³. This is the case when in marshes (&c., all as above, down to) strongholds in

¹ Or a group of trees.

² A nearly identical enumeration of places occurs in Âtârânga Sūtra II, 3, 3, 2. The words in brackets seem to be added later; for Sîlânka does not comment upon them, and expressly mentions ten places. They are generally omitted in the sequel when the same passage occurs again.

³ Akasmâddandê. The commentators remark that the word akasmât is in Magadha pronounced by the people as in Sanskrit. The fact is that we meet here and in the end of the next paragraph with the spelling akasmât, while in the middle of the paragraphs it is spelled akamhâ, which is the true Prâkrit form.

a forest, a man who lives on deer, who likes deer, who dotes on deer, goes a hunting deer. Fancying to see deer, he takes aim with his arrow to kill the deer. Thinking that he will kill the deer, he kills a partridge, or a duck, or a quail, or a pigeon, or a monkey, or a francoline partridge. Here instead of one (being) he hurts another, (therefore he is called) an accidental killer. (10)

This is the case when a man weeding rice, Kôdrava¹, panic seed, Paraka, or Râlaka, uses his knife to cut some weeds. Fancying that he is cutting some weed-grasses², he cuts rice (&c., down to) Râlaka. Here instead of one (plant) he hurts another; (therefore he is called) an accidental killer. Thereby the bad Karman accrues to him. This is the fourth kind of committing sins, called accidental. (11)

5. We now treat of the fifth kind of committing sins, viz. by an error of sight. This is the case when a man living together with his mother, father, brothers, sisters, wives, sons, daughters, or daughters-in-law, and mistaking a friend for an enemy, kills the friend by mistake. (12)

This is the case when during a riot in a village³,

¹ Paspalum Sobriculatum.

² They are specialised in the text as Syâmakam trinam, mukundaka vrîhiûsita, and kâlêsuka. Only the two first are mentioned in our dictionaries.

³ In the Dîpikâ the following versus memorialis is quoted, in which the names of places mentioned in the text are defined: grâmô vrîtyâ vrîtaḥ syân nagaram uruṭaturgôpurôdbhâsisôbham khêṣam nadyadrivêṣham parivritam abhitaḥ kharvaṣam parvatênaḥ grâmaḥ yuktam maṭambam dalitadasarataiḥ (?) pattanam ratnayônir drônâkhyam sindhuvêlâvalayitam atha sambâdhanam vâ-drîrînge || It will be seen that the meaning of these terms given in this verse differs from that given in notes 3-11, p. 176.

or a scot-free town, or a town with an earth wall, or a poor town, or an isolated town, or a large town, or a sea-town, or a mine, or a hermitage, or a halting-place of processions or caravans, or a capital, a man mistaking for a robber one who is not, kills him by mistake. Thereby the bad Karman accrues to him. This is the fifth kind of committing sins, viz. by an error of sight. (13)

6. We now treat of the sixth kind of committing sins, viz. by lying. This is the case when a man for his own sake, or for the sake of his relations, his house, or his servants tells lies, causes another person to tell lies, or consents to another's telling lies. Thereby the bad Karman accrues to him. This is the sixth kind of committing sins, viz. by lying. (14)

7. Now we treat of the seventh kind of committing sins, viz. by taking what is not freely given. This is the case when a man for his own sake (&c., as above) takes himself what is not freely given, has it taken by another person, or consents to another's taking it. Thereby the bad Karman accrues to him. This is the seventh kind of committing sins, viz. by taking what is not freely given. (15)

8. Now we treat of the eighth kind of committing sins, viz. by a mere conceit. This is the case when a man, without being disappointed by anybody in any way, meditates, melancholy, sorry, angry, downcast, anxious in thoughts and ideas, plunged in a sea of sorrow and misery, reposing his head on the palm of his hand, overcome by painful reflections, and casting his eyes on the ground¹. There are four mental, but real, conditions (of this kind), viz. wrath, pride, deceit, and greed; for wrath, pride, deceit, and greed are mental conditions. Thereby the bad Karman accrues to him. This is the eighth kind of committing sins, viz. by a mere conceit. (16)

¹ The same passage occurs Kalpa Sūtra, Lives of the Ġinas, § 92, part i, p. 249.

9. Now we treat of the ninth kind of committing sins, viz. through pride. This is the case when a man drunk (as it were) with pride of caste, family, beauty, piety, knowledge, success, power, intelligence¹, or any other kind of pride, slights, blames, abuses, reviles, despises somebody else and extols himself, (thinking :) 'he is my inferior, I am of better caste or family, and possess greater power and other advantages.' When he leaves this body and is only accompanied by his Karman, he, without a will of his own, goes forth from womb to womb, from birth to birth, from death to death, from hell to hell. He is cruel, stubborn, fickle, and proud. Thereby the bad Karman accrues to him. This is the ninth kind of committing sins, viz. through pride. (17)

10. We now treat of the tenth kind of committing sins, consisting in bad treatment of one's friends. This is the case when a man living together with his mother, father, brothers, sisters, wives, sons, daughters, or daughters-in-law, severely punishes even the smallest offence of theirs; e. g. he ducks the offender² in cold water, or pours hot water over him, or scalds him with fire, or lashes his sides sore with a halter, reed, rope³, strap of leather, whip, or

¹ These are the eight kinds of pride, madasthânâni.

² The original has kâyam, the body.

³ Nettêna = nêtrêna. The commentator says that it is a particular tree; but I think the usual meaning of nêtra, viz. rope, suits better.

thong of a whip, or he beats the offender with a stick, bone, fist, clod, or potsherd. When such a man is at home, (his people) are miserable; but when he is abroad, they rejoice. Such a man, who is for ever punishing, severely punishing, is hateful in this world and the next, irritable, passionate, an extortioner¹. Thereby the bad Karman accrues to him. This is the tenth kind of committing sins, consisting in bad treatment of one's friends. (18)

11. We now treat of the eleventh kind of committing sins, viz. through deceit. Those who conceal their thoughts, who are shrouded in darkness, who are light as the feather of an owl or heavy like a mountain, use unworthy² speech though they be Āryas. They believe themselves different from what they really are; asked one thing, they answer another, they speak different from what is to be spoken. (19)

As a man in whose body sticks an arrow³, does not extricate it (fearing the pain), nor has it extricated by somebody else, nor destroys it, but hides it; and the arrow, being not removed, goes deeper and deeper (in the flesh); so a deceitful man, having practised deception, does not confess it, expiate it, blame the deed to himself or others, does not remove it, annihilate it, and endeavour not to do it again, does not practise the prescribed austerities and penance. A deceitful man is generally not trusted⁴ in this world, a deceitful man is not trusted in the next world. He blames and reviles (the person

¹ Pitṭhimamsī, literally, who eats the flesh of the back.

² Anārya.

³ Salya.

⁴ Paṭṭhāyāti, pratyāyāti. Dīpikā: avisvāsyatayā pratyāyāti prakhyātim yāti.

whom he has deceived), he praises himself, and rejoices, and does not desist (from his vile practices); he conceals the wrong he has done to others, and does not acquire a pure Lêsyâ. Thereby the bad Karman accrues to him. This is the eleventh kind of committing sins, viz. through deceit. (20)

12. We now treat of the twelfth kind of committing sins, viz. through greed. Those (heretical monks) who live in woods, in huts, about villages, or practise some secret rites, are not well controlled, nor do they well abstain (from slaying) all sorts of living beings. They employ speech that is true and untrue at the same time¹: 'do not beat me, beat others; do not abuse me, abuse others; do not capture me, capture others; do not torment me, torment others; do not deprive me of life, deprive others of life².' And thus they are given to sensual pleasures, desire them, are held captive by them, passionately love them for four or five years, for six or ten years—(the period) may be shorter or longer. After having enjoyed these pleasures, and having died at their allotted time, they will be born in some places inhabited by Asuras and evildoers. And when they are released therefrom, they will be born deaf and dumb, or blind³, or dumb by birth. Thereby the bad Karman accrues to him. This is the twelfth kind of committing sins, viz. through greed. (21)

¹ Concerning the fourfold division of speech see above, p. 135, and part i, p. 150, note 2.

² The meaning is that Brahmins declare it a capital crime to kill a Brahmin, but a venial one to kill a Sûdra.

³ Tammûyattâe = tamômûkatvêna, explained either, blind by birth, or absolutely stupid or ignorant.

These twelve kinds of committing sins should bewell understood by a pious Sramana or *Brāhmaṇa*¹. (22)

13. We now treat of the thirteenth kind of acquiring Karman, that having reference to religious life². A monk³ who controls himself for the benefit of his soul, who in walking carefully avoids to cause the death of any living creature⁴, who uses gentle and righteous speech⁵, who receives alms in a manner to avoid the forty-two faults⁶, who is careful in receiving and keeping of things necessary for religious exercises⁷, who performs the operations of nature (excrements, urine, saliva, corporal impurities and mucus) in an unfrequented place⁸, who is careful with regard to mind, speech, and body⁹, who guards his mind, speech, and body so as to protect his soul from passions¹⁰, who guards his senses, who leads a chaste life regulated by the three Guptis, who carefully walks, stands, sits down, lies down, and speaks, who carefully takes up and lays

¹ The Karman of the preceding twelve kinds of sins is called sāmparāyika (see p. 298, n. 3). It takes hold of the Ātman till it is annihilated; it is a lasting Karman, while that described in the next paragraph is of a momentary existence.

² Iriyāvahiya = īryapathika or airyapathika. The term īryapatha literally means, way of walking, but technically it denotes the actions of which the life of a correct ascetic consists, and airyapathika, therefore, is the Karman inseparable from it.

³ The text consists of a string of technical terms, many of which have been explained already. I here incorporate the explanation in the translation. For more particulars see Bhandarkar's Report, p. 98.

⁴ Īryāsamita. ⁵ Bhāshāsamita. ⁶ Ēshanāsamita.

⁷ Bhāṇḍamātrādānanikshēpanasamita.

⁸ Ukkāra-prasravana-slēshma-galla-sringhāna-parish-thāpanikā-samita. ⁹ Manah-, vāk-, kāya-samita.

¹⁰ Manah-, vāk-, kāya-gupta.

down his cloth, alms-bowl, blanket, broom,—(even) such a monk performs various subtle actions called tryapathika (if it did but consist in moving an eyelash). This Karman is acquired and comes in contact (with the soul) in the first moment, in the second moment it is experienced, in the third it is destroyed; thus it is acquired, comes in contact (with the soul), takes rise, and is destroyed. For all time to come (the person in question) is exempt from Karman¹. Thereby the bad Karman accrues to him². This is the thirteenth kind of acquiring Karman, that inseparable from a religious life. (23)

All the Arhats and Bhagavats of the past, present, and future have told, tell, and will tell, have declared, declare, and will declare the above thirteen kinds of acquiring Karman. They have practised, practise, and will practise the thirteenth kind of acquiring Karman. (24)

As a supplement³ to the above (discussion) will

¹ An almost identical passage occurs in the Uttarādhyāyana XXIX, § 71, above p. 172.

² This typical passage is repeated here though it is apparently out of place.

³ Not only this paragraph but also all that follows up to the last paragraph seems to be a later addition. For in the last paragraph the subject treated of in §§ 1-27 is taken up again and brought to its conclusion. After the supplement §§ 25-27 a separate treatise on the main subject is inserted §§ 28-60 (28-57 on demerit, 58-59 on merit, § 60 on a mixed state); after this follows a similar treatise in §§ 61-77 (61-68 on demerit, 69-74 on merit, 75-77 on a mixed state). In § 78 we have again a supplement, and §§ 79-82 contain another supplement (or perhaps two). §§ 83-85 give the conclusion of the first treatise (§§ 1-24) and must originally have followed immediately after § 24. So we have, here, besides some appendices, three distinct original treatises on the same subject, very awkwardly pieced together to form one continuous lecture.

now be told the subject of men's success by occult sciences. Some men differing in intellect, will, character, opinions, taste, undertakings, and plans, study various evil sciences; (25) viz. (the divination) from terrestrial accidents, from strange phenomena¹, from dreams, from phenomena in the air, from changes in the body, from sounds, from mystical signs², from seeds³; (the interpretation of the) marks of women, men, elephants, cows, partridges, cocks, ducks, quails, of wheels, parasols, shields, sticks, swords, precious stones, jewels⁴; (26) the art to make one happy or miserable, to make a woman pregnant, to deprive one of his wits; incantations⁵, conjuring⁶; oblations of substances; the martial arts; the course of the moon, sun, Venus, and Jupiter; the falling of meteors; great conflagration; divination from wild animals⁷, the flight of crows, showers of dust, rain of blood, the Vaitālī and Ardhavaitālī arts⁸, the art of casting people asleep, of opening doors, the art of Kāṇḍālas, of Sabaras, of Dravidas, of Kaliṅgas, of Gaudas, of Gāndhāras; the spells for making somebody fall down, rise, yawn; for making him immovable, or cling to something; for making him sick, or sound;

¹ E. g. the laughing of monkeys.

² Lakṣhaṇa. The mystical signs meant are the svastika, &c.

³ Vyañjana. The seeds are sesamum, beans, &c.

⁴ Kākinī, rendered ratna in the commentary.

⁵ Ātharvaṇī.

⁶ Pākasāsanī = indragāla.

⁷ Mrigakakra.

⁸ According to the commentary the Vaitālī art teaches to raise a stick (? dandam utthāpayati, perhaps to lay a punishment on somebody) by spells; and the Ardhavaitālīka, to remove it. In Pāli vēṭalam means the magic art of bringing dead bodies to life by spells, see Childers' Dictionary of the Pāli Language, sub voce.

for making somebody go forth, disappear, (or come)¹. These and similar sciences are practised (by some men) for the sake of food, drink, clothes, a lodging, a bed, and various objects of pleasure. They practise a wrong science, the unworthy, the mistaken² men. After having died at their allotted time, they will be born in some places inhabited by Asuras and evildoers. And when they are released therefrom, they will again be born deaf and dumb, or night-blind. (27)

Some man for his own sake or for the sake of his relations, family, or servants, or entering the service of an acquaintance or neighbour of his, becomes his companion or his helpmate, or he goes to meet him, or he becomes a burglar, or a cut-purse, or he tends sheep, or he becomes a hunter³, or he catches birds, or he uses nets (for catching deer), or he becomes a fisherman or a cowherd or a slayer of cows or a dog-keeper or he hunts with dogs. (28)

A man, becoming the companion of another man, will follow him everywhere, (and having inspired him with confidence) beats, cuts, pierces, tears, thrashes, or puts him to death, and thereby gets his food. By these very evil deeds he degrades himself⁴. (29)

A man, becoming the helpmate of another man, always attends on him, (and having inspired him with confidence) beats, &c. (all down to) degrades himself. (30)

¹ Âyamanim, it is omitted in some MSS. and in the commentaries.

² Vipratipanna.

³ Sôvariya, translated saukarika.

⁴ I.e. he will be born in one of the low courses of existence.

A man, going to meet somebody, on the road, beats, &c. (all down to) degrades himself. (31)

A man, becoming a burglar, breaks into a house and beats, &c. (all down to) degrades himself. (32)

A man, becoming a cut-purse, cuts the purse and beats, &c. (all down to) degrades himself. (33)

A man, becoming a tender of sheep, beats, cuts, pierces, tears, thrashes, or puts to death a ram or some other animal. (The rest as above.) (34)

A man, becoming a hunter, beats, &c. (all down to) puts to death a buffalo or some other animal. (The rest as above.) (35)

A man, using nets (for catching deer), beats, &c., an antelope or some other animal. (The rest as above.) (36)

A man, catching birds, beats, &c., a bird or some other animal. (The rest as above.) (37)

A man, becoming a fisherman, beats, &c., a fish or some other animal. (The rest as above.) (38)

A man, becoming a cowherd, beats, &c., a cow or some other animal. (The rest as above.) (39)

A man, slaying cows, beats, &c., a cow or some other animal. (The rest as above.) (40)

A man, becoming a dog-keeper, beats, &c., a dog or some other animal. (The rest as above.) (41)

A man, becoming the helpmate of a dog-keeper, beats, &c., a dog or some other animal. (The rest as above.) (42)

A man, rising in an assembly, may promise to kill some (animal) and he will beat, &c., a partridge, duck, quail, pigeon, monkey, a francoline partridge, or some other animal. (The rest as above.) (43)

A man, being angry for some reason, e.g. because his granary or his liquor-cask runs short¹, sets fire to the cornfields of the householders or their sons, has the fire set by another person, or consents to another's setting fire to them. (The rest as above.) (44)

A man, being angry for some reason, e.g. because his granary or liquor-cask runs short, makes a deep cut in the strong limbs of the camels, cows, horses, or donkeys of the householders or their sons, has it made by another person, or consents to another's making the cut. (The rest as above.) (45)

A man, being angry for some reason, e.g. because his granary or his liquor-cask runs short, covers with brambles or twigs the householders', or their sons', stable for the camels, cows, horses, or donkeys, and burns them, or has them burnt by another person, or consents to another's burning them. (The rest as above.) (46)

A man, being angry for some reason, &c. (as above), steals a householder's or his sons' earrings (or girdle)², or jewels, or pearls, has them stolen by another person, or consents to another's stealing them. (The rest as above.) (47)

A man, being angry, &c. (as before), robs Śra-manas or Brāhmanas of their umbrella, stick, staff, small property, pot, chair, clothes, blanket, leather boots, knife, or scabbard, has it done by another person, or consents to another's robbing them. (The rest as above.) (48)

A man, without consideration (and without any provocation), sets fire to the cornfields of the householders, &c. (All as in § 44.) (49).

¹ Khaladânêna vâ surâthâlaêna vâ. My translation is conjectural.

² Guṇa; omitted in the printed text.

A man, without consideration, makes a deep cut in the strong limbs of the camels, &c. (All as in § 45.) (50)

A man, without consideration, covers with brambles and twigs the stables for the camels, &c., and burns them, &c. (All as in § 46.) (51)

A man, without consideration, steals the earrings, &c. (All as in § 47.) (52)

A man, without consideration, robs Sramanas or Brâhmanas of their umbrella, &c. (All as in § 48.) (53)

A man, on seeing Sramanas or Brâhmanas (whom he detests), degrades himself by various evil deeds. Either he gives them a slap with the open hand to turn them away¹, or he abuses them. And when the monk at the proper time calls (at his house on the begging-tour), he does not give him alms (but says): those who become Sramanas are the meanest workmen, men unable to support (their family), low-caste men, wretches, idlers! (54)

Such men praise this life, this miserable life; they do nothing on behalf of the next world; they suffer, grieve, blame themselves, grow feeble, are afflicted, and undergo great pain; they do not cease to cause others to suffer, grieve, &c., to slay and to put men in fetters; and while they make suffer or kill, or make suffer and kill (beings), and do various evil deeds, they enjoy the excellent pleasures of human life; viz. such a man eats at dinner-time, he drinks at drinking-time, he dresses himself at dressing-time, he goes to bed at the proper time, and sleeps at sleeping-time. Doing everything in its turn, he bathes, makes the offering (to the house-gods)¹, performs auspicious rites and expiatory acts, washes his head, hangs a wreath round his neck, adorns himself with precious stones and golden (trinkets), puts on (his head) a chaplet of flowers; with his body strengthened, with a wreath hanging down to the girdle of his loins, dressed in new clothes, his limbs and body anointed with sandal, (sitting) on a large throne in a lofty upper room (of his house), surrounded by women and a troop of followers, in the light (of torches) burning the whole night, under the great din of uninterrupted story-telling, dramatical plays, singing, and music, as beating of time, performing on the Vīṇā, Tūryā, the great drum, and *Paṭupātāha*², he enjoys the excellent pleasures of human life. (55)

¹ Akkharâê apphâlettâ bhavai = apsarâyâr kaputikâyâr âsphâlayitâ bhavati. I am not sure that I have hit the meaning; apsarâ is perhaps derived from apasârayati, the word is wanting in our dictionaries.

When he gives an order to one man, even four or five men will, without being asked, go up to him (and say): 'Speak, beloved of the gods, what shall we do? what shall we fetch? what shall we give you? what (trinket) shall we put on you? what is your heart's desire? what relishes your mouth?'

Unworthy men who see him will say: 'Forsooth, this man is a god; this man is the anointed of the gods, this man will support (us), as he supports

¹ Compare Kalpa Sūtra, Lives of the Ginas, § 66, notes. Our commentator explains the prāyaścitta (expiatory acts) as ceremonies counteracting bad dreams.

² Compare Kalpa Sūtra, Lives of the Ginas, § 14, part i, p. 223.

others.' But noble men who see him will say: 'This man does cruel actions, and maintains himself by them. His is the southern region, the hell, the dark fortnight¹. In the future he will not easily obtain enlightenment.' (56)

(The conduct described in the preceding) part² is agreeable to some (heretical) monks, to some householders, to men governed by love of life. This conduct is unworthy, impure, void (of virtues), not holy, not right, not eradicating sins; it is not the road to perfection, liberation, Nirvâṇa, final delivery, not the road of those who are freed from all misery; it is thoroughly untrue, and bad.

This is the explanation of the first subject, viz. demerit. (57)

Now the explanation of the second subject, viz. merit, is as follows:

Here in the East, West, North, and South there are some men, viz. Âryas, non-Âryas, (all down to) ugly men. They own fields and houses, (&c., all as in II, 1, §§ 34-59, down to) reach final beatitude. (58)

(The conduct described in this) part is holy, right, (all just the reverse of what was said in § 58, down to) thoroughly true, and good. This is the explanation of the second subject, viz. merit. (59)

Now the explanation of the third subject, viz. the mixed state, is as follows:

Those who live in woods, in huts, near villages, (&c., all as above, § 21, down to) or blind. (The conduct described in this) part is not holy, (&c., all as in § 57, down to) thoroughly untrue, and bad.

¹ For according to the commentaries the worst of all regions is the south, the worst state of being that of denizens of hell, and the dark fortnight is the worse half of the month.

² Tâṇê = sthânam.

This is the explanation of the third subject, viz. the mixed state. (60)

Now the explanation of the first subject, viz. demerit, is as follows :

Here in the East, West, North, and South live some men ; they are householders, men of great desires, great undertakings, great possessions, unrighteous men, men practising unrighteousness, very unrighteous men, men speaking unrighteously, living unrighteously, thinking unrighteously, given to unrighteousness, men of unrighteous character and conduct, men gaining an unrighteous livelihood. (61)

They beat, cut¹, pierce, skin, are bloody-handed, violent, cruel, wicked, rash ; they habitually practise bribery², fraud, deceit, imposture, dishonesty, and trickery ; they are of bad character and morals, they are difficult to please, they do not abstain from killing living beings ; as long as they live they do not abstain from wrath, (&c., all as in II, 1, 51, down to) the sin of wrong belief ; nor from bathing, rubbing, painting, anointing themselves ; from sounds, touches, tastes, colours, smells ; from wreaths and ornaments ; from cars, carriages, vehicles, litters, swings³, coach and pair⁴, palankins⁵, beds, seats ;

¹ These words are in the 2nd person sing. of the imperative, which, according to Pāṇini III, 4, 2, may be used to express a repeated or habitual action.

² Utkuṣṭhāna.

³ Gilli, purushadvayōtkshiptā ghṛllikā.

⁴ Thilli, explained : a vehicle drawn by a pair of mules ; but, according to Leumann s.v., saddle.

⁵ Sṭyasandimāniyā, explained sibikāvisēsha.

from enjoying a ride or drive; from having many followers; from buying, selling, doing business with Māshas¹, half Māshas, and Rupees; from silver, gold, riches, corn, precious stones, pearls, conches, stones, and corals; from using wrong weights and measures; from undertakings and slaughter; from working and making others work; from cooking and making others cook; from cutting, pounding, threatening, beating, binding, killing, and causing pain; and whatever other suchlike wicked and sinful actions of worthless men there be, that cause pains to other beings: these men do not abstain from them as long as they live. (62)

As some idle, cruel men wantonly injure Kalama², Masûra³, sesamum, Mudga⁴, beans, Nishpāva⁵, Kulattha⁶, Âlisanda⁷, Êlamikkha⁸, so an idle, cruel man wantonly hurts partridges, ducks, quails, pigeons, francoline partridges, deer, buffaloes, boars, iguanas, tortoises, and snakes.

A man will (occasionally) severely punish even the smallest offence of his domestics, viz. a slave or messenger or hired servant or vassal⁹ or parasite; e.g. punish him, pull out his hair, beat him, put him in irons, in fetters, in stocks, into prison, screw up in a pair of shackles (his hands and feet)

¹ Māsha is a weight of gold.

² A sort of rice.

³ A sort of pulse or lentil.

⁴ A sort of kidney-bean.

⁵ Probably Dolichos Sinensis.

⁶ A sort of pulse, Dolichos Uniflorus.

⁷ I cannot identify this plant, our dictionaries do not contain this or a similar word.

⁸ This word ought perhaps to be divided in two; êlâ are cardamoms, but what mikkha is I cannot say.

⁹ Bhâgilla = bhâgika, one who gets the sixth part of the products (e.g. of agriculture) of the work for which he is hired.

and break them, cut off his hands or feet or ears or nose or lips or head or face (?)¹, pierce his feet, tear out his eyes, teeth, tongue, hang him, brush him, whirl him round, impale him, lacerate him, pour acids (in his wounds), belabour him with cutting-grass, bind him to a lion's tail (!), or a bull's tail, burn him in a wood on fire, let him be devoured by crows and vultures, stop his food and drink, keep him a prisoner for life, let him die any of these horrid deaths. (63)

A man will (occasionally) severely punish even the smallest offence of his next of kin, viz. his mother or father or brother or sister or wife or sons or daughters or daughters-in-law; e.g. he ducks the offender in cold water, (&c., all as in § 18, down to) hateful in this world and the next. They suffer, grieve, blame themselves, grow feeble, are afflicted, and undergo great pain; they do not cease to cause others to suffer, grieve, &c., to slay and to put men in fetters². (64)

And thus they are given to sensual pleasures, desire them, are held captive by them, passionately love them for four or five years, for six or ten years—the period may be shorter or longer³. Having enjoyed pleasures, having produced the effects of iniquity, having acquired the Karma of many sinful actions which generally bear him downwards, (he goes to the bottom of the hell)⁴. As a ball of ¹ The following two words, vêgaḥḥahiya and aṅgaḥḥahiya, I cannot translate.

² Compare § 55.

³ Compare § 21.

⁴ These words from the end of the paragraph are to be supplied here, or rather the following passage has been inserted in the iron or stone, when thrown in the water, sinks below the surface of the water till it stops at the bottom, so a man of the sort we are treating of, who is full of Karman, full of sin, full of demerit, full of disgrace¹, full of iniquity, full of wicked thoughts, deceit, imposture, and fraud, and, as a rule, kills animals, having died at the allotted time, will sink below this earth, and go to the bottom of the hell. (65)

These hells are round inside, square outside, on their floor razorlike arrows are thick-set (and covered with flowers), they are filled with perpetual darkness, never lighted up by the planets, moon, sun, Na-kshatras, and stars; their floor is slippery with a coating of marrow, fat, flesh, blood, and matter, and besmeared with grease; these hells are impure, smelling detestably, black, of the colour of fire, very rugged, difficult to pass, horrid. And horrid are the pains in these hells. (66)

And those who are condemned to live in these hells, do not sleep nor slumber, nor do they get any consolation² or comfort or recreation or encouragement; but the denizens of hell there suffer exquisite, great, deep, hard, rough, violent, painful, sharp, intolerable agonies. (67)

As a tree growing on a hill falls by its weight when its roots are cut, on a low, rugged, inaccessible place, so a man of the sort we are treating of middle of the sentence so that it is apparently cut in two, of which the first lacks the verb.

¹ There is, apparently, a pun in the three words vagga, pañka, ayasa, for they mean also steel, mud, iron.

² Muim or sāyam or suim. The Dīpikā has sruti. The following words are rati, dhr̥iti, mati.

wanders from womb to womb, from birth to birth, from death to death, from hell to hell, from pain to pain. His is the southern region, the hell, the dark fortnight¹. In the future he will not easily obtain enlightenment. (The conduct described in the preceding) part is unworthy, impure, (&c., see § 57, all down to) it is thoroughly untrue, and bad. This is the explanation of the first subject, viz. demerit. (68)

Now the explanation of the second subject, viz. merit, is as follows :

Here in the East, West, North, and South there are some such men as abstain from undertakings and possessions, righteous men, men practising righteousness, (&c., all as in § 58, but substitute 'righteous' for 'unrighteous,' down to) men gaining a righteous livelihood. They are of good character and morals, they are easy to please and good. They abstain from killing living beings as long as they live, (&c., all just the reverse of what was said in § 62, down to) whatever other suchlike wicked actions there be, that cause pains to other beings: these men abstain from them as long as they live. (69)

There are such monks as in walking carefully avoid to occasion the death of any living creature, (&c., all as in § 23, down to) as lead chaste lives regulated by the three Guptis, as are free from anger, pride, deceit, and greed, as are calm, tranquil, passionless, happy, free from the Āsravas, and bondage, without sorrow; as water does not adhere to a copper vessel, or collyrium to mother-of-pearl

¹ Compare § 56 and note 1 on p. 372.

(so sins find no place in them); their course is unobstructed like that of Life; like the firmament they want nothing to support them; like the wind they know no obstacles; their heart is pure like the water (of rivers or tanks) in autumn; like the leaves of a lotus they cannot be soiled by anything; their senses are well protected like the limbs of a tortoise; they are single and alone like the horn of a rhinoceros; they are free like birds; they are always waking like the fabulous bird Bhârunda; they are valorous like elephants, strong like bulls, difficult to attack like lions, steady and firm like Mount Mandara, deep like the ocean, mild like the moon, refulgent like the sun, pure like excellent gold; like the earth they patiently bear everything; like a well-kindled fire they shine in their splendour¹. (70)

There are no obstacles anywhere for these reverend men. The obstacles have been declared to be of four kinds, viz. animals born from eggs, viviparous animals, things belonging to somebody, articles necessary for religious exercises². In whichever direction they want to go, there they meet with no obstacle; but being pure and free, full of learning, control, and austerities, they purify themselves. (71)

These reverend men practise the following mode

¹ The same passage occurs, mutatis mutandis, in the Kalpa Sūtra, Lives of the Ginas, § 118; see part i, p. 261, and notes 1 and 2.

² The author of the Dīpikā offers diverse interpretations of this division of obstacles, which are apparently guesses and not based on a solid tradition. In the parallel passage of the Kalpa Sūtra, § 119, the division is according to: matter, space, time, and affects.

of living which just suffices for carrying on existence ; they eat but one meal in two, three, four, five, six, seven days, in half a month, in one, two, three, four, five, six months ; they (have vowed to) live on such food only as has been taken out of the cooking-vessel, or as is still in it, or the first kind of food in one place and the second in another, or on low food, or bad food, or food collected in small bits, or food given with a dirty hand, or the reverse, or food given with a hand, &c. soiled by it ; they (have vowed to) accept such alms only as are within sight (when they beg), or are out of sight, as they are asked whether they would accept, or as they are not asked about, as are given with contempt, or the reverse ; they beg (in houses where they are) unknown, or when food is scarce¹ ; they accept only such things as are at hand, or only a limited number of gifts, or only a fixed quantity of food ; they beg according to the rules (laid down for begging) ; they eat low food or bad food or tasteless food or badly tasting food or rough food or disagreeable food ; they lead a low or mean life ; they drink sour gruel, they eat nothing seasoned with ghee or similar materials ; they do not drink liquors or eat meat, they do not eat highly-flavoured food ; they eat standing, or supported by something, or sitting on a stool or an armchair ; they lie down stretched out like a stick, or curved like a bent piece of wood² ; they sit in the sun,

¹ The author of the Dîpikâ states that such monks beg in the morning.

² Lagandasâinô. They lie in such a position that only their heels and head, or the back touch the ground.

they go naked¹; they do not scratch themselves; they do not spit; they do not cut their beard, hair, and nails, they do not take any care of their person. (72)

Living in this way they practise many years Sramāṇahood, and if then they fall sick, or even if they do not, they refuse food and omit many meals by abstaining from food. When they have attained that for whose sake they went about naked and bald-headed, did not bathe, nor clean their teeth, nor protect their head from the sun, nor wear shoes; they slept on the bare ground or a plank or a piece of wood, plucked out their hair, led a life of chastity, entered the houses of strangers, and bore, with indifference, success, failure, honour, disgrace, slights, blame, reviling, threatening, beating, all sorts of hardships², and the twenty-two calamities and troubles; (when they have attained their end), they reach, while they are breathing their last, the highest knowledge and faith, called Kêvala, which is infinite, supreme, unobstructed, unimpeded, complete and full; and then they obtain absolute perfection, enlightenment, deliverance, final beatitude, and put an end to all misery. (73)

Some become liberated³ without assuming another body (after quitting the last). But others, having died at the allotted time, are, on account of a residue of (good) Karman, born in one of the regions of the gods. Among very beautiful, very splendid, very excellent, very glorious, very strong, very powerful, very happy (gods), they become very beautiful, very splendid, &c., gods¹; their breasts shining with necklaces; their arms encumbered with bracelets and armrings; wearing ear-ornaments² which play on their cheeks, and earrings which hang down to the bracelets on their upper arms; wearing various ornaments on their hands; their crowns adorned with gay wreaths; putting on highly perfumed, excellent clothes; using beautiful, excellent garlands and ointments; their splendid body ornamented with a long down-reaching garland; having divine colours, touches, constitution (of the body), and rank; lighting up and illumining all ten quarters (of the universe) with their divine beauty, splendour, lustre, brightness, brilliancy, and light; beautiful when they go, beautiful when they rest, and happy also in the time to come.

¹ I leave out agattayâ or agamayâ, which is not explained in the Dîpikâ.

² Grâmakāṇṭaka, either the abuse met with in villages, or the objects of the senses (indriyagrâma).

³ Bhayantârô bhavanti. Bhayantârô is explained: who go (gantâraḥ) from bhava to Môksha.

(The conduct described in the preceding) part is worthy, pure, (&c., see § 57, all down to) it is thoroughly true, and good.

This is the explanation of the second subject, viz. merit. (74)

Now the explanation of the third subject, viz. the mixed state, is as follows:

Here in the East, West, North, and South there are some such men as have few desires, few undertakings, few possessions, righteous men, men practising righteousness, (&c., all as in § 69, down to) men gaining a righteous livelihood. They are of good character and morals, easy to please, and good. They abstain, as long as they live, from one kind of killing living beings, but they do not abstain from another, (&c., similar as in § 62, all down to) whatever suchlike wicked actions there be, that cause pains to other beings, from some of them these men abstain as long as they live, from others they do not abstain. (75)

¹ The following description contains passages recurring in the Kalpa Sûtra, §§ 14, 15.

² Karnapîḥa.

There¹ are, for instance, followers of the Sramanas, who comprehend (the doctrine about) living beings and things without life, who understand (the difference between) virtues and sins, who are well grounded in (the knowledge of) the Āsravas, Samvara, the realisation and annihilation (of Karman), the subject of actions², bondage, and final liberation; who, without anybody to back them³, cannot be seduced from the creed of the Nirgranthas by hosts of gods, Asuras, Nāgas, Suvarṇas, Yakshas, Rākshasas, Kinnaras, Kimpurushas, Garuḍas, and snake-gods; who have no doubts, scruples, or misgivings about this creed of the Nirgranthas, but have grasped its meaning, got hold of its meaning, got information about its meaning, ascertained its meaning, and understood its meaning; whose very marrow¹ of the bones has been penetrated by their love (for the Nirgrantha creed), avowing that it alone is true, and all others futile. They keep the bar² (of their gates) raised and their door open, having no desire to enter a stranger's house or his seraglio. They strictly keep the Pôsaḥa-fast on the fourteenth and eighth days of the month, on certain festivals³, and on full-moon days. They provide the Nirgrantha Sramanas with pure acceptable food, drink, dainties and spices, with clothes, alms-bowls, blankets and brooms, with drugs and medicines, with stools, planks, beds, and couches. They purify themselves by practising the Śilavratas and Guṇavratas⁴, the Viramaṇa, the Pratyākhyāna, the Pôsaḥa-fasts, and austerities which they have vowed to perform¹. (76)

¹ Śilāṅka says with regard to § 76: 'The MSS. of the text generally differ from one another in this passage; the text commented upon in the Tīkā does not agree with that of any MS. I therefore comment upon the text exhibited in one MS. If, therefore, my text does not agree with that (of the reader) he should not be alarmed.' All the MSS. I use have the same text, that of the commentator. It is characteristic of the way in which Harshakula, the author of the Dīpikā, worked, that he copies Śilāṅka's above remark with some verbal alterations.

² Kriyādhikaraṇa.

³ Asahāyā.

Living in this way they are for many years followers of the Sramanas, and if then they fall sick, or even if they do not, they refuse food and omit many meals by abstaining from food. Having confessed their sins and expiated them, and having attained perfection², they die at their allotted time, to be born again as gods in one of the regions of the gods, (&c., all as in § 74, down to) it is thoroughly true, and good.

This is the explanation of the third subject, viz. the mixed state. (77)

He who does not practise cessation³ (from sin), is called a foolish man; he who practises cessation (from sin), is called a wise man; he who in one regard practises cessation (from sin) and in another does not, is said to be in a state partaking of that of a wise man and that of a foolish man.

The conduct of him who does not practise cessation from all (sins), is that of a man who kills living creatures; it is unworthy, (&c., all down to) thoroughly untrue, and bad.

The conduct of him who practises cessation from all (sins), is that of a man who does not kill living creatures; it is worthy, pure, (&c., all down to) thoroughly true, and good.

The conduct of a man who in one regard practises cessation from all (sins) and in another does not, is that of a man who kills some living creatures and does not kill others ; it is worthy, pure, (&c., all down to) thoroughly true, and good. (78)

¹ The same passage occurs below, 7, 4, and Aupapâtika Sûtra, § 124. Upâsakadarâ, § 66.

² Samâdhi, which is elsewhere explained by môksha, but in our case it cannot be final liberation, but a state of purity of the soul.

³ Virati.

Those whom we have been treating of, fall under the two heads: merit and demerit ; (the former is when the Self is) at rest, (the latter, when it is) in disturbance.

Now the explanation of the first subject is as follows :

There are enumerated three hundred and sixty-three philosophical schools¹: those of the Kriyâ-vâda, those of the Akriyâvâda, those of the Agñânikavâda, and those of the Vainayikavâda. These (philosophers) teach final beatitude, they teach final deliverance, they speak as Srâvakas, they speak as teachers of *Srâvakas*². (79)

All these philosophers, founders of systems of their own, differing in intellect, will, character, opinions, taste, undertakings, and plans, formed one large circle, and every one of them stood in his place.

One man took hold of a vessel quite full of ¹ According to the commentators there are 180 schools of Kriyâvâdins, 84 of Akriyâvâdins, 67 of Agñânikavâdins, and 32 of Vainayikavâdins. These numbers are arrived at by calculation, not by actual observation. E.g. the 180 possible schools of the Kriyâvâdins are calculated in the following way. The nine categories of the Gâinas are: gîva, agîva, âsrava, samvara, nirgarâ, punya, pâpa, bandha, and môksha. Each of them may be regarded as svatah and paratah, as nitya and anitya with regard to kâla, îsvara, âtma, niyati, and svabhâva. By multiplying 9 successively in 2, 2, 5, we find 180 to be the number of possible schools of Kriyâvâdins.

² I.e. they learn these heresies from their teachers, and teach them to their pupils.

burning coals by an iron pair of tongs, and addressed those philosophers, founders of systems of their own, differing in intellect, (&c., all down to) undertakings and plans, in the following way : 'Heighho ! ye philosophers, (&c., all down to) undertakings and plans ! take this vessel full of burning coals and hold it for a minute in your hands ! But do not take hold of it by a pair of tongs, nor put out the fire, nor come to the help of one of your own creed or of an alien creed (by putting out the fire, &c.) ; but fair and honest ¹, without using any trick, stretch out your hands.' Having thus spoken, the man took hold of the vessel quite full of burning coals by an iron pair of tongs, and (offered to) put it in the hands of those philosophers. But the philosophers, (&c., all down to) undertakings and plans, held back their hands. On this the man addressed all the philosophers, (&c., all down to) undertakings and plans, in the following way : 'Heighho, ye philosophers, (&c., all down to) undertakings and plans ! why do you hold back your hands ?' 'Our hand will be burned.' 'What then, if it is burned ?' '(We shall suffer) pain.' 'Because you are afraid of pain, you hold back your hands !' (So are all creatures averse to pain). This is a maxim of general application ², it is a true principle, a religious reflection ³; this maxim, this principle, this religious reflection holds good with regard to every (living being). Therefore those Sramanas and Brâhmanas who say that all sorts of living beings may be beaten or treated with violence or abused or tor-

¹ Niyâgapaḍivanna.

² Tulâ.

³ Samôsarana = samavasârana, explained: dharmaviââra, viz. of the true adage: âtmavat sarvabhûtâni yah paryati sa paryati.

mented or deprived of life, will in the time to come¹ suffer cutting or piercing, will experience birth, old age, death, conception in the womb, the Circle of Births, regeneration, existence as a foetus, the whole scale of mundane existences, and suffer a variety of pains². (80)

They will many times undergo punishment, pulling out of the hair, threatening, putting in irons, (&c., similar as in § 63, all down to) whirling round; (they will witness) the death of their mothers, fathers, brothers, sisters, sons, daughters, and daughters-in-law; (they will experience) poverty, bad luck, company of hated people, separation from those whom they love, misery, and despair; they will again and again wander about in the beginningless and endless, immense wilderness of the fourfold Samsâra. They will not reach perfection, (&c., all down to) not put an end to all misery.—This is a maxim of general application, (&c., all down to) holds good with regard to every (living being). (81)

But those Sramanas and Brâhmanas who say that all sorts of living beings should not be beaten, &c., will in the time to come not suffer cutting, &c. They will not undergo many punishments, (&c., all just the reverse of what has been said in §§ 80, 81, down to) put an end to all misery. (82)

Thus those beings who practise the first twelve kinds of actions³, have not attained perfection, (&c., all down to) have not, nor do, nor will put an end to all misery. (83)

¹ Âgantu.

² Kalañkalibhâva.

³ Described in §§ 5-21. See p. 365, note 3.

But those beings who practise the thirteenth kind of action, have attained perfection, (&c., all down to) have put, or put, or will put an end to all misery. (84)

Thus a monk who obtains his soul's good and benefit, who guards himself, who (well directs the functions) of his soul, who well exerts himself, who protects himself (from evil), who is careful of himself, who saves himself (from the Samsâra), should withhold his soul (from the twelve kinds of committing sins). (85)

Thus I say.

THIRD LECTURE,

CALLED

KNOWLEDGE OF FOOD.

O long-lived (Gambûsvâmin)! I (Sudharman) have heard the following discourse from the Venerable (Mahâvîra). We now come to the Lecture called 'Knowledge of Food.' The contents of it are as follows :

Here in the East, West, North, and South there are, all in all, in the world four kinds of seed : seeds generated at the top (of the plant), at its root, at its knots, at its stem ¹. According to the seed and place

¹ The commentators here give the reading of the Nâgârjunîyas : 'the growth of seeds of the plants is fivefold, viz. they grow from the top (of the plant), its root, its knots, its stem, and its beads ;

(of growth) of these plants some beings—born in earth, originated in earth, and grown in earth, having in it their birth, origin, and growth, being impelled by their Karman, and coming forth in it on account of their Karman, growing there in particles of earth, the origin of various things—come forth as trees¹. (1)

These living beings feed on the liquid substance² of these particles of earth, the origin of various things; these beings consume earth-bodies, water-bodies, fire-bodies, wind-bodies, bodies of plants; they deprive of life the bodies of manifold movable and immovable beings; the destroyed bodies which have been consumed before, or absorbed by the rind, (are) digested and assimilated (by them). And the bodies of these (trees) which bring forth their different parts, are of manifold colours, smells, tastes, touches, forms, and arrangement of corporeal particles³.

and some are of a sixth kind called sammûrkkhima' (i.e. those plants which are believed to be originated by the coalescing particles of the substance in which they grow, e.g. grass springing up on ground lately cleared by fire).—The various readings of the Nâgârguṇīyas are occasionally quoted in commentaries (see e.g. part i, p. 32, note 2). But I do not think that it has been satisfactorily made out who these Nâgârguṇīyas were.

¹ The meaning is, that souls who on account of their Karman are to be born as trees, previously are embodied in earth, and thence they are transferred by their Karman to the seed which brings forth the tree.

² Sinêha, explained: snigdhabhâva. In the sequel where plants are spoken of, I shall render this word by 'sap' or 'humours,' as the context may require.

³ I.e. the food assimilated by the tree is the material of which its different parts, as root, stem, leaves, &c., are formed, and these parts are of manifold form, colours, &c.

These beings (animating trees) come into existence because of their Karman ; so we are taught (by the Tīrthakaras, &c.) (2)

And again it has been said of old : some beings born in trees, originated by trees, sprung from trees, (&c., as in § 1, down to) springing from trees that originated in earth, come forth as trees originated by trees¹. These beings feed on the sap of the trees originated in earth, (&c., all as in § 2, down to the end). (3)

(In the same way, and in nearly the same words, the offshoots of the trees mentioned in the preceding paragraph are treated of.) (4)

And again it has been said of old : some beings born in trees, (&c., all as above, down to) growing in trees, that are originated by trees, come forth as their roots, bulb, stem, branches, twigs, leaves, flowers, fruits, and seeds². These beings feed on the sap of those trees originated by trees, (&c., all as in § 2, down to) and the bodies of the roots, bulb, stem, &c. are of manifold colours, (&c., all as in § 2, down to the end). (5)

(The four paragraphs that come next, 6–9, are identical with the preceding ones, except that ‘creeper’³ is substituted for ‘tree.’) (6–9)

(In the same way ‘grass’⁴ is treated in four paragraphs, but the whole is much abridged ; then

¹ Apparently trees sprung from shoots, sprouts, aerial-roots, &c. are meant. They are considered as a class different from those whose offshoots they are.

² One soul, gīva, pervades the whole tree ; it is the soul of the tree. Separate gīvas, however, reside in the roots, &c.

³ Aggāḍruha = adhyârôha, explained in the Dīpikā : vallī-vriksha.

⁴ Trina.

it is said that 'herbs¹' and 'plants²' are to be treated in four paragraphs each.) (10-15)

And again it has been said of old : some beings born in earth, (&c., all as in § 1, down to) growing there in particles of earth that are the origin of various things, come forth as Āya, Kāya, Kuhana, Kandu, Uvvêhaliya, Nivvêhaliya, Êsava, Sakêkha, Khattaga, Vâsâniya ³. (The rest as in § 2, but substitute the words Āya, &c. for 'trees.')

Here there is only one paragraph, the remaining three do not apply here ⁴. (16)

And again it has been said of old : some beings born in water, (&c., all as in §§ 1-11, substitute only 'water' for 'earth.')

Thus we have four paragraphs for trees, four for creepers, four for grass, four for herbs, four for plants). (17)

Now it has been said of old : some beings born in water, (&c., all as above, down to) growing in particles of water that are the origin of various things, come forth as Udaga, Avaga ⁵, Paṇaga, Sêvâla ⁶, Kalambuya ⁷, Kasêrûya ⁸, Kakêkhabhâniya, Uppala,

¹ Ôsahi = Ôshadhi.

² Hariya = harita.

³ All the commentators say about the words Āya, &c. (which offer some various readings in the MSS.), is that they denote particular plants (vanaspativîśha) which must be learned from people (who know them). I give the words in their Prākṛit form, and do not attempt to transpose them into Sanskrit.

⁴ For there are no Āyas originated by Āyas except through their seed.

⁵ Avakâ, a grassy plant growing in marshy land, Blyxa Octandra.

⁶ Saivâla, the aquatic plant Vallisneria.

⁷ Kadamba, Nauclea Kadamba.

⁸ Kasêru, Scirpus Kysoor.

Pauma, Kumuya, Nalina¹, Subhagasômiya, Pondariya, Mahâpondariya, Sayavatta, Sahassavatta, Kalhâra, Kôkanada, Tâmarasa², as stalks and fibres of lotus, as Pukkhalâ³, and Pukkhalatthibhaga. (The rest similar as in § 2.) (18)

And again it has been said of old : some beings come forth as movable beings from trees born in earth, from trees originated by trees, from the roots, (&c., down to) seeds produced by trees, originated by creepers born on trees, from creepers born on creepers, from the roots, &c. of creepers born on creepers, from grass⁴, from herbs⁴, from plants⁴, from Âya, (&c., all down to) Kûra born in earth ; from trees born in water (the rest similar as with trees born in earth), from Udaga, (&c., all down to) Pukkhalatthibhaga born in water. (19)

These creatures feed on the sap of the trees, creepers, grass, herbs, plants, be they born in earth or water, on trees or creepers or grass or herbs or plants ; (the sap) of their roots, (&c., all down to) seeds, of Âyas, &c., of Udakas, &c. And these creatures consume earth-bodies, (&c., all as in § 2, down to) assimilated by them. And the bodies of these beings born of trees, creepers, grass, herbs, plants, their roots, &c., of Âyas, &c., of Udagas, &c., are of manifold colours, (&c., the rest as in § 2, down to the end). (20)

¹ The last four are well-known varieties of lotus, called in Sanskrit: utpala, padma, kumuda, nalina.

² The Sanskrit of the last seven items is : pundarîka, mahâpundarîka, satapattrâ, sahasrapattrâ, kahlâra, kôkanada, and tâmarasa ; they are all varieties of lotus.

³ Pushkara.

⁴ This is to be detailed in the same way as with trees and creepers.

And again it has been said of old : a man and a woman combine in cohabitation in a cunnus, which was produced by their Karman, and there they deposit their humours. Therein are born the souls of different men, viz. of those born in Karmabhûmi¹, or in Akarmabhûmi, or in the minor continents, of Âryas and barbarians, as women or men or eunuchs, according to the semen and blood of the mother² and the other circumstances³ (contingent on their coming into existence). These beings at first feed on the menses of the mother and the semen of the father, or both combined into an unclean, foul (substance). And afterwards they absorb with a part (of their bodies) the essence⁴ of whatever food the mothers take. Gradually increasing and attaining to the proper dimensions of a foetus⁵ they come forth from the womb, some as males, some as females, some as neuters. As long as they are babies, they suck the mother's milk; but when they grow older, they eat boiled rice, or gruel, or both movable and immovable beings. These beings consume earth-bodies, (&c., all as before, down to) assimilated by them. And the bodies of these men, viz. those born in Karmabhûmi, or Akarmabhûmi, or in the minor continents, of Âryas and barbarians, are of mani-

¹ Compare note 1, p. 225.

² Both are indicated in the text by bîga. According to Silânka, a male will be produced if the semen is in excess; a female, if the blood; a neuter, if they are equally balanced.

³ Avakâsa. According to Silânka, a male is produced from the right side of the womb, a female from the left, a neuter from both together.

⁴ Ôyam = ôgas.

⁵ Paliyâgam, explained garbhaparipâka.

fold colours, (&c., all as in § 2, down to the end). (21)

(This paragraph is nearly identical with the preceding one, but substitute 'aquatic animals of five organs of sense, viz. fishes, (all down to)¹ porpoises,' for 'different men' in the beginning and the end. The following sentence in the middle is slightly different; it runs thus: 'as long as they are young, they feed on the mothers' humours, but when they grow older they eat plants, or both movable and immovable beings.')(22)

(This paragraph treats of) quadrupeds², terrestrial animals with five organs of sense, viz. solidungular animals, biungular animals, multiungular animals, and animals having toes with nails. (All as in the last paragraph, only 'as long as they are young, they feed on their mothers' milk.')(23)

(This paragraph treats of) reptiles moving on the breast, (being) terrestrial animals with five organs of sense, viz. snakes, huge snakes³, Āsālika, and dragons⁴. (All as before, but the following passage is different.) Some bring forth eggs, some bring forth living young ones; some come out of the egg as males, some as females, some as neuters. As long as they are young, they live on wind. (The rest as above.) (24)

(This paragraph treats of) terrestrial animals with five organs of sense, walking on their arms, viz. iguanas, ichneumons, porcupines, frogs, chameleons,

¹ See Uttarādhyaṇa XXXVI, 173; above, p. 223.

² Compare Uttarādhyaṇa XXXVI, 180, ibidem.

³ Agagara, literally serpents which devour goats.

⁴ Mahōraḡa. According to the Guzeratī gloss these snakes are a thousand yōḡanas long.

Khôras, Gharakôillas¹, Vissambharas², rats, mangooses, Paîlâiyas, cats, Gôhas, Kâuppâiyas³. (The rest as in the last paragraph.) (25)

(This paragraph treats of) aerial animals with five organs of sense: birds with membranous wings, birds with feathered wings, birds with wings in the shape of a box, and birds (which sit on) outspread wings⁴. (All as before; only the following passage is different): 'As long as they are young, they are hatched by their mothers' warmth.' (The rest as above.) (26)

And again it has been said of old: there are beings of manifold birth and origin, (&c., all as in § 1, down to) growing there on the animate or inanimate bodies of manifold movable or immovable creatures, come forth as parasites⁵. These beings feed on the humours of various movable and immovable creatures, &c. And the bodies of these movable and immovable parasites are of manifold colours, (&c., as above). (27)

In the same way vermin generated in filthy substances⁶ and in the skin of living animals⁷ are to be treated of. (28, 29)

And again it has been said of old: there are some beings of manifold birth and origin, (&c., all as in § 1,

¹ Grihakoila, probably identical with grihagôlika, a lizard.

² Visvambhara is given in the smaller Petersburg Dictionary as the name of a scorpion or some similar animal. However, it must denote here some other animal.

³ This may be katushpâdika, quadruped; but then the word must be taken in a restricted sense, perhaps, small quadrupeds.

⁴ See Uttarâdhyayana XXXVI, 187; above, p. 224. Perhaps beetles and butterflies are intended by the two last kinds of pakshins?

⁵ Anusûya = anusûta or anusyûta.

⁶ Durûvasambhava.

⁷ Khuruduga.

down to) growing thereon (or in) the animate or inanimate bodies of manifold movable or immovable creatures as that (water)-body¹, which is produced by wind, condensed by wind, and carried along by wind; it goes upwards, when there is an upward wind; it goes downwards, when there is a downward wind; it goes in a horizontal direction, when there is a horizontal wind; (its varieties are) hoar-frost, snow, mist, hailstones, dew, and rain. These beings feed on the humours of these manifold movable and immovable creatures, &c. And the bodies of these (water-lives, viz.) hoar-frost, &c., produced by manifold movable or immovable creatures, are of manifold colours, (&c., as above)². (30)

And again it has been said of old: some beings, born in water, (&c., all similar as in § 1, down to) come forth in water(-bodies) in the water produced by manifold movable or immovable beings. These beings feed on the humours of the water(-bodies) produced by manifold movable and immovable creatures. (The rest similar as above.) (31)

And again it has been said of old: some beings, born in water, (&c., all similar as in § 1, down to) come forth in water-bodies produced by other water-bodies. These beings feed on the humours of those other water-bodies produced by water-bodies. (The rest similar as above.) (32)

And again it has been said of old: some beings, born in water, (&c., all similar as in § 1, down to) come forth as movable creatures in the water

¹ There is apparently no predicate in this sentence.

² This paragraph gives the 'scientific' explanation of the way by which water-bodies or the bodies of water-lives are produced by wind.

produced by water-bodies. These beings feed on the humours of the water(-bodies) produced by water. (The rest similar as before.) (33)

And again it has been said of old: some beings, of various birth and origin, (&c., all as in § 1, down to) come forth as fire-bodies in the manifold animate or inanimate bodies of movable or immovable creatures¹. These beings feed on the manifold movable or immovable creatures. (The rest similar as before.)

The remaining three paragraphs are similar (to those treating of) water-bodies. (34)

(This paragraph treats of wind-bodies in the same way as the preceding ones treated of fire-bodies; like it, it consists of four paragraphs). (35)

And again it has been said of old: some beings, of various birth and origin, (&c., all as in § 1, down to) come forth, in the manifold animate and inanimate bodies of movable and immovable creatures², as earth, gravel, &c. Here the following verses (from the Uttarâdhyayana XXXVI, 74-77) are to be made use of:

1. Earth, gravel, sand, stones, rocks, rock-salt, iron, copper, tin, lead, silver, gold, and diamond;
2. Orpiment, vermilion, realgar, Sâsaka, antimony, coral, Abhrapâṭala, Abhravâluka; these are varieties of gross (earth-)bodies, and precious stones.

¹ E.g. when two bulls or elephants rush upon one another, sparks of fire are seen issuing from their horns or teeth. Fire is produced when two pieces of wood or stone are rubbed one against the other.

² According to the commentators, earth-bodies are produced in the shape of precious stones, in the head of snakes, of pearls in the teeth (sic) of elephants, and so in reeds, &c.

3. Hyacinth, natron, Añka, crystal, Lôhitāksha, emerald, Masâragalla, Bhugamôḥaka, and sapphire ;

4. Kandana, red chalk, Hamsagarbha, Pulaka, and sulphur ; Kandraprabha, lapis lazuli, Galakânta, and Sûryakânta.

These beings feed on the humours of these manifold movable and immovable beings. (The rest as above.)

The remaining three paragraphs are similar (to those treating of) water-bodies. (36)

And again it has been said of old : all sorts of living beings, of manifold birth, origin, and growth, born in bodies, originated in bodies, grown in bodies, feeding on bodies, experience their Karman, are actuated by it, have their form and duration of life determined by Karman, and undergo changes through the influence of Karman. This you should know, and knowing it you will be careful and circumspect with regard to your food, and always exert yourself. (37)

Thus I say.

FOURTH LECTURE,

CALLED

RENUNCIATION OF ACTIVITY.

O long-lived (Gambûsvâmin) ! I (Sudharman) have heard the following Discourse from the Venerable (Mahāvīra). We now come to the Lecture called 'Renunciation of Activity.' The contents of it are as follows:

It is the Self that may¹ not renounce (activity), that may be accustomed to act, that may adhere to errors, that may be prone to sin, that may be thoroughly ignorant, that may be thoroughly stolid², that may not consider the operations³ of mind, speech, and body, that may not avoid and renounce sins.

The Venerable One has said, 'He (i. e. the Self) is uncontrolled, unresigned, does not avoid and renounce sins, is active, careless, prone to sin, thoroughly ignorant, thoroughly stolid. Though a fool does not consider⁴ the operations of his mind, speech, and body, nor does see even a dream⁵; still he commits sins⁶. (1)

The opponent says to the teacher: 'There can be no sin, if (the perpetrator of an action) does not possess sinful thoughts, speech, and functions of the body, if he does not kill, if he has no internal organ, if he does not consider the operations of mind, speech, and body, if he does not see even a dream.'

¹ 'May' is to render yâvi = kâpi. This word is used here to indicate that the reverse is true in other cases. This paragraph emphasises the Gaina doctrine that the Self or âtman is the direct cause of all actions of an individual being, in opposition to the Sânkhya philosophers who maintain the absolute inactivity of the purusha, and to the Bauddhas who deny the existence of a separate âtman altogether.

² Literally, sleeping (sutta = supta).

³ Literally, speeches (vakka = vâkya).

⁴ We ought, perhaps, to translate: if he is not conscious of, &c.

⁵ I.e. when consciousness is fainter than in a dream.

⁶ The doctrine of the Gainas is that Karman is the result of the action of every being, even of those whose intellect or consciousness is not developed, as with the êkêndriyas or beings who possess but one organ of sense. The opponent, however, maintains that only conscious actions of intelligent beings bring about Karman. This question is discussed in the following paragraphs.

What is the meaning of the opponent in making this statement? 'When there is a sinful mind, there is sin of the mind; when there is sinful speech, there is sin of the speech; when there is a sinful body, there is sin of the body. When one kills, possesses an internal organ, and considers the operations of mind, speech, and body, when one sees even a dream, then there is sin. Only he who has these qualities can commit sin.' The opponent goes on to say, 'Those who say: There is sin, though (the perpetrator of an action) does not possess sinful thoughts, speeches, and functions of the body, though he does not kill, though he does not possess an internal organ, though he does not consider the operations of mind, speech, and body, and though he does not see even a dream,—those who say this, are wrong.' (2)

Here the teacher says to the opponent: 'It is true what I have just said: there is sin, though (the perpetrator of the action) do not possess sinful thoughts, (&c., all as above, down to) though he do not see even a dream.' 'What is the reason thereof?' (The Ākārya says)¹: 'The Venerable One has assigned the six classes of living beings as the reason: the earth-lives, (&c., all down to) movable beings. With regard to these six classes of living beings, the Self does not avoid and renounce sins, he is wicked and does harm through cruelty: (this holds good with regard to the five cardinal sins:) killing of living beings, &c. (and the passions): anger, &c. (down to) the sin of wrong belief.' (3)

(The Ākārya says): 'The Venerable One has illustrated this by the example of a murderer:

¹ These words here and in the sequel are in Sanskrit; they probably are a gloss.

a murderer (who hates) a householder or his son or the king or his servant, resolves, on an occasion offering, to enter (the victim's house) and to kill him when he finds an opportunity¹. Is not this murderer who has formed this resolution², (a man) who, day and night, whether sleeping or waking, is full of hostility and wrong; who is wicked and does harm through cruelty? An unbiassed opponent before whom this is laid, will answer: Indeed, he is!' (4)

(The Ātārya says): 'As this murderer who has formed the above resolution is a man who (&c., all as in § 4, down to) does harm through cruelty—(and this holds good with regard to the five cardinal sins :) killing of living beings, &c. (and the passions :) anger, &c., (down to) the sin of wrong belief—so it has been said of him by the Venerable One: he³ is uncontrolled, unresigned, he does not avoid and renounce sins, he is active, careless, prone to sin, thoroughly ignorant, thoroughly stolid. Though a fool does not consider the operations of his mind, speech, and body, nor does see even a dream, still he commits sins. (5)

As a murderer who entertains (murderous) intentions towards a householder, &c., is a man who (&c., all as in § 4, down to) does harm through cruelty; so an ignorant man who entertains (cruel) intentions towards all sorts of living beings, is a man who (&c., all as in § 4, down to) does harm through cruelty. (6)

¹ The Nāgārguṇīyas have another reading (where, is not stated by Sīlāṅka): If he sees no opportunity, or his proposed victim is always on his guard, he does not kill him, but he resolves in his mind: If I get an opportunity, or I find that man off his guard, I shall certainly kill him.

² The original repeats the preceding passage in full. I abridge it here and in the sequel.

³ I.e. every soul, even that of a being with but one organ of sense.

(An opponent might object): This is no good reasoning. (For) there are many living beings which one, during one's whole life, never saw, nor heard of, nor cared for, nor took notice of. Towards these beings, therefore, one cannot (be said to) entertain (murderous) intentions, nor to be one who, day and night, whether sleeping or waking, is full of hostility and wrong, (&c., the rest as in § 4). (7)¹

(The Ākārya says): The Venerable One has refuted this by two illustrations, one of a sentient being, the other of a senseless being. The first is as follows: A sentient being, possessing five organs of sense and a developed internal organ, may with regard to the six classes of living beings, viz. earth-bodies, (all down to) movable beings, impose some restriction upon himself; (e. g.) that he will meet his wants, or have them met by others, by means of earth-bodies only. His intention is: I shall meet my wants, or have them met by others, by means of earth-bodies only. His intention is not (to make use of) this or that (particular earth-body): he meets his wants, or has them met by others, by means of earth-bodies in general. With regard to them,

¹ Silāṅka here makes it clear that the discussion, in the preceding paragraphs, is carried on in the form of a syllogism of five parts established in Hindu logics. § 1 contains the proposition, pratigñā, § 3 the cause, hētu, § 4 the exemplification, udāharaṇa or drishānta, § 5 the upanaya or that part which shows that the hētu is in the subject of the syllogism, and § 6 the conclusion, nigamana. We thus see how deeply rooted in, and how genial to, the mind of the Hindus was the pañcāvayavam anumānam or syllogism of five parts; for the author conforms to it, I dare say, unintentionally.

therefore, he is uncontrolled, unrestrained, does not avoid and renounce sins. The same applies to the remaining five classes of living beings.—Some one may meet his wants, or have them met by others, by means of the six classes of living beings. His intention is: I shall meet my wants, or have them met by others, by means of the six classes of living beings; it is not: by means of some particular beings. He meets his wants, (&c.) by means of living beings in general. With regard to them, therefore, he is uncontrolled, &c. (This holds good with the five cardinal sins): killing of living beings, &c., (and with the passions): anger, (&c., all down to) the sin of wrong belief. The Venerable One has said that such a creature, (&c., all as in § 1, down to) commits sins. (8)

The illustration of senseless beings is as follows: Senseless beings, viz. earth-bodies, (&c., all down to) plants, to which must be added, as a sixth item, some movable beings, which have no reason nor consciousness, nor intellect, nor mind, nor speech, in order to do something, or to have it done by others, or to consent to others' doing it; these benighted creatures (are to be considered as murderers), are full of hostility and wrong (all as in § 4)¹ against all sorts of living beings. (This holds good with the five cardinal sins :) killing of living beings, &c., (and with the passions, all down to) the sin of wrong belief. Know this: though these beings have neither mind nor speech, yet as they cause pain, grief, damages, harm, and injury, they must be regarded as not abstaining from causing pain, &c. (9)

¹ If the passage were printed in full, the most glaring contradictions would stare the reader in the face. The cause hereof is not that the passage cannot correctly be rendered, but that the authors of the Sûtras always make use of set phrases whether all parts of them suit the case in hand or not. Sometimes we can avoid downright nonsense by selecting a somewhat different rendering from what was given in another part of the book; and so I do in the last sentence of this paragraph. But this is only a makeshift.

Thus even senseless beings are reckoned instrumental in bringing about slaughter of living beings, (&c., all down to) the sin of wrong belief. Beings, whatever their origin, who were sentient (in one existence) will become senseless ones (in another) and vice versâ. Not getting rid of, nor shaking off, nor annihilating, nor destroying their Karman, the thoroughly wicked and ignorant wander from the body of a senseless being into that of sentient ones, or from the body of a sentient being into that of senseless ones, or from the body of a sentient being into that of another, or from the body of a senseless being into that of another. The sentient beings and the senseless ones, both are wrong in their conduct and commit sins through cruelty. The Venerable One has said that such a (creature) is uncontrolled, (&c., all as in § 1, down to) commits sins. (10)

(The opponent asks): 'What must one do or cause to be done, in order to become controlled and restrained, to avoid and renounce sins?' (The Âkârya answers): The Venerable One has declared that the cause (of sins) are the six classes of living beings, earth-lives, &c. As I feel pain, so they do. Therefore they should not be injured or killed¹.

¹ I here abridge the text which is identical with II, 1, 48 ff., p. 351.

This constant, permanent, eternal, true Law has been taught by wise men who comprehend all things. Thus a monk abstains from (the five cardinal sins) : slaughter of living beings, &c., (and of vices, all down to) the sin of wrong belief. He does not clean his teeth with a tooth-brush, he does not accept collyrium, emetics, and perfumes. Such a monk does not act nor kill, he is free from wrath, pride, deceit, and greed, he is calm and happy. The Venerable One says that such a (monk) is well controlled and restrained, does avoid and renounce sins, is not active, but careful and thoroughly wise. (11)

Thus I say.

FIFTH LECTURE,

CALLED

FREEDOM FROM ERROR.

A very clever (monk) who practises the vow of chastity, should not adopt the following (heretical) doctrines, nor behave badly in this religion. (1)

He should not believe that (this world) is without beginning or without end, eternal or not eternal, according to the argumentation (of heretics)¹. (2)

From these alternatives you cannot arrive at

¹ The Gainas decide all such questions with the help of the syâdvâda, which in an admirable way removes all difficulties; e.g. the world is eternal as far as that part is concerned which is truth; from these alternatives you are, certainly, led to error. (3)

One should not say : that there will be an end of beings who (know and) teach the truth¹; nor that all beings are not alike, nor that they shall be in (perpetual) bondage, or (that the prophets are) eternal. (4)

From these alternatives you cannot arrive at the truth, &c. (see verse 3). (5)

One should not say : the guilt of killing small and great animals is the same, or not the same. (6)

From these alternatives, &c. (7)

One should know that those who accept things especially prepared for them², will be affected by demerit (in some cases), or will not be affected (where it is allowed by scripture). (8)

From these alternatives, &c. (9)

One should not maintain the identity of the audârîka³, âhârîka, and kârmaṇa bodies, nor the substratum of the idea (sâmānya) 'world'; it is not eternal as far as its ever-changing state is meant.

¹ Sâstâraḥ, teachers, here those who reach perfection. The meaning is that the world would become empty if all beings should reach perfection. This should not be maintained, nor the opposite opinion, that some beings are qualified for Nirvâṇa and others not.

² Ahâkammâni, see p. 131, note 7.

³ The Gainas assume that each individual possesses five bodies : (1) audârîka, or the body that is seen; (2) kârmaṇa, receptacle of Karman, it is composed of Karman particles; (3) taigasa, a body composed of particles of fire, it causes digestion; (4) âhârîka, a subtile body of the soul, with which he goes to distant places (e.g. when a ġaturdasapûrvin goes to the Kêvalin to clear up some doubt); (5) vaikriya, a subtile body which can be changed at will. All these 'bodies,' except the first, are what in common language are called spirits or souls. We have here a Hindu counterpart of the belief in the plurality of souls shared that everything cannot everywhere come into existence¹, nor that it can. (10)

From these alternatives, &c. (11)

Do not maintain that the world does not exist, maintain that it exists. (12)

Do not maintain that Gīva and Agīva do not exist, but that they exist. (13)

Do not maintain that Dharma and Adharma do not exist, but that they exist. (14)

Do not maintain that bondage and liberation do not exist, but that they exist. (15)

Do not maintain that virtue and vice² do not exist, but that they exist. (16)

Do not maintain that Āsrava and the stoppage of Āsrava do not exist, but that they exist. (17)

Do not maintain that the experiencing of the effect, and the annihilation of Karman do not exist, but that they exist. (18)

Do not maintain that activity and non-activity do not exist, but that they exist. (19)

by many ancient and modern nations. Compare the following verses quoted in Tylor, Origin of Culture, Chapter XI:

‘Bis duo sunt homini, manes, caro, spiritus, umbra:

Quattuor haec loci bis duo suscipiunt.

Terra tegit carnem, tumulum circumvolat umbra

Manes Orcus habet, spiritus astra petit.’

I am inclined to believe that the idea of the âhâraka and vaikriya sarîras is developed from the popular belief that the soul in sleep leaves the body and travels far away. Compare also the Sâṅkhya terms vaikṛita and taigasa, Garbe, Die Sâṅkhya-Philosophie, pp. 236, 249.

¹ According to the commentator this is said against the Sâṅkhya philosophy, for as everything is an effect of Prakṛiti, and Prakṛiti is present everywhere, everything may come into existence everywhere.

² Puṇyam and pāpam. The one is the good Karman (subham karmapudgalam); the other, the bad.

Do not maintain that anger and pride do not exist, but that they exist. (20)

Do not maintain that deceit and greed do not exist, but that they exist. (21)

Do not maintain that love and hate do not exist, but that they exist. (22)

Do not maintain that the fourfold Circle of Births does not exist, but that it exists. (23)

Do not maintain that there are no gods and goddesses, but that there are. (24)

Do not maintain that there is no such thing as perfection and non-perfection, but that there is such a thing. (25)

Do not maintain that there is no place exclusively reserved for those who attain to perfection, but that there is such¹. (26)

Do not maintain that there are no pious and wicked men, but that there are. (27)

Do not maintain that there is no such thing as good and bad, but that there is good and bad. (28)

The theory will not work that (a man is always) good, or (always) bad. The wrongly instructed Sramanas do not comprehend the (soul's) bondage² (through Karman). (29)

(Do not assert) that everything is imperishable, or full of pains, nor that criminals should be put to death or not be put to death; one should not speak in this way. (30)

Do not assert that those men are well-behaved monks who lead a pure life, and that those others lead an impure life. (31)

¹ See Uttarādhyaṇa XXXVI, 62, 63, p. 212.

² Vêra = vaira, explained karmabandha.

A wise monk should not say: v this householder) or we do not improve his chances for final libera

A monk should conform himself to taught by the Ginas, and wander about final liberation. (33)

Thus I say.

SIXTH LECTURE,

CALLED

ÂRDRAKA².

Gôśāla.

‘Listen, Ârdra³, to what (Mahāvīra) has done.
At first he wandered about as a single monk; but now he has surrounded himself by many monks, and teaches every one of them the Law at length. (1)

¹ Santimaggam ka vûhaê = sântimârgam ka vrimhayêt.

² The commentators relate a romantic story about prince Ârdra³, which need not be repeated here. Suffice it to say that he became monk, and after many adventures held the disputation which forms the subject of our lecture. After having vanquished his opponents, he was about to join Mahāvīra, when a newly-tamed elephant broke his chain, rushed on him, but just in front of him went down on his knees and paid him reverence. King Srê-nika witnessed this scene, and wondered how the elephant could have broken his chains. Ârdra³ replied that it was still more strange that a man could break the fetters which worldliness had fastened upon him. The whole story must be very old, for it is epitomised in ten gâthâs by the author of the Niryukti.—The names of the opponents not stated in the text of the verses are supplied from the commentaries.

³ This name is spelt either Ârdra or Ârdra³, Adda in Prâkrî.

‘The inconstant man has decided upon this mode of life¹: to stand up in a crowd of men, surrounded by monks, and to teach his doctrines for the benefit of many people. Therefore his former and his present life are not of a piece. (2)

‘Either to live as a single mendicant (was right conduct) or his present life; therefore both do not agree with each other.’

Ârdraka.

“His past, present, and future lives agree with each other; for he is really always single and alone (though he be now surrounded by many followers). (3)

“For if a Sramana or Brâhmaṇa who causes peace and security, comprehends the nature of movable and immovable living beings and explains it in a crowd numbering thousands, he realises singleness, remaining in the same mental condition as before². (4)

“It is no sin to teach the Law, if (he who teaches it) is patient and resigned, subdues his senses, avoids bad speech, and uses virtuous speech. (5)

“He who (teaches) the great vows (of monks) and the five small vows (of the laity³), the five Âsraṇas and the stoppage of the Âsraṇas, and control, who avoids Karman in this blessed life of Sramanas, him I call a Sramana.” (6)

¹ According to the commentators, Gôśāla intimates that Mahāvīra had found it very inconvenient to live alone, because he was then exposed to many injuries; so he set up as a Tīrthakara.

² Tahaṭṭhe = tathârṭha. Ârṭhâ is here explained as equal to lêsyâ.

³ Anuvrata. They are a modification of the great vows, intended for the laity. See Bhandarkar's Report, p. 114.

Gôśāla.

(‘As your Law makes it no sin for Mahāvīra to surround himself by a crowd of disciples), so according to our Law an ascetic, who lives alone and single, commits no sin if he uses cold water, eats seeds, accepts things prepared for him, and has intercourse with women.’ (7)

Ārdraka.

“Know this : those who use cold water, eat seeds, accept things especially prepared for them, and have intercourse with women, are (no better than) householders, but they are no Sramanas. (8)

“If those who eat seeds, use (cold) water, and have intercourse with women, are admitted to be Sramanas, then householders too are Sramanas; for they do the same things¹. (9)

“Monks who eat seeds and use cold water, who beg alms as a means of living, will, though they leave their relations, be born again and again, and will not put an end to mundane existence.” (10)

Gôśāla.

‘In making this statement you blame all philosophers alike!’

Ārdraka.

“Every philosopher praises his own doctrines and makes them known. (11) “Sramanas and Brāhmanas blame one another when they teach (their doctrines). (The truth, they say,) is all on their side; there is none on that of the opponents. But we blame only the (wrong) doctrines and not at all (those who entertain them). (12)

¹ I.e. if the characteristic mark of a Sramana is to wander about without a companion, and to bear all sorts of hardship, then householders are included in this definition; for some of them also wander about without a companion and bear the same hardships.

“We do not detract from anybody because of his personal qualities; but we make known the path pointed out in our creed. I have been taught the supreme, right path by worthy, good men. (13)

“If a well-controlled man, afraid of injuring any movable or immovable living beings, above, below, or on earth, condemns (evil deeds), he does not at all blame (anybody) in this world.” (14)

Gôṣāla.

‘Out of fear your Śramaṇa will not stay in houses for travellers or in public garden-houses; for in such places he would meet with many clever people, with lower or nobler men, with talkative or silent ones. (15)

‘He will not stay there because he fears lest some monks, wise, well instructed, learned men, who are well versed in the sacred texts and their meaning, should put questions to him.’ (16)

Ārdraka.

“Doing nothing without a purpose, nor without consideration, neither on the behest of the king nor from fear of anybody, he answers questions or not (according to the circumstances); but he (answers) worthy people with a definite purpose (in his mind)¹. (17)

¹ As the commentators explain: he is actuated by the Karman, by virtue of which he has become a prophet (tīrthakaraṇāma-karman); and this Karman must take effect and so be annihilated.

“ He, the wise man, impartially teaches (the Law) whether he goes (to his pupils) or not ; because unworthy men have fallen from the true faith, he does not go to places (frequented by them).” (18)

Gôśāla.

‘As a merchant desirous of gain (shows) his wares and attracts a crowd to do business, in a similar way (acts) the Sramana Gñātriputra. This is what I think and calculate about it.’ (19)

Ādraka.

“(Mahāvīra) acquires no new (Karman), he annihilates the old, avoiding wrong opinions ; and thus the saviour said to others : Herein is contained the vow (leading to) Brahman (i. e. Mōksha) ; this is the gain which a Sramana is desirous of. Thus I say. (20)

“A merchant kills living beings and desires property ; not leaving his kinsmen, he attracts a crowd in order to do business. (21)

“Desiring riches and addicted to sensuality, merchants wander about to earn their living. But we (say) that they are passionately fond of pleasures, unworthy, and desiring the enjoyment of love. (22)

“They do not abstain from slaughter and the acquirement of property, they are in bondage and full of wickedness ; and their gain of which you spoke, will be the endless Circle of Births and pains manifold¹. (23)

“They do not always make profit, nor does it last

¹ Nêhâ or nêdhâ. According to Śīlāṅka it is = na iha : ‘not even here (do they find the profit they seek).’ I think it may be the Prākṛit of anêkadhâ. It may, however, stand for snêhâḥ, in which case the meaning would be : love’s (reward will be) pain.

for ever; they meet with both results (success and failure) in their quest of gain¹. The profit (of the teacher), however, has a beginning, but no end; the saviour and sage shares his profit (with others). (24)

“Him who kills no (living beings), who has compassion on all creatures, who is well grounded in the Law, and causes the truth of the Law to be known, him you would equal to those wicked men! This is the outcome of your folly.” (25)

A Buddhist².

‘If (a savage) thrusts a spit through the side of a granary³, mistaking it for a man; or through a gourd, mistaking it for a baby, and roasts it, he will be guilty of murder according to our views. (26)

‘If a savage⁴ puts a man on a spit and roasts him, mistaking him for a fragment of the granary; or a

¹ Vayanti te dō vi guṇê-dayammi = vraganti tē dvā vapi guṇāv udayê. The usual reading adopted by the commentators is guṇō for guṇê. They translate: vadanti tē dvau vigata-guṇō dayau bhavata iti: (the experts) say that both (kinds of profit) are without value and duration. It is obvious that this interpretation is wrong.

² Ādraka after having put down Gôśāla is met, on his way to Mahāvīra, by Buddhists who engage him in the following discussion.

³ Pinnāgapindī. The commentators explain pinnāga (= pin-yāka) by khala, and pindī by bhinnaka (?) or sakala. Sīlāṅka gives the following explanation. During a struggle with savage men (mlêkḥḥa) some one runs away and throws his cloak off on a granary. An enemy in pursuit of that man mistakes it for him and takes hold of it, together with the part of the granary.—This interpretation looks absurd; but it will appear not so if we remember that granaries are beehive-shaped reservoirs made of sun-baked mud or wattle and mud; compare Grierson, Bihār Peasant Life, p. 17.

⁴ Milakkhu = mlêkḥḥa.

baby, mistaking him for a gourd, he will not be guilty of murder according to our views. (27)

‘If anybody thrusts a spit through a man or a baby, mistaking him for a fragment of the granary, puts him on the fire, and roasts him, that will be a meal fit for Buddhas to break fast upon. (28)

‘Those who always feed two thousand worthy monks, acquire great merit¹ and become powerful gods in Arûpa (dhātu)².’ (29)

Âdraka.

“Well-controlled men cannot accept (your denial of) guilt incurred by (unintentionally) doing harm to living beings. It will cause error and no good to both who teach such doctrines and who believe them. (30)

“A man who knows the nature of movable and immovable living beings, above, below, and on earth, who is afraid of injuring them and abstains from wicked deeds, may speak and act (in accordance with our Law); he will not be guilty of any (sin). (31)

“It is impossible to mistake (a fragment of the granary) for a man; only an unworthy man can say it. How can (the idea of a man) be produced by a fragment of the granary? Even to utter this is an untruth. (32)

“Do not use such speech by means of which you do evil; for such speech is incompatible with virtues. No ordained (monk) should speak empty words³. (33)

¹ Punnakhandha = punyaskandha.

² Âroppa. This is apparently derived from Arûpa as rendered in the text. Arûpadhātu is the highest heaven of the Buddhists; compare Burnouf, Le Lotus de la Bonne Loi, p. 807.

³ Urâla = udâra, here explained nissâra, void of sense.

“Oh ! you have explored this subject ; you have thoroughly examined the consequences of acts¹ of living beings ; your (fame) reaches the Eastern and Western oceans ; you view (the universe as if) it stood on the palm of your hands ! (34)

“Thoroughly examining the consequences of acts of living beings, (our monks) have found out a pure way of sustaining life. It is a maxim² of the monks of our creed³, that nobody who lives by secret sins⁴, should lay down the Law. (35)

“A man who always feeds two thousand worthy monks, does not control himself, and will be blamed in this world like a man with bloody hands. (36)

“They kill a fattened sheep, and prepare food for the sake of a particular person ; they season the meat with salt and oil, and dress it with pepper. (37)

“You are irreligious, unworthy men, devoted to foolish pleasures, who say that partaking heartily of this meat you are not soiled by sin. (38)

“All who partake of such food, commit sins in their ignorance ; but the wise do nothing of the kind. Even to utter it is an untruth. (39)

“In compassion to all beings, the seers, the *Gñātriputras*⁵, avoid what is sinful ; afraid of it, they abstain from food especially prepared for them. (40)

“They abstain from wicked deeds, afraid of injuring living beings, and do no harm to any creature ; therefore they do not partake of such food. This is a maxim of the monks of our creed. (41)

¹ Anubhāe = anubhāga, explained karmavipāka.

² Anudharma.

³ Iha samyatânām, who control themselves in this (creed of the Gainas).

⁴ Khannapadôpagîvin.

⁵ I.e. the Gainas.

“(Having reached) this perfection¹ in the Law of the Nirgranthas and standing firm in it, one should live without deceit². The awakened sage who is endowed with all virtues thereby obtained very great fame.” (42)

A Vêdic Priest.

‘Those who always feed two thousand holy³ mendicants, acquire great merit and become gods. This is the teaching of the Vêda.’ (43)

Âdraka.

“He who always feeds two thousand holy cats⁴ (i.e. Brâhmanas), will have to endure great pains in hell, being surrounded by hungry (beasts). (44)

“He who despises the Law that enjoins compassion, and praises the Law that permits slaughter, and who feeds but a single unprincipled man, even if he be a king, will go to darkness⁵, and not to the gods.” (45)

A Vêdântin⁶.

‘Both of us follow (very much the same) Law; we stood firm in it, and shall do so in the time to come; (we believe that) virtue consists in good conduct, and that knowledge (is necessary for liberation); and with regard to the Circle of Births there is no difference between us. (46)

¹ Samâdhi.

² Anihê.

³ Snâtaka, cf. Manu XI, 1.

⁴ Kulâlâya = kulâta, explained mârgâra. Another explanation is: who live (âlâya) in houses.

⁵ Nisam, literally, night.

⁶ Silânka calls this opponent an Êkadantîn, and ascribes to him the views of the Sâṅkhya philosophy. But it is evident from the sequel that he is a Vêdântin, as the commentators admit in their comment on the next verse.

‘(But we assume) an invisible, great, eternal, imperishable, and indestructible Soul, who excels all other beings in every respect, as the moon excels the stars.’ (47)

Âdraka.

“(If there were but one Soul common to all beings) they could not be known (from one another), nor could they experience different lots; there would not be Brâhmanas, Kshattriyas, Vaisyas, and Sûdras¹, insects, birds, and snakes; all would be men and gods. (48)

“Those who do not know all things by Kêvala (knowledge), but who being ignorant teach a Law (of their own), are lost themselves, and work the ruin of others in this dreadful, boundless Circle of Births. (49)

“Those who know all things by the full Kêvala knowledge, and who practising meditation teach the whole Law, are themselves saved and save others. (50)

“You have, in your mind, made equal both those who lead a blameable life, and those who in this world practise right conduct. Friend, you are deluded.” (51)

A Hastitâpasa².

‘Every year we kill one big elephant with an arrow, and live upon it in order to spare the life of other animals.’ (52)

¹ Pessâ = prêshya, literally, servants or slaves.

² The Hastitâpasas are thus named from the fact that they kill an elephant and live upon its flesh for a whole year or for six months, as Sîlânka adds, explaining thus the words avi ya (api ka) after samvakkharêna. The Hastitâpasas are mentioned in a list of the different Tâpasas in the Aupapâtika Sûtra, ed. Leumann, § 74.

Ârdraka.

“If every year you kill but one animal without abstaining from sin, though you are not guilty of the slaughter of other creatures, there is little difference between you and a householder. (53)

“If a man kills every year but one animal, and lives (in other respects) as a Sramana, he is unworthy, and works his perdition. Such men will not become Kêvalins.” (54)

A (monk) who has achieved his religious perfection through the instruction of the Awakened One¹, and stands firm in it, who guards himself in the threefold way (i. e. with regard to thoughts, words, and acts), and who possesses the things requisite for crossing the immense ocean of existence, may preach the Law. (55)

Thus I say.

SEVENTH LECTURE,

CALLED

NÂLANDÂ.

At that time, at that period, there was a town of the name Râgagriha: it was rich, happy, thriving, &c.² Outside of Râgagriha, in a north-eastern

¹ Buddhassa ânâi.

² This ‘&c.’ refers to the typical description of towns. Our text contains only the first words of the description, but the Aupapâtika Sûtra, § 1, gives it at length.

direction, there was the suburb Nālandā ; it contained many hundreds of buildings, &c.¹ (1)

In that suburb Nālandā there was a householder called Lēpa ; he was prosperous, famous ; rich in high and large houses, beds, seats, vehicles, and chariots ; abounding in riches, gold, and silver ; possessed of useful and necessary things ; wasting plenty of food and drink ; owning many male and female slaves, cows, buffaloes, and sheep ; and inferior to nobody. (2)

This householder Lēpa, a follower of the Sramanas, comprehended (the doctrine of) living beings and things without life, (&c., all as in II, 2, 76, p. 382, down to the end of the paragraph). (3)

This householder Lēpa possessed, in a north-eastern direction from the suburb Nālandā, a bathing-hall, called *Sēshadravyā*² ; it contained many hundreds of pillars, was beautiful, &c. In a north-eastern direction from this bathing-hall Sēshadravyā, there was a park called Hastiyāma. (Description of the park³.) (4)

And there in some house the Venerable Gautama was staying. The venerable (man) was in the garden, and so was Udaka, the son of Pêdhâla, a Nirgrantha and follower of *Pârsva*⁴, of the Mêdârya Gôtra. He went there where the Venerable Gautama was, and said : ‘ O long-lived Gautama, I want to ask you about a point (of faith) ; O long-lived one,

¹ I cannot tell where the full description occurs.

² The name denotes: the rest of materials, i.e. the hall which was built with the materials not used (in building the house), the well-known ‘few remaining bricks.’

³ The text is given in the Aupapâtika Sûtra, § 3.

⁴ Compare the Twenty-second Lecture of the Uttarâdhyayana.

please explain it to me so as it has been taught (by the Tīrthakara).’ And the Venerable Gautama spoke thus to Udaka, the son of Pêdhâla : “Well, long-lived one, I shall see about it, when I have heard and understood (your question).” And Udaka, the son of Pêdhâla, spoke thus to the Venerable Gautama : (5)

‘O long-lived Gautama, there are Nirgrantha Sramanas, called Kumâraputras, who profess your creed ; they make a zealous ¹ householder, a follower of the Sramanas, renounce injury to movable beings except on the order (from an established authority), as the householder caused one of the captured thieves to be set free ². Those who make this renunciation, make a bad renunciation ; those who cause this renunciation to be made, cause a bad renunciation to be made ; in causing another to make this renunciation, they annul their own allegation ³. Why do I say this ? Beings belong to the Circle of Births ; though they be (now) immovable beings, they will (some time) become movable ones, or though they be (now) movable beings, they will become immovable ones ; when they leave the bodies of immovable beings, they will be born in bodies of movable ones, and when they leave the bodies of movable beings, they will be born in bodies of immovable ones. When they are born in bodies of immovable beings, it is no sin to kill them. (6)

¹ Uvasampanna.

² These words seem to refer to an apologue told by the commentator : King Ratnasêkhara of Ratnapura, once making a pleasure trip, issued an order that nobody should remain in the town. Six brothers disobeyed, were brought before the king, and sentenced to death. Their father in vain implored the king to spare them, or to spare five, four, three, two of his sons. At last the king consented to pardon the eldest son, at which the old father rejoiced.—The six sons are likened to the six classes of living beings. As a householder cannot altogether abstain from injuring them, as monks do, he is content to abstain from injuring movable beings or animals.

³ Viz. that by abstaining from slaughter of living beings they kill no living beings.

‘(But if they make him renounce) injury to creatures which are, for the time being, movable beings, except on the order (from an established authority)—as the householder caused one of the captured thieves to be set free—if they take this vow, those who make this renunciation, make a good renunciation; those who cause this renunciation to be made, cause a good renunciation to be made; in causing another to make this renunciation, they do not annul their own allegation. Though in this way¹ a correct expression is found, some (monks) from anger or greed cause the householder to make the renunciation (without the necessary restriction). Is not this our interpretation right? O long-lived Gautama, do you approve of it?’ (7)

And Gautama spoke thus to Udaka, the son of Pêdhâla: “O long-lived Udaka, we certainly do not approve of it. The Sramanas or Brâhmanas who say thus, speak thus, declare thus, and explain thus, do not speak as Sramanas or Nirgranthas, they speak noxious speech. They mislead laymen. They make void all vows undertaken for sparing particular living beings². Why do I say this? Beings belong to the Circle of Births; though they be (now) immovable beings, they will (some time) become movable ones, (&c., all as in § 6, down to) when they leave the bodies of movable beings, they will be born in the bodies of immovable ones. When they are born in the bodies of movable beings, it is a sin to kill them." (8)

¹ I.e. by specifying the movable beings as beings which are movable ones for the time being.

² E.g. if a man vows to kill no Brâhmana (and does not add the restriction ‘for the time being’), he may kill no man or animal whatever; for the soul of that man or animal may, in the past, have been embodied in a Brâhmana.

And Udaka, the son of Pêdhâla, spoke thus: 'Which beings do you call movable beings? movable ones or others?'

And Gautama spoke thus to Udaka, the son of Pêdhâla: "O long-lived Udaka, what you call beings which are, for the time being, movable ones, we call movable beings; and what we call movable beings, you call beings which are, for the time being, movable ones. Both expressions are equal, and mean the same thing. O long-lived one, why do you think it more correct to say: beings which are, for the time being, movable ones; and why do you think it incorrect to say: movable beings, that you censure the one expression, and applaud the other? This your interpretation is not right. (9)

"And the Venerable One has spoken thus: Some men there are who say: we cannot, submitting to the tonsure, renounce the life of a householder and enter the monastic state, but we shall gradually conform to the Gôtra (i. e. community of the monks). Accordingly they make known the limits¹, fix the limits, determine the limits (beyond which they will not go in the enjoyment of worldly goods); and renounce injury to movable beings, except on the order¹ (of an established authority)—as the householder caused one of the captured thieves to be set free. And this turns out to their benefit. (10)

¹ Literally, the number. A sample of such vows is given in the beginning of the Uvâsaga Dasâo, see Hoernle's edition, § 16 ff.

“Movable beings are called so, when they get this character² through the taking effect of the Karman relating to movable beings. But when their duration of life as movable beings comes to its close, the (soul), embodied in a movable being, leaves its life as such and becomes embodied in an immovable being. Immovable beings are called so, when they get this character through the taking effect of the Karman relating to immovable beings. But when their duration of life as an immovable being comes to its close, the (soul), embodied in an immovable being, leaves its life as such and takes again a new form of existence; they are (then) called³ animated beings, (animals) of large bodies, or of long life.” (11)

And Udaka, the son of Pêḍhāla, spoke thus to the Venerable Gautama: ‘Is there not a chance, that a follower of the Sramanas, though he has renounced slaughter of but one class of living beings, ceases altogether to injure any⁴? Why do

¹ Abhiyôga. Sîlāṅka enumerates four kinds of abhiyôga: gāṇa-, bala-, devatā-abhiyôga, and gurunigraha.

² Nāma, literally, name.

³ They are called (vuḥkanti = uḥyantê) is apparently equivalent with: they get the name (nāma); ‘name,’ however, means in Gāina and Bauddha terminology as much as ‘the nature of the thing.’ The words of the text, therefore, come to mean: ‘they become or are animated beings,’ &c.

⁴ The question discussed in the following paragraphs is whether, at some future time, all movable beings in the Samsāra might not die out, and none but immovable beings be left. This idea is combated at great length by Gautama.

I say this? Beings belong to the Circle of Births, though they be (now) immovable beings, they will (some time) become movable ones, and though they be movable beings, they will become immovable ones. When they leave the bodies of immovable beings, all are born in bodies of movable ones, and when they leave the bodies of movable beings, all will be born in bodies of immovable ones. When they are born in bodies of immovable beings, they may be killed ¹. (12)

And the Venerable Gautama spoke thus to Udaka, the son of Pêdhâla : “ O long-lived one, we ² do not admit what you say ; viz. that there is a chance that a follower of the Sramanas should cease to do injury to any kind of living beings. Why do we say this ? Beings belong to the Circle of Births, (&c., all as above, down to) when they are born in bodies of movable beings, it is a sin to kill them. They are called animated beings, (animals) of large bodies, or of long life. There are always a great many animate beings, (the slaughter of) which a follower of the Sramanas must renounce, there are none, (the slaughter of) which he need not renounce. If he ceases, or has done with, or has given up (injuring) the large class of movable beings, his renunciation is good. What you or somebody else says, that there is a chance of a layman's ceasing to do an injury altogether, by renouncing slaughter of one kind of beings; this interpretation of yours is not right." (13)

¹ The meaning is, that at some future time movable beings may have ceased to exist, since they are all born as immovable beings, and vice versâ. If the latter is the case, a layman, who abstains from killing animals, practically does injury to no being whatever ; if the former is the case, he cannot transgress his vow even if he would.

² The text has the Sanskrit word asmâkam, of which the commentator alleges that it was thus pronounced by all people in Magadha, compare note 2, p. 358.

The Venerable One¹ gave an illustration: "I put a question to the Nirgranthas: O long-lived ones, (suppose) there be some men who have made the following declaration: 'I shall not inflict punishment on those who, submitting to the tonsure, renounce the life of a householder and enter the monastic state; but I shall inflict punishment on those who lead a domestic life.' Some Sramana, who for four or five years, or for six or ten years—the period may be shorter or longer—has wandered about in the land, returns to domestic life. Now answer me: does the man break his word when he puts to death this (renegade) householder?" 'Certainly not!' "It is just the same with a follower of the Sramanas, who has renounced injury to movable beings, but not to immovable ones. If he kills immovable beings, he does not transgress his vow. This you acknowledge, O Nirgranthas, this you must acknowledge!" (14)

The Venerable One gave another illustration: "I put a question to the Nirgranthas. O long-lived Nirgranthas, (suppose) there be householders or sons of householders, born in respectable families, who come to you for instruction in the Law. Ought they to be instructed in the Law?" 'Yes, they should.' "When they have learned and understood this Law, will they say: this creed of the Nirgranthas is true, supreme, excellent, full of virtues, right, pure, it removes doubts, it is the road to perfection, liberation, Nirvāṇa; it is free from error and doubts, it is the road of those who are free from all misery; those who adopt it will reach perfection, (&c., all down to) put an end to all misery; exerting ourselves we shall control ourselves with regard to all kinds of living beings.—Will they speak thus?" 'Yes.' "Should such men be admitted to the order?" 'Yes, they should.' "Should such men be instructed in the discipline and kept to attend to religious instruction?" 'Yes, they should.' "Do they renounce injury to every living being?" 'Yes, they do.' "Now (suppose) one of these men who lead such a life, after wandering about in the land for four or five years, or for six or ten years—the period may be shorter or longer—returns to domestic life. Will this man (still) abstain from doing injury to every living being?" 'No.' "The same man¹ who at first (as a householder) had not renounced injury to every living being, who afterwards has renounced, and who now does not renounce injury to every living being, did at first not control himself, did so afterwards, and does not so now. As long as he does not control himself, he does not renounce injury to every living being². This you acknowledge, O Nirgranthas, this you must acknowledge!" (15)

¹ Gautama.

The Venerable One gave (another) illustration: "I put a question to the Nirgranthas. O long-lived

¹ Sê gê sê gîvê, literally, his soul.

² Here the last sentence but one of the preceding paragraph ought to be repeated. But there is no trace of it in my MSS. or the commentary.

Nirgranthas, (suppose) there be monks or nuns of other sects, who come to you for instruction in the Law, (all as before, down to) attend to religious instruction." 'Yes, they should.' "Is it lawful to eat with such men?" 'Yes, it is.' "Now (suppose) some of these people who lead such a life, (&c., all as before, down to) return to domestic life. Is it lawful to eat with them then?" 'No, it is not¹.' "The same man with whom to eat was not lawful at first, was lawful afterwards, and is not lawful now, was no Sramana at first, was a Sramana afterwards, and is no Sramana now. It is not lawful for Nirgrantha Sramanas to eat together with him. This you acknowledge, O Nirgranthas; this you must acknowledge!" (16)

And the Venerable One spoke thus: "There are some followers of the Sramanas, who have made this declaration: we cannot, submitting to the tonsure, renounce the life of a householder and enter the monastic state, but we shall strictly observe the Pôsaḥa on the fourteenth and the eighth days of each fortnight, (on the new-moon, and) full-moon days, we renounce gross ill-usage of living beings, grossly lying speech, gross taking of things not given, (unlawful) sexual intercourse, (unlimited) appropriation of property; we shall set limits to our desires in the two forms and in the three ways². They will also make the following renunciation: 'neither do nor cause anything (sinful) to be done for my sake.'

¹ Nô in=a//hê sama//hê; I think the Sanskrit of this phrase, which is not explained by the commentator, is nô ayam arthaḥ samarthaḥ.

² Viz. 'I will not do it, nor cause it to be done, either in thought or in word or in deed.' Compare Uvâsaga Dasão, Hoernle's edition, § 13 ff.

Having (on Pôsa-ha-days) abstained from eating, drinking, bathing, and using beds or chairs, may they, on their decease, be said to make a (righteous) end of their life?" 'Certainly, they do make such an end of their life.' "They are called animated beings, (&c., all as in § 13, down to) this interpretation of yours is not right." (17)

The Venerable One spoke thus: "There are some followers of the Sramanas, who have made this declaration: we cannot, submitting to the tonsure, renounce the life of a householder and enter the monastic state; we also cannot strictly observe the Pôsa-ha on the fourteenth and the eighth days of each fortnight, (on the days of new-moon) and full-moon; but while we are preparing ourselves for death by fasting¹, we shall abstain from food and drink without longing for the end; we shall renounce all ill-usage of living beings, all lying speech, all taking of things not given, all sexual intercourse, all property, (saying): 'neither do nor cause anything (sinful) to be done for my sake.' (All the rest as in the preceding paragraph.)" (18)

And the Venerable One spoke thus: "There are some men of great desires, great undertakings, &c.², who do not abstain from all ill-usage of living beings, (&c., down to) from all property. During the whole time, from their taking the vows of a follower of the Sramanas till their death, they abstain from injury to living beings. Then they die; in their next existence they experience their Karman, and receive an evil lot. (The rest as before.)" (19)

And the Venerable One spoke thus: "There are some men of no desires, no undertakings, who abstain from all ill-usage of living beings, (&c., down to) from all property. During the whole time, from their taking the vows of a follower of the Sramanas till their death, they abstain from injury to living beings. Then they die; in their next existence they experience their Karman, and receive a happy lot. (The rest as before.)" (20)

¹ Samlêhanaghûsanâghûsiyâ.

² See II, 2, 61.

And the Venerable One spoke thus: "There are some men of few desires, few undertakings, who abstain from ill-usage of one sort of living beings, (&c., down to) from one sort of property. During the whole time, (&c., the rest as in the last paragraph)." (21)

And the Venerable One spoke thus: "There are some men who live in woods, in huts, near villages, or practise some secret rites, who are not well controlled, do not well abstain (from slaying) all sorts of living beings. They employ speech that is true and untrue at the same time: do not beat me, beat others, (&c., all as in II, 2, 21, down to) having died at their allotted time, they are born in some places inhabited by *Asuras*¹ and evil-doers. And when they are released therefrom, they will be born deaf and dumb or blind. They are called animated beings, (&c., the rest as in § 13)." (22)

And the Venerable One spoke thus: "There are some beings of a long life, which a follower of the Sramanas abstains from injuring through life. They die after him. They are called animated beings, (&c., the rest as in § 13)." (23)

¹ Âsuriya. Sīlāṅka here offers a second explanation of this word, viz. asūrya, where no sun ever shines.

(The two next paragraphs treat in exactly the same way of beings of an equally long life, which die simultaneously with him, and of beings of a short life, which die before him.) (24, 25)

And the Venerable One spoke thus: "There are some followers of the Sramanas, who have made this declaration: we are not able to strictly observe the Pôsa-days, but we are able, when preparing ourselves for death by fasting, to abstain from food and drink without longing for the end. The vow of such a man is the *Sâmâyika Dêśâvakâsika*¹: (he declares) in the morning: (I shall travel) only thus or thus far in an eastern, western, southern, northern direction. He renounces injury to all beings: I shall cause peace and security to all sorts of living beings.

"Within those (limits) the movable living beings, which the follower of the Sramanas abstains from injuring till his death, will leave their life, and will then be born, within the same limits, as movable living beings, which the follower of the Sramanas abstains from injuring till his death. With regard to them the follower of the Sramanas has made a good renunciation. They are called animated beings, (&c., the rest as before). (26)

"The movable beings within those limits, &c.², will,

¹ The Dêśâvakâsika 'consists in drawing closer or contracting every day the limits already laid down (in accordance with the Gunavratas) to the range of one's travels,' &c. The Gunavrata referred to is the Digvirati, i.e. 'to lay down a limit beyond which one shall not travel in the different directions, or a limit as to the countries one shall visit for the acquisition of wealth.' From Bhandarkar Report, p. 114 f. The explanation in the commentary materially agrees with the above.

² The original repeats the phrases of the preceding paragraph.

after their death, be born within the same limits as immovable beings, from injuring which without a purpose the follower of the Sramanas abstains till death, but not with a purpose¹, (&c., the rest as before). (27)

“The movable beings within those limits, &c., will, after their death, be born, beyond those limits, as movable or immovable beings, (&c., the rest as before). (28)

“The immovable beings within those limits, &c., will, after their death, be born, within the same limits, as movable beings, (&c., the rest as before). (29)

“The immovable beings within those limits, &c., will, after their death, be born, within the same limits, as immovable beings, (&c., the rest as before). (30)

“The immovable beings within those limits, &c., will, after their death, be born, beyond those limits, as immovable beings, (&c., the rest as before). (31)

“The movable and immovable beings beyond those limits, &c., will, after their death, be born, within those limits, as movable beings, (&c., the rest as before). (32)

“The movable and immovable beings beyond those limits, &c., will, after their death, be born, within those limits, as immovable beings, (&c., the rest as before). (33)

“The movable and immovable beings beyond those limits, &c., will, after their death, be born, beyond

I abridge them as far as possible, and give the full text only where it differs from that of § 26.

¹ This clause comes always after the words ‘immovable beings’ down to § 34.

those limits, as movable and immovable beings, (&c. the rest as before)." (34)

The Venerable One spoke thus : " It has never happened, it does not happen, nor will it ever happen, that all movable beings will die out and become immovable ones, nor that all immovable beings die out and become movable ones. Since movable and immovable beings never die out, there is no chance, as you or somebody else say, that a layman ceases to do injury altogether by renouncing slaughter of one kind of beings ; this interpretation of yours is not right." (35)

And the Venerable One spoke thus : " If (a man) who has been instructed in right knowledge, faith, and conduct for the avoidance of sins, blames a (righteous) Sramana or Brâhmana though he is well disposed towards them, he effects the loss of his merit for another world ; but if he does not blame them, he heightens the purity of his merit for another world."

On this Udaka, the son of Pêdhâla, took no further notice of the Venerable Gautama and was about to return in the direction in which he had come. (36)

And the Venerable One spoke thus : " O long-lived Udaka, he who has learned from a Sramana or Brâhmana whomsoever even one noble religious truth, and considers himself thereby furthered with regard to his peace and happiness, will respect, acknowledge, praise, salute, honour, reverence, and worship him even as a blessed and holy deity or sacred shrine." (37)

Then Udaka, the son of Pêdhâla, spoke thus to the Venerable Gautama : ' As I had not before known, heard, understood, and comprehended these words, I did not believe in the meaning (of your words), which I had never perceived nor heard nor understood nor appreciated, and which were never explained nor defined nor delivered nor made clear to me, nor pondered over by me. But now, Reverend Sir, as I do know, &c., these words which I have perceived, heard, &c., I believe, accept, and approve of their meaning. It is just as you say!' (38)

Then the Venerable Gautama spoke thus to Udaka, the son of Pêdhâla: "Believe it, sir; accept it, sir; approve of it, sir; it is just as we have said." Then Udaka, the son of Pêdhâla, spoke thus to the Venerable Gautama: 'I desire, Reverend Sir, in your presence to pass from the creed which enjoins four vows¹, to the creed which enjoins the five great vows and the Pratikramana².' (39)

Then the Venerable Gautama went with Udaka, the son of Pêdhâla, to the Venerable Ascetic Mahāvīra. Then Udaka, the son of Pêdhâla, solemnly circumambulated the Venerable Ascetic Mahāvīra three times from the left to the right, and having done so he praised and worshipped him, and then he spoke thus: 'I desire, Reverend Sir, in your presence to pass from the creed which enjoins four vows, to the creed which enjoins the five great vows and the Pratikramana. May it so please you, beloved of the gods, do not deny me!' Then, in the presence of the Venerable Ascetic Mahāvīra, Udaka, the son of Pêdhāla, passed from the creed which enjoins four vows, to the creed which enjoins the five great vows and the Pratikramana. (40)

¹ See above, p. 121, note 2. In this way the creed of Pârsva is characterised in contradistinction to that of Mahāvīra.

² 'Pratikramana is the expiation of sins . . . by means of Nindana Garhana, Âlôkanâ, and other processes. Nindana is condemning the sinful act or repenting of it to oneself; Garhana is doing the same before a Guru; and Âlôkanâ is making a confession of it to the Guru.' Bhandarkar, Report, p. 9, note ‡.

Thus I say.

INDEX OF NAMES AND SUBJECTS.

- Abhayadêva, page 346 note 1.
 Activity, kinds of, 356 f.
 Agita, 85 n 2.
 Âgîvika, 267 n 1.
 Agñānavāda, 315.
 Agñānavādin, 83 n 2, 291.
 Agñānikavāda, 385.
 Agnikumâra (Bhavanavâsin), 225.
 Âgnîvîkha, 87 n 4.
 Âhâraka body, 406, n 3.
 Âhuka, 113 n 2.
 Aikshvâka, 86.
 Airāvata, Indra's elephant, 290.
 Âkârāṅga, 345, 351 n 2, 353 n 2, 354 n 2, 357 n, 358 n 2.
 Akarmabhūmi, 225, 393.
 Akriyāvāda, 315, 385.
 Akriyāvādin, 83 n 2, 291, 309, 316.
 Âlyuta (Kalpa), 226, 228.
 Ânata (Kalpa), 226, 228.
 Andhakavriṣṭi, 118.
 Âṅgavidyâ, 70 n 2.
 Animals, aquatic, 223.
 — terrestrial, 223.
 — winged, 224.
 Âṅkura, 41.
 Anuttara (gods), 227, 228, 291 n 1.
 Apabhramsa, 114 n 2.
 Aparâgita (Anuttara), 227.
 Ara, a Tirthakara, 85 n 5, 86.
 Âraṇa (Kalpa), 226, 228.
 Ardhavaitâlî, an art, 366.
 Ârdraka, a Gaiṇa sage, 409 ff.
 Arishṭanemi, 112, 114 n 2, 115.
 Ârîpadhātu, a heaven of the Buddhists, 415.
 Ârya, 241.
 Âryâ metre, 271 n 2.
 Asana, 197.
 Âshâdâ, 143, 144.
 Âsila, a rishi, 268.
 Asita Dêvala, 269 n 1.
 Âsphôta-bower, 81.
 Astrology, 71 n 1.
 Asura, 34, 53, 250, 259, 318, 382.
 Asurakumâra (Bhavanavâsin), 225.
 Asûrya, a hell, 280.
 Âsvasêna, 85 n 4.
 Âsvayuga, a month, 143.
 Âsvina, a month, 143 n 1.
 Âtharvavî, incantations, 366 n 5.
 Audârîka body, 173, 406, n 3.
 Aupapâtika Sûtra, 132 n, 269 n 1, 384 n 1, 420 n 3.
 Avasarpinî, 17 n, 42 n 2, 200.
 Ayôdhya, 85 n 1, 2.
 Bâhuka, 268.
 Bala, a Kândâla, 50 n 1.
 Bala, king of Hastinâpura, 88 n 1.
 Balabhadra, a robber, 32 n.
 Balabhadra, a king, 88.
 Baladêva, 87 n 4.
 Balakôshṭha, 50 n 1.
 Balasrî, 88.
 Bali, 86 n 1.
 Bârhaspatya, 236 n 2.
 Bauddha, 236 n 2, 316 n 3.
 Beings, living, subdivision of, 210 ff.
 Benares, 50 n 1, 87 n 4, 136.
 Bhadrâ, mother of Maghavan, 85 n 3.
 Bhadrâ, daughter of king Kausalika, 50 n 1, 53.
 Bhâdrapada, a month, 143.
 Bhandarkar, R. G., 50 n 2, 69 n 1, 129 n 2, 155 n 4, 163 n 3, 165 n 2, 182 n 4, 327 n 3, 383 n 3, 431 n 1.
 Bharata, 85, n 1.
 Bharatavarsha, 85.
 Bhârunda, fabulous bird, 19, 378.
 Bhâshya, 134 n 3.
 Bhaumêyika (gods), 225.
 Bhavabhâvanâ, 69 n 1.
 Bhâvanâ, the twelve, 329 n 2.
 Bhavanapati, 202, 207 n, 225 ff.
 Bhavanavâsin = Bhaumêyika, 225.
 Bhôga, a clan, 71, n 2, 118 n 2, 339.
 Bhôgarâga, 118 n 2.

Bhrigu, (62), (65).
 Bhūta (Vyantara), 122 n 1, 226.
 Bimbisāra, 100 n 2.
 Brahmadatta, 57.
 Brahmaḷōka (Kalpa), 226, 227.
 Brahman, the creator, 244.
 Brahman, name of a palace, 58.
 Brāhmaṇa = Mahāvīra, 310.
 Brāhmaṇas, 418.
 Brahmarāga, 87 n 5.
 Brihatkalpa, 183 n 5.
 Buddha, 415.
 Buddhists, 414 f.
 Bukkaśa, 15.
 Chess, earliest mention of, 303 n 1.
 Dānava, 77, 121.
 Dantavakra, a king, 290.
 Daśā, 183.
 Daśāra, 113 n 4.
 Daśārha, 113, 115.
 Daśārṇa, 57, 87.
 Daśārnabhadra, 87 n 1.
 Daśārṇutaskandha, 183 n 5.
 Daśavaikālika, 116 n 2, 118 n 1.
 Dasyu, 43.
 Dattaka, 274 n 1.
 Death with one's will, 20.
 — against one's will, 20.
 Dēśāvakāśika vow, 431, n 1.
 Dēśikōsha, 92 n 3, 150 n 4.
 Dēvaka, 113 n 2.
 Dēvakī, 112, 113 n 2.
 Dēvala, a rishi, 268.
 Development, 153, 154.
 Dhana, 32 n.
 Dharanēndra, a nāga, 290.
 Dhūmābha hell, 221.
 Dhyāna, 179; ārtā°, raudra°, dharma°, sukla°, 200 n 1.
 Digambara, 69 n 1, 119 n 2, 267 n 1.
 Dōgundaga gods, 88, n 2, 108.
 Dōsha, udgama°, 131 n 7.
 — udpādanā°, 132 n.
 — grahaṇaishanā°, 133 n.
 — paribhōgaishanā°, 134 n.
 Drishṭivāda, 155, 345.
 Dropping of case affixes, 128 n 1.
 Dvāpara, a cast of dice, 256.
 Dvārakā, 113 n 2, 115.
 Dvārakāvati, 87 n 5.
 Dvimukha, 87.
 Dvipakumāra (Bhavanavāsin), 225.
 Dvipāyana, a rishi, 268.
 Dvipriṣṭha or Vipushṭi, 87 n 5.

Earth lives, 213.
 Ēkadanādin, 245 n 2, 417 n 6.
 Ēshanā-samiti, 27 n 1, 129.
 Fick, 85 n 2.
 Fire lives, 217.
 'Former' years, 16, 201.
 Fortnight, dark, 372, 377.
 Gambōsvāmin, (8), (73), 235.
 Gambō-tree, 48.
 Ganadhara, 149, n 1.
 Gānaya = Bauddhas, 238.
 Gandharva, 8, 77, 121, 226, 250, 318.
 Gaṅgā, 290.
 Ganges, 50 n 1.
 Garāsandha, 113 n 2.
 Garbe, 214 n, 406 n 3.
 Gardabhāli, 82, 83.
 Garga, 149.
 Garuḍa, 290; gods, 382.
 Gāthā, 182.
 Gauri, 50 n 1.
 Gautama, 112, 119 ff, 420 ff.
 Gautama, law-book, 67 n 1.
 Gaya, 86 n 3.
 Gayaghōsha, 136, 140, 141.
 Gayanta (Anuttara gods), 227.
 Generatio aequivoca, 224.
 Ghanīkakumāra (Bhavanavāsin), 225.
 Gīna, 45, 77.
 Gīrnār, 115 n 1.
 Gīvanmukti, 156 n 8.
 Gīvavikāravṛtti, 219 n 2.
 Gānamārga, 26 n 1.
 Gātādharmakathā, 182 n 7.
 Gātādhyaṇa, 182.
 Gātātri, a clan, 339.
 Gātārika, 256, 257.
 Gātātriputra, 27, 232, 239, 261, 287,
 289, 290, 413.
 Gātātriputras = Gainas, 416.
 Gōśāla, 245 n 2, 409 f.
 Gōtama Gōtra, 41 n 2, 83.
 Gōtra = church or order, 321, 327, 423.
 Graivēyaka (gods), 226, 228.
 Grierson, 277 n 5, 341 n 4.
 Gyēshibamūla, a month, 144.
 Gyōtishāṅga, 137, 141.
 Gyōtishka gods, 202, 207 n, 225 ff.
 Haravigaya, a poem, 303 n 1.
 Haribhadra, 116 n 2.
 Harikēśa, 50, n 1, 55.
 — Bala, 50.

- Harishêna, 86, n 2.
 Harivamsa, 117 n 1.
 Hastinâpura, 56, 60, 85 n 4, 86 n 1,
 87 n 1.
 Hastitâpasa, a division of Tâpasas,
 418, n 2.
 Hastiyâma, a park, 420.
 Hell, description of, 93 ff, 279 ff, 376.
 Hêmakandra, 69 n 1, 92 n 3, 95 n 1,
 118 n 4, 150 n 4.
 Himavant, mountains, 339.
 Hoernle, 383 n 4, 423 n 1, 428 n 2.
 Hüttemann, 29 n 2.
 Hypermetron, 339 n 1.
 Indra, 292.
 Indradatta, 32 n.
 Indrabhûti, 41 n 2.
 Îrâna (Kalpa), 226, 227.
 Ishatprâggbhâra, 212.
 Ishukâra, name of a town, 62;
 °ra, °ri, name of a king, 61, 62,
 68.
 Isuyâra = Ishukâra, 62 n 1.
 Îsvara, the creator, 244.
 Jackals in hell, 286.
 Jolly, 237 n 4.
 Jupiter, planet, 366.
 Kadambavâluka, river of hell, 94,
 280.
 Kailâsa, 40.
 Kaitra, a month, 143, n 1.
 Kakravâla, 239 n 1.
 Kakutsstha, 85 n 5.
 Kâkutsstha, 85 n 5.
 Kâlakûra, 77 n 1, 105.
 Kâlañgara, a hill, 57.
 Kali, a cast of dice, 256.
 Kâlidâsa, 115 n 3.
 Kalînga, 87.
 Kalpa Sûtra, 71 n 2, 100 n 4, 360 n 1, 371 n, 381 n 1.
 Kamalâvatî, 62.
 Kâmarâstra, 274 n 1.
 Kambôga, 47, 126.
 Kampâ, 108.
 Kâmpilya, 57, 80, 81, 86 n 2.
 Kamsa, 113 n 2, 118 n 2.
 Kândâla, 15, 50, n 1, 301.
 Kandraprabha, 214.
 Kanthaka, excellent horse, 47 n 2,
 126 n 1.
 Kapila, 31 n 1.
 Karaka, 237 n 4.
 Karakandu, 87.
 Karka, 58.
 Karmabhûmi, 225, 393.
 Kârmana body, 173, 406 n 3.
 Kârttika, a month, 143.
 Kârttikâyânuprêkshâ, 69 n 1, 182 n 4.
 Kârvâka, 236 n 4, 238 n 3.
 Kâsi, 57, 87.
 Kâsyapa, 8, 10, 15, 31 n 1, 138, 158,
 260 n 3, 265, 279, 288, 310,
 314.
 Kaurava, 339.
 Kausalika, 50 n 1, 53.
 Kaurâmbi, 32 n, 102.
 Kâyôtsarga, 55 n 2, 147, 148, 149,
 159, 164.
 Kêsara, park, 81.
 Kêsvava (Krishna), 112, 115.
 Kêsi, 119 ff.
 Kêvala, 152, 193.
 Kbaluka, 245 n 2.
 Kimpurusha (Vyantara), 226, 382.
 Kinnara, 77, 122, 226, 382.
 Kitra, 56 ff.
 Kitrà, 115.
 Kôshibaka park, 120.
 Krishna, 112 n 2, 113 n 2, 261 n 3.
 Krita, a cast of dice, 256.
 Kriyâvâda, 315, 319, 385.
 Kriyâvâdin, 83 n 2, 291, 309, 317,
 319 n 2.
 Kshamikavâdin, 83 n 2.
 Kshattriya, 418.
 Kubêra, 117 n 2.
 Kulâla, 68 n 1.
 Kulânî, 57.
 Kumâraputra, Gainas, 421.
 Kunthu, a Tirthakara, 85 n 5, 86.
 Kunthu, an insect, 15, 220.
 Kûrui, 134 n 3.
 Kuru, 62 n 1.
 Lantaka (Kalpa), 226, 227.
 Lavasaptama gods, 291.
 Lekhbaî, 321 n 3.
 Lêpa, a Gaina layman, 420 ff.
 Lêsyâ, 56 n 1, 181, 196 ff.
 Leumann, E., 29 n 2, 57 n, 58 n 1, 60 n 1, 2, 116 n 2, 118 n 1, 3,
 175 n 1, 179 n 2, 212 n 1, 269
 n 1, 339 n 1, 346 n 1, 373 n 4.
 Likhavi, 321, 339.
 Lôkâyatika, 342 n 1.
 Luke, 29 n 2.
 Madhyadêra, 268 n 1.

- Magadha, 106 f.
 Mâgha, a month, 115 n 1.
 Mâgha, the poet, 261 n 3.
 Maghavan, 85, n 3.
 Mahâbala, 88 n 1.
 Mahâhari, 86 n 2.
 Mahâpadma, 86, n 1.
 Mahâprâṇa heaven, 84.
 Mahârûkha (Kalpa), 226, 228.
 Mahâvaggâ, 83 n 2.
 Mahavîra, 8, 21, 41 n 2, 73.
 Mahendra mountain, 339.
 Mâhendra (Kalpa), 226, 227.
 Mahôraga (Vyantara), 226.
 Makara, 223.
 Malaya mountain, 339.
 Mallaki, 321 n 3.
 Manabparyâya, 152, 193.
 Mandara mountain, 49, 93, 339, 378.
 Mandîkukshi Kaitya, 100.
 Manôrama, 36, 37.
 Mâra, 244 n 5.
 Materialists, 339 f, 342 f.
 Mathurâ, 112 n 2, 113 n 2.
 Matter, 153.
 Matthew's gospel, 29 n 2, 300 n 1.
 Mâyâ, 244, n 5.
 Mēdârya Gôtra, 420.
 Mēghadûta, 115 n 3.
 Merchants, three, parable of, 29.
 Mēru, 111, 288.
 Mithilâ, 36.
 Mlêkka, 43, 241.
 Mōhaniya, 192, 193.
 Mrigâ, 88, 99.
 Mrigâputra, 88 f, 99.
 Mrîtagaṅgâ, 57.
 Munisuvrata, 86 n 1.
 Nâga gods, 382.
 Nâgakumâra (Bhavanavâsin), 225.
 Nâgârguṇîya, 254 n 1, 3, 388 n 1, 401 n 1.
 Naggati, 87.
 Nagnagit (87).
 Nalakûbara, 117, n 3.
 Nâlandâ, suburb of Râgagriha, 419 f.
 Nami, 35, 87, 268.
 Namukî, 86 n 1.
 Nandana, Indra's park, 100, 104, 290.
 Nandana, a Baladêva, 87 n 4.
 — (palace), 88.
 Nandana-parks on Mēru, 288.
 Nandanavana, park on Mēru, 288 n 5.
 Nârâyana, a rîshi, 268 n 3.
 Nâstika, 236 n 4.
 Nēmi, 115 n 3.
 Nîla, 49 n 1.
 Nirgrantha, 52, 74 ff, &c.
 Nishadha, a fabulous mountain, 289.
 Nûpurapandîtâ, 118 n 4.
 Occult sciences, 366.
 Padmagulma, 57.
 Padmôttara, 86 n 1.
 Pâlita, 108.
 Palyôpamâ, 84 n 1, 200 ff.
 Pandaka, park on Mēru, 288 n 5.
 Pandaya, a forest on Mēru, 288.
 Pânduka, see Pandaka.
 Pânini, 118 n 2.
 Pañkâbha hell, 221.
 Pañkâla, 60, 61, 87.
 Pârâra, a rîshi, 269.
 Parishaha (of 22 kinds), 9.
 Parîshishaparvan, 118 n 4.
 Pârsva, 119, 121, 420 ff.
 Pâsattha = pârsvastha, 270 n 1.
 Patañgali, 118 n 2.
 Paurushî, 142 n 1 ff.
 Pausha, a month, 143.
 Pēdbâla, father of Udaka, 420 ff.
 Phâlguna, 143.
 Pihunda, 108.
 Pisâka, 51 n 1, 225.
 Plants, 215.
 Pôsaha, 23, n 2, 428, 429, 431.
 Prakalpa, 183.
 Prâṇata (Kalpa), 226, 228.
 Prasênagit, 32 n.
 Pratikramana, 159, (163), 434, 435.
 Pratikramana Sûtra, 148, 149.
 Pratyêkabuddha, 35 n 2, 87 n 2.
 Pride, eight kinds of, 361 n 1.
 Puns, 26 n 3, 242 n 2, 170 n 3, 331 n 2.
 Purandara, 117.
 Purimâtala, 57.
 Pushrimârga, 269 n 3.
 Quality, 153.
 Râgagriha, 32 n, 86 n 3, 383, 419 f.
 Râgîmati (Râga°, Râgi°), 113.
 Raivatâka, 115, n 2, 116.
 Râkshasa, 77, 121, 226, 250, 318, 382.
 Râkshasî, 35 n 1.
 Râma (Baladêva), 112, 115.
 Râmagupta, a rîshi, 268.
 Râmâyana, 85 n 5, 144 n 2, 321 n 3.
 Râshtrakûta, 236 n 1.

- Rathanēmi, 112, 116, n 1, 117.
 Ratnābha hell, 221.
 Ratnākara, the poet, 303 n 1.
 Ratnaprabhā hell, 218 n 3.
 Ratnapura, a town, 421 n 2.
 Ratnaṛēkhara, a king, 421 n 2.
 Rishabha, 71 n 2, 85 n 1, 138, 249, 261 n 2.
 Rōhagupta, 245 n 2.
 Rōhini, 112.
 Rudradēva, 50 n 1.
 Ruṭaka, a fabulous mountain, 289.
 Rupee, 374.
 Rūpiṇī, 108.
 Sagara, 85, n 2.
 Sahadēvi, 85 n 4.
 Sahasrāra (Kalpa), 226, 228.
 Saiva, 245 n 2.
 Saivādhikārin, 237 n 4.
 Sakra = Indra, 36, 41, 87, 288.
 Śālavana, park on Mēru, 288 n 5.
 Śālmali-tree, 84, 104, 290.
 Sambhūta, 56 ff.
 Samudrapāla, 108.
 Samudravigaya, king of Srāvastī, 85 n 3.
 Samudravigaya, king of Rāgagriha, 86 n 3.
 Samudravigaya, king of Saurikapura, 112, 117.
 Sana, 197.
 Sanatkumāra, (60), 60 n 3, 85 n 4.
 Sanatkumāra (Kalpa), 226, 227.
 Saṅgaya, 80 ff.
 Saṅgivanī, a hell, 284.
 Sāṅkhyā, 237, 244 n 4, 316 n 3, 342 n 1.
 Santakshana, a hell, 281.
 Santāpanī, a caldron in hell, 284.
 Śānti, 85, n 5.
 Sankarābha hell, 221.
 Sarvārtha, a Vimāna, 211.
 Sarvārthasiddha (Anuttara gods), 227, 228.
 Saudharma (Kalpa), 226, 227, 291.
 Sauri, 112 n 2.
 Saurikapura, 112 n 2.
 Sauryapura, 112 n 2.
 Sauvira, 87.
 Sceptics, 21.
 Śēshadravyā, a bathing-hall, 420.
 Siddha, 8, 77, 183.
 Simile, 326, 338.
 Śirupāla, 261.
 Śirupālavadha, 115 n 1, 261 n 3.
 Sītā, a river, 49.
 Sītā, the highest heaven, 212.
 Sīvā, 112.
 Skandha, the five skandhas of the Buddhists, 238.
 Sōriyapura, 112 n 2.
 Souls, 153.
 Southern region, 372, 377.
 Srāvana, a month, 144.
 Srāvastī, 32 n, 85 n 3, 120.
 Srēṇika, 100 f, 409 n 1.
 Śrīṅkhalayamaka, 329 n 1.
 Story told, 383 n 1, 421 n 2.
 Subhaktandra, 69 n 1.
 Substance, 153.
 Sudarjanā, 48.
 Sudarsana = Mēru, 288, 289.
 Sudharman, (8), (73), 235.
 Śūdra, 301, 418.
 Sugrīva, a town, 88.
 Sumanasavana, park on Mēru, 288 n 5.
 Sunandā, 60 n 3.
 Śūnyavādins, Bauddhas, 317 n 1.
 Suparna, 68; gods, 290, 382.
 Śūra, 112 n 2.
 Sūrya Siddhānta, 218 n 3.
 Sutanu, 117 n 1.
 Sūtrakritāṅga, 182 n 6, 183.
 Suvarṇakumāra (Bhavanavāsin), 225.
 Suvrata, 86 n 1.
 Śvapāka, 50, 55, 57, 59.
 Svayambhū = Vishnu, 49, 290, 244, n 4.
 Svayamsambuddha, 32 n, 35 n 2, 36.
 Śvētāmbara, 69 n 1, 119 n 2.
 Syādvāda, 405 n 1.
 Syllogism, 402 n 1.
 Taigasa body, 172, 173, 406 n 3.
 Tamā hell, 221.
 Tamatamā hell, 221.
 Taṅkana, a hill tribe, 268.
 Tāpasa, 140, 418 n 2.
 Tārāgana, a rishi, 268.
 Tathāgata = tirthakara, 320, 332.
 Tattvārthādhigama Sūtra, 49 n 1.
 Time, 153.
 Tinduka grove, 50 n 1; a park, 120 f; tree, 51.
 Tīrtha, 165.
 Trailōkya Dīpikā, 49 n 1.
 Trairāsika, 245 n 2.
 Trēta, a cast of dice, 256.
 Tylor, 406 n 3.
 Udadhikumāra (Bhavanavāsin), 225.
 Udaka, follower of Pārśva, 420 ff.

- Udaya, 58.
 Udāyana, 87, n 2.
 Ugra, 71, n 2, 321, 339.
 Ugrasēna, 113 n 2, 118 n 2.
 Ukka, 58.
 Umāsvāti, 49 n 1, 152 n 1.
 Usuyāra = Ishukāra, 62 n 1.
 Uttarādhyayana, 232.
 Uvāsaga Dasāo, 23 n 2, 27 n 2, 71 n 1, 383 n 4, 384 n 1, 423 n 1,
 428 n 2.
 Vagravāluka, 94.
 Vaigayanta (Anuttara gods), 227.
 Vaikriya body, 406 n 3.
 Vaimānika, 202, 207 n, 225 ff.
 Vainayika, 83, 291, 316; °vāda, 385.
 Vaisākha, a month, 143.
 Vaisālī, 27, 261.
 Vaisālīka, 27 n 2.
 Vaisēshika, 64 n 2, 245 n 2.
 Vaisika, part of the Kāmarāstra,
 274 n 1.
 Vaisramana, 117, n 2.
 Vairavana, 117 n 2.
 Vairya, 301, 418.
 Vaitālī, an art, 366.
 Vaitālīka, a mountain in hell, 285.
 Vaitālīya, metre, 249 n 1.
 Vaitaranī, river of hell, 95 n 3, 104,
 270, 280.
 Vālukābha hell, 221.
 Varāha Mihira, 38 n 1, 70 n 2.
 Vardhamāna, 120 f, 290.
 Vāribhadraka, a subdivision of the Bhāgavatas, 294 n 3.
 Varṇaka, 339 n 1.
 Vasishṭība, law-book, 67 n 1.
 Vāsishṭī, (65), 66.
 Vastrakṭbēda, 70 n 2.
 Vāstuvidyā, 70 n 2.
 Vasudēva, 112 n 2.
 Vāsudēva, 48, 87 n 5, 113.
 Vātakumāra (Bhavanavāsin), 225.
 Vēda, 137.
 Vēdānta, 343 n 2.
 Vēdāntin, 237 n 1, 417.
 Vērudēva, name of Garuda, 290.
 Vēṇupālājika-lute, 276.
 Venus, planet, 366.
 Verse quoted, 4 n 4, 8 n 4, 24 n 3, 179 n 4, 269 n 3, 313 n 1,
 359 n 3.
 Vētāla, 105.
 Vidēha, 41, 87, 268.
 Vidyutkumāra (Bhavanavāsin), 225.
 Vigaya, a Tīrthakara, 87.
 Vigaya (Anuttara gods), 227, 228.
 Vigayaghōsha, 136, 140, 141.
 Vikrama, a poet, 115 n 3.
 Vimala, 88 n 1.
 Vimāna, 164.
 Vinayavāda, 315.
 Vishṇu, 49 n 2, 86 n 1, 244 n 5.
 Vishṇukumāra, 86 n 1.
 Vishṇu Purāṇa, 113 n 2, 117 n 1,
 118 n 2.
 Vishvaksēna, name of Krishna, 290.
 Vow of silence, 321.
 Vrishṇi, 114.
 Vukkasa, 301.
 Vyantara gods, 122 n 1, 202, 207 n, 225 ff.
 Vyāsa, 246 n 3.
 Vyatyaya; liṅga°, vakana°, 1 n 2.
 Vyavahāra Sūtra, 183 n 5.
 Water lives, 215.
 Yādava, 113 n 2.
 Yadu, 113 n 4.
 Yaksha, 16, 50 n 1, 51 ff, 77, 122,
 226, 382.
 Yamaka, 329 n 1.
 Yajā, two women, 32 n, 62.
 Yōga, 244 n 4, 343 n 2.

INDEX OF SANSKRIT AND PRÂKRIT WORDS OCCURRING IN THE TEXT AND THE NOTES.

- akarmatâ, page 161, (172).
 akalêvararêni, 45.
 akashâya-yathâkhyâta, 157.
 akasmât, used in Magadha, 358 n 3. akârana, 134 n.
 akukkuô, 110.
 akkôsa, 9.
 agandhana, 118 n 3.
 agnihôtra, 138.
 anka, 214.
 aṅga, 155, 345.
 aṅgavidyâ, 34.
 aṅgula, 143, n 2.
 akakkhu, 193 n 2.
 akakshurdarsana, 172 n 3.
 akêla, 9.
 akkbarâ, 370 n 1.
 akkbahim, 114 n 2.
 akkbirôdaya, 221.
 akkbîla, 221.
 akkbivêhaya, 221.
 agîva, 154, 207 n 3.
 aggbusire, 134 n 4.
 aggbôruha = adhyârôha, 390 n 3.
 agñânavâdin, 83 n 2.
 agbhaṅgbapatta, 321 n 1.
 attîya, 7 n 5.
 anâsiya = anasita, 286 n 1.
 anissa, 189 n 1.
 aniha = nirmâya, 417 n 2.
 anullaya, 219.
 anuvrata, 410 n 3.
 anusasammi, 151 n 1.
 atasî seed, 341.
 attagâmi = âptagâmin, 309 n 1.
 addhâsamaya, 208 n 1.
 adharma, 153, 207.
 adhikaranîkî, scil. kriyâ, 181 n 5.
 adhyavapûra, 132 n.
 adhyâhrîta, 132 n.
 anaṅgapravishṭa, 155 n 2.
 anantânubandha, 194 n 1. anasana, 175.
 anisrîshṭa, 132 n.
 anudharma, 416 n 2.
 anuparihârika, 157 n 3.
 anupavânta, 356 n 1.
 anuprêkshâ, 69 n 1, 159, (165).
 anubhâga = karmavipâka, 169 n 1, 281 n 2, 416 n 1.
 antara, 209 n 3.
 antarâya, 172, 193, 194, 195.
 andhiya, 221.
 annâna, 9.
 annâniya = agñânika, 315 n 4.
 aparikarma, 176 n 1.
 aparita, 133 n.
 appadîlêha, 168 n 5.
 appattiya = krôdha, 241.
 appâhastu, 338 n 4.
 apratibaddhatâ, 159, (166).
 apratyâkhyâna, 194 n 1.
 apramâna, 134 n.
 abhigama, 154.
 abhinibôdha, 152 n 1.
 abhinûma, 250 n 1.
 abhibhûyanâni = kêvalin, 287 n 3. abhiyôga, five kinds of, 424 n 1. abhyutthâna, 142.
 abhrapafala, 214.
 abhravâluka, 214.
 amalaka seed, 341.
 amûrta, 64 n 2.
 aya, 28 n 1.
 ayaurasî, 341 n 3.
 ayantrita (uncoined ?), 105 n 3.
 ara, 17 n.
 arani-wood, 341.
 arati, 9, 190 n 1.
 araim raim vâ, 308 n 1.

- arguna, a grass, 216 n 5.
 ardhapêra, 177, n 4.
 alasa, 219.
 alâbha, 9.
 alôka, 207 f.
 avaga = avakâ, an aquatic plant, 391.
 avagâha, 153 n 4.
 avadhi, 120, 152.
 avadhigñâna, 193.
 avamarâtrâ, 143.
 avamôdarika, 175.
 avirati, 184 n 3.
 avihiṃsita, 353 n 7.
 ashvâpada, chess? 303 n 1.
 asamkhakâla, 209 n 2.
 asamkhyêya, 200 ff.
 asuratvabhâvanâ, 230, 231.
 astikâya, 153 n 2, 155 n 4, 157 n 2.
 asmâkam (so pronounced in Ma-gadha), 425 n 2.
 assakanî (arvakarna), 217 n 4.
 ahâgada = yathâkrîta, 307 n 1.
 âkâmaga, 264 n 1.
 âkâra, 153 n 3.
 âkâmla, 230.
 âkârya, 179, n 4.
 âkkâbîdya, 132 n.
 âgtivikâ, 132 n.
 âgñâ, 154.
 ânâdbîya, 48 n 1.
 âdâna, 59 n 1, 248 n 2.
 âdâna-samiti, 129.
 âdhâkarmika, 131 n 7.
 âprikkbanâ, 142.
 âbhiniḃôdhika, 152, 193.
 âbhiyôgikabhâvanâ, 230, 231.
 âya, a plant, 391.
 âyatamgatvâpratyâgâta, 177, n 4.
 âyâma, 230 n 1.
 âyâmagâ, 72 n 2.
 âyushka, 165, n 2, 194, 195.
 âyubkarman, 192.
 ârambha, 135 n 7.
 ârusa = ârushya, 283 n 1.
 âroppa = arûpa, 415 n 2.
 ârgava, 160, (169).
 âlambanâ, 167 n 2.
 âlisanda, a plant, 374.
 âluya (âluka), 216, n 12.
 âlôkanâ, 158, (162).
 âvaranîya, 195.
 âvayikâ, 142.
 âvâtanâ, 184.
 ââlîka, a kind of snake, 394.
 ârama, 39.
 âsupanna = âsupragñâ, 279 n 2, 288 n 2.
 âsurakivvisiyâ, 246 n 2.
 âsuriya = asûrya, 430 n 1. âsrava, 81, 99, 194, &c. âhârapratyâkhyâna, 160, (167).
 ikkara, a reed, 357.
 iṅgâla, 134 n.
 iṅginîmarana, 176 n 1.
 ikkâkâra, 142.
 itthî, 9.
 itthîvêya, 162 n 4.
 itvara, 175.
 indagâiya, 220.
 iriyâvahiya, 364 n 2.
 îryâpathika, 364 n 2.
 îryâ-samiti, 129.
 ukkala, 220.
 ukkasa = mâna, 248 n 3.
 ukkâsa = mâna, 257 n 4.
 ukkâra-samiti, 130.
 utra, 295 n 1.
 utkalikâ, 218 n 1.
 utkuṅkana, 373 n 2.
 uttaraguna, 143, 144.
 utpalakusha, 276.
 utpâdanâ, 353 n 4.
 utsarpinî, 17 n, 42 n 2, 200.
 udaga, an aquatic plant? 391.
 udgama, 353 n 4.
 uddisha, 383 n 3.
 udbhinna, 132 n.
 unmiṣra, 132 n.
 unmiṣrita, 133 n.
 upadêsa, 154.
 upadhipratyâkhyâna, 160, (167).
 upabhôga, 194 n 2.
 upamâ, 19 n 2.
 upayukta, 130 n 3.
 upayôga, 153 n 6.
 upasânta, 356 n 1.
 upasântamôha, 155 n 1.
 upasampadâ, 142.
 upâdhyâya, 179 n 4.
 ullôva, 204 n 1.
 uvasampanna, 421 n 1.
 uvvêhaliya, a plant, 391.
 usina, 9.
 usîra, a perfume, 276.
 usu = ishu, 283 n 2.
 ussayana = mâna, 302 n 5.
 uhimgaliyâ, 221.

rigvī, 178 n 2.
rishi, 244.

ekatva, 154 n 1.
ekāgramanaśśannivēśanā, 159, (166).
ekēndriya, 42 n 1.
ēgatta, 208, 213 n 1.
ēgāyata = ēkakin, 286 n 2.
ēlamikṭṭba, a plant, 374.
ēshanā, 27 n 1, 129, 131 n 3, 178,
353 n 4.
ēsava, a plant, 391.
ēsiya, 301 n 2.

airyapathika, 172 n 5, 298 n 3, 364
n 2.

ôê = êkab, 275 n 3.
ôm, 140.
ôgādā, 135 n 2.
ôgāhanā, 211 n 1.
ôgha, 134 n 2.
ômāna = apamāna, 247 n 1.

aughika, 134 n 1.
auddēsika, 131 n 7.
aupagrahika, 134 n 1.

kaṅkana, 221.
kaṅkabhāniya, a plant, 391.
kaṅbahāra (kāshibahāra), 220.
kaṅbina, a plant, 357.
kaṇḍaka, tier, 288 n 3.
kaṇha, 217 (krishnakanda, n 1).
kandarpabhāvanā, 230, 231.
kandu, a plant, 391.
kapittha, 198.
kamār, 96 n 2.
karanaguna, 156 n 7.
karanagunārēdhī, 163 n 1.
karanasatya, 160, (169).
karnapittha, 381 n 2.
karmapatha, 83 n 2.
karvata, 176 n 7.
kalaṅkalibhāva, 387 n 2.
kalama, a plant, 374.
kalambuya = kadamba, 391.
kalpa, 16, 164.
kalpasthita, 157 n 3.
kashāyapratyākhyāna, 160, (167).
kasēruya = kavēru, 391.
kāū = kāpōta, 197 n 4.
kākinī, jewels, 366 n 4.
kākinī, a small coin, 28.
kāṅgika, 72 n 3.
kāmaduh, 104.

kāya, a plant, 391.
kāyaklēśa, 175.
kāyaguptatā, 160, (170).
kāyagupti, 130.
kāyasaṁmādhāranā, 160, (170).
kāyikī, scil. kriyā, 181 n 5.
kāṛshāpana, (28), 105.
kālapratikramana, 145, 147, 148.
kālasya pratyupēkshanā, 159, (164).
kāsha, 197.
kāsavaga = nāpita, 276 n 6.
kimpāka, 187.
kiriyaṭṭhāne, 355 n 2.
kilvishabhāvanā, 230, 231.
kukkuda, 221.
kukkaphanaka, 116 n 1.
kukkāka, a plant, 357. kudāmbaya, 216 n 16.
kuduvvaya, 215.
kunda-flowers, 197.
kumāra, 96 n 2.
kula, 179 n 4.
kulattha, a plant, 374.
kulala, 68 n 1.
kulālaya, kulāta, mārgāra, 417 n 4.
kuṣa, a grass, 357.
kuhana, a plant, 391.
kuhana, 216 n 8.
kuhāda, 96 n 1.
kuhēdaviggā, 105 n 5.
kūra, 391, 392.
kētana, 262 n 3.
kēyakandālī, 215.
kōṭṭa = kuṭayitvā, 285 n 4.
kotthala, 92.
kōdrava, a kind of grain, 359.
kōlasunaya, 94 n 3.
kriyā, 154, 181 n 5.
krīta, 132 n.
krōdhapinda, 133 n.
krōdhavigaya, 161, (171).
krōṣa, 212.
kshapakarēnī, 45 n 2.
kshamāpanā, 159, (164).
kshānti, 160, (169).
kshīnamōha, 155 n 1.

khaladāna, 369 n 1.
khalumka, 150 n 1.
khuruduga, 395 n 7.
khēra, 176 n 6.
khōra, an animal, 395.

gaṅkba, (324).
gana, 149, n 1, 179 n 4.
ganipidage, 345.

gantbiyasatta, 195 n 1.
 gandhana, 118 n 3.
 gandhabastin, 113 n 2.
 galigaddaha, 150 n 1.
 gavēshanā, 131 n 4.
 gānamganika, 79 n 1.
 gāthāshōḍasaka, 235 n 1.
 gārava, 98 n 1, 181 n 1.
 gāhā, 333 n 1.
 gilli, a swing, 373 n 3.
 gukkā, 216 n 1.
 guṇḍguka, 216 n 5.
 guṇa, 153 n 1.
 guṇavratā, 383.
 guṇasthāna, 155 n 1, 172 n 4.
 guptatā, vide manō°, vāg°, kāya°.
 gupti, 52, 98, 107, 129, 135, &c.
 gurusādharmikarurūshanā, 158, (162).
 gōkkāka, 145 n 3.
 gōtra, 193, 194, 195, 305, 322; =church, 321, 327, 423.
 gōmūtrika, 177, n 4.
 grahanaiṣhanā, 131 n 5, 133 n.
 grāmakanṭaka, 380 n 2.
 glāna, 179 n 4.

ghana (a wind), 218.
 gharakōilla = grīhakōkila, 395.
 ghātīn, 163 n 3.
 ghrānēndriyanigraha, 161, (171).

kakkhu, 193 n 2. •
 kakra, 41.
 kakravartin, 85 n 1.
 kakshurindriyanigraha, 161, (171).
 kakshurdarṣana, 172 n 3.
 katurindriya, 43.
 katurvimsatistava, 159, (163).
 kāndana, 214, 219.
 kāndālaka, a copper vessel, 277 n 4. karanaḥkaranapāraṇid, 355 n 1.
 kāriyā, 9.
 karmakātaka, 224 n 1.
 kāuppāya, an animal, 395.
 kāuppāya, 103 n 1.
 kāritrasampannatā, 160, (171).
 kīkītsā, 133 n.
 kūya, 28 n 2.
 kūrnayōga, 133 n.
 kēiē, 36 n 2.
 kāitya, 36 n 2, 100 n 3.
 kāityakarman, 242 n 3.

kbatṭaga, a plant, 391.
 kbadmastha, 155 n 1, 157.

kbandanā, 142.
 kbanna = māyā, 257 n 2.
 kbardita, 133 n.
 kbimāla, 150 n 4.
 kbēdōpasthāpanā, 157.
 kbōya, 341.

gagattbabhāsī, 320 n 2.
 gamaīya = yamakīya, 329.
 gamaīya, 249 n 1.
 gammayam, 332.
 galakānta, 214.
 galakāri, 221.
 galana = krōdha, 248 n 4.
 galla, 9.
 gāyanā, 9, 130 n 2.
 gālaga, 219.
 gāvai, 215.
 gihvēndriyanigraha, 161, (171).
 gīva, 154, 164 n 5, 207 n 3.
 gōha, an animal, 395.
 gñānasampannatā, 160, (170).
 gñānāvaranīya, 192.

gbanḡgbā = kalaha, 349 n 3.
 gbanḡgbā = māyā, 321 n 1.

dbaṅka, 95 n 2, 224, 324.

tagara-powder, 276.
 tanaphāsa, 9.
 tanahāra (trinahāra), 220.
 tathākāra, 142.
 tantavagāiyā, 221.
 tantuga, 13 n 2.
 tapas, 159, (166).
 tapasvin, 179 n 4.
 tammūyattā, tamōmūkatva, 363 n 3.
 tālaputa (a poison), 77.
 tālauda, 77 n 1.
 tiutriggā, 235 n 3.
 tippāmi, 346 n 1.
 tirikkha, 221 n 4.
 tumbaka, 197.
 tulā, 386 n 2.
 tuhaga, 217.
 tūryā, 371.
 trishnā, 185 n 3.
 trāyastriṃsa, 88 n 2.
 trikaṣuka, 198.
 trīndriya, 43.

thanḍilla = krōdha, 302 n 4.
 thilli, 373 n 4.
 thihūya, 216.

damsamasaya, 9.
 danda, 181 n 1.
 dandasamādāna, 356 n 3.
 darśanasampannatā, 160, (171).
 darśanāvaranīya, 192.
 daviê=dravya, 333 n 2.
 dāyaka, 133 n.
 digāṅkṣā, 9.
 duga, 220.
 duttara, 186 n 1.
 durūvasambhava, 395 n 6.
 duhamduha, 254 n 3.
 dūtakarman, 132 n.
 dēvauttē, 244 n 3.
 dēśavakāśika, 431 n 1.
 dēhati=paryati, 240 n 3.
 dōguṅkṣī, 25 n 4.
 dōlā, 221.
 dōsa, 56 n 2.
 dravya, 153 n 1.
 drōnamukha, 176 n 8.
 dvīndriya, 42.
 dharma, 153, 154, 207, &c.
 dharmakathā, 159, (166).
 dharmasaddhā, 158, (162).
 dhātṛīkarman, 132 n.
 dhīnkana, 221.
 dhuya, 257 n 6.
 dhūma, 134 n.
 dhruva, 32 n.
 nakshatra, 144.
 nagara, 176 n 3.
 nandāvatta, 221.
 nandīāvarta, 221 n 2.
 napumsakavēda, 162 n 4.
 naya, 155.
 nayuta, 29, n 1.
 nayutānga, 29 n 1.
 nāman, 193, 194, 195.
 nāya=gñāta, a simile, 338 n 1.
 niōgattī, 2, n 2, 4 n 2.
 nikshipta, 133 n.
 nigama, 176 n 4.
 nigraha, vide śrōtrēndriya°, lakshur-indriya°, ghrānēndriya°, gihvēnd-riya°, sparśanēndriya°.
 nidāna, 60 n 3, 162 n 3.
 nidrā, 193 n 2.
 nidrānidrā, 193 n 2.
 nindā, 158, (163).
 nimitta, 132 n.
 niyāgattī, 4 n 2.
 niyāgapadivanna, 386 n 1.
 niyuta, 29 n 1.

nirgarā, 14 n 1.
 nirvēda, 158, (161).
 nivvēhaliya, a plant, 391.
 nishpāva, a plant, 374.
 nisarga, 154.
 nisīhiyā, 9.
 nissāe=nirayā, 350 n 1.
 nīyā, 221.
 nūma=prakṣbanna, 265 n 1.
 nūma=māyā, 241 n 3, 248 n 5.
 naishēdhikī, 142.
 nō-kashāya, 172 n 1, 190 n 1.

paīlāiya, an animal, 395.
 pakshapinda, 4 n 1.
 pagāsa=krōdha, 257 n 5.
 pakṣaka, 357 n 4.
 pakṣāyāti=pratyāyāti, 361 n 4.
 paggava, 153 n 1, 178 n 1.
 paṅkakusīla, 80 n 2.
 paṅkasikha=kumāra, 294 n 1.
 paṅkēndriya, 43.
 parupataha, 371.
 parvana, 176 n 9.
 padikamittu kālāssa, 148 n 4.
 padilēhā, 79 n 1.
 panaga, an aquatic plant, 391.
 patāṅgavithikā, 177, n 4.
 pattahāra (patrahāra), 220.
 pada, 143, n 2.
 padakambala, 78 n 1.
 panaka, 217.
 pannā, 9.
 pappaka, a plant, 357.
 para, a grass, 357.
 paraka, a plant, 359.
 parakada, 6 n 2, 204 n 2.
 paramādharmika, 182 n 5.
 parāvartanā, 159, (165).
 parāvritti, 132 n.
 paritāpanikī, scil. kriyā, 181 n 5.
 pariprikkbanā, 159, (165).
 paribhōgaishanā, 131 n 6, 134 n. parihāraviuddhika, 157.
 parihārīka, 157 n 3.
 parīsaha, 9, 183 n 2.
 paryastikā, 3 n 2.
 paryāya, 153 n 1.
 paryāyadharma, 109.
 parvaga, 216 n 7.
 paliuṅkaga, 199 n 3.
 paliuṅkana=māyā, 302 n 2.
 palimantha, 302 n 6.
 palimokkha, 317 n 3.
 paliyantam, 251 n 1.
 paliyāga=paripāka, 393.

palyôpamâ, 84 n 1, 200 ff.
 pallî, 176 n 5.
 pallôya, 219.
 palhatthiyâ, 3 n 2.
 paramsa=lôbha, 257 n 3.
 pâulla, slippers, 277 n 6.
 pâkarâsanî=indragâla, 366 n 6.
 pâtâla=samudra, 264 n 2.
 pâdapôpagamana, 176 n 1.
 pâpa, 154.
 pâsattha=pârjvastha, 240 n 2, 270 n 1.
 piha, 270.
 pîtibimamsi, 362 n 1.
 pinnâgapindî, 414 n 3.
 pivâsâ, 9.
 pihita, 133 n.
 pîdhasappî=pîdhasarpin, 269 n 2.
 pukkhalatthibhaga, 392.
 pudbôsiya, 293 n 2, 318 n 2.
 punnakhandha, punyaskandha, 415 n 1.
 punya, 154.
 purâna purabhêdanî, 102 n 2, 451.
 pulaka, 214.
 puvvasamthuya, 7 n 2.
 puhutta, 208 n 5, 213 n 1, 223 n 3.
 pûtika, 132 n.
 pûtikarman, 312 n 1.
 pûyanâ, 270 n 4.
 pûyanâsaê, 330 n 2.
 pûrva, 16 n 1, 29 n 1.
 pûrvânga, 29 n 1.
 prîthaktva, 154 n 1.
 pêra, 177, n 4.
 pokkham, 102 n 1.
 pottiyâ, 221.
 pottham, 102 n 1.
 pôyagarâu=pôtagarâyû, 302 n 1.
 pollâ (pullâ), 105 n 2.
 prakîrma, 155.
 prakâlâ, 193 n 2.
 prakâlâprakâlâ, 193 n 2.
 pramîta, 178 n 3.
 pratiprikkhanâ, 142.
 pratirûpatâ, 160, (168).
 pratyâkhyâna, 159, (164), 194 n 1, 383.
 pratyâkhyâna, vide sambhôga°, upadhi°, âhâra°, kashâya°, yôga°, sarîra°, sahâya°, bhakta°, sadbhâva°.
 pradêsa, 194 n 4.
 pradêsâgra, 194 n 4.
 pramâna, 155.
 pravragyâ, 204.
 prâna, 164 n 5.
 prânâtipâtîkî kriyâ, 181 n 5. prâdubkarana, 132 n.

prâdvêshikî, scil. kriyâ, 181 n 5. prâbhritika, 132 n.
 prâmitya, 132 n.
 prâyaskitta, 179.
 prâyaskittakarana, 159, (164).
 prêmadvêshamithyâdarjanavigaya, 161, (172).
 phalagâvatattbi, 297 n 1.
 phâsuya, 6 n 1.
 phittai, 103 n 2.
 badara, (34).
 bandha, 154.
 bâhira, 155 n 2.
 bîga, 154.
 bîgôdaka, 267 n 3, 313 n 5.
 buddha, 2 n 1, 3 n 1, 5 n 2, 7 n 2, 45, 45 n 3 and 5, 84 n 3.
 bûhaê, 45 n 2.
 bôdhi, 34.
 brahmagupti, 182 n 2.
 brahman=môksha, 413.
 bhaktapratyâkhyâna, 160, (168),
 176 n 1.
 bhadantânam, 101 n 1.
 bhante, 338 n 2.
 bhayana=lôbha, 302 n 3.
 bhayantârô, 380 n 3.
 bhâvanâ, 69, 183 n 4.
 bhâvasatya, 160, (169).
 bhâshâ-samiti, 129.
 bhikshâkaryâ, 175.
 bhikshudharma, 182 n 3.
 bhugamôkaka, 214.
 bhûta, 164 n 5.
 bhôga, 194 n 3.
 manghu, 34.
 maggbattha=lôbha, 248 n 6.
 maramba, 176 n 10.
 mananâna, 152 n 2.
 mandalikâ, 218 n 2.
 madasthâna, 361 n 1.
 mati, 152 n 1.
 manabparyâya, 152, 193.
 manabamâdhâranâ, 160, (170). manô-guptatâ, 160, (169).
 manô-gupti, 130.
 mantradôsha, 133 n.
 maranakâla, 175.
 masâragalla, 214.
 masûra, a plant, 374.
 mahâpâlî, 84, n 1. mâitthâna=mâtristhâna (or mâya-sthâna?), 304 n 4.

mâivâhaya (mâtrivâhaka), 219.
 mânapinda, 133 n.
 mânavigaya, 161, (171).
 mâyavigaya, 161, (171).
 mârâdava, 160, (169).
 mâlâhrita, 132 n.
 mâlûga (mâlûka), 220.
 mâsha, 34, 374.
 mâhana, 252 n 1.
 miggati = mîyatê, 292 n 2.
 mithyâkâra, 142.
 milakkhu, mlêkka, 414 n 3, 4.
 mukti, 160, (169).
 muṅga grass, 340.
 mudga, a plant, 374.
 muni, 140.
 musundbî, 217.
 mûlakarman, 133 n.
 mûlaya, mûlaka, 215 n 15.
 mrigakakra, 366 n 7.
 mōksha, a tree, 357.
 mōhabbhâvanâ, 230, 232.
 mairēyaka, 198.
 maunapada, 253 n 2.
 mrakshita, 133 n.

yama, 136.
 Yama, 318.
 yamaka, 329.
 yamakīya, 249 n 1.
 yōga, 163 n 2, 184.
 yōgapinda, 133 n.
 yōgapratyâkhyâna, 160, (167).
 yōgasatya, 160 (169).

ragôharana, 78 n 1.
 rati, 190 n 1.
 rasaparitayâga, 175.
 râlaka, a plant, 359.
 rishraka, 197.
 rôga, 9.
 rogga, 95 n 1.
 rôhini, a fruit, 197.

lakshana, forespelling, 366.
 lagandasâinô, 379 n 2.
 lavâvasanki, 316 n 2.
 lâdha, 12 n 1, 306 n 3.
 lipta, 133 n.
 lêryâ, 56 n 1, 181, 196 ff.
 lôha = rûksha, samyama, 261 n 4.
 lôka, 207 f.
 lôdhra-powder, 276.
 lôbhapinda, 133 n.
 lôbhavigaya, 161, (172).

lôhinîhûya, 216.
 lôhitâksha, 214.

vakkasa-pulâga, 34.
 vaggakanda, 217 (vagrakanda, n 2).
 vanaspati, 217.
 vandana, 159, (163).
 vapanîka, 133 n.
 vartanâ, 153 n 5.
 vardhamâna grîha, 38 n 1.
 valaya, 216 n 6.
 vaha, 9.
 vâksamâdhârânâ, 160, (170).
 vâgguptatâ, 160 (170).
 vâggupti, 130.
 vâkanâ, 159, (165).
 vâsâniya, a plant, 391.
 vâsîkandanakappa, 99 n 1.
 vâsîmuha (°mukha), 219.
 viukkasa = mâna, 241 n 2.
 viôsagga, viussagga, viussagga, 179 n 1.
 vikatthâ, 181 n 2.
 vikahâ, 131 n 2.
 vigada, 10 n 3.
 viâitta, 221.
 viâittapattaya, 221.
 viâitrayanâsanâsēvanâ, 159, (166).
 vigaya, vide mâna°, mâya°, krô.lha°, lôbha°, prēma°.
 viggâ (vidvân), 84 n 2.
 vidyâpinda, 133 n.
 vinaya, 179.
 vinivartanâ, 159, (167).
 vinnavanâ = striyab, 258 n 1.
 vipratipanna, 367 n 2.
 vibhaṅga, 356 n 2.
 vibhagyavâda = syâdvâda, 327 n 3.
 viramana, 383.
 virati, 383 n 3.
 virali, 221.
 vilambaga, 293 n 2.
 visammēsi, 275 n 1.
 vistâra, 154.
 vissambhara, an animal, 395.
 vîzâ, 371.
 vîtarâgatâ, 160, (169).
 vîrâsana, 178.
 virya, 301 n 2.
 vusîmaô, 22 n 1.
 vetthi, 151 n 3.
 vêdanīya, 168 n 3, 192, 193, 195. vêdikâ, 145 n 5.
 vêyâliya, 249 n 1 ; °magga, 253 n 1.
 vêra = vaira, karmabandha, 408 n 2.
 vērattiya, 144.
 vêsâliya, 244 n 2.

vēsiya, 301 n 2.
vainayika, 83 n 2.
vaiyāvṛitya, 160, 179, 181 n 7.
vaishika, 353 n 8.
vyāṅgana, forespelling, 366.
vyavacāna, 159, (166).
vyutsarga, 179.

śaṅkita, 133 n.
śaṅkhānaka, 219.
śataghnī, 37.
śabala, 183 n 1.
śambhūkāvartta, 177, n 4.
śalya, 181 n 1.
śastraparīṇāmita, 353 n 6.
śastrātita, 353 n 5.
śirisha, 198.
śilavrata, 383.
śukladhyāna, 173 n 1, 205 n 1.
śaiksha, 179 n 4.
śailēṣī, 161, 171 n 2, 172.
śrāvaka, 108.
śruta, 120, 152, 193.
śrutasyārādhanā, 159, (166).
śrōtiṇḍriyanigraha, 161, (171).

śamyama, 159, (166).
śamyōganā, 134 n.
śamrambha, 135 n 5.
śamlīnatā, 175.
śamvara, 55, 73, n 2, 154.
śamvartaka, 218.
śamvêga, 158, (161).
śamstavapinda, 133 n.
śamhrita, 133 n.
śakkārapurakkāra, 9.
śaṅkaliyā = śrīṅkhala, 329 n 1.
śamkalpavikalpanā, 191 n 1.
śamkshêpa, 154.
śamkshigga, 43 n 1.
śamkshyêya, 43 n 1.
śaṅgha, 179 n 4.
śakṭha, a plant, 391.
śamgñā, 181 n 3.
śamgvalana, 194 n 1.
śadba, 29 n 3.
śattva, 164 n 5.
śatya, vide bhāva°, karana°, yoga°.
śadāvarī, 220.
śadbhāvapratyākhyāna, 160, (168).
śamtatim pappā, 208 n 3.
śandhipattē, 331 n 1.
śannivêra, 177 n 2.
śaparikarma, 176 n 1.
śapêhâê, 25.
śamaya, 200, n 3, 235 n 2.

śamara, 5 n 1.
śamavāya, 343 n 1.
śamāga, 177 n 3.
śamādhāraṇā, vide manô°, vāk°,
kāya°.
śamādhi, 185 n 1.
śamādhīyōga, 34 n 2.
śamārambha, 135 n 6.
śamāhi, 266 n 3, 306 n 1, 313 n 4, 324 n 2, 328 n 1, 384 n 1, 417
n 1.
śamita, 33.
śamiti, 52, 98, 129.
śamilā, 94 n 4.
śamudāniya, 80 n 1.
śamudānika, 354 n 1.
śamūsiya, 284 n 3.
śamōsarana = śamavasaraṇa, 315 n 2,
386 n 3.
śampannatā, vide gñāna°, darjana°,
kṣēritra°.
śamparāya, 157.
śambādha, 176 n 11.
śambhōga, 167 n 1.
śambhōgapratyākhyāna, 159, (167).
śammatta, 9.
śammūṛṭkṛbima, 223 n 1, 388 n 1.
śayōgin, 172 n 4.
śarīrapratyākhyāna, 160, (167).
śarpaṭṭabattrā, 216 n 8.
śarvagunasampūṛnatā, 160, (169).
śalilā, 68 n 1.
śavvappaga = lōbha, 241 n 1.
śavvāvanti, 336 n 1.
śassirilī, 215.
śahasamuiya, 154 n 2.
śahasambuddha, 35 n 2.
śahāya-pratyākhyāna, 160, (168).
śahiê, 251 n 4.
śāgarōpamā, 84 n 1.
śādhārmika, 179 n 4.
śāmāṭārī, 142.
śāmāyika, 157, 159, (163).
śāmudāyika, 134 n 1. śāmparāyika, 298 n 3, 353 n 1, 364
n 1.
śāsaka, 213.
śāhaya, 221.
śāṅgiridī, 221.
śiddhi, 246 n 1.
śirilī, 215.
śīya, 9.
śīyasandimāniya, a palankin, 373 n 5.
śīhakannī, 217.
śuuttara, 186 n 2.
śukhārāta, 159, (166).

sugḍsiya, sugbḍsiya, 257 n 6.	strivêda, 162 n 4, 274.
subhagasḍniya, a plant, 392.	sthavira, 73, 149, 179 n 4.
surâthâlaya, 369 n 1.	sthâpanâkarmika, 132 n.
sûkshma, 157.	snâtaka, 140, 417 n 3.
sûtra, 154.	sparśanêndriyanigraha, 161, (171).
sûtrana(ya), 217.	smṛiti = mati, 152 n 1.
sûryakânta, 214.	svâdhyâya, 159, (165).
seggâ, 9.
sêvâla, an aquatic plant, 391.	hamsa, a washerman, 278 n 2.
sêhiya, 239 n 3.	hamsagarbha, 214.
sômaṅgala, 219.	haritakâya, 216 n 10.
sôvariya = saukarika, 367 n 3.	harilî, 215.
sauvîra, 72 n 3.	hastipippalî, 198.
stavastutimaṅgala, 159, (164).	hâlâ, a word of abuse, 305 n 1.

CORRECTION.

Page 102, verse 18, the phrase purâna purabhêdanî has been wrongly translated: 'which is among towns what Indra is (among the gods);' it simply means: 'an old town.' For purabhêdanî is the Prâkrit equivalent of the Sanskrit and Pâli word putabhêdanam, town. Cancel note 2.

TRANSLITERATION OF ORIENTAL ALPHABETS ADOPTED FOR THE TRANSLATIONS
OF THE SACRED BOOKS OF THE EAST.

CONSONANTS.	MISSIONARY ALPHABET.				Sanskrit.	Zend.	Pehlvi.	Persian.	Arabic.	Hebrew.	Chinese.
	I Class.
	II Class.	III Class.
Gutturales.
1 Tenuis	k	...	...	...	क	𐬕	𐬕	𐬕	𐬕	𐬕	k
2 " aspirata	kh	...	...	...	ख	𐬖	𐬖	𐬖	𐬖	𐬖	kh
3 Media	g	...	...	...	ग	𐬗	𐬗	𐬗	𐬗	𐬗	...
4 " aspirata	gh	...	...	...	घ	𐬘	𐬘	𐬘	𐬘	𐬘	...
5 Gutturo-labialis	q	...	...	...	...	𐬙	𐬙	𐬙	𐬙	𐬙	...
6 Nasalis	h (ng)	...	...	...	ङ	𐬚	𐬚	𐬚	𐬚	𐬚	h, hs
7 Spiritus asper	h	...	...	...	ह	𐬛	𐬛	𐬛	𐬛	𐬛	...
8 " lenis	,	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
9 " asper faucalis	'h	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
10 " lenis faucalis	'h	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
11 " asper fricatus	...	'h	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
12 " lenis fricatus	...	'h	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
Gutturales modificatae (palatales, &c.)
13 Tenuis	...	k	...	...	ख	𐬛	𐬛	𐬛	𐬛	𐬛	k
14 " aspirata	...	kh	...	...	ख	𐬛	𐬛	𐬛	𐬛	𐬛	kh
15 Media	...	g	...	...	ग	𐬛	𐬛	𐬛	𐬛	𐬛	...
16 " aspirata	...	gh	...	...	घ	𐬛	𐬛	𐬛	𐬛	𐬛	...
17 " Nasalis	...	ḡ	...	...	ङ	𐬛	𐬛	𐬛	𐬛	𐬛	...

CONSONANTS (continued).	MISSIONARY ALPHABET.			Sanskrit.	Zend.	Pehlevi.	Persian.	Arabic.	Hebrew.	Chinese.
	I Class.	II Class.	III Class.
18 Semivocalis	y			य	𐬶 𐬷 𐬸 init.	𐬶	𐬶	𐬶	י	y
19 Spiritus asper		(y')
20 " lenis		(y)
21 " asper assibilatus		s		श	𐬰	𐬰	𐬰	𐬰		s
22 " lenis assibilatus		z				𐬱	𐬱	𐬱		z
Dentales.
23 Tenuis	t			त	𐬢	𐬢	𐬢	𐬢	ת	t
24 " aspirata	th			थ	𐬣	𐬣	𐬣	𐬣	ת	th
25 " assibilata			TH
26 Media	d			द	𐬤	𐬤	𐬤	𐬤
27 " aspirata	dh
28 " assibilata			DH
29 Nasalis	n			न	𐬥	𐬥	𐬥	𐬥	נ	n
30 Semivocalis	l			ल	𐬦	𐬦	𐬦	𐬦	ל	l
31 " mollis 1		l				𐬧	𐬧	𐬧
32 " mollis 2			L
33 Spiritus asper 1	s			स	𐬨	𐬨	𐬨	𐬨	ש	s
34 " asper 2			s (S)
35 " lenis	z					𐬩	𐬩	𐬩	ז	z
36 " asperimus 1			z (z)
37 " asperimus 2			z (z)

VOWELS.	MISSIONARY ALPHABET.			Sanskrit.	Zend.	Pehlvi.	Persian.	Arabic.	Hebrew.	Chinese.
	I Class.		II Class.
	III Class.		III Class.
1 Neutralis	0			...	...	...	...	...	...	...
2 Laryngo-palatalis	ē			...	...	...	...	...	...	...
3 " labialis	ō			...	...	...	...	...	...	...
4 Gutturalis brevis	a			...	...	...	...	...	...	...
5 " longa	ā		(a)	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
6 Palatalis brevis	i			...	...	...	...	...	...	...
7 " longa	ī		(i)	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
8 Dentalis brevis	ē			...	...	...	...	...	...	...
9 " longa	ā			...	...	...	...	...	...	...
10 Lingualis brevis	ri			...	...	...	...	...	...	...
11 " longa	rī			...	...	...	...	...	...	...
12 Labialis brevis	u			...	...	...	...	...	...	...
13 " longa	ū		(u)	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
14 Gutturo-palatalis brevis	e			...	...	...	...	...	...	...
15 " longa	ē (ai)		(e)	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
16 Diphthongus gutturo-palatalis	āi		(ai)	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
17 " "	ei (ēi)			...	...	...	...	...	...	...
18 " "	oi (ōu)			...	...	...	...	...	...	...
19 Gutturo-labialis brevis	o			...	...	...	...	...	...	...
20 " longa	ō (au)		(o)	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
21 Diphthongus gutturo-labialis	āu		(au)	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
22 " "	eu (ēu)			...	...	...	...	...	...	...
23 " "	ou (ōu)			...	...	...	...	...	...	...
24 Gutturalis fracta	ä			...	...	...	...	...	...	...
25 Palatalis fracta	ī			...	...	...	...	...	...	...
26 Labialis fracta	ü			...	...	...	...	...	...	...
27 Gutturo-labialis fracta	ö			...	...	...	...	...	...	...

SACRED BOOKS OF THE EAST

TRANSLATED BY

VARIOUS ORIENTAL SCHOLARS

AND EDITED BY

F. MAX MÜLLER.

 This Series is published with the sanction and co-operation of the Secretary of State for India in Council.

REPORT presented to the ACADEMIE DES INSCRIPTIONS, May 11, 1883, by M. ERNEST RENAN.

‘M. Renan présente trois nouveaux volumes de la grande collection des “Livres sacrés de l’Orient” (Sacred Books of the East), que dirige à Oxford, avec une si vaste érudition et une critique si sûre, le savant associé de l’Académie des Inscriptions, M. Max Müller. . . . La première série de ce beau recueil, composée de 24 volumes, est presque achevée. M. Max Müller se propose d’en publier une seconde, dont l’intérêt historique et religieux ne sera pas moindre. M. Max Müller a su se procurer la collaboration des savans les plus éminens d’Europe et d’Asie. L’Université d’Oxford, que cette grande publication honore au plus haut degré, doit tenir à continuer dans les plus larges proportions une œuvre aussi philosophiquement conçue que savamment exécutée.’

EXTRACT from the QUARTERLY REVIEW.

‘We rejoice to notice that a second series of these translations has been announced and has actually begun to appear. The stones, at least, out of which a stately edifice may hereafter arise, are here being brought together. Prof. Max Müller has deserved well of scientific history. Not a few minds owe to his enticing words their first attraction to this branch of study. But no work of his, not even the great edition of the Rig-Veda, can compare in importance or in usefulness with this English translation of the Sacred Books of the East, which has been devised by his foresight, successfully brought so far by his persuasive and organising power, and will, we trust, by the assistance of the distinguished scholars he has gathered round him, be carried in due time to a happy completion.’

Professor H. HARDY, Inaugural Lecture in the University of Freiburg, 1887.

‘Die allgemeine vergleichende Religionswissenschaft datirt von jenem grossartigen, in seiner Art einzig dastehenden Unternehmen, zu welchem auf Anregung Max Müllers im Jahre 1874 auf dem

internationalen Orientalistencongress in London der Grundstein gelegt worden war, die Übersetzung der heiligen Bücher des Ostens’ (the Sacred Books of the East).

The Hon. ALBERT S. G. CANNING, ‘Words on Existing Religions.’

‘The recent publication of the “Sacred Books of the East” in English is surely a great event in the annals of theological literature.’

Oxford

AT THE CLARENDON PRESS
LONDON: HENRY FROWDE

OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS WAREHOUSE, AMEN CORNER, E.C.

FIRST SERIES.

VOL. I. The Upanishads.

Translated by F. MAX MÜLLER. Part I. The Khândogya-upanishad, The Talavakâra-upanishad, The Aitareya-âranyaka, The Kaushîtaki-brâhmana-upanishad, and The Vâgasaneyi-samhitâ-upanishad. 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

The Upanishads contain the philosophy of the Veda. They have become the foundation of the later Vedânta doctrines, and indirectly of Buddhism. Schopenhauer, speaking of the Upanishads, says: 'In the whole world there is no study so beneficial and so elevating as that of the Upanishads. It has been the solace of my life, it will be the solace of my death.'

[See also Vol. XV.]

VOL. II. The Sacred Laws of the Âryas,

As taught in the Schools of Âpastamba, Gautama, Vâsishtha, and Baudhâya. Translated by GEORG BÜHLER. Part I. Âpastamba and Gautama. Second Edition. 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

The Sacred Laws of the Âryas contain the original treatises on which the Laws of Manu and other lawgivers were founded.

[See also Vol. XIV.]

VOL. III. The Sacred Books of China.

The Texts of Confucianism. Translated by JAMES LEGGE. Part I. The Shû King, The Religious Portions of the Shih King, and The Hsiâo King. 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.

Confucius was a collector of ancient traditions, not the founder of a new religion. As he lived in the sixth and fifth centuries B. C. his works are of unique interest for the study of Ethnology.

[See also Vols. XVI, XXVII, XXVIII, XXXIX, and XL.]

VOL. IV. The Zend-Avesta.

Translated by JAMES DARMESTETER. Part I. The Vendîdâd. Second Edition. 8vo, cloth, 14s.

The Zend-Avesta contains the relics of what was the religion of Cyrus, Darius, and Xerxes, and, but for the battle of Marathon, might have become the religion of Europe. It forms to the present day the sacred book of the Parsis, the so-called fire-worshippers. Two more volumes will complete the translation of all that is left us of Zoroaster's religion.

[See also Vols. XXIII and XXXL]

VOL. V. Pahlavi Texts.

Translated by E. W. WEST. Part I. The Bundahis, Bahman Yast, and Shâyast lâ-shâyast. 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.

The Pahlavi Texts comprise the theological literature of the revival of Zoroaster's religion, beginning with the Sassanian dynasty. They are important for a study of Gnosticism.

VOLS. VI AND IX. The Qur'ân.

Parts I and II. Translated by E. H. PALMER. 8vo, cloth, 21s.

This translation, carried out according to his own peculiar views of the origin of the Qur'ân, was the last great work of E. H. Palmer, before he was murdered in Egypt.

VOL. VII. The Institutes of Vishnu.

Translated by JULIUS JOLLY. 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

A collection of legal aphorisms, closely connected with one of the oldest Vedic schools, the Kathas, but considerably added to in later time. Of importance for a critical study of the Laws of Manu.

VOL. VIII. The Bhagavadgîtâ, with The Sanatsugâtîya, and The Anugîtâ.

Translated by KÂSHINÂTH TRIMBAK TELANG. 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

The earliest philosophical and religious poem of India. It has been paraphrased in Arnold's 'Song Celestial.'

VOL. X. The Dhammapada,

Translated from Pâli by F. MAX MÜLLER; and

The Sutta-Nipâta,

Translated from Pâli by V. FAUSBÖLL; being Canonical Books of the Buddhists. 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

The Dhammapada contains the quintessence of Buddhist morality. The Sutta-Nipâta gives the authentic teaching of Buddha on some of the fundamental principles of religion.

VOL. XI. Buddhist Suttas.

Translated from Pāli by T. W. RHYS DAVIDS. 1. The Mahā-parinibbāna Suttanta; 2. The Dhamma-kakka-ppavattana Sutta. 3. The Teviggā Suttanta; 4. The Ākaṅkheyya Sutta; 5. The Ketokhila Sutta; 6. The Mahā-sudassana Suttanta; 7. The Sabbāsava Sutta. 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

A collection of the most important religious, moral, and philosophical discourses taken from the sacred canon of the Buddhists.

VOL. XII. The Satapatha-Brāhmaṇa, according to the Text of the Mādhyandina School.

Translated by JULIUS EGGELING. Part I. Books I and II. 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.

A minute account of the sacrificial ceremonies of the Vedic age. It contains the earliest account of the Deluge in India.

[See also Vols. XXVI, XLI.]

VOL. XIII. Vinaya Texts.

Translated from the Pāli by T. W. RHYS DAVIDS and HERMANN OLDENBERG. Part I. The Pātimokkha. The Mahāvagga, I-IV. 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

The Vinaya Texts give for the first time a translation of the moral code of the Buddhist religion as settled in the third century B. C.

[See also Vols. XVII and XX.]

VOL. XIV. The Sacred Laws of the Āryas,

As taught in the Schools of Āpastamba, Gautama, Vāsishṭha, and Baudhāyana. Translated by GEORG BÜHLER. Part II. Vāsishṭha and Baudhāyana. 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

VOL. XV. The Upanishads.

Translated by F. MAX MÜLLER. Part II. The Katha-upanishad, The Mūṇḍaka-upanishad, The Taittirīyaka-upanishad, The Brīhadāraṇyaka-upanishad, The Svetāśvatara-upanishad, The Prasṇa-upanishad, and The Maitrāyana-brāhmaṇa-upanishad. 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

VOL. XVI. The Sacred Books of China.

The Texts of Confucianism. Translated by JAMES LEGGE. Part II. The Yī King. 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

[See also Vols. XXVII, XXVIII.]

VOL. XVII. Vinaya Texts.

Translated from the Pāli by T. W. RHYS DAVIDS and HERMANN OLDENBERG. Part II. The Mahāvagga, V-X. The Kullavagga, I-III. 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

VOL. XVIII. Pahlavi Texts.

Translated by E. W. WEST. Part II. The Dādīstān-i Dīnīk and The Epistles of Mānūskīhar. 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.

VOL. XIX. The Fo-sho-hing-tsan-king.

A Life of Buddha by Asvaghosha Bodhisattva, translated from Sanskrit into Chinese by Dharmaraksha, A.D. 420, and from Chinese into English by SAMUEL BEAL. 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

This life of Buddha was translated from Sanskrit into Chinese, A.D. 420. It contains many legends, some of which show a certain similarity to the Evangelium infantiae, &c.

VOL. XX. Vinaya Texts.

Translated from the Pāli by T. W. RHYS DAVIDS and HERMANN OLDENBERG. Part III. The Kullavagga, IV–XII. 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

VOL. XXI. The Saddharma-pundarīka ; or, The Lotus of the True Law.

Translated by H. KERN. 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.

'The Lotus of the true Law,' a canonical book of the Northern Buddhists, translated from Sanskrit. There is a Chinese translation of this book which was finished as early as the year 286 A.D.

VOL. XXII. Gaina-Sūtras.

Translated from Prākṛit by HERMANN JACOBI. Part I. The Ātārāṅga-Sūtra and The Kalpa-Sūtra. 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

The religion of the Gainas was founded by a contemporary of Buddha. It still counts numerous adherents in India, while there are no Buddhists left in India proper.

[See Vol. XLV.]

VOL. XXIII. The Zend-Avesta.

Translated by JAMES DARMESTETER. Part II. The Sīrōzahs, Yasts, and Nyāyis. 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

VOL. XXIV. Pahlavi Texts.

Translated by E. W. WEST. Part III. Dīnā-ī Mainōg-Khirad, Sikand-gūmānīk Vigār, and Sad Dar. 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

SECOND SERIES.

VOL. XXV. Manu.

Translated by GEORG BÜHLER. 8vo, cloth, 21s.

This translation is founded on that of Sir William Jones, which has been carefully revised and corrected with the help of seven native Commentaries. An Appendix contains all the quotations from Manu which are found in the Hindu Law-books, translated for the use of the Law Courts in India. Another Appendix gives a synopsis of parallel passages from the six Dharma-sûtras, the other Smṛitis, the Upanishads, the Mahābhārata, &c.

VOL. XXVI. The Satapatha-Brāhmaṇa.

Translated by JULIUS EGGELING. Part II. Books III and IV. 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.

VOLS. XXVII AND XXVIII. The Sacred Books of China.

The Texts of Confucianism. Translated by JAMES LEGGE. Parts III and IV. The Lî Kî, or Collection of Treatises on the Rules of Propriety, or Ceremonial Usages. 8vo, cloth, 25s.

VOL. XXIX. The Grihya-Sûtras, Rules of Vedic Domestic Ceremonies.

Part I. Sāṅkhāyana, Âśvalāyana, Pâraskara, Khândira. Translated by HERMANN OLDENBERG. 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.

These rules of Domestic Ceremonies describe the home life of the ancient Âryas with a completeness and accuracy unmatched in any other literature. Some of these rules have been incorporated in the ancient Law-books.

VOL. XXX. The Grihya-Sûtras, Rules of Vedic Domestic Ceremonies.

Part II. Gobhila, Hiraṇyakesin, Âpastamba. Translated by HERMANN OLDENBERG. Âpastamba, Yagñā-paribhāṣā-sûtras. Translated by F. MAX MÜLLER. 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.

VOL. XXXI. The Zend-Avesta.

Part III. The Yasna, Visparad, Âfrinagân, Gâhs, and Miscellaneous Fragments. Translated by L. H. MILLS. 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.

VOL. XXXII. Vedic Hymns.

Translated by F. MAX MÜLLER. Part I. 8vo, cloth, 18s. 6d.

- VOL. XXXIII. The Minor Law-books.
Translated by JULIUS JOLLY. Part I. Nârada, Bṛhaspati.
8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.
- VOL. XXXIV. The Vedânta-Sûtras, with the Commentary by Saṅkarâçârya. Part I.
Translated by G. THIBAUT. 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.
- VOLS. XXXV AND XXXVI. The Questions of King Milinda.
Translated from the Pâli by T. W. RHYS DAVIDS.
Part I. 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d. Part II. 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.
- VOL. XXXVII. The Contents of the Nasks, as stated in the Eighth and Ninth Books of the Dinkard.
Part I. Translated by E. W. WEST. 8vo, cloth, 15s.
- VOL. XXXVIII. The Vedânta-Sûtras. Part II. 8vo, cloth, with full Index to both Parts, 12s. 6d.
- VOLS. XXXIX AND XL. The Sacred Books of China. The Texts of Tâoism. Translated by JAMES LEGGE. 8vo, cloth, 21s.
- VOL. XLI. The Satapatha - Brâhmana. Part III.
Translated by JULIUS EGGELING. 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.
- VOL. XLII. Hymns of the Atharva-veda.
Translated by M. BLOOMFIELD. 8vo, cloth, 21s.
- VOLS. XLIII AND XLIV. The Satapatha-Brâhmana. Parts IV and V. [In preparation.]
- VOL. XLV. The Gaina-Sûtras.
Translated from Prakṛit, by HERMANN JACOBI. Part II. The Uttarâdhyayana Sûtra, The Sûtrakṛtânga Sûtra. 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.
- VOL. XLVI. Vedic Hymns. Part II. 8vo, cloth, 14s.
- VOL. XLVII. The Contents of the Nasks. Part II. [In preparation.]
- VOL. XLVIII.
- VOL. XLIX. Buddhist Mahâyâna Texts. Buddha-ârita, translated by E. B. COWELL. Sukhâvatî-vyûha, Vagrakkhedikâ, &c., translated by F. MAX MÜLLER. Amitâyur-Dhyâna-Sûtra, translated by J. TAKAKUSU. 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.

Anecdota Oxoniensia.

ARYAN SERIES.

Buddhist Texts from Japan. I. Vagrakkhedikâ ; The Diamond-Cutter.

Edited by F. MAX MÜLLER, M.A. Small 4to, 3s. 6d.

One of the most famous metaphysical treatises of the Mahâyâna Buddhists.

Buddhist Texts from Japan. II. Sukhâvatî-Vyûha : Description of Sukhâvatî, the Land of Bliss.

Edited by F. MAX MÜLLER, M.A., and BUNYIU NANJIO. With two Appendices: (1) Text and Translation of Saṅghavarman's Chinese Version of the Poetical Portions of the Sukhâvatî-Vyûha ; (2) Sanskrit Text of the Smaller Sukhâvatî-Vyûha. Small 4to, 7s. 6d.

The editio princeps of the Sacred Book of one of the largest and most influential sects of Buddhism, numbering more than ten millions of followers in Japan alone.

Buddhist Texts from Japan. III. The Ancient Palm-Leaves containing the Pragñâ-Pâramitâ-Hridaya-Sûtra and the Ushnîsha-Vigaya-Dhâraṇî.

Edited by F. MAX MÜLLER, M.A., and BUNYIU NANJIO, M.A. With an Appendix by G. BÜHLER, C.I.E. With many Plates. Small 4to, 10s.

Contains facsimiles of the oldest Sanskrit MS. at present known.

Dharma-Samgraha, an Ancient Collection of Buddhist Technical Terms.

Prepared for publication by KENJIU KASAWARA, a Buddhist Priest from Japan, and, after his death, edited by F. MAX MÜLLER and H. WENZEL. Small 4to, 7s. 6d.

Kâtyâyana's Sarvânukramant of the Rîgveda.

With Extracts from Shadgurusishya's Commentary entitled Vedârthadîpikâ. Edited by A. A. MACDONELL, M.A., Ph.D. 16s.

Oxford

AT THE CLARENDON PRESS

LONDON : HENRY FROWDE

OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS WAREHOUSE, AMEN CORNER, E.C.

22

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

THE SACRED BOOKS OF THE EAST

HENRY FROWDE, M.A.
PUBLISHER TO THE UNIVERSITY OF OXFORD

LONDON, EDINBURGH, AND NEW YORK

THE SACRED BOOKS OF THE EAST

TRANSLATED

BY VARIOUS ORIENTAL SCHOLARS

AND EDITED BY

F. MAX MÜLLER

VOL. XLVI

Oxford
AT THE CLARENDON PRESS
1897

[All rights reserved]

85.28

Oxford

PRINTED AT THE CLARENDON PRESS

BY HORACE HART

PRINTER TO THE UNIVERSITY

VEDIC HYMNS

TRANSLATED BY

HERMANN OLDENBERG

PART II

HYMNS TO AGNI (MANDALAS I-V)

Oxford

AT THE CLARENDON PRESS

1897

[All rights reserved]

685 M946
v. 46

CONTENTS.

	PAGE
INTRODUCTION	xi
HYMNS, TRANSLATION AND NOTES:—
Mandala I, 1	1
12	6
13 Âprî Hymn	8
26	13
27	16
31	22
36	31
44	37
45	42
58	45
59	49
60	52
65	54
66	57
67	61
68	64
69	67
70	70
71	74
72	82
73	88
74	92
75	95
76	96
77	100
78	102
79	103
94	108

	PAGE
Mandala I, 95	114
96	119
97	125
98	127
99	128
127	129
128	137
140	141
141	147
142 Âprî Hymn	153
143	157
144	160
145	164
146	167
147	170
148	173
149	176
150	178
188 Âprî Hymn	179
189	181
II, 1	186
2	193
3 Âprî Hymn	198
4	202
5	206
6	209
7	211
8	213
9	215
10	217
III, 1	219
2	228
3	232
4 Âprî Hymn	236
5	240
6	244
7	248
8	252
9	256

	PAGE
Mandala III, 10	259
11	261
12 To Indra-Agni	263
13	266
14	268
15	271
16	273
17	275
18	277
19	279
20	281
21	283
22	285
23	287
24	289 +
25	291 -
26	292 -
27	296
28	300
29	302
IV, 1	307
2	316
3	325 -
4	331
5	335
6	340
7	343
8	346
9	348
10	350
11	352
12	354
13	356
14	358
15	360
V, 1	363
2	366
3	371 -
4	375

	PAGE
Mandala V, 5 Âprî Hymn	377
6	379
7	382
8	385
9	387
10	389
11	391
12	393
13	395
14	397
15	399
16	401
17	403
18	405
19	407
20	410
21	412
22	413
23	414
24	415
25	416
26	418
27	420
28	423

APPENDICES:—

I. Index of Words	427
II. List of the more important Passages quoted in the Notes	487

Transliteration of Oriental Alphabets adopted for the Translations of the Sacred Books of the East . . .	497
---	-----

INTRODUCTION.

IN preparing this volume, which contains the greater part of the Agni hymns of the Rig-veda, namely, those of the Mandalas I–V, the translator enjoyed the high advantage of Professor Max Müller's assistance, in the way stated in the Introduction to the first volume of Vedic Hymns, Sacred Books of the East, vol. xxxii, p. xxvii.

H. O.

KIEL :
November, 1895.

VEDIC HYMNS.

MANDALA I, HYMN 1.

ASHTAKA I, ADHYĀYA 1, VARGA 1-2.

1¹. I magnify² Agni, the Purohita, the divine ministrant of the sacrifice, the Hotri³ priest, the greatest bestower of treasures.

2. Agni, worthy to be magnified by the ancient Rishis and by the present ones—may he conduct the gods hither.

3. May one obtain through Agni wealth and welfare day by day, which may bring glory and high bliss of valiant offspring.

4. Agni, whatever sacrifice and worship¹ thou encompassest on every side, that indeed goes to the gods.

5. May Agni the thoughtful Hotri³, he who is true and most splendidly renowned, may the god come hither with the gods.

6. Whatever good thou wilt do to thy worshipper, O Agni, that (work) verily is thine, O Angiras.

7. Thee, O Agni, we approach day by day, O (god) who shinest in the darkness¹; with our prayer, bringing adoration to thee—

8. Who art the king of all worship, the guardian of Rita, the shining one, increasing in thy own house.

9. Thus, O Agni, be easy of access to us, as a father is to his son. Stay with us for our happiness.

NOTES.

The hymn is ascribed to Madhukkkhandas Vaisvâmitra, and may possibly belong to an author of the Visvâmitra family. See my Prolegomena, p. 261. Metre, Gâyatrî. The hymn has been translated and commented upon by M. M., Physical Religion, pp. 170-173.

Verse 1 = TS. IV, 3, 13, 3 ; MS. IV, 10, 5. Verse 3 = TS. III, 1, 11, 1 ; IV, 3, 13, 5 ; MS. IV, 10, 4 (IV, 14, 16). Verse 4 = TS. IV, 1, 11, 1 ; MS. IV, 10, 3. Verse 7 = SV. I, 14. Verses 7-9 = VS. III, 22-24 ; TS. I, 5, 6, 2 ; MS. I, 5, 3.

Verse 1.

Note 1. This verse being the first verse of the Rig-veda as we now possess it, seems already to have occupied the same position in the time of the author of the hymns X, 20-26. For, after a short benediction, the opening words of this collection of hymns are also agnîm î/e, 'I magnify Agni.' Comp. my Prolegomena, p. 231.

Note 2. The verb which I translate by 'magnify'—being well aware that it is impossible to do full justice to its meaning by such a translation—is îd. There seems to me no doubt that this verb is etymologically connected with the substantives îsh, 'food,' îd, îdâ, îrâ (not with the root yag of which Brugmann, Indogermanische Forschungen I, 171, thinks). We need not ask here whether the connection between îd and îsh is effected by a 'Wurzeldeterminativ' (root-determinative) d—in this case we should have here îd for izhd, comp. nîdâ for nizhda, pîd for pizhd, &c. ; see Brugmann's Grundriss, vol. i, § 591—or whether îd is a reduplicated present of îd (of the type described by Brugmann, Grundriss, vol. ii, p. 854 ; comp. îrte, &c.). The original meaning of îde at all events seems to be 'I give sap or nourishment.' Now in the Vedic poetry and ritual, the idea of sap or nourishment is especially connected with the different products coming from the cow, milk and butter. The footsteps of the goddess Idā drip with butter. The words 'agnim ide' seem to me, consequently, originally to convey the idea of celebrating Agni by pouring sacrificial butter into the fire. There is a number of passages in the Rig-veda which, in my opinion, show clear traces of this original meaning of the verb. Thus we read X, 53, 2. yāgāmahai yagñīyān hanta devān īlāmahai īdyān āgyena, 'let us sacrifice (yag) to the gods to whom sacrifice is due; let us magnify (id) with butter those to whom magnifying is due.' V, 14, 3. tām hī śāsvantā īlate srukā devām ghrītaskūtā agnīm havyāya vólhave, 'for all people magnify this god Agni with the butter-dripping sacrificial spoon. that he may carry the sacrificial food.' V, 28, 1. devān īlānā havīshā ghrītāki, 'magnifying the gods with sacrificial food, (the spoon) filled with butter.' Comp. also I, 84, 18; VI, 70, 4; VIII, 74, 6; X, 118, 3. Then, by a gradual development, we find the verb id or the noun īlenya connected with such instrumentals as girā or gīrbhīh, 'to magnify by songs,' or stómaiḥ 'by praises,' nāmasā 'by adoration,' and the like. The Rig-vedic texts, however, show us very clearly that even in such phrases the original meaning of id was not quite forgotten. For the word is not used indifferently of any praise offered to any god whatever. No god of the Vedic Pantheon is praised so frequently and so highly by the poets of the Rig-veda as Indra. Yet, with very few exceptions, the word id is avoided in connection with this god. The whole ninth Mandala contains nothing but praises of Soma Pavamāna. Yet the word id occurs, in the whole of this Mandala, in two passages only (5, 3; 66, 1) of which one is contained in an Āprī verse transferring artificially to Soma such qualifications as belong originally to Agni. On the other hand, in the invocations addressed to Agni, this verb and its derivatives are most frequently used. We may conclude that the idea of celebration, as conveyed by these words, had a connotation which qualified them for the employment with regard to Agni, the god nourished by offerings of butter, much better than for being addressed to Indra, the drinker of the Soma juice, or to the god Soma himself.

Last comes, I believe, the meaning of îd as contained in a very small number of passages such as VII, 91, 2. îndra-vâyû sustutîkâm yânâ mâdîkâm îtte suvitâm ka nâvyam, 'Indra and Vâyû! Our beautiful praise, approaching you, asks you for mercy and for new welfare.' Here the construction of îd is such as if in English the phrase, 'men magnify the gods for obtaining mercy,' could be expressed in the words 'men magnify the gods mercy.'

I conclude by quoting the more important recent literature referring to îd: Prof. Max Müller's note on V, 60, 1 (S. B. E. vol. xxxii, p. 354); Physical Religion, p. 170; Bezzenberger, Nachrichten von der Göttinger Gesellsch. d. Wissensch. 1878, p. 264; Bechtel, Bezzenberger's Beiträge, X, 286; Bartholomae, ibid. XII, 91; Arische Forschungen, II, 78; Indogermanische Forschungen, III, 28, note 1; Brugmann, Indogermanische Forschungen, I, 171; K. F. Johansson, Indogermanische Forschungen, II, 47. Comp. also Bartholomae, Arische Forschungen, I, 21; III, 52, and Joh. Schmidt, Kuhn's Zeitschrift, XXXII, 389.

Verse 4.

Note 1. 'Worship' is a very inadequate translation of adhvara, which is nearly a synonym of yagñā, by the side of which it frequently stands. Possibly in the designation of the sacrifice as yagñā the stress was laid on the element of prayer, praises, and adoration; in the designation as adhvara on the actual work which was chiefly done by the Adhvaryu.—Prof. Max Müller writes: 'I accept the native explanation a-dhvara, without a flaw, perfect, whole, holy. Adhvara is generally an opus operatum; hence adhvaryu, the operating priest.' Comp. Physical Religion, p. 171. Bury's derivation of adhvara from madhu (ṁdhu-ara, Bezzenberger's Beiträge, VII, 339) is much more ingenious than convincing.

Verse 7.

Note 1. I have translated dóshâvatar as a vocative which, as is rendered very probable by the accent, was also the opinion of the diaskeuasts of the Samhitâ text.

The author of the sacrificial formula which is given in Āsval. Sraut. III, 12, 4 and Sāṅkh. Gṛīhy. V, 5, 4, evidently understood the word in the same way; there Agni is invoked as doshāvastar and as prātarvastar, as shining in the darkness of evening and as shining in the morning. That this may indeed be the true meaning of the word is shown by Rig-veda III, 49, 4, where Indra is called kshapām vastā, 'the illuminator of the nights' (kshapām is gen. plur., not as Bartholomae, Bezzenberger's Beiträge, XV, 208, takes it, loc. sing.). The very frequent passages, however, in which case-forms of doshā stand in opposition to words meaning 'dawn' or 'morning'—which words in most cases are derived from the root vas—strongly favour the opinion of Gaedicke (Der Accusativ im Veda, 177, note 3) and K. F. Johansson (Bezzenberger's Beiträge, XIV, 163), who give to doshāvastar the meaning 'in the darkness and in the morning.' This translation very well suits all Rig-veda passages in which the word occurs. If this opinion is accepted, doshāvastar very probably ought to be written and accented as two independent words, doshā vāstar. See M. M., Physical Religion, p. 173.

MANDALA I, HYMN 12.

ASHTAKA I, ADHYĀYA 1, VARGA 22-23.

1. We choose Agni as our messenger, the all-possessor, as the Hotri of this sacrifice, the highly wise.
2. Agni and Agni again they constantly invoked with their invocations, the lord of the clans, the bearer of oblations, the beloved of many.
3. Agni, when born, conduct the gods hither for him who has strewn the Barhis (sacrificial grass)¹; thou art our Hotri, worthy of being magnified².
4. Awaken them, the willing ones, when thou goest as messenger, O Agni. Sit down with the gods on the Barhis.
5. O thou to whom Ghrīta oblations are poured out, resplendent (god), burn against the mischievous, O Agni, against the sorcerers.
6. By Agni Agni is kindled (or, by fire fire is kindled), the sage, the master of the house, the young one, the bearer of oblations, whose mouth is the sacrificial spoon.
7. Praise Agni the sage, whose ordinances for the sacrifice are true, the god who drives away sickness.
8. Be the protector, O Agni, of a master of sacrificial food who worships thee, O god, as his messenger.
9. Be merciful, O purifier, unto the man who is rich in sacrificial food, and who invites Agni to the feast of the gods.
10. Thus, O Agni, resplendent purifier, conduct the gods hither to us, to our sacrifice and to our food.

11. Thus praised by us with our new Gâyatra hymn, bring us wealth of valiant men and food.

12. Agni with thy bright splendour be pleased, through all our invocations of the gods, with this our praise.

NOTES.

This hymn is ascribed to Medhâtithi Kâṇva. It is the opening hymn of a collection which extends from I, 12 to 23 (not, as Ludwig, III, 102, believes, from I, 2 to 17; see my Prolegomena, p. 220). That the authorship of this collection belongs indeed to the Kâṇva family, whose poetical compositions are found partly in the first and partly in the eighth Mandala, is shown by the text of 14, 2-5, and by other evidence; see Zeitschr. der Deutschen Morg. Gesellschaft, XXXVIII, 448.

The metre is Gâyatrî. It is possible, though I do not think it probable, that the hymn should be considered as consisting of Trikas. Verse 1 = SV. I, 3; TS. II, 5, 8, 5; V, 5, 6, 1; TB. III, 5, 2, 3; MS. IV, 10, 2. Verses 1-3 = SV. II, 140-142; AV. XX, 101, 1-3. Verse 2 = TS. IV, 3, 13, 8; MS. IV, 10, 1. Verse 3 = TB. III, 11, 6, 2. Verses 6, 8, 9 = SV. II, 194-196. Verse 6 = TS. I, 4, 46, 3; III, 5, 11, 5; V, 5, 6, 1; TB. II, 7, 12, 3; MS. IV, 10, 2 (3). Verse 7 = SV. I, 32. Verse 10 = VS. XVII, 9; TS. I, 3, 14, 8; 5, 5, 3; IV, 6, 1, 3; MS. I, 5, 1.

Verse 3.

Note 1. On vṛiktábarhis, comp. RV. I, 116, 1; M. M., vol. xxxii, pp. 84 seq., 109; Geldner, P. G., Vedische Studien, I, 152.

Note 2. On īdyah, comp. the note on īde I, 1, 1.

MANDALA I, HYMN 13.

ASHTAKA I, ADHYÂYA 1, VARGA 24-25.

ÂPRÎ HYMN.

1¹. Being well lighted, O Agni, bring us hither the gods to the man rich in sacrificial food, O Hotri, purifier, and perform the sacrifice.

2. Tanûnapât¹! make our sacrifice rich in honey and convey it to-day to the gods, O sage, that they may feast.

3. I invoke here at this sacrifice Narâsamsa¹, the beloved one, the honey-tongued preparer of the sacrificial food.

4. O magnified¹ Agni! Conduct the gods hither in an easy-moving chariot. Thou art the Hotri instituted by Manus².

5. Strew, O thoughtful men, in due order¹ the sacrificial grass, the back (or surface) of which is sprinkled with butter, on which the appearance of immortality² (is seen).

6. May the divine gates open, the increasers of Rita, which do not stick together, that to-day, that now the sacrifice may proceed.

7. I invoke here at this sacrifice Night and Dawn, the beautifully adorned goddesses, that they may sit down on this our sacrificial grass.

8. I invoke these two divine Hotris¹, the sages with beautiful tongues. May they perform this sacrifice for us.

9. Iâ ('Nourishment'), Sarasvati, and Maht ('the great one')¹, the three comfort-giving goddesses, they who do not fail, shall sit down on the sacrificial grass.

10. I invoke hither the foremost, all-shaped Tvashtri to come hither ; may he be ours alone.

11. O tree¹, let the sacrificial food go, O god, to the gods. May the giver's splendour be foremost.

12. Offer ye the sacrifice with the word Svâhâ to Indra in the sacrificer's house. Thereto I invoke the gods.

NOTES.

The hymn is ascribed, as the whole collection to which it belongs, to Medhâtithi Kânva (see the note on the preceding hymn). Its metre is Gâyatrî. Verses 1-4 = SV. II, 697-700. Verse 9 = RV. V, 5, 8. Verse 10 = TS. III, 1, 11, 1 ; TB. III, 5, 12, 1 ; MS. IV, 13, 10.

The hymn belongs to the class of Âpri hymns, which were classed by the ancient arrangers of the Samhitâ among the Agni hymns. The Âpri hymns, consisting of eleven or twelve verses, were destined for the Prayâga offerings of the animal sacrifice (comp. H. O., Zeitschrift der D. Morg. Gesellschaft, XLII, 243 seq.). They were addressed, verse by verse in regular order, partly to Agni, partly to different spirits or deified objects connected with the sacrifice, such as the sacrificial grass, the divine gates through which the gods had to pass on their way to the sacrifice, &c. The second verse was addressed by some of the Rîshi families to Tanûnapât, by some to Narâsamsa ; in some of the hymns we find two verses instead of one (so that the total number of verses becomes twelve instead of eleven) addressed the one to Tanûnapât, the other to Narâsamsa. Bergaigne (Recherches sur l'histoire de la Liturgie Védique, p. 14) conjectures that some of the Rîshi families had only seven Prayâgas. This opinion is based on the identical appearance of four verses (8-11) in the Âpri hymns of the Visvâmitras (III, 4) and of the Vasishthas (VII, 2), and on the diversity of metres used in two other Âpri hymns, IX, 5 and II, 3. To me this conjecture, though very ingenious, does not seem convincing.

With the text of the Āpri hymns should be compared the corresponding Praishas of the Maitrāvaruṇa priest, i.e. the orders by which this priest directed the Hotri to pronounce the Prayāga invocations. The text of these Praishas is given Taitt. Brāhm. III, 6, 2.

Comp. on the character and the historical and ritual position of the Āpri hymns, Max Müller, Hist. Anc. Sansc. Literature, p. 403 seq.; Roth, Nirukta, notes, p. 121 seq.; Weber, Indische Studien, X, 89 seq.; Ludwig V, 315 seq.; Hillebrandt, Das Altindische Neu- und Vollmondsopfer, 94 seq.; Schwab, Das Altindische Thieropfer, 90 seq.; Bergaigne, Recherches sur l'histoire de la Liturgie Védique, 13 seq.

Verse 1.

Note 1. Comp. Delbrück, Syntactische Forschungen, I, 97.

Verses 2, 3.

Note 1. Does Tanûnapât, lit. 'son of the body,' mean, as Roth and Grassmann believed, 'son of his own self' (comp. I, 12, 6. agnínâ agnîh sám idhyate, 'by Agni Agni is kindled'), or is the meaning 'le propre fils' (Bergaigne, Rel. Védique II, 100)? Narâsamsa, which is nearly identical with the Avestic Nairyôsanha, means 'the song of men,' or 'praised by men' (Bergaigne, l. l. I, 305; M. M.'s note on VII, 46, 4). In III, 29, 11 it is said of Agni: 'He is called Tanûnapât as the foetus of the Asura; he becomes Narâsamsa when he is born.' Of course an expression like this is by no means sufficient to prove that the sacrificial gods Tanûnapât and Narâsamsa, as invoked in the Āpri hymns, are nothing but forms of Agni. Expressions which are constantly repeated in the Āpri verses show that the work of Tanûnapât, and likewise that of Narâsamsa, consisted in spreading ghrîta or 'honey' over the sacrifice.

Verse 4.

Note 1. 'Magnified' is īlītāh; comp. the note on I, 1, 1. The third, or if both Tanûnapât and Narâsamsa are invoked, the fourth verse of the Āpri hymns is regularly addressed to Agni with this epithet īlīta.

Note 2. Manurhita, 'instituted by Manus,' not 'by men.' See Bergaigne, Religion Védique, I, 65 seq.

Verse 5.

Note 1. On ânushák, comp. Pischel, Vedische Studien, II, 125.

Note 2. The last Páda is translated by Grassmann, 'wo der unsterbliche sich zeigt' (comp. Bergaigne, R.V. I, 194, note 1); by Ludwig, 'auf dem man das unsterbliche sieht.' To me it seems impossible to decide, so as to leave no doubt, whether amṛtasya is masculine or neuter. Comp. also Atharva-veda V, 4, 3; 28, 7; XIX, 39, 6-8, in which passages the phrase amṛtasya káksham recurs.

Verse 8.

Note 1. The two divine Hotris are mentioned in the Rig-veda only in the eighth (or seventh) verse of the Āprisūktas and besides in two passages, X, 65, 10; 66, 13, which do not throw any light on the nature of these sacrificial gods. They are called gātavedasā VII, 2, 7, purohitau X, 70, 7, bhishagā Vāg. Samh. XXVIII, 7. As regards the duality of these divine counterparts of the human Hotri priest, possibly the 'two Hotris' should be understood as the Hotri and the Maitrāvaruṇa; the latter was the constant companion and assistant of the former in the Vedic animal sacrifice. Comp. Schwab, Altindisches Thieropfer, 96, 114, 117, &c.; H. O., Religion des Veda, 391.

Comp. on the two divine Hotris also Bergaigne, R.V. I, 233 seq.

Verse 9.

Note 1. On Iā, see H. O., Religion des Veda, pp. 72, 326.—With regard to Mahî Bergaigne (Rel. Védique, I, 322) has pronounced the opinion that 'Bhârati et Mahî, qui, tantôt se remplacent, tantôt se juxtaposent tout en paraissant ne compter que pour une, se confondent aux yeux des ṛishis.' But Pischel (Ved. Studien, II, 84 seq.) has shown that the eminent French scholar was wrong, and that really Mahî ('the great one') is independent of Bhârati. Pischel's own opinion that Mahî is a name of the goddess Dhishanâ, does not seem to me to be established by sufficient reasons.—On the meaning of these three goddesses Prof. Max Müller writes: ‘I should not fix on Nourishment as the true meaning of Iâ. Originally those three goddesses seem to be local: Iâ, the land or daughter of Manu, the Sarasvatî, and another river here called Mahî.’

Verse 11.

Note 1. To me it seems evident that the tree, or, to translate more literally, the lord of the forest (vanaspati) invoked in this Âprî verse can only be the sacrificial post (yûpa) to which the victim was tied before it was killed. The yûpa is called vanaspati in the Rig-veda (III, 8, 1. 3. 6. 11) as well as in the more modern Vedic texts (for inst., Taitt. Samh. I, 3, 6, 1).—In the Âprî hymn, IX, 5 (verse 10), the vanaspati is called sahasravalsâ: with this should be compared III, 8, 11 (addressed to the yûpa): vânaspate satâvalsâh ví roha sahasravalsâh ví vayâm ruhema, ‘O lord of the forest, rise with a hundred offshoots; may we rise with a thousand offshoots!’—In the Âprî hymn, X, 70 (verse 10), the rope (rasanâ) is mentioned by which the vanaspati should tie the victim; comp. with this expression the statements of the ritual texts as to the rasanâ with which the victim is tied to the yûpa; Schwab, Das Altindische Thieropfer, 81. Comp. also especially Taittiriya Brâhmana III, 6, 11, 3.—In the Âprî hymns the vanaspati is frequently invoked to let loose the victim; in connection therewith mention is made of the sacrificial butcher (samitri), see II, 3, 10; III, 4, 10; X, 110, 10, and comp. Vâg. Samhitâ XXI, 21; XXVIII, 10. The meaning of these expressions becomes clear at once, if we explain the vanaspati as the sacrificial post. When they are going to kill the victim, they loosen it from the post; the post, therefore, can be said to let it loose. Then the butcher (samitri) leads the victim away. See the materials collected by Schwab, Thieropfer, p. 100 seq., and comp. also H. O., Religion des Veda, 257.

MANDALA I, HYMN 26.

ASHTAKA I, ADHYĀYA 2, VARGA 20-21.

1. Clothe thyself with thy clothing (of light), O sacrificial (god), lord of all vigour; and then perform this worship for us.

2. Sit down, most youthful god, as our desirable Hotri, through (our prayerful) thoughts¹, O Agni, with thy word² that goes to heaven.

3. The father verily by sacrificing procures (blessings) for the son¹, the companion for the companion, the elect friend for the friend.

4. May Varuṇa, Mitra, Aryaman, triumphant with riches (?)¹, sit down on our sacrificial grass as they did on Manu's.

5. O ancient Hotri, be pleased with this our friendship also, and hear these prayers.

6. For whenever we sacrifice constantly¹ to this or to that god, in thee alone the sacrificial food is offered.

7. May he be dear to us, the lord of the clan, the joy-giving, elect Hotri; may we be dear (to him), possessed of a good Agni (i. e. of good fire).

8. For the gods, when possessed of a good Agni, have given us excellent wealth, and we think ourselves possessed of a good Agni.

9. And may there be among us mutual praises of both the mortals, O immortal one, (and the immortals)¹.

10. With all Agnis (i. e. with all thy fires), O Agni, accept this sacrifice and this prayer, O young (son) of strength¹.

NOTES.

This hymn, as well as the whole collection to which it belongs, is ascribed to Sunahsepa Āgigarti (comp. 24, 12. 13). The metre is Gâyatrī. Bergaigne (Recherches sur l'histoire de la Samhitā, II, 7) divides this hymn into Triṣas, with one single verse added at the end. I cannot find sufficient evidence for this; the appearance in the Sāma-veda (II, 967-9) of a Triṣa composed of the verses 10. 6. 7 of our hymn is rather against Bergaigne's opinion.

Verse 2.

Note 1. Mānmabhiḥ may possibly mean, 'with thy (wise) thoughts;' comp., for instance, III, 11, 8. pāri vīsvāni sūdhitā agnēḥ asyāma mānmabhiḥ, 'may we obtain every bliss through Agni's (wise) thoughts,' or 'may we obtain all the blessings of Agni for our prayers.'

Note 2. Vākas stands for vākasā. See the passages collected by Lanman, Noun-Inflection, 562, and comp. Roth, Ueber gewisse Kürzungen des Wortendes im Veda, 5; Joh. Schmidt, Die Pluralbildungen der indogermanischen Neutra, 304 seq. Ludwig also takes vākas as instrumental.

Verse 3.

Note 1. Agni is the father, the mortal whose sacrifice he performs, the son.

Verse 4.

Note 1. Can risādas be explained as a compound of ri (Tiefstufe of rai, as gu is the Tiefstufe of gau) and sādas*, from the root sad, 'to be triumphant'? Prof. Aufrecht (Bezenberger's Beiträge, XIV, 33; see also Neisser, Bezz. Beitr. XIX, 143) connects ri- with the Greek ἐρι- (ἐρικυδής &c.); our hypothesis has the advantage of not leaving the limits of Sanskrit.—Comp. M. M.'s note on V, 60, 7; Ludwig, Ueber die neuesten Arbeiten auf dem Gebiete der Rig-veda-Forschung (1893), p. 7.

Verse 6.

Note 1. On sāsvatâ tânâ see Lanman, 480, 515, 518.

Verse 9.

Note 1. The comparison of verse 8 and the expression āmṛita mārtyānām in the second Pāda of this verse seem to show that ubhāyeshām does not refer to two classes of mortals, the priests and their patrons, but to the mortals and the immortals. A genitive amṛitānām, which would make this meaning quite clear, can easily be supplied. A Dvandva compound amṛitamartyānām, which one could feel tempted to conjecture, would have, in my opinion, too modern a character.—Prof. Max Müller writes: ‘I should prefer amṛita mārtyānām, not exactly as a compound, but as standing for amṛitānām mārtyānām. This seems to be Ludwig’s opinion too.’

Verse 10.

Note 1. In the translation of sahasah yaho I follow Geldner, Kuhn’s Zeitschrift, XXVIII, 195; Ludwig’s translation is similar.

MANDALA I, HYMN 27.

ASHTAKA I, ADHYÂYA 2, VARGA 22-24.

A.

1. With reverence. I shall worship thee who art long-tailed like a horse, Agni, the king of worship.

2. May he, our son of strength¹, proceeding on his broad way, the propitious, become bountiful to us.

3. Thus protect us always, thou who hast a full life, from the mortal who seeks to do us harm¹, whether near or afar.

4. And mayest thou, O Agni, announce to the gods this our newest efficient Gâyatra song.

5. Let us partake of all booty that is highest and that is middle (i. e. that dwells in the highest and in the middle world); help us to the wealth that is nearest.

6. O god with bright splendour, thou art the distributor. Thou instantly flowest for the liberal giver in the wave of the river, near at hand.

B.

7. The mortal, O Agni, whom thou protectest in battles, whom thou speedest in the races¹, he will command constant nourishment :

8. Whosoever he may be, no one will overtake him, O conqueror (Agni)! His strength² is glorious.

9. May he (the man), known among all tribes³, win the race with his horses; may he with the help of his priests become a gainer.

C.

10. O Garâbodha¹! Accomplish this (task) for every house²: a beautiful song of praise for worshipful Rudra³.

11. May he, the great, the immeasurable, the smoke-bannered, rich in splendour, incite us to (pious) thoughts and to strength.

12. May he hear us, like the rich lord of a clan, the banner of the gods, on behalf of our hymns, Agni with bright light.

13. Reverence to the great ones, reverence to the lesser ones! Reverence to the young, reverence to the old¹! Let us sacrifice to the gods, if we can. May I not, O gods, fall as a victim to the curse of my better².

NOTES.

The hymn is ascribed to Suna~~k~~sepa (see note on I, 26). The metre is Gâyatrî; the last verse is Trish~~u~~bh.

The laws of arrangement of the Samhitâ show that this hymn, which has thirteen verses and follows after a hymn of ten verses belonging to the same deity, must be divided into a number of minor hymns. On the question of this division some further light is thrown by the metre. The first six verses and then again the verses 10-12 are composed in the trochaic form of the Gâyatrî metre; of the verses 7-9, on the other hand, not a single Pâda shows the characteristics of that metre. I believe, therefore, that the verses 1-6 form one hymn by themselves, or possibly two hymns of three verses each. Then follow two hymns: verses 7-9, 10-12. As to verse 13, which is composed in a different metre, it is difficult to determine its exact nature. It may be a later addition: though in that case we shall hardly be able to explain why it was placed at the end of the hymns addressed to Agni, to which god it contains no reference whatever. Or it may form part of the hymn 10-12 : in that case we should have to consider this whole hymn, which would then violate the rules of arrangement, as an addition to the original collection.

We may add that the Sâma-veda gives the first twelve verses of this Sûkta so as to form four independent hymns: 1-3 = SV. II, 984-6; 4. 6. 5 = SV. II, 847-9; 7-9 = SV. II, 765-7; 10-12 = SV. II, 1013-15. Besides, verse 1 is found in SV. I, 17. Verse 4 = SV. I, 28; TÂr. IV, 11, 8. Verse 7 = VS. VI, 29; TS. I, 3, 13, 2; MS. I, 3, 1. Verse 10 = SV. I, 15. Comp. Bergaigne, Recherches sur l'histoire de la Samhitâ, II, pp. 7-8; H. O., Prolegomena, 225-226.

Verse 2.

Note 1. It requires a stronger belief in the infallibility of Vedic text tradition than I possess, not to change sávasâ into sávasaḥ. I do not think that I, 62, 9 (sánemi sakhyám svapasyámânaḥ súnúḥ dâdhâra sávasâ sudâmsâḥ) furnishes a sufficient argument against this conjecture.

Verse 3.

Note 1. Grassmann reads aghaâyôḥ for the sake of the metre; Prof. Max Müller proposes āghâyôḥ. I think that the missing syllable should be gained by disyllabic pronunciation of -ât in mârtyât or rather mârtiât. Comp. my Prolegomena 185 and the quotations given there in note 1.

Verses 7-9.

Note 1. It is not my intention to enter here into a new discussion on so frequently discussed a word as vâga. I have translated it in verses 7, 9 by 'race,' in verse 8 by 'strength.'

Note 2. The expression used in verses 7 and 8 should be compared especially with VII, 40, 3. sâḥ it ugráḥ astu marutaḥ sâḥ sushmī yám mârtyam prishadasvâḥ âvâtha, utâ im agnîḥ sârasvatî gunânti ná tâsya râyâḥ paryetâ asti.

Note 3. Viśvakarṣaṇi, a frequent epithet of Agni, here refers to the mortal hero protected by Agni; comp. I, 64, 14 (vol. xxxii, p. 108); X, 93, 10 (viśvākarṣaṇi srāvah).

Verse 10.

Note 1. I think that Ludwig is right in taking Garā-bodha for a proper name.

Note 2. Viśé-vise may possibly depend on yagnīyāya, so that we should have to translate: 'Administer this task: a beautiful song of praise to Rudra who is worshipful for every house.'

Note 3. Rudra is here a designation of Agni, as the next verses show. Comp. Pischel-Geldner, I, 56.

Verse 13.

Note 1. The word āsinā, 'old,' occurring only here, is doubtful. In III, 1, 6; IV, 33, 3; X, 39, 4, sana or sanaya stands in contrast with yuvan. Shall we conjecture nāmah ā sānebhyah?

Note 2. The last Pāda of this verse, mā gyāyasaḥ sām-sam ā vrikshi devāḥ ('May I not, O gods, neglect the praise of the greatest,' Muir, V, 12), offers some difficulty. It may be doubted whether ā vrikshi belongs to ā-vrig or to ā-vrask.

Let us see what would be the meaning of the passage, if we were to decide for ā-vrig. VIII, 101, 16 the cow speaks: devīm devébhyah pári eyúshīm gām ā mā avrikta mártayah dabhráketāḥ, 'Me the goddess, the cow, who has come hither from the gods, the weak-minded mortal has appropriated.' Satapatha Bráhmaṇa XIV, 9, 4, 3. ya evam vidvān adhopahāsam karaty ā sa strīnām sukrítam vriñkte 'tha ya idam avidvān adhopahāsam karaty āsya striyah sukrítam vriñgate, 'He who knowing this, &c., appropriates the good works of the women. But the women appropriate the good works of him who without knowing this,' &c. In Rig-veda X, 159, 5 also we probably have a form of ā-vrig. There we find the triumphant utterance of a wife who has gained superiority over her fellow-wives :

 ā avṛiksham anyāsām vārkaḥ, 'I have won for myself the splendour of the other wives.' We may conclude from these passages that our Pāda, if ā vṛikshi is derived from ā-vṛig, would mean : 'May I not draw on myself the curse of my better.'

On the other hand we have a great number of passages—they have been collected by Ludwig, IV, 249 seq.—in which the verb ā-vṛaṣṭ appears. Referring the reader for fuller information to Ludwig, I content myself here with selecting one or two of these passages. Taitt. Samh. II, 4, 11, 4. devatābhyo vā esha ā vṛiskyate yo yakshya ity uktvā na yagate. In translating this we should remember that vṛaṣṭ means 'to cut down ;' ā-vṛaṣṭ, therefore, must be 'to cut down so that the object reaches a certain destination.' I translate therefore : 'He who says, "I shall sacrifice," and does not sacrifice, is cut down for the deities,' —i. e. he is dedicated or forfeited to the deities and is thus destroyed (comp. a different explanation of ā-vṛaṣṭ by Delbrück, Altindische Syntax, 143). In other passages not the dative but the locative is used for indicating the being to whom somebody is forfeited ; see Atharva-veda XII, 4, 6. 12. 26 ; XV, 12, 6. 10.

A Rig-vedic passage containing ā-vṛaṣṭ (with the dative) is X, 87, 18. ā vṛiskyantām āditaye durévāḥ, 'May the evil-doers be forfeited to Aditi.'

Several times we find the first person aor. med. in the same form as in our passage, ā vṛikshi ; see, for instance, the Nivid formula to the Visve devāḥ, Sāṅkhāyana Srautasūtra VIII, 21. In this Nivid, the text of which as given by Hillebrandt is not quite identical with that of Ludwig, we read according to Hillebrandt's edition : mā vo devā avisasā mā visasāyur ā vṛikshi. This mā . . . ā vṛikshi looks quite similar to our passage. The same may be said of Taittiriya Samhitā I, 6, 6, 1. yat te tapas tasmai te māvṛikshi.
 Considering such passages it is difficult not to believe that it is the verb ā vṛaṣṭ which we have before us in our verse. It must be admitted indeed that the accusative samsam does not agree with the construction of the later Vedic passages. Can the accusative stand in the ancient language of the Rig-veda in the same connection in which we have found the dative and the locative? So that ā-vras̥k (in the middle or passive) with the accusative would mean: to be cut down in the direction towards another being, i. e. being forfeited to that being? In that case the translation of our passage would be: 'May I not, O gods, fall as a victim to the praise (or rather, to the curse) of my better.' If this explanation of the accusative is thought too bold, we should propose to correct the text so as to get a dative or, which would suit the metre better, a locative: mā gyāyasaḥ samsāya (or sāmse) ā vrikshi devāḥ.

MANDALA I, HYMN 31.

ASHTAKA I, ADHYÂYA 2, VARGA 32-35.

1. Thou, O Agni, (who art) the first Ângiras Rishi, hast become as god the kind friend of the gods. After thy law the sages, active in their wisdom¹, were born, the Maruts with brilliant spears.

2. Thou, O Agni, the first, highest Ângiras, a sage, administerest the law of the gods, mighty for the whole world, wise, the son of the two mothers¹, reposing everywhere for (the use of) the living².

3. Thou, O Agni, as the first, shalt become¹ manifest to Mâtariśvan, through thy high wisdom, to Vivasvat. The two worlds trembled at (thy) election as Hotri. Thou hast sustained the burthen; thou, O Vasu, hast sacrificed to the great (gods)².

4. Thou, O Agni, hast caused the sky to roar¹ for Manu, for the well-doing Purûravas, being thyself a greater well-doer. When thou art loosened by power (?)² from thy parents, they led thee hither before and afterwards again.

5. Thou, O Agni, the bull, the augments of prosperity, art to be praised by the sacrificer who raises the spoon, who knows all about the offering¹ and (the sacrifice performed with) the word Vasha. Thou (god) of unique vigour art the first to invite² the clans.

6. Thou, O Agni, leadest forward the man who follows crooked ways¹, in thy company at the sacrifice², O god dwelling among all tribes, who in the strife of heroes, in the decisive moment for the obtainment of the prize³, even with few companions killest many foes in the battle⁴.

7. Thou, O Agni, keepest that mortal¹ in the highest immortality, in glory day by day, (thou) who being thirsty thyself² givest happiness to both races (gods and men), and joy to the rich.

8. Thou, O Agni, praised by us, help the glorious singer to gain prizes. May we accomplish our work with the help of the young active (Agni). O Heaven and Earth! Bless us together with the gods.

9. Thou, O Agni, in the lap of thy parents, a god among gods, O blameless one, always watchful, be the body's creator and guardian to the singer. Thou, O beautiful one, pourest forth all wealth.

10. Thou, O Agni, art our guardian, thou art our father. Thou art the giver of strength; we are thy kinsmen. Hundredfold, thousandfold treasures come together in thee, who art rich in heroes, the guardian of the law, O undeceivable one.

11. Thee, O Agni, the gods have made for the living as the first living¹, the clan-lord of the Nahusha². They have made (the goddess) Iâ the teacher of men (manusha), when a son of my father is born³.

12. Thou, O Agni, protect with thy guardians, O god, our liberal givers and ourselves, O venerable one! Thou art the protector of kith and kin¹ and of the cows, unremittingly watching over thy law.

13¹. Thou, O Agni, art kindled four-eyed, as the closest guardian for the sacrificer who is without (even) a quiver². Thou acceptest in thy mind the hymn even of the poor³ who has made offerings⁴, that he may prosper without danger.

14. Thou, O Agni, gainest¹ for the widely-renowned worshipper that property which is desirable and excellent. Thou art called the guardian and father even of the weak²; thou instructest the simple, thou, the greatest sage, the quarters of the world³.

15. Thou, O Agni, protectest on every side like well-stitched armour the man who gives sacrificial fees. He who puts sweet food (before the priests), who makes them comfortable in his dwelling, who kills living (victims), he (will reside) high in heaven¹.

16. Forgive, O Agni, this our fault (?)¹, (look graciously at) this way which we have wandered from afar. Thou art the companion, the guardian, the father of those who offer Soma; thou art the quick one² who makes the mortals *Rishis*³.

17. As thou didst for Manus, O Agni, for Âṅgiras, O Âṅgiras, for Yayâti on thy (priestly) seat, as for the ancients, O brilliant one, come hither, conduct hither the host of the gods, seat them on the sacrificial grass, and sacrifice to the beloved (host).

18. Be magnified, O Agni, through this spell which we have made for thee with our skill or with our knowledge. And lead us forward to better things. Let us be united with thy favour, which bestows strength.

NOTES.

The Rishi of the hymn is Hiranyastûpa Âṅgirasa. To him tradition ascribes the authorship of the collection I, 31–35, probably because in X, 149, 5 the poet invokes Savitrî, ‘as Hiranyastûpa the Âṅgirasa has called thee, O Savitrî.’ Vedic theologians of course tried to find out where this invocation of Hiranyastûpa to Savitrî was preserved, and the hymn, I, 35, seemed to agree best with the conditions of the case (comp. Zeitschrift der D. Morg. Ges. XLII, 230). By this and many similar cases it is made probable that at the time when the Anukramanî was composed, all real knowledge as to authors to whom the collections of the first Mandala belong, was lost.

The metre is Gagatî; only the verses 8, 16, 18 are Trishubh. Verse 1 = VS. 34, 12. Verse 8 = MS. IV, 11, 1. Verse 12 = VS. 34, 13. With verse 16 comp. AV. III, 15, 4.

Verse 1.

Note 1. Vidmanāpasaḥ seems to be nom. plur., not gen. sing. Comp. I, 111, 1. tákshan rátham . . . vidmanāpasaḥ, 'they (the Rābhus), active in their wisdom, have wrought the chariot.'

Verse 2.

Note 1. As to dvimâtā sayúḥ, comp. III, 55, 6 (sayúḥ parástât ádha nú dvimâtā); Pischel, Vedische Studien, II, 50.—On Agni's two mothers and his double birth see Bergaigne, Religion Védique, II, 52.

Note 2. By 'living' I have translated áyú. See on this word, Bergaigne, Rel. Véd., I, 59 seq.

Verse 3.

Note 1. Probably Bergaigne (Rel. Véd. I, 55, note 2) is right in conjecturing bhavaḥ for bhava. In this case we should have to translate: 'Thou as the first hast become manifest to Mātarisvan.'

Note 2. I believe that to maháḥ we have to supply deván; see II, 37, 6; III, 7, 9; VI, 16, 2; 48, 4, &c. 'Can it not be an adverb? See vol. xxxii, p. 307; Lanman, p. 501,' M. M.

Verse 4.

Note 1. Comp. V, 58, 6. let Dyu (sky) roar down, the bull of the dawn. V, 59, 8. may Dyaus Aditi (the unbounded) roar for our feast.

Note 2. The translation of svâtra is purely conjectural. It rests on the supposition that the word is related to sûsue, savas, &c. (thus Grassmann). Boehtlingk-Roth connect it with svad, which is phonetically impossible; they give the meaning 'schmackhaft,' and paraphrase our passage: das mit einer Lockspeise (z. B. mit einem Spahn) von den Reibhölzern abgenommene Feuer kann man hin und her tragen. Ludwig: mit Geprassel. I do not see how this translation would fit for a number of the passages in which the word occurs.

Verse 5.

Note 1. With the third Pâda compare VI, 1, 9. yâh âhutim pâri véda námobhih.

Note 2. Âvívâsasi cannot belong to the relative clause. The accent must be changed accordingly.

Verse 6.

Note 1. It is very curious to find here Agni as the protector of the vṛiginavartani, the man who follows crooked ways. Ludwig tries to explain the passage by understanding the vidatha, in which Agni is here said to protect the sinner, as an asylum, but we have no reason to believe that the word could have this meaning. See the next note.

Note 2. On the derivation and meaning of vidátha various opinions have been pronounced in the last years, which have been collected by Prof. Max Müller in his note on V, 59, 2 (vol. xxxii, p. 349 seq.; see also Bartholomae, Studien zur indogermanischen Sprachgeschichte, I, 41). Without trying to discuss here all different theories, I immediately proceed to state my own opinion, though I am far from claiming certainty for it. It will, however, I believe, solve the difficulties tolerably well. I propose to derive vidátha from vi-dhâ; the dh was changed into d by the same 'Hauchdissimulationsgesetz' (Brugmann, Grundriss der vergleichenden Grammatik, vol. i, p. 355 seq.), according to which Arian bháudhati* was changed into Sanskrit bódhati. No one will doubt that the operation of this 'Hauchdissimilationsgesetz' could be annihilated by opposite forces, but it must be admitted that the forms with 'Hauchdissimilation' could also remain intact. The verb vi-dhā means 'to distribute, to arrange, to ordain;' thus the original meaning of vidātha must be, like the meaning of vidhāna, 'distribution, disposition, ordinance.' In V, 3, 6 we read vidātheshu áhnām: this phrase receives its explanation by VII, 66, 11. ví yé dadhúh sarādam māsam át áhah; ahorātrāni vidādhat, X, 190, 2; māsam vidhānam, X, 138, 6; ritūn . . . ví dadhau, I, 95, 3. We may call attention also to VI, 51, 2. véda yáh trīni vidāthāni eshām devānām gánma, 'he who knows their threefold division, the birth of the gods;' VI, 8, 1. prá nú voḥam vidāthā gâtávedasah, 'I will proclaim the ordinances of Gâtavedas.' Within the sphere of the Vedic poets' thoughts, the most prominent example of something most artificially 'vñhita' was the sacrifice (comp. ví yé dadhúh . . . yagñām, VII, 66, 11; sāmsāti ukthām yágate ví ū dhāh, IV, 6, 11; [the moon] bhāgām devébhyah ví dadhāti ā-yán, X, 85, 19; and the following very significant passage: yagñasya tvā vidāthā prikkham átra kāti hótārah ritusáh yaganti, Vāg. Samh. XXIII, 57). Thus yagñā and vidātha, 'sacrifice' and 'ordinance,' became nearly synonymous (comp. III, 3, 3, &c.). It would be superfluous to quote the whole number of passages which show this, but I believe that an attentive reader will discern at least in some of them the traces of the original meaning of vidātha; see, for instance, II, 1, 4; III, 28, 4.—Finally vidātha seems to mean 'the act of disposing of any business' or the like; this meaning appears, I believe, in passages like the well-known phrase, bṛhāt vadema vidāthe suvīrāh (comp. suvīrāsaḥ vidātham ā vadema): 'may we with valiant men mightily raise our voice at the determining (of ordinances, &c.).' Thus the words vidātha and sabhā approach each other in their meaning; a person influential in council is called both vidathya and sabhéya (see Boehtlingk-Roth, s. v. vidathya).

Note 3. The exact meaning of paritakmya is not quite free from doubt. Comp. Bartholomae, Bezzenberger's Beiträge, XV, 203, note 1.

Note 4. Prof. Max Müller translates this verse: 'Thou savest the man who has gone the wrong way in the thick of the battle, thou who art quick at the sacrifice; thou who in the strife of heroes, when the prize (or the booty) is surrounded (beset on all sides), killest,' &c.

Verse 7.

Note 1. The phrase begins as if a relative clause were to follow attached to the words 'that mortal.' But, instead of this, afterwards a relative clause follows referring to 'thou, O Agni.'

Note 2. Roth (Ueber gewisse Kürzungen des Wortendes, p. 4) and Bartholomae (Kuhn's Zeitschrift, XXIX, 559) think that a dative (like tâtrishânâya) is required; Agni gives comfort to both thirsty races, gods and men. Roth takes tâtrishânâ[h] for an abbreviation of tâtrishânâya; Bartholomae conjectures tâtrishâya. It would be more easy to change the form into a dative with the ending -â (=ai); comp. Kluge, Kuhn's Zeitschrift, XXV, 309; Pischel-Geldner, I, 61; Aufrecht, Festgruss an Böhrling, 1; J. Schmidt, Pluralbildungen, 234. But why not leave the nominative? Agni, being thirsty himself, quenches the thirst of other beings. Comp. J. Schmidt, Pluralbildungen, 309.

Verse 11.

Note 1. Āyúm āyāve. See verse 2, note 2.

Note 2. The names Nahus, Nahusha have much the same value as Manus, Manusha. But it seems that not all the Aryan tribes, but only a certain part of them, were considered as descendants of Nahus. Comp. Bergaigne, Rel. Védique, II, 324.

Note 3. The last words are very obscure. Mamaka occurs only in one other passage, belonging to the same collection of hymns, I, 34, 6: there the Asvins are invoked to bestow blessings on 'my son' (māmakāya sūnāve). 'When a son of my father is born' may mean 'When I am born,' or 'When a new issue is born within our tribe:' then—thus we may possibly supply—the goddess Iā, the teacher of mankind, will be the new-born child's teacher also. Another possible explanation would be to take Mamaka as a proper name. Or Prof. Max Müller may be right, who writes: 'Could not pitúh yát putráh mámakasya gáyate refer to Agni, who, in III, 29, 3, was called iāyāh putrah. Her father and husband (Manu) is also the father of mankind, therefore of the poet who says: Whenever the son of my father is born, they made Iā (his mother) the teacher of man.'

Verse 12.

Note 1. Trátā tokásya tánaye seems to be nothing else but trátā tokásya tánayasya, which would have had one syllable too much.

Verse 13.

Note 1. Comp. on this verse, Pischel, I, 216 seq.

Note 2. Agni is to protect the man who has no quiver, and cannot, therefore, protect himself. The four eyes of the divine guardian seem to signify that he can look in all directions, and perhaps also that he has the power of seeing invisible bad demons. The watchdogs of Yama also are four-eyed, X, 14, 10. 11; comp. H. O., Religion des Veda, 474, note 4. Comp. nishaṅgin, Rig-veda III, 30, 15; V, 57, 2; X, 103, 3.

Note 3. On kírí, comp. Pischel loc. cit.

Note 4. Rátáhavyah means either a man who has made offerings, or a god to whom offerings are made. That it stands here in the first sense is shown with great probability by VIII, 103, 13, where the kíríh rátáhavyah svadhvaráh is described, the man who, though poor, makes offerings and is a good sacrificer. But if we are right in our translation of rátáhavyah, the verb vanóshi cannot belong to the relative clause; I propose to read vanoshi without accent. The way in which Pischel tries to explain the accent of vanóshi, by taking the words kíréh kit mántram mánasā as a parenthesis, is too artificial.

Verse 14.

Note 1. I think that we should here, as in verse 13, read vanoshi without accent.

Note 2. This must be at least the approximate meaning of âdhra. 'For âdhrasya one expects radhrasya,' M. M.

Note 3. I think that the quarters of the world have nothing to do here, but that instead of prâ dīsaḥ we should read (with Ludwig) pradīsaḥ. A similar mistake regarding the word pradis occurs several times in the text of the Rig-veda. I propose to translate the corrected text: 'Thou instructest the simple, well knowing the (divine) commandments.' Comp. vayúnāni vidván, dūtýāni vidván, &c.

Verse 15.

Note 1. 'Der ist des himels ebenbild' (Ludwig). But this word upamā is, as far as we can see, not very ancient. I take upamā, with Boehtlingk-Roth, as an adverbial instrumental like dakshinā, madhyā, &c. Prof. Max Müller translates 'close or near to heaven.'

Verse 16.

Note 1. Sarāni designates in the Atharva-veda VI, 43, 3 a fault or defect, the exact nature of which cannot be determined. Boehtlingk-Roth propose Widerspänstigkeit, Hartnäckigkeit; Max Müller, Abweg, Fehltritt.

Note 2. On bhrimi, comp. M. M.'s note on II, 34, 1.

Note 3. Comp. III, 43, 5. kuvīt mā rīshim papivāmsam sūtāsyā (supply kārase), 'Wilt thou make me a Rishi after I have drunk Soma?'

MANDALA I, HYMN 36.

ASHTAKA I, ADHYĀYA 3, VARGA 8-11.

1. We implore¹ with well-spoken words the vigorous² Agni who belongs to many people³, to the clans that worship the gods⁴, whom other people (also) magnify.

2. Men have placed Agni (on the altar) as the augments of strength. May we worship thee, rich in sacrificial food. Thus be thou here to-day gracious to us, a helper in our striving for gain, O good one !

3. We choose thee, the all-possessor, as our messenger and as our Hotri. The flames of thee, who art great, spread around ; thy rays touch the heaven.

4. The gods, Varuṇa, Mitra, Aryaman, kindle thee, the ancient messenger. The mortal, O Agni, who worships thee, gains through thee every prize.

5. Thou art the cheerful Hotri and householder, O Agni, the messenger of the clans. In thee all the firm laws are comprised which the gods have made¹.

6. In thee, the blessed one, O Agni, youngest god, all sacrificial food is offered. Sacrifice then thou who art gracious to us to-day and afterwards¹, to the gods that we may be rich in valiant men.

7. Him, the king, verily the adorers approach reverentially. With oblations men kindle Agni, having overcome all failures.

8. Destroying the foe¹, they (victoriously) got through Heaven and Earth and the waters ; they have made wide room for their dwelling. May the manly (Agni)², after he has received the oblations, become brilliant at the side of Kaṇva; may he neigh as a horse in battles.

9. Take thy seat; thou art great. Shine forth, thou who most excellently repairest to the gods. O Agni, holy god, emit thy red, beautiful smoke, O glorious one!

10. Thou whom the gods have placed here for Manu as the best performer of the sacrifice, O carrier of oblations, whom Kaṇva and Medhyâtithi, whom Vṛishan and Upastuta¹ (have worshipped,) the winner of prizes.

11. That Agni's nourishment has shone brightly whom Medhyâtithi and Kaṇva have kindled on behalf of Rîta¹. Him do these hymns, him do we extol.

12. Fill (us with) wealth, thou self-dependent one, for thou, O Agni, hast companionship with the gods. Thou art lord over glorious booty. Have mercy upon us; thou art great.

13. Stand up straight for blessing us, like the god Savitrî, straight a winner of booty, when we with our worshippers and with ointments¹ call thee² in emulation (with other people).

14. Standing straight, protect us by thy splendour from evil; burn down every ghoul¹. Let us stand straight that we may walk and live. Find out our worship² among the gods.

15. Save us, O Agni, from the sorcerer, save us from mischief, from the niggard. Save us from him who does us harm or tries to kill us, O youngest god with bright splendour !

16. As with a club¹ smite the niggards in all directions, and him who deceives us, O god with fiery jaws. The mortal who makes (his weapons) very sharp by night, may that impostor not rule over us.

17. Agni has won abundance in heroes, Agni prosperity (for Kaṇva). Agni and the two Mitrās (i.e. Mitra and Varuṇa) have blessed Medhyâtithi, Agni (has blessed) Upastuta in the acquirement (of wealth)¹.

18. Through Agni we call hither from afar Turvasa, Yadu, and Ugradeva. May Agni, our strength against the Dasyu, conduct Navavâstva, Bṛihad-ratha, and *Turviti*¹.

19. Manu has established thee, O Agni, as a light for all people. Thou hast shone forth with Kaṇva, born from Rita, grown strong, thou whom the human races worship.

20. Agni's flames are impetuous and violent ; they are terrible and not to be withstood. Always burn down the sorcerers, and the allies of the Yâtus, every ghoul¹.

NOTES.

The authorship of this hymn, and of the whole collection to which it belongs (I, 36-43), is ascribed to Kaṇva Ghaura. Numerous passages show indeed that it was the family of the Kaṇvas, or rather, to speak more accurately, a branch of that family, among which this group of hymns has been composed. But it is as great a mistake in this as in a number of similar cases to accept the founder of one of the great Brāhmanical families as an author of Vedic poems. Comp. Zeitschrift der Deutschen Morg. Gesellschaft, XLII, 215 seq.

The metre is alternately Bṛīhatī and Satobṛīhatī, so that the hymn consists of strophes (Pragātha) of two verses. Verse 1=SV. I, 59. Verse 9=VS. XI, 37; TS. IV, 1, 3, 3 (V, 1, 4, 5); TĀr. IV, 5, 2 (V, 4, 6); MS. II, 7, 3; IV, 9, 3. Verse 13=SV. I, 57; VS. XI, 42; TS. IV, 1, 4, 2 (V, 1, 5, 3); MS. II, 7, 4. Verses 13, 14=TB. III, 6, 1, 2; TĀr. IV, 20, 1; MS. IV, 13, 1. Verse 19=SV. I, 54.

Verse 1.

Note 1. Literally, we entreat for you. Comp. on this use of the pronoun vaḥ, Delbrück, Altindische Syntax, 206. See also Neisser, Bezenberger's Beiträge, XX, 64.

Note 2. The meaning of yahvā cannot be determined with full certainty.

Note 3. There is no sufficient reason to change with Ludwig (IV, 254) purūṇām to Pūrūṇām, and thus to convert the metrically correct Pāda into an irregular one.—Comp. Bollensen, Zeitschrift der Deutschen Morgenl. Gesellschaft, XXII, 593.

Note 4. On devayatīnām, comp. Lanman, p. 399.

Verse 5.

Note 1. 'On thee all the eternal works are united, i.e. depend, which the gods have wrought; such as sun, stars, lightning.' M. M.

Verse 6.

Note 1. With the third Pāda compare the third Pāda of verse 2. It is a galita.

Verse 8.

Note 1. The word 'the foe' (vṛitra) alludes to the name of the demon conquered by Indra; see H. O., Religion des Veda, 135, note 2.

Note 2. The metre would become more correct by reading vr̥ṣabháḥ instead of vr̥ṣhā. Or Vr̥ṣhani, 'with Vr̥ṣhan?' Comp. verse 10.

Verse 10.

Note 1. Medhyâtithi or Medhâtithi is very frequently mentioned in connection with Kanva.

Vr̥ṣhan is taken as a proper name by Boehtlingk-Roth and by Grassmann (not by Ludwig) in VI, 16, 15. Possibly they are right, but in no case can Vr̥ṣhan of the sixth book, named by the side of Dadhyañk and Atharvan, be identified with any probability with the Vr̥ṣhan mentioned in our passage, who evidently belongs to the ancestors of the Kanvas.

Upastuta is mentioned again together with Kanva and Medhyâtithi in verse 17 of our hymn, together with Kanva in VIII, 5, 25. Comp. I, 112, 15; VIII, 103, 8; X, 115, 8. 9; Bergaigne, Rel. Véd., II, 448.

Verse 11.

Note 1. Comp. I, 139, 2. yát ha tyát mitrāvarunāv rītāt ádhi ádadáthe ánrītam svéna manyúnā; X, 73, 5. mán-damānaḥ rītāt ádhi.

Verse 13.

Note 1. Añgibhiḥ can possibly mean 'who have saved themselves.' There is no reason to think of the anointing of the yûpa (sacrificial post), to which Sâyana refers the word.

Note 2. On vi-hvâ, comp. Pischel-Geldner, I, 144. There must be a technical reason, unknown to me, for the connection in which this verb repeatedly occurs, as is the case in our passage, with the noun vâghat: comp. III, 8, 10 (see below); VIII, 5, 16. purutrâ kit hí vâm narâ vihváyante manishínaḥ vâghádbhiḥ arvinâ á gatam.

Verse 14.

Note 1. The exact meaning of atrín is unknown.

Note 2. Geldner's conjectures on duvas seem rather bold to me (Kuhn's Zeitschrift, XXVII, 233). Comp. vol. xxxii, pp. 203-206 (I, 165, 14).

Verse 16.

Note 1. On ghanéva, see Lanman, Noun-Inflection, 334.

Verse 17.

Note 1. On Medhyâtithi and Upastuta, see the note on verse 10. Aufrecht (Kuhn's Zeitschrift, XXVI, 612) believes that in mitrótá an abbreviation of the name Mitrâtithi (X, 33, 7) is contained; he translates: 'Agni has promoted Mitrâtithi, Medhyâtithi, and Upastuta in the acquirement of wealth.' This is very ingenious, but I do not think that the reason which Aufrecht gives is sufficient: it cannot be understood, he says, why Mitra (or Mitra and Varuṇa) should be mentioned in a hymn exclusively addressed to Agni. But similar cases are quite frequent.—Prof. Max Müller writes: 'Could mitrâ stand for mitrâṇi? Agni has protected his friends and also Medhyâtithi.' Comp. also Lanman, p. 342.

Verse 18.

Note 1. On Turvaṣa and Yadu, comp. Muir, V, 286; Bergaigne, II, 354 seq.; Zeitschr. der D. Morg. Ges. XLII, 220. There is not the slightest reason for Ludwig's statement (IV, 254) that this hymn is a 'gebet um sig für den auf einem kriegszuge befindlichen Turvaṣakönig.'

Ugradeva is not mentioned again. On Navavâstva and Br̥hadratha, comp. X, 49, 6; VI, 20, 11; on Turvîti, the materials collected by Bergaigne, Rel. Véd., II, 358 seq.

Verse 20.

Note 1. See verse 14, note 1.

MANDALA I, HYMN 44.

ASHTAKA I, ADHYĀYA 3, VARGA 28-30.

1. Agni, at the rising of the dawn¹ bring splendid wealth, immortal Gâtavedas, to the worshipper, (and bring hither) to-day the gods awakening with the dawn.

2. For thou art the accepted messenger, the bearer of sacrificial food, O Agni, the charioteer of worship. United with the two Asvins and with the Dawn bestow on us abundance of valiant heroes, and high glory.

3. We choose to-day as our messenger Agni, the Vasu, the beloved of many, whose banner is smoke, whose . . . ¹ is light, at the dawning of the day, the beautifier of sacrifices².

4. I magnify at the dawning of the day Agni Gâtavedas, the best, the youngest guest, the best receiver of offerings, welcome to pious people, that he may go to the gods¹.

5. I shall praise thee, O food on which everything lives, immortal one¹, Agni, the immortal protector, O holy god, the best sacrificer, O bearer of sacrificial food.

6. Be kind-spoken to him who praises thee, O youngest god, honey-tongued, the best receiver of offerings. Lengthening Praskanva's life, that he may reach old age, do homage¹ to the host of the gods.

7. The clans kindle thee, the all-possessing Hotri:

therefore conduct hither speedily, much-invoked Agni, the provident gods—

8. Savitri, the Dawn, the two Asvins, Bhaga, Agni¹, at the dawning (of the day), (at the end) of night². The Kanvas, having pressed Soma, inflame thee, the bearer of sacrificial food, O best performer of worship.

9. As thou, O Agni, art the lord of worship, the messenger of the clans, conduct hither to-day the gods awakening with the dawn, of sun-like aspect, that they may drink Soma.

10. Agni, rich in splendour! thou hast shone after the former dawns, visible to all. Thou art the guardian in the hamlets, the Purohita; thou be-longest to men at the sacrifices¹.

11. O Agni, let us put thee down (on the altar) as Manus did, O god, to be the performer of the sacrifice, the Hotri, the wise priest, the quick immortal messenger.

12. When thou, the Purohita of the gods, who art great like Mitra, goest on thy errand as messenger in their midst, then the flames of Agni shine like the roaring waves of the Sindhu¹.

13. Agni with thy attentive ears, hear me, together with the gods driven (on their chariots)¹ who accompany thee. May Mitra and Aryaman sit down on the sacrificial grass, they who come to the ceremony early in the morning.

14. May the Maruts, they who give rain, the fire-tongued increasers of Rîta, hear my praise. May Varuna, whose laws are firm, drink the Soma, united with the two Asvins and with the Dawn!

NOTES.

The hymn is ascribed to Praskaṇva Kāṇva, who is the reputed author of the whole group of the hymns, I, 44-50. It is certain that these hymns really belong to a branch of the great Kaṇva family, for which the name Praskaṇva is characteristic. Comp. my Prolegomena, p. 260.

The metre is Bârhata Pragâtha. Verse 1 = SV. I, 40. Verses 1-2 = SV. II, 1130-1131. Verse 11 = TB. II, 7, 12, 6. Verse 13 = SV. I, 50; VS. 33, 15; TB. II, 7, 12, 5.

This Agni-hymn contains a number of allusions which show that it was destined for the morning service. The same may be said of the next hymn, I, 45, and of the whole collection of Praskaṇva hymns, which are addressed exclusively to the devâḥ prâtaryāvâṇaḥ, viz. Agni in his special character as a matutinal deity, the two Asvins, the Dawn, the rising Sun. From the mention of the Soma tiroahnya 45, 10; 47, 1, and from other circumstances, Bergaigne has very ingeniously drawn the conclusion that in the Praskaṇva collection an ancient Âsvinaśastra is preserved; see Recherches sur l'histoire de la Liturgie Védique, 45.

Verse 1.

Note 1. I believe that the text, I may perhaps not say requires, but very strongly invites, a slight correction. The tradition gives ágne vívasvat ushásaḥ kītrám rādhaḥ amartya. To connect vívasvat with rādhaḥ and to make the genitive ushásaḥ depend on rādhaḥ would give an expression which is not, strictly speaking, impossible but in every case very unusual. Nothing, on the other hand, is more frequent than combinations of the locative of a noun derived from vi-vas with the genitive ushásaḥ, 'at the rising of the dawn' (ushásaḥ vṛyushṭau, vṛyushṭishu, vyúshi; comp. the phrase vásto usráḥ treated of by Kaegi, Festgruss an Böhtlingk, 48; vástoḥ usráḥ, Bartholomae, Bezzenger's Beiträge, XV, 185). I think that such a phrase should be restored in our verse, and propose to read agne vivásvan usháśaḥ, &c. The word vivásvan occurs in VIII, 102, 22. agnīm ídhe vivásvabhiḥ. The expression used here would thus be similar to that of III, 15, 2. tvám naḥ asyáḥ usháśaḥ vṛushtau . . . bodhi gopáḥ; comp. IV, 1, 5, &c.

Verse 3.

Note 1. The meaning of bháḥ-rigíka is quite uncertain. The accent would well agree with the explanation of the word as a possessive compound; dhûmáketum bháḥ-rigíkam would then be exactly parallel: whose banner is smoke, whose rigíka is light. We have then gó-rigíka as an epithet of Soma, 'he whose rigíka the cows are,' i.e. 'whose rigíka is milk,' and ávih-rigíka as an epithet of Dadhikrávan ('he whose rigíka is visible'). All this taken together is clearly insufficient for giving a result, and there is scarcely a better prospect for etymological guesses. Bergaigne's (Rel. Véd., I, 206) translation of rigíka by 'flèche' would do for bháḥ-rigíka, but it is not very tempting in the cases of gó-rigíka and ávih-rigíka. Roth (Zeitschrift der D. Morg. Ges. 48, 118) translates 'lichtglänzend.'

Note 2. Pischel's explanation of adhvarasrī (Vedische Studien, I, 53, 'Zum Opfer kommend') does not seem convincing to me.

Verse 4.

Note 1. Ludwig's translation 'dasz er die götter herbringe' is not exact. As to the real meaning of our passage, comp. VII, 9, 5. agne yáhi dûtṛyam . . . deván ákkha, 'Agni, go as a messenger . . . to the gods.'

Verse 5.

Note 1. Boehtlingk-Roth propose to read amṛitabhogana. I think the traditional text is right. Agni is called visvasya bhogana similarly, as it is said in I, 48, 10 (with regard to Ushas), vísvasya hí prānanam gīvanam tvé. Amṛita may be vocative s. neuter or masculine. Comp. Lanman, 339.

Verse 6.

Note 1. Benfey (Quantitätsverschiedenheiten, IV, 2, 27) and Ludwig take namasyá for a first person.

Verse 8.

Note 1. If the accusative agním is right, as it probably is, Agni would be invoked to conduct Agni to the sacrifice. This is quite a possible idea. Comp. the formula of the 'devatânâm âvâhanam,' 'agnim agna âvaha, somam âvaha, agnim âvaha,' i.e. 'Agni, conduct hither Agni, conduct hither Soma, conduct hither Agni.' See Hillebrandt, Das Altindische Neu- und Vollmondsopfer, p. 84.

Note 2. Lanman, 482, takes kshápāḥ as an acc. plur. I think it is gen. sing., and the accent should be kshapáḥ. Comp. VIII, 19, 31; III, 49, 4, and the phrase aktóḥ vīshāu.

Verse 10.

Note 1. Prof. Max Müller translates: 'Thou art the guardian in the hamlets, the chief-priest; thou art the human chief-priest at the sacrifices.'

Verse 12.

Note 1. With the third Pāda comp. IX, 50, 1, where it is said that the mighty strength of Soma shows itself 'sínḍhoḥ ūrméḥ iva svanáḥ,' i.e. 'like the roar of the waves of the Sindhu.'

Verse 13.

Note 1. I cannot follow the translation of Dr. Neisser, Bezenberger's Beiträge, XVIII, 316.

MANDALA I, HYMN 45.

ASHṬAKA I, ADHYĀYA 3, VARGA 31-32.

1. Sacrifice here, thou, O Agni, to the Vasus, the Rudras, and the Ādityas, to the (divine) host that receives good sacrifices¹, the Ghr̥ita-sprinkling offspring of Manu².

2. The wise gods, O Agni, are ready to listen to the worshippers: conduct them hither, the thirty-three, O lord of red horses, thou who lovest our praises.

3. As thou hast heard Priyamedha and Atri¹, O Gāta-vedas, as thou hast heard Virūpa and Āṅgiras, thus hear the invocation of Praskanva, O lord of high laws.

4. The Mahikerus¹, the Priyamedhas have invoked for their protection the lord of worship, Agni with his bright splendour.

5. O thou to whom Ghr̥ita oblations are poured out, good (Agni), hear these praises with which the sons of Kanva invoke thee for their protection.

6. O Agni, whose glory is brightest, beloved of many, the people in the clans invoke thee, the radiant-haired, to convey the sacrificial food.

7. The priests have established thee, O Agni, in the striving for day¹, as their Hotri, the ministrant, the greatest acquirer of wealth, with attentive ears, the most widely extended².

8. The wise who have pressed Soma have made thee speed hither to the feast (which is offered to the gods), bringing great light¹ and sacrificial food, O Agni, on behalf of the mortal worshipper.

9. O strength-made, good (Agni), make the gods who come in the morning, the divine host, sit down here to-day on our sacrificial grass, O Vasu, to drink the Soma.

10. Sacrifice, O Agni, with joint invocations, and bring hither the divine host. This is the Soma, O rain-giving gods. Drink (the Soma) which has been kept over night¹.

NOTES.

The hymn is ascribed to Praskaṇva. It is evidently addressed to Agni in his matutinal character; comp. the note on I, 44. The metre is Anushtubh. Verse 1 = SV. I, 96. Verse 6 = VS. XV, 31; TS. IV, 4, 4, 3; MS. II, 13, 7.

Verse 1.

Note 1. Comp. VIII, 5, 33. ákṣha svadhvarám gānam.

Note 2. As to the gods being considered here as offspring of Manu, comp. especially X, 53, 6. mānuḥ bhava ganāya daívyam gānam, 'become Manu, procreate the divine hosts.' See also Bergaigne, Rel. Védique, I, 69.

Verse 3.

Note 1. This passage is one of those which show that the Atris stood in especially friendly connection with the Kaṇvas. Of the Priyamedhas the same may be said, or perhaps we may even go further and consider them as one branch of the Kaṇvas. For a fuller discussion of these questions I refer to my paper, 'Ueber die Liedverfasser des Rig-veda,' Zeitschr. der D. Morg. Gesellschaft, XLII, 213 seq.

Verse 4.

Note 1. Máhikeravaḥ, which I have translated as a proper name, may be an adjective belonging to Priyámedhāḥ. Possibly it is derived from the root kar, 'to praise:' 'the Priyamedhas with mighty hymns.' Comp. Bartholomae, Kuhn's Zeitschrift, XXVII, 341.

Verse 7.

Note 1. As gó-ishā means 'the striving for cows,' thus dīv-ishā means 'the striving for day,' or possibly 'the striving for heaven.' Ludwig (III, 383) takes it for 'morgenopfer,' and it is true that most of the passages, in which the word occurs, are addressed to matutinal deities. Thus our passage belongs to a hymn addressed to the matutinal Agni; I, 48, 9 is addressed to Ushas; I, 139, 4; VII, 74, 1; VIII, 87, 3 to the Āsvins; IV, 46, 1; 47, 1 to Vāyu who was invoked in the Praūga-sastra belonging to the Prātaḥ-savana, and who received the Soma offering before the other deities. There is, nevertheless, at least one passage which shows that Ludwig has gone too far: VIII, 76, 9. pība ít indra marútsakhā sūtām sómam dīvishāshu, 'Drink, O Indra, with the Maruts thy friends the Soma which has been pressed at the divishās.' The Soma oblation offered to Indra Marutvat formed part of the second (midday) Savana.

Note 2. 'Sapráthastamam, the most renowned, répandu.' M. M.

Verse 8.

Note 1. Comp. IV, 5, 1. kathā dāsema agnáye brīhāt bhāḥ, 'how may we offer great light to Agni?'—which seems to mean, 'how may we make Agni brilliant?' Thus in our passage the meaning seems to be: the priests kindle Agni and perform oblations.

Verse 10.

Note 1. The tiráḥ-ahnya Soma, which was kept from one day to the next day (not, as Ludwig translates, 'der von vorgestern'), was offered to the Āsvins at the Atirātra sacrifice. Comp. Rig-veda I, 47, 1; III, 58, 7; VIII, 35, 19; Kātyāyana Srautasūtra XII, 6, 10; XXIV, 3, 42. There the commentary says, āsvinasastrakayāgasambandhināḥ kamasasthāḥ somāḥ pūrvadinanishpantatvāt tirohnyā ity ukṣyante.

MANDALA I, HYMN 58.

ASHTAKA I, ADHYÂYA 4, VARGA 23-24.

1. The strength-begotten immortal never grows tired¹, when he, the Hotri, has become the messenger of Vivasvat². He passes through the air on the best paths. In the divine world he invites (the gods) with the sacrificial food.

2. Seizing his own food the undecaying, greedy (Agni) stands on the brushwood wishing to drink. When he has been sprinkled (with ghee), he shines like a racer with his back¹. Thundering he has roared like the ridge of heaven.

3. As soon as¹ the Rudras, the Vasus have made him their Purohita, the immortal sitting down as Hotri, the conqueror of wealth, pressing forward like a chariot among the clans, among the Âyus², the god in due course discloses desirable boons.

4. Stirred by the wind he spreads among the brushwood lightly¹ (driven forward) by the sacrificial ladles, with his sickle², loudly roaring. When thou, O Agni, thirstily rushest on the wooden sticks like a bull³, thy course, O never-aging god with fiery waves, becomes black⁴.

5. He who has fiery jaws, stirred by the wind, blazes down on the forest¹ as a strong bull (rushes) on the herd. When he proceeds² with his stream of light to the imperishable atmosphere, then what is moveable and immoveable (and) the winged (birds) are afraid.

6. The Bhṛigus have placed thee among men, who art beautiful like a treasure, who art easy to invoke for people; thee the Hotri, O Agni, the excellent guest, a delightful friend like Mitra to the divine race!

7. I worship with good cheer Agni the steward¹ of all treasures, whom the seven ladles² (of the priests), the worshippers choose as the Hotri, the best sacrificer at the rites, and I pray for treasure³.

8. Son of strength, great like Mitra, grant to-day flawless protection to us who magnify thee. Agni! guard from distress with strongholds of iron him who praises thee, O offspring of vigour!

9. Be a shelter to him who praises thee, O resplendent one; be protection, generous giver, to the generous. Agni! guard him who praises thee from distress. May he who gives wealth for our prayer, come quickly in the morning¹.

NOTES.

The hymn is ascribed to Nodhas Gautama, who is considered as the Rishi of the whole collection, I, 58–64. This tradition is based on, and confirmed by, several passages of the text: I, 61, 14; 62, 13; 64, 1.

The metre is Gagatī verses 1–5, Trishṭubh verses 6–9. None of the verses of this hymn occurs in the other Saṁhitās.

Verse 1.

Note 1. I believe that Professor Aufrecht (Kuhn's Zeitschrift, XXV, 435) is right in reading nū kīit sahaḥ-gāh amṛtāh nū tandate. Comp. as to nū kīit nū, I, 120, 2; VI, 37, 3; VII, 22, 8. Agni is frequently called ātandrah dūtāh or similarly. Possibly we might read, instead of nū tandate, nī tandate, though parallel passages for the combination of this root with nī are not known.—Prof. Max

Müller's opinion is different. He writes: We say, der Funke schlägt oder fängt. Why should not the Hindu have said that Agni strikes out. That would be vi tundate, Agni schlägt aus im Augenblick. But even ni tundate may have been used in the sense of the spark striking down on the tinder—the atasâs, mentioned in verse 2—which he ignites. I should translate: 'The strength-begotten immortal strikes down or breaks forth (vi) quickly, whenever the Hotri (Agni) becomes the messenger of the sacrificer (?).'

Note 2. I cannot follow Aufrecht in his translation 'zum boten des opfernden.' Comp. on Agni as the messenger of Vivasvat, Bergaigne, Rel. Védique, I, 87; H. O., Religion des Veda, 122, 275.

Verse 2.

Note 1. Literally, his back shines like a racer. On this kind of comparison, see Bergaigne, Mélanges Renier, 86; Pischel, Vedische Studien, I, 107.

Verse 3.

Note 1. Krânâ: comp. von Bradke, Dyâus Asura, Ahura Mazda und die Asuras, p. 36; Pischel, Vedische Studien, I, 70.

Note 2. Bergaigne, Rel. Védique, I, 59 seq.

Verse 4.

Note 1. On vr̥thâ, see Geldner, Vedische Studien, I, 116; Neisser, Bezenberger's Beiträge, XIX, 148 seq.

Note 2. The meaning is: with his flames which are sharp like a sickle. Sr̥ni is written here as a paroxytonon; in several other passages it is an oxytonon. Such differences are not quite rare, and there is no reason for taking on this account sr̥nyâ as an instr. plur. fem. of the adjective sr̥nya, 'mit verkürzter Endung' (Geldner, loc. cit.). 'His sickle is the sharp edge of Agni.' M. M. — On guh̥bhih, comp. Pischel, Vedische Studien, II, 111.

Note 3. As to vriśhâyāse with the accusative, comp. Gaedicke, 74. RV. X, 44, 4. ûrgáḥ skambhám . . . vriśhâyase.

Note 4. With the last Pāda comp. IV, 7, 9. krishnám te éma rúsataḥ puráḥ bhāḥ.

Verse 5.

Note 1. That is, among the fuel.

Note 2. I think that we have here probably—(though, of course, this explanation can be avoided)—an anacoluthon. The poet began with the nominative (abhivrágan), and then he changed the construction and went on as if he had begun with the ablative, taking sthátúḥ káratham (comp. Lanman, 422) as the subject instead of Agni.—Patatrínaḥ seems to be nom. pl. ; comp. I, 94, 11 (see below).

Verse 7.

Note 1. The translation of aratí is only approximative and conjectural.

Note 2. Comp. Pischel, Ved. Studien, II, 113.

Note 3. Comp. III, 54, 3. saparyámi práyasâ yámi rátnam.

Verse 9.

Note 1. The last Pāda is the standing conclusion of the Nodhas hymns.

MANDALA I, HYMN 59.

ASHṬAKA I, ADHYĀYA 4, VARGA 25.

1. The other Agnis (the other fires) are verily thy branches, O Agni. In thee all the immortals enjoy themselves¹. Vaisvânara! Thou art the centre² of human settlements; like a supporting column thou holdest men³.

2. The head of heaven, the navel of the earth is Agni; he has become the steward¹ of both worlds. Thee, a god, the gods have engendered, O Vaisvânara, to be a light for the Ârya.

3. As in the sun the rays are firmly fixed, thus in Agni Vaisvânara all treasures have been laid down¹. (The treasures) which dwell in the mountains, in the herbs, the waters, and among men—of all that thou art the king.

4. As the two great worlds to their son¹, like a Hotri, like a skilful man, (we bring) praises— manifold (praises) to him who is united with the sun, to the truly strong one, new (praises) to Vaisvânara, the manliest god.

5. Thy greatness, O Gâtavedas, Vaisvânara, has exceeded even the great heaven. Thou art the king of the human tribes; thou hast by fighting gained wide space for the gods.

6. Let me now proclaim the greatness of the bull whom the Pûrus worship as the destroyer of enemies¹. Agni Vaisvânara, having slain the Dasyu, shook the (aerial) arena and cut down Sambara.

7. Agni Vaisvânara, extending by his greatness over all dominions, who is to be worshipped, the bright one, rich in loveliness, is awake (or, is praised) among the Bharadvâgas, in the homestead of Puruṁṁtha Sâtavaneya, with his hundredfold blessings.

NOTES.

The same Rîshi as in I, 58. Metre, Trishṭubh. None of the verses of this hymn occurs in the other Samhitâs.

Verse 1.

Note 1. Comp. VII, 11, 1. ná rité tvát amṛtāḥ māday-ante, 'the immortals do not enjoy themselves without thee.'

Note 2. Literally, 'the navel.' Comp. Muir, V, 214.

Note 3. Comp. IV, 5, 1 (see below). úpa stabhâyat upamît ná ródhaḥ.

Verse 2.

Note 1. Comp. the remark on I, 58, 7 (note 1).

Verse 3.

Note 1. I cannot follow Prof. von Roth (Zeitschrift der D. Morgenl. Gesellschaft, XLVIII, 116), who explains dadhire as a third person sing. of dhri.

Verse 4.

Note 1. The incompleteness both of the construction and of the metre shows that the text of the first Pâda is corrupt. I doubt whether it ever will be possible to restore the correct reading with full certainty, but I shall be glad if others succeed better than I did—and I may add, better than Prof. von Roth (Zeitschrift der D. Morg. Gesellschaft, XLVIII, 117 seq.) seems to me to have succeeded—in correcting and in interpreting the text. I think that after sûnâve ródasî clearly one syllable is wanted to complete the Pâda : possibly we should read therefore sūnāve ródasyoḥ (comp. verse 2, Pâda 2, aratīḥ ródasyoḥ, which words form the end of the Pâda). Agni, as is well known, is the son of the two worlds, the sūnúḥ ródasyoḥ. In the beginning of the Pâda brīhatī must either refer to the two worlds: in this case we have to read brīhatyóḥ (instead of brīhatī iva); or brīhatī may refer, as this adjective frequently does, to the gírah, and we shall possibly have to read brīhatīḥ vah (as to vah, comp. Delbrück, Altindische Syntax, 206). But of course all these are mere guesses. In every case the verb on which the accusative gírah depends ('we bring,' or something like that) must be supplied.

Verse 6.

Note 1. Or, as the killer of Vṛitra. See H. O., Religion des Veda, 135, note 2.

MANDALA I, HYMN 60.

ASHTAKA I, ADHYĀYA 4, VARGA 26.

1. Mâtariśvan brought (Agni) to Bhrigu as a gift precious like wealth, of double birth¹, the carrier, the famous, the beacon of the sacrifice², the ready and immediately successful messenger.

2. Both follow his command, the Usigs¹ offering sacrificial food, and the mortals. The Hotri (Agni) has sat down before daybreak among the clans, the lord of the clans, whose leave should be asked, the performer of worship.

3. May our new, beautiful praise, born¹ from our heart, reach him the honey-tongued (Agni), whom the human priests in our settlement², the Âyus, offering enjoyment have engendered.

4. The Usig¹, the purifier, the Vasu has been established among men, the best Hotri among the clans, the domestic² master of the house in the house: Agni has become the treasure-lord of treasures.

5. Thus we, the Gotamas, praise thee, O Agni, the lord of treasures, with our (pious) thoughts, rubbing thee as (they rub down) a swift racer that wins the prize. May he who gives wealth for our prayer, come quickly in the morning¹.

NOTES.

Rishi and metre are the same. No verse occurs in the other Saṃhitās.

Verse 1.

Note 1. The celestial and the terrestrial birth of Agni. Comp. Bergaigne, Rel. Véd., II, 52.

Note 2. The text has vidáthasya. Comp. I, 31, 6, note 2.

Verse 2.

Note 1. On usṛ ('the willing one'), as denoting the mythical priests who have first established Agni and have sacrificed as the first, comp. Bergaigne, I, 57 seq. The ubháyâsaḥ seem to be these mythical ancestors and the actual sacrificers.

Verse 3.

Note 1. I propose to read gāyamânâ. Comp. I, 171, 2. stómaḥ . . . hridá tashṭáḥ; II, 35, 2. hridáḥ á sútashṭam mántram; VIII, 43, 2. ágne gánâmi sushṛutím; V, 42, 13. gíram . . . gāyamânâm, &c.—Comp. Lanman, 356.

Note 2. On the meaning of vrigána, see Max Müller, vol. xxxii, pp. xx, 208, 304; Geldner, Vedische Studien, I, 139 seq., with my remarks, Göttinger Gelehrte Anzeigen, 1890, 410 seq.; Ludwig, Ueber Methode bei Interpretation des Rîg-veda, 27 seq.; Colinet, Les Principes de l'Exégèse Védique d'après MM. Pischel et Geldner, 28 seq.; von Bradke, Zeitschrift der Deutschen Morg. Gesellschaft, XLVIII, 500; Bechtel, Nachrichten der Göttinger Gesellschaft der Wiss., 1894, 392 seq.

Verse 4.

Note 1. See verse 2, note 1.

Note 2. Bartholomae's theory (Bezenberger's Beiträge, XV, 194) that the stem dámûnas has been developed out of the phrase dámû naḥ, 'in our house,' does not carry conviction.

Verse 5.

Note 1. See I, 58, 9, note 1.

MANDALA I, HYMN 65.

ASHTAKA I, ADHYĀYA 5, VARGA 9.

1¹. Thee who hidest thyself in secret like a thief with an animal² (which he has stolen)—who hadst harnessed³ adoration and carriedst adoration—

2. The wise unanimously followed by thy foot-marks¹. All (gods) deserving worship (reverentially) sat down near thee.

3. The gods followed the laws of Rita. There was an encompassing as the heaven (encompasses) the earth¹.

4. In the lap, in the womb of Rita, the waters nourish the fine child with praise, him who is well born.

5. Like good fortune, like a broad abode, like the fertile hill¹, like the refreshing stream,

6. Like a racer urged forward in the race, like the rapids of the Sindhu¹—who can hold him back?

7. (He is) the kinsman of the rivers, as a brother of his sisters. He eats the forests as a king (eats, i. e. takes the wealth of) the rich¹.

8. When he has spread through the forests, driven by the wind, Agni shears the hair of the earth.

9. Sitting in the waters he hisses like a swan. (He is) most famous by his power of mind, he who belongs to the clans, awakening at dawn—

10. A performer of worship like Soma, the god born from Rita, like a young (?)¹ beast, far-extending, far-shining.

NOTES.

The authorship of the whole collection, I, 65-73, is ascribed to Parāśara Śāktya. These hymns are addressed exclusively to Agni. The greater part of them (65-70) is composed in the Virāg metre; comp. on this metre my Prolegomena, 95 seq. I have given there my reasons for considering that each verse consists of twenty, not of forty syllables.

This section ascribed to Parāśara has been treated of by Bollensen, Zeitschrift der D. Morg. Gesellschaft, XXII, 569 seq. No verse of these hymns composed in the metre Dvipadā Virāg (I, 65-70) occurs in the other Samhitās.

Verse 1.

Note 1. Professor Max Müller proposes the following translation for verses 1 and 2: The wise (gods) together followed thee (Agni) when in hiding, by means of footsteps, as one follows a thief by the animal; they followed thee who accepts and carries adoration (to the gods). All the worshipful gods sat down (reverentially) near thee.

Note 2. There is no reason for reading with Bartholomae (Studien zur indogermanischen Sprachgeschichte, I, 48) parvān (gen. plur.) nā tāyūm.

Note 3. Ludwig proposes yuvānām, which is quite unnecessary.—See also Gaedicke, 173.

Verse 2.

Note 1. We have here the well-known myth of the hidden Agni discovered by the gods. The 'wise ones,' (dhīrāk) are no doubt the searching gods, the same who are called yāgatrāk in the last Pāda, and who are expressly designated as devāk in verse 3. Comp. Bergaigne, I, 110.

Verse 3.

Note 1. Regarding the construction, see Gaedicke, 192.—Professor Max Müller's opinion on this phrase differs from mine. He writes: 'I should prefer parīśhā. But parīśhā seems to mean a running about, reconnoitring, searching. "There was searching on earth as in heaven," lit. earth, like heaven, was reconnoitring-ground.'

Verse 5.

Note 1. Comp. VIII, 50, 2. girīḥ nā bhugmā. I believe that Boehtlingk-Roth, Bollensen, and Grassmann are right in correcting our passage accordingly; raṇvā, prīthvī, sambhū follow the gender of the corresponding substantives, and the same may be expected here. Comp. Lanman, 530. The meaning is that Agni yields nourishment to all beings as a mountain fertilises the country by the waters which come down from it; comp. VIII, 49, 2. girēḥ iva prā rāsāḥ asya pinvire dātrāṇi purubhógasāḥ.

Verse 6.

Note 1. Regarding the construction, comp. Gaedicke, 252 seq.; Bergaigne, Mélanges Renier, 95. Joh. Schmidt (Die Pluralbildungen der indogerm. Neutra, 305) and Ludwig (V, 524) are wrong in taking kshódaḥ as a locative or as an instrumental respectively.

Verse 7.

Note 1. Comp. Pischel-Geldner, Vedische Studien, I, p. xvi.

Verse 10.

Note 1. Can sīsvā be the nominative of a stem sīsvan which stands by the side of sīsu as rībhvan of rībhú? Prof. Max Müller proposes: 'Large like a cow with young, like a pregnant cow.'

MANDALA I, HYMN 66.

ASHTAKA I, ADHYĀYA 5, VARGA 10.

1. Like unto excellent wealth, like unto the shine of the sun, like unto living breath, like unto one's own¹ son—

2. Like unto a quick takvan¹ he (Agni) holds the wood, like milk, like a milch cow², bright and shining.

3. He holds safety, pleasant like a homestead, like ripe barley, a conqueror of men,

4. Like a Rishi uttering (sacred) shouts, praised among the clans; like a well-cared-for race-horse¹, Agni bestows vigour.

5. He to whose flame men do not grow accustomed¹, who is like one's own mind², like a wife on a couch, enough for all (happiness).

6. When the bright (Agni) has shone forth, he is like a white (horse [?])¹ among people, like a chariot with golden ornaments, impetuous in fights.

7. Like an army which is sent forward he shows his vehemence, like an archer's shaft with sharp point.

8. He who is born is one twin; he who will be born¹ is the other twin—the lover of maidens, the husband of wives².

9¹. As cows go to their stalls, all that moves and we, for the sake of a dwelling, reach him who has been kindled.

10. Like the flood of the Sindhu¹ he has driven forward the downwards-flowing (waters)². The cows lowed at the sight of the sun³.

NOTES.

The same Rishi and metre.

Verse 1.

Note 1. Comp. I, 166, 2; 185, 2; X, 39, 14. The second passage (nítayam ná súnúm pitróh upásthe dyávâ rákshatam prithiví nah ábhvât) would be sufficient to show that we cannot translate 'wie ein überlebender sohn' (Ludwig).

Verse 2.

Note 1. We do not know what animal the takvan is. Comp. I, 134, 5 with M. M.'s note.

Note 2. See Bergaigne, Mél. Renier, 101; Gaedicke, 253.

Verse 4.

Note 1. Comp. X, 101, 7. prinitá ásvân hitám gayâtha.

Verse 5.

Note 1. Comp. VII, 4, 3. durókam agníh âyáve susoka.

Note 2. Prof. Max Müller believes that kratu here means, 'like kartri, a sacrificer, so that kratuh na nityah sounds like sónuh na nityah, one's own sacrificing son. But all this is very obscure.'

Verse 6.

Note 1. The second Páda is translated by Grassmann: 'wie Licht in Häusern;' by Ludwig: 'fast weiss, bei den menschenstämmen.' I think that there can be no doubt that the words svetáh ná contain a comparison like all the other comparisons of which these hymns are full; this comparison is unduly effaced in Ludwig's translation. Nor is Grassmann right in translating svetáh bei 'Licht;' the word is an adjective meaning 'white' and nothing else. We must supply here, as in many passages, a substantive, and I do not see any reason why this should not be that substantive with which sveta is most frequently combined in the Rig-veda, namely arva; comp. I, 116, 6; 118, 9 [119, 10]; VII, 77, 3; X, 39, 10. In V, 1, 4 it is said of Agni: svetáh vâgî gâyate ágre áhnâm, 'the white racer is born in the beginning of the days.'

Verse 8.

Note 1. The traditional text is yamáḥ ha gâtáḥ yamáḥ gánitvam. Ludwig translates 'bewältiger des gebornen, bewältiger auch des, was erst geboren wird.' It will scarcely be necessary to state the reasons which make against this translation. Yamáḥ . . . yamáḥ evidently means: 'the one twin . . . the other twin.' Now if we leave the text unchanged, we cannot but translate: 'the one twin is he who has been born, the other twin is that which will be born'—which sounds very strange. In I, 89, 10 we have áditiḥ gâtám áditiḥ gánitvam; IV, 18, 4. antáḥ gâtéshu utá yé gánitvāḥ; X, 45, 10. út gâténa bhínadat út gánitvaiḥ. In all these cases gâtá and gánitva stand parallel; there is no such difference as in our passage, according to the traditional text, between him (masc.) who is . . . and that (neuter) which will be . . . Thus I propose to read gánitvaḥ, of which conjecture Ludwig has thought also (see his note, IV, 259): that present Agni who has been born, and that future Agni who will be born, are twins.—Prof. Max Müller has discussed this passage in his Science of Language, II, 630 seqq. He interprets the twin who has been born as Agni representing the morning; the twin who will be born as the evening.

Note 2. The maidens very probably are the dawns (comp. Prof. Max Müller's discussion quoted in the last note). Are the wives the sacrificial ladles which approach Agni, or the offerings of ghee, or the prayers? See Bergaigne, Rel. Védique, II, 9 seqq.

Verse 9.

Note 1. This verse is very obscure, and I am quite aware of the merely tentative character of the translation which

I propose. I leave vaḥ untranslated (comp. Delbrück, Altindische Syntax, 206), which must be done in most of the numerous verses beginning with the words tám vaḥ. I then read karáthā (comp. 68, 1 ; 70, 3. 7). Vasatyá seems to be either a dative similar to the newly-discovered datives in -ā of a-stems, or we possibly should read vasatyai (vasatyá in the Samhitā-pāṭha).—Prof. Max Müller thinks of a correction karāmaḥ and would translate : ‘To him (whom you know—vaḥ) when lighted we go for our dwelling, as the cows reach their home.’

Verse 10.

Note 1. Comp. above, 65, 6.

Note 2. Or the downwards-streaming libations of Ghrīta and the like? Comp. below, I, 72, 10 with note 4.

Note 3. Comp. below, 69, 10.

MANDALA I, HYMN 67.

ASHTAKA I, ADHYĀYA 5, VARGA 11.

1. Victorious¹ in the forests, a friend among men, he demands obedience like a king, the undecaying one².

2. Like good peace, like fortunate wisdom, may he (Agni) be a kind Hotri, a carrier of offerings.

3. Having taken in his hand all manly powers, he has made the gods fear, when sitting down in his hiding-place.

4. There the thoughtful men find him, when they have recited the spells which they had fashioned in their heart.

5. As the goat¹ (supports) the earth², thus he supports the earth²; he upholds the sky by his efficacious spells.

6. Protect the dear¹ footsteps of the cattle². O Agni, thou who hast a full life, thou hast gone from covert to covert³.

7. He who has seen him the hidden one, he who has got near to the stream of *Rīta*¹—

8. They who get him off, doing service to Rīta, to him¹ he then indicates riches.

9. He who grows up with might within the plants, and within the children¹, and within the sprouting grass²—

10. The splendour [?] in the home of the waters¹, the full-lived. The sages made him as if building a seat.

NOTES.

The same Rīshi and metre.

Verse 1.

Note 1. 'Gâyuh : aus gyâyuh, wie der compar. gyâyân gyeshthah zeigt,' Ludwig. But what shows that gyâyân is the comparative of gâyuh and that the utterly impossible change of gy into g is possible? Ludwig's translation 'überwindend' is right; comp. I, 119, 3.

Note 2. I propose to read aguryáh. Prof. Max Müller conjectures—as Roth (Pet. Dict.) has done—that srushāi may mean 'obedient, servant;' he translates: 'He desires a servant (or worshipper) who is not aged.'

Verse 5.

Note 1. On the mythical goat whose office it is to support the worlds, comp. I, 164, 6; VIII, 41, 10; X, 82, 6; Bergaigne, III, 21; H. O., Religion des Veda, 72.

Note 2. For 'earth' the text has two different words, kshám and prithivīm. Prof. Max Müller conjectures dyām for kshám: 'He, Agni, supports the earth, as the buck the sky.'

Verse 6.

Note 1. Literally, 'the dear footsteps;' but the meaning of priyá may be compared to that of the Homeric φίλος, his own.

Note 2. One could be tempted to refer the word pasu to Agni, whose footsteps (padāni) the 'wise ones' follow (65, 2), and whom they find out in his hiding. Thus we could translate, 'Look at the dear footsteps of the beast.' But the comparison of 70, 6 makes it more probable that the imperative ní páhi is addressed to Agni. I believe therefore that Grassmann is right in translating 'Die lieben Stätten der Heerden schütze.' Ludwig's translation is similar to this. Prof. Max Müller translates: 'Observe the footsteps of the animal (the stolen animal of the thief Agni).'

Note 3. With guhá guham comp. I, 53, 7. yudhá yúdhām, purá púram.

Verse 7.

Note 1. Dhārām ritásya: comp. V, 12, 2. ritásya dhārāḥ ánu trindhi pûrvīḥ, 'open the many streams of Rita;' VII, 43, 4. ritásya dhārāḥ sudúghāḥ dúhânāḥ, 'milking the streams of Rita flowing with plenty.' The stream of Rita seems to mean the stream of blessings (such as rain, ghee, &c.) which flows to mankind according to the eternal laws of Rita.

Verse 8.

Note 1. The poet passes over from the plural to the singular.

Verse 9.

Note 1. Bollensen's conjecture pragāsu (instead of pragāḥ utá) seems very probable to me. Prof. von Roth (Ueber gewisse Kürzungen des Wortendes, p. 2) takes a different view.

Note 2. Comp. I, 95, 10 (see below); VII, 9, 3. apām gárbhaḥ prasvāḥ ā viveśa, 'the son of the waters has entered upon the sprouting grass.'

Verse 10.

Note 1. 'Why not kitiḥ apām dame, that is, the (burning) pile in the home of the waters.' M. M.

MANDALA I, HYMN 68.

ASHTAKA I, ADHYÂYA 5, VARGA 12.

1. Cooking¹ (the oblations?) the quick one has approached the sky. He has revealed the nights and what stands and moves²—

2. When he the god, alone of all these gods¹ encompassed (the others) by his greatness.

3. When thou, O god, hadst been born living from the dry (wood), then all (gods and men?) were pleased with thy wisdom.

4. They all obtained the name of divinity, of immortality¹, serving the Rita in due way.

5. The instigations of Rita, the thought of *Rita*¹: they all performed the works of [?] the full-lived one².

6. Bestow wealth, thou who art the knowing one, on him who worships thee or who does service to thee¹.

7. He who sits down as the Hotri among the offspring of Manu: he verily is the master of all these riches.

8. They longed together for the seed in their bodies¹, and the wise ones were concordant among each other in their minds.

9. They took pleasure in his will, as sons (take pleasure) in their father's (will), the quick ones who have listened to his command.

10. He who is rich in food has opened the gates of wealth¹. The householder (Agni) has adorned the sky with stars.

NOTES.

The same Rīshi and metre.

Verse 1.

Note 1. Boehtlingk-Roth are wrong in deriving srīnán (which should more correctly be written sriṇán, comp. my Prolegomena, 477) from the root sri. They supply an object like soḥiḥ and translate: 'Licht verbreitend hebt er sich zum Himmel.'

Note 2. Lanman, 422.

Verse 2.

Note 1. Bollensen conjectures devánám deváh (instead of deváh devánám) which seems to be right (comp. below, 69, 2), though this conjecture is not absolutely necessary (see my Prolegomena, 97).

Verse 4.

Note 1. Amṛítam belongs to náma; comp. V, 57, 5. amṛítam náma bhegire; X, 123, 4. vidát gandharváh amṛítáni náma.

Verse 5.

Note 1. With ritásya dhītíḥ comp. I, 71, 3; IV, 23, 8; IX, 76, 4; 97, 34; 111, 2.—Prof. Max Müller thinks that rita should be taken as a name of Agni: 'for the righteous (Agni) are the prayers, for the righteous the devotion.'

Note 2. Is visváyuh an adverb meaning 'eternally'? As visváyu is an epithet of Agni frequently used in the Rígvēda and especially in the Parásara hymns (see 67, 6. 10; 68, 5; 73, 4), one feels tempted to read visváyoh (comp. IV, 42, 1. rāshtrám kshatríyasya visváyoh).

Verse 6.

Note 1. Comp. III, 59, 2. yáh te áditya śikshati vraténa.

Verse 8.

Note 1. Some light is thrown on this obscure verse by the hymn, I, 72, a hymn belonging, as our hymn does, to the Parâsara collection. It is shown by the second verse of that hymn (see below) that the searching ones, 'ámûráh,' are the gods who seek Agni. It seems probable, consequently, that the 'seed' is Agni (comp. I, 164, 35, where Soma is said to be vr̥tshnāh ásvasya rétaḥ, 'the seed of the manly horse'). Of the same searching gods in I, 72, 5 the expression samgânânāḥ is used; comp. sám gâṇata in our passage.

Verse 10.

Note 1. Ráyah must be a genitive; comp. I, 72, 8. râyáh dúrah ví ritagñāḥ agānan. Probably the accent should be râyáh; comp., however, Lanman, 431.

MANDALA I, HYMN 69.

ASHTAKA I, ADHYÂYA 5, VARGA 13.

1. Bright, flaming, like the lover of the Dawn¹, he has, like the light of the sky, filled the two (worlds of Heaven and Earth) which are turned towards each other.

2. As soon as thou wert born thou hast excelled by thy power of mind ; being the son of the gods thou hast become their father.

3. (Agni is) a worshipper (of the gods), never foolish, (always) discriminating ; (he is) like the udder of the cows ; (he is) the sweetness of food¹—

4. Like a kind friend to men, not to be led astray¹, sitting in the midst, the lovely one, in the house ;

5. Like a child when born, he is delightful in the house ; like a race-horse which is well cared for¹, he has wandered across the clans².

6. When I call (to the sacrifice) the clans who dwell in the same nest with the heroes, may Agni then attain all divine powers¹.

7. When thou hast listened to these heroes, no one breaks those laws of thine.

8. That verily is thy wonderful deed that thou hast killed¹, with thy companions, (all foes), that, joined by the heroes, thou hast accomplished thy works².

9. Like the lover of the Dawn¹, resplendent and bright, of familiar form : may he (thus) pay attention to this (sacrificer).

10. Carrying (him) they opened by themselves the doors (of heaven). They all shouted at the aspect of the sun¹.

NOTES.

The same Rishi and metre.

Verse 1.

Note 1. The lover of the Dawn is here the Sun. See Pischel, Vedische Studien, I, 31.

Verse 3.

Note 1. Agni is the sweetness of food (comp. V, 7, 6. svādanam pitūnām); it is not probable that svādma and ūdha should depend on vigānān, as Ludwig believes.

Verse 4.

Note 1. I adopt Boehtlingk-Roth's conjecture ahūryāh. Āhūrya would mean, 'he who is to be led astray.'

Verse 5.

Note 1. See above, 66, 4.

Note 2. 'He has overcome the (hostile) clans.' M. M.

Verse 6.

Note 1. Perhaps devatvá is an instrumental, as Ludwig takes it. In this case we should have to translate: 'may Agni by his divine power attain everything.'—Prof. Max Müller translates this verse: 'When I with my men call the clans of the same nest (the gods), Agni will obtain all divine honours.'

Verse 8.

Note 1. The first hemistich of this verse has eleven syllables instead of ten and shows the regular Trishubh type. The same irregularity occurs in 70, 4. 10. As I have shown in my Prolegomena, p. 97, this metrical irregularity does not necessitate corrections of the text, and the comparison of X, 147, 1 (see next note), where it is said áhan yát vrītrám . . . vivéḥ apáḥ, seems even to confirm the traditional reading. It cannot be denied, however, that the double yát and the use of áhan without an object raises some suspicion. In I, 34, 3; 186, 4 we have samāné áhan. Possibly we may read, tát tú te dámsaḥ áhan samāné, 'this wonderful deed of thine has been accomplished on one and the same day (with that mentioned in verse 7).' I am fully aware of the uncertainty of such guesses. The removal of yát has already been proposed by Bollensen (Zeitschrift der Deutschen Morg. Gesellschaft, XXII, 592).

Note 2. Here we may correct the text with greater certainty than in the first hemistich, or to speak more accurately, we shall have to correct not the traditional text itself, but that ancient grammatical commentary on the text which has been preserved to us in the Padapāṭha. The words vivérápāmsi of the Samhitāpāṭha are written in the Padapāṭha vivéḥ rāpāmsi. Now we read IV, 19, 10. āpāmsi . . . nāryā áviveshīḥ, 'thou hast performed manly works.' In X, 147, 1 we have áhan yát vrītrám nāryam vivéḥ apáḥ: here the adjective nārya clearly shows that apáḥ is a blunder for āpāḥ, and we must translate, 'when thou hast killed Vrītra and performed thy manly work.' This passage shows that in X, 76, 3 also vivéḥ apáḥ should be corrected (v. āpāḥ). Thus we have three passages in which áviveshīḥ or vivéḥ has the object āpāḥ, āpāmsi, and we may infer with full certainty that in our passage vivérápāmsi does not correspond to a Padapāṭha reading vivéḥ rāpāmsi but vivéḥ āpāmsi. The same may be said with regard to VI, 31, 3 (mushāyāḥ kakrām áviveḥ rāpāmsi; Samh. ávive rāpāmsi).

Verse 9.

Note 1. Comp. above, verse 1.

Verse 10.

Note 1. Comp. above, 66, 10.

MANDALA I, HYMN 70.

ASHTAKA I, ADHYĀYA 5, VARGA 14.

1. May we, the poor¹, succeed in many (pious) thoughts². May Agni with his pure splendour attain everything—

2. He who understands the divine laws and the birth of the human race.

3. He who is the child of the waters, the child of the trees, the child of that which stands, and the child of that which moves.

4. Even in the rock (they have done homage [?]) to him, in his dwelling¹. (He is) like a protector [?]² of the clans, the immortal one, he who is of a good mind.

5. For he, Agni, (shows himself as) an earth-protecting (lord) of riches¹ to the man who satisfies him with well-spoken (prayers).

6. Protect, O knowing one, these beings, thou who knowest the birth of gods and men¹.

7. He whom many nights (and dawns), in their different forms¹, may increase, whom that which moves² and that which stands (increases), the god penetrated by Rita—

8. That Hotri who has sat down in the sun¹, has been successfully worshipped² (by the human sacrificers), he who truly accomplishes all his works.

9. On the cows, on the trees thou hast conferred excellence. May all men bring us tribute in the sun¹.

10. In many places men have worshipped thee. They have brought (thee) to different places¹ as sons (divide) the property of an aged father².

11¹. (He is) like a greedy man² who goes straight (to his aim), like a mighty archer, like a fearful avenger [?]³, impetuous in contests⁴.

NOTES.

The same Rīshi and metre.

Verse 1.

Note 1. I adopt Bergaigne's opinion on the word arī (see Religion Védique, II, 218 seq.).

Note 2. The Padapāṭha has manīṣhā instead of manīṣhāḥ. See my Prolegomena, 385; Lanman, 363. Prof. Max Müller proposes to translate: 'May we by wisdom overcome many enemies!' He writes: 'Is not vanema almost a standing formula as applied to enemies? Let us conquer the enemies. The enemies are masculine in VII, 48, 3. viśvān aryāḥ . . . van-van, feminine in VI, 16, 27. vanvāntaḥ aryāḥ arātiḥ. VIII, 39, 2. viśvāḥ aryāḥ arātiḥ. X, 133, 3. viśvāḥ arātayaḥ aryāḥ. IV, 50, 11. gagastām aryāḥ vanūṣhām arātiḥ (repeated VII, 97, 9; cf. I, 29, 4).' For my translation I refer to II, 5, 7. stómam . . . vanéma; II, 11, 12. dhíyam vanema; I, 122, 14. aryāḥ gírah; X, 148, 3. aryāḥ vā gírah abhí arka vidvān.

Verse 4.

Note 1. Or: even in the rock (they have done homage) to him, and in the (human) dwelling? I believe we must supply a verb on which the dative asmai depends. Ludwig proposes to read duroṣām: 'within the stone is his dwelling.' Comp. II, 1, 1; VI, 48, 5.

Note 2. I do not understand viśām ná viśvaḥ. Ludwig translates 'er ist der menschen allgemeiner, unsterblicher fürsorger.' But vísva does not mean 'allgemein,' and Ludwig omits ná, 'like.' One should expect a phrase like visám ná vispátih, which of course is metrically impossible. Is it too bold to correct vísva into vispáh, a word hitherto not found in the texts, but formed exactly like stipá, pasupá, tanûpá and others?—Prof. Max Müller takes asmai as dependent on svâdhîh and vísva as belonging at the same time to amrîta and to visám. He translates: 'To him also who dwells in the rock and in the house, every immortal like every one among men is well disposed.'

Verse 5.

Note 1. Comp. VII, 10, 5. sá hí kshápâvân ábhavat rayinâm.

Verse 6.

Note 1. Most probably we have here not the accusative mártân but the genitive mártâm, which was confounded by the arrangers of the traditional text with the accusative and treated according to the Sandhi rules which govern the ending -ân. See Lanman, Noun-Inflection, 353; Bartholomae, Studien zur indogermanischen Sprachgeschichte, I, 48.

Verse 7.

Note 1. Lanman (p. 422) takes kshapáh vírûpáh as accusatives, and translates, 'Whom through many nights and mornings all beings worship.' I believe that they are nominatives, and that we should accentuate kshápáh. As vírûpa is a regular epithet of náktoshásá, I think that kshápáh is to be understood as an elliptic plural similar to the elliptic duals ushásá or áhanî (comp. Delbrück, Altindische Syntax, 102), and that it means, 'the nights (and mornings).'
—Comp. VI, 38, 4. várdhân māsáh saráda dyáva índram, 'May months, years, days increase Indra's greatness.'

Note 2. Of course ka rátham is a mistake for karátham, as first pointed out by Benfey.

Verse 8.

Note 1. On the locative svar, see Lanman, 488; Joh. Schmidt in Kuhn's Zeitschrift, XXVII, 306; Bartholomae in Bezzenberger's Beiträge, XV, 42. Comp. X, 61, 14. sṛaḥ ná yé trishadhasthé nishedúḥ.

Note 2. Comp. X, 53, 2. árādhi hótā nishádā yágíyān.

Verse 9.

Note 1. Is it not more probable that tribute was brought to Agni (comp. V, 1, 10) than to the human worshippers? Possibly we should change sṛaḥ naḥ (svar naḥ of the Samhitāpāṭha) into svarnaḥ, a vocative of the stem sṛanri = sṛanara. The translation would be, 'All men have brought tribute to thee, O sun-hero!'

Verse 10.

Note 1. Comp. V, 11, 4. agním nárah ví bharante grīhé-grīhe.

Note 2. Regarding the metre, comp. above, 69, 8, note 1.

Verse 11.

Note 1. This verse may possibly be a later addition. See Bergaigne, Recherches sur l'Histoire de la Samhitā, I, 61.

Note 2. On grīdhnú, comp. Pischel, Ved. Studien, I, 231.

Note 3. Comp. I, 32, 14. áheḥ yâtáram.

Note 4. See above, 66, 6.

MANDALA I, HYMN 71.

ASHTAKA I, ADHYÂYA 5, VARGA 15-16.

1. The loving (women) have (amorously) excited ¹ their lover, as wives of the same nest (house) their own husband. The sisters have delighted in the dark and in the red (goddess) ², as the cows in the brightly shining dawn.

2. Our fathers, the Ângiras ¹, have broken even the strong fortresses by their hymns, the rock by their shouting. They have opened to us the path of the great heaven; they have obtained day and sun and the shine of the dawn ².

3. They founded the Rîta; they set into motion the thought of it ¹. Thus then the widely-spread (prayers) ² of the poor ³ which seek to obtain (wealth), which are free from thirst ⁴, the active, approach ⁵ the tribe of the gods ⁶, strengthening them by offering them delight.

4. When Mâtarisvan had produced him by attrition, he, the reddish, the noble one, who was brought to many places ¹, has come to every house. Then the Bhrîgu-like ² has undertaken the messengership ³ (for the mortal) as for a mightier king, being attached to him.

5. When he had created sap to the great father Heaven, the knowing one stealthily approached the speckled (cows). The archer fiercely shot an arrow at him. The god turned his impetuous power against his daughter ¹.

6. Augment, O Agni, twofold the strength of the man who worships¹ thee in his house, or offers adoration to the loving one² day by day. May he whom thou incitest be united with riches³.

7. Every nourishment goes towards Agni¹, as the seven young² rivers (flow) into the ocean. Our strength does not shine from kinsmen³. Do thou therefore who knowest this, procure among the gods kindness for us.

8¹. When the sharp splendour² reached the lord of men to incite him³, the bright sperm poured down from Heaven (or, from the god Dyaus)⁴, Agni produced⁵ and furthered the blameless, young, well-wishing host⁶.

9. He who traverses the paths quickly¹ like thought, the Sun alone rules over wealth altogether. (There are) the two kings Mitra and Varuṇa with graceful hands², who watch over the beloved ambrosia³ in the cows.

10. Do not forget, O Agni, who art a sage possessed of knowledge¹, our paternal friendship. Old age impairs the appearance (of men) as a cloud (covers the sun or the sky). Before this curse (attains us), think thou (of us)².

NOTES.

The same R̥ishi. Metre, Trish/ubh.

Though the hymns 71-73 are not composed in the Virâg metre like the preceding hymns, it is shown by manifold evidence that they had the same origin. Verse 8 = VS. XXXIII, 11; TS. I, 3, 14, 6; MS. IV, 14, 15.

Verse 1.

Note 1. Comp. Geldner, Vedische Studien, II, 134.

Note 2. If the text is correct, the 'sisters' may either be the ten fingers which generate Agni by attrition (III, 29, 13; IV, 6, 8), or the streams of water among which Agni grows up, or streams of Ghrīta or the like (comp. II, 5, 5; see below). Why these sisters are said to delight in the dark and in the bright goddess, the Night and the Dawn, remains doubtful.

But I think there are reasons which strongly recommend a correction of the text. In III, 55, 11 we read syāvī ka . . . árushī ka svásārau, 'the two sisters, the dark one and the red one.' Is it not probable that in our passage also it is the sisters who are described as dark and red? The dark goddess and the red goddess of course are Night and Dawn, and Night and Dawn, as is well known, are sisters in Vedic poetry. And furthermore the 'sisters' are described in our verse as amorously exciting the god Agni: for it cannot well be doubted that the svásārah of the third Páda are identical with the usatīh of the first: similarly it is said in 70, 7—in a hymn belonging to the same collection with our Sūkta—that the Nights and Dawns augment Agni's greatness; in other passages Agni is represented as beloved by the Dawn, or as suckled by Night and Dawn (Bergaigne, Religion Védique, II, 14. 15). The 'sisters' then are stated in our verse to delight (agushran), probably in Agni: now we read in II, 2, 2. abhī tvā náktiḥ ushásāh vavāsire ágne vatsám ná svásareshu dhenávaḥ, 'The Nights and Dawns, Agni, have lowed at thee as the milch-cows in their stalls at their calves;' comp. Bergaigne, II, 15. Thus everything is clear, if we take the usatīh and the svásārah for the bright and dark goddesses, i. e. for the Dawns and Nights. The correction of the text to which this interpretation leads, is svásārah syāvīḥ árushīḥ agushran, 'the dark and the red sisters have delighted (in Agni).' It is easy to understand that the corruption of the text was occasioned by the simile of the fourth Páda. The words ushásam ná gávaḥ seemed to demand a parallel nominative and a parallel accusative in the third Páda. The nominative was svásārah, but there was no accusative. Thus probably arose the reading syāvīm árushīm.

Verse 2.

Note 1. On the Āngiras as the fathers of the priestly tribes, see H. O., Religion des Veda, 278.

Note 2. The phrase ushásaḥ ketúḥ occurs several times in the Rig-veda. I think that ketúm usráḥ means exactly the same; it has been shown by Kaegi, Festgruss and Boehtlingk, p. 49, and by Bartholomae, Bezzenger's Beiträge, XV, 185, that a genitive sing. usráḥ existed.

Verse 3.

Note 1. Ludwig refers asya to the sacrificer, Bollensen to Āgni, and so does Sāyana. I believe that asya should be explained as ṛitása; the phrase ṛitása dhīti is frequently used, comp. IV, 23, 8; IX, 76, 4; 97, 34; 111, 2. See also Ludwig's note on III, 31, 1 (vol. v, p. 65).—Prof. Max Müller refers ṛita to Āgni. 'One might translate it by righteous: They established the righteous (Āgni), they moved his mind (made him attend?).'

Note 2. The substantive (of feminine gender) which is to be supplied to didhishvāḥ, ātrishyantīḥ, &c., seems to me to be gīrah or the like. Aryáḥ stands frequently together with gīrah.—Prof. Max Müller writes: 'Could not ari be a feminine like karshani and vis; see before, I, 70, 1. We should then translate, and then the people emulous, widely spread, never flagging [the stones also are called atrishitāḥ atrishnagaḥ, X, 94, 11], and active go towards the gods.'

Note 3. See above, 70, 1, note 1.

Note 4. Are the prayers called 'free from thirst' because they are accompanied by libations of Ghrīta, Soma, &c.?

Note 5. I believe that devān gánma depends both on ákkhā and on vardháyantīḥ.

Note 6. Devān, or rather devām, is gen. plur.; see above, 70, 6, with note 1.

Verse 4.

Note 1. The place in which víbhṛitaḥ stands would seem to show that it is an epithet of Mātarisvan, and so it is understood by Ludwig and by Bergaigne (Rel. Véd. I, 54).

But it is Agni himself, not Mâtariśvan, who is very frequently mentioned as vībhṛitā or the like. As we read here, vībhṛitāḥ . . . grīhé-grīhe, it is said in V, 11, 4. agnīm nárah ví bharante grīhé-grīhe, 'the men carry Agni hither and thither, to every house;' comp. I, 70, 10; III, 55, 4; X, 1, 2; 45, 2; 80, 4. Thus I believe the poet means to say that Mâtariśvan first kindled Agni, in one place of course, and that Agni then was brought to many places, to all human dwellings. I think that the text indeed can be understood in this way, if we suppose that the author, for the sake of the metre, allowed himself a hyperbaton or sychysis.

We must not omit to mention that the first Páda of I, 148, 1 is nearly identical with our passage: máthīt yát ím viśtātāḥ mâtariśvā. This Páda is deficient by one syllable. If we were to read vībhṛitāḥ, as in our passage, this would lead indeed to the conclusion that there is no hyperbaton in our verse—for the verse, I, 148, 1, could not be explained in that way—but that vībhṛitāḥ refers to Mâtariśvan. I think, however, that it is more than doubtful that the verse, I, 148, 1, really ought to be corrected in this way; whatever may have been the original form of that verse, it is quite possible, and even probable, that it differed from our passage just in that one word.

Note 2. The exact meaning of Bhrīgavāna is doubtful. It is, of course, derived from Bhrīgu as vāsavāna, tákavāna, from vāsu, táku. Agni is called Bhrīgavāna also in IV, 7, 4. Comp. Bergaigne, I, 54.

Note 3. With the words á dūtīyam vivāya comp. IV, 9, 6. véshi ít u asya dūtīyam.

Verse 5.

Note 1. This difficult verse evidently treats of the incest which the father Dyaus has committed with his daughter. Compare on this subject Bergaigne, Rel. Véd. II, 109 seq. Agni seems to be represented here as stimulating the desire of the father; the 'sap' (rása) probably is the sperm, comp. I, 105, 2.

In the second Páda, Agni, having done, as it seems, some mischief, goes away to the 'speckled cows.' We cannot say who these speckled cows were; they evidently are identical with those mentioned in another passage treating of the same story, X, 61, 8.—Bergaigne paraphrases the second Páda of our verse, wrongly in my opinion, 'Agni sort furtivement de cette fille, de cette vache, prisaní.'

The archer who shoots at Agni (third Páda) is not better known to us than the speckled cows. Bergaigne's opinion, 'que cet archer n'est autre que le père lui-même,' is not very convincing.

Verse 6.

Note 1. The traditional reading vibhāti ('he who shines for thee in his house') gives no satisfactory sense. I propose to read vidhāti. Cf. I, 120, 1. kathá vidhāti ápraketāh.

Note 2. I have some doubts as to the correctness of usátāh (Samhitāpāṭha, usató) ánu dyūn. Usát, of course, is an epithet not of the days, but of Agni. But then we expect the dative. Correcting the text (usaté) is all the easier, because before a following vowel the dative and the genitive were, in the original pronunciation, identical (usátá-ánu; see my Prolegomena, 447 sqq.); the spellings of the Samhitāpāṭha, usató ánu and usaté ánu, belong to the inventions of Vedic grammarians.

Note 3. Literally, May he whom thou incitest drive on the same chariot with riches. Comp. such expressions as rathīḥ ráyāh and the like.

Verse 7.

Note 1. Comp. IV, 44, 2. yuvóh vápuh abhí príkshaḥ sakante; VII, 90, 5.

Note 2. Comp. I, 26, 10, note 1.

Note 3. Ludwig: nicht unter unsern freunden ward auszufündig gemacht die kraftspeise. Grassmann: nicht bei Verwandten ward uns Nahrung sichtbar. Wilson: Our food is not partaken of by our kinsmen. Griffith: Not by our brethren was our food discovered.—Ludwig and Grassmann translate as if the text had gāmíshu. What the instrumental means is shown, I believe, for instance, by IV, 14, 2. ví sūryaḥ raśmībhiḥ kēkitānaḥ, 'the sun shining with his rays.' Thus in our passage the poet seems to me to say, 'We have no strong kinsmen who might add lustre to our strength. Agni, procure thou strength to us.' Comp. X, 23, 7. vidmā hī te prāmatim deva gāmivāt, 'for we know, O god, thy providing care like that of a kinsman.'—Prof. Max Müller proposes the translation: 'Our wealth is not known by our kinsmen, i. e. we cannot support them as we ought.'

Verse 8.

Note 1. The poet returns here to the myth. of which he had spoken in verse 5. Should the order of the verses be changed?—On our verse, compare Geldner, Ved. Studien, II, 34.

Note 2. Tégas seems to be here a synonym of rétaḥ, as in the later language.

Note 3. Is the lord of men Agni? See the third Pāda.—Ishé I consider, with Geldner, as an infinitive.

Note 4. My translation rests on the supposition that dyaúḥ is to be corrected into dyóḥ; thus the ablative is obtained, of which the word abhīke is usually accompanied (comp. Lanman, 433; Collitz, Bezenberger's Beiträge, X, 15). If we leave the reading dyaúḥ, this nominative will be the subject of the verb ānat. Then tégaḥ must be accusative dependent on ānat, and we can scarcely avoid making nṛipátim to depend on the infinitive ishé. This is the way which Geldner has followed in interpreting this passage. But I cannot consider this separation of nṛipátim from the verb ānat very probable.

Note 5. The exact meaning of ganayat seems to be here, 'he caused them to be born.' Comp. Satapatha Brāhmaṇa I, 7, 4, 4. yathā tad devā retaḥ prāganayan (comp. Aitareya Brāhmaṇa III, 34; see also Rig-veda X, 61, 7).

Note 6. This may be the host of the seven Rishis. Comp. III, 31, 1–5; IV, 1, 12 seq. (?). Or the Maruts are alluded to (comp. below, 72, 4), though that seems to me less probable.

Verse 9.

Note 1. Literally, in one day. But sadyáḥ has already in the Rig-veda the secondary meaning 'immediately, quickly.'

Note 2. Comp. III, 56, 7. rāḡānā mitrá-várunā supānī.

Note 3. See below, 72, 6.

Verse 10.

Note 1. Comp. VII, 18, 2 : there the words abhí vidúḥ kavíḥ sán are identical with our text.

Note 2. Of the second hemistich Prof. Collitz has treated in Bezzenberger's Beiträge, X, 15, note. He paraphrases the meaning in the following way : 'Der Sinn des ganzen Verses ist : unsere Freundschaft mit dir, Agni, stammt aus alter Zeit. Nun sagt man zwar "im Alter ändert sich das Aussehn wie das der Wolke." Aber stehe du uns bei vor diesem Fluche.' I do not believe that this interpretation, though very ingenious, gives the real meaning of the Vedic poet.—Comp. I, 179, 1. mināti sríyam garimā tanūnām.

MANDALA I, HYMN 72.

ASHTAKA I, ADHYĀYA 5, VARGA 17-18.

1. He has brought down (i.e. surpassed) the wisdom of many a worshipper¹, he who holds in his hand all manly power. Agni has become the lord of treasures, he who brought together all (powers of) immortality.

2¹. All the clever immortals when seeking did not find the calf though sojourning round about us. The attentive (gods), wearying themselves, following his footsteps², stood at the highest, beautiful³ standing-place of Agni.

3. When the bright ones¹ had done service² to thee, the bright one, Agni, with Ghrīta through three autumns, they assumed worshipful names; the well-born shaped their own bodies.

4. Acquiring (or, exploring?) for themselves the two great worlds, the worshipful ones brought forward their Rudra-like powers¹. The mortal, when (beings) were in discord², perceived and found out Agni standing in the highest place.

5. Being like-minded they¹ reverentially approached him on their knees. Together with their wives they venerated the venerable one². Abandoning their bodies they made them their own³, the (one) friend waking when the (other) friend closed his eyes⁴.

6. When the worshipful (gods) have discovered the thrice seven secret steps¹ (or, places) laid down in thee, they concordantly guard with them immor-talities. Protect thou the cattle and that which remains steadfast² and that which moves.

7. Knowing, O Agni, the established orders¹ of (human) dwellings, distribute in due order gifts² that they may live. Knowing the ways which the gods go³, thou hast become the unwearied messenger, the bearer of oblations.

8. They who knew the right way and were filled with good intentions, beheld from heaven the seven young¹ (rivers) and the doors of riches. Saramâ found the strong stable of the cows from which human clans receive their nourishment².

9. The Earth has spread herself far and wide with them who are great in their greatness, the mother Aditi, for the refreshment of the bird¹, with her sons who have assumed all powers of their own dominion², preparing (for themselves) the way to immortality.

10. When the immortals created the two eyes of heaven¹, they placed fair splendour in him (Agni)². Then they rush down³ like streams let loose. The red ones have recognised, O Agni, those which are directed downwards⁴.

NOTES.

The same Rishi and metre.—Verse 1 = TS. II, 2, 12, 1. Verse 3 = TB. II, 4, 5, 6. Verses 8–9 = TB. II, 5, 8, 10.

Verse 1.

Note 1. The meaning seems to me to be : by his wisdom he excels all human wisdom. Prof. Max Müller translates : ‘Agni, who holds in his hand all that men desire, conquers (or, wins for himself) the praises of many a wise worshipper.' And the last Pāda: 'he who brought together all immortal blessings.'—On sarvat, see VI, 61, 1; VII, 18, 18; VIII, 23, 28.

Verse 2.

Note 1. Here we have again the myth of the hidden Agni whom the gods seek. Agni is meant by the calf.

Note 2. Going on foot, Sâyana.

Note 3. I follow Sâyana, Bollensen, and Ludwig in taking kāru as a locative.

Verse 3.

Note 1. 'Was not Sâyana right in taking this verse as referring to the Maruts? Cf. VI, 48, 21. . . . sugāta also is an epithet of the Maruts, I, 88, 3; 166, 12.' M. M.

Note 2. As to the subjunctive, comp. Delbrück, Syntaktische Forschungen, I, p. 67. The Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa (II, 4, 5, 6) reads saparyān.

Verse 4.

Note 1. I follow the Padapāṭha which has rudrīyā. But possibly we may have the nom. plur. rudrīyāḥ: 'the worshipful Rudriyas (i.e. Maruts) rushed forward.'

Note 2. The translation of nemádhitā is in jeopardy.

Verse 5.

Note 1. Probably the mortals, as Ludwig understands it. Comp. mártaḥ, verse 4.

Note 2. The venerable one is Agni.

Note 3. Possibly the text is corrupt. In IV, 24, 3 we read ririkvāmsaḥ tanvāḥ krinvata trām, 'abandoning (i.e. risking) their bodies they took him (Indra) for their protector' (comp. I, 100, 7). Should svāḥ have supplanted another word, for instance, trām? As the pronoun svá very frequently stands in apposition with tanū, it may have found its way also into passages to which it did not belong.

Note 4. The meaning seems to be that whenever the attention of one of the friends relaxed, another friend watched instead of the first. See Zeitschrift der Deutschen Morgenl. Gesellschaft, XLIV, 328; Bartholomae, Studien zur indogerm. Sprachgeschichte, I, 95.

Verse 6.

Note 1. Sâyana explains the trīḥ sapta padā as the three times seven kinds of sacrifices, the seven Pākayagñas, the seven Haviryagñas, the seven Somayagñas. But this later system of the twenty-one forms of sacrifice can scarcely have existed at the time of the Rig-veda Samhitā. Three times seven is a favourite number in Rig-vedic mysticism; comp. I, 191, 12. 14; IV, 1, 16; VII, 87, 4; VIII, 46, 26; 69, 7; 96, 2; IX, 70, 1; 86, 21; X, 64, 8; 90, 15. Possibly three times seven pieces of wood (samīdhaḥ) are alluded to, comp. X, 90, 15, but everybody who has studied Bergaigne's Arithmétique mythologique (Rel. Véd. II, 114 seq.; see especially p. 122) will admit that there are ever so many possible interpretations of a passage like this. Prof. Max Müller's translation is: 'The worshipful gods found in thee the twenty-one words which are hidden in thee. They guard with them the immortal (Agni).—Instead of avidan (Padapātḥa) I think we must read ávidan.

Note 2. Ludwig certainly is wrong in translating 'hüte du den wandel von tier und pflanze.' The author of this group of hymns is very fond of the phrase sthātúḥ karātham and the like; see I, 68, 1; 70, 3. 7. The same phrase, in one or the other of its possible shapes, has evidently been used by him here also. The plural masculine sthātrīn is indeed very strange. Possibly J. Wackernagel is right in reading sthātúḥ (Kuhn's Zeitschrift, XXV, 287; comp. Lanman, p. 422); the reading sthātrīn may be due to the neighbourhood of paśūn. This sort of blunder is very frequent in the text of the Rig-veda. Prof. Max Müller suggests: the stabled cattle and what moves about (in the meadows).

Verse 7.

Note 1. On vayúna, comp. Pischel, Ved. Studien, I, 295. 300. 'The thoughts of human beings.' M. M.

Note 2. Surúdh : Pischel, Ved. Studien, I, 32. 50.

Note 3. 'Which lead to the gods?' M. M.

Verse 8.

Note 1. Comp. I, 26, 10, note 1.—'Beheld the seven young rivers coming down from heaven.' M. M.

Note 2. See Delbrück, Syntaktische Forschungen, I, 87.

Verse 9.

Note 1. The bird seems to be Agni.

Note 2. The Padapáṭha gives su-apatyáni. There is no doubt a word su-apatyá, 'blessed with good offspring.' This is frequently used together with such nouns as rayi, kshaya, ish; it stands in several passages by the side of pragāvat. See I, 117, 19; II, 2, 12; 4, 8; 9, 5; III, 3, 7; 16, 1; IV, 2, 11; X, 30, 12. But from this word should be distinguished sva-patyá, derived from svá-pati (X, 44, 1, &c.), 'a man's own dominion,' or 'own rulership;' comp. gāspatyá. This word is found here, and in some other passages, for instance, VII, 91, 3. vīsvá ít náraḥ svapatyáni kakruḥ, 'the heroes have exercised all the powers of their own dominion;' VIII, 15, 10. satrá vīsvá svapatyáni dadhishe, 'thou hast assumed (Indra) all powers of thy own dominion altogether.'—Ludwig translates correctly, 'alle selbstherlichkeit.'

The Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa reads kakrúḥ for tasthúḥ. This reading evidently rests on Rig-veda IV, 34, 9; VII, 91, 3. There is no reason, however, for preferring this to the traditional reading of our Rik-text.

Verse 10.

Note 1. The sun and the moon? This very natural explanation will scarcely be modified on account of passages like the following (Satapatha Brāhmaṇa I, 6, 3, 38):

‘These are the two eyes of the sacrifice, the (oblations of butter called) Āgyabhāgas.’

Note 2. Comp. below, 73, 4.

Note 3. It is not necessary to change the text ; I believe, however, that the conjecture adhá/ ksharanti (they stream downwards) would not be quite improbable. Comp. my Prolegomena, p. 369, note 1.—The subject seems to be the streams of sacrificial libations.

Note 4. Both expressions, ‘the red ones’ and ‘those which are directed downwards,’ are feminine. The red ones may be the dawns. But these cannot be called ‘directed downwards.’ I take, therefore, the one noun as a nominative, the other as an accusative. Cannot ‘those which are directed downwards’ be the libations of Ghrīta and the like, which the dawns see?—Prof. Max Müller translates: ‘People recognised the red netherward mares (of thee), O Agni.’ He supplies gvālā/ or takes arushī/ as mares, cf. V, 56, 6.

MANDALA I, HYMN 73.

ASHTAKA I, ADHYÂYA 5, VARGA 19-20.

1. He who gives vigour like wealth acquired by the fathers¹, who is a good guide like the instruction of a sage, who is pleased (by worship) like a comfortably resting guest², (Agni) has crossed the (sacrificial) seat of the worshipper like a Hotri.

2. He who being truthful like the god *Savitri*¹ protects by his power of mind all settlements², praised by many like impetuous splendour³, the truthful one has become dear like vital breath and worthy to be searched for⁴.

3¹. (Agni) who possessing every refreshment dwells on the earth like a god, like a king who has made himself (valiant) friends², like heroes who sit in front and under shelter, like a blameless wife beloved by her husband—

4. Thee, O Agni, who art constantly kindled in the house, men have worshipped in their firm dwellings. They have placed in him rich splendour¹. Be thou possessed of all life, a supporter of riches².

5. May the liberal givers, O Agni, attain nourishment, may the rich¹ who bestow gifts (on us) attain to a full span of life. May we win in battles the booty of him who does not give¹, obtaining a (rich) share before the gods, that we may win glory².

6. The lowing milch-cows of Rita, assigned by Heaven, were exuberant with their full udders. The rivers imploring the favour (of the gods) from afar have broken through the midst of the rock with their floods.

7. Imploring favour from thee, O Agni, the worshipful (gods) have won glory in the sky. They have made Night and Dawn of different shapes; they have joined the black and red colour (to Night and Dawn).

8. And may we, our liberal givers and ourselves, be the mortals whom thou furtherest to wealth, O Agni¹. Like a shadow thou followest the whole world, having filled the two worlds (Heaven and Earth) and the air².

9. May we, O Agni, guarded by thee, conquer with our racers the racers, with our men the men, with our heroes the heroes (of our enemies). Being masters of the riches which their fathers¹ have conquered, may our rich (givers) reach a hundred winters.

10. May these hymns, O Agni, worshipper (of the gods), be grateful to thee, to thy mind and heart. May we be able to bridle thee, the well-harnessed wealth¹, acquiring the glory which the gods have assigned us.

NOTES.

The same R̥ishi and metre.—Verse 5 = MS. IV, 14, 15.
Verse 7 = TB. II, 7, 12, 5. Verse 10 = MS. IV, 14, 15.

Verse 1.

Note 1. Agni is compared to wealth acquired by the fathers, being himself pitṛivitta, found by the forefathers of the Brāhmanic tribes. Prof. Max Müller proposes to translate : 'wealth inherited from the fathers.'

Note 2. Comp. VII, 42, 4, and see also VI, 16, 42.

Verse 2.

Note 1. The first Pāda is identical with the fourth of IX, 97, 48. There the expressions are referred to Soma.

Note 2. On vrigāna, comp. the quotations given above, I, 60, 3, note 2 ; cf. IX, 87, 2. vrigānam rākshamānah.

Note 3. Comp. I, 64, 9. amātīh ná darsatā.

Note 4. Comp. II, 4, 1 (see below).

Verse 3.

Note 1. The first three Pādas are nearly identical with III, 55, 21.

Note 2. As to the meaning of hitāmitra, comp. X, 108, 3. mitrām ena dadhāma ; see also X, 132, 5, and H. O., Religion des Veda, 186, note 1.

Verse 4.

Note 1. Comp. I, 72, 10 (see above).

Note 2. I cannot accept Pischel's translation of dharúnaḥ rayīnām, 'der Reichtum fließen lässt' (Vedische Studien, I, 40).—'Be thou, who art rich in all food, the protector of riches.' M. M.

Verse 5.

Note 1. On sûrí and arí, see Bergaigne, Rel. Véd. II, 218 seq. Aryáh may also be nom. pl. and mean '(we) the poor ones.'

Note 2. 'May we win in battles the booty of the enemy, setting aside a share for the gods to their glory.' M. M.

Verse 8.

Note 1. In the first Pāda one syllable is wanting. Perhaps the acc. plur. yán had here dissyllabic value.

Note 2. The last Pāda is identical with the second of X, 139, 2.

Verse 9.

Note 1. Comp. above, verse 1, note 1.

Verse 10.

Note 1. Comp. sakéma vâgínah yámam, II, 5, 1 ; agne sakéma te vayám yámam devásya vâgínah, III, 27, 3. As sudhúr and sudhúra are epithets of horses, the poet of course could say, sakéma sudhúrah yámam te. But Agni is not only a horse ; he is also wealth (II, 1, 12 ; IV, 2, 5, &c.). The combination of the two metaphors explains the curious expression sudhúrah ráyáh.

MANDALA I, HYMN 74.

ASHTAKA I, ADHYÂYA 5, VARGA 21-22.

1. Going forward to the sacrifice let us repeat a prayer to Agni who hears us, may he be afar or with us—

2. He who foremost¹ in², when the human tribes met (in battle), has preserved his home to the worshipper.

3. And let the people say 'Agni is born, the slayer of foes (or, the slayer of Vritra), he who wins the prize in every battle.'

4. The man in whose home thou art a messenger, and to whose sacrificial food thou eagerly comest for feasting, to whose worship thou impartest wonderful power—

5. Such a man the people call a giver of good oblations, O Āṅgiras, a friend of the gods, O son of strength¹, and a possessor of a good Barhis (or sacrificial grass).

6. And thou shalt conduct them hither, the gods¹, that we may praise them, that they may eagerly come, O resplendent one, to the sacrificial offerings.

7. No noise¹ of the horses of the moving chariot² is heard any way, when thou goest on thy messengership, O Agni.

8. When guarded by thee the racer becomes fearless; the worshipper, O Agni, who is behind, gains the advantage¹ over him who is ahead.

9. And thou winnest, O Agni, brilliant, high bliss in strong heroes from the gods, O god, for the worshipper.

NOTES.

This hymn opens the section ascribed to Gotama Rāhūgana, and belonging indeed, as several passages show, to the family of the Gotamas (comp. Zeitschrift der D. Morg. Gesellschaft, XLII, 221). The metre is Gâyatrî.—Verse 1 = VS. III, 11; TS. I, 5, 5, 1; MS. I, 5, 1 (I, 5, 5. 6). Verses 1–3 = SV. II, 729. 730. 732. Verse 3 = TS. III, 5, 11, 4; MS. IV, 10, 3.

Verse 2.

Note 1. Or pūrvyāh, 'the old Agni,' cf. IX, 96, 10? (M. M.)

Note 2. I have left untranslated the obscure word sn̥hitishu (Sâyana, vadhakārin̥ishu). It seems to be identical with sn̥hiti, which occurs VIII, 96, 13. āpa sn̥hiti/ nr̥imānāh adhatta (the Sāma-veda has the reading sn̥h°). Here the verb āpa adhatta (comp. VI, 20, 5; X, 164, 3) and the comparison of the second hemistichs of the two following verses, 14 and 15, seem to show that the word means some kind of hostile powers, which would do very well for our passage.—In Taittiriya Āraṇyaka IV, 23 the word sn̥hiti occurs in an enumeration of the 'terrible substances' (ghorāh tanúvah) of Agni.—Comp. Ludwig, Ueber die neuesten Arbeiten auf dem Gebiete der Rig-veda-Forschung, p. 93.

Verse 5.

Note 1. See above, I, 26, 10, note 1.

Verse 6.

Note 1. See Delbrück, Syntaktische Forschungen, I, 20, 111.

Verse 7.

Note 1. On upabdí, which literally means the noise produced by going, see Joh. Schmidt, Kuhn's Zeitschrift, XXV, 55; Hübschmann, Das indogermanische Vocal-system, 124.

Note 2. Yóh (comp. X, 176, 3?) seems to be a genitive of yú, 'the going one;' comp. sva-yú, subham-yú; Lanman, 401.

Verse 8.

Note 1. The last syllable of asthât has the value of two syllables.

MANDALA I, HYMN 75.

ASHṬAKA I, ADHYĀYA 5, VARGA ३3.

1. Accept gladly our most widely-sounding¹ speech, the most agreeable to the gods, thou who, in thy mouth, offerest the sacrificial food (to the gods).

2. And may we then pronounce to thee, O highest Āṅgiras, Agni, best worshipper, a prayer agreeable to thee and successful.

3. Who is thy kinsman among men, O Agni? Who performs worship to thee¹? Who art thou, and where dost thou rest?

4. Thou, O Agni, art the kinsman, the dear friend ('Mitra') of men, a friend who is to be magnified by his friends.

5. Sacrifice for us to Mitra and Varuṇa. Sacrifice to the gods, (a sacrifice conforming to) the great *Rita*¹. Sacrifice, O Agni, to thy own house.

NOTES.

The same Rīshi and metre.—Verse 1 = TB. III, 6, 7, 1; MS. III, 10, 1 (IV, 13, 5). Verses 3–5 = SV. II, 885–887. Verse 5 = VS. XXXIII, 3; TB. II, 7, 12, 1.

Verse 1.

Note 1. Comp. VI, 68, 9. mánma . . . *saprátha*h.

Verse 3.

Note 1. May we not take dâśú-adhvara as a compound with governed final member, like vidádvasu, sádádyoni &c.?

Verse 5.

Note 1. Comp. Gaedicke, Der Accusativ im Veda, 159.

MANDALA I, HYMN 76.

ASHTAKA I, ADHYĀYA 5, VARGA 24.

1. What supplication is to thy mind's taste¹? What (pious) thought may be, O Agni, most agreeable to thee? Or who has won for himself thy wisdom by sacrifices? Or with what thoughts may we worship thee²?

2. Come hither, Agni, sit down here as a Hotri. Become our undeceivable leader¹. May Heaven and Earth, the all-embracing, protect thee. Offer the sacrifice to the gods that they may be highly gracious to us.

3. Burn down all sorcerers, O Agni; become a protector of the sacrifices against imprecations. And conduct hither the lord of Soma (Indra) with his two bay horses. We have prepared hospitality for him, the good giver.

4. With words procuring offspring, carrying thee (to our sacrifice) with my mouth¹, I call² thee hither, and thou shalt sit down here with the gods. Perform the service of a Hotri and of a *Potri*³, O worshipful one. Be thou a giver and a father⁴ of riches.

5. As thou didst perform sacrifice to the gods with the sacrificial food of the wise Manu¹, a sage together with sages, thus, O highly truthful Hotri, perform thou the sacrifice to-day, O Agni, with thy joy-giving sacrificial ladle².

NOTES.

The same Rīshi. Metre, Trishṭubh.

Verse 1.

Note 1. Sāyana takes vāra in the sense of 'holding back' (comp. I, 143, 5), and makes mánasaḥ depend on várāya. He says, 'he agne te tava manaso varāya nivāranāyāsmāsv avasthāpanāya kopetir bhuvat kidrīsam upagamanam bha- vet.' The modern translators are evidently right in assigning to vāra the meaning of 'wish' or the like (comp. VII, 59, 2. yāḥ vaḥ várāya dāsati), but they differ as to whether mánasaḥ should be taken as belonging to várāya or to úpetiḥ. Ludwig translates, 'Welches nahen des geistes ist gegenstand der wal dir?' Grassmann, 'Welch Nahen ist nach deines Herzens Wunsche?' My opinion is that the tradition of the text is not quite free from suspicion. My doubts are based on VI, 21, 4. kás te yagñāḥ mánase sám várāya, 'What sacrifice (O Indra) is agreeable to thy mind, to thy wish?' Here we have a question addressed to the god, beginning with kás te, quite similar to the question of our poet, which begins with ká te. We have the word sám, as in our passage sámtamâ. We have várāya exactly as in our passage. We have, by the side of várāya, a case-form of mánas as in our passage. But we have the dative mánase instead of the genitive mánasaḥ. We may add that there are some other passages in which a dative of a similar meaning stands likewise by the side of várāya: thus, VIII, 82, 3. áram várāya manyāve bhúvat te indra sám (comp. bhúvat agne sámtamâ in our passage) hrídé, 'May it be, O Indra, according to thy wish and thy mood, may it be agreeable to thy heart;' VIII, 84, 4. várāya deva manyāve, 'to thy wish, O god, to thy mood.'

All this tends to raise the supposition that in our passage also we should read mánase várāya, which datives seem to depend on sámtamā. We should then translate, 'What supplication, what (pious) thought may be, O Agni, most agreeable to thy mind and to thy wish?'

Note 2. This seems to be a Páda of the defective type, with four syllables before the caesura and ending as if there were five syllables before the caesura; comp. my Prolegomena, 68 seq. It would be easy, however, to restore the normal metrical form, for instance, by reading túbhyam instead of te.

Verse 2.

Note 1. Puráh-etá, literally, 'he who goes before somebody.'

Verse 4.

Note 1. It would be unnatural to give to the medium á huve the passive sense and not to translate it, as it must be translated in so many passages, 'I call (thee) hither.' But, if so, it is very difficult to avoid the conclusion that váhniḥ áśá ('he who carries somebody with his mouth; comp. I, 129, 5; VI, 11, 2; 16, 9; VII, 16, 9; X, 115, 3; see vol. xxxii, pp. 42 seq.) refers here not to Agni, the divine carrier, but to the human priest, who with his mouth, i.e. by his songs, carries Agni to his sacrifice. Váhni is used very frequently indeed of human worshippers, and generally the transferring of epithets of the divine priest Agni to human priests, and vice versa, is quite to the taste of Vedic poets.—Comp. on á huve and váhniḥ áśá, Neisser, Bezenberger's Beiträge, XVIII, 320 seq.; XX, 69, and below, I, 127, 8, note 1; S.B.E., vol. xxxii, p. 42. See also Delbrück, Altindische Syntax, 473, who very rightly observes: es liegt kein Grund vor, dem huvé den Character einer ersten Person zu versagen.

Note 2. On the accent of huvé, on which Ludwig bases very bold conclusions, see Delbrück, Altindische Syntax, 41; Weber, Indische Studien, XIII, 73.

Note 3. Comp. X, 3, 3.—On the priestly functions of the Potri, see Weber, Indische Studien, X, 141, 366, 376 seq.; H. O., Religion des Veda, 391.

Note 4. On these vocatives, see Delbrück, Altindische Syntax, 106.

Verse 5.

Note 1. Manus is here a proper name; comp. Bergaigne, I, 65 seq. On his priestly character, comp. H. O., Religion des Veda, 275.

Note 2. On guhvâ, comp. Pischel, Ved. Studien, II, 113. The ladle is meant for the flame of Agni.

MANDALA I, HYMN 77.

ASHTAKA I, ADHYĀYA 5, VARGA 25.

1. How shall we sacrifice to Agni? What words, agreeable to the god, shall be addressed to him, the luminous one, who, being immortal and righteous, the Hotri, the best sacrificer, conveys the gods to the mortals¹?

2. Bring hither by adoration the Hotri who is most beneficial in sacrifices and righteous. When Agni repairs to the gods on behalf of the mortal¹, may he be attentive in his mind, and may he perform the sacrifice².

3. For he is wisdom¹, he is manly, he is straightforward; like Mitra he has become the charioteer of the mysterious². Therefore the Aryan clans³, longing for the gods, address him, the wonderful one, as the first at the sacrifices.

4. May that Agni, the manliest of men, triumphant with riches [?]¹, come with help to our words, to our devotion, and (to the devotion) of those most powerful liberal givers who bent on the prize² have constantly stirred up our prayers³.

5. Thus Agni, the righteous Gâtavedas, has been praised by the priestly Gotamas¹. May he augment their splendour and their strength. He the knowing one gains increase according to his desire.

NOTES.

The same Rishi and metre.

Verse 1.

Note 1. The construction is yáh krinóti deván mártyesu. Comp., for instance, X, 40, 2. káh vâm . . . krinute sadhásthe

ā. Ludwig translates: der unter den sterblichen der unsterbliche hotar . . . schafft die götter.—‘Could it be ishkrinoti?’ M. M.

Verse 2.

Note 1. The third Pāda of this verse has nine syllables instead of eleven. If we read, as several times must be done, mārtāya for mārtāya, we get ten syllables, and the Pāda may belong to the defective type mentioned above, 76, 1, note 2.

Note 2. Ka seems to me to stand here, as it several times does, in the first of the members of sentence connected by it. See Delbrück, Altindische Syntax, 475. Prof. Max Müller believes that it depends on yāt: yāt véh, yāt ka sá bódhāti, ‘Bring hither the Hotri . . . so that Agni may invite the gods . . . and that he (the mortal or Agni) may be attentive, &c.’

Verse 3.

Note 1. Grassmann gives to krātu here and in a number of other passages the meaning ‘der Starke.’ This is inadmissible; comp. Bergaigne, III, 304.

Note 2. Here we have again a Pāda of ten syllables (see verse 2, note 1), unless bhût has dissyllabic value. Prof. Max Müller translates this Pāda: ‘like a friend he is the charioteer of enormous wealth.’

Note 3. Comp. I, 96, 3 (see below).

Verse 4.

Note 1. On risādas, comp. above, I, 26, 4, note 1.

Note 2. Comp. I, 92, 8. There Ushas receives the epithet vāgaprasûtā.

Note 3. Comp. VII, 87, 3. spásah Várunasya . . . yé isháyanta mánma.

Verse 5.

Note 1. This is again a Pāda of ten syllables.

MANDALA I, HYMN 78.

ASHTAKA I, ADHYĀYA 5, VARGA 26.

1. O Gâtavedas, who dwellest among all tribes, we the Gotamas (praise) thee with our song—we praise thee aloud with (songs full of) splendour.

2. *Gotama*¹ desirous of riches exalts thee, as thou art, with his song. We praise thee aloud with (songs full of) splendour.

3. We call thee, such as thou art, the highest winner of booty, as Āngiras did. We praise thee aloud with (songs full of) splendour.

4. (We praise) thee, the greatest destroyer of enemies (or, of Vṛitra), who hurlest the Dasyus away—we praise thee, such as thou art, aloud with (songs full of) splendour.

5. We the *Rahûgas*¹ have recited a honey-sweet speech to Agni. We praise thee aloud with (songs full of) splendour.

NOTES.

The same Rishi. Metre, Gâyatri.

Verse 2.

Note 1. This probably means, 'the descendant of Gotama.' See Zeitschrift der D. Morg. Gesellschaft, XLII, 202.

Verse 5.

Note 1. The Rahûgas seem to be a branch of the Gotamas; see Āsvalâyana Srautasûtra XII, 11, 1.

MANDALA I, HYMN 79.

ASHTAKA I, ADHYÂYA 5, VARGA 27-28.

I.

1. The golden-haired in the expanse¹ of the atmosphere, the roaring² snake, is hasting (through the air) like the wind; the brightly resplendent watcher of the dawn³, he who is like the glorious, ever active and truthful (goddesses)⁴.

2. By thy goings the beautifully-winged (birds) were disparaged¹; the black bull² has roared, when here³ (all this happened). He has come as if with the bounteous smiling (women)⁴. The mists fly, the clouds thunder.

3. When they have led him, who swells¹ with the milk of Rita, on the straightest paths of Rita, then Aryaman, Mitra, and Varuna, he who walks round the earth², fill the leather-bag (the cloud) in the womb of the lower (atmosphere [?])³.

II.

4. Agni, who art lord of booty, rich in cows, young son of strength¹, bestow on us, O Gâtavedas, great glory.

5. Being lighted, a Vasu, a sage, Agni who is to be magnified by (pious) words, O (god) with many faces, shine to us so that riches may be ours.

6. Reigning¹ by night by thy own power, O Agni, and at the break of dawn, O god with sharp teeth, burn against the sorcerers.

III.

7. Bless us, O Agni, with thy blessings, when our Gâyatra song is brought forward (to thee), thou to whom reverence is due in all our prayers.

8. Bring us wealth, O Agni, which may be always conquering, excellent and invincible¹ in all battles.

9. Bestow on us, Agni, through thy kindness¹ wealth which may last all our life², and have mercy³ on us that we may live.

IV.

10. O Gotama¹, bring forward purified words, bring songs to the sharp-flaming Agni, desirous of his favour.

11. May he who tries to harm us, whether nigh or afar, fall down. Do thou lead us alone to increase.

12. The thousand-eyed Agni, who dwells among all tribes, scares away the Rakshas. The praise-worthy Hotri (Agni) is praised¹.

NOTES.

The same Rishi. Metre, 1-3 Trishṭubh; 4-6 Ushnih; 7-12 Gâyatrî.

What in the traditional text is one hymn, consists really of four independent hymns of three verses each. This is to be concluded from the well-known laws of arrangement of the Samhitâ, and is confirmed by the change of metre and by the reception of two of the four hymns into other Vedic Samhitâs: the second (verses 4-6) is found in the Sâma-veda II, 911-913; Vâg. Samhitâ XV, 35-37; Taitt.

Samhitâ IV, 4, 4, 5; Maitr. Samhitâ II, 13, 8; the third (verses 7-9) in the Sâma-veda II, 874-876. Besides, verses 1-2 occur Taitt. Samh. III, 1, 11, 4-5; verse 2, Maitr. Samh. IV, 12, 5; verse 4, Sâma-veda I, 99; verses 8, 9, Maitr. Samh. IV, 12, 4; verse 9, Maitr. Samh. IV, 10, 6; Taitt. Br. II, 4, 5, 3.

Verse 1.

Note 1. As to visârâ I think we should compare VII, 36, 1. vī sánunâ prīthivī sasre urvī, 'The wide earth has expanded with her surface.' Prof. Max Müller observes with regard to this Pâda: when the sky sends forth the rain, the lightning appears.

Note 2. On dhûni, see vol. xxxii, p. 112 (I, 64, 5), and Geldner, Vedische Studien, I, 268. I do not take the word with Geldner for an epithet of Vâta, the wind, but of the snake, i. e. Agni, who very probably is to be understood here as in the whole Trika, as the fire of the lightning.

Note 3. Perhaps we have here again a Pâda of ten syllables, of the type which occurs several times in the preceding hymns. Or possibly the text should be corrected: ushâsaḥ nâ nâvedâḥ, 'a knower (of sacrifices, comp. IV, 23, 4; V, 12, 3) like the dawns,' or ushâsâm nâvedâḥ (with dissyllabic -âm), 'a knower of the dawns.'—See Lanman, p. 565.

Note 4. The waters? Or the dawns?

Verse 2.

Note 1. On the nasalization of aminantañ in the Samhitâ text, see my Prolegomena, p. 471.

Note 2. I. e. Parganya, the thundering cloud. Comp. V, 83, 1; VII, 101, 1; Bergaigne, Rel. Védique, III, 27 seq.

Note 3. Regarding yâdi idâm, comp. IV, 5, 11. There the verb belonging to yâdi must be supplied; in the same way our passage must be interpreted also, unless we resort to changing the text and accentuating the verb nonâva, in which case the translation would be, 'when the black bull has bellowed here.'

Note 4. The women may be the showers of rain. Or they could be understood as the dawns, comp. ushásaḥ návedāḥ, verse 1.

Verse 3.

Note 1. I propose to read píyānam.

Note 2. On párigman, see Joh. Schmidt, Kuhn's Zeitschrift, XXV, 86; Bartholomae, Bezzenger's Beiträge, XV, 27 seq.; Bergaigne, Rel. Véd. II, 505; and compare especially X, 93, 4. The word evidently is connected not with the verb gam, but with kshám, 'the earth,' of which we find the genitives gmáḥ and gmáh.

Note 3. It does not seem probable to me that úpara means here the lower pressing-stone, as Grassmann, Ludwig, and Pischel (Vedische Studien, I, 109) suggest (Grassmann: den Schlauch beim untern Pressstein. Ludwig: den schlauch . . . an des steines ort. Pischel: sie legen das Fell mitten auf den Stein). I propose to supply rágasaḥ; comp. I, 62, 5. rágaḥ úparam; IV, 1, 11. rágasaḥ asyá yónau, and especially IV, 17, 14, where we find the 'womb of the atmosphere' (rágasaḥ asyá yónau) mentioned, quite as in our passage, together with the leather-bag (tvák), i. e. the cloud.—Bergaigne (Rel. Véd. II, 505) translates and explains, 'arrose la peau dans le séjour de l'inférieur,' c'est-à-dire fait couler les eaux du ciel pour l'Agni terrestre.

Verse 4.

Note 1. See above, I, 26, 10, note 1.

Verse 6.

Note 1. Rāgan seems to be the participle of rāg; comp. VIII, 19, 31. kshapáḥ vástushu rāgasi. Now it is very improbable that of this participle a vocative should occur; see Lanman, 509. I believe, therefore, that we should accentuate rāgan (comp. the remarks of Bartholomae, Bezzenger's Beiträge, XV, 204).

Verse 8.

Note 1. Comp. IX, 63, 11. rayím . . . dushṭáram.

Verse 9.

Note 1. As to suketúnâ, comp. I, 159, 5.

Note 2. Comp. VI, 59, 9. rayīm visvāyuposhasam.

Note 3. Mārāḱām is a second object of dhehi, not an epithet of rayīm. Comp. VIII, 7, 30.

Verse 10.

Note 1. Comp. above, 78, 2, note 1.

Verse 12.

Note 1. On the use of the middle of gri with passive meaning, comp. Delbrück, Altindische Syntax, 264.

MANDALA I, HYMN 94.

ASHTAKA I, ADHYĀYA 6, VARGA 30-32.

1. We have sent forward¹ with thoughtful mind this song of praise like a chariot to the worthy Gâtavedas. For blissful is his care for us in his companionship. Agni! May we suffer no harm in thy friendship.

2. He prospers for whom thou performest the sacrifice; he dwells untouched¹; he acquires abundance of heroes. He is strong; no distress overtakes him. Agni! May we suffer no harm in thy friendship.

3. May we be able to light thee. Prosper our prayers. The gods eat the sacrificial food that is offered in thee. Bring thou hither the Âdityas, for we long for them. Agni! May we suffer no harm in thy friendship.

4. Let us bring fuel and prepare sacrificial gifts for thee, awaking thy attention at each joint¹ (of the month). Help forward our prayers that we may live. Agni! May we suffer no harm in thy friendship.

5. (He is) the shepherd of the clans¹; by his nightly light the creatures walk, the two-footed and four-footed. Thou art the bright, great splendour of dawn. Agni! May we suffer no harm in thy friendship.

6. Thou art the Adhvaryu and the ancient Hotri, the Prasâstri¹, the Potri, the born Purohita². Knowing the duties of every priest thou givest success, O wise one. Agni! May we suffer no harm in thy friendship.

7. Thou who art beautiful, of like appearance on all sides, thou shinest forth even when afar like lightning. Thou seest, O god, even over the darkness of night. Agni! May we suffer no harm in thy friendship.

8. May the chariot of him who presses Sōma, be to the front¹, O gods. May our curse overcome the malicious ones. Accept (O gods) this prayer and make it prosper. Agni! May we suffer no harm in thy friendship.

9. Strike away with thy weapons those who curse us, the malicious ones, all ghouls, be they near or afar. And make a good path to the sacrifice of him who praises thee. Agni! May we suffer no harm in thy friendship.

10. When thou hast yoked to thy chariot the two ruddy, red horses, whom the wind drives forward, and thy roaring is like that of a bull, then thou movest the trees with thy banner of smoke¹. Agni! May we suffer no harm in thy friendship.

11. And when thy grass-consuming sparks are scattered, the winged (birds)¹ also fear the noise. Then all goes well with thee and thy chariots. Agni! May we suffer no harm in thy friendship.

12. He makes Mitra and Varuṇa get refreshing drink. He mysteriously turns away the anger of the Maruts¹. Be merciful towards us. May their mind be again (as it was before). Agni! May we suffer no harm in thy friendship.

13. Thou art god of the gods, a wonderful Mitra (i.e. friend, of the gods)¹. Thou art the Vasu of the Vasus, welcome at the sacrifice. May we be under thy most wide-reaching protection. Agni! May we suffer no harm in thy friendship.

14. That is thy glorious (nature) that when kindled in thy own house, and fed with Soma, thou art awake¹, the most merciful one. Thou bestowest treasures and wealth on the worshipper. Agni! May we suffer no harm in thy friendship.

15. May we be of those to whom thou, O possessor of beautiful wealth, O Aditi¹, art pleased to grant sinlessness in health and wealth², and whom thou wilt quicken with glorious strength and with abundance of progeny.

16. Do thou, O Agni, thou who knowest (how to grant) happiness, prolong our life here, O God! May Mitra and Varuṇa grant us this, may Aditi, the Sindhu, the Earth, and the Sky¹!

NOTES.

This hymn with the whole collection which it opens is ascribed to Kutsa Āṅgīrasa. The metre is Gagatī; the two last verses, as is frequently the case in Gagatī-hymns (see H. O., Prolegomena, 144 seq.), are composed in Trishubh. The hymn has been translated by Prof. Max Müller, Physical Religion, p. 173.—Verse 1 = MS. II, 7, 3; SV. I, 66; AV. XX, 13, 3. Verses 1, 3, 4 = SV. II, 414. 416. 415.

Verse 1.

Note 1. Prof. Max Müller translates, 'Let us build up this hymn of praise.' To me it rather seems that the reading should be, as Boehtlingk-Roth have proposed, s. v. sam-hi, sám ahema. Comp. I, 61, 4. asmaí ít u stómam sám hinomi rátham ná táshā-iva, 'to him I send forward a song of praise as a carpenter (fits out) a chariot.' Compare besides, IX, 71, 5; I, 184, 4; II, 19, 7; VI, 45, 14, &c.

Verse 2.

Note 1. Comp. vol. xxxii, p. 65, I, 37, 1 note.

Verse 4.

Note 1. Párvan, 'joint,' seems to refer here, as it very frequently does in the later Vedic and post-Vedic texts, to the joints of the month, the sacrificial days of the full and change of the moon (the pārvana-sacrifices). As to the temporal use of the instrumental, comp. ritunā and ritubhiḥ; Delbrück, Altindische Syntax, p. 130.

Verse 5.

Note 1. Ludwig proposes the correction of visām gopāḥ into visām gopāḥ (genitive). But I think it will be sufficient to write asyā accented. As to visām gopāḥ, comp. 96, 4.

Verse 6.

Note 1. The Prasāstri (or Upavaktri), literally, 'the commander,' is the same priest who is more usually designated as the Maitrāvaruṇa. All the priests mentioned here (with the exception of the Purohita, see next note) belong to the ancient system of the 'seven Hotris,' enumerated, for instance, II, 1, 2. Comp. H. O., Religion des Veda, 383 seq.

Note 2. The Purohita or house-priest does not, properly speaking, belong to the number of the priests officiating at a sacrifice (ritvigah), though of course the Purohita could act as a ritvig. Geldner (Vedische Studien, II, 144) seems to be wrong in concluding from our passage that 'already in the Rig-veda the Purohita, being the superintendent of the holy service, was a real ritvig, i. e. officiating priest.' Comp. H. O., loc. cit., 374 seq.; 379, note 2.

Verse 8.

Note 1. On pūrvaḥ, comp. I, 34, 10; V, 31, 11.

Verse 10.

Note 1. The regular accentuation of a determinative compound ('banner of smoke') would be dhûmaketúnâ. But it is very natural that the traditional text gives the accent of the Bahuvrîhi ('he whose banner is smoke') which so frequently occurs.

Verse 11.

Note 1. As to patatrîṇaḥ, comp. above, I, 58, 5.

Verse 12.

Note 1. Most probably the meaning is not that the Maruts are expected to turn away the anger of somebody else, but that the anger of the Maruts shall be turned away by Agni. Comp. I, 171, 1; VI, 66, 5; VII, 58, 5; Bergaigne, Religion Védique, II, 401. It seems, consequently, that we should read avayâtâ.—On ávayâtaheḥ, scil. Indra, see vol. xxxii, p. 292 (I, 171, 6), and also IV, 1, 4; VI, 66, 5.

The genitives Mitrásya Váruṇasya may be understood as depending, together with Marútâm, on héḥ. In this case the translation would be: 'He mysteriously turns away the anger of Mitra and Varuṇa and of the Maruts in order that (men) may get refreshing drink.'

Verse 13.

Note 1. On the frequent identification of Agni with Mitra, see Bergaigne, Religion Védique, III, 134 seq.

Verse 14.

Note 1. On the root gar used with regard to Agni, see the remarks of Dr. Neisser in Bezenberger's Beiträge, XIII, 297 seq.

Verse 15.

Note 1. Agni is invoked here by the name of Aditi, with an evident allusion to the goddess Aditi, as granting freedom from bonds, which is the original meaning of Aditi. Comp. M. M., vol. xxxii, pp. 241, 260, 262; H. O., Religion des Veda, p. 204.

Note 2. Comp. III, 54, 19. On sarvátât (sarvátâti), see M. M.'s note, vol. xxxii, p. 260, note a, and compare Darmesteter, Haurvatât et Ameretât, p. 80. See also Lanman, p. 386.

Verse 16.

Note 1. The last hemistich is the regular conclusion of the Kutsa hymns.

MANDALA I, HYMN 95.

ASHTAKA I, ADHYÂYA 7, VARGA 1-2.

1. Two (sisters) of different shapes wander along, pursuing a good aim. The one and the other suckles the calf¹. With the one (the calf) is golden, moving according to its wont². With the other it is seen clear, full of fine splendour.

2. The ten unwearied¹ young women² have brought forth this widely-spread germ of *Tvashtri*³. Him, the sharp-faced (Agni) who is endowed with his own splendour, the shining one, they⁴ carry around among men.

3. They celebrate his three births: one in the sea, one in heaven, one in the waters¹. In the eastern region² he commanding determines the seasons of the dwellers on earth by his present power³.

4. Who among you has understood this hidden (god)?¹ The calf has by itself given birth to its mothers². The germ of many (mothers), the great seer, moving by his own strength, comes forward from the lap of the active ones³.

5¹. The fair (child Agni) grows up visibly in them in his own glory, standing erect in the lap of the down-streaming (waters). Both (Heaven and Earth) fled away in fear of (the son of) *Tvashtri*², when he was born, but turning back they caress the lion.

6. They caress him both, like two kind women; like lowing cows they have approached him in their own way. He has become the lord of all powers¹, he whom they anoint with sacrificial gifts from the right side².

7. He raises his arms again and again like Savitri¹. He the terrible pressing on ranges both wings² (of his army). He raises up his bright vesture from himself alone³. He gives new garments to his mothers.

8. He assumes his fierce appearance which is above (i.e. the lightning?), being united with the cows¹, the waters in his seat. The prayer purifies the bottom of the seer(?)². This was the meeting among the gods³.

9. The wide space encompasses thy base, the resplendent foundation¹ of the buffalo. Agni! Being kindled protect us with all thy undeceivable guardians who are endowed with their own splendour.

10. On the dry ground he produces a stream¹, a course, a flood. With his bright floods he reaches the earth. Whatever is old he receives into his belly. He moves about within the young sprouting grass².

11. Thus, O Agni, being strengthened by fuel, shine thou to us with wealth-giving shine, O purifier, for the sake of glory. May Mitra and Varuna grant us this, may Aditi, Sindhu, the Earth, and the Sky!

NOTES.

The same R̥ishi. The metre is Trishubh.—Verse 1 = VS. XXXIII, 5; TB. II, 7, 12, 2. Verse 2 = TB. II, 8, 7, 4. Verse 5 = TB. II, 8, 7, 4; MS. IV, 14, 8.

Verse 1.

Note 1. The two females are evidently Night and Dawn

(comp. below, 96, 5). The calf is Agni whose bright appearance by night is contrasted here with his paler splendour by day (comp. below, 127, 5). The explanation of Professor Hillebrandt (Vedische Mythologie, I, 331) that 'das von ihnen wechselnd gesäugte Kalb der bald als Sonne bald als Mond erscheinende Lichtgott, d. h. Agni ist,' does not seem convincing to me.

Note 2. I cannot follow Hillebrandt (loc. cit. 335) in translating svadhāvān 'an Labung reich.'

Verse 2.

Note 1. On feminine nominatives in -āsaḥ like ātandrāsaḥ, see Lanman, Noun-Inflection, 362.

Note 2. The ten young women are the fingers which produce the fire by the attrition of woods.

Note 3. On Tvashtri as the father of Agni, see Hillebrandt, Vedische Mythologie, I, 522 seq.; Bergaigne, Rel. Véd., III, 47 seq.

Note 4. Hillebrandt (loc. cit.) takes the ten fingers as the subject of pāri nayanti, which does not seem probable.

Verse 3.

Note 1. It is surprising that Agni's birth in the sea and his birth in the waters are distinguished. The poet's meaning is not quite clear. Prof. Max Müller thinks of the rising sun and the lightning in the clouds. Comp. H. O., Religion des Veda, 107.

Note 2. We ought to read pradīsam; comp. IV, 29, 3; IX, 111, 3.

Note 3. Comp. X, 85, 18, where it is said of the moon that she 'is born again, determining the seasons.' Thus it is possible that the poet understands here Agni as dwelling in the moon as light. Comp. on this identification Bergaigne, I, 159, and Hillebrandt, Ved. Mythologie, I, 330 seq. But this interpretation of our passage is by no means certain.

Verse 4.

Note 1. Possibly we should correct kāḥ idām vaḥ ninyām; comp. VII, 56, 4; 61, 5. The translation would be: 'Who among you has understood this secret?'—the secret that a calf should give birth to cows.

Note 2. In my opinion the mothers are the waters; the calf is Agni. The meaning must be, consequently, that, as Agni is born from the waters thus the waters are born from Agni. Agni—we may try to interpret the poet's meaning—sends his smoke to the sky. The smoke is changed to clouds; the clouds send forth water. Exactly the same meaning seems to be expressed in I, 164, 51. Comp. also Manu III, 76. agnau prâstâhutiḥ samyag âdityam upatishḥate, âdityâg gâyate vṛishṭir vṛishṭer annam tataḥ pragâḥ.—Prof. Max Müller observes: 'The mothers are day and night, or heaven and earth. The calf, the son, Agni, being born of the night gives birth to the day, and being born of the day (in the evening) gives birth to the night. Or it may be that Agni, light, makes Dyaus and Prithivî to be visible.'—Prof. Hillebrandt's interpretation of our verse is quite different; see Vedische Mythologie, I, 335.

Note 3. I. e. the fire is born from the waters.

Verse 5.

Note 1. Comp. Hillebrandt, Ved. Myth., I, 371, 523.

Note 2. I. e. the son of Tvashtri (see above, verse 2) considered as identical with his father. Comp. Bergaigne, III, 47, and see also Aufrecht, Kuhn's Zeitschrift, I, 356.

Verse 6.

Note 1. On dáksha and its relation to krátu, comp. Geldner, Vedische Studien, I, 267.

Note 2. The poet seems to play upon words; 'power' is dáksha, 'from the right side' dakshinatáḥ (i. e. approaching respectfully, dakshinikṛitya).

Verse 7.

Note 1. Comp. Bergaigne, Rel. Véd., III, 46.

Note 2. Observe the dual form śléau ending in -au, not in -â. Comp. Lanman, Noun-Inflection, 576. Prof. Max Müller translates here: 'He the terrible tries and stretches out the hems of his sleeves.' This may indeed be the meaning of sik.

Note 3. See Geldner, Vedische Studien, II, 189.

Verse 8.

Note 1. The cows of course are intended for the sacrificial food coming from the cow, such as milk and butter.

Note 2. The two nominatives, kavīh and dhīh, can scarcely be right. The subject seems to be the prayer which cleanses, as it were, Agni, and thus augments his splendour (comp. IV, 15, 6; VIII, 103, 7). Possibly we should read kavéh budhnám. Comp., however, IX, 47, 4. svayám kavīh vidhartāri víprāya rátanam ikkhati yádi marmṛigyáte dhíyah. In this difficult verse so much is clear that the seer (kavīh) is subject, and that he is stated to purify the prayers.

Note 3. The meaning seems to be that at the sacrificial fire all gods assemble.

Verse 9.

Note 1. On dháman, comp. M. M., vol. xxxii, p. 383 seq. —Prof. Max Müller proposes the following translation: 'Thy wide effulgence goes round the firmament, the firm seat of the strong one (buffalo).'

Verse 10.

Note 1. Ludwig takes srótaḥ as a locative. But it is very improbable that we should have here a survival of the ancient locatives of stems in -s without a case-ending (Joh. Schmidt, Kuhn's Zeitschrift, XXVII, 306; Brugmann, Grundriss der vergl. Grammatik, vol. ii, p. 611). In Ludwig's opinion 'it follows from the corresponding gátum ūrmim that srotas stands for srotasi as dhanvan for dhanvani.' But this is not convincing.

Note 2. On Agni as inhabiting the sprouting grass, comp. III, 5, 8; VII, 9, 3. 'I believe this refers to the blades of grass used as tinder to catch the sparks of fire.' M. M.

MANDALA I, HYMN 96.

ASHTAKA I, ADHYĀYA 7, VARGA 3-4.

1. Being born by strength¹ in the ancient way, lo! he (Agni) has assumed instantly all the qualities of a sage. The Waters and the Dhishanā² have furthered the friend (Mitra³). The gods have held Agni as the giver of wealth.

2. By the ancient Nivid¹, by Āyu's² wisdom he has procreated these children of men. With his irradiating look³ (he has procreated) the Sky and the Waters. The gods have held Agni as the giver of wealth.

3. The Āryan clans magnified¹ him as the first performer of sacrifices, as receiving offerings, as striving forward, the son of strength, the Bharata², the bestower of mighty rain (?)³. The gods have held Agni as the giver of wealth.

4. He, Mâtariśvan¹, the lord of bountiful prosperity, has found a path for (his?) offspring, he who has found the sun, the shepherd of the clans, the begetter of the two worlds. The gods have held Agni as the giver of wealth.

5. Night and Dawn, who constantly destroy each other's appearance, suckle one young calf¹ unitedly². The piece of gold³ shines between Heaven and Earth. The gods have held Agni as the giver of wealth.

6. (He is) the base of wealth, the assembler of all goods¹, the beacon of sacrifice, the fulfiller of thought, the bird². In order to guard their immor-talities the gods have held him, Agni, as the giver of wealth.

7. Him who is now and who was formerly the abode of wealth, the earth¹ (i.e. the dwelling-place or support) of what is born and of what will be born, the shepherd and guardian of what is and of much that comes into being. The gods have held Agni as the giver of wealth.

8. May (Agni,) the giver of wealth, present us with quick wealth. May the giver of wealth (present us with wealth) united with strong men¹. The giver of wealth (should grant us) food together with valiant heroes. The giver of wealth should grant us long life.

9 = 95, 11.

NOTES.

The same Rīshi and metre.—Verses 1, 2 = MS. IV, 10, 6. Verse 5 = VS. XII, 2; XVII, 70; TS. IV, 1, 10, 4; 6, 5, 2; 7, 12, 3; MS. II, 7, 8.

Verse 1.

Note 1. I.e. by the attrition of the woods, as sáhasa/putrá/.

Note 2. Two new discussions on dhishánā have been given by Hillebrandt (Ved. Mythologie, I, 175 seq.; comp. the criticisms of Ludwig, Ueber die neuesten arbeiten auf dem gebiete der R̥gveda-forschung, 85 seq.) and Pischel (Ved. Studien, II, 82 seq.). Hillebrandt arrives at the conclusion that dhishánā is the Earth (in the dual, Heaven and Earth; in the plural, Heaven, Air, and Earth), and besides the Vedi, i.e. the excavated spot of ground which serves as a kind of altar for the sacrifice. Similar is Pischel's opinion. He believes that the singular dhishánâ is everywhere to be interpreted as a proper name: the name of a goddess of wealth and prosperity. The dual dhisháve means 'Heaven and Earth:' thus the original meaning of dhishánâ must have been, as Pischel concludes, either Heaven or Earth. He tries to show that it is Earth, and so does Prof. Hillebrandt. The goddess of wealth originally was a goddess of the earth conceived as the liberal giver of wealth. This goddess, Prof. Pischel thinks, was closely related to, or even identical with, the goddess Aditi, whom the same scholar also believes to be a personification of the Earth.

I must confess that even this close agreement of these two distinguished scholars has failed to convince me. It is quite true that the dual dhisháve means Heaven and Earth, and it is possible that the singular may, at least in some passages, mean the Earth. But I cannot believe that this is the original meaning of the word. Originally, in my opinion, dhishánâ was an implement used at the sacrifice, more especially at the Soma sacrifice. The ádrî (Soma-stones) are said to rest in the lap of the dhishánâ (I, 109, 3). In a Yagus Mantra referring to the sacrificial preparation of Soma (Vâgasaneyi Samhitâ VI, 26) the dhishánâ, or more exactly the Dhishánâs, as goddesses (dhishánâs ka devîh), are mentioned together with the sacrificial fire, the waters, and the grāvânah, the stones. In a similar connection we find a Yagus formula pronounced when the Adhvaryu began to beat the Soma plants with the Upâmsusavana stone (see Weber, Indische Studien, X, 370). There the Soma was addressed first, and then the two Dhishanâs: 'Do not be afraid, do not be terrified, assume sap (O Soma!). O two Dhishanâs! Being firm show firmness!' (Vâgasaneyi Samhitâ VI, 35). Here the Satapatha Brâhmaṇa (III, 9, 4, 18) says, that some authorities refer the last words to the two boards (phalake) on which the pressing-stones rest (see Hillebrandt, Ved. Mythologie, I, 149 seq.). But the author of the Brâhmaṇa himself declares that Heaven and Earth are addressed; for as to the boards used for pressing the Soma, it would be of no consequence if they were broken.—Other passages in which the dhishānā are mentioned in connection with the preparation of the Soma, are Rig-veda IX, 59, 2; X, 17, 2. In the last passage 'the lap of the Dh.' is mentioned as in I, 109, 3 (see above). The dhishānā was anointed, I, 102, 1. The dhishānā is mentioned in connection with the waters which were fetched by the Adhvaryus and used at the sacrifice, X, 30, 6, and in connection with the sacrificial fire, III, 2, 1, and in our passage. I have therefore no doubt that according to the original meaning the Dhishanā was, as stated above, a sacrificial implement used chiefly, though not exclusively, at the pressing of the Soma. I do not venture to determine the exact nature of this implement, but I think that from the passages collected above it will be evident that it was a sort of support on which the pressing-stones rested. A similar support may have been used for the vessel containing the sacrificial water, and for the sacrificial fire. This support was considered as yielding the Soma to Indra, as strengthening Indra, as inciting Indra and the gods to liberality towards men. Thus we have a goddess Dhishanā who wears the aspect of a goddess of wealth. She is invoked as one of the Gnās in I, 22, 10 with Hotrā Bhāratī. Finally the Earth, the support of everything, was likened to this support of the pressing-stones and of the Soma; and Heaven and Earth were then considered as the two Dhishanās.

Note 3. Comp. above, 94, 13, note 1.

Verse 2.

Note 1. On the solemn formulas of invocation, called Nivids, see Haug's Aitareya Brāhmaṇa, p. 32 seq.; Weber, Indische Studien, IX, 355; H. O., Religion des Veda, 387, note 2. Of course, the Nivids which Sāṅkhāyana (Srauta-sūtra VIII, 16–25) gives, cannot be those to which the poets of the Rig-veda several times allude.

Note 2. On Āyu as one of the mythical ancestors of mankind, nearly related to Manu, see Bergaigne, Religion Védique, I, 59 seq.

Note 3. Ushas is called vivásvatī, III, 30, 13 (cf. Bergaigne, I, 86); we are justified, consequently, in translating vivásvatā kákshasā, 'with the irradiating look.' But in giving this translation we should not forget that the poet no doubt at the same time intended to allude to the name of Vivasvat, the father of Yama.

Verse 3.

Note 1. The text has íḷata. Comp. above, I, 1, 1, note 2.

Note 2. Agni seems to be called Bharatá as belonging to the people of Bharatas. Comp. H. O., 'Buddha, sein Leben, seine Lehre, seine Gemeinde' (first edition), p. 414 seq. More usually Agni is designated as Bhárata.

Note 3. Sríprádānum. On dānu, the meaning of which I consider to be 'rain' or the like, comp. the discussion of Prof. Max Müller, vol. xxxii, 113 seq. The exact meaning of sríprá, which should not be compared with the Greek λιπαρός, cannot be determined. The etymology is a very unsafe guide in such questions, and neither the connection with the root srip, 'to creep,' 'to crawl,' nor with the noun sarpís, 'butter,' seems to lead to a satisfactory result. The passages in which sríprá or compounds of this adjective occur, point to a meaning like 'great,' 'mighty,' 'fine.' Thus sríprábhogas seems to be something like purubhógas or subhógas; Indra's arms (karásna) are called both sríprá (VIII, 32, 10) and príthú (VI, 19, 3); finally sríprádānu, which is used here as an epithet of Agni, and VIII, 25, 5 of Mitra and Varuṇa, does not seem to differ very much from sudānu.

Verse 4.

Note 1. Mátarīśvan, the messenger of Vivasvat, who carried the fire from heaven to earth, was originally distinct from Agni, but is identified with him in several passages. See M. M., Physical Religion, p. 152; Bergaigne, Religion Védique, I, 52 seq.; H. O., Religion des Veda, 122.

Verse 5.

Note 1. Comp. above, 95, 1, and I, 113, 2. rúśadvatsâ. The calf, of course, is Agni.

Note 2. Literally, 'turned towards each other.'

Note 3. The gold is again Agni.

Verse 6.

Note 1. The first Pâda is identical with X, 139, 3.

Note 2. I prefer with Ludwig to take vêh as a nominative (comp. Lanman, Noun-Inflection, 375) instead of a genitive.

Verse 7.

Note 1. Compare the very obscure verse X, 31, 5. iyám śâ bhûyâ ushâśâm iva kshâh, 'may she be the earth, as it were, of the dawns.' 'She' may possibly be the earth, which would be designated here as a dwelling-place or support of the dawns.

Verse 8.

Note 1. Prof. Max Müller proposes another translation of sánara. He writes: 'One expects an opposition between turá and sánara. Sánara can hardly be the same as virávat in the next line. I should like to take sánara as a variety of sána and sanâtána. Give us fleeting, i.e. daily wealth, and give us old, i.e. lasting wealth!'

MANDALA I, HYMN 97.

ASHTAKA I, ADHYĀYA 7, VARGA 5.

1. Driving away evil¹ with thy light, Agni, shine upon us with wealth—driving away evil with thy light.

2. Longing for rich fields, for a free path, and for wealth, we sacrifice—driving away evil with thy light.

3¹. When he stands forth as the most glorious one among them², and when our liberal lords excel—driving away evil with thy light—

4. When through thee, Agni, the liberal lords, and when through thee we may multiply with offspring—driving away evil with thy light—

5. When the rays of the mighty Agni go forth on all sides—driving away evil with thy light—

6. For thou indeed, (O god) whose face is turned everywhere, encompassest (the world) everywhere—driving away evil with thy light.

7. Do thou carry us, as with a boat, across hostile powers, (O god) whose face is turned everywhere—driving away evil with thy light.

8. Do thou carry us across (evil) to welfare, as across a stream with a boat¹—driving away evil with thy light.

NOTES.

The same Rishi. Metre, Gâyatrî. The hymn is addressed to Agni Sukî.—Verses 1-8 = AV. IV, 33, 1-8 ; TÂ. VI, 11, 1-2. Verse 1 = TÂ. VI, 10, 1.

Verse 1.

Note 1. Lanman (Sanskrit Reader, p. 363) translates : 'Driving away with flames our sin.' But aghá is not exactly sin.

Verse 3.

Note 1. In this verse as well as in the verses 4 and 5—all commencing with the words prá yát—the principal clauses are wanting. As to the meaning, however, these clauses are supplied by the refrain ; 'driving away evil' of course means 'may he drive away evil.'

Note 2. 'Among them' seems to mean 'among the liberal lords.'

Verse 8.

Note 1. Cf. Lanman, p. 434.

MANDALA I, HYMN 98.

ASHTAKA I, ADHYÁYA 7, VARGA 6.

1. May we dwell in the favour of (Agni) Vaisvânara. He indeed is a king, leading all beings to gloriousness¹. As soon as born from here he looks over this whole world. Vaisvânara unites with the Sun².

2. Agni who has been looked and longed for¹ in Heaven, who has been looked for on Earth—he who has been looked for, has entered all herbs. May Agni Vaisvânara, who has strongly been looked for, protect us from harm by day and by night.

3. Vaisvânara! May this be true of thee: may wealth and liberal givers attend us! May Mitra and Varuṇa grant us this, may Aditi, the Sindhu, the Earth, and the Sky!

NOTES.

The same Rishi. Metre, Trishṭubh.—Verse 1 = VS. XXVI, 7; TS. I, 5, 11, 3; MS. IV, 11, 1. Verse 2 = VS. XVIII, 73; TS. I, 5, 11, 1; IV, 4, 12, 5; 7, 15, 6; TB. III, 11, 6, 4; MS. II, 13, 11.

Verse 1.

Note 1. Comp. VI, 70, 1. bhúvanânâm abhisr̥iṣā. Abhisr̥iṣ seems to mean, going or leading towards (abhi) gloriousness (sr̥iṣ). Prof. Pischel's opinion on the word is different; see Vedische Studien, I, 53 seq.

Note 2. As to yatate, comp. V, 4, 4. yátamānaḥ rasm̐bhiḥ sūryasya; IX, 111, 3. sám rasm̐bhiḥ yatate darsatáḥ ráthaḥ.

Verse 2.

Note 1. On the disappearance of Agni who is looked for everywhere, see M. M., Physical Religion, 264 seq.; Bergaigne, Rel. Védique, II, 75.

MANDALA I, HYMN 99.

ASHTAKA I, ADHYĀYA 8, VARGA 7.

1. Let us press Soma for *Gâtavedas*¹. May he burn down the property of the niggard². May he, Agni, bring us across all troubles, across all difficulties, as across a stream with a boat.

NOTES.

The Rishi is Kasyapa Mârîka. Metre, Trishṭubh.—Verse 1 = TĀ. X, 1.

Verse 1.

Note 1. This is one of the very rare passages in which Agni standing alone and not accompanied by Indra or the Maruts &c. is mentioned as drinking Soma. It seems as if this verse were not composed for the regular Soma sacrifice, but for a special occasion.

Note 2. Cf. Delbrück, Syntakt. Forschungen, I, 112.

MANDALA I, HYMN 127.

ASHṬAKA II, ADHYĀYA 1, VARGA 12-13.

1. I deem Agni to be the munificent Hotri, the Vasu, the Son of strength¹, Gâtavedas, like a priest, *Gâtavedas*²: the best performer of the sacrifice, the god who with his upright body that is turned towards the gods, and with his flame longs for the shine of the (boiling) ghee³, of the butter that is offered in (the fire).

2. May we, the sacrificers, call thee hither, the best of sacrificers¹, the first of the Āngiras, O priest, with our prayers, with priestly prayers, O bright one²: thee who like the heaven encompasseth the earth³, the Hotri of human tribes, the manly flame-haired, whom these folks—whom all folks should favour in order to speed him (to our sacrifice).

3. He indeed, shining mightily with his shining strength¹, becomes the conqueror of deceitful foes²—like an axe, the conqueror of deceitful foes². He at whose onslaught³ even what is strong melts away⁴, steady things (waste away) like forests (which are burnt or bend down in the storm)⁵. Conquering he holds himself back; he does not proceed⁶. As with a conquering bow-man he proceeds⁶.

4. Even what is firm gives way before him: thus it is known. With hottest kindling-sticks¹ one worships him² for winning his favour, one worships Agni for winning his favour. He who dives into many forests as if carving the wood with his flame, destroys even firm food³ with his strength—he destroys even what is firm with his strength.

5. Let us place that power¹ of his in our neighbourhood²—(that power) which is more visible by night than by day³—(more visible) than by day to the unremitting⁴ (worshipper). Therefore his life is a firm hold⁵, like (a father's) safe refuge to a son : (the fires) that never grow old, tending to blessings enjoyed or not enjoyed (before)⁶—the fires that never grow old, tending (to such blessings).

6. He indeed makes a mighty noise like the host of the Maruts, . . .¹ on the rich fields, . . .¹ on the . . .¹. He, the seizer, ate the offerings², he who has deservedly become the banner of the sacrifice. And when he joyously and joyfully (proceeds), all followed gladly on his path; men (have followed) his path as for a triumphal procession.

7. When forsooth the Kistas¹ striving for heaven, when the Bhṛigus have addressed him paying reverence—the Bhṛigus producing him by attrition, with worship: Agni is the lord of goods, the bright one, who is their² supporter. May the wise one accept the wonted coverings³; may the wise one accept them.

8. We invoke thee, the lord of all people, the common master of the house of all, to enjoy (the sacrifice): (we call) thee who truly art carried by prayers as by a vehicle¹ to enjoy (the sacrifice): the guest of men in whose presence (they live) as before a father's (face), and all those immortals (attain) to strength, and the offerings among the gods (attain) to strength.

9. Thou, O Agni, art born, the mightiest by might¹, for the divine world, the strongest one, like wealth for the divine world. For thy delight is most strong, and thy power is most brilliant. And they walk around thee², O (god) who never growest old, like obedient (servants), O (god) who never growest old.

10. Let your praise go forth to the great Agni, who is mighty in his might, who awakens at dawn, like a winner of cattle¹—let it go forth to Agni. When (the worshipper) rich in offerings has loudly praised him² in all lands³, he wakes⁴ like a singer in front of the dawns⁵, the flaming one (?), the Hotri (in front) of the dawns⁵.

11. Thus being seen by us, bring near to us, O Agni, graciously united with the gods, benignantly, great wealth benignantly. Make us behold great (bliss of valiant offspring¹), O mightiest one, that we may obtain such enjoyment. Produce great bliss of valiant offspring, O bountiful Lord, (as fire is produced) by attrition, for those who praise thee, like a strong hero in thy might.

NOTES.

The Rishi is Parukkhhepa Daivodâsi, the metre Atyashfi (verse 6 Atidhriti).—Verses 1-3 = SV. II, 1163-1165. Verse 1 = SV. I, 465; VS. XV, 47; TS. IV, 4, 4, 8; MS. II, 13, 8; AV. XX, 67, 3.

Verse 1.

Note 1. There is no doubt that the reading of the Rig-veda text vâsum is correct; the Sâma-veda has vâsoh. Comp. H. O., Prolegomena, p. 280.

Note 2. 'Is it a play on the word? Like a priest knowing all things?' M. M.

Note 3. There is a metrical irregularity in this Pâda; it has six syllables instead of five before the caesura. The text, however, seems to be correct.

Verse 2.

Note 1. The first Pâda is Trishubh instead of Gagatî. It would be easy to correct huvemahi, but that form is never found in the Rig-veda, though both huvema and havâmahe are frequent. Thus it is very probable that we have here a metrical irregularity of the type described by H. O., Prolegomena, p. 117.

Note 2. Comp. VIII, 60, 3. vîprebhiḥ sukra mánmabhiḥ.

Note 3. If the explanation of párigman which we have adopted (see above, I, 79, 3, note 2) is correct, it will be impossible, of course, to accept Bergaigne's opinion (Rel. Véd., II, 505, note 1) that the accusative dyám is governed by párigmānam.

Verse 3.

Note 1. In the second Pâda one syllable is wanting. The text seems to be correct, and the irregularity apparently is the typical one described by H. O., Prolegomena, p. 68 seq.: the Pâda has the tetrasyllabic beginning (before the caesura), and it goes on as if the beginning had been pentasyllabic. Several Pâdas of the same irregular structure occur in our hymn, thus in verse 9: tvám (read tuám) agne ṁ sāhasâ sāhantamaḥ; verse 10: prá vaḥ mahé ṁ sāhasâ sāhasvate; ushaḥ-búdhe ṁ paru-sé ná agnáye.

Note 2. The comparison parasúḥ ná, 'like an axe,' raises doubts as to the correctness of druham-taráḥ. Parasúḥ seems to point to a compound containing the element drú, 'wood;' comp. below, 130, 4; VII, 104, 21. The second member of the compound would be han, which is frequently used with the meaning of cutting wood (II, 14, 2; X, 89, 7). Thus the reading would be dru-hántaraḥ (comp. vṛitra-hántamaḥ), 'a mighty wood-cutter.' As to this use of the comparative, see Delbrück, Altindische Syntax, p. 196.

Note 3. Comp. V, 7, 2. yásya sámritau.

Note 4. Prof. Max Müller (Science of Thought, p. 325) believes that the root sru occurs here in the sense of shaking. To me it seems that this srúvat is a misspelling for srúvat. The opinion of Pischel and Geldner (Vedische Studien, I, p. vi) is different.

Note 5. The meaning of the comparison which I have indicated by the words in parentheses, becomes clear from VIII, 40, 1. vánâ-iva vâte it.

Note 6. The two last Pâdas are very obscure. In the last Pâda but one nâ would seem to be comparative, not negative, because it has the same meaning in the last Pâda, and because its vowel does not coalesce with the following initial vowel (comp. Benfey's dissertation, 'Behandlung des auslautenden a in nâ "wie" und nâ "nicht."') But then instead of yamate a substantive meaning something like 'hero' would be required. And also instead of the instrumental dhanva-sâhâ one should expect to find a nominative; comp. Benfey, Vedica und Linguistica, p. 180, note 1.—Prof. Max Müller translates: 'Holding out (or resisting) he stands firm, he does not budge; holding his bow he does not budge.'

Verse 4.

Note 1. The words tégishthâbhih arânibhih are repeated, probably by the same poet, below, 129, 5.

Note 2. It may be observed that several times in the Parukkhēpa hymns the parallelism between two subsequent Pâdas has corrupted the text, the reading of the one Pâda being wrongly introduced into the other. For instances I refer to I, 129, 11, where the last vaso has been added from the preceding Pâda, and to the last Pâda but one of I, 135, 4. Possibly our Pâda, which in its traditional form is metrically abnormal (comp., however, M. M.'s Hymns to the Maruts, 1st ed., p. cxii), has suffered damage in the same way. The comparison of I, 129, 5 would lead us to conjecture: tégishthâbhih arânibhih nâ âvase. 'One worships him in order that he may grant his favour as if (he were to help us) with hottest kindling-sticks. One worships Agni in order that he may grant his favour.'

Note 3. Comp. IV, 7, 10. sthirâ kit ânnâ dayate vî gâmbhaih. The food is the wood which Agni consumes.

Verse 5.

Note 1. See Prof. von Roth's translation of this verse, Zeitschrift der D. Morg. Gesellschaft, XLVIII, 117. On prīkshām, comp. M. M., vol. xxxii, p. 302; Pischel, Vedische Studien, I, p. 96 seq. The translation of such a word can only be tentative.

Note 2. To úparāsu something like vikshú (IV, 37, 3) seems to be supplied.

Note 3. Comp. the Latin expression, 'argutius quam verius.' Pischel, Göttinger Gelehrte Anzeigen, 1884, p. 516 seq.; Delbrück, Altindische Syntax, p. 196.

Note 4. Áprāyus seems to be an anomalous formation, instead of áprāyu, unless we have to read áprāyuve. According to Pischel (Göttinger Gel. Anzeigen, 1890, p. 542), áprāyushe would mean 'dem der da lebt.' But I do not think that this áprāyus should be separated from áprāyu, which, as may be seen from I, 89, 1 compared with III, 5, 6 and X, 4, 7, is identical in meaning with, and evidently etymologically related to, áprayukkhant.

Note 5. Grábhānavat is the contrary of agrabhaná, I, 116, 5.

Note 6. Comp. III, 30, 7. ábhaktam kīit bhagate.

Verse 6.

Note 1. Ludwig: 'in den bebauten fluren zu verehren, auf den wüsten flächen zu verehren.' Prof. Max Müller observes with regard to ishtániḥ: 'it staniḥ, or ish + staniḥ (ish-kartā), much thundering.' For ārtanā he proposes the translation, 'ploughed field.' I have left both words untranslated.

Note 2. Ādat is imperfect of ad; there is a play upon words (ādat and ā-dadīḥ).

Verse 7.

Note 1. Who the Kīstas (cf. Lanman, p. 346) are is not known. They seem, however, either to be identical with the Bhrīgus or to be another ancient and probably mythical family of priests like them. They are mentioned also in VI, 67, 10.

Note 2. 'Their' refers to 'goods.'

Note 3. The fuel and libations with which Agni is covered?

Verse 8.

Note 1. Vāhas and its compounds, such as stómavāhas, ukthāvāhas, gírvāhas, have been treated of by Dr. Neisser in his ingenious article on váhni, Bezenberger's Beiträge, XVIII, 301 seq. (comp. on váhni, vol. xxxii, p. 37 seq.). Dr. Neisser tries to show that by the side of váhni, derived from vah=Latin vehere, and meaning 'draught-horse' (and besides—though Dr. Neisser does not admit this, see p. 316 —'a person that drives in a chariot'), there existed a second substantive váhni connected with the Greek εὐχεσθαι, and meaning both 'erhaben' and 'erhebend,' i.e. praising the gods (loc. cit., p. 314). With this second váhni he connects vāhas and its compounds. One of the principal arguments of Dr. Neisser is the fact quite correctly stated by him (p. 301), that 'the word váhni very frequently associates itself to the term hótri, while it does not with the compounds havyaváh and havyaváhana.' This fact, indeed, points to the conclusion that 'those compounds belong to another sphere of ideas than váhni' (p. 302). But Dr. Neisser seems to me to go too far in concluding that váhni, standing as an epithet of Agni, is not derived from vah=vehere. Agni's action consists not only in carrying the sacrificial food to the gods, but also in carrying the gods to the sacrifice of men, and in coming to that sacrifice himself with his chariot and his horses. Nor do the words stómavāhas or ukthāvāhas, if derived from vah=vehere, necessarily presuppose the admissibility of expressions such as 'uktham (stomam) vahati vipraḥ devân akkha' (p. 303), but those compounds may also rest on an idea conveyed by expressions such as 'uktham (stomaḥ) vahati devân upa yagñam,' which idea is quite Vedic. Thus stómavāhas in my opinion means, as an epithet of the god, 'carried by the stoma as by a vehicle' (comp. VII, 24, 5. eshá stomaḥ mahé ugrāya vāhe dhurí-iva átyaḥ ná vâgāyan adhâyi), or, as an epithet of the human worshippers, 'fitting out the stoma as a vehicle.' I believe that the words in question can thus be explained in conformity with the whole range of Vedic thought, and the artificial distinction of two different substantives vāhni, &c., will be avoided. For special indications pointing in the same direction, which are furnished by the passages which contain the words here treated of, I refer to Bergaigne, Religion Védique, II, 286 seq., and to the article of Dr. Neisser himself, p. 321 seq.

Verse 9.

Note 1. On the metrical irregularity, see above, verse 3, note 1.

Note 2. Te seems to stand for the accusative, comp. Pischel, Zeitschrift der D. Morgenl. Gesellschaft, XXXV, 714 seq.; Delbrück, Altindische Syntax, 205. Or may the meaning be: 'and thy (worshippers) walk around thee . . . like obedient (servants)?' ●

Verse 10.

Note 1. On the metre, see above, verse 3, note 1. Prof. Max Müller translates, 'like a hunter for cattle.'

Note 2. The phrase śísvāsu kshāsu góguve occurs also, V, 64, 2. The same hymn contains the word su-ḥetúnā, which is found in the eleventh verse of our hymn.

Note 3. Literally, 'on all earths.' Comp. X, 2, 6. nrivátih ānu kshāh.

Note 4. Garate, 'he wakes,' at the same time can mean 'he sings,' and 'he is praised.' Comp. Neisser, Bezenberger's Beiträge, XIII, 298.

Note 5. The translation 'dawn' is conjectural only. But it gives a good meaning in all the passages which contain the word rishûnām (besides our passage, V, 25, 1; VIII, 71, 15; X, 6, 1). Prof. Max Müller translates the last two Pâdas: 'he sings like Rebha at the head of all singers, like a clever Hotri among the singers.'—Comp. Lanman, p. 424.

Verse 11.

Note 1. I supply suvíryam; see the last Pâda but one.

MANDALA I, HYMN 128.

ASHTAKA II, ADHYĀYA 1, VARGA 14-15.

1. He was born in Manu's firm law¹, the Hotri, the best sacrificer, according to the will of the Usigs², Agni, according to his own will. Always listening to him who wishes to be his friend, like a treasure to him who aspires to renown, the unbeguiled Hotri sat down in the abode of food (on the altar); enveloped³ (he sat down) in the abode of food.

2. We render him attentive¹, the promoter of sacrifice, on the path of Rita, by adoration with offerings, in the divine world, by (adoration) with offerings². In bringing us vigour he never becomes worn out with this body of his: he whom Mâtarisvan (has brought) to Manu from afar, the god whom he has brought from afar.

3. In his (own) way he moves in one moment round the terrestrial (space), the sudden devourer (emitting) his sperm, the bellowing bull emitting his sperm, the bellow¹, looking round with a hundred eyes, the god who quickly courses in the forests², taking his seat on the lower ridges, Agni, and on the highest ridges.

4. This highly wise Purohita, Agni watches sacrifice and service¹ house by house; by (the power of) his mind he is intent upon sacrifice. By (the power of) his mind helpful to him who desires food², he looks on all creatures, since he has been born, the guest adorned with ghee, (since) the helpful carrier (of the gods)³ has been born.

5. When through his (Agni's) power the bounties grow in strength, with the roar of Agni¹ as with that of the Maruts²—like bounties offered to a vigorous man: then he by his greatness stirs up the gift of goods. May he protect us from misfortune and injury, from evil spell and injury.

6. The far-reaching¹ steward² has taken all goods³ in his right hand, and strongly advancing does not let them loose; desirous of glory he does not let them loose. For every supplicant⁴ thou hast carried the oblations to the gods⁵. For every righteous one he procures a treasure; Agni opens both folds of the door (for him).

7. He has been established as the most blissful one in the enclosures of men, Agni, at the sacrifices, like a noble lord of the clans, a beloved lord of the clans at the sacrifices: he rules over the oblations of men to which nourishing power has been imparted¹. May he protect us from harm that comes from Varuṇa, from harm² that comes from the great god.

8. They magnify Agni the Hotṛi, the dispenser of goods. They have roused the beloved, the most shining steward¹ (of sacrifice); they have roused the carrier of oblations. The gods desirous of goods (have roused) him in whom all life dwells, who possesses all wealth, the Hotṛi, the worshipful sage, the lovely one for the sake of bliss; with praises (they have roused), desirous of goods, the lovely one.

NOTES.

The same Rishi and metre.—Verse 6 = TB. II, 5, 4, 4.

Verse 1.

Note 1. As to dhárīmañi, comp. IX, 86, 4, where it is said that the streams of Soma flow forward, 'dhárīmañi;' Bergaigne, III, 219. 'Domain, precinct, sanctuary?' M. M.

Note 2. The Usigas (comp. above, I, 60, 2, note 1) are closely related to the Bhrigus; they are considered as the first sacrificers, the first worshippers of Agni. See Bergaigne, I, 57 seq.

Note 3. Enveloped in fuel and libations.

Verse 2.

Note 1. Comp. M. M.'s note, vol. xxxii, p. 437.

Note 2. Comp. Lanman, pp. 516, 518.

Verse 3.

Note 1. Prof. Max Müller translates the second and third Pādas: 'again and again shouting, bellowing forth his sperm, yea, placing his sperm with bellowing.'

Note 2. Of course the fuel is alluded to.

Verse 4.

Note 1. Yagñāsya adhvarāsya, 'sacrifice and service;' comp. above, I, 1, 4, note 1.

Note 2. The translation is doubtful. If the denominative ishûy is derived from ishu, the meaning must be 'to fly like an arrow,' or possibly 'to shoot arrows.' But I do not think that the poet can have meant to say that Agni acts as a vedhā and looks on all creatures 'for him who flies like an arrow,' or 'for him who shoots arrows.' We should rather have to write ishûyate without accent, so that the translation would be: 'By (the power of) his mind helpful (Agni) flies like an arrow; he looks on all creatures' (comp. VI, 3, 5, where it is said that Agni shoots arrows). But possibly ishûy, which is found only here, may be a synonym of ishudhy, see verse 6. It may be a denominative from ish, influenced by the type of verbs like rigûy, kratûy, vasûy, &c. Then the accent can be retained, and the translation would be as given in the text ('to him who desires food').

Note 3. On váhni, comp. above, I, 127, 8, note 1.

Verse 5.

Note 1. The cerebral n in avena clearly points to the correction of the text agnéh rávena.

Note 2. The Maruts are called bhogáh, V, 53, 16 (stuhí bhogán, 'praise the liberal ones'). Here we have the corresponding abstract noun.

Verse 6.

Note 1. Vihâyas (comp. Bergaigne, Religion Védique, III, 287) seems to be formed like vímahas, víketas, vímanas. The meaning then will be 'of extended hâyas.' The substantive hâyas, which is not found in the texts separately, may be derived from g'hîte or from hinóti, and mean something like 'energy.' At all events it seems impossible to connect this adjective vihâyas with the substantive vihâyas, 'the aerial space,' belonging to the classical language.

Note 2. Comp. the remark above, I, 58, 7, note 2.

Note 3. I propose to read vísvâ ví-hâyâh aratíh vásû dadhe háste dákshine. Comp. IX, 18, 4. á yáh vísvâni vâryâ vásûni hástayoḥ dadhé.

Note 4. Comp. Pischel, Vedische Studien, I, 191.

Note 5. Comp. VIII, 19, 1. devatrâ havyám óhire.

Verse 7.

Note 1. Iḁ kṛitá seems to be identical with íshkṛita.

Note 2. Regarding the metre, comp. Lanman, p. 383.

Verse 8.

Note 1. Comp. I, 58, 7, note 1.

MANDALA I, HYMN 140.

ASHTAKA II, ADHYĀYA 2, VARGA 5-7.

1. For him who sits on the Vedi (i.e. on the sacrificial bed), whose foundations are pleasant, for the brilliant Agni bring forward¹ a receptacle², which is to him like a drink. Clothe¹ the bright one in prayer as in a garment, him whose chariot is light, whose colour is bright, the destroyer of darkness.

2. He who has a twofold birth¹, presses on towards the threefold food²; what he has eaten grows again after a year³. With the mouth and the tongue of the one he (shows himself as) the noble, manly one; with the other (mouth) the stubborn (Agni) wipes off the trees⁴.

3. Both his mothers¹, dwelling together, immersed in darkness, and affrighted, proceed towards the young child who stretches forward his tongue, who sparkling moves about thirstily, whom men should attach to themselves, who agitates (the world), the increaser of his father².

4. Thy speedy (teams)¹ that strive to break loose for the benefit of the man who acts as men do, the swift ones, drawing black furrows—thy quick (horses), striving apart, the agile, swift runners, incited by the wind, are yoked.

5. When he stroking his wide course proceeds panting, thundering, roaring, then those sparkling (rays) of his fly about wildly, displaying wondrous darkness, a large sight¹.

6. When he bends down over the brown (plants)¹ like a busy (servant), he roars and approaches his wives like a bull. Displaying his power he adorns his bodies with beauty; like a terrible beast, difficult to seize, he shakes his horns.

7. He clasps (the plants, &c.) that have been laid together and have been laid out¹. Knowing them, while they know him, and being their own (friend or lover) he lies on them. They grow again and attain godhead. They produce together another shape of the parents².

8. The long-haired virgins¹ have embraced him. Having died they stand upright again for him (Agni) the living one (or, for him the Âyu). Delivering them of old age he proceeds roaring, procreating another vital spirit, an indestructible life.

9. Licking everywhere the upper garment of the mother¹, he spreads himself over the space with his mightily devouring warriors, giving strength to everything that has feet, licking and licking. The reddish white one² follows her ways³.

10. Shine, O Agni, among our liberal lords, for thou art a mightily breathing bull, a friend of the house. Throwing down the (mothers) of the young child¹ thou hast shone, (a protector of thy friends) like a coat of mail in battles, hurrying around.

11. May this well-composed (prayer), O Agni, be more welcome to thee than a badly-composed one—more welcome than even a welcome prayer. With the bright light of thy body win thou treasures for us.

12. Grant us, Agni, for our chariot and for our house a ship which has its own rudders and which has feet¹, which may save our strong men and our liberal lords and our people, and which may be a shelter for us.

13. Approve, O Agni, our hymn alone. May Heaven and Earth and the Rivers, delightful by their own nature¹, going their way², (choose for us) bliss in cows and crops, long days; may the red (Dawns) choose food for us as a choice boon.

NOTES.

The Rishi is Dīrghatamas Auṣṭhaya, the metre Gagatī; the two last verses are Trishṭubh (comp. above the note on the metre of I, 94); the tenth verse, which is considered as either Gagatī or Trishṭubh, begins with one Gagatī Pāda which is followed by three Pādas in Trishṭubh.—No verse occurs in the other Samhitās.

Verse 1.

Note 1. Prá bhará (Padap. prá bhara) and vāsayaá (Padap. vāsaya) may be 1st person.

Note 2. Possibly the 'womb' or 'receptacle' (yóni) here means ghṛita or the like, for it is said of Agni that 'his womb is ghṛita' (II, 3, 11), and he is called ghṛitáyoniḥ. This receptacle 'is to him like a drink,' because he consumes the ghṛita by which he is surrounded.

Verse 2.

Note 1. The terrestrial and the celestial birth. Comp. Bergaigne, I, 28 seq.

Note 2. Bergaigne (I, 29) translates: ' . . . s'élance trois fois sur la nourriture,' which he explains as referring to 'the three sacrifices of the morning, the midday, and the evening.' But tri-vṛt clearly is an epithet of ánnam, not an adverb. The explanation of Sáyana, who understands the threefold food as sacrificial butter, sacrificial cakes (puroḍāsa), and Soma, may be correct.

Note 3. On the locative samvatsaré, comp. Delbrück, Altindische Syntax, p. 117.

Note 4. The last words evidently refer to Agni's tongue, i.e. his flames, wiping off as it were the firewood. But it is not clear what the tongue of the other one is. Sâyana thinks of the sacrificial spoon conceived as the tongue of the officiating priest: which is very artificial, but perhaps not too artificial for a verse like this.

Verse 3.

Note 1. The 'two mothers' of Agni may be the two worlds (comp. Bergaigne, I, 238) or the two kindling-sticks. —Ubhá (masc.) instead of ubhé is to be remarked.

Note 2. Agni increases the wealth of the worshipper who has lighted the fire and may thus be considered as Agni's father. Comp. Satapatha Brâhmaṇa XII, 5, 2, 15. Or the father may be Heaven; on Agni as imparting strength to Heaven, see I, 164, 51.

Verse 4.

Note 1. The verse begins with feminines; the gúvaḥ (comp. I, 134, 1), literally the quick ones, seem to be something like the niyútaḥ of Agni. Then follow masculines; the horses of Agni are male (comp. Bergaigne, I, 143).

Verse 5.

Note 1. Comp. bhūri várpaḥ kárikrat, III, 58, 9.

Verse 6.

Note 1. The brown ones, according to Sâyana, are the plants. They are called brown (babhru) also in X, 97, 1. 'Are they the dry leaves in which the spark is caught?' M. M.

Verse 7.

Note 1. Prof. Max Müller translates saṁstíraḥ vishítíraḥ, '(the flames) that are together and apart.'

Note 2. The parents seem to be Heaven and Earth, as Sâyana explains.—Possibly pitróḥ depends on sátâ (comp.

pitróh sákā, II, 17, 7; IV, 5, 10), 'being with their parents they produce a new shape.' Prof. Max Müller translates: 'They produce together a different shape of their parents.'

Verse 8.

Note 1. Should not the plants again be referred to? 'I think it refers to the gválās, the flames that are hidden under the ashes and are lighted again.' M. M.

Verse 9.

Note 1. The mother is the Earth whose surface Agni licks.

Note 2. I believe the Dawn is alluded to whom the Vedic poets represent now as preceding Agni, now as following him. See Bergaigne, II, pp. 14, 15.

Note 3. For vartanīr áha of the Samhitāpāṭha the Pada-pāṭha has vartanīh áha; comp. Rig-veda Prātisākhya, Sūtra 259. Vartanīh of course is correct. Comp. X, 172, 1. gāvah sakanta vartanīm.

Verse 10.

Note 1. The mothers of the young child are very probably the mothers of Agni represented as a young child. They may be the Waters which Agni leaves resting on the surface of the earth while he himself rises to heaven. Or the mothers may be the woods or plants which he burns and thus throws them down as it were.

Verse 12.

Note 1. 'Which has feet in its own rudders,' M. M. That the ship has feet seems to mean only that it has the faculty of moving forward freely and quickly, and not that any real beings having feet are designated by this comparison. The ship that carries the worshippers across all dangers, is the protection and help which Agni grants, or the sacrifice which he helps to perform.

Verse 13.

Note 1. Comp. Geldner, Vedische Studien, I, 275.

Note 2. Yántaḥ seems to be corrupt; one or two syllables are wanting. Something like yátáyantaḥ (IX, 39, 2) or vardháyantaḥ, or, as Prof. Max Müller proposes, vyántaḥ would do. He translates: 'May Heaven and Earth and the Rivers . . . accepting (vyántaḥ) sacrifices of milk and corn choose for us, and may the Dawns choose for us food as a boon for many days.'—Cf. Lanman, pp. 510, 539.

MANDALA I, HYMN 141.

ASHTAKA II, ADHYĀYA 2, VARGA 8-9.

1. Lo, that beautiful splendour of the god, when he was born of strength, has truly come to be a wondrous sight. Though he slinks away¹, the prayer goes straight to him². They have led forward the flowing streams of Rita.

2. The powerful one¹, rich in food, the true (friend of men) has entered the wondrous (body)². His second (form of existence) is in the seven kind mothers³. The ten young females⁴ have brought the third (form) of this bull forth, him the guardian, in order to milk him.

3. When the rulers, the liberal lords brought him forth by their power out of the depth, out of the buffalo's shape¹, when from of old² at the purification of the sweet drink³ Mâtariśvan produces the hidden one (i.e. Agni) by attrition—

4. When he is led forward from the highest father¹, he climbs up the . . .², the plants in his (or, in their?) houses. When³ both (Heaven and Earth or the two Araṇis?) promote his birth, then the youngest one became bright by his heat⁴.

5. Then he entered upon the mothers¹ in whom he the bright one grew up far and wide unimpaired². When he has climbed up to the former (mothers) who from of old incite (him)³, he runs down in the younger, later (or, nearer) ones.

6¹. Then in the strivings for the day² they choose him Hotrī. As if to swell their good fortune they strive towards him ³, when praised by many he moves everywhere with wisdom and power to the gods and to the praise of mortals ⁴ for (bringing them) refreshing drink.

7. When he has scattered himself, the worshipful one, driven by the wind, like . . . ¹, with the sound (which he produces) (?), he whom it is not possible to drive to a place (like cattle): on the flight of the burning one who speeds on his black way, whose birth is bright, who strays everywhere to the atmosphere . . . ²

8. Like a chariot that goes forward, he goes to Heaven with his ruddy limbs, adorned with his locks of flames¹. Then his black (clouds of smoke), O burning one (?), the liberal ones (?) (appear)². The birds flee as before the fierceness of a hero³.

9. Through thee indeed, O Agni, Varuṇa whose laws are firm, Mitra and Aryaman, the givers of good rain, are glorious, when thou the mighty one hast been born, everywhere encompassing with wisdom (all beings), as the felly encompasses the spokes of a wheel.

10. Thou, O Agni, youngest (god), furthest treasures and (the friendship of) the gods for him who performs worship, who presses Soma. May we thus establish thee the young one, O young (son) of strength, possessor of great treasures, like the winner in a race¹.

11. Make good fortune¹ swell for us like well-employed wealth belonging to the house, and like firm ability²—(fortune) which can hold both races³ like reins: and being full of good-will in (the sphere of) Rita, (fill our) praise of the gods (with rich reward).

12. And may the brilliant, joyful Hotri with quick horses, with a shining chariot hear us. May he, the wise Agni, lead us on the best leading (paths) to happy welfare and to bliss.

13. Agni has been praised with powerful¹ songs, he who has been brought forward furthermore for sovereignty. May both those our liberal lords and we ourselves spread out² (our power over all foes) as the sun (spreads out its light and by it destroys) the mist.

NOTES.

The same Rishi. The metre is Gagatī; the two last verses again are Trishūbh.—None of its verses occurs in the other Samhitās.

Verse 1.

Note 1. The meaning seems to be that if Agni be unwilling to officiate at the sacrifice, the prayer nevertheless reaches its aim and induces him to do his duty as the divine Hotri.

Note 2. The verb sādh is very frequently connected with substantives such as dhīyāḥ or the like. Comp. also matinām ka sādhanam, X, 26, 4.

Verse 2.

Note 1. It seems probable that prīkshāḥ is the nominative of prīkshā, and not the genitive of prīksh. Comp. VI, 8, 1, where it is said of Agni 'prīkshāsya vrīshnaḥ arushāsya.' On the meaning of prīkshā, see above, I, 127, 5, note 1.

Note 2. The poet seems clearly to describe the second and third form of Agni's existence, his dwelling in the waters and his birth from the fire-sticks. But he is less explicit with regard to the first form. The epithet pitu- mán would seem to point to Agni as the sacrificial fire and the receiver of offerings. But it is rather strange that this form of the god should be distinguished from the Agni procreated by the ten females, i.e. produced by the ten fingers, by the attrition of the kindling-sticks.—Prof. Max Müller differs from me in referring the words dāsa-pramatim ganayanta yóshanaḥ, not to the third form of Agni, but to Agni in general. He translates: ‘The powerful one, rich in food, rests always on that wondrous sight (Agni on the altar, gārhapatya Agni). The second rests in the seven kind mothers (vidyudrūpa; Agni in the clouds); the third is for milking the powerful one (Agni as the sun, ādityarūpa)—the ten maidens (the fingers) have brought forth the guardian.’

Note 3. Grassmann no doubt is right in proposing to read saptā sīvāsu. Of course the waters are alluded to.

Note 4. Read dāsa prāmatim (Boehtlingk-Roth). On Agni as the son of the ten fingers, comp. Bergaigne, II, 7.

Verse 3.

Note 1. The buffalo Agni was hidden in the depth. Comp. X, 8, 1. apām upā-sthe mahisháḥ vavardha; I, 95, 9. budhnám vi-rókamānam mahishásya dhāma.

Note 2. The preposition ānu seems to stand here with an ablative (pra-dívaḥ).

Note 3. The literal meaning of mádhvaḥ ā-dhavé is indicated by passages such as I, 109, 4. ā dhāvatam má-dhunā; IX, 11, 5. mádhāv ā dhāvata mádhu. Comp. also ādhavaniya. On the washing of the Soma which is technically designated by the verb ā-dhāv, see H. O., Göttinger Gelehrte Anzeigen, 1890, p. 426 seq.; Hillebrandt, Vedische Mythologie, I, 216.—The purification of the sweet drink, at which Agni is produced, was probably achieved by the tempest.

Verse 4.

Note 1. The highest father is Heaven.

Note 2. The meaning of prīkshúdhaḥ is unknown.

Note 3. Yát is repeated twice, as yása in X, 121, 2. yása vírve upa-āsate pra-sísham yása deváh.

Note 4. On ghrinā, comp. Lanman, Noun-Inflection, 335.

Verse 5.

Note 1. The mothers are the Waters.

Note 2. The reading, very probably, ought to be vi-vávrīdhé.

Note 3. Boehtlingk-Roth believe that the reading ought to be sanâyúvāh or sanā-gúrah. Sanā-gúrah (cf. sanā-gurā pitārā, IV, 36, 3) seems to me quite possible, although there is no positive necessity for abandoning the traditional reading.—The ‘former’ mothers may be the heavenly Waters; the mothers in whom Agni runs down are the rivers. Prof. Max Müller adds that the former mothers may possibly be ‘the burnt pieces of wood. Agni runs up in them, then leaves them to burn new pieces.’

Verse 6.

Note 1. On the whole verse, compare Pischel, Vedische Studien, I, 217.

Note 2. Comp. above, I, 45, 7, note 1.

Note 3. The second Pāda is translated by Pischel: ‘Wie in einen König drängen sie in ihn, wenn sie (Trank)opfer darbringen.’ But verse 11 shows that bhágam depends on paprikānāśah.

Note 4. Comp. III, 16, 4. ā devéshu . . . ā sámse utá nrinām.

Verse 7.

Note 1. The translation of hvārāh is quite uncertain. The same must be said of the rest of this Pāda.

Note 2. The sentence is incomplete.

Verse 8.

Note 1. On síkvān (or síkvas), comp. M. M.’s note, vol. xxxii, p. 318; Hübschmann, Vocalsystem, p. 186. The translation is only tentative.—Two syllables are wanting;

we may propose a reading like śkvabhiḥ pārishkrītaḥ (comp. H. O., Prolegomena, 76, note 3).

Note 2. This passage is most obscure. The first words of the Pāda are the same as above, 140, 5. The 'black ones' probably are the dark clouds of smoke that surround Agni. But it is very strange that these clouds should be designated as sûráyaḥ, 'liberal ones.' And the vocative (?) dakshi (Padapāṭha dhakshi), instead of which we should at least expect daksho or dakshin, is no less strange. The text seems thoroughly corrupt.

Note 3. See Lanman, p. 557.

Verse 10.

Note 1. Comp. Geldner, Vedische Studien, I, 121.

Verse 11.

Note 1. Comp. above, verse 6, Pāda 2.

Note 2. Comp. VIII, 24, 14. dáksham priñkántam.

Note 3. The human and the divine race. I do not believe that Dr. Neisser (Zur Vedischen Verballehre, 17) is right in interpreting yámati as an indicative.

Verse 13.

Note 1. The translation of símivadbhiḥ is only tentative. Símî (I, 151, 1) cannot be identical with sámî.

Note 2. Níḥ tatanyuh (nísh tatanyuh, Samhitapáṭha) of course is derived from tan, not from stan. Comp. I, 105, 12. satyám tátāna sūryaḥ; IV, 5, 13. sūraḥ várnena tatanan ushāsaḥ, &c.

MANDALA I, HYMN 142.

ASHTAKA II, ADHYÂYA 2, VARGA 10-11.

ÂPRÎ HYMN.

1. Being inflamed, Agni, bring hither to-day the gods to the man who holds forth the (sacrificial) ladle. Spin out the ancient thread (of sacrifice)¹ for the sacrificer who has prepared Soma.

2. Measure out, O Tanûnapât¹, the sacrifice rich in ghee, rich in honey, of a priest like me, of a sacrificer who has toiled hard.

3. The brilliant, purifying, wonderful Narâsamsa¹ mixes the sacrifice with honey three times a day, the god worthy of worship among the gods.

4. Agni, magnified¹ by us, bring hither the bright, beloved Indra. For this my prayer is addressed² to thee whose tongue is good.

5. (Priests) hold forth the (sacrificial) ladle, strewing the sacrificial grass at the decorous service of the sacrifice;—I¹ trim² (the sacrificial grass) which best receives the gods with its wide extent, a big shelter for Indra.

6¹. May the divine doors open themselves, the increasers of Rîta, the never sticking, large ones, the purifying, much-desired (doors), that the gods may come forth.

7. May Night and Dawn, of glorious appearance, the two neighbouring (goddesses), wearing beautiful ornaments¹, the young² mothers of Rîta, sit down together on the sacrificial grass³.

8. May the two divine Hotrîs, eager in praising (the gods), the sages with lovely tongues, perform for us to-day this successful sacrifice which attains to Heaven.

9. The brilliant (goddess) placed among the gods, among the Maruts¹, Hotrâ Bhâratî², Iâ, Sarasvatî, and Maht³: may these worshipful (goddesses) sit down on the sacrificial grass.

10. May Tvashtri, inclined towards us, pour forth for us, in our navel¹, that wonderful seed with many treasures², plentiful by itself, for the sake of prosperity and wealth³.

11. Letting go (the sacrificial food to the gods) sacrifice by thyself to the gods, O tree¹. May² Agni make the offerings ready³, the god among the gods, the wise one.

12. For Him who is accompanied by Pûshan and by the Maruts, by the Visve devâh, (by) Vâyû¹, who is moved by the Gâyatra song, for Indra pronounce the Svâhâ over the offering.

13. Come hither to the offerings over which the Svâhâ has been pronounced, in order to feast. Indra! Come hither! Hear our call! Thee they call at the worship.

NOTES.

The hymn is an Âprîsûkta. The same Rishi. Metre, Anushûbh. The whole hymn is closely related to I, 13.—Verse 10: cf. VS. XXVII, 20; TS. IV, 1, 8, 3; MS. II, 12, 6.

Verse 1.

Note 1. The third Pâda of this verse is identical with VIII, 13, 14.

Verse 2.

Note 1. Comp. I, 13, 2, note 1.

Verse 3.

Note 1. Comp. I, 13, 2, note 1.

Verse 4.

Note 1. 'Magnified' is īliták; comp. the note on I, 1, 1. The verse is addressed to the Idah.

Note 2. The text has ákkha . . . vakyáte. To me there seems to be no doubt that this is the passive of vak, not of vañk. Comp. the name of the priest akkhāvāka, and the phrase ákkhoktibhih matínām, I, 61, 3; 184, 2. The same passive of vak is found III, 39, 1. matih hridák ā vakyámānā (then follows ákkha . . . gigāti); X, 47, 7 (stómāh) . . . mānasā vakyámānāh.—It may be observed that in our passage as well as in III, 39, 1 and X, 47, 7, the forms vakyáte, vakyámānā, vakyámānāh are preceded by a vowel; and we may infer that the poet did not say ukyáte, &c., in order to avoid the hiatus.

Verse 5.

Note 1. The poet begins as if he intended to say, 'Priests . . . lay down the sacrificial grass.' But he continues, 'I lay down.' Dr. Neisser (Bezenberger's Beiträge, XX, 60) tries to explain the difficulty in a way in which I cannot follow him.

Note 2. On the verb vrig technically connected with barhíh, see Geldner, Vedische Studien, I, 152 seq., and compare vol. xxxii, I, 38, 1, note 2; I, 64, 1, note 2.

Verse 6.

Note 1. With the whole verse compare I, 13, 6.

Verse 7.

Note 1. Pischel's opinion (Vedische Studien, II, 113 seq.) that pésah means 'Gestalt,' 'Form,' 'Farbe,' 'rūpa,' does not convince me.

Note 2. See Geldner, Kuhn's Zeitschrift, XXVIII, 195.

Note 3. Comp. VIII, 87, 4. $\tilde{a}$ barhíh sîdatam sumât. Geldner (Vedische Studien, II, 190) translates: 'das schöne Opfergras.'

Verse 9.

Note 1. 'Should we read mârteshu for marûtsu?' M. M. This conjecture seems perhaps rather bold.

Note 2. Hotrá Bhârati, i.e. the personified Offering of the Bharatas, seems to be one goddess, more usually called simply Bhârati. Comp. I, 22, 10; II, 1, 11; III, 62, 3; Bergaigne, Religion Védique, I, 322; H. O., Religion des Veda, 243, note 2. Pischel's opinion (Vedische Studien, II, 85) is different.

Note 3. See above, I, 13, 9, note 1.

Verse 10.

Note 1. On the navel as the symbol of the connection between father and son, see Bergaigne, I, 35, 36, and comp. the well-known name Nâbhânedishtha.

Note 2. For purú vâram very probably puruvâram should be read (Grassmann). See II, 40, 4. puruvâram . . . râyás pósham ví syatâm nâbhim asmé.

Note 3. With the last Pâda compare II, 40, 4, quoted in note 2, and II, 3, 9. pragâm Tvâshâ ví syatu nâbhim asmé; see also Taittiriya Samhitâ IV, 1, 8, 3. Tvashtri is generally considered as giving sons; see H. O., Religion des Veda, 234.

Verse 11.

Note 1. Comp. I, 13, 11, note 1.

Note 2. The second hemistich recurs I, 105, 14.

Note 3. See Neisser, Zur Vedischen Verballehre, 22.

Verse 12.

Note 1. The text has 'for Vâyu,' not 'for (the god) accompanied by Vâyu.' But there is no doubt that pû-shanvâte, &c., refers to Indra, and that Vâyu is named merely as a companion of Indra.

MANDALA I, HYMN 143.

ASHṬAKA II, ADHYĀYA 2, VARGA 12.

1. I bring forward my most powerful, entirely new (pious) thought (i.e. hymn). the prayer of my words¹ to Agni, the son of strength; he is the child of the Waters², the beloved one, who together with the Vasus has sat down on the Earth as a Hotri observing the appointed time (for sacrificing).

2. Being born in the highest heaven Agni became visible to Mātariśvan. By the power of his mind, by his greatness when kindled, his flame filled Heaven and Earth with light.

3¹. His flames are fierce; never ageing are the flames of him who is beautiful to behold, whose face is beautiful, whose splendour is beautiful. The never sleeping, never ageing (rays) of Agni whose power is light, roll forward like streams across the nights (?)².

4. Him the all-wealthy, whom the Bhrigus have set to work on the navel of the earth, with the whole power of the world¹—stir up that Agni by thy prayers in his own house—(him) who alone rules over goods like Varuṇa.

5. He who is not to be kept back like the roar of the Maruts, like an army¹ that is sent forward, like the thunderbolt of heaven—Agni eats with his sharp jaws, he chews, he throws down the forests as a warrior throws down his foes.

6. Would Agni eagerly come to our hymn? Would He the Vasu together with the Vasus fulfil our desire? Will He, the driver, stir our prayers that they may be successful? (Thus thinking) I praise Him whose face is bright, with this my prayer.

7. He who has kindled him strives¹ towards Agni as towards Mitra (or, towards a friend)—(to Agni) whose face shines with ghee, the charioteer of Rita. May he who when kindled becomes a racer², shining at the sacrifices³, lift up our bright-coloured prayer.

8¹. Preserve us, O Agni, never failing with thy never-failing, kind and mighty guardians; protect our people all around with those undeceived, undismayed, never slumbering (guardians), O thou our wish²!

NOTES.

The same Rishi. Metre, Gagati; the last verse Trishubh. The hymn has been translated by Kaegi, Siebenzig Lieder des Rigveda, p. 100.—Verse 7 = TB. I, 2, 1, 12.

Verse 1.

Note 1. Comp. VIII, 59, 6. vákāh mātīm.

Note 2. Agni who is considered as born from the Waters, is identified several times with a god who, like Mâtariśvan, in my opinion had an independent origin, with Apām napāt ('Child of the Waters'). Comp. Bergaigne, Rel. Védique, II, 17 seq.; H. O., Religion des Veda, 118 seq.

Verse 3.

Note 1. There is no sufficient reason for transposing verses 3 and 4 (Kaegi).

Note 2. Probably we should read āti aktūn; comp. VI, 4, 5. āti eti aktūn.—See Bergaigne, Mélanges Renier, p. 96.

Verse 4.

Note 1. Bhúvanasya seems to depend on magmánā; comp. VII, 82, 5. bhúvanasya magmánā.

Verse 5.

Note 1. Pischel (Vedische Studien, I, 231) seems to me to be right in denying that sénā ever means 'Geschoss,' and in translating sénā srishā 'exercitus effusus.' The opinion of Prof. von Bradke and Prof. Bloomfield is different; see Zeitschrift der Deutschen Morgenl. Gesellschaft, XLVI, 456; XLVIII, 549.

Verse 7.

Note 1. The text adds the dativus ethicus vaḥ, 'for you' (comp. Delbrück, Altindische Syntax, 206), which can scarcely be translated.

Note 2. Geldner (Vedische Studien, I, 168) has shown that akrá very probably means 'horse.' Agni is very frequently compared to a horse.—Comp. Ludwig, Ueber die neuesten Arbeiten auf dem Gebiete der Rigveda-Forschung, p. 54; Roth, Zeitschrift der D. Morg. Ges., XLVIII, 118.

Note 3. See above, I, 31, 6, note 2.

Verse 8.

Note 1. With Pādas C D compare the verse VI, 8, 7. ádabdhebbhiḥ táva gopābhiḥ ishṭe asmākam páhi trishadhasṭha sūrīn.

Note 2. 'What is ishṭe? Is it thou our wish, or thou our sacrifice?' M. M.

MANDALA I, HYMN 144.

ASHTAKA II, ADHYĀYA 2, VARGA 13.

1. The *Hotri*¹ goes forward² (in order to fulfil) his duty by his wonderful power, directing upwards the brightly adorned prayer. He steps towards the (sacrificial) ladles which are turned to the right³, and which first kiss his foundation⁴.

2. They have greeted with shouts the streams of *Rita*¹ which were hidden at the birthplace of the god, at his seat. When He dwelt dispersed in the lap of the waters, he drank the draughts by (the power of) which he moves².

3. Two (beings) of the same age¹ try to draw that wonderful shape (Agni) towards themselves, progressing in turns towards a common aim². Then he is to be proclaimed by us like a winner³ (in a contest). The charioteer⁴ (governs all things) as if pulling in the reins of a draught-horse.

4. He whom two (beings) of the same age¹ serve, two twins dwelling together in one common abode, the gray one has been born as a youth by night as by day², the ageless one who wanders through many generations of men.

5. The prayers, the ten fingers¹ stir him up. We, the mortals, call him, the god, for his protection. From the dry land he hastens to the declivities². With those who approached him he has established new rules³.

6. Thou indeed, O Agni, reignest by thy own nature over the heavenly and over the terrestrial world as a shepherd (takes care of his cattle). These two variegated, great (goddesses) striving for gloriousness, the golden ones who move crookedly¹, have approached thy sacrificial grass.

7. Agni! Be gratified and accept graciously this prayer, O joy-giver, independent one, who art born in the Rīta, good-willed one, whose face is turned towards us from all sides, conspicuous one, gay in thy aspect, like a dwelling-place rich in food¹.

NOTES.

The same Rīshi. Metre, Gagatī.—No verse occurs in the other Samhitās.

Verse 1.

Note 1. The Hotri is Agni.

Note 2. Comp. III, 27, 7, where it is said of Agni: purástāt eti mâyáyā.—The poet says éti prá, and not prá eti, in order to avoid the hiatus.

Note 3. Comp. below, III, 6, 1. dakshinā-vā.

Note 4. 'Which first, i. e. at the time when the sacrificial vessels are put down, kiss his dhāman (foundation), i. e. the place of Agni.' Sâyana.

Verse 2.

Note 1. Comp. IX, 75, 3. abhí im rítasya dohánāḥ anúshata, and VIII, 12, 32. nābhā yagñasya dohánā prá adhvaré. I take dohánāḥ as acc. plur. of an abstract noun dohánā formed like garánā, bhandánā, &c. But possibly it might be the nom. plur. either of the same noun or of a nomen agentis dohána: 'the streams of Rīta (the libations?) or the milkers of Rīta, hidden at the birthplace of the god, have greeted him with shouts.' It would be difficult, however, to say why the milkers of Rīta (i. e. the priests?) are called 'hidden at the birthplace of the god.' Prof. Max Müller thinks of a reading parī-vrītaḥ, 'surrounding Agni.' He refers the 'streams of Rīta' (nom.) to the water, cf. I, 105, 12. rītām arshanti sīndhavaḥ.

Note 2. Svadhāḥ adhayat yābhiḥ ŷyate. In my opinion svadhā means 'the inherent power,' 'the power of moving according to one's own will,' and then the drink which confers this power on a being, especially on the dead ancestors.—Comp. M. M., vol. xxxii, p. 32 seq.; H. O., Religion des Veda, 531, note 2.

Verse 3.

Note 1. According to Sāyana the two beings spoken of here and in the next verse are the Hotri and the Adhvaryu.

Note 2. See I, 130, 5. ayurṅgata samānām ārtham ākshitam; III, 61, 3. samānām ārtham karaniyāmānā.

Note 3. On bhāgaḥ nā hāvyaḥ, see Geldner, Vedische Studien, I, 121.

Note 4. The charioteer is Agni.

Verse 4.

Note 1. See verse 3, note 1.

Note 2. Comp. Gaedicke, Der Accusativ, p. 175. He translates: 'bei Tage noch bei Nacht ergrauend.'

Verse 5.

Note 1. Vrīś (ῥπαξ λεγόμενον) is ranged in the Nighantus among the aṅgulināmāni and explained by Sāyana accordingly. The word seems indeed to mean 'finger.' Compare with our passage IX, 8, 4; 15, 8; 93, 1; 97, 57.

Note 2. Comp. I, 33, 4. dhānoḥ ādhi vishunāk té ví āyan, and especially X, 4, 3. dhānoḥ ādhi pravātā yāsi hāryan. I cannot follow Pischel (Vedische Studien, II, 69 seq.) in explaining these passages. 'Over the heavenly expanse he hastens down towards us.' M. M.

Note 3. See Pischel, Vedische Studien, I, 300. Like Pischel I do not know who 'they who approached Agni' are. Possibly the worshippers or priests are alluded to. 'He received new praises with (or from) those who approached him.' M. M.

Verse 6.

Note 1. Sâyaṇa explains the two female beings here in question as Heaven and Earth. Does the 'crooked movement' refer to the daily revolution of the sky?

Verse 7.

Note 1. The last Pāda recurs X, 64, 11.

MANDALA I, HYMN 145.

ASHTAKA II, ADHYĀYA 2, VARGA 14.

1. Ask ye him. He has come. He knows. He the intelligent one moves forward; He moves along (his way) (?)¹. In him all commands, all wishes dwell. He is the lord of strength, of mighty power.

2. They ask him. He himself¹ does not ask in turn what he, the wise one, has grasped by his own mind alone². He does not forget the first word nor another word. Unconfused he adheres to his own power of mind.

3. To him go the sacrificial ladles, to him go the racers¹. He alone may hear all my words. He who pronounces many praishas², the conqueror, the accomplisher of sacrifices whose blessings are flawless, the young child has assumed vigour.

4. When he has come together¹ (with his companions²), he goes to greet them³. As soon as born he steals upon (his prey) together with his companions. He strokes the . . .⁴ to give him delight and joy, when the loving ones⁵ approach him who stands on them⁶.

5. He, the animal living in the water and walking in the forest¹, has been placed on the highest skin² (sky?). He has proclaimed his rules to the mortals: for Agni, the knowing one, is intent upon Rita (Right) and is true.

NOTES.

The same Rishi. Metre, Gagatī; the last verse is Trishṭubh.—No verse occurs in the other Samhitās.

Verse 1.

Note 1. The Samhitā text has sá n̄v iyate, the Pada text, sá/ nú iyate. Comp. Prātisākhya 314. I propose to read sānu (= sá ānu) iyate.

Verse 2.

Note 1. See Geldner, Ved. Studien, II, p. 188.

Note 2. Possibly we should read svéna evá.

Verse 3.

Note 1. The text (árvatí/) implies that these race-horses are mares. Probably, as Sáyana explains, the prayers (stutaya/) are alluded to. See on the prayers compared with horses, Bergaigne, II, 284 seq.

Note 2. Praishá is the technical designation of the sacrificial commands of one priest (or more especially, of the Maitrávaruṇa) to another priest; comp. Schwab, Das Altindische Thieropfer, p. 90; H. O., Religion des Veda, 390.

Verse 4.

Note 1. Samārata may be the third person of singular or of plural.

Note 2. I supply 'with his companions' in consideration of the second Pāda (yúgyebhi/). It is difficult to say who Agni's companions are (the flames? the officiating priests?).

Note 3. Ludwig's conjecture, úpa stāyam karati, is very ingenious. 'He stealthily approaches them.'—On upa-sthāyam, comp. also Bollensen, Zeitschrift der Deutschen Morgenl. Gesellschaft, XLVII, 586.

Note 4. The meaning of svántám, which occurs here and in the obscure passage X, 61, 21 (ádha gáva/ úpamātim kanáyā/ ānu svántāsya kāsya kīṭ párá iyu/), is unknown. Possibly it is related to svátrá, which means something like 'powerful' or 'prosperous.'

Note 5. The prayers? The oblations?

Note 6. Api-sthitám may have active or passive meaning, 'he who stands on somebody or something,' and 'he on whom somebody or something stands.'

Verse 5.

Note 1. The first Páda (and probably also the fourth) belong to the metrical type described by H. O., Prolegomena, p. 68 seq.: the first part, before the caesura, consists of four syllables; and then the Páda goes on as if it had the pentasyllabic opening.

Note 2. After Agni's abode in the Waters and in the wood has been mentioned in the first Páda, the second Páda possibly refers to his heavenly abode to which the adjective upamá ('highest') seems to point. Thus the 'highest skin' would be the sky. But Sâyana, who refers it to the Vedi, may possibly be right. His explanation would very well agree with the second hemistich.

MANDALA I, HYMN 146.

ASHTAKA II, ADHYĀYA 2, VARGA 15.

1. I praise Agni who has three heads and seven rays (or reins)¹, who is without flaw, sitting in the lap of his parents² and of whatever moves or is firm, who has filled (with his light) all the lights of Heaven.

2. The big bull has grown up to them¹; the ageless one who from here (from this world) distributes his blessings, the tall has stood up erect. He puts down his feet on the surface of the wide (Earth); his red ones² lick the udder (the cloud?).

3. Walking towards their common calf the two well-established¹ milch-cows² walk about in different directions. They measure interminable paths; they have invested themselves with all great desires.

4. Wise poets¹ follow his track² who in manifold ways protect the ageless one with their hearts. Wishing to acquire him they have searched the river³. He the Sun⁴ became visible to them, to the men⁵.

5. He is worthy to be looked for, round about in his race-courses, the noble who is to be magnified¹, the great one², in order that the small may live, as he, the all-visible liberal lord, has become a progenitor for those germs in many places.

NOTES.

The same Rishi. The metre is Trishubh.—No verse occurs in the other Samhitās.

Verse 1.

Note 1. Sâyana refers the three heads of Agni to the three Savanas, or the three worlds, or the three sacrificial fires. The last explanation seems to be most probable. The seven reins (rays) are, according to Sâyana, the seven metres or the seven flames of Agni. The last explanation is recommended by III, 6, 2 (see below). But it is possible also to think of the seven priests (sapta hotâraḥ).—Comp. II, 5, 2 (see below), and Taitt. Samhitâ I, 5, 3, 2 (to which passage Ludwig refers): saptâ te agne samídhaḥ saptâ gihváḥ saptâ rīshayaḥ saptâ dhâma priyâni, &c.

Note 2. The parents are Heaven and Earth.

Verse 2.

Note 1. The text has the dual feminine; no doubt Heaven and Earth are meant.

Note 2. The horses or flames of Agni.

Verse 3.

Note 1. On su-méka, comp. the article of Prof. Windisch in Festgruss an Böhtlingk, p. 114.

Note 2. The cows seem to be Night and Dawn; comp. above, I, 95, 1; 96, 5. Night and Dawn are called su-méke, I, 113, 3.

Verse 4.

Note 1. The priests.

Note 2. I have translated padám nayanti in the way indicated by Atharva-veda XI, 2, 13. viddhásya padanīḥ-iva; comp. also Manu VIII, 44. Prof. Max Müller translates, 'Wise poets lead (Agni) to the ageless place, keeping many things in their heart—or, lead the ageless Agni to his place (the sacrifice).'

Note 3. They have tried to find Agni in his proper dwelling, in the water.

Note 4. The Sun is here identified with Agni.

Note 5. On the form nṛīn standing for different cases, compare Lanman, Noun-Inflection, 430; Bergaigne, Religion Védique, I, 136, note 1; Pischel, Vedische Studien, I, 42, and Göttinger Gel. Anzeigen, 1890, p. 541 seq.; Hillebrandt, Zeitschrift der Deutschen Morgenl. Gesellschaft, XLVIII, 420. Here it seems most natural to take nr̥ñ, as Pischel has proposed, as standing for the dative plural. Bartholomae (Studien zur indogermanischen Sprachgeschichte, I, 118, comp. p. 48), referring to III, 14, 4, believes that nr̥ñ (or, more correctly, nr̥īm*), both here and there is genitive plural, and that Agni is called 'the sun of men' because men are able to light this sun themselves. To me it seems very doubtful that this is a Vedic idea, and as to the verse III, 14, 4, I believe that nr̥ñ there is a regular accusative plural: Agni is called there, 'a sun that spreads out men over their dwellings.'

Verse 5.

Note 1. Ílényaḥ. Comp. I, 1, 1, note 2.

Note 2. Agni may be called maháḥ, 'the great one.' But it seems more natural to read mahé, the ancient pronunciation of which word before a word commencing with a vowel (mahá') coincided, or nearly coincided, with that of maháḥ. The translation then would be: 'he who is to be magnified in order that the great and the small may live.'

MANDALA I, HYMN 147.

ASHTAKA II, ADHYĀYA 2, VARGA 16.

1. How, O Agni, have the resplendent ones worshipped thee, aspiring through the powers of the Āyu¹, when² the gods, obtaining kith and kin of both races³ (human and divine?), rejoiced in the song of Rīta (or Right)⁴?

2. Give heed to this my proffered hymn, O youngest one, which is most rich in liberal gifts¹, O self-dependent one! The one abuses thee, the other praises thee: I thy reverer revere thy body, O Agni²!

3. Thy guardians, O Agni, who saw and saved the blind son of Mamatā from distress¹—he the possessor of all wealth has saved them who have done good deeds². The impostors, trying to deceive, have not deceived.

4. The niggard, O Agni, the harmful and malicious who injures us by falsehood: may the heavy spell recoil on him; may he injure his own body by his evil words¹.

5. And, O strong one, whatever mortal knowingly injures another mortal by falsehood: from such a one, O praised Agni, protect him who praises thee. Agni! Do not deliver us to distress.

NOTES.

The same Rīshi and metre.—Verse 2 = VS. XII, 42; TS. IV, 2, 3, 4; MS. II, 7, 10. Verse 3 = RV. IV, 4, 13; TS. I, 2, 14, 5; MS. IV, 11, 5.

Verse 1.

Note 1. The Āyu seems to be Agni himself. Or is it admissible to interpret âyóh as standing metri causâ for âyávaḥ? Then the hemistich would refer to the mythical sacerdotal tribe of the Āyus, the ancient worshippers of Agni. Comp., for instance, X, 7, 5; 46, 8. The translation would be, 'How, O Agni, have the resplendent Āyus worshipped thee, aspiring with their powers?'

Note 2. 'Because.' M. M.

Note 3. Comp. VIII, 103, 7. ubhé toké tánaye dasma vispate pārshi rādhāḥ maghónām.

Note 4. As to ritásya sáman, comp. Vâg. Samh. XXII, 2, and ritásya ślókaḥ, Rig-veda IV, 23, 8. Our Pāda recurs IV, 7, 7 with the reading ritásya dhāman.

Verse 2.

Note 1. With vákasaḥ mām̐hishṭhasya compare mām̐hishṭhābhiḥ matṭbhiḥ, VIII, 23, 23.

Note 2. Cf. Aufrecht, Kuhn's Zeitschrift, III, 200.

Verse 3.

Note 1. Dirghatamas the son of Mamatā is the reputed author of this section of the first Mandala which belongs indeed to a family of priests claiming descent from him. The story of the blindness of Dirghatamas and of the distress into which he fell is told in the Mahābhārata I, 4179 seq., ed. Calc.; comp. also Geldner, Vedische Studien, II, 145.

Note 2. Considering the construction of the whole verse from the grammatical point of view only, one will scarcely be tempted to translate otherwise than we have done. But it is rather strange that Agni is represented here as saving those very guardians by the aid of whom he has saved Māmateya. The meaning which one should expect to find expressed, is rather that Agni, as he has saved Māmateya by his guardians, has saved also, and will save, all pious worshippers. This meaning may be established if we consider the construction of the verse as similar, for instance, to that of I, 37, 12 (vol. xxxii, p. 64): máruta/ yát ha va/ bálām gánân akutyavítana, 'O Maruts, with such strength as yours, you have caused men to tremble.' Thus we may, I believe, translate here, 'Agni! With such guardians as thine who have seen and saved the blind son of Mamatâ from distress, he, the possessor of all wealth (i. e. Agni), has saved all those who have done good deeds.' Bergaigne (III, 191) understands the verse in the same way.

Verse 4.

Note 1. The Vedic idea of the evil deeds recoiling on the evil-doer himself has been treated of by Bergaigne, III, 190 seq.

MANDALA I, HYMN 148.

ASHTAKA II, ADHYÂYA 2, VARGA 17.

1. When Mâtariśvan . . .¹ had produced by attrition the Hotri, the . . .² who belongs to all gods, whom they have established among the human clans, shining like the sun, resplendent that (he might show his beautiful) shape—

2. They did not deceive him¹ who had granted a hymn (to the worshipper). Agni is my protection; therewith he is satisfied. They took pleasure in all his² works—(in the works) of the singer who brought praise.

3. Whom the worshipful (gods)¹ took and placed in his own seat (as priest) with their praises: him they² have carried forward, taking hold of him in their search, hastening like horses that draw a chariot.

4. The marvellous one destroys many things with his jaws. Then¹ the resplendent one shines in the forest. Then the wind blows after his flame day by day as after the arrow of an archer, after a weapon that has been shot.

5. Him whom no impostors, no harmful foes¹, no harm-doers may harm when he dwells in (his mother's) womb, him the blind ones bereft of sight did not damage by looking at him². His own friends have protected him.

NOTES.

The same Rishi and metre.—Verse 1 = MS. IV, 14, 15.

Verse 1.

Note 1. The first Pāda is identical with the first Pāda of I, 71, 4 (see our note there) with the exception of the word vishtāh, instead of which that parallel passage has the reading vī-bhritaḥ. It seems impossible to explain vishtāh, and the concurrence of the metrical irregularity in the same part of the Pāda—though metrical irregularities are not infrequent in this hymn—invites to a correction of the text. If vī-bhritaḥ in I, 71, 4 (see note there) refers to Mātarisvan, which I consider as doubtful, it would be easy to find for our passage an equivalent of that word little differing from the traditional vishtāh, namely, vī-ssthitaḥ: ‘when Mātarisvan, standing in different places, had produced him by attrition.’ Of course whoever adopts a conjecture like this, can scarcely avoid understanding vī-bhritaḥ in I, 71, 4 as an epithet of Mātarisvan, not of Agni. Another way to correct our passage would be to put into the text a form derived from the root vish, ‘to accomplish a work,’ for instance, vishṭyā (to be read as trisyllabic): ‘when Mātarisvan by his effort,’ &c. Grassmann’s vī-sitaḥ is quite improbable.

Note 2. Visvá-apsum (Samhitā text, visvāpsum), evidently an epithet of Agni the Hotri, seems corrupt. Shall we read visvá-psum (‘endowed with all food’)—comp. VIII, 22, 12. hávam visvāpsum visvāvāryam—or visva-púsham (Samh., visvāpúsham, ‘all-nourishing’) or visvá-apasam (‘doing all works’)? Also visvá-psnyam may be thought of. It is impossible, of course, to arrive at any certain conclusion.

Verse 2.

Note 1. ‘He’ seems to be Agni. Sāyana, however, explains: dadānam id agnaye kurvānam eva mām. This would lead to a translation like this: ‘(The enemies) did not deceive (me, the worshipper) who had addressed a hymn (to Agni).'

Note 2. On 'his' Sâyana remarks, 'yagamânasya mama.' But the word may refer to Agni.

Verse 3.

Note 1. There is no reason for abandoning here the usual meaning of yagñīya. On the gods seeking after Agni, comp. Bergaigne, I, 110. -

Note 2. It is very probable, to say the least, that 'they' are again the gods.

Verse 4.

Note 1. Is the first ât dissyllabic? More probably the Pâda is deficient by one syllable.

Verse 5.

Note 1. Two syllables are wanting before the caesura of the first Pâda.

Note 2. Was there a belief that a blind man by turning his blind eyes on somebody could do him harm? Possibly we might have to translate: 'Him (his foes) blind and bereft of sight did not damage though looking at him (i.e. though turning their blind eyes on him).—Prof. Max Müller writes: 'Could it be: Even the blind saw, but did not injure him (andhâḥ aparyan ná dabhan); abhikhyá, when he was seen, no longer in the womb?'

MANDALA I, HYMN 149.

ASHTAKA II, ADHYĀYA 2, VARGA 18.

1¹. Towards great wealth this lord of the house² advances³, the strong one in the abode of strong wealth. Let the stones honour him as he speeds forward.

2. He the manly (bull) as of men so of the two worlds, whose stream is drunk by living beings¹ in consequence of his renown—he who running forward has ripened in (his mother's) womb—

3. He who lighted up the . . .¹ stronghold, the racer, the sage, like a . . .² horse, shining like the sun, endowed with hundredfold life.

4. He who has a twofold birth (celestial and terrestrial), the flaming one has approached the three-fold light, all spaces of the atmosphere, the Hotri, the best sacrificer, in the abode of the Waters.

5. This is the Hotri having a twofold birth¹ who has bestowed all the best gifts, out of desire of glory, on the quick mortal who worships him.

NOTES.

The same Rishi. Metre, Virāg.—Verses 3-5 = SV. II, 1124-1126.

Verse 1.

Note 1. My translation of this verse differs from that of Pischel, Ved. Studien, II, 100.

Note 2. On pātiḥ dán, comp. Hübschmann, Vocalsystem, 142; Bartholomae, Arische Forschungen, I, 70; Joh. Schmidt, Kuhn's Zeitschrift, XXVII, 309; Pischel, Vedische Studien, II, 93 seq.; Bartholomae, Indogermanische Forschungen, III, 100 seq.

Note 3. Comp. X, 93, 6. maháḥ sá râyáḥ á īshate.

Verse 2.

Note 1. Comp. I, 80, 4, and similar passages, in which the waters are called givá-dhanyâḥ, 'the prize (of contests) which living beings have gained.'

Verse 3.

Note 1. We do not know what nárminî is. Possibly in this word two words, ná árminî, are contained, so that the particle ná would be repeated in each of the three Pádas. The translation would then be: 'he who lighted up the árminî (?) like a stronghold.'

Note 2. I place no confidence in the attempts to find the meaning of a word like nabhanṛāḥ with the aid of etymology only. The same word occurs in I, 173, 1 as an epithet of the Sāman which the priest, who is compared to a bird, sings (gāyat sāma nabhanṛam yáthā véḥ). It occurs also in VII, 42, 1. prá krandanúḥ nabhanṛasya vetu. The connection in which these words stand, seems to show that the meaning is: 'the noise of the sacrificial fire shall arise;' very probably the fire is compared to a horse, and its noise to the neighing of that horse. Thus nabhanṛā would be in VII, 42, 1, quite as in our passage, an epithet of a horse. This epithet may refer either to the swift motion of the horse and of the Sāman ascending to the gods, or more probably to the gay voice of the horse, the loud noise of the Sāman.

Verse 5.

Note 1. Two syllables are wanting in the first Páda.

MANDALA I, HYMN 150.

ASHTAKA II, ADHYÂYA 2, VARGA 19.

1. I thy indigent¹ worshipper say much to thee, O Agni, dwelling in thy protection as (in the protection) of a great impeller².

2. Away even from the libation of a rich man who is feeble, who is a niggard, who never comes forward and does not care for the gods.

3. The mortal (who worships thee?), O priest, is brilliant, great, most powerful in heaven. May we, O Agni, addicted to thee, be always foremost.

NOTES.

The same Rîshi. Metre, Ushnih.—Verse 1 = SV. I, 97.

Verse 1.

Note 1. On arí, see Bergaigne, Religion Védique, II, 218.

Note 2. Or, 'of the great impeller'—the Sun-god who impels or stimulates his horses? Comp. VI, 6, 6?

MANDALA I, HYMN 188.

ASHTAKA II, ADHYĀYA 5, VARGA 8-9.

ĀPRĪ HYMN.

1. Being kindled thou reignest to-day, a god with the gods, O conqueror of thousandfold (wealth)! As messenger, as a sage, carry the oblations (to the gods).

2. O Tanûnapât! For him who walks in righteousness the sacrifice is anointed with honey. May he¹ grant thousandfold food.

3. Receiving libations, worthy of being magnified¹ bring hither to us the worshipful gods. Agni! Thou art a winner of thousandfold (bliss).

4. They have spread with might the eastward-turned sacrificial grass, blessing (our tribe) with a thousand men¹, (at the place) where you reign, O Âdityas!

5. The Prince, the Sovereign, the mighty ones, the eminent ones¹, the (Divine) Doors, which are many and more than many, have sent forth streams of ghee.

6. Adorned with gold, wearing beautiful ornaments you verily reign high¹ in your splendour. Sit down here, ye two Dawns².

7. May the two fine-voiced divine Hotrîs, the sages, perform as the first this sacrifice for us.

8. Bhârati! I/Â! Sarasvatî! All ye (goddesses) whom I invoke, promote us to splendour.

9. Tvashtrî indeed, the eminent (god) has shaped all forms, all cattle. Do thou by sacrifice produce their increase.

10. Yield up by thyself, O tree, (the sacrificial food) to the abode of the gods¹. May Agni make the offerings relishable.

11. Agni going in front of the gods is anointed with this Gâyatra song; he shines when Svâhâ is pronounced (over the oblations).

NOTES.

The Rishi is Agastya, the metre Gâyatrî. This Âpri hymn is closely related to hymn X, 110, the author of which no doubt knew and imitated our hymn.—No verses occur in the other Samhitâs.

Verse 2.

Note 1. I have taken dâdhat as a third person, the subject being Tanûnapât. But it may be a participle referring to yagñâh: 'the sacrifice which procures thousandfold food is anointed with honey.'

Verse 3.

Note 1. The text has îdyah.

Verse 4.

Note 1. 'This is the Dasavira sacrifice of the Sâktyas. Ten valiant sons are born to those who perform it.' Pañka-vimsa Brâhmana XXV, 7, 4.

Verse 5.

Note 1. These are evidently names of the divine doors.—As to the nominative dûrah, see Lanman, p. 486.

Verse 6.

Note 1. On adhi-vi-râg, comp. IX, 75, 3. âdhi triprishthâh ushâsâh vi râgati.

Note 2. I.e. Dawn and Evening.

Verse 10.

Note 1. Literally: 'to the abode, for the gods.' Comp. the corresponding verse (10) of the Âpri hymn X, 110. devânâm pâthah.

MANDALA I, HYMN 189.

ASHTAKA II, ADHYĀYA 5, VARGA 10-11.

1. Agni! Lead us to wealth on a good path, O god who knowest all rules. Drive away from us sin which leads us astray. We will offer to thee the fullest praise.

2. Agni! Thou who art young, help us safely across all difficulties. Be for us a broad, large, wide stronghold, for our kith and kin, with luck and weal¹.

3. Agni! Drive away from us all plagues. (Then) they shall plague¹ peoples who do not stand under Agni's protection (Give) us back again the earth, O god, together with all the immortals, O worshipful one, that it may go well with us.

4. Protect us, Agni, with thy unwearied guardians, thou who flameest in thy beloved seat. May no danger, O youngest of the gods, attain thy praiser, not now nor in future, O mighty one!

5. Do not deliver us, O Agni, to the harmful foe, to the greedy one, to the impostor, to misfortune. Do not surrender us, O mighty one, to one who has teeth, who bites, nor to one who has no teeth, nor to one who will hurt us.

6. May a (god) like thee, O Agni, who art born according to Rīta, being praised spread out a shelter for the body (of the worshipper that protects) from every one who tries to harm or to revile him. For thou, O god, art a descrier¹ of everything that leads us astray.

7¹. Thou, O Agni, distinguishing both (kinds of men, the pious and the impious, or the Aryans and the Dasyus²), eagerly approachest (Aryan) men at (the time of) the advancing (day)³, O worshipful one. At (the time of) rest thou hast become governable to the man (or, to Manu; or, thou art to be praised by men⁴); thou art to be smoothed down like a horse⁵ by the Usigs.

8. We have pronounced our invocations, I the son of Mâna¹, before this mighty Agni. May we obtain (our wishes) through a thousand Rishis. May we find a food-giving . . . rich in quickening rain².

NOTES.

The same Rîshi. Metre, Trishubh.—Verse 1=VS. V, 36; VII, 43; XL, 16; TS. I, 1, 14, 3; 4, 43, 1; TB. II, 8, 2, 3; TÂ. I, 8, 8; MS. I, 2, 13; IV, 10, 2; 14, 3. Verse 2=TS. I, 1, 14, 4; TB. II, 8, 2, 5; TÂ. X, 2, 1; MS. IV, 10, 1; 14, 3. Verse 3=TB. II, 8, 2, 4; MS. IV, 14, 3.

Verse 2.

Note 1. 'For health and wealth,' M. M.; see vol. xxxii, p. 193.

Verse 3.

Note 1. If the accent is correct (Samh. abhyámanta, Pad. abhí ámanta), the clause, though containing no subordinating word, must be understood as standing in logical dependence on the following, or—which in our case seems more probable—on the preceding clause. Examples of this kind have been collected by Delbrück, Altindische

Syntax, p. 43.—That krishā should be nominative is very improbable; comp. Lanman, Noun-Inflection, 393. See also Leo Meyer, Kuhn's Zeitschrift, XVI, 9.

Verse 6.

Note 1. Prof. Max Müller (vol. xxxii, p. 229) translates, 'For thou, god, art the deliverer from all assaults;' he derives vishpát 'from vi and spas, to bind.'

Verse 7.

Note 1. This verse has been treated of by Geldner, Vedische Studien, II, 156, 158.

Note 2. Geldner (loc. cit., 156) proposes two explanations for ubháyân. It may refer either to the pious and the impious spoken of in the preceding verses, or to prapitvám and abhipitvám, which words Geldner believes to be masculine. I do not attach such weight to the Avestic frapi-thwô (Vend. III, 3) as to draw, with Geldner, a conclusion from this word on the gender of the Vedic prapitvá, and in every case I think that this explanation of ubháyân is very forced, while it is natural to refer ubháyân to the pious and impious, or as we may express it in conformity with Vedic ideas, to 'men' (comp. mánusha Páda 2, mánave Páda 3), i. e. Aryans, and Dasyus (see VIII, 50, 8; 98, 6; IX, 92, 5). Then ubháyân ví vidvân would have exactly the same meaning as the words in I, 51, 8. ví gânihi áryân yé ka dásyava.

Note 3. On prapitvá we have the two ingenious discussions of Geldner, Vedische Studien, II, 155 seq., and of Bloomfield in the fifth series of his Contributions to the interpretation of the Veda, p. 24 seq. In my opinion Bloomfield has not succeeded in proving that the words ending in -pitvá (prapitvá, abhipitvá, sapitvá, &c.) contain the stem pitú, 'sap, drink, nourishment,' and that prapitvá means the morning-pressure of Soma, which is usually designated as prāta/savana, abhipitvá, the evening-pressure or the trītiya-savana. I do not think it necessary, however, to examine here the single points of his interesting and elaborate discussion, for it seems to me that Geldner has conclusively shown that the meaning of these words is different from what Bloomfield believes it to be: abhipitvá, as Geldner (p. 155) states, is 'Erholung,' 'Rast,' and 'die Zeit des Rastens,' 'Feierabend,' 'Abend'; prapitvá (p. 178), on the other hand, means 'Vorlauf,' 'das aufs Ziel Zugehen,' 'die vorgerückte Tageszeit.'

Note 4. Sāsyaḥ, 'governable,' does not give an impossible meaning. But should we not have to correct sāmsyaḥ 'thou art to be praised by men?'

Note 5. On akráḥ, comp. Vedische Studien, I, 168, and above, I, 143, 7.

Verse 8.

Note 1. Māna is another name of Agastya. See Zeitschrift der Deutschen Morg. Gesellschaft, XLII, 221.

Note 2. On the last words of the hymn—the regularly repeated conclusion of the Agastya hymns—see M. M., vol. xxxii, p. xx, and also Bartholomae, Bezenberger's Beiträge, XV, 212. I do not think it very probable that ishá is here the name of an autumn month, as found in the Satapatha Brāhmaṇa and others of the more modern Vedic texts; to me it would seem rather strange that such a prayer for the fertility of that month should have formed, among the Agastyas, the standing conclusion of their sacrificial hymns. But the names of the two months ishá and ūrgá seem to point to the existence of two adjectives meaning 'giving food' and 'giving sap.'—Then follows vṛigána, used as a masculine. Geldner (Vedische Studien, I, 151) indicates the following passages, in which he believes that this masculine vṛigána occurs: V, 44, 1; VI, 35, 5; VII, 32, 27; X, 27, 4; and the concluding Pāda of the Agastya hymns. Of these passages the two first seem to be open to doubt as to the correctness of the text. In V, 44, 1 the true reading may be pratīkínám vṛishanam dohase; comp. verse 3, vṛishá sísuḥ, and I, 173, 6, where possibly vṛishanam should be read instead of vṛigánam (Göttinger Gelehrte Anzeigen, 1890, 417). In VI, 35, 5 I propose to read vrinagam (Gött. Gel. Anzeigen, loc. cit., 416). In VII, 32, 27 and X, 27, 4 vrigánâ (Padap. vrigánâh; the letter d follows) and vrigáneshu seem to be masculine, though it is not absolutely impossible to see in these forms the nom. plur. and loc. plur. of the neuter vrigána. But I believe that any attempts to derive conclusions from these three passages on the meaning of the masculine vrigána are hopeless.

MANDALA II, HYMN 1.

ASHTAKA II, ADHYÂYA 5, VARGA 17-19.

1¹. Thou, O Agni, the flaming one, (art born) from out the Heavens², thou (art born) from out the Waters and the stone (the flint); thou (art born) from out the forests and the herbs; thou art born bright, O Lord of men, (as belonging) to men³.

2¹. To thee, O Agni, belongs the Hotri's and the Potri's office exercised at the appointed season; to thee belongs the office of the Neshtri; thou art the Agnidh² for the righteous. To thee belongs the office of the Prasâstri; thou actest as an Adhvaryu, and thou art the Brahman and the master of the house in our house³.

3¹. Thou, O Agni, art Indra, a bull among (all) beings. Thou art the wide-ruling Vishnu, worthy of adoration. Thou art the Brahman, a gainer of wealth, O Brahmanaspati². Thou, O Vidhartri (i. e. who keepest asunder all things), art united with Puramdhi (or the Liberality of the gods)³.

4. Thou, O Agni, art the king Varuna whose laws are firm; thou becomest Mitra, the wondrous one, worthy of being magnified. Thou art Aryaman, the lord of beings, whom I may enjoy¹. Thou, O god, art Amsa², desirous of distributing (goods) in the assembly³.

5. Thou, O Agni, being Tvashtri, (grantest) to thy worshipper abundance in heroes. To thee, who art accompanied by the (divine) wives¹, who art great like Mitra, belongs relationship². Thou, the quick inciter³, givest abundance in horses. Thou, rich in wealth, art the host of men⁴.

6. Thou, O Agni, art Rudra, the Asura of the high Heaven¹; thou, being the host of the Maruts, rulest over nourishment. Thou goest along with the flame-coloured Winds, bringing happiness to our home. Thou, being Pûshan, protectest thy worshippers by thy own might.

7. Thou, O Agni, art a giver of wealth to him who does service to thee¹; thou art the god Savitri, a bestower of treasures. Thou, being Bhaga, O lord of men, rulest over wealth. Thou art a protector in his house to him who has worshipped thee².

8. Towards thee, in the house, the lord of the clan, O Agni, the clans strive, towards thee, the bounteous king. Thou with the beautiful face possessest all things. Thou art equal to thousands, to hundreds, to ten (of others).

9. Thee, O Agni, men (make) their father by their sacrifices¹; thee who shinest with thy body they (invite) to brotherhood by their (sacrificial) work. Thou becomest a son to him who has worshipped thee. As a kind friend thou protectest against attack.

10. Thou, O Agni, art Rîbhû, to be adored when near. Thou rulest over strength¹, over wealth rich in food. Thou shinest², thou burnest for the sake of giving (wealth). Thou art a hewer³, an expander of sacrifice.

11. Thou, Agni, O god, art Aditi to the worshipper. Thou, being Hotrâ Bhârati¹, growest strong by prayer. Thou art Idâ, living a hundred winters, for (the increase of) ability. Thou, the killer of Vritra, O Lord of wealth, art Sarasvati².

12. Thou, O Agni, well kept, art the highest vital power. In thy lovely colour and in thy appearance (dwell all) beauties. Thou art great strength that carries us forward. Thou art abundant wealth, extending on all sides.

13. The Âdityas have made thee, O Agni, their mouth; the bright ones have made thee their tongue, O Sage. The Râti-sâk gods (i.e. the 'bounteous' gods) accompany thee at the sacrifices. In thee the gods eat the offering which is offered to them.

14. In thee, O Agni, with (thy) mouth¹ all the guileless² immortal gods eat the offering which is offered to them. Through thee the mortals taste their drink. Thou hast been born, the bright one, as the child of the plants.

15¹. Thou art united with them and equal to them in strength, O well-born Agni, nay, thou surpasses them, O god, when thy power² has expanded here in its greatness over Heaven and Earth, over both worlds.

16. The liberal lords who pour out, O Agni, over thy praisers gifts at the head of which there are cows¹, the ornament of which are horses: lead both ourselves and them to welfare. May we speak loud in the assembly², rich in valiant men.

NOTES.

The Rishi is Gṛītsamada, the metre Gagatī.—Verse 1 = VS. XI, 27; TS. IV, 1, 2, 5; TÂ. X, 76, 1; MS. II, 7, 2. Verse 2 = RV. X, 91, 10. Verse 6 = TS. I, 3, 14, 1; TB. III, 11, 2, 1. Verse 13 = TB. II, 7, 12, 6.

Verse 1.

Note 1. Among the numerous texts which treat of the different origins of Agni (see Bergaigne, I, 20 seq.), especially the following two verses may be compared with this passage: VI, 48, 5. yám ápaḥ ádrayaḥ vánâ gárbham ritásya píprati sáhasâ yáḥ mathitáḥ gáyate nr̥bhiḥ pr̥thivyáḥ ádhi sánavi; X, 45, 1. diváḥ pári prathamám gagñe agníḥ asmát dvitīyam pári gâtávedâḥ tritīyam apsú nr̥mánâḥ ágasram índhâna enam garate svâdhīḥ.

Note 2. The text (dyúbhiḥ tvám âsusukshániḥ) seems to be corrupt. I believe that tvám, which is so frequently repeated through this verse and through the next verses, has been put here in the wrong place, and that we should read, dyúbhyaḥ á susukshániḥ.

Note 3. With the last words of this verse, comp. the conclusion of verse 14.

Verse 2.

Note 1. This whole verse is repeated, X, 91, 10.

Note 2. In my opinion there is no doubt that instead of the traditional reading, agnít, the correct form is agnīt. The word is a compound of agní and idh and means 'the inflamer of the fire.' Cf. M. M., Hist. of A. S. L., 1859, pp. 450, 469.

Note 3. This is the most ancient list of the 'seven priests,' by the side of whom the gr̥hâ-pati or 'master of the house' is mentioned as the eighth. Comp. the formula in which the Adhvaryu names the officiating priests, Kâtyâyana IX, 8, 8 seq., and see the remarks of Weber, Indische Studien, X, 141, 376, and my own exposition, Religion des Veda, 383 seq., 396. The 'Brahman' mentioned in our verse is the Brâhmanâkkhamsin of the later ritual. Comp. Kâtyâyana IX, 8, 11; Satapatha Brâhmaṇa IV, 6, 6, 5.

Verse 3.

Note 1. On verses 3-6, see von Bradke, Dyâus Asura, p. 52 seq.

Note 2. Bṛihaspati or Brahmanaspati is the Brahman among the gods. But it is doubtful whether the title of Brahman in this connection should be understood in the later technical sense of the word, as the Ritvig who has to superintend the whole sacrifice. Comp. H. O., Religion des Veda, 396, note 1.

Note 3. Vidhartri seems to be here another name of Bhaga; comp. VII, 41, 2. bhágam huvema . . . yáh vi-dhartá). It is known that no god is so frequently mentioned in connection with Puramdhi as Bhaga. The passages have been collected by Grassmann in his Dictionary, s. v. púram-dhi.

Verse 4.

Note 1. Prof. von Bradke (Dyâus Asura, 53) believes that the text is corrupt; he thinks that the fourth Páda may have occupied the place of a lost continuation of the relative clause, yásya sam-bhúgam. I cannot but share the feeling on which Prof. von Bradke's remark rests, though I do not believe that the solution of the difficulty which he proposes is very probable. Could not the correct reading be yási (instead of yásya) sam-bhúgam, 'thou goest to the enjoyment (of goods)?' Comp. VI, 71, 6, where the traditional text has vámásya hí ksháyasya deva bhūre, and ksháyasya doubtless should be changed into ksháyasi.

Note 2. On Amsa, as one of the Ādityas, comp. Bergaigne, III, 39, 99.

Note 3. Vidáthe: comp. the note on I, 31, 6. It is tempting to conjecture vidhaté (comp. verse 5), but there is no necessity for such a conjecture. Comp., for instance, VI, 24, 2. vidáthe dāti vágam.

Verse 5.

Note 1. Gnáva should be read without accent, as Grassmann, Prof. Weber, and M. Henry (Revue Critique, Jan. 12, 1891, p. 23) have seen. Cf. Lanman, 518, 519.

Note 2. The meaning probably is, 'Thou art related to the other gods and to men,' or 'Thou art related to us.' Comp. VIII, 27, 10; 73, 12.

Note 3. Agni seems to be identified here with Apām napât, who frequently is called âru-héman. Comp. Windisch, Festgruss an Roth, 143 seq.

Note 4. The men, of course, are the Maruts, as is shown by the well-known use of sárdhaḥ (cf. vol. xxxii, p. 67 seq.).

Verse 6.

Note 1. Comp. von Bradke, Dyâus Asura, 53 seq.

Verse 7.

Note 1. As to aramkrîte, cf. VIII, 67, 3.

Note 2. Or, thou art a protector to him who has worshipped thee in his house.—Among the various ways for explaining or removing the metrical deficiency of the last Pâda the correction dâme á (for dâme) is recommended by verse 8.

Verse 9.

Note 1. Ishṭibhiḥ, standing by the side of sámyâ, seems to be derived from the root yag. Thus igé, igâná stand by the side of saramé, saramâná.—Cf. ishṭibhiḥ matibhiḥ, II, 18, 1.

Verse 10.

Note 1. The names of the three Rîbhûs are Rîbhû, Vâga, Vibhvan. The word vâga used here evidently alludes to the second of these names.

Note 2. Bergaigne (Religion Véd., II, 406) no doubt is right in believing that the verb ví bhâsi ('thou shinest') alludes to the name Vibhvan. Comp. X, 91, 1. vibhúḥ vibhávâ.

Note 3. Vi-sîkshuḥ again seems to convey an allusion to the Rîbhû myth. When dividing the cup of Tvashtîri into four cups, the Rîbhûs say, sákhe ví sîksha (IV, 35, 3). This ví sîksha and the corresponding adjective vi-sîkshu should be derived from the root sas, 'to cut to pieces.'

Verse 11.

Note 1. Here we have the three goddesses of the Âpri hymns, Bhârati, Idâ, and Sarasvatî. Of the goddess

Bhâratî the full name is given, Hotrâ Bhâratî, i.e. 'the Offering of the Bharatas.' Comp. Bergaigne, I, 322 seq.

Note 2. Comp. VI, 61, 7, where Sarasvatî is called vṛitra-ghnî.

Verse 14.

Note 1. Or 'through (thee who art their) mouth.'

Note 2. Comp. I, 19, 3. vísve devásah adrúhah ; vol. xxxii, pp. 53, 55.

Verse 15.

Note 1. On this verse, compare Pischel, Vedische Studien, I, 97.

Note 2. On pṛiksháh, see above, I, 127, 5, note 1.

Verse 16.

Note 1. On gó-agra, compare Pischel, Vedische Studien, I, 51.

Note 2. Vidátthe: comp. the note on I, 31, 6.

MANDALA II, HYMN 2.

ASHTAKA II, ADHYĀYA 5, VARGA 20-21.

1. Increase Gâtavedas by your sacrifice¹, worship Agni for ever with your offering and your prayer² —him who has been kindled, the receiver of good offerings, the solar hero, the heavenly Hotri, the charioteer³ in our settlements⁴.

2. For thee Nights and Dawns have been lowing, O Agni, as milch-cows in the folds for their calf¹. A steward², as it were, of Heaven, thou shinest on the human tribes, O bountiful one, on continuous nights³.

3. The gods have set him to work, as a steward¹ of Heaven and Earth, endowed with wonderful power, at the bottom of the air: Agni who is well known like a chariot², brightly shining, deserving of praise like Mitra (or, like a friend) in (human) dwellings.

4. They have established him who grows in the air, in his house, the serpent¹ with beautiful splendour like gold², the winged (son?) of *Prisni*³ who lights up with his eyes both tribes (of gods and of men), like a guardian of the way (?)⁴.

5. May he, the Hotri, encompass the whole sacrifice. Men strive towards him with offerings and prayer. (Agni) with golden jaws¹, hurrying around in the growing (plants)², lighted up the two worlds like the Sky with the stars.

6. Thus mayst thou, being brightly kindled for our welfare or being exhausted (?)¹, shine upon us with thy wealth. Carry hither to us the two worlds for the sake of happiness, Agni, O god, that they may eagerly partake² of the offering of the man (or, of Manus).

7. Give us, Agni, mighty, give us thousandfold (gifts). Open strength for us like a door¹ for the sake of glory. Make Heaven and Earth inclined towards us through (our) spell. Make the Dawns shine like the brilliant Sun.

8. Being kindled after dawns and nights may he shine with his red light like the sun, Agni, being a good sacrificer with the help of the offerings of man (or, of Manus)¹, the king of the clans, and the welcome guest of Âyu.

9. Thus, O Agni, ancient one, our human prayer has prospered among the immortals who dwell in the great heaven. May the cow¹ when milked, yield² freely to the singer in our settlements hundredfold (wealth) of all kinds.

10. May we, O Agni, (attain) bliss in valiant men by our racers, or may we shine over (all) people by our sacred spells. May our unconquerable lustre beam on high like the sun over the fivefold dwellings (of the five peoples).

11. Be thou, O mighty one, worthy of praise among us, (thou) from whom the well-born, liberal (lords) have sought nourishment¹, unto whom the strong ones, O Agni, go for sacrifice, who shinest in thy abode among (the worshipper's) own kith.

12. May we both, O Gâtavedas, the praisers and the liberal (lords), be in thy protection, O Agni. Help us to good, resplendent, abundant wealth which is accompanied by offspring, by good progeny.

13 = 11, 1, 16.

NOTES.

The same Rīshi and metre.—Verse 7=TS. II, 2, 12, 6 ; MS. IV, 12, 2.

Verse 1.

Note 1. In this Pāda one syllable is wanting. It may be thought that the first word should be pronounced iagñéna. For supplying the missing syllable by conjecture there would, however, be many ways. Comp. also H. O., Hymnen des Rig-veda, I, p. 79.

Note 2. Tánâ girā : comp. I. 38, 13 (vol. xxxii, p. 82).

Note 3. Dhûh-sâdam. The exact meaning is, 'who occupies a decisive position.'

Note 4. Vriganeshu : comp. I, 60, 3, note 2.

Verse 2.

Note 1. Comp. VIII, 88, 1. abhī vatsām ná svásareshu dhenávah indram gîrbhîh navâmahe.

Note 2. See I, 58, 7, note 1.

Note 3. See Lanman, p. 482 ; Gaedicke, p. 89. 'During continuous nights.' M. M.

Verse 3.

Note 1. See I, 58, 7, note 1.

Note 2. Cf. VIII, 84, 1. râtham ná védyam.

Verse 4.

Note 1. I follow the conjecture of Böhlingk-Roth, who propose to read hvârâm. Comp. Atharva-veda IV, 1, 2 (Āsvalâyana Srautasûtra IV, 6, 3 ; Sânkhâyana Srautasûtra V, 9, 7). surûkam hvârâm. The meaning of the word is conjectural ; comp. I, 141, 7, note 1. If we read hvâré, the translation could be 'brilliant like gold, in a hidden place.' (M. M.)

Note 2. Comp. Pischel, Vedische Studien, I, 52.

Note 3. Or, the winged (bird) of Prisni? No other passages which make Agni the son (or the bird) of Prisni are known to me.

Note 4. The accent of pāthás points to a genitive, dependent on pâyúm, of a word which is, however, different from pāthas. Grassmann thinks that pāthás is a lengthening for pathás, but Lanman (Noun-Inflection, 470) is quite right in observing that this is hard to believe in the first syllable of a Pāda. Should we not correct the text and read patháḥ (gen. sing. governed by pâyúm)? The reading pātháḥ may be due to the influence of the neighbourhood of pâyúm.

Verse 5.

Note 1. See vol. xxxii, p. 301.

Note 2. Comp. X, 92, 1. súshkāsu hárinīshu gárbhurat.

Verse 6.

Note 1. Ludwig translates sam-dadasván: 'zum heile [dich selber] aufreibend;' Grassmann, 'oder seist erloschen du;' Gaedicke (p. 89), 'und wenn du verlöschest;' Griffith, 'a liberal giver;' Neisser (Bezzenger's Beitr. XIX, 286), 'deine Kunst zusammennehmend.' Sāyana says, 'samda-dasván samyak prayakḥhan.' Prof. Max Müller suggests, 'being a liberal benefactor.'

Note 2. There was no reason for correcting devá-vītaye as Ludwig once proposed. He has himself abandoned this conjecture.

Verse 7.

Note 1. As to this metaphor ('opening' strength or the like), comp. VIII, 5, 21. utá naḥ divyāḥ íshaḥ ... ápa dvārā-iva varshathaḥ, and the passages collected by Dr. Hirzel, Gleichnisse und Metaphern im Rig-veda (Leipzig, 1890), 103.

Verse 8.

Note 1. The third Pāda is repeated in X, 11, 5.

Verse 9.

Note 1. The milch-cow of course is the prayer.

Note 2. Isháni seems to be an infinitive like parsháni nesháni tarisháni (Delbrück, Altindisches Verbum, 227; Neisser, Bezenberger's Beiträge, XX, 43). I believe it to come from the root ish, 'to incite.' As to the syntactical peculiarities of these infinitives, comp. Delbrück, Altindische Syntax, 416.

Verse 11.

Note 1. Ishay is a denominative from ish, as ûrgay is derived from ûrg (comp. Āsvalâyana Srautasûtra V, 7, 3).

MANDALA II, HYMN 3.

ASHTAKA II, ADHYĀYA 5, VARGA 22-23.

ĀPRĪ HYMN.

1. Agni being kindled, set down on the earth, has stood up with his face towards all worlds. May the Hotri, the purifier, the ancient, wise one, may god Agni sacrifice to the gods, he who is worthy (of being the sacrificer).

2. Narāsa, anointing the abodes (of the sacrifice), equal by his greatness to the three heavens, endowed with beautiful light, moistening the offering, his mind being intent on scattering ghr̥ita—may he anoint the gods on the summit of sacrifice.

3. Being magnified¹ in our mind, Agni, sacrifice for us to-day to the gods before the human (sacrificer)², thou who art worthy (of being the sacrificer). Conduct hither the unshakable host of the Maruts. Sacrifice, O men, to Indra who sits on the Barhis.

4. O divine Barhis! On this (Barhis) which is large, rich in valiant men, which has been spread on this Vedi (or sacrificial altar) rich in gain, ready for wealth, which is anointed with ghr̥ita, sit down, O Vasus, O Visve devās, O Ādityas¹ worthy of worship!

5. May the divine doors which are easily passable, open themselves wide when invoked with adoration. May they, the far-embracing, undecaying ones, open wide, purifying our glorious race¹ which is rich in valiant men.

6. May Dawn and Night, grown strong from of old, joyful like two birds (?)¹, (do) their work well for us—they who weave, turned towards each other, the stretched-out warp, the ornamented form of the sacrifice², (the two goddesses) flowing with plenty, rich in milk.

7. May the two divine Hotris, the first ones, very knowing, very marvellous, perform the sacrifice rightly with their (sacrificial) verse. Sacrificing to the gods they anoint (them)¹, observing the right time, on the navel of the Earth, over the three ridges (of the three worlds).

8. May Sarasvatī, the accomplisher of our prayer, may the goddess Iā, all-victorious Bhāratī—may the three goddesses, according to their wont, sit down on this Barhis and protect it, the faultless shelter.

9. Through (the god's) hearing (our prayer) a manly son is born (to us), tawny-coloured, rich in gain, bringing vigour, loving the gods. May Tvasṭri deliver for us a son, the navel (i.e. the tie that binds generations together), and may he then go to the abode of the gods.

10¹. May the tree (i. e. the sacrificial post) stand by, letting loose (the offering which goes to the gods). May Agni make the offering ready in consequence of our prayers. May the prescient divine butcher carry the thrice-anointed offering to the gods.

11. He¹ is joined with *ghṛita*². His womb (on the altar) is ghṛita. He rests on ghṛita. His abode is ghṛita. Carry hither (the gods) according to thy wont! Rejoice³! Carry, O bull, the offering, over which the Svāhā has been spoken, (to the gods).

NOTES.

The same Rishi. Metre, Trishṭubh; verse 7 : Gagatī.—
Verse 9 = TS. III, 1, 11, 2; TB. II, 8, 7, 4; MS. IV, 14, 8.
Verse 11 = VS. XVII, 88; TÂ. X, 10, 2.

Verse 3.

Note 1. The text has īlītāh. Comp. above, I, 1, 1, note 2.

Note 2. Comp. X, 53, 1. nī hī sātsat (scil. agnīh) ántaraḥ pūrvaḥ asmāt.

Verse 4.

Note 1. It is very probable that the poet intends to distinguish the Vasus, the Visve devās, and the Ādityas as three categories of gods. But then we should expect the accent ādityāh. Comp. VII, 51, 3. ādityāḥ vīsve marútaḥ ka vīsve devāḥ ka vīsve; X, 125, 1. ahám rudrēbhiḥ vásubhiḥ karāmi ahám ādityaḥ utá visvádevaiḥ.

Verse 5.

Note 1. Comp. the Gṛihya Mantra addressed to the Mekhalā, of which it is said 'varṇam pavitram punatī naḥ āgāt,' Sāṅkhāyana Gṛihya II, 2, 1, &c.

Verse 6.

Note 1. The meaning of vayṣa (comp. IX, 68, 8) is uncertain. Possibly it is derived from vī, 'the bird.' According to Sāyana it would mean 'weavers' (vānakusale iva). Vayṣeva may be vayṣe iva (dual feminine), in spite of the artificial theory of the Pragr̥hya vowels; see Lanman, p. 361; H. O., Hymnen des Rig-veda, I, 456. Or it may be vayṣā iva, dual masculine or singular feminine (comp. VII, 2, 6).

Note 2. Comp. VII, 42, 1. adhvarāsyā pésaḥ.

Verse 7.

Note 1. Comp. VIII, 39, 1. agníh deván anaktu naḥ.

Verse 10.

Note 1. With the first hemistich compare especially, III, 4, 10 (see below).

Verse 11.

Note 1. 'He' of course is Agni.

Note 2. Differing from M. M., vol. xxxii, p. 185, I take ghṛitam as an accusative.

Note 3. Comp. III, 6, 9 (see below).

MANDALA II, HYMN 4.

ASHTAKA II, ADHYĀYA 5, VARGA 24-25.

1. I call for you Agni, shining with beautiful shine, praised with beautiful praise¹, the guest of the clans, the receiver of fine offerings, who is desirable like Mitra (or, like an ally), Gâtavedas the god, among godly people.

2. The Bhṛigus worshipping him in the abode of the waters¹ have verily² established him among the clans of Âyu. Let him surpass all worlds, Agni, the steward of the gods³, the possessor of quick horses.

3. The gods¹ have established beloved Agni among the human clans as (people) going to settle (establish) Mitra¹. May he illuminate the nights that are longing (for him), he who should be treated kindly by the liberal (worshipper) in his house.

4. His prosperity is delightful as good pasture (?)¹; delightful is his appearance when the burning one is driven forward, he who quickly shaking his tongue among the plants waves² his tail mightily like a chariot-horse.

5. When they praised¹ to me the monstrous might of the eater of the forests², he produced his (shining) colour as (he has done) for the Usigs³. With shining splendour he has shone joyously, he who having grown old has suddenly become young (again).

6. He who shines on the forests¹ as if he were thirsty, who resounded like water on its path, like (the rattle of the wheels) of a chariot²—he whose path is black, the hot, the joyous one has shone, laughing³ like the sky with its clouds.

7. He who has spread himself burning over the wide (earth), moves about like an animal, free, without a keeper. The flaming Agni, burning down the brushwood, with a black trail¹, has, as it were, tasted the earth.

8. Now in the remembrance of thy former blessings this prayer has been recited to thee at the third sacrifice¹. Give to us, Agni, mighty strength with a succession of valiant men, with plenty of food; (give us) wealth with good progeny².

9. Give, O Agni, such vigour to thy praiser together with his liberal (lords), that the Gṛitsa-madas, rich in valiant men, victorious over hostile plots, attaining (their aim) in secret, may overcome through thee (their rivals) who get behind¹.

NOTES.

The Rīshi is Somāhuti Bhārgava, the metre Trishṭubh.—No verse occurs in the other Samhitās.

Verse 1.

Note 1. To me there seems to be no doubt that the meaning of svrīktī is something like 'beautiful prayer,' 'beautiful song,' and then 'a god who is invoked with beautiful songs.' Thus svrīktāya or other cases of the same word stand by the side of stómā . . . gṛā, VIII, 8, 22; of gṛā, I, 64, 1; VIII, 96, 10, comp. X, 64, 4; of brāhma, VII, 31, 11; 97, 9; of stómai, VII, 96, 1; of dhītibhi, VI, 61, 2; of ákṣhoktibhi matinām, I, 61, 3, and so on. Comp. also VII, 83, 9. hávāmahe vām vṛishanā svrīktibhi; X, 41, 1. rātham . . . svrīktibhi vayām vṛushā ushāsa hávāmahe; X, 80, 7. avakāma svrīktīm.

This being the meaning of the word, I cannot think it probable—and herein I differ from the opinion pronounced by Prof. Max Müller, vol. xxxii, p. 109—that it stands in connection with the verb vrig in its well-known use referring to the Barhis. In my opinion (comp. also Geldner, Vedische Studien, I, 151) suvrīktī may be connected with another use of vrig, with the meaning of this verb ‘to draw a god towards himself, averting him from other sacrificers’ (materials regarding this use of vrig have been collected by Geldner, loc. cit., 144). Or possibly the word may be derived, as Prof. von Roth believes, from rik (comp. suṽita derived from i). It is true that the substantive rikṭi does not occur by itself: but, as Prof. Max Müller remarks (loc. cit.), this would not be fatal to Prof. von Roth’s etymology, because many other words in the Veda occur as uttarapadas only. If we accept this theory, we should of course have to separate suvrīktī from nāmovrīktī and svāvrīktī.

Verse 2.

Note 1. Comp. X, 46, 2. imám vidhántaḥ apám sadhásthe.

Note 2. Literally, ‘doubly.’ ‘In two places, in the abode of the waters and among the clans of man.’ M. M. Compare, however, X, 46, 2 (see last note).

Note 3. Devánām aratīḥ; comp. I, 58, 7, note 1.

Verse 3.

Note 1. The meaning seems to be that people going to settle anywhere, secure safety by ceremonies addressed to Mitra, i.e. possibly by concluding alliances which stand under the special protection of Mitra. Comp. IV, 33, 10; H. O., Religion des Veda, 186, note 1.—Mitra is kshetrasádhas, VIII, 31, 14.

Verse 4.

Note 1. Sváśya-iva seems to be corrupt. Possibly we might read sūyávasā-iva pushṭīḥ. In X, 11, 5 we read, sádā asi ranvāḥ, yávasā-iva púshyate. IV, 16, 15. ókaḥ ná ranvā sudṛśī-iva pushṭīḥ.—The translation of the traditional reading would be, 'His prosperity is delightful, like that of a person belonging to us.'

Note 2. Bháribhrat seems to be a participle: but then dodhavíti must be accented (dódhavíti).

Verse 5.

Note 1. On the verb pan, comp. Pischel, Vedische Studien, I, 199 seq.

Note 2. Vanád seems to be, as Grassmann has seen, a compound of ván, 'the forest' (comp. the genitive vanám, the locative vámsu), and of ád. Of Agni is said several times 'vánāni atti.'

Note 3. On the mythical ancestors designated as the Usigas, see Bergaigne, I, 57 seq.

Verse 6.

Note 1. The forests, of course, are the fuel.

Note 2. To ráthyá-iva probably kakrá (nom. plur.) is to be supplied.

Note 3. The 'laughing' of the sky is the lightning (Benfey, Vedica und Verwandtes, 138). The flames of Agni flash through the smoke as the lightning shines in the clouds.

Verse 7.

Note 1. See Geldner, Vedische Studien, II, 29 seq.; Roth, Zeitschrift der Deutschen Morgenländ. Gesellschaft, XLVIII, 107.

Verse 8.

Note 1. The text has trítīye vidáthe (comp. I, 31, 6, note 2). Does this mean at the trítīya-savana? Three vidathas are spoken of also in VI, 51, 2; VII, 66, 10.

Note 2. On the metrical irregularity, comp. H. O., Die Hymnen des Rig-veda, I, 67.

Verse 9.

Note 1. 'May prevail, destroying through thee the neighbours lying in ambush.' M. M. To me gúhâ seems to be connected with vanvánta.

MANDALA II, HYMN 5.

ASHTAKA II, ADHYĀYA 5, VARGA 26.

1. The brilliant Hotri¹ has been born², the father to protect the fathers³, aspiring after noble wealth. May we be able to bridle the strong (horse)⁴.

2. He the leader of the sacrifice towards whom the seven reins (or rays) are stretched, the Potri promotes, as (he has done) for Manu, the divine eighth (rein); all those (reins he promotes)¹.

3. Or when he has run along, and has recited the sacred words¹, and has pursued that (duty)², he has encompassed every kind of wisdom as the felly (encircles) the wheel.

4. For He has been born as the bright Prasâstri, with bright power of mind. (A man) who knows his firm laws, mounts up on them as on the branches (of a tree)¹.

5. The lively milch-cows were attached to his, the Neshtri's, (bright) colour¹. Was it according to the wish of the three sisters who have gone there²?

6. When (coming) from the mother the sister has approached, bringing ghrîta¹, the Adhvaryu rejoices at their² coming as corn (rejoices) at rain.

7. May He the Rîtvig (priest) himself make the Rîtvig (serve) for his own refreshment¹. And may we readily gain the praise and the sacrifice²; we have offered it.

8. In order that He the knowing one (Agni) may readily serve all the worshipful (gods), this sacrifice, O Agni, which we have performed, rests in thee.

NOTES.

The same Rishi. Metre, Anushtubh.—Verse 3=SV. I, 94; TS. III, 3, 3, 3; MS. II, 13, 5.

Verse 1.

Note 1. As the Hotri is mentioned here, the following verses contain each the names of the other priests as given in II, 1, 2. Only the Agnīdh is left out; possibly the words svāh svāya dhāyase krinutām ritvīk ritvīgam (verse 7) contain an allusion to this priest, who may well be termed the Ritvīg belonging to Agni and refreshing him.

Note 2. With the first Pāda of our verse, compare IX, 64, 10. Induḥ pavishṭa kētanah.

Note 3. The meaning seems to be: Agni, who has protected the fathers, has been born again, and will do the same for the present sacrificer.

Note 4. The strong horse, of course, is Agni. Comp. III, 27, 3 (see below). On the construction (vāgīnah yāmam), see Delbrück, Altindische Syntax, p. 417.

Verse 2.

Note 1. On the seven rays or reins of Agni, see I, 146, 1, note 1. Besides the seven priests a mysterious eighth Ritvīg priest is spoken of (X, 114, 9. kām ritvīgām ashtamām sūram āhuḥ); thus Agni has a mysterious eighth rasmī (ray or rein) besides the seven. Comp. Bergaigne, Religion Védique, II, 144.

Verse 3.

Note 1. Vókat bráhmāni: this seems to be an allusion to the Brahman priest (see verse 1, note 1).

Note 2. Véḥ is third singular. See Joh. Schmidt, Kuhn's Zeitschrift, XXV, 91.

Verse 4.

Note 1. Comp. VIII, 13, 6. vayāh-iva ānu rohate. Prof.

Max Müller (vol. xxxii, p. 207) translates, 'springs up like young sprouts.'

Verse 5.

Note 1. It is the Neshtri's office to lead the wife of the sacrificer to the place where the sacrifice is being performed. Thus Agni, the divine Neshtri, is represented as accompanied by female beings, by the 'milch-cows,' meaning the oblations of ghṛita, &c., or possibly the dawns.

Note 2. Are the 'three sisters' (comp. Bergaigne, I, 321; II, 107) identical with the milch-cows spoken of in the first hemistich? Ludwig (vol. iv, p. 166) very appropriately calls attention to the fact that three cows were milked at the sacrifice of the full and the new moon. Comp. Hillebrandt, Altindisches Neu- und Vollmondsopfer, p. 12 seq. Three dawns are mentioned in VIII, 41, 3.

Verse 6.

Note 1. The sister bringing ghṛita seems to be the sacrificial spoon. Is the mother the milk-vessel or possibly the cow?

Note 2. Does 'their' refer to the mother and the sister (cf. Delbrück, Altindische Syntax, p. 102)? Or are 'the three sisters who have gone there' referred to?

Verse 7.

Note 1. The one Ritvig is Agni; the other possibly is the Agnīdh who refreshes the Ritvig Agni. See verse 1, note 1.

Note 2. After āt we should expect, instead of áram, another accusative, possibly rikam (see VII, 66, 11): 'may we master the praise, the sacrifice, and the verse.' Áram may have found its way into the text from verse 8.

MANDALA II, HYMN 6.

ASHTAKA II, ADHYĀYA 5, VARGA 27.

1. Accept, O Agni, this my piece of wood and this my sitting down (reverentially)¹, and hear these words of mine.

2. Let us worship thee, Agni, child of vigour, with this (piece of wood?)¹, O winner of horses², with this well-spoken (hymn), O well-born one.

3. May we thus as thy devoted servants pay devotion by our words to thee who acceptest words (of prayer), to thee who aspirest after wealth, O giver of wealth.

4. Thus be thou a liberal, bountiful lord, O lord of goods, O giver of goods. Drive hatred away from us.

5. Thus (give) us¹ rain from the sky ; thus (give) us unattainable strength ; thus (give) us thousandfold food.

6. To him who magnifies thee, who desires thy help, O youngest messenger, (invoked) by our word, best sacrificing Hotri, come near.

7. For thou, Agni, O sage, who knowest both races (of gods and of men), passest (to and fro) between them, like a messenger belonging to thy own people¹, belonging to thy allies.

8. Thus gladden (the gods)¹ as the knowing one ; sacrifice, O intelligent one, in due order, and sit down on this Barhis.

NOTES.

The same Rishi. Metre, Gâyatrî.—Verse 4=VS. XII, 43; TS. IV, 2, 3, 4; MS. II, 7, 10.—The hymn has been translated by M. M., Selected Essays, II, p. 143.

Verse 1.

Note 1. It does not seem probable that upasád is to be translated here according to its meaning in the later ritual, as one of the preparatory ceremonies of the Soma sacrifice. See Weber, Indische Studien, X, 363; Hillebrandt, Vedische Mythologie, I, 300.

Verse 2.

Note 1. Ayá may be used adverbially: comp. III, 12, 2; VI, 17, 15; IX, 53, 2; 106, 14. But it is more probable that samídhâ or girá should be supplied from verse 1. Comp. II, 24, 1. ayá vidhema girá; IV, 4, 15. ayá samídhâ vidhema.

Note 2. Comp. VIII, 61, 7. ásvam-ishṭaye.

Verse 5.

Note 1. The conjecture sánaḥ, proposed by Böhtlingk-Roth and Grassmann, is not necessary. The verb is to be supplied; comp. the passages collected by Pischel, Vedische Studien, I, 19.

Verse 7.

Note 1. Gányeva seems to be gányah iva, comp. II, 39, 1. dūtá-iva hávyâ gányâ purutrâ; IV, 55, 5. pát pátih gányât ámhasah nah.

Verse 8.

Note 1. Comp. VII, 17, 4. yákshat deván amṛítân pipráyat ka; VIII, 39, 9. yákshat ka pipráyat ka nah.

MANDALA II, HYMN 7.

ASHṬAKA II, ADHYĀYA 5, VARGA 28.

1. Bring us, O youngest god, Bhârata¹, Agni, the best, resplendent, much-desired wealth, O Vasu²!

2. May no malign power of a god or of a mortal overcome us. Help us across such hostile power.

3. And may we dive with thee across all hostile powers as across streams of water.

4. Bright, O purifier, worthy of adoration, Agni, thou shinest mightily; thou hast been worshipped by offerings of ghrîta¹.

5. Thou, O Bhârata¹, Agni! hast been worshipped by us with offerings of heifers, of bulls, of eight-footed (cows)².

6. The old excellent Hotrî who feeds on wood and drinks butter, he is the wonderful son of strength.

NOTES.

The same Rishi and metre.—Verse 1=TS. I, 3, 14, 3; MS. IV, 11, 4. Verse 4=TS. I, 3, 14, 5. Verse 6=VS. XI, 70; TS. IV, 1, 9, 2; MS. II, 7, 7.

Verse 1.

Note 1. Agni Bhârata is Agni as the protector of the Bharata tribe or as invoked by that tribe.

Note 2. With the beginning of this verse, I, 44, 4 should be compared.

Verse 4.

Note 1. Comp. VIII, 19, 22. agnih ghrítébhih áhutaḥ.

Verse 5.

Note 1. See verse 1, note 1.

Note 2. Roth (Petersb. Dictionary) supplies vāgbhih or rigbhih; comp. VIII, 76, 12. vākam ashāpadim. But there is no doubt that ashāpadī, standing by the side of vasā and ukshán, has the same meaning as in the later ritual, viz. a cow with calf.

MANDALA II, HYMN 8.

ASHTAKA II, ADHYÂYA 5, VARGA 29.

1. As one who runs a race¹ (praises) his chariots, praise thou the yoking of Agni (to the chariot of sacrifice), of the most glorious, bountiful (god)—

2. Who is the best leader for his worshipper, who undecaying makes the malign decay¹, the cheerful-faced who has been worshipped with offerings—

3. He who is praised in the houses on account of his beauty in the evening and at dawn, whose law is not set at nought,

4. The bright one who shines with his light as the Sun with his splendour, with his undecaying (flames)¹, he who is anointed (with ghṛita).

5. The hymns have strengthened Agni the devourer¹ along (the extent of) his own royalty². He has assumed every beauty.

6. May we unharmed stand under the protection of Agni, Indra, Soma, of the gods; may we overcome our foes.

NOTES.

The Rishi is Gṛitsamada; the metre is Gâyatrî, the last verse being Anushṭubh, as is frequently the case in Gâyatrî hymns (see H. O., Hymnen des Rig-veda, I, 146).—No verse occurs in the other Samhitās.

Verse 1.

Note 1. Vāgayāti means 'he strives for vāga,' vāgayati 'he incites to quickness.' The accent is not always correct in the traditional text.

Verse 2.

Note 1. Comp. II, 16, 1. índram aguryám garáyantam.

Verse 4.

Note 1. As to agáraiḥ, 'the undecaying (flames),' comp. III, 18, 2; VI, 5, 4; 6, 2; VII, 3, 3; X, 87, 20.

Verse 5.

Note 1. That Agni should be identified here with the Rishi Atri (see Bergaigne, II, 468) is very improbable. Possibly átri means simply 'the eater' (from ad), though the poet in calling him so may have intended to allude to the name of the Rishi.

Note 2. Comp. I, 80, 1 seq. árkan ánu svarágyam; 84, 10 seq. vásviḥ ánu svarágyam.

MANDALA II, HYMN 9.

ASHTAKA II, ADHYĀYA 6, VARGA 1.

1. The Hotri who is found on the Hotri's seat has sat down (there), the fierce, the resplendent, the dexterous one, the protector of (his own) infallible laws¹, the highest Vasu, he who brings thousandfold (gain), the pure-tongued Agni.

2. Be thou our messenger, be our protector far and wide; be thou, O bull, a leader towards greater wealth. O Agni! for the continuation of our children and of ourselves be thou an unremitting, brilliant protector.

3. May we worship thee at thy highest birth (-place), O Agni; may we worship thee with praises in thy lower abode. I honour the womb from which thou hast sprung. When thou hast been kindled, they have offered offerings in thee.

4. Agni, being the best sacrificer perform thou the sacrifice with the oblation. With thy readiness to hear (us) hail our gift, the wealth (which we offer). For thou art the treasure-lord of treasures; thou art the deviser of brilliant speech.

5. Thy wealth of both kinds¹ never fails, when thou art born (kindled) day by day, O wonderful one. Make thy singer, O Agni, rich in food; make him the lord of wealth with excellent offspring.

6. With this face of thine, as a bounteous (lord), a sacrificer to the gods, the best performer of sacrifices with happiness, as an undeceivable guardian and far-reaching protector, shine among us, O Agni, with light and wealth.

NOTES.

The same Rīshi. Metre, Trishṭubh.—According to an observation of Bergaigne's, hymns of six verses composed in Trishṭubh should precede hymns of the same extent composed in Gāyatrī. Though this law is not without exceptions (see H. O., Die Hymnen des Rigveda, I, 202 seq.), the suspicion is raised that the hymns 9 and 10 should each be divided into two Trikas.—Verse 1=VS. XI, 36; TS. III, 5, 11, 2; IV, 1, 3, 3; MS. II, 7, 3. Verse 2=TS. III, 5, 11, 2; MS. IV, 10, 4. Verse 3=VS. XVII, 75; TS. IV, 6, 5, 4; MS. II, 10, 6. Verse 6=TS. IV, 3, 13, 2; MS. IV, 10, 5.

Verse 1.

Note 1. The long compound looks suspicious; possibly it should be read ádabdhavratāḥ prámātīḥ.

Verse 5.

Note 1. Vásu and dhána frequently receive the epithet ubháya; see VI, 19, 10; VII, 82, 4; 83, 5; X, 84, 7. No doubt celestial and terrestrial goods are referred to, see II, 14, 11; V, 68, 3; VI, 59, 9; VII, 97, 10; IX, 19, 1; 100, 3.

MANDALA II, HYMN 10.

ASHTAKA II, ADHYĀYA 6, VARGA 2.

1. Agni is to be invoked as the first like a father, when he has been inflamed by Manus¹ in the abode of Id². When he has invested himself with beauty, the wise immortal, he, the glorious strong (horse) is to be smoothed (by the worshippers as by grooms).

2. Agni with bright splendour, mayest thou hear my call with all my prayers, thou a wise immortal. The two tawny (horses) draw thy chariot or the two red (horses), or He the wide-ranging one has made the two ruddy (horses draw his chariot)¹.

3. They have generated the well-born (Agni) in her who lies on her back¹. Agni became a germ in the manifoldly-adorned (wives)². Even in the . . .³ the wise one dwells by night uncovered in his powers⁴.

4. I besprinkle with my offering, with Ghr̥ita, Agni who abides turned towards all beings, who widely extends throughout, who is mighty in his vigour, who shows himself most capacious by the food (which he consumes), and robust¹.

5. I besprinkle Him who is turned towards (us) from all sides; may he gladly accept that with his benevolent mind. Agni, who is like a beautiful youth, who has the appearance of one eagerly striving, is not to be touched, when he hurries around with his body.

6. Mayst thou know the portion (belonging to thee), being strong through thy desire. With thee as our messenger may we speak like Manu. Gaining wealth¹ I invoke with my (sacrificial) ladle, with my eloquence, the faultless Agni who mixes the honey-drink.

NOTES.

The same Rīshi and metre. On the position of this hymn in the collection and its division into Triṣas, see the note on II, 9.—Verses 4–5 = VS. XI, 23–24; TS. IV, 1, 2, 4. 5; MS. II, 7, 2.

Verse 1.

Note 1. Comp. VII, 2, 3. Mánunā sámiddham.

Note 2. Íd is a synonym of lā; ilāh padé means the same as ilāyāh padé.

Verse 2.

Note 1. I cannot accept Prof. Lanman's scansion of this Pāda (Noun-Inflection, 342), utá arushāha kakre víbhrītraḥ. In my opinion the only reading in conformity with the use of Vedic poets is utárushā áha, &c.

Verse 3.

Note 1. Comp. III, 29, 3 (see below). Of course the kindling-stick is alluded to.

Note 2. The wives are the plants.—Comp. Lanman, p. 548.

Note 3. The meaning of sírínā (ἄπαξ λεγόμενον) is unknown. The Indian explanation ('night') of course is a guess, but this guess may be right.

Note 4. 'Uncovered by the night,' M. M. On máhobhiḥ, cf. vol. xxxii, p. 197.

Verse 4.

Note 1. See vol. xxxii, p. 212.

Verse 6.

Note 1. There is no reason for conjecturing dhanasám (Ludwig). Comp. X, 65, 10. indriyám sómam dhanasāḥ u ímahe.

MANDALA III, HYMN 1.

ASHTAKA II, ADHYĀYA 8, VARGA 13-16.

1. Thou wilt have me, O Agni, as a strong (master) of Soma¹: therefore thou hast made me the carrier (of the gods?) to perform worship at the sacrifice². Sending my thoughts to the gods³ I make the (press-) stone ready⁴; I toil, O Agni: find thou pleasure in thy own body⁵.

2¹. Eastward we have turned the sacrifice²; may the prayer increase. They honoured Agni with fuel and adoration. They have taught (him) the sacrificial ordinances of the sages of Heaven³. Though he (Agni) is clever and strong, they have sought a way for him.

3. He has conceived freshness¹, the wise one of pure² powers, he who is by his birth well allied with Heaven and Earth. The gods have found Agni the conspicuous one in the waters, in the work³ of the sisters.

4. The seven young (wives)¹ made the blessed one grow who had been born white, ruddy in his growth. They ran up to him like mares² to a new-born foal. The gods wondered at Agni at his birth.

5. Spreading with his bright limbs to the aerial space, purifying his power¹ by wise purifications, clothing himself in light, the life of the waters², he creates mighty, perfect beauty.

6. He has gone to (the waters) who do not eat, the undeceived ones, the young (daughters) of Heaven who are not clothed and (yet) are not naked.

Here the former young (women) having the same origin, the seven sounds¹ have conceived one germ.

7. His compact masses assuming every shape are spread in the womb of ghee, in the streaming of honey. There the swelling milch-cows have stationed themselves. Great are the parents of the wonderfully mighty (Agni) who are turned towards each other¹.

8. Having been carried (in the waters) thou hast shone forth, O son of strength, assuming wonderful shapes brilliant and fierce. The streams of honey and ghee drip, where the male has grown by wisdom.

9. By (his) nature he has found his father's udder¹; he has sent forth his streams and his showers². Walking³ hidden to his dear friends he has not been hidden to the young (daughters) of Heaven⁴.

10. He bore (in his womb) the germ of the sire, of the father who begat him¹. He, being one, sucked many (nurses) rich in milk². Observe for this manly, bright one the two wives bound in kinship, belonging to men³.

11. The great one has grown up in the wide unbounded space¹. The Waters (have made) Agni (grow): for many glorious ones² (have come) together³. He lay in the womb of Rita, the domestic (god) Agni, in the work⁴ of the uterine sisters.

12. Like a horse that carries (the prize), in the assembly of the great (waters)¹, visible to his son², he whose . . . is light³: he who as father begat the ruddy cows⁴, he the son of the waters is the most manly, restless⁵ Agni.

13. To him, the glorious son of the waters and of the plants, the blessed wood¹ has given birth, in his many shapes. Even the gods, for they agreed in their mind, honoured him who had been born the most wonderful and strong.

14. Mighty rays of light like brilliant lightnings, milking (the sap of) immortality in the boundless stable, accompanied Agni whose . . . is light¹, who had grown up in his own house, as it were in secret.

15. I magnify thee, worshipping thee with offerings; I magnify (thee) desirous of thy friendship, of thy favour. Together with the gods give help to him who praises thee, and protect us with thy domestic faces.

16. As thy followers, O Agni, best leader, winning all precious (treasures), pressing onward with fertile glory, may we overcome the godless who seek to combat us.

17. Thou hast been here as the banner of the gods, Agni, joy-giving, knowing all wisdom. As the domestic (god) thou hast harboured the mortals. As the charioteer thou goest along straightway after the gods.

18. The immortal, the king, has sat down in the dwelling of the mortals, performing the sacrifices¹. He the ghee-faced one has shone forth widely, Agni knowing all wisdom.

19¹. Come to us with thy gracious friendship, speeding, great, with thy great blessings. Bestow on us plentiful victorious wealth; make our share glorious and adorned with fine speech.

20. These old births of thine, O Agni, and the recent ones I have told forth to thee the ancient one. These great libations (of Soma) have been prepared for the manly one; generation by generation Gâtavedas has been placed (on the altar).

21. Gâtavedas, placed (on the altar) generation after generation, is kindled by the Visvâmitras, the indefatigable (or everlasting). May we dwell in the grace of him the worshipful, yea, in his blissful kindness.

22. Bring thou, O strong one, this sacrifice of ours to the gods, O wise one, as a liberal giver. Bestow on us, O Hotri, abundant food; Agni, obtain by sacrificing mighty wealth for us.

23. Procure, O Agni, for ever, to him who implores thee, (the gift of) nourishment¹, the wonderful acquiring of the cow. May a son be ours, offspring that continues our race. Agni, may this favour of thine abide with us!

NOTES.

The Rishi is Visvâmitra Gâthina, the metre Trishubh.—Verse 1 = MS. IV, 11, 2. Verse 19 = MS. IV, 14, 15. Verse 23 = SV. I, 76; VS. XII, 51; TS. IV, 2, 4, 3; MS. II, 7, 11; IV, 11, 1; 12, 3.

Comp. on this hymn Geldner, Vedische Studien, I, 157 seq., and the article of Regnaud, Études Védiques, l'hymne III, 1 du Rig-Véda.

Verse 1.

Note 1. Vákshi, which is very frequent as 2nd person of vah, occurs also as belonging to vas (see VII, 98, 2. pítim ít asya vakshi), and in this sense no doubt it is to be understood in our passage.—Ludwig and Geldner take tavásam vákshi agne as a parenthesis. G. translates: 'Du hast mich zu deinem Somaschenken—denn dich gelüstet nach dem starken, o Agni—bestellt, dass ich vor den Weisen opfern soll.' To me it seems more natural to understand the first Pâda as one continual clause; vákshi is accented on account of the logical dependence in which this clause stands, the clause being considered, even without a subordinating word, as a dependent one. See Delbrück, Altindische Syntax, p. 42; A. Mayr, Sitzungsberichte der phil. hist. Classe der Kais. Akademie der Wissenschaften, Vol. LXVIII (Vienna, 1871), 248, 259.—If we were to consider vákshi as a locative infinitive (see Bartholomae's theory on such infinitives, Indogermanische Forschungen, II, 271 seqq.), the translation would be: 'Thou hast made me, O Agni, a strong carrier of Soma at the carrying (of the oblations),' &c. I do not think, however, this interpretation of vákshi very probable, nor is it, as far as I can see, favoured by any passage which contains the word.—For sómasya tavásam, Prof. Max Müller suggests the translation 'strong of Soma,' i. e. full of Soma.

Note 2. The text has vidáthe.

Note 3. The traditional text has ákkha dīdyat, which means, 'shining towards or as far as the gods.' The verb dī with ákkha occurs still in two other passages of this Mandala, in 15, 5 and 55, 3. In the first of these passages the text seems to be correct: deván ákkha dīdyānah, 'shining as far as the gods.' In the second passage I believe that we ought to read ákkha dīdhye pūrvyāni, 'I think of the ancient things,' or more exactly, 'I send my thoughts to the ancient things.' In the same way it seems to me very probable that in our verse dīdhyat would be the correct reading, for the participle refers to the priest who says of himself, 'I make the stone ready;' and this priest does not send his light (dīdyat) but his thoughts (dīdhyat) to the gods. Comp. I, 132, 5 = 139, 1. deván ákkha ná dhītāyah; III, 4, 3, and numerous passages which represent the mati, the girah, &c., as going towards (ákkha) the gods, such as III, 39, 1; 42, 3; VII, 10, 3; 36, 9; X, 43, 1; 47, 6.—Prof. von Roth (Zeitschrift der D. Morg. Ges., XLVIII, 108) speaks of the 'häufige Verwechslungen von Formen der beiden Wurzeln dī scheinen und dhī wahrnehmen, denken.' The reading dīdyat in our verse, and dīdye III, 55, 3, may rest on the influence of III, 15, 5. deván ákkhā dīdyānah.

Note 4. On the accent of yuñgé the same may be said as above (note 1) regarding the accent of vákshi.

Note 5. I. e. cause the fire to flare up.

Verse 2.

Note 1. The verses 2, 3, and 4 have been translated by Bergaigne, Religion Védique, I, 109.

Note 2. Many sacrificial rites are performed from west to east; comp. with regard to the Barhis, I, 188, 4; X, 110, 4; with regard to the sacrificial ladle, III, 6, 1; V, 28, 1; to the Havirdhânas, Vâgas. Samhitâ V, 17. Thus the whole sacrifice is spoken of as proceeding in an eastward direction; see X, 66, 12. prāñkam nah yagñām prá nayata; X, 87, 9. yagñām prāñkam . . . prá naya.

Note 3. Comp. Mahābhārata XIV, 280. tasmāt svayam sādhi yagñe vidhānam. Vidātha indeed is here an equivalent of vidhāna.

Verse 3.

Note 1. The meaning seems to be that Agni won vigour (máyah) by dwelling in the waters (see Pāda 3); comp. the well-known words ápah hí sthá mayah-bhúvah (X, 9, 1), 'for you, O waters, give vigour.'

Note 2. More exactly, of purified faculties.

Note 3. The accent apási, instead of ápasi, looks very suspicious. It is easy, but perhaps too easy, to correct ápasi, as possibly in III, 6, 7. ápah should be read for apáh. (In I, 31, 8; 151, 4 Grassmann is wrong in assuming a neutral stem apás- 'die Arbeit.') To me Ludwig's conjecture upási (in the lap of the sisters, i.e. of the waters) seems excellent. Upási occurs in V, 43, 7; X, 27, 13 in the meaning of upásthe. Thus upási svásrīnām would be the same as apām upásthe; comp. I, 144, 2; VI, 8, 4; IX, 86, 25; X, 45, 3; 46, 1. 2, &c.—Comp. below, verse 11, note 4.

Verse 4.

Note 1. Of course the seven wives are the rivers or waters.

Note 2. I cannot adopt Prof. Weber's conjecture asvāh (Altiranische Sternnamen, 10). His translation is: 'Die Götter liefen zu dem wundersamen Agni bei seiner Geburt (neugierig) hinzu, wie die jungen Mädchen zu einem neu-gebornen Kinde.'

Verse 5.

Note 1. For krátum punánáh, cf. III, 31, 16; VIII, 12, 11; 13, 1; 53, 6.

Note 2. I take pári as belonging to vásānah; sókih and āyuh are objects. Comp. X, 16, 5. āyuh vásānah; X, 53, 3. sáh āyuh á agāt surabhíh vásānah.

Verse 6.

Note 1. The number of the seven sounds (comp. Sten Konow, Das Sāmavidhāna-brāhmaṇa, p. 33, note 3) seems to be connected with the seven Rishis, see IX, 103, 3. vānīh rīshinām saptá (comp. IX, 62, 17). The seven sounds seem to be identified with the seven rivers also in III, 7, 1 (see below). Comp. Bergaigne, Religion Védique, II, 132; H. O., Religion des Veda, 117, note 1.

Verse 7.

Note 1. Heaven and Earth.

Verse 9.

Note 1. Comp. Bergaigne, Religion Védique, II, 99.

Note 2. See volume xxxii, 441 seq. (I, 2, 3, note 1).

Note 3. Here I believe we have an anacoluthon. The poet seems to have intended to say, 'Him who walked . . . the daughters of Heaven saw.'—Prof. Max Müller translates this hemistich: 'He found him (the father) moving along with dear friends, with the young maidens of Heaven—he was not hidden.'

Note 4. Agni was hidden to the gods but not to the waters.

Verse 10.

Note 1. The verse X, 3, 2, though very obscure, seems to contain a similar idea. Should the meaning be that Agni bears in his womb the Dawn, the daughter of Heaven?

Note 2. The waters.

Note 3. This phrase, which I have translated as literally as possible, is very obscure. The two wives seem to be wives of Agni. Are they Night and Dawn (the two sabardúghe, III, 55, 12?), whose designation as 'belonging to men' seems not to be impossible? Or the two kindling-sticks (comp. V, 47, 5)? Or the two Darvis (V, 6, 9)?

Verse 11.

Note 1. Comp. V, 42, 17. uraú deváh anibádhé syâma.

Note 2. This is feminine.

Note 3. The phrase yasásh sám hí pûrvîh occurs also X, 46, 10. It may have been, as Geldner believes, a proverbial locution. But the verb which it is most natural to supply, seems to be gam (i, yâ), so that the meaning may have been: 'Many superior (wives) are wont to assemble,' i. e. where one such wife is, there will be many. This is applied here to the waters, in X, 46, 10 to such beings as íshah, ûtáyah or the like. That yasás may be meant for the waters is shown by VII, 36, 6, where the yasásh vâvasánáh, mentioned by the side of Sarasvatî, evidently are the waters.—It should be observed that several expressions of this hymn have been made use of by the author of X, 46.

Note 4. Or rather 'in the lap' (upási). Comp. above, verse 3, note 3.

Verse 12.

Note 1. With regard to akráh I adopt the translation proposed by Geldner (Ved. Studien, I, 168).—On the accent of mahñâm, see Lanman, p. 398.

Note 2. This seems to be the human worshipper. I cannot follow Prof. von Roth, Zeitschrift der D. Morg. Gesellschaft, XLVIII, 118, who explains sûnáve as a corrupt third person of the verb su.

Note 3. See above, I, 44, 3, note 1.

Note 4. The dawns.

Note 5. Comp. above, I, 36, 1, note 2.

Verse 13.

Note 1. Vánâ : the wood considered as a wife.

Verse 14.

Note 1. See verse 12, note 3.

Verse 18.

Note 1. The text has vidáthâni.

Verse 19.

Note 1. Comp. Kuhn, Kuhn's Zeitschrift, I, p. 445.

Verse 23.

Note 1. Íām, which more especially means the nourishing substance of the cow. Comp. H. O., Religion des Veda, 72, 326.—Prof. Max Müller translates: 'Procure to him who implores thee, O Agni, exuberant land for ever, rich in cows.'

MANDALA III, HYMN 2.

ASHTAKA II, ADHYÂYA 8, VARGA 17-19.

TO AGNI VAISVÂNARA.

1. For Vaisvânara, the increaser of Rita, for Agni we produce¹ a *Dhishanzâ*² like purified ghee. And verily³ by their prayer the invoking men (accomplish) him, the Hotri, as the axe accomplishes a chariot.

2. By his birth he has given splendour to both worlds (Heaven and Earth). He became the praiseworthy son of his parents, Agni, the carrier of oblations, never ageing, with satisfied mind, undecivable, the guest of men, rich in light.

3. Through the power of their mind, within the sphere of their superior strength the gods have procreated Agni by their thoughts. Desirous of winning the prize¹ I address Him who shines with his splendour, who is great in his light, as (one who desires to win the prize addresses his) race-horse.

4. Desirous of winning the choice, glorious, and praiseworthy prize (which is the gift) of the joy-giver, we choose the boon of the *Bhrigus*¹, the *Usig*², who has the mind of a sage, Agni, who reigns with his heavenly light.

5. Men, having spread the sacrificial grass, holding the sacrificial ladle, have placed here in front (as Purohita), for the sake of (the divine) blessing, Agni renowned for strength, with great splendour, united with all the gods, the Rudra of sacrifices¹, who accomplishes the oblations of active (worshippers).

6. O (Agni) whose flame is purifying, around thy dwelling, O Hotri, the men who at the sacrifices have spread the sacrificial grass, O Agni, seeking (how to do) honour (to thee), and (desiring) thy friendship, surround thee (reverentially);—bestow thou wealth on them!

7. He has filled the two worlds (Heaven and Earth) and the great Sun, when the active ones (i.e. the priests) held him fast who had been born. He the sage is led round for the performance of worship, like a racer for the winning of the prize¹, with satisfied mind.

8. Adore ye him, the giver of offerings, the best performer of worship; honour ye him the domestic Gâtavedas. Agni, the charioteer of the mighty Rita, he who dwells among manifold tribes, has become the Purohita of the gods.

9. The immortal Usigs have purified three logs for the vigorous¹ Agni² who wanders round the earth³: of these they have placed one among the mortals for their enjoyment; two have passed into the sister world⁴.

10. The food offered by men has sharpened him, the sage of the tribes, the lord of the tribes, as an axe. Busily he goes to the heights and to the depths. He has held fast the germ in these worlds.

11. He the generator, the strong one, stirs in the resplendent bellies like a roaring lion, Vaisvânara with his broad stream of light, the immortal, distributing goods and treasures to his worshipper.

12. Vaisvânara has mounted the firmament, the back of heaven, as of old, glorified by those who are rich in good thoughts. He, creating wealth for the creatures as of old, goes watchful round the common course.

13. The righteous, worshipful priest deserving of praise, the dweller in heaven¹ whom Mâtariśvan has established (on earth): him we approach whose way is bright and hair golden, the resplendent Agni, for the sake of ever new welfare.

14. Like the flaming one (the sun?) on his way, the quick one, of sun-like aspect, the banner of heaven, who dwells in light, who wakes at dawn—Agni the head of heaven, the unrepressed, him we approach with adoration, the strong one mightily.

15. The joy-giving, bright Hotṛi, in whom is no falsehood, the domestic, praiseworthy dweller among all tribes, like a splendid chariot, wonderful to behold, established by Manus: him we constantly approach for the sake of wealth.

NOTES.

The same R̥ishi. The metre is Gagati.—Verse 7=VS. XXXIII, 75. Verse 9 = MS. I, 3, 35.

Verse 1.

Note 1. Literally, 'we generate.'

Note 2. On the meaning of this word, which I may be allowed to leave in its Sanskrit form, I refer to I, 96, 1, note 2.

Note 3. Literally, 'doubly.' Comp. below, III, 17, 5, note 1.

Verse 3.

Note 1. Vāgam sanishyán refers to the worshipper who desires to obtain vāga (quick strength, and the booty or prize obtained by it), and in the comparison, to the owner of a race-horse who desires to win the race.

Verse 4.

Note 1. Comp. I, 60, 1 (see above).

Note 2. Comp. Bergaigne, Religion Védique, I, 57 seq.

Verse 5.

Note 1. Comp. von Bradke, Dyâus Asura, p. 54.

Verse 7.

Note 1. Again, as in verse 3, vāgasātaye means, with reference to the race, 'for the winning of the prize,' and with reference to sacrifice, 'for the obtainment of quick strength, of booty, &c.'

Verse 9.

Note 1. See above, I, 36, 1, note 2.

Note 2. Agni is stated here to have one terrestrial and two celestial forms: the fire belonging to men, and, it seems, sun and lightning. Comp. M. M., Physical Religion, 229; Bergaigne, Religion Védique, I, 22. With regard to the three forms of Agni, compare also H. O., Religion des Veda, 106 seq.

Note 3. On párigman, comp. above, I, 79, 3, note 2.

Note 4. Into the celestial world.

Verse 13.

Note 1. I read divikshayám (Bergaigne, Rel. Védique, I, 55, note). The blunder has been caused by X, 63, 5. dadhiré diví ksháyam.

MANDALA III, HYMN 3.

ASHTAKA II, ADHYÂYA 8, VARGA 20-21.

TO AGNI VAISVÂNARA.

1. They have worshipped Vaisvânara with his broad stream of light with prayers¹ and treasures in order that he may walk on firm ground. For immortal Agni honours the gods, and from of old he has not violated the laws.

2. The wonderful messenger goes between the two worlds (heaven and earth), the Hotri who has sat down, the Purohita of Manus. He takes care of his wide dwelling day by day, Agni who, incited by the gods, gives wealth for our prayers.

3. The priests have exalted with their thoughts Agni, the banner of sacrifices, the achiever of sacrifice¹. From him in whom they have put together their (sacrificial) works and their prayers, the sacrificer desires blessings.

4. The father of sacrifices, the miraculous lord of those who know prayers (?)¹, Agni, is the measure and rule² of the sacrificers; he has entered the two manifold-shaped worlds; the sage beloved by many people is glorified in his foundations.

5. The gods have established here in great beauty Agni the bright with his bright chariot, whose every law is golden¹, Vaisvânara who dwells in the waters, who finds the sun, the diver, the swift one covered with strength, the quick one.

6. Agni, spreading out with his thought the manifold-adorned sacrifice, together with the gods and with the people of Manus, goes as a charioteer to and fro with (gods and men) who accomplish the sacrifice, the quick, domestic (god), the dispeller of curses.

7. Agni, be wakeful¹ in our life which may be blessed with offspring; swell with sap; shine upon us (plenty of) food. Stir up vigour and the great ones, O watchful (god). Thou art the Usig (or willing one) of the gods, the good-minded (lord) of prayers.

8. The lord of the tribe, the vigorous¹ guest, the guider of prayers, the Usig (or willing one) of those who invoke him, Gâtavedas, the light of worship—him men constantly praise with adoration, with solicitations for their welfare.

9. The resplendent, joyous god, Agni on his chariot, has with his might encompassed the dwellings. May we honour in our house with beautiful prayers¹ his commands who is rich in manifold prosperity.

10. O Vaisvânara, I love thy statutes by which thou hast found the sun, O far-seeing one. When born thou hast filled the worlds, heaven and earth; Agni, thou encompassed all these (beings) by thyself.

11. For Vaisvânara's wonderful deeds he the sage alone has by his great skill mightily¹ let loose (his powers?). Agni has been born exalting both his parents, Heaven and Earth, rich in seed.

NOTES.

The same Rîshi and metre.—Verse 10 = MS. IV, 11, 1.
Verse 11 = TS. I, 5, 11, 1.

Verse 1.

Note 1. A meaning like 'prayer' seems to recommend itself for most of the passages in which the substantive víp occurs, for instance, V, 68, 1. prá vah mitráya gâyata várunâya vipá girá; IX, 22, 3. eté pûtáh vipaskítah sómâsah . . . vipá ví ânasuh dhíyah; IX, 65, 12. ayá kittáh vipá anáyâ hárih pavasva dhárayâ; III, 10, 5 (see below), &c. As the verb víp means 'to be in trembling agitation,' the same word as a substantive may designate enthusiastic thoughts or prayers. Comp. vépate matí, IX, 71, 3; X, 11, 6, and the nouns vípra, vipaskít, vipodhá. We need not enter here upon the question, whether some concrete trembling or shaking objects also were designated as vípah, and whether Bergaigne (Religion Védique, I, p. vii) is right in taking the víp áyah-agrá, with which Trita killed the boar (X, 99, 6), as a 'prière à pointe de fer' (comp. Macdonell, Journ. R. Asiatic Society, 1893, p. 431; 1895, p. 185).—In our verse vípah may be either nominative or accusative. I have translated it as an accusative; in the case of the nominative the translation would be: 'The prayers have worshipped Vaisvânara with treasures.'

Verse 3.

Note 1. The text has vidáthasya.

Verse 4.

Note 1. Ásurah vipah-kítâm. On the meaning of ásura, which implies the possession of secret, supernatural power, see H. O., Religion des Veda, 162 seq.—Comp. von Bradke, Dyâus Asura, pp. 64–65.

Note 2. 'Richtschnur und Weg der Opferer,' Pischel, Vedische Studien, I, 306.

Verse 5.

Note 1. Literally, 'whose rules are yellow.' The meaning is that Agni's whole sphere of activity bears the golden yellow colour. Sâyana gives the interesting remark 'haritvaṭam iti sâkhântaram,' but no doubt hârivratam is right.

Verse 7.

Note 1. Comp. Neisser, Bezzenberger's Beiträge, XIII, 297.

Verse 8.

Note 1. Comp. I, 36, 1, note 2.

Verse 9.

Note 1. Comp. II, 4, 1, note 1.

Verse 11.

Note 1. Prof. Max Müller proposes to translate, 'has sent forth his great song,' and observes, 'Might not *br̥i*hat be like *br̥i*hat sâma, a name of a hymn?'

MANDALA III, HYMN 4.

ASHTAKA II, ADHYÂYA 8, VARGA 22-23.

ÂPRÎ HYMN.

1. Log by log¹ be kind towards us. Flash by flash grant us thy, the Vasu's, favour². Bring hither, O god, the gods that we may sacrifice. Sacrifice, O Agni, as a kind friend to thy friends.

2. Thou whom the gods, Varuna, Mitra, Agni, thrice every day bring hither by sacrifice day by day, Tanûnapât, make this our sacrifice honey-sweet, having its abode in ghee¹, (this sacrifice) which worships (the gods).

3. (Our adoring) thought rich in all boons goes forward for worshipping as the first the Hotri of the sacred food (i/), for saluting the strong bull with adoration and homage. May he, the best sacrificer, incited (by our prayers) sacrifice to the gods¹.

4. Upwards your¹ course has been directed at the worship; upwards (your) flames² are gone; ready (for receiving you) is the air³. Or the Hotri has sat down at heaven's navel. We spread out the sacrificial grass which receives the gods.

5¹. Choosing in their mind the sevenfold work of the Hotris², enlivening everything (the gods) came hither in the right way. (The divine doors³) with men as their ornaments⁴, born at the sacrifices⁵, have come hither and thither to this sacrifice, many of them.

6. Hither (shall come) the two Dawns¹, the neighbourly (goddesses) of glorious appearance².

Of different forms, they both smile. (They shall come) that Mitra and Varuṇa may be satisfied with us, and Indra accompanied by the Maruts with their powers³.

7. I catch hold of the two divine Hotṛis first. The seven strong ones¹ rejoice according to their wont. Teaching the right, they proclaim the right, the guardians of law, contemplating the law.

8¹. May Bhâratī, in concord with the Bhâratts, I/â with the gods, Agni with men, Sarāsvatī with all (beings) belonging to Sarāsvatī (come) hither; may the three goddesses sit down on this sacrificial grass.

9. O divine Tvashṭrī, grant us and send forth this our seed which is to thrive: (the seed) from which a manly son is born able and skilful, who sets to work the press-stones, loving the gods.

10. O tree¹, send (the offering) forth to the gods. May Agni the slaughterer make the offering ready. May the same, the very true Hotṛī, sacrifice according as he knows the generations of the gods.

11. Agni, being kindled, come hither, on one chariot with Indra, with the quick gods. May Aditi, the mother of noble sons, sit down on our sacrificial grass. With Svâhâ may the immortal gods rejoice.

NOTES.

The same Rishi. Metre, Trishṭubh.—Verse 9 = TS. III, 1, 11, 1; MS. IV, 13, 10. Verse 10 = VS. XXVII, 21; TS. IV, 1, 8, 3; MS. II, 12, 6.

Verse 1.

Note 1. Agni is invoked as personified in each log of fuel which is put on the sacrificial fire.

Note 2. Comp. VII, 39, 1. sumatīm vásvaḥ.

Verse 2.

Note 1. Comp. II, 3, 11. ghṛitām asya yónih.

Verse 3.

Note 1. Comp. X, 110, 3. sáḥ enân yakshi ishitáḥ yágyân (cf. also X, 110, 9).

Verse 4.

Note 1. The text has the dual vâm. But who are the two beings addressed? According to Sáyana, Agni and the Barhis, which does not seem very probable. The structure of the phrase gives the impression—though this impression is by no means certain—that vâm, which belongs to gātu, is to be supplied to sokīmshi also. If we are right in this supposition, are not the two beings in question the two first of the three sacred fires, the Āhavanīya and Gārhapatya? These two fires are frequently spoken of in the ritual texts as of a dyad, with the omission of the third fire.—Prof. Max Müller proposes to change vâm into vā. According to him the meaning may be: Either the road has been made upward, i. e. the flames have gone upward to the sky, or Agni has sat down at heaven's navel.

Note 2. Comp. VII, 43, 2. ūrdhvā sokīmshi devayūni asthuḥ.

Note 3. Possibly the words ūrdhvā sokīmshi prāsthita rāgāmsi may form one clause, 'upwards (your) flames are gone towards the sky.' M. M.

Verse 5.

Note 1. On this verse, comp. Pischel, Vedische Studien, II, 115 seq.

Note 2. On the seven priests of the ancient Soma sacrifice, comp. H. O., Religion des Veda, 383 seq.

Note 3. That this subject is to be supplied, is shown by the regular composition of the Âprî hymns. It is confirmed by the word pûrvîh, which is evidently an epithet of the divine doors; comp. I, 188, 5; VII, 2, 5.

Note 4. 'In human form.' M. M.

Note 5. The text has vidátheshu.

Verse 6.

Note 1. I. e. Night and Dawn.

Note 2. Comp. above, I, 142, 7.

Note 3. Comp. M. M., vol. xxxii, p. 196 seq.

Verse 7.

Note 1. Comp. above, I, 127, 5, note 1. Pischel (Vedische Studien, I, 96) may be right in taking the seven prîkshâsa as the Ângiras, the saptá víprâh.

Verse 8.

Note 1. The verses 8-11 are repeated in VII, 2, 8-11.

Verse 10.

Note 1. The tree is the sacrificial post (yûpa).

MANDALA III, HYMN 5.

ASHTAKA II, ADHYĀYA 8, VARGA 24-25.

1. Shining Agni has awoke over against the Dawns, the priest who traces the footsteps of the sages¹. With his broad stream of light kindled by the pious, the carrier (of the gods) has opened the two doors of darkness.

2. Agni has grown strong by praises, by the speeches of the praisers, by hymns, the adorable one. Loving many aspects of Rīta the messenger has shone up at the bursting forth of the Dawn.

3. Agni has been established among the tribes of men, the son of the waters, *Mitra*¹, acting in the right way. The delightful, worshipful one has reached the top; the priest has become one who should be invoked by prayers.

4. Agni becomes *Mitra*¹, when he has been kindled; he the Hotri (Agni becomes) Mitra; he, Gâtavedas, (becomes) Varuṇa. The quick Adhvaryu, the domestic (god, Agni, becomes) Mitra, the Mitra (i.e. friend or ally) of the rivers and of the mountains.

5. He observes the deceiver's dear summit¹, the footstep of the bird¹; the vigorous one² observes the course of the Sun. Agni observes at his (?) navel the seven-headed (song?)³; tall (Agni) observes the enjoyment of the gods.

6. The *Ribhu*¹ has created for himself a good name worthy of being magnified, he, the god who knows all laws. The skin of the herbs², the bird's footstep³ rich in ghee: Agni watches (all) that, never failing.

7. Agni has approached the place¹ rich in ghee (the altar), with broad passages, (the place) longing (for him), longing (himself). He the resplendent, bright, tall purifier has made his two parents² new again and again.

8. As soon as born he has grown by the grass¹, when the sprouting (grass-)blades strengthen him with ghee. Like waters beautiful on their precipitous path, Agni, being in the lap of his parents, has escaped into wide space.

9. Receiving praise the vigorous one¹ has shone forth with his fuel, on heaven's summit, on the earth's navel. May Agni worthy of being magnified, (being) Mitra and Mâtarisvan, the messenger, carry hither the gods that they may receive our sacrifice.

10. The tall one has, by (receiving) fuel, upheld the firmament, Agni, becoming the highest of lights, when Mâtarisvan for the sake of the Bhṛīgu¹ kindled the carrier of oblations, (Agni) who dwelt in secret.

11 = III, 1, 23.

NOTES.

The same Rīshi and metre.—No verse occurs in the other Samhitās.

Verse 1.

Note 1. On pada-vī, comp. Pischel, Vedische Studien, I, 299.

Verse 3.

Note 1. Mitra has here and in verse 4 two meanings: it is the name of the god Mitra, with whom Agni is identified (Bergaigne, Religion Védique, III, 134 seq.), and it means also 'friend' or 'ally' (comp. H. O., Religion des Veda, 186, note 1). See von Bradke, Dyāus Asura, p. 13.

Verse 4.

Note 1. See verse 3, note 1.

Verse 5.

Note 1. All this is very enigmatical. In the parallel passage, IV, 5, 8, we have, instead of ripáh ágram, the reading rupáh ágram, which is confirmed by verse 7 of the same hymn (ágre rupáh) and by X, 13, 3 (páñka padáni rupáh ánu aroham); in support of the reading ripáh, on the other side, the verse, X, 79, 3 (ripáh upásthe antáh), may be quoted. The meaning of rúp is unknown; rip means 'deceit' and 'deceiver:' but what is the summit of the deceiver? Bergaigne (Religion Védique, II, 77 seq.) has tried to solve the riddle, but it is really hopeless.—The meaning of the following words, padám véh, is not quite so obscure; there is at least some probability that the bird is Agni himself (cf. below, III, 7, 7), or possibly the sun. The latter explanation is advocated by Prof. Max Müller, who writes: 'May it not be a description of sunrise? priyam ripah agram I do not understand; but padam veh is the place of the bird, as in I, 130, 3. veh na garbham, the nest of the bird or of the sun. This nest is covered by a stone, is in fact the vraga, which has to be opened to let out the light of day. It is also the yoni or the altar. Ripah agram may possibly be the summit of the Pani or of Vritra, X, 79, 3.'

Note 2. See above, I, 36, 1, note 2.

Note 3. Saptá-sirshan ('seven-headed') occurs again in two other passages of the Rig-veda (VIII, 51, 4, and X, 67, 1); in both it is an epithet of words which signify 'hymn' or 'prayer' (arká, dhî). Possibly a similar word should be supplied here. But why are the prayers called 'seven-headed?' Does this refer to unknown technicalities of the Vedic liturgy? Does it stand in connection with the seven tones of the scale, with the expression saptá dhítayah, with the number of the seven Hotris? 'Celui qui a sept têtes est sans doute un personnage équivalent à lui seul au groupe des sept prêtres,' says Bergaigne (II, 145), which is very ingenious, but should not be given as a doubtless fact. —Prof. Max Müller observes that saptasīrshan may be, like saptāsya, the vraga of Pāzi, opened by Agni, IV, 51, 4, and that Bṛihaspati is called saptāsya, IV, 50, 4, and saptagu, X, 47, 6.

Verse 6.

Note 1. Agni is here called Rībhū in his quality as a skilful artisan. See Bergaigne, Religion Védique, II, 408.

Note 2. There seems to be no doubt that sasá (comp. sasyá) means 'herb' or possibly 'grain' in X, 79, 3; the text there has sasám ná pakvám; comp. I, 66, 2. yávaḥ ná pakváḥ. The same meaning is quite admissible in I, 51, 3; V, 21, 4; VIII, 72, 3; though these passages are too uncertain for deciding anything. I cannot find any reason for believing that we have here and in IV, 5, 7; 7, 7 (see below), another word derived from the root sas, and meaning 'the sleeper.' At all events I neither pretend to know what mysteries are hidden under the 'skin of the herbs,' nor what stories may have happened to the 'peau du dormeur' (Bergaigne, II, 78 seq.).

Note 3. See verse 5, note 1.

Verse 7.

Note 1. Yónim, literally 'womb.'

Note 2. Probably Heaven and Earth.

Verse 8.

Note 1. Prof. Max Müller refers this to the grass of the barhis, or the tender blades in which the spark is caught and kept alive by ghee.

Verse 9.

Note 1. Comp. above, I, 36, 1, note 2.

Verse 10.

Note 1. I have adopted, though I do not believe it certain, Grassmann's opinion on the meaning of pári in this connection. Comp. H. O., Religion des Veda, 123, note 4.

MANDALA III, HYMN 6.

ASHTAKA II, ADHYĀYA 8, VARGA 26-27.

1. Bring forward, ye pious singers, stirred in your thoughts¹, (the ladle) which is turned towards the gods. Carrying (the sacrificial butter) from left to right² it turns eastward, rich in strength, bringing the offering to Agni, full of ghee.

2. When born thou hast filled the two worlds, nay thou hast even exceeded them, O friend of sacrifices¹. May, O Agni, thy seven-tongued horses² move along, by the greatness of heaven and earth³.

3. Heaven and Earth the worshipful¹ establish thee as Hotri for the house, whenever the pious human tribes offering food magnify the bright light.

4. (Thou art) seated, the great one, in a firm place¹, between the two mighty Heavens², thou who art longed for—(between) the two united³ never-ageing, inviolable wives, the two juice-yielding milch-cows⁴ of the far-reigning one⁵.

5. Thy, the great (god's) laws, O Agni, are great. Through the power of thy mind thou hast spread out the two worlds. Thou hast become a messenger at thy birth, thou, O bull, the leader of the tribes.

6. Or bind to the pole by means of thy (art of) harnessing the two long-maned, red (horses) of Rīta, that swim in ghee¹, and carry hither, O god, all gods; perform splendid worship, O Gâtavedas!

7¹. Even from heaven thy shining lights have shone; thy splendour follows many resplendent dawns, when the gods, O Agni, praised the cheerful Hotri's work² who eagerly burns in the forests³.

8. Whether it be the gods who rejoice in the wide air, or those who dwell in the heavenly light, or those who are helpful¹, ready to hear our call, and worshipful; or whether the horses of thy chariot, O Agni, have turned themselves hither—

9. Come hither with them, O Agni, on one chariot or on many chariots, for thy horses are powerful. Bring hither, after thy nature, the thirty and the three gods with their wives, and rejoice (in the Soma).

10. He is the Hotri whose sacrifice even the two wide worlds salute over and over again for the sake of prosperity. Turned to the east¹, the two well-established² (goddesses, Heaven and Earth), the righteous, true ones stand as at the sacrifice³ of (Agni) the right-born.

11 = III, 1, 23.

NOTES.

The same Rishi and metre.—Verse 1 = TB. II, 8, 2, 5; MS. IV, 14, 3. Verse 9 = AV. XX, 13, 4.

Verse 1.

Note 1. The translation of mananā is conjectural, and based only on the etymology. The passage āt it rāḡānam manānāḥ agrībhūnata, IX, 70, 3, does not help us much. 'Does not X, 47, 7. stómāḥ hṛdisprīśaḥ mānasā vakyā-mānāḥ, indicate the original reading, mānasā vakyāmānām?' M. M.

Note 2. The srúkaḥ are called dakshināvrītaḥ, I, 144, 1. By the word dakshināvāt the poet probably intended to designate the ladle also as procuring a Dakshinā (sacrificial fee) to the priest.

Verse 2.

Note 1. On práyagyu, see M. M., vol. xxxii, p. 335, and Pischel, Ved. Studien, I, 98.

Note 2. The flames of Agni.

Note 3. Comp. below, 7, 10. The meaning seems to be: by thy (Agni's) greatness which is equal to that of Heaven and Earth.

Verse 3.

Note 1. I refer yagñíyāsaḥ, though it is a plural, to Heaven and Earth. Comp. Delbrück, Altindische Syntax, 103.

Verse 4.

Note 1. The Padapāṭha has dhruváḥ. I think it should be dhruvé, comp. II, 41, 5. dhruvé sádasi úttame . . . āsāte; IX, 40, 2. dhruvé sádasi sīdati.

Note 2. I.e. Heaven and Earth.

Note 3. Āskra seems derived from ā-saḥ (Joh. Schmidt, Kuhn's Zeitschrift, XXV, 71).

Note 4. Or 'the two milch-cows which instantly give milk,' if sabar- is to be connected with the Greek ἄφαρ; comp. Bartholomae, Bezenberger's Beiträge, XV, 17.

Note 5. Vishṇu is not the only god who is called uru-gâyá, and there is no reason therefore why the epithet should not be referred here to Agni.

Verse 6.

Note 1. Comp. Lanman, Noun-Inflection, pp. 402, 413.—See below, IV, 2, 3.

Verse 7.

Note 1. See Geldner, Vedische Studien, I, 114 seq.

Note 2. Should the accent be ápāḥ? Comp. III, 1, 3, note 3.

Note 3. It is very probable that usádhak (comp. III, 34, 3; VII, 7, 2) is an epithet of Agni. We should expect the genitive; usádhak, which violates the construction, seems to stand metri causa. Or is usádhak an accusative singular neuter, so that the literal translation would be: 'When the gods praised the work, burning in the forests, of the Hotri'?

Verse 8.

Note 1. On ŕma, comp. Pischel, Vedische Studien, I, 223.

Verse 10.

Note 1. Comp. above, II, 2, 7.

Note 2. See Windisch in the Festgruss an Boehtlingk, p. 114.

Note 3. There is one syllable above the number; the metre and meaning would be all right if we were to read adhvaré (for adhvaréva): '(the two goddesses) stand at the sacrifice,' &c. Prof. Max Müller explains: 'Adhvarā-iva, like two sacrifices, like two sacrificial altars, barhis.'

MANDALA III, HYMN 7.

ASHTAKA III, ADHYĀYA 1, VARGA 1-2.

1. They who have risen out of the drink of the white-backed one, have entered the two parents, the seven sounds. The (all-)encompassing parents come together; they go forth to aspire after long life¹.

2. The milch-cows dwelling in heaven¹ are the mares of the manly one. He has bestridden the goddesses who carry the sweet (food)². Thee who livest in peace in the abode of Rita, the one cow³ circumambulates, making her way.

3. He has mounted the (mares)¹ that became well-manageable, the wise lord, the finder of riches. He with the dark blue back, with many faces, has made them depart from the drink of the brush-wood².

4. Giving mighty vigour to the never-ageing son of *Tvashtri*¹, the streams² carry Him the firmly fixed one. Flashing in his abode with his limbs he has entered upon the two worlds as if they were one.

5. They know friendship towards the manly, the red one, and they delight in the command of ruddy (Agni), (the gods) shining from heaven, resplendent with bright shine, to whose host I/Â belongs, the mighty praise.

6. And finding it out by following the noise they brought to the great one's great parents a song of praise, when the bull about nightfall (?) has grown strong according to the singer's own law¹.

7. With the five Adhvaryus the seven priests watch the beloved footstep which the bird has made¹. Turned forwards the never-ageing bulls² rejoice: for they, being gods, have followed the laws of the gods.

8 = III, 4, 7.

9. The many (mares) are full of desire for the mighty stallion. For the manly, bright one, the reins easily direct (the horses)¹. Divine Hotri! Thou who art a great joy-giver and wise, bring hither the great gods and the two worlds².

10. The dawns, O wealth-giver, the mighty sacrificers¹, well spoken and bright have shone with wealth. And by the earth's greatness², O Agni, forgive us even committed sin³, that we may be great.

11 = III, 1, 23.

NOTES.

The same Rishi and metre.—No verse of this hymn occurs in the other Samhitās.

Verse 1.

Note 1. On the meaning of this difficult verse conjectures only can be given. The white-backed one may be Agni. If this is right, 'they who have risen out of Agni's drink,' may be Agni's rays or flames (ye rasmayah . . . prakarshenodgakkhanti, Sâyana); these flames enter upon the two mothers, i.e. Heaven and Earth, and upon the seven sounds, the sacrificial songs which are identified with the terrestrial and celestial seven rivers (comp. above, III, 1, 6). All this rests on the supposition that the traditional text is correct. Now Ludwig remarks with reference to the pronoun yé: 'Warscheinlicher ist, dass wir hier eine archaistische anwendung der form auf e für fem. vor uns haben,' and Griffith says that yé is 'apparently used for the feminine.' I do not believe in this possibility, but for yé (yá) the true reading may be yā(h). In this case the seven vānis would be subject: 'They who have risen out of the drink of the white-backed one, the seven sounds have entered the two parents.' The meaning of this may be: The sacrificial songs, rising as it were out of the offering made to Agni, and in the same way the streams of water which, in the shape of clouds of smoke rise out of the offering (comp. I, 164, 51), have gone to Heaven and Earth.

That the parents in the third Pāda are again Heaven and Earth is shown by X, 65, 8. parikshítā pitárā . . . dyāvāpr̥ithivī. It may be observed that the author of X, 65 (see especially the verses 6-8) evidently imitated the expressions of the hymn, III, 7. 'The coming together of Heaven and Earth marks the beginning of the day and of the year.' M. M.

Verse 2.

Note 1. On divákshas, comp. Joh. Schmidt, Pluralbildungen der Neutra, 417 seq.

Note 2. The milch-cows, mares, or goddesses seem to be the celestial waters or Dawns.

Note 3. Comp. X, 65, 6, quoted at the end of this note. Is the cow (Vāh, according to Sāyana) the Dawn which daily returns in her due way? Or the butter offered to Agni? In our verse and in the parallel passage, X, 65, 6, the vartanī of the cow is mentioned; it may be observed that the vartanī of Ushas is referred to in X, 172, 1. 4. And Ushas is represented in I, 123, 9 as coming to the nishkr̥itā: comp. X, 65, 6. yā gaúh vartanīm pari-éti nishkr̥itām.

Verse 3.

Note 1. See verse 2.

Note 2. The meaning may possibly be the following. The Waters dwell in the plants as their sap (comp. H. O., Religion des Veda, 113). Agni, when burning or drinking as it were, the brushwood, destroys this dwelling of the Waters; he makes the Waters depart from the wood.

Verse 4.

Note 1. On Agni as the son of Tvashtri, see Hillebrandt, Vedische Mythologie, I, 522 seq.

Note 2. 'Could vahátaḥ be the suyámāḥ of verse 3?' M. M.

Verse 6.

Note 1. Or, 'when the singer's bull . . . has grown strong according to his own law'? The bull, of course, is Agni.

Verse 7.

Note 1. See above, 5, 5. 6.

Note 2. The flames of Agni?

Verse 9.

Note 1. Rasmáyaḥ, 'the reins,' at the same time means 'the rays' (of Agni). Suyámāḥ being an apposition to rasmáyaḥ, one is tempted to derive it from the root yam, 'to direct,' but it may contain the word yāma, 'the way,' and mean 'having a good way.'—It is difficult to believe that rasmáyaḥ suyámāḥ is a second subject of vrishâyánte, in which case the translation would be: 'The many (mares) are desirous of the mighty stallion, the . . . reins (or rays) of the manly, bright one.'

Note 2. 'Bring hither to the two worlds the great gods.' M. M.

Verse 10.

Note 1. On prīkshá-prayagaḥ, comp. M. M., vol. xxxii, p. 335; Pischel, Vedische Studien, I, 98.

Note 2. The meaning seems to be: By thy greatness which is equal to that of the earth.

Note 3. Comp. X, 63, 8. kṛitāt ákṛitāt énaśaḥ. See also I, 24, 9; VI, 51, 8.

MANDALA III, HYMN 8.

ASHTAKA III, ADHYĀYA 1, VARGA 3-4.

1. The worshippers of the gods anoint thee at the sacrifice, O lord of the forest¹, with heavenly honey². When standing upright bestow wealth (on us) here, or when abiding in this mother's lap³.

2. Situated in front of the kindled (fire), accepting our sacred spell which protects from old age and gives valiant offspring, driving away far from us lack of thoughts¹, rise up² for the sake of great prosperity.

3. Rise up, O lord of the forest, on the summit of the earth. Erected by skilful erection bestow splendour on (the worshipper) who fits out the sacrifice as a vehicle¹.

4. A well-clothed youth dressed has come hither. He becomes more excellent when born¹. Wise sages full of pious thoughts, longing for the gods in their mind, bring him forth.

5. He who has been born is born¹ in the auspiciousness of days, growing up in the assembly and at the sacrifice². Wise, active men purify him by pious thoughts; the priest approaching the gods raises his voice³.

6. You whom the worshippers of the gods have fastened down (in the earth), or whom the axe has fashioned, O lord of the forest: may those divine posts¹ standing (here) take care to bestow on us treasures with offspring.

7. (The posts) which have been hewn on the earth and fastened down, and to which the sacrificial ladles have been raised¹: may they, giving bliss to our fields², eagerly seek precious goods for us among the gods.

8. May the Âdityas, the Rudras, the Vasus, the good leaders, Heaven and Earth, the Earth¹ and the Air—may the gods unanimously bless this sacrifice; may they raise up the banner of the sacrifice (the Yûpa).

9. Like swans ranging themselves in rows, arraying themselves in brightness the sacrificial posts have come to us. Led up by the sages they go forward as gods to the abode of the gods.

10. Like horns of horned animals the sacrificial posts with their head-pieces¹ are seen on the earth. Hearing (us) in the emulating call of the invoking (priests) may they protect us in the racings of battles.

11. O lord of the forest, rise with a hundred branches; may we rise with a thousand branches (offspring)—thou whom this sharpened axe has led forward to great prosperity.

NOTES.

The same Rishi. The metre is Trishṭubh (verses 3 and 7 Anushṭubh).

This Sûkta is a collection of liturgical verses that refer to the erecting and anointing of the sacrificial post, and to the winding of a rope about it. See Aitareya Brâhmaṇa II, 2; Âsvalâyana Srautasûtra III, 1, 8 seq.; Sâṅkhâyana Srautasûtra V, 15, 2 seq.; Schwab, Das Altindische Thieropfer, 68 seq.; Bergaigne, Recherches sur l'Histoire de la Liturgie Védique, 16. On the ritual acts referring to the sacrificial post which seem to be connected with ancient tree-worship, comp. also H. O., Religion des Veda, 90 seq., 256.—Verses 1–5 = TB. III, 6, 1, 1, 3; MS. IV, 13, 1. Verse 3 = MS. I, 2, 11. Verse 4 = TĀ. I, 27, 2. Verse 10 = TB. II, 4, 7, 11. Verse 11 = TS. I, 3, 5, 1; VI, 3, 3, 3.

Verse 1.

Note 1. The tree of which the sacrificial post is made.

Note 2. The post is anointed with butter, see Schwab, l. c., 69. This butter is spoken of as honey also in the Yagus, which refers to this rite, 'May the god Savitri anoint thee with honey,' Taittirīya Saṃhitā I, 3, 6, 1.

Note 3. In the lap of the mother Earth.

Verse 2.

Note 1. Āmati has nothing to do with the verb am; it is the contrary of matī. See Rig-veda IV, 11, 6. āmatim . . . āmhaḥ . . . duḥmatīm; X, 33, 2, and such passages of the younger Vedic Saṃhitās as Vāg. Saṃh. XVII, 54 (āpa āmatim duḥmatīm bādhamânâḥ). The same is the opinion of Geldner (Ved. Studien, II, 184, note 4).

Note 2. The sacrificial post is addressed.

Verse 3.

Note 1. Comp. below, III, 24, 1.

Verse 4.

Note 1. The sacrificial post, round which a rope of grass (Schwab, Thieropfer, p. 49) is tied, is compared here with a well-dressed youth. This seems to contain an allusion to the Upanayana ceremony, at which the youth was invested with the sacred girdle, and which was considered as a second birth (comp. Pāda B: 'He becomes more excellent when born'). There is no doubt that this rite is as old and older than the Rig-veda; see H. O., Religion des Veda, 466 seq. It may be noted that several Grihya-sūtras prescribe the use of our verse at the Upanayana (Āśvalāyana I, 20, 9, &c.).

Verse 5.

Note 1. Does this expression refer again to the second birth (see the preceding note)?

Note 2. The text has *vidát*he.

Note 3. Comp. V, 76, 1. út víprānām devayā́h vā́kaḥ asthuḥ. The conjecture devayām easily suggests itself, but it is not necessary.

Verse 6.

Note 1. In the Rig-veda, sváru means the sacrificial post itself, not, as in the later ritual texts (Schwab, Thieropfer, pp. 11, 74), that splinter of the wood of the sacrificial post (yûpasakala), with regard to which Kâtyâyana (VI, 3, 17) prescribes: 'Yûpasakalam asyām (scil. rasanâyām) avagûhati.' 'He hides the splinter of the wood of the sacrificial post in the rope (tied round the post).'—See Weber, Indische Studien, IX, 222.

Verse 7.

Note 1. Comp. below, IV, 6, 3.

Note 2. Comp. VIII, 71, 12. kshaîtrâya sâdhase.

Verse 8.

Note 1. The Earth is mentioned twice, firstly together with the Heaven, in the compound Dyāvâ-Kshâmâ, and then separately as Prîthivî.

Verse 10.

Note 1. On the wooden head-piece of the sacrificial post (kashâla), see Schwab, Das Thieropfer, p. 9.

MANDALA III, HYMN 9.

ASHTAKA III, ADHYĀYA 1, VARGA 5-6.

1. We, thy friends¹, have chosen thee for our protection, (we) the mortals (thee) the god, the offspring of the Waters, the blessed one with fine splendour², who gloriously advances, the unmenaced one.

2. When thou, finding pleasure in the wood, hast gone to thy mothers, the Waters, that return of thine, Agni, (to this world) should not be slighted, when dwelling afar thou hast come hither.

3. High above (all) pungent sharpness thou hast grown up¹, and verily thou art kind-hearted. Some go forward here and there ; others sit around thee, in whose friendship thou abidest².

4. He who has passed beyond (all) failures, beyond all hindrances¹, the guileless, watchful ones² have found him as a lion (is found), when he had gone into the Waters ;

5. He who had run as it were by his own might, Agni, who thus dwelt in concealment—Him Mâtarisvan brought hither from afar, from the gods, when he had been produced by attrition (of the woods).

6. (And thus) the mortals have taken thee up, O carrier of sacrificial food towards the gods¹, because thou, O (god) belonging to Manus, protectest all sacrifices by the power of thy mind, O youngest one!

7¹. This is something glorious ; herein thy wonderful power shows itself even to the simple, that the cattle lie down round about thee when thou hast been kindled, O Agni, at the approach of darkness².

8. Make your offerings in (Agni), the best performer of worship, the sharp one who purifies with his flames¹. Serve ye obediently the god, the quick messenger, the agile, the old, the adorable.

9¹. Three hundred and three thousand gods and thirty and nine did service to Agni. They sprinkled him with ghee and spread out for him the sacrificial grass: then they made him sit down as a Hotri.

NOTES.

The same Rishi. The metre is Br̥hātī; the last verse is Trishṭubh.—Verse 1=SV. I, 62. Verse 2=SV. I, 53. Verse 9=VS. XXXIII, 7; TB. II, 7, 12, 2.

Verse 1.

Note 1. For this expression, compare I, 30, 7; VIII, 21, 2. 9.

Note 2. Comp. VIII, 19, 4. subhāgam sudīditim.

Verse 3.

Note 1. Comp. I, 81, 5. āti vísvam vavakshitha; 102, 8. āti idám vísvam bhúvanam vavakshitha.

Note 2. The different officiating priests seem to be alluded to.

Verse 4.

Note 1. Comp. I, 42, 7. āti nah saskátaḥ naya; VII, 97, 4. parshat nah áti saskátaḥ; Lanman, Noun-Inflection, 467.

Note 2. The gods who searched for Agni.

Verse 6.

Note 1. For devébhyaḥ havyaváhana, comp. X, 118, 5; 119, 13; 150, 1.

Verse 7.

Note 1. Comp. Prof. von Schroeder's translation of this verse, Kuhn's Zeitschrift, XXIX, 205.

Note 2. Regarding apisarvaré, comp. VIII, 1, 29; Geldner, Vedische Studien, II, 178. I cannot adopt the conclusions of Prof. Bloomfield, Contributions to the Interpretation of the Veda, Fifth Series, p. 36. 'Wild animals run away from the fire at night, tame animals are attracted by it.' M. M.

Verse 8.

Note 1. For this Pāda, comp. VIII, 43, 31; 102, 11; X, 21, 1.

Verse 9.

Note 1. This verse is identical with X, 52, 6.

MANDALA III, HYMN 10.

ASHṬAKA III, ADHYĀYA 1, VARGA 7-8.

1¹. Thee, O Agni, the highest king of human tribes, the god, thoughtful mortals kindle at their worship.

2. Thee, O Agni, the Ritvig, the Hotri, they magnify at the sacrifices. Shine as the guardian of Rita in thy own house¹.

3. He indeed who may worship thee, the Gâta-vedas, with fuel, acquires abundance in valiant men, O Agni; he will prosper.

4. May He, the banner of the sacrifices, Agni, come hither with the gods, anointed by the seven *Hotris*¹ for the sake of the man who offers sacrificial food.

5. Bring ye forward an ancient, mighty speech to Agni, the Hotri, who is like a worshipper bearing the lights of prayers¹.

6. May our prayers increase Agni, since he is born deserving of praises, the conspicuous one, for the sake of great strength and wealth.

7¹. May Agni, as the best sacrificer at the worship (of men), perform the sacrifice to the gods for the man devoted to the gods. As a joyous Hotri thou reignest (passing) beyond (all) failures.

8. Thus, O purifier, shine on us glorious abundance in heroes. Be the nearest (friend) to those who praise thee, for their welfare.

9. Thus the priests full of admiring praise, having awoke, kindle thee, the immortal carrier of sacrificial food, the increaser of strength.

NOTES.

The same Rīshi. The metre is Ushnih.—Verse 5 = SV. I, 98; TB. III, 2, 11, 1. Verse 7 = SV. I, 100.

Verse 1.

Note 1. The first Pāda is identical with VIII, 44, 19.

Verse 2.

Note 1. Comp. above, I, 1, 8.

Verse 4.

Note 1. The most ancient list of officiating priests at the Soma sacrifice contained seven priests. See H. O., Religion des Veda, 383 seq. Hence Agni is called saptáhotá, cf. III, 29, 14.

Verse 5.

Note 1. On vīp, see the note on III, 3, 1. As to the 'lights' of the vipas, comp. vākah gyótiḥ-agrāh, VII, 101, 1, the expression gyotiḥshoma—though this word is not known in the Rig-veda—and the materials collected by Bergaigne, Religion Védique, I, 285.

Verse 7.

Note 1. The second Pāda is identical with I, 15, 12.

MANDALA III, HYMN 11.

ASHTAKA III, ADHYĀYA 1, VARGA 9-10.

1. Agni is the Hotṛi, the Purohita of our worship, he who dwells among many tribes, He knows the sacrifice in due order.

2. He, the immortal carrier of oblations, the Usig¹, the messenger, with satisfied mind, Agni sets himself in motion ² (incited) by the thought (of praying men?).

3. Agni takes heed¹ (of us) by the thought (the prayer?), the banner of the sacrifice, the ancient one; for his purpose triumphs².

4. The gods have made Agni, the old-renowned son of strength, the Gâtavedas, their carrier (towards the sacrifice)¹.

5. Agni the undeceivable one who goes before the human tribes, he is the quick chariot¹, ever new.

6. Overcoming all attacks, He, the uninjured mind (power) of the gods, Agni, is most mightily renowned.

7. Through the vehicle¹ (which carries the gods) towards the delights (of sacrifice), the worshipping mortal attains the dwelling-place² of (Agni) whose flames are purifying.

8. May we, the priests, by our prayers obtain all the blissful gifts of Agni Gâtavedas.

9. Agni! May we win all the best things in (the trials of) strength. In thee the gods have established them¹.

NOTES.

The same Rishi. The metre is Gâyatrî.—Verse 2=VS. XXII, 16; TS. IV, 1, 11, 4; MS. IV, 10, 1. Verses 5, 7, 6=SV. II, 9c6-9o8. Verse 5=TB. II, 4, 8, 1.

Verse 2.

Note 1. Comp. Bergaigne, Religion Védique, I, 57 seq.

Note 2. On the intransitive use of rinvāti, comp. Gae-dicke, Der Accusativ im Veda, p. 53.

Verse 3.

Note 1. The meaning seems to be that Agni is intent on his purpose (ártham, Páda 3); comp. I, 10, 2. tát índrah ártham ketati.

Note 2. Comp. Neisser, Bezzenberger's Beiträge, XX, 42.

Verse 4.

Note 1. See the note on I, 127, 8.

Verse 5.

Note 1. On Agni considered as a chariot, see Bergaigne, Religion Védique, I, 144.

Verse 7.

Note 1. Comp. I, 127, 8, note 1.

Note 2. Comp. above, III, 2, 6.

Verse 9.

Note 1. I.e. all the best things (Páda 1); comp. VI, 5, 2. tvé vásūni . . . á írire yagñlyâsah.

MANDALA III, HYMN 12.

ASHTAKA III, ADHYĀYA 1, VARGA 11-12.

TO INDRA-AGNĪ.

1. Indra-Agnī, in consequence of our prayers come hither to the pressed (Soma), to the precious cloud¹. Drink of it incited by our thoughts (i.e. by our prayers).

2. Indra-Agnī, the brilliant¹ sacrifice of him who praises you goes forward together (with the Soma libations, the praises, &c.). Thus drink this pressed (Soma)!

3. By this stirring sacrifice I choose Indra and Agni who show themselves as sages¹; may they here satiate themselves with Soma.

4. I call the bounteous¹, the killers of foes², the united conquerors, unconquered, Indra-Agnī, the greatest winners of booty.

5. The praisers rich in hymns, knowing all the ways (of the sacrifice), laud you. Indra-Agnī, I choose the food (which you give).

6. Indra-Agnī, you have hurled down by one deed the ninety strongholds together of which the Dâsas were the lords.

7. Indra-Agnī, the thoughts (of the worshippers) go forward towards (you) from the work (of sacrifice) along the paths of Rita.

8. Indra and Agni, yours are powerful abodes and delights. You cross the waters: this is the deed which belongs to you¹.

9. Indra and Agni, you display the lights of heaven in your deeds of strength; that mighty deed of yours has been known far and wide.

NOTES.

The same Rishi and metre. The hymn is addressed to the couple Indra and Agni.—Verses 1–3=SV. II, 19–21. Verse 1=VS. VII, 31; TS. I, 4, 15, 1; MS. I, 3, 17. Verses 4–6=SV. II, 1052–1054. Verses 5–8=SV. II, 925–928. Verse 5=MS. IV, 11, 1. Verse 6=TS. I, 1, 14, 1; MS. IV, 10, 5. Verses 9, 7, 8=SV. II, 1044–1045. Verse 9=TS. IV, 2, 11, 1; 3, 13, 8; TB. III, 5, 7, 3; MS. IV, 10, 4; 11, 1.

Verse 1.

Note 1. ‘Cloud,’ of course, means that which comes from the cloud. In the Soma hymns of the ninth Mandala, the word nábhaḥ seems frequently to refer to the water with which the Soma is mixed (see IX, 69, 5; 71, 1. 3; 74, 4; 83, 5; 86, 14; 97, 21; Prof. Hillebrandt’s opinion on these passages is different, see his Vedische Mythologie, I, 212). Perhaps we should go too far in believing that in our verse the poet invited the gods to come and drink that water, but possibly the mixture of water and of the juice of the Soma plant descending from heaven and nourished by the heavenly waters represented itself to the poet’s mind as something coming from, and thus being identical with, the cloud.

Verse 2.

Note 1. On kétanaḥ, Prof. Max Müller remarks, ‘perhaps which appeals to you . . . so that they take note of it.’

Verse 3.

Note 1. There may be doubts about kavikkhádā. Prof. Max Müller remarks, ‘is it, wishing for sages?’ I think that my translation is recommended by X, 81, 1. prathamakkhát.

Verse 4.

Note 1. Comp. I, 169, 5. rāyaḥ torātamāḥ; VIII, 38, 2. torāsā rathayāvânâ . . . īndrāgnî, and Brugmann in Kuhn's Zeitschrift, XXIV, 24.

Note 2. Or, the killers of Vṛitra.

Verse 8.

Note 1. On aptúr and aptūrya, comp. Pischel, Vedische Studien, I, 122 seq., and H. O., Göttingische Gelehrte. Anzeigen, 1889, 4 seq.

MANDALA III, HYMN 13.

ASHTAKA III, ADHYĀYA 1, VARGA 13.

1. To this god Agni I sing¹ for you most powerfully. May he come to us with the gods; may he, the best sacrificer, sit down on the sacrificial grass.

2. The righteous one to whose skill the two worlds (Heaven and Earth) and (all) blessings cling—Him the men rich in offerings magnify, Him those who long for gain, that they may obtain his blessing.

3. He, the priest, is the guide of these (men)¹, and he indeed (is the guide) of sacrifices. Praise ye this Agni who is the giver, the winner of wealth.

4. May this Agni give us most blissful shelter for our (sacrificial) feast, whence he may shower wealth on us in heaven, the (human) dwellings¹, and in the waters.

5. The singers kindle Agni, the Hotri, the lord of the tribes, the brilliant, the wonderful, with his excellent thoughts¹.

6. And mayst thou, the best invoker of the gods, help us in our spell, in our hymns. Shine bliss on us, Agni whom the Maruts strengthen¹, the greatest winner of thousandfold (wealth).

7. Now bestow on us thousandfold wealth with offspring and prosperity, splendid, most powerful, and undecaying abundance in heroes, O Agni!

NOTES.

The Rishi is Rishabha Vaisvâmitra. The metre is Anushṭubh.—Verses 6, 7=MS. IV, 11, 2.—Comp. concerning this hymn, Aitareya Brâhmaṇa II, 40.

Verse 1.

Note 1. Arka (arkâ) may be first or second person. Comp., for instance, VI, 16, 22. prâ vaḥ sakhâyaḥ agnâye stómam . . . ârka gâya ka vedhâse; X, 50, 1. prâ vaḥ mahé . . . ârka (Samhitâp. ârkâ) visvânârâya visvabhûve, and see Benfey, Die Quantitätsverschiedenheiten in den Samhitâ- und Pada-Texten der Veden, III, p. 8.—On the metre of the second Pâda, comp. my Prolegomena, p. 188.

Verse 3.

Note 1. Perhaps we should supply, on account of the preceding nominative, vîpraḥ ('priest'): of these (priests).

Verse 4.

Note 1. Kshitîbhyaḥ seems to me to be co-ordinated with divî and apsû á; comp. X, 89, 11. The locative kshitîshu would not have suited the metre as well as the dative. Prof. Max Müller proposes to translate: 'Whence he may shower wealth on our dwelling, whether he be in the sky or in the waters.'

Verse 5.

Note 1. Comp. X, 172, 2. á yâhi vásvyâ dhiyâ.

Verse 6.

Note 1. Comp. Sâṅkhâyana Srautasûtra VIII, 16. indrah marutvân . . . marutstotraḥ marudganaḥ marudvridhaḥ marutsakhâ.

MANDALA III, HYMN 14.

ASHTAKA III, ADHYĀYA 1, VARGA 14.

1. The joy-giving Hotri has taken his place at the sacrifices¹, He the true, the sacrificer, the highest sage, the worshipper. Agni whose chariot is lightning, the son of strength, whose hair is flame, has spread forth his light over the earth.

2. It¹ has been offered to thee—be pleased with the adoring speech²—to thee who is observant of it, O righteous, strong one. Bring hither thou who art wise, the wise (gods). Sit down on the sacrificial grass in the middle (of it) for bliss, O worshipful one!

3. To thee, Agni, Night and Dawn who further thy strength¹, shall hasten on the paths of the wind. When (the mortals) anoint the ancient one² with offerings, they³ stand in the house as on a chariot-seat⁴.

4. Mitra and Varuṇa, O strong Agni, and all the Maruts shall sing to thee a pleasant song, when thou, O son of strength, standest with thy flames, a sun spreading out men¹ over the (terrestrial) dwellings.

5. We have given thee thy desire to-day, sitting down near thee adoringly with outstretched hands¹: sacrifice thou to the gods as a priest with thy mind most skilled in sacrifice, with unerring thoughts, O Agni!

6. From thee indeed, O son of strength, proceed manifold divine blessings and gains¹. Give us thousandfold true wealth according to thy guileless word, O Agni!

7. What we have done here for thee at this sacrifice, we mortals, O skilful and thoughtful god, take thou notice of all that, O (god) with the good chariot¹; make all this (sacrificial food) here savoury, immortal Agni!

NOTES.

The same Rishi. The metre is Trishṭubh.—Verse 5 = VS. XVIII, 75.

Verse 1.

Note 1. On vidátha, comp. I, 31, 6, note 2.

Verse 2.

Note 1. The subject to be supplied seems to be námaḥ-uktiḥ.

Note 2. The words námaḥ-uktim gushasva form a parenthesis, as Ludwig has seen.

Verse 3.

Note 1. It is possible that here, as in several other passages, a confusion between the two verbs vāgáyati and vāgayáti has taken place. If the reading were vāgayánti, we should have to translate, 'Night and Dawn who are striving together (as if running a race against each other?).'

Note 2. The ancient one is Agni.

Note 3. The two goddesses, Night and Dawn.

Note 4. The Padapáṭha has vandhúrâ-iva, which may be the dual of vandhúr (I, 34, 9). But more probably it should be vandhúre-iva (nom. dual, neuter or loc. sing.), comp. I, 64, 9. ā vandhúreshu . . . tasthau; I, 139, 4. ádhi vām stháma vandhúre; III, 43, 1. vandhureshtáḥ, and see III, 6, 10. adhvaréva. On contracted Pragrihya vowels, see H. O., Die Hymnen des Rig-veda, I, p. 456.

Verse 4.

Note 1. On nṛīn and the different theories proposed for this word, see above, I, 146, 4, note 5.

Verse 5.

Note 1. Comp. X, 79, 2. uttānāhastāh.

Verse 6.

Note 1. For this hemistich, comp. VI, 13, 1 ; 34, 1.

Verse 7.

Note 1. The traditional text has tvām vīsvasya surāthasya bodhi, which can only mean, 'take thou notice of every one who has a good chariot'—which Bergaigne (Quelques observations sur les figures de rhétorique dans le Rig-veda, p. 15) explains: 'Le char en question est la prière qui amène le dieu au sacrifice.' I believe that the text is corrupt; instead of surāthasya I think we should read surathāsyā (= suratha asyā).

MANDALA III, HYMN 15.

ASHTAKA III, ADHYĀYA 1, VARGA 15.

1. Flaming with thy broad stream of light beat away fiends, sorcerers, plagues. May I dwell in the protection of the great, well-protecting (god), under the guidance of Agni who readily listens to our call.

2. Be thou our protector when this dawn shines forth, be thou (our protector) when the sun has risen. Cherish, O Agni, well-born in body, this praise of mine as (a man rejoices) in the birth (of a son), in his own offspring¹.

3. Beholding men, shine thou after many (dawns)¹, O bull, Agni, red in the dark (nights). O Vasu! Lead us and bring us across anguish. Help us, the *Usigs*², to wealth³, thou youngest (of the gods)!

4. Shine, O Agni, thou the invincible bull, who hast conquered all strongholds and all delights, the leader of the first, the protecting¹, mighty sacrifice, O Gâtavedas, best guide.

5. O singer, thou who art wise, brightly shining towards the gods¹, bring to us thy many perfect shelters, and gain like a victorious car²; Agni, (carry) thou (hither) towards us the two well-established³ worlds (Heaven and Earth).

6. O bull, increase and rouse our gains. Agni! (Increase) for us the two worlds (Heaven and Earth) rich in milk, O god together with the gods, shining with beautiful shine! May a mortal's hatred never enclose us.

7 = III, 1, 23.

NOTES.

The Rishi is Utkīla Kātya, the metre Trishubh.—
Verse 1 = VS. XI, 49; TS. IV, 1, 5, 1; MS. II, 7, 5;
III, 1, 6.

Verse 2.

Note 1. Comp. VII, 1, 21. tānaye nītye; X, 39, 14. nītyam ná sūnúm tānayam dádhanāh, and besides II, 26, 3. gānena . . . visā . . . gānmanā . . . putrah; Hirzel, Gleichnisse und Metaphern im Rig-veda, 77.

Verse 3.

Note 1. For this expression, compare IV, 19, 8; IX, 71, 7; X, 31, 7, and especially III, 6, 7; VI, 39, 4.

Note 2. The poet compares himself and his friends with the mythical priestly tribe of the Usigs (Bergaigne, Religion Védique, I, 57 seq.), using, as it seems, at the same time the word usgaḥ in its adjective sense 'the willing ones.'

Note 3. The Padapāṭha is right in giving rāyé; comp. VIII, 26, 13. subhé kakráte.

Verse 4.

Note 1. Is the text correct? I think that pâyóh should be corrected into pāyo or pâyúh: 'the leader and protector of the first mighty sacrifice.' The mistake may have been caused by the genitives which surround the word.

Verse 5.

Note 1. Geldner (Vedische Studien, I, 160) translates this hemistich: 'Die vielen sicheren Zufluchtsorte (= Opferplätze) bis zu den Göttern erleuchtend als Weiser, o Sänger.' I do not believe that sárma is the object of dīdyānaḥ; and 'Zufluchtsorte = Opferplätze' is too much in the style of Sāyana. I take ákkhidrá sárma as depending on abhí vakshi; comp. I, 34, 6. tridhātu sárma vahatam.

Note 2. For abhí vakshi vāgam, comp. III, 30, 11; VI, 21, 12.

Note 3. On suméka, comp. Windisch, Festgruss an Boehtlingk, 114.

MANDALA III, HYMN 16.

ASHTAKA III, ADHYĀYA 1, VARGA 16.

1. This Agni rules over abundance in valiant men, over great happiness. He rules over wealth consisting in offspring and cows; he rules over the killing of foes.

2. O Maruts¹, ye men, cling to this furtherer² who possesses joy-furthering boons—(the Maruts) who³ in battles overcome ill-minded (foes), who have deceived the enemy⁴ day by day.

3. As such, O bounteous Agni, prepare¹ us riches² and wealth in valiant men, which, O highly glorious one, may be most exalted, rich in offspring, free from plagues, and powerful.

4. The maker who victoriously (stands) over all beings, the maker who makes the praise arrive among the gods¹: he stands firm among the gods, among the host of heroes, firm also in the praise of men.

5. Give us not up, Agni, to want of thought¹ nor to want of heroes nor to want of cows, O son of strength, nor to the scoffer. Drive away hostile powers².

6. Help us at this sacrifice, O blessed one, with mighty gain which is accompanied by offspring, O Agni! Let us be united with greater, gladdening, glorious wealth, O thou of mighty splendour!

NOTES.

The same Rishi. The metre is Pragâtha, each Pragâtha distich being composed of one Bṛihati and one Satobṛihati. The position of the Sûkta in the collection and the opening words of verse 3 show that the three Pragâthas are not independent, but form one hymn.—Verse 1 = SV. I, 60.

Verse 2.

Note 1. Comp. VII, 18, 25. imám naraḥ marutaḥ sas-kata ánu.

Note 2. The passages which Grassmann gives for the meaning of vr̥dh, 'stärkend, erquickend,' I, 167, 4; X, 89, 10, are quite doubtful. Probably we should have to alter the accent and read vr̥dhám.

Note 3. The relative clause seems to refer to the Maruts, not to the goods (rāyaḥ).

Note 4. Comp. VI, 46, 10. yé . . . sátrum ádabhúḥ.

Verse 3.

Note 1. Literally, 'sharpen.'

Note 2. The genitive seems, as is also Prof. Ludwig's opinion, to be the partitive genitive, so that the literal meaning would be: 'Prepare us (a deal) of riches and of wealth,' &c. Comp. p̥ba sutásya, 'drink of the pressed Soma,' &c.

Verse 4.

Note 1. On kákriḥ devéshu á dúvaḥ, comp. IV, 2, 9; VIII, 31, 9.

Verse 5.

Note 1. On ámati, comp. above, III, 8, 2, note.

Note 2. Comp. VI, 59, 8. ápa dvéshāmsi á kr̥itam.

MANDALA III, HYMN 17.

ASHṬAKA III, ADHYĀYA 1, VARGA 17.

1. He who is inflamed after the primitive ordinances, is anointed with ointments¹, the giver of all treasures, he whose hair is flame, whose stately robe is ghee, the purifier, skilled in sacrifice, Agni—that he may sacrifice to the gods.

2. As thou hast performed, O Agni, the Hotri's duty for the Earth, as thou hast done it for Heaven, O Gâtavedas, full of intelligence, in the same way sacrifice with this offering to the gods. Prosper this sacrifice to-day as thou hast done for Manus.

3. Thou hast three lives, O Gâtavedas, and three births from the Dawn¹, O Agni! Being wise, sacrifice with these to the favour of the gods, and bring luck and welfare to the sacrificer.

4. Praising Agni full of splendour, full of beauty, we adore thee, O Gâtavedas, deserving to be magnified. Thee the gods have made their messenger, their steward¹, and carrier of offerings, the navel of immortality.

5. O Agni, the Hotri who before thee was an excellent sacrificer, who verily¹ sat down and brought luck by himself²: sacrifice according to his rules, O intelligent one, and set down our sacrifice at the feast of the gods.

NOTES.

The Rîshi is Kata Vaisvâmitra, the metre Trishubh.—
Verse 1 = TB. I, 2, 1, 10. Verse 3 = TB. III, 2, 11, 2;

MS. IV, 11, 1; 12, 5. Verse 4 = TB. III, 6, 9, 1; MS. IV, 13, 5.

Verse 1.

Note 1. Possibly the poet intended to allude also to the other meaning of aktúbhih, which means both 'ointments' and 'nights.' The nights render Agni conspicuous and anoint (añg) him as it were with beauty. I do not believe that the existence of a Vedic word aktú, 'ointment,' should be denied; cf. Bechtel, Nachrichten d. Göttinger Ges. d. Wiss. 1894, p. 398.

Verse 3.

Note 1. See Bergaigne, Religion Védique, II, 14. Prof. Max Müller translates: Three lives are thine, the dawns are thy three birthplaces, or three dawns are thy birthplaces.

Verse 4.

Note 1. See above, I, 58, 7, note 1.

Verse 5.

Note 1. Literally, 'doubly.' Grassmann is right in observing that the Vedic poets show a certain predilection for the word dvitá when speaking of Agni's being established and doing his work at the sacrifice. Prof. Max Müller thinks of Agni's two homes, earth and heaven.

Note 2. On the Hotri more ancient than Agni, comp. Bergaigne, Religion Védique, I, 109. Probably this simply refers to the Agni or the fire used at former sacrifices.

MANDALA III, HYMN 18.

ASHTAKA III, ADHYĀYA 1, VARGA 18.

1. Be kind, O Agni, when we approach thee, as a friend a friend, as parents¹, a straight leader. For full of deceit are the tribes of men : burn thou against (all) malign powers so that they turn back.

2. Burn, O Agni, the nearer enemies, burn the curse of the distant evil-doer. Burn, O Vasu, seeing the unseen ones. May thy never-ageing, never-tiring flames¹ spread out.

3. Wishing for (thy blessings), O Agni, by fuel and ghee I offer this sacrificial food for (the attainment of) advancing power and of strength ; worshipping thee with my spell as far as I have power (I offer) this divine prayer for the attainment of hundred(fold blessings).

4. (Shining) forth with thy flame, O son of strength, praised (by us), bestow mighty vigour on those who toil for thee, bright luck and welfare, O Agni, on the Visvāmitras ! We have cleaned thy body many times.

5. Give us treasures, O best gainer of riches : such indeed art thou, Agni, when thou hast been kindled. In the blessed praiser's house thou hast placed, together with wealth, thy mighty(?) arms¹, thy marvellous shapes.

NOTES.

The same Rishi and metre.—Verse 2 = TĀ. IV, 5, 5.
Verse 3 = AV. III, 15, 3.

Verse 1.

Note 1. It is rather strange that Agni is compared with the two parents. Generally it is the two Asvins, or Heaven and Earth, or the pair of Indra and Varuṇa, &c., who are compared with father and mother (see Hirzel, Gleichnisse und Metaphern im Rigveda, 71 seq.). No doubt in our verse the dual was chosen on account of the metre.—I do not think that Bollensen (Orient und Occident, II, 473) and Kirste (Bezenberger's Beiträge, XVI, 297) are right in believing that a dative of pitrī is found here, and in translating: 'as a good (son) to his father.'

Verse 2.

Note 1. The meaning of ayāsaḥ is doubtful; comp. Brugmann in Kuhn's Zeitschrift, XXIV, 24 seq.; M. M., vol. xxxii, p. 371 (VI, 66, 5); von Bradke, Festgruss an Roth, 124.

Verse 5.

Note 1. On srīprā, see I, 96, 3, note 3. Karāsna must mean something like 'arm,' though the exact meaning is doubtful. In VIII, 32, 10 the compound srīprākaraśna occurs. Prof. Max Müller writes: 'Thou hast brightly assumed a body with soft arms or with stretched-out arms, if we do not read srīprakaraśnā.'

MANDALA III, HYMN 19.

ASHTAKA III, ADHYĀYA 1, VARGA 19.

1. I choose Agni as Hotri at this sacrificial meal, the clever sage all-knowing and not foolish. May he, the excellent sacrificer, sacrifice for us amid the host of the gods; may he obtain liberal boons (for us) for the sake of wealth and strength.

2. To thee, O Agni, I stretch forth the (ladle) rich in sacrificial food, splendid, full of gifts, full of ghee. From left to right, choosing the host of the gods¹, he has established the sacrifice with gifts and goods².

3. Whoever is favoured by thee, is blessed with the sharpest spirit. Favour him with good offspring, O god rich in favours¹! Agni, may we, (dwelling) in the copiousness of manliest wealth, be rich in perfect praise of thee, the Vasu.

4. On thee indeed, O Agni, sacrificing men have put many faces of (thee) the god¹. Bring hither then the host of the gods, O youngest one, when thou wilt sacrifice to-day to the divine host².

5. When the gods will anoint thee as the Hotri at the sacrificial meal making thee sit down for the sacrifice, be thou here, O Agni, our furtherer, and bestow glory on our bodies.

NOTES.

The Rishi is Gāthā Kausika, the metre Trishūbh.—
Verse 3 = TS. I, 3, 14, 6; MS. IV, 14, 15.

Verse 2.

Note 1. Comp. below, IV, 6, 3. This parallel passage shows that pradakshinā belongs to urānāh, not to asret. Agni is represented as choosing, i.e. inviting the host of the gods by moving around the sacrificial food from left to right. See concerning the Paryagnikarāṇa, which seems to be alluded to, Hillebrandt, Neu- und Vollmondsopfer, 42 seq.

Note 2. Or, 'with the (divine) givers and with the Vasus.'

Verse 3.

Note 1. Boehtlingk-Roth seem to be right in reading siksho. Comp. VIII, 52, 8. yāsmāi tvām . . . śiksho śikshasi dāśúshe.

Verse 4.

Note 1. They have inflamed many fires, each of which is a face of the god Agni.

Note 2. Or, 'that thou mayest sacrifice,' &c. See Delbrück, Syntaktische Forschungen, I, 148.

MANDALA III, HYMN 20.

ASHTAKA III, ADHYÂYA 1, VARGA 20.

1. The carrier (of the gods)¹ calls by his hymns Agni, Ushas (dawn), the two Asvins, Dadhikrâ² at daybreak. May the gods rich in light, unanimously longing for our sacrifice, hear us.

2. Agni, threefold is thy strength; three are thy abodes; three are thy many tongues, O thou who art born in Rita! And three, O Agni, are thy bodies beloved by the gods. With these protect our prayers unremittingly, 3¹. Agni! Many are the names, O Gâtavedas, of thee the immortal one, O self-dependent god! And whatever the secret powers of the powerful² are, thou all-enlivener, in thee they have placed together (those) many (powers), O (god) after whose relations men ask³.

4. Agni is the divine leader of the divine tribes like Bhaga, the guardian of the seasons¹, the righteous. May He, the killer of *Vṛitra*², the ancient one, the possessor of all wealth, bring the singer across all troubles.

5. I invite hither¹ Dadhikrâ², Agni, and the goddess Ushas, Bṛihaspati and the god Savitṛi, the Asvins, Mitra and Varuṇa and Bhaga, the Vasus, Rudras, and Âdityas.

NOTES.

The same Rishi and metre.—Verse 2 = TS. II, 4, 11, 2; III, 2, 11, 1; MS. II, 4, 4. Verse 3 = TS. III, 1, 11, 6.

Verse 1.

Note 1. The 'carrier' of the gods is the Hotri. See above, I, 127, 8, note 1, and compare the article of Dr. Neisser quoted there. See also M. M., vol. xxxii, pp. 40-43 (I, 6, 5).

Note 2. On Dadhikrâ or Dadhikrâvan, the deified horse of Trasadasyu, see Pischel, Vedische Studien, I, 124; Ludwig, vol. iv, p. 79; H. O., Religion des Veda, 71. Prof. Max Müller writes, 'It seems to me some form of Agni generally in company with matutinal gods.'

Verse 3.

Note 1. The reader who compares this passage with 19, 4, will observe a general resemblance pointing to the conclusion that both verses belong to the same author.

Note 2. Mâyāh mayínâm : comp. concerning the idea of mâyá, H. O., Religion des Veda, 163, 294.

Note 3. With prishṭabandhu, comp. bandhupríkh, bandhveshá.

Verse 4.

Note 1. Perhaps ritu-páh should be changed into rita-páh : 'the god who protects the Rita, the righteous.'

Note 2. Or 'the killer of foes.'

Verse 5.

Note 1. Possibly we have to read, on account of the metre, ihá hve.

Note 2. See above, verse 1, note 1.

MANDALA III, HYMN 21.

ASHṬAKA III, ADHYĀYA 1, VARGA 21.

1. Take this our sacrifice to the immortals; accept graciously these offerings, O Gâtavedas. O Agni, partake of the drops of fat and ghee, O Hotri, having sat down as the first.

2. To thee, O purifier, the drops of fat mixed with ghee drip down. O (god) who followest thy own ordinances, give us the best boon for this feast to which the gods come eagerly.

3. To thee, the priest, O Agni, (belong) the drops dripping with ghee, O good one! Thou art kindled as the best Rishi. Be a furtherer of our sacrifice!

4. For thee, O liberal one¹, full of power, the drops of fat and ghee drip down, O Agni! Praised by the sages thou hast come hither with mighty light. Accept graciously the offerings, O wise one!

5. For thee the richest fat¹ has been taken out from the midst. We give it to thee. On thy skin, O Vasu, the drops drip down. Accept them eagerly for each of the gods.

NOTES.

The same Rishi. Verses 1 and 4 are Trishṭubh, verses 2 and 3 Anuṣṭubh, verse 5 Virâḍrûpâ Satobṛīhatī.

The hymn belongs to the ritual of the animal sacrifice. It has to be recited, according to the prescription of the later Vedic texts, while the vapâ (omentum) of the sacrificial animal is roasted and the drops of fat drip down from it. See Schwab, Das Altindische Thieropfer, p. 114 seq., and the Sûtra texts quoted by him (for instance, Āsvalâyana Srautasûtra III, 4, 1). Bergaigne (Recherches sur l'Histoire de la Liturgie Védique, 18) seems to be right in observing: 'Bien qu'il (l'hymne III, 21) soit récité tout d'une pièce dans le pasubandha, pendant la cuisson de la vapâ, pour les gouttes de graisse qui tombent dans le feu, sa complexité métrique . . . le trahit et nous y fait voir une simple collection de vers liturgiques.' It may be observed, however, that the two last verses seem to form a distich of an irregular Pragâtha type; comp. H. O., Die Hymnen des Rigveda, vol. i, p. 118.—Verses 1–5 = TB. III, 6, 7, 1. 2; MS. IV, 13, 5.

Verse 4.

Note 1. On the word ádhrigu, cf. Bloomfield, American Or. Soc. Proceedings, March, 1894, p. cxxiii.

Verse 5.

Note 1. Vapâkhyam havih, Sâyana. This explanation is evidently correct. After the sacrificial animal has been killed, the omentum, which is very rich in fat, is first drawn out of its body and offered. See H. O., Die Religion des Veda, 360 seq.

MANDALA III, HYMN 22.

ASHTAKA III, ADHYĀYA 1, VARGA 22.

1. This is that Agni with whom the desiring Indra took the pressed Soma into his body. Having obtained thousandfold strength like a horse, a racer¹, thou art praised, O Gâtavedas!

2¹. Thy splendour, O Agni, which dwells in heaven and on earth, in the plants, O worshipful one, and in the waters, wherewith thou hast spread through the wide air—that light of thine is fierce, waving², man-beholding.

3. Agni, thou goest to the floods of heaven. Thou hast spoken to the gods who are liberal (?)¹. (Thou goest) to the waters which (dwell) on high in the ether of the sun, and to those which approach below.

4. May the fires of the soil united with those on the hill-sides¹, without guile graciously accept our sacrifice and plentiful food free from all plague.

5 = III, 1, 23.

NOTES.

The same Rishi. The metre is Trishṭubh, except in verse 4 which is Anuṣṭubh.—A conjecture on the ritual use for which the hymn has been composed, see in the note on verse 4.—Verses 1–5 = VS. XII, 47–51; TS. IV, 2, 4, 2. 3; MS. II, 7, 11.—A sort of commentary on this hymn is found in the Satapatha Brâhmaṇa VII, 1, 1, 22 seq.

Verse 1.

Note 1. In the traditional text the words, ‘a horse, a racer,’ are accusatives. But it is the átya who attains (san) the vāga and who is called vāgīn (comp. M. M., vol. xxxii, pp. 116, 442, and on sāpti, ibid. p. 102): see I, 130, 6; III, 2, 7; 38, 1 (V, 30, 14; IX, 93, 1; 96, 15, &c.); VII, 24, 5; IX, 43, 5; 82, 2; 85, 5; 86, 3; 96, 20; X, 96, 10 (I, 52, 1, and III, 2, 3 do not contradict this). Pischel (Vedische Studien, I, 105) believes that átyam ná stands for átyaḥ ná, which seems impossible to me. But I think that we should correct the text and read átyaḥ ná sāptiḥ. The preceding accusatives have caused the blunder.

Verse 2.

Note 1. Comp. Grassmann, Kuhn's Zeitschrift, XVI, 165.

Note 2. Comp. ketúḥ arṇaváḥ sūryasya, VII, 63, 2.

Verse 3.

Note 1. In the translation of dhīshnya I have followed Pischel, Vedische Studien, II, 87, though this translation is quite uncertain. Should the meaning be: 'the gods who dwell on the dhīshnya altars'?

Verse 4.

Note 1. Agni purishya, i.e. the fire dwelling in the soil (comp. Roth in Kuhn's Zeitschrift, XXVI, 64), is mentioned very frequently in the Mantras belonging to the Agnikayana, i.e. to the construction of the brick altar. Agni is considered as residing in the soil used at that rite. Now in the Yagus texts the whole of our hymn occurs among the texts to be recited at the Agnikayana (Taitt. Samh. IV, 2, 4, 2, &c.; comp. also Āsvalāyana Srautasūtra IV, 8, 20). Perhaps we may conjecture, therefore, that the Agnikayana rite in its simplest form was known already in the Rig-veda period, and that our hymn was destined for it.—The prāvāna fires (fires dwelling on the hill-sides) may be the fires dwelling in the rivers which run down the prāvaṇas or descents.

MANDALA III, HYMN 23.

ASHTAKA III, ADHYĀYA 1, VARGA 23.

1. Produced by attrition, well preserved in his abode, the young sage, the leader of worship, Agni ever young in the forests¹ that grow old—Gâtavedas, has here assumed immortality².

2. The two Bharatas¹, Devasravas and Devavâta, in the midst of wealth have produced by attrition Agni the skilful (god). Agni, look forth with mighty wealth, and then be² for us a guide of food day by day.

3¹. The ten fingers have brought him to the birth, the ancient, beloved (Agni), well born in his mothers². Praise, O Devasravas, the Agni of Devavâta who³ should be the lord of people.

4. I have laid¹ thee² down in the best (place) of the earth³, in the place of Iâ³, in the auspiciousness of days. O Agni, as the god who has belonged to Manus⁴, shine with wealth on the Drishadvatî, on the Âpayâ, on the Sarasvatî.

5 = III, 1, 23.

NOTES.

The Rishis are Devasravas Bhârata and Devavâta Bhârata (see verse 2); the metre is Trishubh (verse 5 Satobrihati).—No verse occurs in the other Samhitâs.

Verse 1.

Note 1. The 'forests' are the fuel. 'Does the poet mean: Never consumed in the consumed wood or forests,

i. e. the fire burns and is kept alive while the wood is burnt up?' M. M.

Note 2. Or, 'he has received the drink of immortality'—which may refer to the ghee offered in the fire.

Verse 2.

Note 1. On the tribe of the Bharatas having their seats, as verse 4 seems to show, on the borders of the Sarasvatî and of the Drishadvatî, see H. O., Buddha (first edition), 413 seq.

Note 2. This is an imperative in -tât, signifying, as Delbrück has shown (Syntaktische Forschungen, III, 2 seq.; Altindische Syntax, 363), an injunction to be carried out after something else has been done or has happened. Agni is first to look about (ví parya), and shall then become (bhavatât) a guide of food, i. e. he shall lead plenty of food to the worshipper's house.—Prof. Max Müller translates ishâm netá, 'a guide to food.'

Verse 3.

Note 1. Should this Satobṛīhatī, standing alone among Trishūbh verses, be considered as forming a distich together with verse 2? Comp. H. O., Die Hymnen des Rigveda, vol. i, p. 102, note 7.

Note 2. The woods.

Note 3. Agni, not Devavāta, is referred to.

Verse 4.

Note 1. Or, 'he has laid.' The form may be first or third person, present or perfect.

Note 2. Agni is addressed.

Note 3. The best place of the earth, the place of Iṣā (i. e. of the nourishment coming from the cow, of the ghee offered into Agni) is the sacrificial ground or more especially the spot on which the sacrificial fire is established.

Note 4. Or 'to men.' The Padapāṭha has mānushe, but mānushaḥ seems more probable.

MANDALA III, HYMN 24.

ASHTAKA III, ADHYÂYA 1, VARGA 24.

1. Agni, be victorious in battles ; thrust away the plotters. Difficult to overcome, overcoming malign powers, bestow splendour on (the worshipper) who fits out the sacrifice as a vehicle¹.

2. Agni, thou art kindled with nourishment¹, the immortal offerer of a feast (to the gods). Accept graciously our worship.

3. Agni, wakeful one, son of strength, into whom offerings are poured, sit down with thy splendour on this sacrificial grass of mine.

4. Agni, together with all Agnis, with the gods exalt our prayers and those who are respectful at the sacrifices.

5. Agni, give wealth to the worshipper, abundance in valiant men ; further us¹ that we may be rich in sons.

NOTES.

The Rîshi is Visvâmitra, the metre Gâyatrî, the first verse Anushṭubh. On this combination of a beginning Anushṭubh with *Gâyatrî*s following, comp. H. O., Die Hymnen des Rig-veda, vol. i, p. 148.—Verse 1 = VS. IX, 37. Verse 5 = TS. II, 2, 12, 6 ; MS. IV, 12, 2 ; 14, 6.

Verse 1.

Note 1. See above, III, 8, 3, and on yagñávāhas, I, 127, 8, note 1; Bergaigne, Religion Védique, II, 287, note 2.

Verse 2.

Note 1. Iḥā: especially designating the nourishment coming from the cow (personified as Iḥā), such as ghee.

Verse 5.

Note 1. Literally, 'sharpen us.'

MANDALA III, HYMN 25.

ASHTAKA III, ADHYĀYA 1, VARGA 25.

1. Agni, thou art for ever the wise son of Heaven and of the Earth, the all-wealthy one. In thy peculiar way¹ sacrifice here to the gods, O intelligent one !

2. Agni, the knowing, obtains (for his worshipper) heroic powers ; he obtains (for him) strength, being busy for the sake of immortality. Bring then the gods hither, O (Agni), rich in food.

3. Agni, the wise, shines on Heaven and Earth, the two immortal goddesses who encompass all people—he who rules through his strength, and who is full of light through adoration.

4. Agni and Indra, come hither to the sacrifice in the house of the worshipper rich in pressed (Soma), never failing, ye two gods, at the drink of Soma.

5. Agni, thou art kindled in the house of the waters, (our) own (god), O son of strength, Gâtavedas, who exaltest the abodes (in which thou dwellest) by thy blessing.

NOTES.

The same Rishi. Metre, Virâg.—Verse 4=MS. IV, 12, 6.

Verse 1.

Note 1. On rdhak, see Pischel, Vedische Studien, II, 45.

MANDALA III, HYMN 26.

ASHTAKA III, ADHYÂYA 1, VARGA 26-27.

1. With our offerings revering in our mind Agni Vaisvânara, the follower of truth, the finder of the sun—we, the Kusikas¹, desirous of goods, call with our prayers the god who gives rain, the charioteer, the cheerful.

2. We call that beautiful Agni to help us, Vaisvânara, Mâtariśvan the praiseworthy¹; we the men (call) Brîhaspati² for (the worship) of the divine host, the priest who hears us, the guest who swiftly glides along.

3. Vaisvânara, neighing like a horse, is kindled by the women¹, by the Kusikas, from age to age; may this Agni give us abundance in valiant men and in horses and treasures, he who wakes among the immortals.

4. May the Vâgas¹ come forward, the Agnis with their powers. United² they have harnessed the spotted deer for their triumphal procession³. The Maruts, mightily growing, the all-wealthy, make the mountains tremble, the unbeguiled ones.

5. The Maruts who possess the beauty of Agni¹, belong to all races of men. We implore their fierce, strong help. They are tumultuous, the sons of Rudra, clothed in rain, hot-spirited like lions², givers of rain.

6. We implore with our best praises every host, every troop (of the Maruts)¹, the splendour of Agni, the power of the Maruts. With the spotted deer as horses², with gifts that cannot be taken away, they go to the sacrifice wise in the (sacrificial) ordinances³.

7. Agni am I, by birth Gâtavedas. Ghee is my eye; (the drink of) immortality is in my mouth. The threefold song¹ traversing the aerial space, the imperishable *Gharma*², the sacrificial food am I by name.

8. With three purifying strainers he (Agni) purified the song, with his heart the thought, discovering the light. The mightiest treasure he produced by the powers of his own nature, and then he looked over heaven and earth.

9. Carry him who is the inexhaustible spring with a hundred rills, who has knowledge of prayers (?), the father of (every speech) that should be uttered, the roaring one¹, gladly excited in the lap of his parents—carry him the truth-speaking across (all dangers), O ye two worlds!

NOTES.

Visvâmitra is the Rîshi of this Sûkta with the exception of the seventh verse of which the Âtman or Brahman is the Rîshi. The metre is Gagatî verses 1-6, Trishṭubh verses 7-9.—Verse 5 = TB. II, 7, 12, 3. Verse 7 = VS. XVIII, 66; MS. IV, 12, 5.

The position of this Sûkta in the collection shows that it is to be divided into three independent hymns. This is confirmed by the metre, the first and second of these three hymns being in Gagatî, the third in Trishṭubh, and also by the contents: the first hymn is addressed to Agni Vaisvânara, the second to Agni accompanied by the Maruts, the third contains mystical speculations about the nature and the deeds of Agni.

Verse 1.

Note 1. The Kusikas are identical with the Visvâmitras, or possibly the latter form one branch of the Kusikas ; see H. O., Zeitschrift der Deutschen Morgenländischen Gesellschaft, XLII, 209.

Verse 2.

Note 1. On the relation of Mâtârisvan to Agni, see above, I, 96, 4, note 1.

Note 2. Brîhaspati, though in his origin distinct from Agni, is here identified with him, like Mâtârisvan.

Verse 3.

Note 1. By the ten fingers. Comp. above, I, 71, 1.

Verse 4.

Note 1. I adopt the interpretation of Bergaigne (Religion Védique, II, 405, note 1) and Pischel (Vedische Studien, I, 46). Vāgāh seems to be the proper name synonym with Rîbhávaḥ; the Maruts may be called Vāgāh as they are called several times Rîbhukshānah. But it is possible that we should have to translate simply, 'May the powers of strength,' &c.; comp. below, 27, 1.

Note 2. Possibly we have to supply, 'united with their spotted deer, with their beauty,' &c.; see II, 36, 2. yagñāḥ sāmmlâḥ prîshatîbhiḥ rishîbhiḥ; VII, 56, 6. sriyâ sāmmlâḥ. Or the meaning may be, 'the Maruts united with Agni or with the Agnis;' comp. I, 166, 11. sāmmlâḥ indre.

Note 3. On subhé, see M. M., I, 87, 3, note 2 (vol. xxxii, p. 162).

Verse 5.

Note 1. Or, they receive their beauty through Agni.

Note 2. Of heshâkratu the probable explanation has been given by Pischel, Vedische Studien, I, 48. See also von Bradke, Kuhn's Zeitschrift, XXVIII, 297.

Verse 6.

Note 1. Comp. V, 53, 11, vol. xxxii, p. 320.

Note 2. Comp. II, 34, 4, vol. xxxii, p. 302, note 5.

Note 3. The text has vidátheshu.

Verse 7.

Note 1. Comp. VIII, 51, 4. arkám saptásirshânam . . . tridhâtum uttamé padé. Is the song called tridhātu because it is sung by the three Udgâtrîs (singers)? Or because it generally comprises three verses (see H. O., Zeitschrift der Deutschen Morgenländischen Gesellschaft, XXXVIII, 453)?

Note 2. The Gharma is the offering of hot milk brought to the Asvins. On the probable meaning of this offering, see H. O., Religion des Veda, 447 seq.

Verse 9.

Note 1. The translation of meḥ (comp. IV, 7, 11; Atharva-veda XI, 7, 5; Taitt. Samh. V, 7, 8, 1) is quite conjectural.

MANDALA III, HYMN 27.

ASHṬAKA III, ADHYĀYA 1, VARGA 28-30.

1. Forward (goes) your ¹ strength tending heavenward, rich in offerings, with the (ladle) full of ghee. To the gods goes (the worshipper) desirous of their favour.

2. I magnify¹ with prayer Agni who has knowledge of prayers (?), the accomplisher of sacrifice, who hears us, and in whom (manifold wealth) has been laid down.

3. O Agni, may we be able to bridle thee the strong god¹; may we overcome (all) hostile powers.

4. Agni, inflamed at the sacrifice, the purifier who should be magnified, whose hair is flame—him we approach (with prayers).

5. With his broad stream of light the immortal Agni, clothed in ghee, well served with oblations, is the carrier of offerings at the sacrifice.

6. Holding the (sacrificial) ladles, performing the sacrifice they have with right thought pressingly brought Agni hither¹ for help.

7. The Hotri, the immortal god goes in front with his secret power¹, instigating the sacrifices².

8. The strong (horse, i.e. Agni) is set at the races. He is led forth at the sacrifices, the priest, the accomplisher of sacrifice.

9. He has been produced¹ by prayer, the excellent one. I have established² him, the germ of beings, for ever the father of Daksha³.

10. I have laid thee down¹, the excellent one, with the nourishment² of Daksha, O thou who art produced by power, O Agni, thee the resplendent one, O Uṣig³.

11. The priests, eager to set to work the *Rīta*¹, kindle with quick strength Agni the governor², him who crosses the waters³.

12. I magnify¹ the child of vigour at this sacrifice, who shines under the heaven, the thoughtful Agni.

13. He who should be magnified and adored, who is visible through the darkness, Agni, the manly, is kindled¹.

14. Agni, the manly, is kindled, he who draws hither the gods like a horse. The (worshippers) rich in offerings magnify him.

15. We the manly ones will kindle thee the manly (god), O manly Agni who shinest mightily.

NOTES.

The same Rīshi. The metre is Gāyatrī.—The position of the hymn in the collection shows that it is to be divided into Trikas, and this is confirmed by the ritual use of several of these Trikas (see Bergaigne, Recherches sur l'Histoire de la Liturgie Védique, 19, note 1). Some of the Trikas at least, however, do not seem to form independent hymns; verse 10 very probably stands in connection with verse 9, and the same seems to be the case with verses 12 and 13. Ludwig (IV, 305) and Bergaigne (loc. cit.) consider the whole Sūkta as a collection of Sāmidhenīs or verses to be recited for each piece of wood thrown into the fire. Comp. Hillebrandt, Neu- und Vollmondsopfer, 77.—Verse 1

= TS. II, 5, 7, 2; TB. III, 5, 2, 1; MS. I, 6, 1; IV, 14, 3. Verses 2, 3 = TB. II, 4, 2, 4. 5; MS. IV, 11, 2. Verse 4 = TS. II, 5, 8, 6; TB. III, 5, 2, 3. Verses 5-6 = TB. III, 6, 1, 3; MS. IV, 10, 1 (verse 5 = MS. IV, 11, 2). Verses 7-9 = SV. II, 827-829. Verses 13-15 = SV. II, 888-890; TB. III, 5, 2, 2; AV. XX, 102, 1-3.

Verse 1.

Note 1. Of the priests and sacrificers?

Verse 2.

Note 1. The text has ī/e.

Verse 3.

Note 1. Comp. above, II, 5, 1.

Verse 6.

Note 1. Comp. IV, 17, 18. vayám hí ā te kakrimá sabādhaḥ.

Verse 7.

Note 1. Mâyáyâ: comp. H. O., Religion des Veda, 163, 294.

Note 2. Vidáthâni: comp. I, 31, 6, note 2.

Verse 9.

Note 1. This seems to mean, 'he has been set to work.'

Note 2. Ā dadhe must be first person (comp. ní dadhe, verse 10) for the bhûtánâm gárbhaḥ is Agni.

Note 3. Or, the father of intelligence. Daksha is the personified intelligence. Comp. vol. xxxii, p. 245 seq.; Bergaigne, Religion Védique, III, 93 seq.

Verse 10.

Note 1. See above, III, 23, 4.

Note 2. The text has i/ā, the same word as in 24, 2.—Prof. Max Müller observes, 'Could it be, ní tvā dadhe i/ā, I have placed thee on the altar with nutriment, son of the strength of Daksha?'

Note 3. Or, 'the willing one.'

Verse 11.

Note 1. 'Setting to work the Right (Rīta)' means here 'performing the sacrifice.' The sacrifice is considered as a sphere especially pervaded by the power of Rīta. Comp. H. O., Religion des Veda, 197.

Note 2. Yantúram (comp. VIII, 19, 2. agnīm ūishva yantúram; Lanman, 486) must be the same as yantáram (comp. μάπτρω? [M. M.] See de Saussure, Mémoire sur le Système Primitif des Voyelles, p. 207; but comp. also Kretschmer, Kuhn's Zeitschrift, XXXI, p. 447). To me it seems to be an accommodation to aptúram, facilitated probably by the influence of the genitive yantúr. See Lanman, Noun-Inflection in the Veda, p. 486; Wackernagel in Kuhn's Zeitschrift, XXV, 287.

Note 3. See Pischel, Vedische Studien, I, 122 seq.; H. O., Göttingische Gelehrte Anzeigen, 1889, p. 4 seq.

Verse 12.

Note 1. The text has ī/e. In the same way ī/énya/i verse 13, ī/ate verse 14.

Verse 13.

Note 1. Observe sám idhyate here and verse 14, sám idhīmahi verse 15. The verses 13-15 form one Trika.

MANDALA III, HYMN 28.

ASHTAKA III, ADHYĀYA 1, VARGA 31.

1. O Agni Gâtavedas, accept graciously our offering, the sacrificial cake at the morning libation, O god who givest wealth for our prayers.

2. The sacrificial cake, O Agni, has been baked or made ready for thee: accept it graciously, O youngest (god).

3. Agni, accept eagerly the sacrificial cake which has been offered, which has stood overnight. Thou art the son of strength, established at the sacrifice.

4. At the midday libation, Gâtavedas, accept here graciously the sacrificial cake, O sage. Agni, the wise ones do not diminish at the sacrificial distributions¹ the portion which belongs to thee, the vigorous one².

5. Agni, at the third libation take joyfully the sacrificial cake, O son of strength, which has been offered. And in thy admirable way place our wakeful sacrifice, blessed with treasures, before the immortal gods.

6. Agni, grown strong, O Gâtavedas, accept graciously our offering, the sacrificial cake which has stood overnight.

NOTES.

The same Rishi. The metre is Gâyatrî in verses 1, 2, 6, Ushnih in verse 3, Trishubh in verse 4, and Gagatî in verse 5.—No verse occurs in the other Samhitâs.

This Sûkta and the following are, as their position at the end of the Anuvâka and the number of their verses show, later additions to the original collection. The 28th hymn contains verses destined for the offerings of sacrificial cakes to Agni at each of the three Savanas. Quite in the same way hymn 52, which also belongs to the later additions, refers to sacrificial cakes offered to Indra. The oblation of such cakes to Indra at each Savana is found also in the later Vedic ritual (comp. Kâtyâyana IX, 9, 2 seq.; Weber, Indische Studien, X, 369, 376), and several verses of III, 52 are indicated there as Puronuvâkyâ verses for those very offerings; see Âsvalâyana Srautasûtra V, 4, 2. 3. After each cake-offering to Indra follows the Svishṭakṛit-oblation to Agni: and for these oblations Âsvalâyana (loc. cit. Sûtra 6) prescribes verses 1, 4, and 5 of our hymn, according to the order of the three Savanas. From the text of the hymn it seems to be evident that verses 1-3 have been composed for the first, verse 4 for the second, and verses 5-6 for the third Savana. With this distribution the change of the metres evidently stands in connection. In accordance with the theories of the later Vedic theologians, we have here the Gâyatrî as the characteristic metre of the first, the Trishṭubh of the second, the Gagatî of the third Savana.

Comp. also Âsvalâyana VI, 5, 25, and the very ingenious but at the same time somewhat hazardous observations of Bergaigne, Recherches sur l'Histoire de la Liturgie Védique, 16 seq.

Verse 4.

Note 1. The text has vidâtheshu.

Note 2. Comp. I, 36, 1, note 2.

MANDALA III, HYMN 29.

ASHṬAKA III, ADHYĀYA 1, VARGA 32-34.

1¹. This is the support on which the rubbing (for producing the fire) is performed ²; the creative organ ³ has been prepared. Bring hither the house-wife ⁴; let us produce Agni by rubbing in the old way.

2. In the two fire-sticks dwells Gâtavedas, as the germ (lies) safe in pregnant women—Agni who should be magnified ¹ day by day by wakeful men who bring offerings.

3. Place it ¹ skilfully into her who lies extended ². Having conceived she has quickly given birth to the manly one. He whose summit is red—bright is his splendour—the son of I/â has been born in the (due) way ³.

4. In the place of I/â, on the navel of the earth we will lay thee down, Gâtavedas, that thou, O Agni, mayst carry the offerings (to the gods).

5. Rub, ye men, the truthful sage, the wise, the immortal, the fair-faced. Bring forth, ye men, Agni, the banner of sacrifice, the first in the front, the gracious one.

6. When they produce him by rubbing with their arms, he shines forth flaming in the wood like a red race-horse. Like the bright one on the path of the Asvins ¹ the unrestrained (Agni) spares the stones, burning the grass ².

7. Agni, when born, shines forth resplendent, the racer, the priest, praised by the sages, the giver of rain, whom the gods placed in the sacrifices, to be magnified, as the omniscient carrier of the sacrificial offerings.

8. Sit down, O Hotri, in the space which is thine, as the knowing one. Place the sacrifice in the abode of good works (i.e. on the altar). Eagerly longing for the gods thou shalt worship the gods by offerings. Agni, bestow mighty vigour on the sacrificer.

9. Produce a mighty¹ smoke, ye friends. Without fail go forward towards strength. This Agni is the conqueror in battles, rich in valiant men, he by whom the gods have overpowered the Dasyus.

10. This is thy birth-place in due time whence born thou shonest forth ; knowing it, O Agni, sit down on it, and make our prayers prosper.

11. He is called Tanūnapât as the Asura's germ. Narâsamsa he becomes when he is born, Mâtariśvan when he has been shaped in the mother¹. And he has become the rush of the wind in his swift course².

12. Rubbed forth by skilful rubbing, established by skilful establishing, as a sage, O Agni, perform excellent sacrifices. Sacrifice to the gods for him who is devoted to the gods¹.

13. The mortals have generated the immortal one, the . . .¹, advancing one with strong jaws. The ten unwedded sisters² united take care of the man (Agni) when he has been born.

14. He the god of the seven Hotri's shone forth from of old, when he flamed up in his mother's lap, at her udder. Day by day the joyous one never closes his eyes, when he has been born from the Asura's (i.e. of the Heaven's ?) belly¹.

15. The onsets of (Agni) when he attacks his enemies, are like those of the Maruts. (He is) the first-born (son) of the sacred spell. They know every (fire)¹. The Kusikas have raised their brilliant spell; they have kindled Agni, every one in his house.

16. After we had chosen thee here to-day, O wise Hotri, while this sacrifice was going on, thou hast firmly sacrificed and firmly laboured. Come to this Soma, expert and knowing !

NOTES.

The same Rîshi. The prevalent metre is Trishṭubh.—Verses 1, 4, 10, 12 are Anushṭubh; verses 6, 11, 14, 15, Gāgati.

The Sūkta, which belongs to the later additions (see the note on hymn 28), consists of a number of verses and small groups of verses referring to the production of fire by the attrition of the two fire-sticks. The order in which the verses stand does not always agree with the natural order of the ritual acts.—Verse 2 = SV. I, 79. Verse 3 = VS. XXXIV, 14. Verse 4 = VS. XXXIV, 15; TS. III, 5, 11, 1; MS. I, 6, 2, 7; IV, 10, 4; II, 1. Verse 8 = VS. XI, 35; TS. III, 5, 11, 2; IV, 1, 3, 3; MS. II, 7, 3; IV, 10, 4. Verse 10 = VS. III, 14; XII, 52; XV, 56; TS. I, 5, 5, 2; IV, 2, 4, 3; 7, 13, 5; TB. I, 2, 1, 16; II, 5, 8, 8; MS. I, 5, 1; 6, 1; AV. III, 20, 1. Verse 13 = TB. I, 2, 1, 19. Verse 16 = VS. VIII, 20; TS. I, 4, 44, 2; MS. I, 3, 38; AV. VII, 97, 1.

Verse 1.

Note 1. The verses 1-3 a, b have been translated by Muir, Original Sanskrit Texts, V, p. 209.

Note 2. On the adhimanthanasakala, the piece of wood on which the lower fire-stick is laid, see Satapatha Brâh- mana III, 4, 1, 20. so-dhimanthanam sakalam ádatte agner ganitram asity atra hy agnir gáyate. Schwab, Das Altindische Thieropfer, p. 78 seq.

Note 3. Pragánana seems to be used in the concrete sense as the male organ. As such, the poet may have considered the so-called pramantha in the generation of Agni, which is described as having the shape of the male organ (Schwab, loc. cit., 78 ; see also Roth, Zeitschrift der Deutschen Morgenl. Gesellschaft, XLIII, 591). It does not seem very probable that the darbhapīṅgūla of which Sáyana thinks should be meant.

Note 4. Sáyana explains this as meaning the Arani (fire-stick), i. e. the lower Arani, the receptacle of the upper fire-stick. In the Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa I, 2, 1, 13 the two Aranis are addressed as mahī vispatnī.

Verse 2.

Note 1. The text has īdyah.

Verse 3.

Note 1. The upper fire-stick or, more accurately, the pramantha.

Note 2. Comp. above, II, 10, 3. The lower Arani is alluded to, which is considered as a wife and more particularly as the nymph Urvasī (Kātyāyana V, 1, 30, &c.).

Note 3. Prof. Pischel (Vedische Studien, I, 301) takes the genitive īāyāh as dependent on vayúne : ' wurde der Sohn geboren am Orte (Wege) der Opferspende.' To me it seems unnatural not to connect īāyāh with putráh, which words are connected also by the Sandhi (the Samhitā text has īāyās putró, not īāyāh putró).

Verse 6.

Note 1. For yáman, cf. I, 37, 3 ; III, 2, 14 ; VI, 15, 5. Should not the bright one on the path of the Asvins be the sun? Sáyana thinks of the chariot of the Asvins, which also may be right.

Note 2. Are the stones and the grass identical with the stones and grass-blades occurring in the later ritual of the agnyâdheya and agnimanthana (Satapatha Br. II, 1, 1, 8; III, 4, 1, 21; Kâtyâyana IV, 8, 16, &c.)?

Verse 9.

Note 1. Literally, a manly, strong, or bull-like smoke.

Verse 11.

Note 1. This is a play upon words (Mâtariśvâ and âmi-mîta mâtâri, 'he has been shaped in the mother').

Note 2. Von Bradke (Dyâus Asura, p. 51): des Windes Heerde (?) wird er, wenn er dahingleitet.

Verse 12.

Note 1. This Pâda is identical with I, 15, 12. It is a galita.

Verse 13.

Note 1. The meaning of asremân (comp. X, 8, 2. asremâ vatsâh [i.e. Agni] śmîvân arâvît) is unknown.

Note 2. The ten fingers.

Verse 14.

Note 1. Comp. von Bradke, loc. cit., 50.

Verse 15.

Note 1. Or prathamagâm brâhmanah vîsve it viduḥ: 'all (people) know him the first-born (son) of the sacred spell'? Comp. I, 34, 2. sômasya venâm ânu vîsve it viduḥ.—Prof. Max Müller writes: 'Prathamagâh is the wind, X, 168, 3. It might here refer to the Maruts, who are often said to sing prayers; they know all about Brahman (prayer).'

MANDALA IV, HYMN 1.

ASHTAKA III, ADHYĀYA 4, VARGA 12-15.

1. Thee, O Agni, the gods concordantly have ever set to work as their divine steward ; with this intention¹ they have set thee to work. They have generated² thee, O worshipful one², the immortal among the mortals, the wise, god-loving god ; they have generated every wise, god-loving (Agni)³.

2. Do thou, [O Agni¹,] turn to brother Varuna, towards the gods² with thy kindness³, to (Varuna) who accepts the sacrifice, to the eldest (god) who accepts the sacrifice, the righteous Āditya who supports the (human) tribes, the king who supports the (human) tribes.

3. O friend, turn to thy friend (Varuna), as a wheel of a chariot¹ rapidly (follows) the swift (horse), for our sake, O wonderful one, rapidly. O Agni, find mercy (for us) with Varuna, with the all-brilliant Maruts. Bless (us), O flaming one, that we may propagate ourselves, that we may press onward ; bless us, O wonderful one !

4. Mayst thou, O Agni, who knowest Varuna, deprecate for us the god's anger. Being the best sacrificer, the best carrier (of the gods), flaming, remove from us all hatred.

5. As such, O Agni, be for us the lowest¹ (god) with thy help, our nearest (friend) while this dawn shines forth. Being liberal (towards us), cause, by sacrificing, Varuna to go away from us. Love mercy ; readily hear our call.

6. His, the fortunate god's, appearance is excellent, and most brilliant among mortals. Like the bright, heated butter of the cow (the appearance) of the god is lovely, like the bountifulness of a milch-cow.

7. Three¹ are those highest, true, and lovely births of this god Agni. Being enveloped in the infinite² he has come hither, the bright, brilliant, shining Aryan.

8. He, the messenger, longs for all seats, the Hotri with the golden chariot, with the lovely tongue, with the red horses, of marvellous appearance, brilliant, always lovely like an assembly abundant in food.

9. He, the kinsman of sacrifice, has enlightened men¹. They lead him forward by a great rope². He dwells in his (the mortal's) dwelling, accomplishing (his task). The god has obtained the companionship of the mortal.

10. May this Agni, the knowing one, lead us to the god-given treasure which belongs to him¹. That (treasure) which all the immortals have created by their thought, which Dyaus, the father, the begetter (has created): that real (treasure) they have besprinkled².

11. He has been born in the dwellings as the first, at the bottom of the great (air)¹, in the womb of this air², footless, headless, hiding both his ends, drawing towards himself (his limbs?), in the nest of the bull³.

12. The host¹ came forth wonderfully at first, in the womb of Rita, in the nest of the bull², lovely and young, of marvellous appearance, and brilliant³. Seven friends⁴ were born for the bull.

13. Here our human fathers have sat down¹, aspiring after *Rita*². Invoking the dawns³, they have driven out the milch-cows which dwelt in the rock-stable, in the prison.

14. Having rent the rock they cleaned themselves. Others around told forth that (deed) of theirs. Taking . . . as an instrument (?)¹, they sang triumphantly². They found the light; they chanted their prayers.

15. Longing for the cows in their mind, those men, the *Usigs*¹, have opened with godly words the fast-holding, closed rock, which enclosed and encompassed the cows, the firm stable full of cows.

16. They have devised the first name of the milch-cow; they have found the three times seven highest (names or essences) of the mother¹. The hosts², understanding this, acclaimed. The red one³ became visible through the brilliant (milk?)⁴ of the cow.

17. The confused¹ darkness disappeared; the sky appeared in splendour; the shine of the goddess Dawn rose up. The Sun ascended to the wide plains, beholding right and wrong deeds among the mortals.

18. Then, afterwards, being awake they looked around; then they took that treasure given by Heaven, all the gods in all the houses. O Mitra, may true (fulfilment) belong to (our) prayer, O Varuna!

19. I will address flaming Agni, the Hotri, the supporter of everything¹, the best sacrificer. He has perforated, as it were, the pure udder of the cows, (and has made flow the milk) purified like the poured sap of the Soma shoots.

20. He, the Aditi (i. e. the freedom) of all the worshipful gods, the guest¹ of all men, Agni, choosing (for us) the protection of all gods—may he, Gâtavedas, be merciful.

NOTES.

The Rîshi is Vâmadeva, the metre Trishṭubh, except in verses 1–3, the metres of which are Ashṭi, Atigagati, and Dhṛiti respectively.—Verses 4–5=VS. XXI, 3–4; TS. II, 5, 12, 3; IV, 2, 11, 3; TB. III, 7, 11, 3; 12, 6; TÂ. II, 4, 4; IV, 20, 3; MS. IV, 10, 4; 14, 17. Verse 20=VS. XXXIII, 16; TB. II, 7, 12, 5.—The hymn has been translated and commented upon by Bergaigne, Quarante Hymnes du Rig-véda, p. 11 seq.

This Sûkta seems to be composed of two independent hymns. Grassmann believed that the first three verses are the fragment of one hymn, and that verses 4–20 form a second hymn. His reason was that verses 1–3 are composed in metres similar to Atyashṭi, while the rest are composed in Trishṭubh. I think that he was on the right way, but his opinion should be slightly modified. In verses 1–5 Agni is invoked to appease the anger of Varuna; while, on the other hand, no allusion to Varuna occurs in verses 6–20. I believe, therefore, that the first hymn should be considered as consisting of verses 1–5; it is composed in the metres of the Atyashṭi class (1–3) with two concluding Trishṭubh verses (4, 5). The second hymn comprises the verses 6–20. The arrangers of the Samhitâ, however, considered these two hymns as one, as is shown by the position which they have assigned to it, before the second Sûkta, which has the same number of verses (20) as this first Sûkta. Comp. my Prolegomena, p. 141.

Verse 1.

Note 1. I.e. with the intention that he should act as the steward of the gods. As to îti krátvâ, comp. I, 138, 3. îti krátvâ bubhugrîré. Delbrück, Altindische Syntax, p. 530, paraphrases îti krátvâ : mit Entschluss 'so sei es.'

Note 2. Sâyana, whom Ludwig follows, seems to be right in explaining yagata as a vocative ('yaganiya'), and ganata as 3rd plural ('aganayan'). Bergaigne takes both forms as 2nd plural imperative: 'honorez l'immortel chez les mortels; engendrez le Dieu qui honore les Dieux.'

Note 3. I cannot believe that Bergaigne is right in translating vîsvam âdevam, 'celui qui honore tous les Dieux.' His theory is that 'vîsvam dépend . . . de â, qui logiquement gouverne le terme devâ à l'accusatif.'

Verse 2.

Note 1. The metre shows, as Benfey (Vedica und Verwandtes, p. 19, note 1) has pointed out, that this vocative agne is a spurious addition.

Note 2. Should we not read devâm? 'Turn to brother Varuna with thy kindness, towards the god who accepts the sacrifice.'

Note 3. Or 'for the sake of his kindness,' 'for winning his favour (for the mortals)'? Sumatî may be dative; see Lanman, p. 382; Brugmann, Grundriss der vergleichenden Grammatik, II, p. 602. Comp. I, 186, 10. âkkhâ sumnâya vavṛitiya devân, 'may I turn to the gods for the sake of their favour.'

Verse 3.

Note 1. I believe that râthyeva (Padapâṭha râthyâ-iva) stands for râthyam-iva. Comp. Lanman, p. 331; Roth, Zeitschrift der Deutschen Morgenländischen Gesellschaft, XLVIII, p. 681 seq. Prof. Max Müller refers râthyâ-iva to two horses; he translates: 'O friend, bring hither thy friend, as two swift chariot-horses bring rapidly a swift wheel.'

Verse 5.

Note 1. I.e. the nearest to men.

Verse 7.

Note 1. Literally 'thrice.' But I think that we should correct trī ('three'). The same blunder seems to occur in III, 56, 5. trī sadhāsthā sindhavaḥ trīḥ (read trī) kavīnām, 'Three are your abodes, O rivers; three (are those) of the sages.' Comp. also III, 56, 8; I, 116, 4.

Note 2. This seems to mean, in the infinite sky.

Verse 9.

Note 1. Mánushaḥ seems to be acc. plur.; comp. VII, 86, 7. áketayat akítah, 'he has enlightened the unenlightened ones.' Bergaigne takes mánushaḥ as a genitive depending on yagñābandhuḥ, 'fils du sacrifice de Manus.'

Note 2. Bergaigne compares IX, 87, 1, where it is said that they lead Soma to the sacrificial grass like a horse by ropes (ákkhā barhīḥ rasanābhiḥ nayanti). Sáyana says, stutirūpayā raggvā, 'by a rope which has the shape of praises.'

Verse 10.

Note 1. Comp. below, verse 18.

Note 2. I. e. anointed, adorned. 'Poured down.' M. M.

Verse 11.

Note 1. Maháḥ budhné seems to mean, maháḥ rágasaḥ budhné; comp. rágasaḥ budhnám, I, 52, 6; budhné rágasaḥ, II, 2, 3; maháḥ rágasaḥ, I, 6, 10; rágasaḥ maháḥ, I, 168, 6; mahī rágasī, IX, 68, 3.

Note 2. With the second Páda, compare IV, 17, 14. tvaḥáḥ budhné rágasaḥ asyá yónau.

Note 3. The bull seems to be Agni himself. Comp. verse 12.

Verse 12.

Note 1. The word sárdha (or sárdhaḥ? see note 3), which in most passages is applied to the host of the Maruts (see vol. xxxii, p. 67 seq.), seems here to refer to the company of the Āṅgiras or seven Rishis, alluded to in the fourth

Pâda. The seven Rishis, 'our fathers' (verse 13), have, with the aid of Agni, rent the mountain and delivered the cows or dawns (verses 13 seqq.; IV, 2, 15 seq.). Comp. H. O., Religion des Veda, p. 145 seq.

Note 2. The bull again seems to be Agni. Comp. verse 11, note 3.

Note 3. Do these epithets (comp. verse 8, Pâda 3) refer to the sârdha (host)? Or are they applied to Agni, so that we would have to translate: 'Lovely was the young one (Agni), of marvellous appearance, and brilliant'? In this way Bergaigne interprets the passage. If this translation is right, sârdha may be considered as neuter, and the first Pâda could be translated: The first host came forth wonderfully.

Note 4. Evidently the seven Rishis (see note 1). Bergaigne: Les sept prières? ou les sept rivières?

Verse 13.

Note 1. The seven Rishis sat down for chanting and sacrificing, by which they have opened the mountain-prison of the cows.

Note 2. The mention of Rita in this connection is both Vedic and Avestic. Comp. Darmesteter, Ormazd et Ahriman, p. 146; H. O., Religion des Veda, p. 144, note 2.

Note 3. The cows in this myth seem to be a mythical representation of the dawns. Comp. M. M., Science of Language, II, p. 584; H. O., Religion des Veda, pp. 147, 149 seq.

Verse 14.

Note 1. Parvāyantra (comp. ślōkayantra, IX, 73, 6) is quite doubtful. Does there exist a stem parva, meaning possibly, 'the herd of cattle'? And can we translate, 'they who had their (battering-?) machines directed on the cow-herds'? Or, 'holding the herds with their instruments (i.e. with the ropes used for drawing the cows out of the cavern)'?—Prof. Max Müller suggests the translation, 'the cattle-drivers,' and writes, 'Does it stand for pasu-yantrâ- saḥ? Yantra seems the same as yoktra, or something like it, cf. X, 94, 7, 8. Pasuyantra would be they who hold the ropes of the cattle, who drive them away.' Bergaigne's translation, 'n'ayant rien (d'autre) pour conduire le bétail' (pasu-ayantra), and that of Roth ('die der Sperre ledigen Thiere [pasvaḥ ayantrāsaḥ] erhoben ein Freudengeschrei,' Zeitschr. der D. Morg. Gesellschaft, XLVIII, 678), do not carry conviction, nor does a conjecture like pasvā yantāraḥ ('the leaders of the cattle together with the cattle itself shouted triumphantly'), seem to furnish a satisfying solution of the difficulty.

Note 2. See Geldner, Vedische Studien, I, 120.

Verse 15.

Note 1. On the Usigs, compare Bergaigne's Religion Védique, I, 57 seq.

Verse 16.

Note 1. The mother seems again to be the cow, or more exactly the Dawn considered as the mother of the cows (mâtā gāvām, IV, 52, 2. 3; VII, 77, 2), and as the mother of the Rishis (IV, 2, 15). Comp. V, 45, 2. á ūrvāt gāvām mâtā gānatī gāt. The seven names of the cow are mentioned also in I, 164, 3, its three times seven names, in VII, 87, 4.

Note 2. Bergaigne (Quarante Hymnes, p. 14) and Pischel (Ved. Studien, II, 121 seq.) give to the word vrā the meaning 'woman' (Bergaigne: 'femme,' particulièrement 'femme en rut,' 'femme amoureuse'). I prefer to follow the opinion of Bechtel, Nachrichten der Göttinger Gesellschaft der Wissenschaften, philolog.-historische Klasse, 1894, p. 393 seq. The hosts seem to be the assembly of the Rishis.

Note 3. The dawn.

Note 4. Comp. IX, 81, 1 (H. O., Religion des Veda, p. 147, note 1). dadhnā yāt im ūnnitāḥ yasā gāvām, 'When (the Somas) have been drawn, together with the brilliant curds of the cow.' The brilliant milk of the cow which the Rishis have obtained, seems to be considered as a magical means for procuring to men the aspect of the brilliant light of the dawn. Comp. H. O., Religion des Veda, p. 450.

Verse 17.

Note 1. On dúdhitam, comp. Geldner, Ved. Studien, II, 9, and see Rig-veda II, 17, 4; IV, 16, 4.

Verse 19.

Note 1. Comp. vol. xxxii, p. 330 (V, 54, 10, note 1).

Verse 20.

Note 1. 'Guest' is átithiḥ; the play on words (áditih and átithiḥ) is untranslatable.

MANDALA IV, HYMN 2.

ASHTAKA III, ADHYĀYA 4, VARGA 16-19.

1. He who has been established as the steward among the mortals, the immortal, righteous one, and among the gods, being a god himself, the Hotri, the best sacrificer shall mightily flame¹; Agni shall rise up¹ with the offerings of Manus.

2. Here, O Agni, son of strength, thou goest for us to-day as a messenger, thou who art born, between the two races (of men and gods), having harnessed, O tall one, thy puissant, manly, brilliant (stallions)¹.

3. Harnessing the two mighty, red steeds that swim in ghee—(the steeds) of Rīta, I think, that are most swift with their mind¹, the ruddy ones, thou goest (as a messenger) between you, the gods, and the tribes of men².

4. O Agni, with thy good horses, and thy good chariot, rich in bounties, bring hither from among them (the gods)¹ Aryaman, Varuṇa, and Mitra, Indra and Vishṇu, the Maruts and the Asvins, to him who offers good oblations.

5. This sacrifice, O Agni, is rich in cows¹, in sheep and horses, in manly friends; it is never to be despised; it is rich in nourishment, O wonderful lord², rich in offspring; it is long-lasting wealth, broad-based, with (brilliant) assemblies.

6¹. Be a self-strong protector, O Agni, of the man who in the sweat of his brow brings fuel to thee², or heats his head desirous to worship thee. Deliver him from every harmful man.

7. The man who brings food to thee who art desirous of food, he who stirs up¹ the cheerful guest and rouses him, the godly man who kindles thee in his dwelling : to him may belong lasting and generous wealth.

8. The sacrificer who praises thee in the evening and in the morning and gratifies thee : that liberal man thou shouldst bring across all distress, like a well-impelled horse¹, (dwelling) in his house.

9. The man who worships thee, the immortal one, O Agni, and who honours thee, holding the sacrificial ladle—may he, the toiling (sacrificer), not be deprived of wealth ; may no distress that comes from a harmful (foe), surround him.

10. That mortal whose well-ordered sacrifice thou, as the god, acceptest, O Agni, as a liberal giver, may his worship¹ be welcome, O youngest god, (the Hotri's work performed) for a worshipper whose helpers we may be.

11. May he, the knowing one, distinguish wisdom and folly of mortals¹, like straight and crooked backs (of horses)². And for the sake of wealth and noble offspring, O god, grant us Diti and keep off Aditi³.

12. The undeceived sages instructed the sage (Agni), setting him down in the dwellings of Âyu¹. Hence mayst thou behold, O Agni, with thy eyes² these beings visible and secret (that move) on the Arya's ways³.

13. Bring thou, O Agni, youngest (god), who art a good guide, a plentiful, brilliant treasure to the worshipper who presses Soma, who serves thee and toils, to help him, O brisk one, who fillest the dwellings of peoples.

14¹. And whatsoever we have done, O Agni, out of devotion for thee, with our feet², with our hands, with our bodies: (in those deeds of ours) the wise have held up the Rîta, aspiring after it, like those who manage a chariot by means of the two pole-arms (?)³.

15. And may we be born from the Dawn, the mother, as the seven priests¹, as the first worshippers among men². May we be the Aṅgiras, the sons of Heaven. May we flaming break the rock which contains the prize of the contest³.

16. And as our first, ancient fathers, O Agni, were aspiring after *Rîta*¹—they attained to pure devotion², chanting their litanies. Cleaving the earth they disclosed the red (cows).

17. The pious men, well performing the acts (of worship), resplendent, melting¹ the generations of the gods² like ore³, kindling Agni, strengthening Indra, went along⁴, besieging the stall of cows.

18. He looked (on the gods) as on herds of cattle¹ in a rich (pasture)², when the generations of the gods (were) near him, O mighty one³. After (the generations) of the mortals the *Urvastis*⁴ have pined, for the growing strong of the *Arya*⁵, of the nearer *Āyu*⁶.

19. We have done our work for thee; we have been good workers—the brilliant dawns have shone out *Rîta*¹,—brightening² the perfect Agni who manifoldly shines with fine splendour, (brightening) the god's beautiful eye.

20. We have recited these hymns for thee, the sage, O Agni, worshipper (of the gods)¹; accept them! Blaze up; make us wealthier. Bestow great wealth on us, O bountiful one!

NOTES.

The Rīshi is Vāmadeva, the metre Trishṭubh.—Verse 5=TS. I, 6, 6, 4; III, 1, 11, 1; MS. I, 4, 3. Verse 6=TĀ. VI, 2, 1. Verse 11=TS. V, 5, 4, 4. Verse 16=VS. XIX, 69; TS. II, 6, 12, 4. Verses 16–19=AV. XVIII, 3, 21–24.

Verse 1.

Note 1. On this use of these infinitives, comp. Delbrück, Altindische Syntax, p. 412.—Mánushaḥ seems to be genitive; comp. II, 2, 6. havyāḥ mánushaḥ; II, 2, 8. hótrābhiḥ . . . mánushaḥ; I, 76, 5. mánushaḥ havírbhiḥ.

Verse 2.

Note 1. Comp. below, IV, 6, 9.

Verse 3.

Note 1. As to the horses of Rīta, comp. above, III, 6, 6. In spite of the different accent there is no doubt that ghrītasnúvā, which occurs in that verse, is the same word as ghrītasnū, in our verse, a compound of ghrīta with a noun snu which seems to be different from sānu, and connected with the root snā (cf. ghrītasnā, IV, 6, 9; and see Bechtel, Hauptprobleme der Indogerm. Lautlehre, p. 211). Vrīdhasnū, on the other hand, seems to be no compound, but an adjective formed like vadhasnu, ni-shatsnū. It is evident, however, that the poet here employed the two words vrīdhasnū and ghrītasnu as parallel expressions.

Note 2. Read mártām (for mártān; gen. plur.). Comp. below, verse 11; VI, 47, 16. vīsaḥ manushyām, where we ought to read manushyām. See Lanman, p. 353; Pischel, Vedische Studien, I, p. 44; Bartholomae, Studien zur Indogermanischen Sprachgeschichte, I, p. 48.

Verse 4.

Note 1. 'Could it be Mitrám eshám, the rapid Mitra?' M. M.

Verse 5.

Note 1. The meaning is, it is rich in reward consisting in cows, &c.

Note 2. The text has asura. Cf. H. O., Religion des Veda, p. 164.

Verse 6.

Note 1. With the first Páda, comp. below, 12, 2.

Note 2. On svátavân, see Benfey, Vedica und Linguistica, p. 1 seqq.; Lanman, p. 559; Joh. Schmidt, Kuhn's Zeitschrift, XXVI, p. 357 seq.; H. O., Prolegomena, p. 471.

Verse 7.

Note 1. Nisísшат is not derived, as is the case for instance with á sishámahi, VIII, 24, 1, from (ni-)sás (Grassmann, Ludwig), but from ni-sá (Böhtlingk-Roth); comp. VII, 3, 5. nisísânâ/ átithim. We must read, consequently, nisísat, formed like dádhat (3rd sg. subj. pres., or possibly nom. sing. part. pres.).

Verse 8.

Note 1. Böhtlingk-Roth conjecture harmyávan 'im Hause, im Stall gehalten.' It is true that beasts may be kept in the harmya; comp. VII, 56, 16; X, 106, 5; Zimmer, Altindisches Leben, p. 149. But I do not think that 'being kept in the harmya' could be expressed by harmya-vat. Hemyávat seems to be derived from the root hi, and to have the same meaning as ásuhéman; such a word very well fits into a phrase referring to a swift horse. Hemyávat stands to hemán in the same relation as omyávat to omán. All this was pointed out first by Ludwig (vol. iv, p. 22).

Verse 10.

Note 1. Literally the Hotri's work (performed for such a Yagamána).

Verse 11.

Note 1. I read mártām (gen. plur.); comp. above, verse 3, note 2. It is possible, however, to leave the text unchanged; in this case the translation would be: 'May he, the knowing one, distinguish wisdom and folly, the (wise and foolish) mortals like straight and crooked backs (of horses).'

Note 2. Comp. vítāprishṭha, 'straight-backed,' a frequent epithet of horses.

Note 3. For Prof. Max Müller's interpretation of this passage, comp. vol. xxxii, p. 256. See also Bergaigne, Rel. Védique, III, 97; Pischel, Vedische Studien, I, 297 seq. It is very strange that the poet should ask the god to keep off Aditi (comp. I, 152, 6. áditim urushyet) who must here be considered, consequently, as a malevolent deity. I think that this conception of Aditi is derived from the idea of this goddess as punishing sin; it is the same goddess who may free the sinner from the bonds of sin and who may fetter and destroy him. Keeping off Aditi seems to mean, consequently, removing from the mortal the danger of being bound by the fetters of sin; the idea is the same as above in IV, 1, 5, where Agni is invoked to make Varuṇa, the son of Aditi, go away (comp. H. O., Religion des Veda, p. 336, note 1). In that case granting Diti would mean granting freedom from those same fetters. (On Diti, who very appropriately has been called a mere reflex of Aditi, see M. M., loc. cit.; Bergaigne, III, 97 seq.)

Verse 12.

Note 1. On Áyu, the mythical ancestor of the human race, see Bergaigne, Religion Védique, I, p. 59 seq.

Note 2. On paḍbhíḥ, comp. Pischel, Ved. Studien, I, 228 seq.; Bartholomae, Bezenberger's Beiträge, XV, 3 seq.; Bloomfield, Contributions to the Interpretation of the Veda, Second Series, p. 32 seq. (American Journal of Philology, XI, 350 seq.). I believe that in our verse paḍbhíḥ should be derived from a noun pás, and translated, 'with thy eyes,' while in verse 14 we ought to read padbhíh, and to translate, 'with the feet.'

Note 3. Pischel (Ved. Studien, I, 229, note 1) believes that aryáh is nom. sing., referring to Agni. But compare VI, 51, 2. rigú márteshu vṛiginá ka pásyān abhí kashṭe sūrah aryáh évān. This verse makes it very probable that aryáh is a genitive dependent on évaih, évān ('beholding right and wrong deeds among the mortals, the Sun looks upon the Arya's ways'). On the stem arí, 'the Arya,' see Pischel, Zeitschrift der Deutschen Morgenländischen Gesellschaft, XL, p. 125.

Verse 14.

Note 1. This verse has been commented upon by Pischel, Ved. Studien, I, 229 seq.

Note 2. On padbhíh or rather padbhíh, comp. verse 12, note 2.

Note 3. In translating bhurgr I have followed, though not without doubt, the theory of Pischel, Ved. Studien, I, 239 seq.—Pischel seems to be right in making ritám depend both on yemuh (comp. IV, 23, 10) and on ásushânáh (comp. above, IV, 1, 13, and below, verse 16).

Verse 15.

Note 1. The seven Rishis or Āngiras, the sons of Heaven and the Dawn (cf. above 1, 16).

Note 2. nrīn (or rather nrīm) is genitive plural. See Lanman, p. 430; Pischel, Vedische Studien, I, p. 42.

Note 3. Here we have again the seven Rishis breaking the mountain in which the cows were imprisoned.

Verse 16.

Note 1. The apodosis is wanting. As verse 15 shows, the meaning is: As our fathers have done their mighty deeds, aspiring after Rita, thus may we do the same.

Note 2. Súkīt (Padap. súki ít) possibly stands for súkim ít; cf. Roth, Zeitschrift der Deutschen Morgenländischen Gesellschaft, XLVIII, p. 680. Or may we correct súki ít...

dīdhiti (instr. sing.), 'they went along in pure devotion'? Dīdhiti seems to be what is called in III, 31, 1; IX, 102, 1. 8, ritāsya dīdhitiḥ.

Verse 17.

Note 1. See Zimmer, Altindisches Leben, p. 252.

Note 2. Evidently the pious men, not the gods, form the subject. I propose to read, therefore, devām (gen. plur.) gānimā; cf. verse 18 devānām yāt gānimā. They kindle Agni; they strengthen Indra: in short, they treat the divine people as the smith treats the metal.

Note 3. I do not enter here upon the archaeological question as to the meaning of āyaḥ. Comp. on this much-discussed question especially Max Müller, Biographies of Words, p. 252 seq.; Schrader, Sprachvergleichung und Urgeschichte (2nd ed.), p. 271 seq.; von Bradke, Methode der arischen Alterthumswissenschaft, p. 93 seq.

Note 4. Cf. X, 61, 13. parishadvānaḥ agman.

Verse 18.

Note 1. Parvāḥ is genitive sing.; it depends on yūthā. Cf. V, 31, 1; VI, 19, 3.

Note 2. There is no reason for taking, as Lanman (p. 516) does, kshumāti as acc. plur. neut., which would be kshumānti. See Joh. Schmidt, Pluralbildungen der Indogermanischen Neutra, p. 237; Bartholomae, Kuhn's Zeitschrift, XXIX, p. 493. Bartholomae translates, 'bei einem wolhabenden.'

Note 3. Is this vocative ugra right? It would be easy to correct, with Ludwig, ugrá ('when the mighty generations of the gods were near him') or ugráḥ, as suggested by Delbrück (Grassmann's Translation, vol. i, p. 573): 'the mighty one (Agni) looked on them,' &c.

Note 4. I believe that Geldner (Ved. Studien, I, 260, note 1) is right in contending that Urvasī, wherever it occurs, is the name of an Apsaras and nothing else. The name of Āyu, occurring in the fourth Pāda, confirms this; for Āyu, as is well known, is the son of Purūravas and of the nymph Urvasī. Geldner translates, 'Selbst mit den Sterblichen hatten die Urvasis Mitleid.' But I do not think that kṛip means 'having compassion.' In my opinion we should, with Ludwig, supply gānimā to mārtānām, so that devānām gānimā in the second Pāda corresponds with mārtānām (gānimā) in the third. This gānimā is an accusative which depends on akṛipran ('they pined after . . .', cf. IX, 85, 11. nāke suparṇām upapativāmsam gīraḥ venānām akṛipanta pūrvīḥ; X, 74, 3. yé kṛipānanta rātnam). Thus the meaning seems to be: When the cows had been conquered, and when Agni looked over the generations of the gods that were near him, the Urvasis, i. e. the Apsarases such as Urvasī, longed for the love of mortals such as Purūravas, and for the propagation of the human generations; they gave birth to children such as Āyu.

Note 5. Or 'of the indigent'? Or is aryāḥ nom. plur. fem. referring to the Urvasis? Or nom. sing. masc. referring to Agni?

Note 6. On Āyu, see note 4. But I cannot tell why he is called the nearer Āyu. Is this nearer Āyu opposed, as a nearer or later (ūpara) ancestor, to the pitāraḥ pārāsaḥ prasnāsaḥ, the Aṅgiras, mentioned in verse 16? The same nearer Āyu (ūpara which stands there in opposition to pūrvābhiḥ) is mentioned also in I, 104, 4, connected, as it seems, with some Apsarases. I do not pretend to be able to interpret that very difficult verse, but I am convinced that it has been misinterpreted both by Roth (Siebenzig Lieder, p. vii) and by Bergaigne (I, 60).

Verse 19.

Note 1. I. e. the dawns have sent forth their shine, which is a visible manifestation of the eternal law of Rīta.

Note 2. The construction is: we have been good workers, brightening &c. The words, 'the brilliant dawns have shone out Rīta,' are a parenthesis.

Verse 20.

Note 1. The text is nearly identical with the first hemistich of I, 73, 10 (see above).

MANDALA IV, HYMN 3.

ASHTAKA III, ADHYĀYA 4, VARGA 20-22.

1. Draw Rudra hither for your protection¹, the king of sacrifice, the truly sacrificing Hotri of the two worlds², the golden-coloured Agni, before the unseen thunderbolt (strikes you).

2. This is the home which we have prepared for thee as a well-dressed, loving wife (prepares the marriage-bed) for her husband¹. Directed hitherward, dressed (in offerings and prayers?)² sit down. These (sacrificial ladles or prayers?) are turned towards thee, O most skilful one³!

3. To him who hears us, who is not proud, who beholds men, to the merciful, immortal god recite a prayer, O worshipper, a hymn—to Agni) whom the presser (of Soma), the Madhu-presser, magnifies like the pressing-stone¹.

4. Thou who art well-intentioned, give heed to this our toiling¹, to this Rīta², O observer of Rīta! When will our hymns share in thy rejoicings? When will our friendship dwell in thy house?

5. How wilt thou, O Agni, before Varuna, and how wilt thou, and which sin of ours wilt thou blame before Dyaus? How wilt thou speak to bountiful Mitra, to the Earth? What (wilt thou say) to Aryaman, to Bhaga?

6. What wilt thou say, O Agni, when thou hast grown strong on the Dhishnya altars¹? What to strong Vāta who goes forward in triumph²? To the Nāsatya³ who goes round the earth⁴, to . . .⁵? What, O Agni, to Rudra, the man-killer?

7. How (wilt thou speak) to great Pûshan who brings prosperity? What (wilt thou say) to martial Rudra, the giver of offerings¹? What sin² wilt thou announce to wide-ruling Vishnu, what, O Agni, to the mighty weapon (of the gods)?

8. How wilt thou answer, when thou art asked, to the righteous¹ host of the Maruts? How to the mighty Sun, to the quick Aditi²? Accomplish thy work, O Gâtavedas, thou who knowest the Heaven!

9. I magnify¹ the Rîta of the cow² ruled by Rîta and also by the raw one³, the honey-sweet, ripe (milk), O Agni. Though being black this (cow) swells of bright drink, of . . .⁴ milk.

10. With Rîta indeed, with the milk of the back¹, the bull has been anointed, Agni the man. Without trembling he moved on bestowing his vigour. The speckled bull has poured out his bright udder².

11¹. By the Rîta the Aṅgiras have broken the rock and cleft it asunder; they have shouted together with the cows. Prosperously the men have surrounded² the Dawn. The Sun appeared when Agni (the fire) had been born³.

12. By the Rîta the immortal, uninjured¹ goddesses, the Waters, O Agni, with their honey-sweet waves have sped forward² for ever to flow (along their course), like a racer incited by shouting when (the race-horses) are let loose.

13. Go never on thy crooked way to the spirit (which avenges the guilt) of anybody¹, of a vassal who has trespassed, or of a friend. Require not (of us) a sinful brother's debt². May we not have to suffer under the spirit which avenges a friend's or a (hostile) deceiver's guilt³.

14. Protect us, O Agni, with all thy protection, thou who art protected, O martial one¹, and art gladdened (by us). Sparkle forth, and destroy even strong evil! Slay the Rakshas even though it has grown large.

15. Be gracious, O Agni, through these our hymns. Touch, O hero, this wealth moved by our prayers. And accept, O Angiras, our sacred words. May the praise, beloved by the gods, resound to thee¹.

16. I, the priest, have rehearsed to thee the omniscient one, O Agni, worshipper (of the gods), all these songs, these inmost words, these recitations and words of wisdom, to thee the wise one, with prayers and hymns.

NOTES.

The same Rishi and metre.—Verse 1=SV. I, 69; TS. I, 3, 14, 1; TB. II, 8, 6, 9; MS. IV, 11, 4. Verse 6=MS. IV, 11, 4.

Verse 1.

Note 1. On the identification of Agni with Rudra, comp. Bergaigne, Rel. Védique, III, 36; von Bradke, Dyâus Asura, p. 54 (Rig-veda I, 27, 10; III, 2, 5; VIII, 72, 3).

Note 2. The second Pâda of this verse is identical with VI, 16, 46.

Verse 2.

Note 1. Cf. Hirzel, Gleichnisse und Metaphern im Rig-veda, p. 69.

Note 2. On párivîtaḥ Sâyana remarks, yashṭavyadevais tegobhir vâ parivîtaḥ. In the commentary on I, 128, 1, on the other hand, he says, ṛitvighbhiḥ paridhibhir vâ parito veshṭitaḥ.

Note 3. I take su-apâka as a compound of su and a-pâka (comp. Vâg. Samh. XX, 44 = Taitt. Br. II, 6, 8, 4 = Maitr. Samh. III, 11, 1, where Tvashtri is called apâkâh). In Rig-veda VI, 11, 4 we read : ádidyutat sú apâkaḥ vibhāvâ ; in VI, 12, 2. á yásmin tvé sú apâke yagatra, &c. Should we not correct in both passages suapâkaḥ, suapâke ?

Verse 3.

Note 1. The pressing-stone (grávan) is frequently considered as speaking, as praising the gods. Cf. Hillebrandt, Vedische Mythologie, I, p. 152 sq.

Verse 4.

Note 1. The Padapâtka has sámyai. I think it should be sámyâh.

Note 2. I. e. to this sacrifice, which is considered as one of the chief manifestations of Rîta. See H. O., Religion des Veda, p. 197.

Verse 6.

Note 1. At the Soma sacrifice fire burns on eight altars called Dhishnya ; see Weber, Indische Studien, X, pp. 366, 375.

Note 2. See vol. xxxii, p. 164.

Note 3. This is the only passage in the Rig-veda in which násatya occurs in the singular.

Note 4. On párigman, cf. above, I, 79, 3 note.

Note 5. Kshé (cf. Lanman, pp. 440, 448, 534) is evidently corrupt. But neither Bollensen's conjecture, ukshné, nor those of Ludwig (kakshe, yakshe), carry conviction.

Verse 7.

Note 1. It is very strange to find Rudra here designated as 'giver of offerings.' But it seems too bold to explain haviḥ-dé as a dative of haviḥ-ád ('eater of offerings').

Note 2. I read with Grassmann répaḥ ('sin') for rétaḥ ('sperm').

Verse 8.

Note 1. The text has ritāya, used as an adjective (see Bergaigne, Rel. Védique, III, 216).

Note 2. Aditi is masculine and seems to be an epithet ('unrestrained, free') of the Sun. Cf. vol. xxxii, p. 262; Bergaigne, III, 92. Probably at the same time the word is intended to allude to the goddess Aditi.

Verse 9.

Note 1. The text has īle, on which Ludwig says, 'so viel wie nīle.' īle of course cannot be the same as nīle, but should we not conjecture nīlé? Cf. above, IV, 1, 11. vrishabhāsya nīlé, and IV, 1, 12. ritāsya yónā vrishabhāsya nīlé. The translation would be, 'By Rita the Rita is restrained in the nest of the cow.'

Note 2. The 'Rita of the cow,' if the reading is correct (see note 1), seems to be the milk.

Note 3. The 'raw one' is the cow as opposed to the ripe milk.

Note 4. The meaning of gāmarya (ἄπαξ λεγόμενον) is unknown. Cf. Bergaigne, II, 398, note 1. Sāyana reads gā amaryena. 'I should prefer gā amartyena.' M. M.

Verse 10.

Note 1. Does this mean, with the milk that comes from the ridge of heaven? Cf. IV, 20, 4. sám āndhasā mamadaḥ prishthēna.

Note 2. This Pāda seems to be an imitation of VI, 66, 1, where Prisni ('the speckled one') is the mother of the Maruts: sakṛt sukrām duduhe prisniḥ ūdhaḥ. See vol. xxxii, p. 368.

Verse 11.

Note 1. Here we have again the same myth of the Āngiras and the cows, to which so many allusions are found in the preceding hymns.

Note 2. The red cows of the myth are the dawns; the Āngiras besiege the stronghold in which these cows are imprisoned.

Note 3. On the kindling of the fire as a charm by which the sun is made to rise, see H. O., Religion des Veda, p. 109 seq. The Āngiras kindle the fire for performing their sacrifice; thereby they make the sun rise.

Verse 12.

Note 1. The same epithet is applied to the waters also in X, 104, 8.

Note 2. The optative dadhanyuḥ is very strange. Probably we ought to read dadhanvuḥ.

Verse 13.

Note 1. The meaning seems to be that Agni is requested not to turn against the sacrificer a spirit which has to avenge the guilt committed by a third person. 'Why not read yagñam? Go not secretly to anybody's sacrifice, not of a hostile house, not of a friend. Do not require (of us) a sinful brother's debt. May we not feel the might of friend or foe.' M. M.

Note 2. Geldner (Ved. Studien II, 157) translates and interprets: 'tilge nicht, O Agni, die Schuld eines falschen Bruders,' nämlich die Schuld an die Manen, also dem Sinn nach 'mache ihn kinderlos.' This is quite unacceptable.

Note 3. The text is evidently corrupt. I propose to read: mā sákhyuḥ yakshám mā ripóḥ bhugema. Comp. V, 70, 4. mā kásya adbhutakratú yakshám bhugema tanúbhiḥ.

Verse 14.

Note 1. I cannot adopt Bergaigne's opinion on sūmakha (Quarante Hymnes, p. 75).

Verse 15.

Note 1. Or, awake for thee.

MANDALA IV, HYMN 4.

ASHTAKA III, ADHYĀYA 4, VARGA 23-25.

1. Produce thy stream of flames like a broad onslaught. Go forth impetuous like a king with his elephant¹; . . .² after thy greedy onslaught, thou art an archer; shoot the sorcerers with thy hottest (arrows).

2. Thy whirls fly quickly. Fiercely flaming touch (them). O Agni, (send forth) with the ladle¹ thy heat, thy winged (flames); send forth unfettered thy firebrands all around.

3. Being the quickest, send forth thy spies against (all evildoers). Be an undeceivable guardian of this clan. He who attacks us with evil spells, far or near, may no such (foe) defy thy track.

4. Rise up, O Agni! Spread out against (all foes)! Burn down the foes, O (god) with the sharp weapon! When kindled, O Agni, burn down like dry brushwood, the man who exercises malice against us.

5. Stand upright, strike (the foes) away from us! Make manifest thy divine (powers), O Agni! Unbend the strong (bows) of those who incite demons (against us)¹. Crush all enemies, be they relations or strangers.

6. He knows thy favour, O youngest one, who makes a way for a sacred speech like this. Mayst thou beam forth to his doors all auspicious days and the wealth and the splendour of the niggard.

7. Let him, O Agni, be fortunate and blessed with good rain, who longs to gladden thee with constant offerings and hymns through his life in his house. May such longing ever bring auspicious days to him.

8. I praise thy favour ; it resounded here. May this song (which is like) a favourite wife, awaken for thee¹. Let us brighten thee, being rich in horses and chariots. Mayst thou maintain our knightly power day by day.

9. May (the worshipper) here frequently of his own accord approach thee, O (god) who shinest in darkness¹, resplendent day by day. Let us worship thee sporting and joyous, surpassing the splendour of (other) people.

10. Whoever, rich in horses and rich in gold, approaches thee, O Agni, with his chariot full of wealth—thou art the protector and the friend of him who always delights in showing thee hospitality.

11. Through my kinship (with thee) I break down the great (foes) by my words¹. That (kinship) has come down to me from my father Gotama. Be thou attentive to this our word, O youngest, highly wise Hotri, as the friend of our house.

12. May those guardians of thine, infallible Agni, sitting down together protect us, the never sleeping, onward-pressing, kind, unwearied ones, who keep off the wolf, who never tire.

13¹. Thy guardians, O Agni, who seeing have saved the blind son of Mamatâ from distress—He the possessor of all wealth has saved them who have done good deeds. The impostors, though trying to deceive, could not deceive.

14. In thy companionship we dwell, protected by thee. Under thy guidance let us acquire gain. Accomplish both praises¹, O (thou who art the) truth! Do so by thy present power, O fearless one!

15. May we worship thee, O Agni, with this log of wood. Accept the hymn of praise which we recite. Burn down those who curse us, the sorcerers. Protect us, O (god) who art great like Mitra, from guile, from revilement, and from disgrace.

NOTES.

The hymn is addressed to Agni Rakshohan. The same Rishi and metre.—Verses 1-15=TS. I, 2, 14, 1-6; MS. IV, 11, 5. Verses 1-5=VS. XIII, 9-13; MS. II, 7, 15.

Verse 1.

Note 1. On ībhena, cf. Pischel-Geldner, Vedische Studien, I, p. xv.

Note 2. The meaning of drûṇánáḥ, which evidently should be pronounced druṇánáḥ (H. O., Prolegomena, p. 478), is uncertain. This verb is stated to occur still in one other passage, Maitr. Samh. II, 4, 2. tad ya evam vidvānt surām pibati na hainam drûṇāti (druṇāti, two MSS.). But should we not read there hruṇāti? [And possibly in our passage, as Prof. Max Müller observes, hrûṇánáḥ?]

Verse 2.

Note 1. On guhvā, see Pischel, Vedische Studien, II, 113. Wherever butter is poured out with the ladle, the flames arise.

Verse 5.

Note 1. The third Pāda is identical with X, 116, 5 b.

Verse 8.

Note 1. Or 'resound to thee' (sám garetā). Cf. above, 3, 15. Shall we read, in consideration of this parallel passage, sám devávâtâ garatâm iyám gíh (' may this song beloved by the gods resound ' or ' awaken ')?

Verse 9.

Note 1. On dóshâvasta^h, see above, I, 1, 7, note 1.

Verse 11.

Note 1. I have taken mahá^h as acc. plural. If it is.gen. singular, the translation will be : ' Through my kinship with the great (Agni) I break down (my foes) by my words.'

Verse 13.

Note 1. This verse is identical with I, 147, 3. See the notes there. The original place of this verse seems to be in the first Mandala, because it mentions Mâmateya.

Verse 14.

Note 1. Probably the praise or song of the gods and of men. See vol. xxxii, p. 439.

MANDALA IV, HYMN 5.

ASHTAKA III, ADHYĀYA 5, VARGA 1-3.

1. How may we unanimously offer mighty light ¹ to bountiful Agni Vaisvânara? With his mighty perfect growth he supports the high bank ² like a pillar.

2. Do not reproach Him, the self-dependent one, who has given this bounty to me, the god to the mortal, the clever one to the simple, the wise immortal, the most manly, restless ¹ Agni Vaisvânara.

3. Agni, the sharp-pointed, the mighty bull with thousandfold sperm, has proclaimed to me the great, doubly-powerful ¹ Sâman, the prayer, having found, as it were, the hidden track of a cow ².

4. May Agni, he who is rich in wealth, whose teeth are sharp, consume with his hottest flames those who violate the laws founded by Varuṇa, the beloved, firm (laws) of attentive Mitra.

5¹. They who roam about like brotherless girls ², of evil conduct like women who deceive their husbands, being wicked, sinful, and untrue—they have created for themselves this deep place ³.

6. On me, however small, but innocent, thou, O purifying Agni, hast fiercely placed this mighty, deep, vigorous prayer, like a heavy burden, this Prishtha ¹, consisting of seven elements ².

7. Let our prayer which purifies Him, through the power of mind (inherent in it), reach Him who is the common (property of all men) alike, the good (name?) of Prisni on the skin of the herbs, on the summit of the . . . ¹.

8. What should be openly uttered by me of this speech? They secretly speak of that which is hidden¹. When they have uncovered, as it were, the water of the cows², he guards the beloved summit of the . . .³, the footstep of the bird⁴.

9. He has found in secret that great face of the great ones which the bright cow accompanied¹, the ancient (face) shining in the abode of Rita, the quickly running, quickly moving.

10. And resplendent near his parents (Heaven and Earth), in their presence, he thought of the secret, good (name?) of Prisni. The tongue of the manly, forward-bent flame (seized) that which was near at hand in the highest abode of the mother, the cow¹.

11. I speak, when being asked, Rita (i.e. truth), out of reverence (for Agni, or for the gods), out of hope¹ placed in thee, O Gâtavedas, as I am here². Thou rulest over all this wealth whatever (dwells) in heaven and earth.

12. Which of this wealth is ours, what treasure? Mayst thou who knowest it declare to us (that treasure), O Gâtavedas! What is the highest (aim) of this our way, is hidden. We have not come scolding to an empty (?)¹ place.

13¹. What is the limit, what the objects? What pleasant (wealth) may we obtain as swift (horses gain) the prize? When will the Dawns, the divine consorts of the immortal, expand over us with the sun's splendour?

14. And what do those insatiable ones here say, O Agni, with their sapless, feeble, weak speech that has to be listened to? Let them unarmed fall into nothingness.

15. The face of this kindled, manly Vasu has shone gloriously in the house. Clothed in brilliancy, with his shape beautiful to behold, the bountiful has shone like a house¹ with its wealth.

NOTES.

The hymn is addressed to Vairvânara. The same Rishi and metre.—No verse occurs in the other Samhitâs.

Verse 1.

Note 1. Cf. especially I, 45, 8 (above, p. 42). bṛhāt bhāḥ bībhṛataḥ havīḥ.

Note 2. Cf. vol. xxxii, p. 93 (I, 38, 11, note 2).

Verse 2.

Note 1. See above, I, 36, 1, note 2.

Verse 3.

Note 1. Dvibārhāḥ is neuter. See Lanman, p. 560 ; Joh. Schmidt, Pluralbildungen der Indogermanischen Neutra, p. 132.

Note 2. Agni has discovered the Sāman which he proclaims to the mortal, like the track of a lost cow.

Verse 5.

Note 1. See H. O., Religion des Veda, p. 539.

Note 2. Abhrātāraḥ cannot be accusative plural fem., as Zimmer (Altindisches Leben, p. 419) seems to take it. The correct interpretation has been given by Pischel, Vedische Studien, I, p. 299.

Note 3. I.e. hell.

Verse 6.

Note 1. In the younger Vedic ritual certain Stotras are technically designated as prishṭha or 'backs' of the liturgies (see, for instance, Weber, Indische Studien, X, 385). Does the word stand here in the same sense? Or should we correct préshtham?

Note 2. The seven tones of the scale?

Verse 7.

Note 1. This passage is obscure. The text runs thus: śasāsya kárman ádhi káru prísneh ágre rupáh árupitam (árupitam Samhitâpâtha) gábâru. As to the first words, see III, 5, 6. To káru possibly a noun like nâma should be supplied (cf. below, verse 10). The last Pâda (cf. above, III, 5, 5, note 1) is simply untranslatable.

Verse 8.

Note 1. Of the milk alluded to in the third Pâda?—On nizik, cf. Lanman, p. 436; Joh. Schmidt, Pluralbildungen der Indogerm. Neutra, p. 397.

Note 2. The water of the cows is the milk, cf. X, 12, 3. Roth (Zeitschr. der D. Morgenl. Gesellschaft, XLVIII, 682): als sie den Schatz der Kühe entdeckt hatten (vâr iva=vâram iva).

Note 3. Rupáh ágram.

Note 4. Comp. above, III, 5, 5 with note 1; III, 5, 6, note 2.

Verse 9.

Note 1. The sun, the face of the great gods (cf. I, 115, 1), accompanied by the dawn?

Verse 10.

Note 1. Is the meaning of all this that Agni, shining on the altar between heaven and earth, desires, and consumes with his flames, the oblation of butter which has its home in the udder of the cow?

Verse 11.

Note 1. On ásásâ, see Lanman, p. 492 seq.; Bartholomae Indogermanische Forschungen, I, 182 seq.; Bechtel, Haupt-probleme der Indogerm. Lautlehre, p. 262. This noun is not to be derived from the root sās, but from sams.

Note 2. Compare I, 79, 2 (with note 3).

Verse 12.

Note 1. Comp. X, 108, 7, where the Paris say to Saramā : réku padām álakam á gagantha ('the place is empty(?); thou hast come in vain').

Verse 13.

Note 1. This verse has been treated of by Pischel, Ved. Studien, I, 306.

Verse 15.

Note 1. On this comparison, see Hirzel, Gleichnisse und Metaphern im Rigveda, p. 102 seq.

MANDALA IV, HYMN 6.

ASHṬAKA III, ADHYĀYA 5, VARGA 4-5.

1. Stand upright for us, O Agni, Hotri of the sacrifice, the best performer of sacrifices among the gods. For thou art the master of every thought; thou promotest the worshipper's prayer.

2. The unerring Hotri has sat down among the people, joy-giving Agni, the wise one at the sacrifices¹. Like Savitri he has sent his light upward. Like a builder he has reared his smoke up to the sky.

3¹. (The ladle) glowing, filled with gifts, with butter, is stretched forth. From left to right (does Agni move) choosing the divine people. Upright (stands) the (sacrificial) post like a new-born foal²; well-placed, well-established it anoints the victims³.

4. After the sacrificial grass has been spread and the fire kindled, the delighted Adhvaryu has stationed himself upright. Agni, the Hotri, chosen from of old, goes round thrice, like a shepherd.

5. As Hotri, measuredly running, Agni, the joy-giving, sweet-tongued, the righteous, 'goes around by his own might. His flames run forward like race-horses; all beings are afraid when he has shone forth.

6. Beautiful, O fair-faced Agni, is thy aspect, who art terrible and manifold; pleasant (it is). As they have not hindered thy light by darkness, no bespatterers have left stains on thy body.

7. He whose mother (?)¹ has not been hindered from giving birth, nor his father and mother whenever they were incited (?)²: this Agni, the purifier, well-established like Mitra³, has shone among the tribes of men,—

8. Agni, whom the twice-five sisters¹, dwelling together, have engendered among the human tribes, who awakes at dawn, who is bright like an elephant's (?)² tooth, whose mouth is beautiful, who is sharp like an axe.

9¹. Agni, those golden horses of thine swimming in ghee, the red ones which go straight forward, the fleet ones, the brilliant, manly, wonderful horses, puissant stallions, have called hither the divine people.

10. Those victorious, never-tiring¹, fierce flames of thine, O Agni, which move about, hasten² to their goal like hawks; they roar mightily like the host of the Maruts.

11¹. (This) hymn has been produced for thee, O Agni, when thou wert kindled. May (the priest) recite the litany; mayst thou distribute (treasures) to him who sacrifices. Men have set down Agni as the Hotri, the Usigs, adoring (Him), the praise of Âyu².

NOTES.

The same Rishi and metre.—Verse 6 = TS. IV, 3, 13, 1.

Verse 2.

Note 1. The text has vidátheshu. Cf. above, I, 31, 6 note.

Verse 3.

Note 1. With the first hemistich compare above, III, 19, 2. See also VI, 63, 4.

Note 2. On akrá, see Geldner, Vedische Studien, I, 168.

Note 3. The meaning seems to be that the sacrificial post, which has been anointed itself, imparts ointment to the victim tied to it.

Verse 7.

Note 1. The meaning of sātu is uncertain. Boehtlingk-Roth give 'receptaculum.' Joh. Schmidt (Kuhn's Zeitschrift, XXV, p. 29, cf. Hübschmann, Indogerm. Vocalsystem, p. 75) translates 'Mutterleib,' and connects the word with strī. If 'womb' is right, it seems to be the womb from which Agni was born.

Note 2. Does this isháu belong to ish, 'to incite,' or to ish, 'to wish'? 'Whenever he (Agni) wishes.' M. M.

Note 3. On the well-established Mitra, comp. H. O., Religion des Veda, p. 186, note 1.

Verse 8.

Note 1. The ten sisters of course are the fingers.

Note 2. In translating atharṛā ná dántam I have followed the opinion of Pischel (Vedische Studien, I, 99) on the meaning of atharṛ, though his theory is very doubtful.

Verse 9.

Note 1. With this description of Agni's horses, comp. above, IV, 2, 2. 3.

Verse 10.

Note 1. On ayása, cf. above, III, 18, 2, note 1.

Note 2. See Geldner, Kuhn's Zeitschrift, XXVII, 234.

Verse 11.

Note 1. The second hemistich of this verse is nearly identical with V, 3, 4.

Note 2. Cf. nárāmsa, vol. xxxii, p. 439.

MANDALA IV, HYMN 7.

ASHTAKA III, ADHYĀYA 5, VARGA 6-7.

1. This (Agni) has been established here as the first by the establishers, the Hotri, the best sacrificer who should be magnified at the sacrifices, whom Apnavâna and the Bhrigus have made shine, brilliant in the woods, spreading to every house.

2. Agni! When will the splendour of thee, the god, appear in the right way? For verily the mortals have seized thee who shouldst be magnified in the houses.

3. Seeing the righteous, wise one, like the heaven with the stars, who produces joy at all sacrifices, from house to house—

4. The quick messenger of Vivasvat who rules over all human tribes: Him the Âyus have brought hither to every house, the light, him who belongs to the Bhrigus.

5. Him the knowing one they have set down in the right way as the Hotri, the gay one with his purifying flames, the best sacrificer with his seven (forms¹)—

6. Him who is enveloped in many mothers, in the wood¹, who does not rest thereon (?)², who is brilliant, though hidden in secret, easily to be found, and striving for all that is desired.

7. When the gods rejoiced in the . . . of the herbs¹, in that udder², in the foundation of *Rita*³, the great Agni, to whom offerings are made with adoration, the righteous one, always approached eagerly for the sake of sacrifice.

8¹. Thou, the knowing one, hast eagerly performed the messengership of the sacrifice, looking over both ends, over the two worlds. Thou goest as a messenger, chosen from of old, thou who knowest best the ascents to heaven.

9. Thy path is black. Light is before thee, the red one. Thy flame is speedy. This is one of the wonders: when the virgin conceives (thee as her) child¹, thou becomest a messenger, as soon as thou art born.

10. As soon as he is born, his strength shows itself, when the wind blows upon his flame. He turns his sharp tongue among the dry brushwood. Even solid food he tears to pieces with his teeth.

11. When he thirstily has grown strong by thirsty food¹, restless Agni appoints a thirsty messenger. Consuming (the wood) he follows the . . .² of the wind. He seems to drive forward a quick horse; the racer speeds along.

NOTES.

The same Rishi. The metre is Gagatī in verse 1, Anushṭubh in verses 2-6, Trishṭubh in verses 7-11.—Verse 1=VS. III, 15; XV, 26; XXXIII, 6; TS. I, 5, 5, 1; MS. I, 5, 1.

Verse 5.

Note 1. The seven flames or tongues of Agni? The seven Hotris? The seven Ratnas?

Verse 6.

Note 1. Cf. IX, 107, 18. pāri góbhiḥ úttaraḥ sídan vāneshu avyata.

Note 2. Possibly we might conjecture ásritam, 'who rests thereon.'

Verse 7.

Note 1. On sasásya, cf. above, III, 5, 6, note 2. Víyutá seems to be a locative standing parallel with the locative ūdhan. We have here sasásya víyutá . . . rításya dhāman, quite as in V, 21, 4 the two accusatives rításya yónim and sasásya yónim stand parallel. The meaning of víyutá, however, seems to me quite uncertain. Is it an action-noun derived from vi-yu, 'to separate,' 'to keep off,' or from (vi-) vā, 'to weave'? Professor Max Müller proposes: 'at the removal of the grass or tinder in which the spark is kept.'

Note 2. sásmin ūdhan; cf. below, 10, 8.

Note 3. Cf. above, I, 147, 1.

Verse 8.

Note 1. With this verse, compare below, hymn 8, verse 4.

Verse 9.

Note 1. The wood, the child of which is Agni.

Verse 11.

Note 1. I take ánnā here as an instrumental.—Compare with our passage VII, 3, 4. trishú yát ánnā samāvṛikta gámbhaiḥ; X, 79, 5. yáḥ asmai ánnam trishú ádádhati; X, 91, 7. trishú yát ánnā vévishat vitíshihase; X, 113, 8. agníḥ ná gámbhaiḥ trishú ánnam ávayat.

Note 2. meḥm; cf. above, III, 26, 9.

MANDALA IV, HYMN 8.

ASHTAKA III, ADHYĀYA 5, VARGA 8.

1. I press on for you with my prayer to the all-possessing messenger, the immortal bearer of offerings, the best sacrificer.

2. He, the great one, knows indeed the place of wealth¹, the ascent to heaven; may he, (therefore,) conduct the gods hither.

3. He, the god, knows how to direct the gods for the righteous (worshipper), in his house. He gives (us) wealth dear (to us).

4. He is the Hotri; he who knows the office of a messenger, goes to and fro (between men and gods), knowing the ascent to heaven.

5. May we be of those who have worshipped Agni with the gift of offerings, who cause him to thrive and kindle him.

6. The men who have brought worship to Agni, are renowned as successful by wealth and by powerful offspring.

7. May much-desired wealth come to us day by day; may gains arise among us.

8. He (Agni), the priest of the tribes, (the priest) of men, pierces (all hostile powers) by his might as with a tossing¹ (bow).

NOTES.

The same Rīshi. The metre is Gāyatrī.—Verse 1 = SV.
I, 12 ; MS. II, 13, 5.

Verse 2.

Note 1. Comp. Pischel, Ved. Studien, II, 118.

Verse 8.

Note 1. Kshiprá evidently is an instrumental. Cf. kshi práadhanvan, kshipréshu, kshipréṇa dhánvanâ, II, 24, 8.

MANDALA IV, HYMN 9.

ASHTAKA III, ADHYĀYA 5, VARGA 9.

1. Agni, have mercy! Thou art great, who hast come to this pious man to sit down on the sacrificial grass.

2. He who cannot be deceived, the zealous, the immortal has among men become the messenger of all.

3. He, the joy-giving Hotri, is led around the sacred seat at the heaven-aspiring sacrifices. And he sits down as the Potri also.

4. Agni sits down also as (the sacrificer's) wife¹ at the sacrifice, and as the master of the house in the house, and as the Brahman².

5. Thou zealously approachest as the Upavaktri¹ of the people who perform the sacrificial service, and (thou approachest) the offerings of men.

6. And thou zealously performest the messenger-ship for the man in whose sacrifice thou takest pleasure, in order to bear the mortal's offering (to the gods).

7. Find pleasure¹ in our rites, in our sacrifice, O Angiras. Hear our call!

8. May thy unerring chariot, by which thou protectest the worshippers, encompass us from every side.

NOTES.

The same Rishi and metre.—Verse 1 = SV. I, 23. Verse 8 = VS. III, 36; MS. I, 5, 4. 5. 11.

Verse 4.

Note 1. 'Wir vermuten: utágná agnir adhware . . . die correctur dürfte evident sein.' Ludwig. The same conjecture has been proposed already in 1868 by Prof. Max Müller (Chips, 2nd ed., vol. iii, p. 157). In my opinion the traditional text is correct.

Note 2. The Brahman very probably is not the Brahman of the later ritual, but the Brāhmanākkhamsin. See H. O., Religion des Veda, p. 396.

Verse 5.

Note 1. The Upavaktri is identical with the Prasāstri or Maitrāvaruṇa of the later ritual. H. O., Religion des Veda, p. 390.

Verse 7.

Note 1. On goshi, cf. Bartholomae, Studien zur Indog. Sprachgeschichte, I, 21.

MANDALA IV, HYMN 10.

ASHṬAKA III, ADHYĀYA 5, VARGA 10.

1¹. O Agni ! May we to-day successfully perform, with thy heedfulness², this praise³ which touches thy heart, which is like a horse, like auspicious power of the mind.

2. For verily thou, O Agni, hast become the charioteer of auspicious power of the mind, of real ability, and of the mighty Rita.

3. Through these our hymns direct thyself hitherwards to us like the sun with its light¹, O Agni, gracious with all thy faces.

4. May we to-day worship thee, O Agni, praising thee with these songs. Thy roarings thunder like (the thunder) of Heaven.

5. Thy sweetest aspect, O Agni, shines near us for glory's sake, now by day, now by night, like gold.

6. Like purified ghṛita is thy stainless body ; (it is) brilliant gold : that (body) of thine has shone¹, O self-dependent one, like gold.

7. For even a malice which one has committed, thou verily drivest away entirely, O righteous Agni, from the sacrificing mortal¹.

8. May our friendship, O Agni, our brotherhood with you, the gods, be blessed. This is our navel (i. e. relation) in our seat, in this udder¹.

NOTES.

The same Rīshi. The metre is stated to be Padapañkti (verses 4, 6, 7, Padapañkti or Ushnih; verse 5, Mahāpada-pankti; verse 8, Ushnih): see on this metre M. M., vol. xxxii, p. xcvi seq.; H. O., Prolegomena, p. 98; Kühnau, Die Trishubh-Gagati-Familie, p. 234 seq.—Verse 1=SV. I, 434; MS. I, 10, 3. Verses 1-3=SV. II, 1127-1129; VS. XV, 44-46. Verses 1-4=TS. IV, 4, 4, 7. Verse 1, 2, 4=MS. II, 13, 8. Verse 3=MS. IV, 10, 2. Verse 6=TS. II, 2, 12, 7; MS. IV, 12, 4.

Verse 1.

Note 1. The Avasāna in this verse ought to stand before hrīdisprīsam, not after this word, as the traditional text places it. *Rīdhya*ma, consequently, cannot be accented.

Note 2. Dr. Neisser's opinion on óha is different (Bezzenberger's Beiträge, XVIII, 312).

Note 3. I read stómam, which is frequently found as the object of the verb ridh, and which in several passages receives the epithet hrīdisprīś.

Verse 3.

Note 1. On the syntactical form of this comparison, see Bergaigne, Mélanges Renier, p. 95.

Verse 6.

Note 1. Or roḥate, 'shines'?

Verse 7.

Note 1. The Avasāna ought to stand before mártāt. Cf. above, verse 1, note 1.

Verse 8.

Note 1. Cf. above, IV, 7, 7. The meaning seems to be: in this sacrificial place, where the cows give milk.

MANDALA IV, HYMN 11.

ASHTAKA III, ADHYĀYA 5, VARGA 11.

1. Thy auspicious face, O mighty Agni, shines in the neighbourhood of the sun¹. Brilliant to see, it is seen even by night. Soft to behold is the food in thy (beautiful) body².

2. O Agni, disclose (wise) thoughts for him who praises thee; (disclose) the opening, when thou, O strong-born, hast been praised with trembling. Grant unto us, O very great one, such a rich prayer as thou with all the gods wilt hold dear, O brilliant one.

3. From thee, O Agni, genius is born, from thee (wise) thoughts, from thee beneficent hymns. From thee comes wealth adorned with heroes¹ to the thus-minded mortal who worships thee.

4. From thee the racer is born that wins booty, whose energy expands round-about¹, the helpful, of true strength; from thee delightful wealth sent by the gods; from thee, O Agni, the swift and impetuous horse.

5. Thee, O Agni, the pious mortals seek to win by their prayers as the first, thee the god with agreeable speech, O immortal, who drivest away malice, the household god, the lord of the house, the wise one.

6. (Drive) far from us senselessness and anguish; (drive) far all ill-will from him whom thou attendest¹. Be gracious at evening, Agni, son of strength, to him whom thou, the god, attendest with welfare.

NOTES.

The same Rishi. Metre, Trishṭubh.—Verse 1 = TS. IV, 3, 13, 1.

Verse 1.

Note 1. Comp. above, IV, 10, 5. roḥate upâké.

Note 2. Literally, 'in thy appearance' (rûpé). Thus the Soma is stated, IX, 16, 6, to purify itself rûpé avyáye, literally, 'in the appearance of the sheep,' i. e. in the filter made of sheep's hair.

Verse 3.

Note 1. See Lanman, p. 560 ; Pischel, Ved. Studien, II, 115.

Verse 4.

Note 1. On vîhâyâh, see V. Henry, Les livres VIII et IX de l'Atharva-véda (1894), p. 40 (AV. VIII, 2, 7).

Verse 6.

Note 1. Probably the correct Padapâṭha reading would be, as Prof. Bartholomae (Bezzenger's Beiträge, XV, 190) has noticed, yám nîpási (cf. Pâda d : yám . . . sákase). If yát is correct, the translation will be: '(drive) far all ill-will when thou protectest (us).'
—Bartholomae proposes either to change asmát to asmât, or to interpret it as an equivalent of asmât. It is possible, though in my opinion not very probable, that the text should be changed. The ablative asmât very frequently depends on âré.

MANDALA IV, HYMN 12.

ASHTAKA III, ADHYĀYA 5, VARGA 12.

1. May the man who holds the sacrificial ladle and kindles thee, O Agni, who thrice prepares food for thee on this day, victoriously overcome (his foes) through his lustre, wise through the power of thy mind, O Gâtavedas.

2¹. He who toiling brings fuel to thee, doing service to thy, the great (god's) face, O Agni, kindling thee at evening and at dawn—he prospers, obtains wealth, and destroys his enemies.

3. Agni is master of mighty royal power¹; Agni (is master) of gain, of the highest wealth. He, the youngest, self-dependent (god) in the right way distributes treasures to the mortal worshipper.

4. Whatever sin, O youngest (god), we have committed against thee in thoughtlessness, men as we are¹, make thou us sinless before Aditi; release us from (every) guilt on all sides, O Agni!

5. Even from great guilt, O Agni, from the prison of gods and of mortals—let us, thy friends, never be harmed; grant luck and weal to kith and kin.

6¹. As you formerly have released, O Vasus, the buffalo cow bound by the foot, O worshipful gods, thus take away from us this distress. May, O Agni, our life be further prolonged.

NOTES.

The same Rishi and metre.—Verse 4=TS. IV, 7, 15, 6; MS. III, 16, 5. Verse 5=MS. IV, 11, 1. Verse 6=TS. IV, 7, 15, 7; MS. III, 16, 5; IV, 11, 1.

Verse 2.

Note 1. With the beginning of this verse, comp. above, IV, 2, 6.

Verse 3.

Note 1. Comp. Roth, Zeitschr. der D. Morg. Ges., XLVIII, 114.

Verse 4.

Note 1. Grassmann is right in giving to purushatrā the meaning 'unter den Menschen,' and in observing with reference to our passage: 'wo die Bedeutung "nach Menschenweise" (s. purushātā) besser passt.' The same is the opinion of Böhtlingk-Roth. No doubt we should read purushātā; cf. VII, 57, 4=X, 15, 6. yāt vah āgah purushātā kārāma; IV, 54, 3. ākitti yāt kakrimā . . . purushatvātā.

Verse 6.

Note 1. This verse is identical with Rig-veda X, 126, 8.

MANDALA IV, HYMN 13.

ASHTAKA III, ADHYĀYA 5, VARGA 13.

1. Benevolent Agni has looked on the breaking of the shining dawns, on the bestowal of treasures. Come to the dwelling of the virtuous (mortal), ye Asvins. The god Sūrya rises with his light.

2. The god Savitṛi has sent his light upward¹, shaking his banner² like a warrior who fights for cows³. Varuṇa and Mitra follow the law, when they make the Sun rise on heaven.

3. Him whom (the gods) dwelling in firm peace, and never losing their object, have created for dispersing the darkness—Him, the Sun, the all-observer, the seven young fallow mares carry forward.

4. With (thy horses) most ready to run thou goest¹ forward, spreading out thy web (of light), removing (from the world) the black cloth (of darkness), O god. The rays of the Sun have shaken² the darkness, and have sunk it into the waters like a hide.

5. Unsupported, unattached, spread out downwards-turned—how is it that he¹ does not fall down? By what power of his does he move? Who has seen (that)? Erected as the pillar of Heaven he protects the firmament.

NOTES.

The same Rishi and metre.—Verse 4=TB. II, 4, 5, 4.

This hymn and the next evidently form a couple. They have the same number of verses, and are composed in the same metre. They are both addressed to Agni in his matutinal character, or rather to the Asvins, who are invoked to partake of the matutinal oblation (13, 1; 14, 1. 4). The first verse of 13 is quite similar to that of 14; the same may be said of the second verses of the two hymns; the concluding verse of both is identical.

Verse 2.

Note 1. Cf. above, IV, 6, 2.

Note 2. Cf. Zend drafsha, 'banner.'

Note 3. Cf. IV, 40, 2. sátvâ bharisháh gavisháh.

Verse 4.

Note 1. The Sun is addressed.

Note 2. It is more natural to take dávidhvatah as nom. plur. than as gen. sing. (Ludwig).

Verse 5.

Note 1. The Sun.

MANDALA IV, HYMN 14.

ASHṬAKA III, ADHYĀYA 5, VARGA 14.

1. Agni Gâtavedas, the god, has looked on the dawns that shine with all their might¹. Come hither, O *Nâsatyas*², wide-ruling (gods), on your chariot to this our sacrifice.

2. The god Savitri has sent his shine upward, producing light for the whole world. The Sun, shining with his rays, has filled Heaven and Earth and the air.

3. The red one¹, carrying hither (bliss)², has come with her light, the great, brilliant one, shining with her rays. Ushas, the goddess, awakening (all beings) to welfare, goes along on her well-yoked chariot.

4. May those chariots and horses, most ready to drive, drive you¹ hither at the break of dawn. For these Somas are for you¹ that you may drink the honey-drink². Rejoice, O manly ones, at this sacrifice.

5. = IV, 13, 5.

NOTES.

The same Rishi and metre.—No verse of this hymn occurs in the other Samhitâs. On the parallelism in which IV, 14 stands to IV, 13, see the introductory note on IV, 13.

Verse 1.

Note 1. On mâhobhih, see vol. xxxii, p. 196 seq. (I, 165, 5, note 3). Here the word refers to the powerful light of the dawn, not of Agni, cf. VI, 64, 2. úshaḥ devi róṁamānā máhobhiḥ.

Note 2. On the mention of the Násatyas (Asvins) in this connection, compare the introductory note on IV, 13.

Verse 3.

Note 1. The Dawn as before.

Note 2. That an object like 'bliss' is to be supplied, is shown by such passages as I, 48, 9. úshaḥ . . . áváhantī bhūri asmábhyam saúbhagam; I, 92, 3. (the Dawns) ísham váhantīḥ sukríte sudánave; I, 113, 15. (the Dawn) áváhantī póshyá váryāni.

Verse 4.

Note 1. The text has the dual of the pronoun. The Asvins are addressed.

Note 2. It is the peculiar character of the Asvins that they drink mádhu; see Hillebrandt, Vedische Mythologie, vol. i, p. 239 seq. H. O., Religion des Veda, p. 208, note 4; p. 367, note 2.

MANDALA IV, HYMN 15.

ASHTAKA III, ADHYĀYA 5, VARGA 15-16.

1. Agni, the Hotrī, he who is a strong horse, is led around at our sacrifice, the god worshipful among the gods.

2. Agni goes thrice¹ around the sacrifice, like a charioteer, conveying the enjoyment² to the gods.

3. Agni, the lord of booty, the sage, has circum-ambulated the oblations, bestowing treasures on the worshipper.

4. This (is the Agni) who is kindled in the front for Devavāta's son, the *Sriṅgaya*¹, the brilliant (god), the deceiver of foes.

5. May the strong mortal be the master of this (god), of an Agni like this, with sharp teeth and bountiful.

6¹. Him they clean day by day like a racer that wins (booty), like (Soma), the red young child of Heaven².

7. When Sahadeva's son, the prince, thought of me with two bay horses¹, I rose up like one who is called.

8. And immediately I accepted from Sahadeva's son, the prince, those adorable two bay horses which he offered me.

9. May this prince Somaka, Sahadeva's son, live long, for your sake, O divine Asvins!

10. Give long life, O divine Asvins, to this son of Sahadeva, the prince!

NOTES.

The same Rīshi. Metre, Gāyatrī.—Verses 1–3 = TB. III, 6, 4, 1; MS. IV, 13, 4. Verse 3 = SV. I, 30; VS. XI, 25; TS. IV, 1, 2, 5; MS. I, 1, 9.

The first three verses are characterised by the constant allusions to Agni's being carried around, and, in connection therewith, by the frequent repetition of the preposition pári. Probably these verses formed an independent Trika-hymn, the position of which would be according to the laws of arrangement of the Samhitā; this Trika seems, consequently, to belong to the original collection of hymns. The verses 4–10, on the other hand, or at least the verses 7–10, would seem to be a later addition; the verses 4–6 can be considered as a Trika belonging to the original Samhitā, though in this case it is difficult to explain why the verses 7–10, which do not contain any reference to Agni, have been inserted here at the end of the series of Agni hymns. Another argument against the separation of the verses 4–6 from the rest of the Sūkta is the mention of the prince Sriṅgaya in verse 4: verses 7–10 refer to a prince Somaka Sāhadevya, and we know from the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa (VII, 34, cf. Satapatha Brāhmaṇa II, 4, 4, 4) that this prince also belonged to the Sriṅgaya tribe.

Verse 2.

Note 1. Cf. above, IV, 6, 4.

Note 2. I. e. the offering which the gods enjoy.

Verse 4.

Note 1. This Sriṅgaya Daivavāta is mentioned also in VI, 27, 7.

Verse 6.

Note 1. The first Pāda of this verse is identical with the first Pāda of VIII, 102, 12.

Note 2. The red young child of Heaven seems to be the Soma. The Soma frequently is called arushá ('red'), and is said to be cleansed by men; in IX, 33, 5; 38, 5, the expression diváh śśuḥ ('the young child of Heaven') is used with regard to him.

Verse 7.

Note 1. I. e. when he thought of presenting me with the two horses.

MANDALA V, HYMN 1.

ASHTAKA III, ADHYĀYA 8, VARGA 12-13.

1. Agni has been wakened by the fuel of men, in face of the Dawn who approaches like a milch-cow. His flames stream forward to the sky like quick (birds) that fly up to a branch.

2. The Hotri has been wakened that there may be sacrifice for the gods. Gracious Agni has stood upright in the morning. When he has been kindled, his brilliant stream of flames has been seen. The great god has been released from darkness.

3. When he has wakened the string of the crowd (of worshippers)¹, the bright Agni anoints himself with bright cows². Then the Dakshinâ is yoked, striving for gain³. He who stands upright has, by the sacrificial ladles, sucked her who lies extended⁴.

4. Towards Agni the minds of the pious turn together as (all) eyes (turn) to the sun. When both Dawns of different colour¹ give birth to him, the white racer is born at the beginning of days.

5. For He, the noble one, has been born at the beginning of days, the red one has been laid down in the woods that have been laid down. Agni, the Hotri, the best sacrificer, has sat down, bestowing his seven treasures on every house.

6. Agni, the Hotri, the best sacrificer, sat down in the mother's lap, in the sweet-smelling place, the young sage growing up in many places, the righteous one, the supporter of tribes, and kindled in their midst.

7. They magnify with adorations that priest efficacious at sacrifices, Agni the Hotri, who has spread himself over heaven and earth according to Rita; they groom (Agni), the own racer (of men), with Ghrīta.

8. He who likes to be groomed, is groomed in his own (abode), the house-friend¹, praised by sages, our auspicious guest, the bull with a thousand horns who has the strength of such a one. O Agni! By this power thou surpassest all other (beings).

9. O Agni! Thou overtakest all other (beings) in one moment (for the sake of him) to whom Thou hast become visible as the fairest one, thou who shouldst be magnified, the wonderful, brilliant one, the beloved guest of human clans.

10. To thee, O youngest (god), the tribes bring tribute, O Agni, from near and far. Behold¹ the grace of the most glorious (god)! Mighty, O Agni, is thy great and glorious shelter.

11. Mount to-day, O shining Agni, the shining car, in the neighbourhood of the worshipful (gods). Knowing the paths, the wide air¹, bring hither the gods that they may eat the oblation.

12. We have pronounced an adoring speech to the holy sage, to the manly bull. Gavishthira adoringly has sent his song of praise to Agni as the gold (i. e. the sun) far-reaching (is sent by the gods upward) to the sky.

NOTES.

The Rīshis are Budha Ātreya (cf. verse 1, ābodhi) and Gavishthira Ātreya (cf. verse 12). The metre is Trishubh.—Verse 1 = SV. I, 73; AV. XIII, 2, 46; VS. XV, 24; TS.

IV, 4, 4, 1. Verses 1-2=MS. II, 13, 7. Verses 1-3=SV. II, 1096-1098. Verse 5=TS. IV, 1, 3, 4. Verse 6=MS. IV, 11, 1; TB. I, 3, 14, 1. Verse 9=TB. II, 4, 7, 10. Verse 10=MS. IV, 11, 4; TB. II, 4, 7, 9. Verse 12=MS. II, 13, 7; TB. IV, 4, 4, 2; VS. XV, 25.

Verse 3.

Note 1. The meaning seems to be : when Agni has set into motion the string (representing the prayers, &c.) by which the worshippers tie and instigate him and the other powers of the sacrifice. Cf. IV, 1, 9. prá tám (scil. agním) mahyá rasanáyā nayanti; IX, 87, 1. ásvam ná tvā (scil. sómam) vâgínam margáyantaḥ ákṣha barhíḥ rasanábhiḥ nayanti. See also I, 163, 4-5.

Note 2. I.e. with bright ghṛita.

Note 3. The Dakshinā or sacrificial gift offered by the Yagamāna to the ministrant priests, is represented here as a car which is yoked in the morning. Cf. Bergaigne, Rel. Védique, I, 128; III, 283.

Note 4. 'He who stands upright' is Agni; 'she who lies extended' seems to be the cow, i.e. the ghṛita which Agni sucks by means of the sacrificial ladles.—See also Pischel, Vedische Studien, II, 113, from whose interpretation I differ.

Verse 4.

Note 1. I.e. Night and Dawn.

Verse 8.

Note 1. I cannot adopt the conjectures of Bartholomae (Bezenberger's Beiträge, XV, 197) on své dāmūnāḥ.

Verse 10.

Note 1. The human worshipper seems to be addressed; the 'most glorious one' is very probably Agni.

Verse 11.

Note 1. Vidvân, which may be construed with the genitive or with the accusative, stands here with both cases.

MANDALA V, HYMN 2.

ASHTAKA III, ADHYĀYA 8, VARGA 14-15.

1. The young mother carries in secret the boy confined¹; she does not yield him to the father. People do not see before them his fading² face laid down with the Arāti³.

2. Who is that boy, O young woman, whom thou, the Peshṭ¹, carriest? It is the queen who has borne him. Through many autumns the fruit of the womb has increased. I saw him born when his mother gave birth to him.

3. I saw him the gold-toothed, brilliant-coloured preparing his weapons far from his dwelling-place¹. After I have offered to him the ambrosia cleared (from all impure mixture)²—what may the Indraless, the hymnless do to me?

4. I saw him, the highly shining (Agni), walking far from his dwelling-place, like (a bull) together with the herd¹. Those (women) have not held him, for he has been born. The young women become grey².

5. Who have separated my young bull from the cows that¹ had no cow-herd, not even a stranger? May those who have held him, let him loose. May he, the knowing one, lead the cattle towards us.

6. Him, the king of dwellings (?)¹, the dwelling-place of people, the Arātis have laid down² among men. May the spells of Atri loose him. May the reproachers become reproachable (themselves).

7. Thou hast loosed the bound Sunaśepa from the thousand sacrificial posts ; for he toiled (worshipping thee). Thus, O Agni, loose from us the fetters, O knowing Hotri, sitting down here.

8¹. For thou hast gone away ² from me, because thou wert angry ; (this) the protector of the laws of the gods³ has told me. (But) Indra, the knowing one, has looked after thee. Instructed by him, O Agni, I have come hither.

9. Agni shines with mighty light ; he makes all things visible by his greatness. He conquers godless, wicked wiles. He sharpens his two horns in order to pierce the Rakshas.

10. And may the roarings of Agni mount up to the sky, with sharp weapons in order to kill the Rakshas. In his rapture his flames break down (everything); the godless hindrances do not hold him back.

11. This song of praise, O strong-born (Agni), I, the priest, have fashioned for thee, as a skilful workman (builds) a chariot¹. If thou acceptest that (praise), O god Agni, may we conquer thereby waters together with the sun.

12. May the bull¹ with mighty neck, grown strong, with no foe to resist him, get together the niggard's wealth. Thus the immortal (gods) have spoken to this Agni : may he grant protection to the man who has spread the Barhis ; may he grant protection to the man who brings offerings.

NOTES.

The Rishi of verses 1, 3-8, 10-12 is Kumâra Âtreya, or Vṛisa Gâna ; or both are the Rishis of these verses. Of the verses 2 and 9 Vṛisa alone is the Rishi. The metre is Trishūbh (verse 12, Sakvarī).—Verse 9=AV. VIII, 3, 24. Verses 9, 10=TS. I, 2, 14, 7. Verse 11=TB. II, 4, 7, 4.

A part of this hymn is very obscure. I do not think, as does Prof. Geldner (Festgruss an Roth, 192), that the story of the Sātyāyanakam (see Sāyana's commentary, and compare Pañkavimsa Brāhmaṇa XIII 3, 12), of the Purohita Vriśa, who drives with the king on the royal chariot and kills a boy, throws any real light on the difficult points of the hymn. Nor does it seem to me that, as is the opinion of Prof. Hillebrandt (Zeitschrift der Deutschen Morgenländischen Gesellschaft, XXXIII, 248 seq.), the first six verses, which Hillebrandt considers as an independent hymn, contain a description of how the fire which they try to produce by the attrition of the Araṇis, does not appear. In my opinion the hymn—which is really one hymn as the tradition gives it—is a prayer of a person who suffers, who feels himself bound by the fetters of distress (verse 7) and persecuted by the power of Rakshas (verses 9, 10). Agni, formerly resplendent, has decayed and has forsaken him : may Agni be restored to his former might (verse 6), and may we ourselves be released from all distress (verse 7, &c.). Possibly the hymn is connected with the rite of Punarādheya, where the sacrificial fire which has brought no luck to the sacrificer, is extinguished, and after an interval a new fire is established (H.O., Religion des Veda, p. 353). There may of course be other special points, beyond the reach of our conjectures, which, if known, would elucidate several of the obscure allusions so frequent in the first verses of the hymn.

Verse 1.

Note 1. The boy very probably is Agni.—With the words sámubdham gūhā bibharti, cf. I, 158, 5. súsamubdham ava-ádhuḥ.

Note 2. Not without hesitation I translate minát as if it were the middle minánám. Possibly the word means : 'which violates (the ordinances),' i.e. which does not shine and bring luck to men as it usually does. Ná seems, as it usually does (cf. Delbrück, Altindische Syntax, p. 543), to belong to the whole clause, and not to minát.

Note 3. Böhtlingk-Roth and Grassmann conjecture aratnáu; Hillebrandt, arâtáu; Geldner (Festgruss an Roth, 192), áratau. Geldner seems to be right (cf. verse 6), though it will scarcely be possible to determine what concrete being was here thought of. Geldner says, 'Gemeint ist die Pisákiká, welche die Gluth des Feuers entführt hat;' but, as has already been observed, I do not think that this traditional story on the meaning of our hymn is of any real value.

Verse 2.

Note 1. The meaning of Peshî is unknown. The word seems anyhow to describe the wrong mother as low or contemptible. Agni is degraded by sojourning with her, while his proper nature is glorious, for he is the queen's son.

Verse 3.

Note 1. Agni has forsaken his proper dwelling.

Note 2. On viprîkvat, cf. Taitt. Samhitâ III, 1, 6, 2. yunágmi tistráh viprîkah sūryasya te; Vāg. Samhitâ IX, 4. samprîkau sthah sám mâ bhadréna prîñktam; viprîkau sthah ví mâ pâpmánâ prîñktam. Vi-prik seems to mean, consequently, 'to free something from an admixture,' and amrîtam viprîkvat seems to be ambrosia in which dwells the power of getting free from bad admixtures. Thus in the passage quoted from the Taitt. Samhitâ the Sun is referred to as thrice cleared from all impure elements. It is quite uncertain whether the expression used here refers or not to the myth of the churning of the ocean (Geldner, loc. cit.), and I do not think that we should translate amrîtam viprîkvat, as Geldner does, 'das was sich als Nektar ausscheidet.'

Verse 4.

Note 1. I read with Böhtlingk-Roth sumádyûtham.

Note 2. The young women seem to be hostile beings of the same kind as the young woman mentioned in verse 2. They try to seize Agni, but he has been born already; his fiery, unassailable nature has been formed. I do not pretend to know what it means that then those female foes become grey with age. 'I think they are the Dawns who hold Agni in the dark; but when he escapes and is actually born, they, the Dawns, become grey.' M. M.

Verse 5.

Note 1. The relative pronoun yéshâm seems to refer both to the bull (maryakâm) and to the cows (góbhiḥ). The bull probably is Agni who has been separated from the cows, i.e. the oblations, prayers, &c. (?) 'Possibly the bull Agni, the rising sun, has been separated from the cows, the clouds or dawns.' M. M.

Verse 6.

Note 1. Vasám rāḡānam. I cannot follow the interpretation of Pischel, Vedische Studien, I, 210.

Note 2. Or ní daduḥ, 'they have bound him'? Cf. áva srigantu in the third Pāda, and n/ditam in verse 7.

Verse 8.

Note 1. The whole verse is nearly identical with X, 32, 6.

Note 2. I consider aíyeḥ (cf. Bartholomae, Arische Forschungen, II, 72, 76; Studien zur Indogermanischen Sprachgeschichte, I, 21) as 2nd sing. pluperfect of the root i.

Note 3. Varuṇa?

Verse 11.

Note 1. With the second Pāda compare I, 130, 6; V, 29, 15.

Verse 12.

Note 1. The bull of course is Agni.

MANDALA V, HYMN 3.

ASHTAKA III, ADHYĀYA 8, VARGA 16-17.

1. Thou, O Agni, art Varuṇa, when born; thou becomest Mitra when kindled. In thee, O son of strength, the Visvedevās (dwell). Thou art Indra for the mortal worshipper.

2. Thou becomest Aryaman when thou bearest¹ the secret name of the maidens, O self-dependent one. They anoint (thee) with cows² like the well-established Mitra³, when thou makest husband and wife one-minded.

3. For thy glory the Maruts have cleansed themselves¹, who are thy fair and brilliant offspring, O Rudra²! The footprint of Viṣṇu which is put down in the highest place: therewith thou protectest the secret name of the cows.

4. By thy beauty, O god, the gods are beautiful to behold¹. Assuming many (powers or goods) they attached themselves to immortality. Men have set down Agni as the Hotṛi, the Uṣis, honouring (him), the praise of Āyu².

5. There is no (other) Hotṛi before thee, a better sacrificer¹; no one surpasses thee, O self-dependent one, by wisdom. And that house of which thou art the guest, he², O god, will overcome the mortals by his sacrifice.

6. May we overcome the mortals, O Agni, protected by thee, striving for wealth, awaking (thee) with offerings; may we (overcome mortals) in the contest, in the distribution¹ of days; may we (overcome them) by wealth, O son of strength!

7. If a man should turn upon us sin or guilt, bring ye the evil on him who pronounces evil spells (against us). Destroy, O knowing one, such a curse, O Agni, (of a man) who injures us by falsehood.

8. Thee, O god, the ancient (mortals) have made their messenger at the break of this (dawn), and have sacrificed with their oblations, when thou goest along, O Agni, in the abode of wealth, a god kindled by the mortals and by the Vasus.

9. Protect the father—drive away (evil) as the knowing one—(the father) who is considered¹ as thy son, O son of strength². When, O sapient (Agni), wilt thou look upon us? When wilt thou, who knowest Rîta, requite (human deeds)?

10. The father¹ adoring gives many names to thee, O Vasu, if thou shouldst take pleasure therein. Will not Agni, delighting in his divine power, grant us his favour, he who has grown strong?

11. Thou indeed, O Agni, youngest one, bringest thy praiser across all dangers. Thieves have been seen and deceitful men; dishonest people have come with unknown designs.

12. These our processions have been directed towards thee. Yes, to thee, the Vasu, this guilt has been confessed. Verily this Agni, grown strong, will never surrender us to the curse nor to him who does harm to us.

NOTES.

The Rîshi is Vasusruta Âtreya; the metre is Trishṭubh.—No verse of this hymn occurs in the other Saṃhitās.

Verse 2.

Note 1. I think that we must read bîbharshi.

Note 2. I.e. with butter.

Note 3. On Mitra as the god of alliances, and the anointing of Mitra—possibly of an object that represents Mitra—see H. O., Religion des Veda, p. 186, note 1. Cf. also Pischel, Vedische Studien, I, 92 seq.

Verse 3.

Note 1. I.e. they have adorned themselves. Cf. VII, 39, 3. urāṁ antárikṣhe margayanta subhrāh.

Note 2. Rudra of course is here a name of Agni.

Verse 4.

Note 1. Sudrīśah, which I have translated as nom. plur., may also be understood as gen. sing.: 'by thy beauty, who art beautiful to behold, O god, the gods, assuming, &c.'

Note 2. Cf. Narāsaṁsa.—This hemistich is nearly identical with IV, 6, 11.

Verse 5.

Note 1. Comp. above, III, 17, 5.

Note 2. The construction is rather free.

Verse 6.

Note 1. Vidátheshu áhnām: cf. above, I, 31, 6, note 2 (p. 26 seq.).

Verse 9.

Note 1. See Neisser, Bezzenberger's Beiträge, XVIII, 310.

Note 2. Bergaigne (Religion Védique, II, 103) proposes to read yodhi without accent and to derive it, as Delbrück does, from yu (not from yudh); he translates the first hemistich: 'Protège-nous, écarte le père qui passe pour ton fils.' I think that he is right as to the verb yu, but that the accent of yódhi is correct; the words yódhi vidván form a parenthesis. Agni is invoked to protect the father of the sacrificing tribe (comp. verse 10), or the father of Agni himself, i.e. the sacrificer or the priest, who is himself considered, at the same time, as the son of Agni (see Bergaigne, I, 37 seq. ; Geldner, Vedische Studien, I, 167).

Verse 10.

Note 1. 'The father' may either be the father spoken of in verse 9 (see verse 9, note 2). Or the word may refer to Agni: 'He who adores thee, gives many names to thee, if thou, the father, O Vasu, &c.'

MANDALA V, HYMN 4.

ASHTAKA III, ADHYÂYA 8, VARGA 18-19.

1. Thee, O Agni, the treasure-lord of treasures, I gladden at the sacrifices, O king! May we, striving for gain, conquer gain through thee; may we overcome the hostilities of mortals.

2. Agni, the bearer of oblations, our ever-young father, is mighty, brilliant, beautiful to behold among us. Shine (on us) food with a good household¹. Turn all glory towards us².

3. Establish Agni as the Hotrî, the sage of the clans, the lord of human clans, the bright purifier, whose back is covered with ghee, the omniscient. May he obtain the best goods (for us) among the gods.

4. Enjoy thyself, O Agni, joined with Idâ, uniting thyself with the rays of the sun. Enjoy our fuel, O Gâtavedas, and bring the gods hither that they may eat our offerings.

5. Welcome, as our household-god and the guest in our dwelling, come to this our sacrifice as the knowing one. Dispelling, O Agni, all (hostile) attempts, bring to us the possessions of those who are at enmity with us.

6. Drive away the Dasyu with thy weapon, creating strength for thy own body. When thou bringest the gods across (to us), O son of strength, then, O manliest Agni, protect us in (our striving for) gain.

7. May we worship thee, O Agni, with hymns, with offerings, O purifier with glorious light. Stir for us wealth with all goods; bestow on us all riches!

8. Enjoy, O Agni, our sacrifice, our offering, O son of strength who dwellest in three abodes. May we be well-doers before the gods. Protect us with thy thrice-protecting shelter.

9. Bring us across all difficulties and dangers, O Gâtavedas, as with a boat across a river. Agni, being praised with adoration as (thou hast been praised) by Atri, be a protector of our bodies.

10. When I, the mortal, call thee, the immortal, thinking of thee with humble mind¹, bestow glory on us, O Gâtavedas; may I attain immortality, O Agni, with my offspring.

11. The well-doer to whom thou, O Agni Gâtavedas, createst pleasant freedom, will happily attain wealth with horses and sons, with valiant men and cows.

NOTES.

The same Rishi and metre.—Verse 1=TS. I, 4, 46, 2. Verse 2=TS. III, 4, 11, 1; MS. IV, 12, 6; 14, 15. Verse 5=AV. VII, 73, 9; TB. II, 4, 1, 1; MS. IV, 11, 1. Verse 9=TB. II, 4, 1, 5; TÂ. X, 2, 1; MS. IV, 10, 1. Verses 10, 11=TS. I, 4, 46, 1.

Verse 2.

Note 1. According to the traditional text, su-gârhapatyâh must be an epithet of ishah. But the conjecture of Böhlingk-Roth, su-gârhapatyáh, has great probability: 'as the good protector of our household, shine food on us.' Cf. AV. XII, 2, 45=TB. I, 2, 1, 20.

Note 2. The second hemistich is nearly identical with III, 54, 22.

Verse 10.

Note 1. See Pischel, Vedische Studien, I, 221.

MANDALA V, HYMN 5.

ASHTAKA III, ADHYĀYA 8, VARGA 20-21.

ĀPRĪ HYMN.

1. Sacrifice sharp ghṛita to the well-kindled light, to Agni Gâtavedas.

2. May the unbeguiled Narâsamsa make this sacrifice ready; for he is a sage with honey in his hand.

3¹. Agni, magnified by us, bring hither to our help the bright, beloved Indra, with easy-going chariots.

4. Soft like wool¹ spread thyself (O Barhis). The hymns have been sung to thee. Be to us for success, O beautiful (Barhis)!

5. O divine, easily passable doors, open yourselves for our protection. Fill the sacrifice (with bliss) further and further!

6. We approach (with prayers) Night and Morning, whose face is beautiful, the increasers of vital strength, the two young mothers of Rita.

7. On the wind's flight, magnified, ye two divine Hotṛis of man, come hither to this our sacrifice.

8¹. I/Ā, Sarasvatī, and Mahtī, the three comfort-giving goddesses, they who do not fail, shall sit down on the sacrificial grass.

9. Come hither as a friend, Tvashtri, and mighty in welfare, and also by thyself, protect us in every sacrifice.

10. Where thou knowest, O tree (i. e. sacrificial post), the secret names of the gods, to that place make the offerings go.

11. Svâhâ to Agni and Varuna! Svâhâ to Indra and the Maruts! Svâhâ to the gods for our offering!

NOTES.

The same Rîshi. Metre, Gâyatrî.—Verse 1=VS. III, 2. Verse 9=TS. III, 1, 11, 2. Verse 10=TB. III, 7, 2, 5.

Verse 3.

Note 1. The first hemistich is identical with I, 142, 4.

Verse 4.

Note 1. On ūrna-mradâh, see Lanman, Noun-Inflection, p. 560.

Verse 8.

Note 1. This verse is identical with I, 13, 9.

MANDALA V, HYMN 6.

ASHTAKA III, ADHYÂYA 8, VARGA 22-23.

1. I think of that Agni who is a Vasu, to whom the milch-cows go home, the swift horses (go) home, (our) own racers (go) home. Bring food to thy praisers!

2. He is Agni who is praised as the Vasu, he to whom the milch-cows come together, and the quickly running horses, and the well-born liberal patrons. Bring food to thy praisers!

3. For Agni, dwelling among all tribes, gives a racer to the clan. Agni (gives a racer) that is truly helpful for (winning) wealth¹: he (the racer) being well cherished, will attain precious gain. Bring food to thy praisers!

4. May we kindle thee¹, Agni, O god, the brilliant, never ageing, in order that yon highly miraculous fuel of thine² may shine in the sky. Bring food to thy praisers!

5. To thee¹, O Agni, our oblation is offered with a Rik, O lord of bright splendour, highly brilliant, wonderful lord of the clan, carrier of oblations! Bring food to thy praisers!

6. Those Agnis make everything precious prosper in the Agnis; they drive forward (precious wealth); they incite it; they speed it hither in the due way¹. Bring food to thy praisers!

7. Those flames of thine, O Agni, the racers, have boasted mightily—they who with the flight of their hoofs have made tremble¹ the stables of the cows. Bring food to thy praisers!

8. Bring fresh food with fine dwellings, O Agni, to us, thy praisers! May we be of those who have praised (thee), who have thee as their messenger, house by house. Bring food to thy praisers!

9. Thou warmest in thy mouth, O highly brilliant one, the two (sacrificial) ladles full of butter. And mayst thou fill us (with gifts) at our hymns, O lord of strength! Bring food to thy praisers!

10. Thus¹ they have driven, they have led², Agni in the due way by prayers and sacrifices. May he bestow on us plenty of valiant men, and that plenty of swift horses (wished for)³. Bring food to thy praisers!

NOTES.

The same Rîshi. The metre is Pañkti.—Verse 1=SV. I, 425. Verses 1-2=VS. XV, 41, 42; MS. II, 13, 7. Verses 1, 3, 2=SV. II, 1087-1089. Verse 3=TB. III, 11, 6, 4. Verse 4=SV. I, 419; AV. XVIII, 4, 88; MS. II, 13, 7. Verses 4, 5, 9=SV. II, 372-374; TS. IV, 4, 4, 6. Verse 9=VS. XV, 43; TS. II, 2, 12, 7.

Verse 3.

Note 1. At first sight the conjecture of Böhtlingk-Roth and Grassmann, rayím, is very tempting, cf. IX, 12, 9. rayím . . . su-âbhúvam; X, 122, 3. rayínâ . . . su-âbhúvâ. I believe, nevertheless, that on closer examination the traditional text will prove correct. Sá príták evidently refers to the racer (vâgín) cf. I, 66, 4=69, 5. vâgñ ná príták (cf. also X, 101, 7. prîñitâ ásvân): then it follows that su-âbhúvam also refers to the racer, and râyé (cf. I, 100, 16; III, 53, 16) will be quite right.

Verse 4.

Note 1. Te stands for the accusative ; see Pischel, Zeitschrift der Deutschen Morgenländ. Gesellschaft, XXXV, 715 ; Delbrück, Altindische Syntax, p. 205.

Note 2. This refers to the sun. By kindling the sacred fire men make the sun rise. See H. O., Religion des Veda, p. 110.

Verse 5.

Note 1. The pronoun 'to thee' stands twice, te in the first Pāda (where it is repeated from the first Pāda of verse 4, ā te agne), and túbhyam (or rather túbhya) in the fourth Pāda, unless we construe te havih.

Verse 6.

Note 1. See Pischel, Vedische Studien, II, 127.

Verse 7.

Note 1. See Gaedicke, Der Accusativ, p. 57.

Verse 10.

Note 1. On the nasalization of evāñ, cf. H. O., Prolegomena, p. 469 seq.

Note 2. Pischel (Vedische Studien, II, 127) explains aguḥ as agush, the contrary of sagūsh. Bartholomae (Studien zur Indogermanischen Sprachgeschichte, II, 159, note 2 ; cf. Indogermanische Forschungen, III, 108, note 1) conjectures águr (= ágman) yamuḥ : 'sie haben ihn jetzt auf seiner Bahn festgehalten.' I believe, as Sáyana does, that this aguryamuḥ contains two independent verbs, aguḥ and yamuḥ, which are quite correct forms of the roots ag and yam (see Delbrück, Altindisches Verbum, p. 65). As to ag, cf. VI, 2, 8. agyáse ágne vâgī ná ; V, 30, 14. átyah ná vâgī raghúḥ agyámānah ; as to yam II, 5, 1. sakéma vâgīnah (i.e. agnéh) yámam. But should not the accent be yamúh ?

Note 3. The fourth Pāda is identical with VIII, 6, 24.

MANDALA V, HYMN 7.

ASHTAKA III, ADHYĀYA 8, VARGA 24-25.

1. O friends, (bring) together your united food and praise to Agni, the strongest (god) of (human) dwellings, the offspring of Vigour, the mighty one—

2. At whose onslaught¹, wherever it be, men rejoice in the seat of men, whom the worthy ones kindle, whom (human) creatures produce.

3. When we get together the food and the offerings of men, he has grasped, with the strength of his splendour, the rein of Rita.

4. He indeed produces light even by night to him who is afar, when he, the ever-young purifier, destroys the lords of the forest.

5. He at whose officiating (men) pour down the offering of their sweat on the paths—to Him who is noble by his own nature, the worlds have risen as to ridges (of hills)—

6. He whom the mortal has acquired, the much-desired (god), for the refreshment of every one, the sweetener of nourishment, the homestead for the Āyu—

7. He indeed, the beast, mows off deserts and habitable land like a mower, the golden-bearded with brilliant teeth, the Ribhu of undecaying strength.

8. The bright one for whom (the ghrita) streams (quickly) like an axe¹, as at (the sacrifice of) Atri. Him the well-bearing mother has born, as soon as² she had enjoyed love³.

9. He who satisfies thee for refreshment, O Agni who drinkest butter : mayst thou bestow splendour, renown, and (wise) mind on such mortals ¹.

10. Thus I have seized upon the spirit of Adhrig(?) as upon a head of cattle given by thee ¹. May then Atri, O Agni, overcome the Dasyus who do not give (to the Brahmans); may Isha overcome the men (who do not give).

NOTES.

The Rishi is Isha Âtreya (cf. verse 10); the metre is Anushṭubh (verse 10, Pañkti).—Verse 1 = VS. XV, 29; TS. II, 6, 11, 4; IV, 4, 4, 3; MS. IV, 11, 1. Verses 2, 3 = TS. II, 1, 11, 3; MS. IV, 12, 4.

Verse 2.

Note 1. Yásya sám-ritau : see I, 127, 3.

Verse 8.

Note 1. With the expression svádhitih-iva rīyate (Lanman, Noun-Inflection, p. 375), compare V, 48, 4. ritīm parasóh-iva. Of course we must ask: what is the thing that streams so brightly and quickly as an axe moves? The thing in question is stated to stream (rīyate) for Agni now as it did at Atri's sacrifice. The expression 'as at Atri's sacrifice' seems to show that something like prayers or libations is alluded to. The verb rīyate, on the other hand, seems to point either to rivers, or to streams of Soma or of Ghrīta. Thus, considering that Ghrīta is mentioned much more frequently in connection with Agni than Soma, we are led to the conclusion that the poet speaks here of streams of Ghrīta. Should we not for súkīh read súki, which would be here as in IV, 1, 6; VI, 10, 2; IX, 67, 12, an epithet of Ghrīta? 'He for whom the bright (Ghrīta) streams quickly like an axe.' The origin of the reading súkih may easily be accounted for ; the word was thought to refer to Agni.—Another interpretation of this hemistich has been given by Benfey, Vedica und Linguistica, p. 177.

Note 2. Krâná : cf. I, 58, 3, note 1 (p. 47).

Note 3. 'Sobald sie den Liebesgenuss erlangt hatte.' Pischel, Ved. Studien, I, 71.

Verse 9.

Note 1. The first hemistich speaks of the worshipper in the singular, the second in the plural.

Verse 10.

Note 1. This hemistich is quite obscure. With manyúm á dade, cf., for instance, X, 48, 2. dásyubhyaḥ pári nrimnám á dade. Adhrigaḥ may be the genitive of a proper name, as I have translated it ; but this is quite doubtful. Was the hymn intended for a charm in which the sacrificer seized a head of cattle which represented the spirit of an enemy, and thus deprived that enemy of his courage ?

MANDALA V, HYMN 8.

ASHTAKA III, ADHYÂYA 8, VARGA 26.

1. Thee, O Agni, the men who love Rîta have kindled, the ancient ones thee the ancient, for the sake of bliss, O (god) who art produced by strength ; the highly-brilliant, worshipful, in whom all refreshment dwells, the household god, the lord of the house, the chosen.

2. Thee, O Agni, the clans have set down, the ancient guest, the flame-haired lord of the house, with mighty light, with many shapes, the winner of prizes, giving good shelter and good help, who is busy among the decayed (wood)¹.

3. Thee, O Agni, the human clans magnify, who knowest (the art of sacrificial) libations, who separatest (what was mixed)¹, the highest bestower of treasures, who, (though) dwelling in secret, O blessed one, (yet) art visible to all, mightily roaring, an excellent sacrificer, shining with ghee.

4. Thee, O Agni, the supporter, we always have praised with our songs and have sat down near thee with adoration. Thus being kindled, O Angiras, be pleased with us, as a god through the mortal's brilliant (offering)¹, with thy glorious splendours.

5. Thou, O Agni, manifold-shaped, bestowest vigour on every house in thy ancient way, O much-praised one ! Thou rulest with might over much food. This impetuosity of thine, when thou rushest forward impetuously, is not to be defied.

6. Thee, O Agni, when kindled, O youngest one, the gods have made their messenger and bearer of oblations. Thee who extendest over wide spaces, who dwellest in ghee, into whom offerings are poured, they have made their eye, impetuous, stirring thoughts.

7. Thee, O Agni, on whom offerings of ghee are poured, (men) desirous of thy favour have kindled from of old with good fuel. Thus, grown strong, increased by the plants, thou spreadest thyself over the terrestrial spaces.

NOTES.

The same Rishi. Metre, Gagati.—Verse 3=TS. III, 3, 11, 2. Verses 6, 7 = TB. I, 2, 1, 12.

Verse 2.

Note 1. The Padapāṭha gives garat-vīsham. I prefer this explanation to gara-dvīsham ('who hates decay').

Verse 3.

Note 1. Agni is, in the later ritual, worshipped as 'separator' (vīvikī), if the sacrificer's fires have become mixed with other fires. See Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa III, 7, 3, 5; Satapatha Brāhmaṇa XII, 4, 4, 2 (where this very verse is quoted), &c.

Verse 4.

Note 1. For yaśāsā, Böhtlingk-Roth conjecture yāsasā, which seems to me a conjectura nimis facilis. I think that the adjective yaśāsā is right, and that a noun, meaning 'offering' or the like, should be supplied. Cf. above, IV, 1, 16, note 4.

MANDALA V, HYMN 9.

ASHTAKA IV, ADHYĀYA 1, VARGA 1.

1. Thee, O Agni, the god, mortals bringing offerings magnify. I deem thee the Gâtavedas. Carry then the offerings (to the gods) in thy due way.

2. Agni is the Hotri of the dwelling where they offer gifts and spread the sacrificial grass, he with whom sacrifices, with whom glorious gains assemble.

3. And he whom the kindling-stick has born, the young one, like a young (calf), the supporter of human clans, Agni the best sacrificer—

4. And thou showest thyself hard to seize like a son of . . .¹, thou who art a burner of many woods, O Agni, like an animal (that consumes all grass) on a meadow².

5¹. And he whose smoky² flames come together, when Trita in heaven blows upon him like a smelter, sharpens (him) as in smelting (him)³ . . .

6. May I through thy protection, O Agni, and through the praises of Mitra—may we¹, like dispellers of malice, overcome the dangers of mortals.

7. Bring this wealth to us, O powerful Agni, to (these our) men. May he¹ give us dwelling; may he¹ give us prosperity; may he¹ help us in winning booty. And help us to grow strong in fights!

NOTES.

The Rishi is Gaya Âtreya (cf. V, 10, 3); the metre is Anushŭbh (verses 4 and 7, Pañkti).—Verse 1 = TB. II, 4, 1, 4.

Verse 4.

Note 1. Putráh ná hváryānām. The meaning of hváryá is conjectural. Cf. on hvára, to which it very probably is related, I, 141, 7, note 1; II, 2, 4, note 1. Does hváryá mean 'serpent,' or a kind of horse (VI, 2, 8. átyaḥ ná hváryāḥ sísuḥ)?

Note 2. The last Pāda is identical with VI, 2, 9. Considering the occurrence of the word hváryá here and in VI, 2, 8 (see note 1) we cannot believe that this is merely a casual coincidence.

Verse 5.

Note 1. On this verse, compare Neisser, Bezzenberger's Beiträge, XX, 40; Macdonell, Journal Roy. As. Soc., 1893, p. 446.

Note 2. Dhūmínaḥ may be gen. sing.: 'he whose, the smoky (god's), flames.'

Note 3. Ludwig and Neisser (Bezz. Beitr., loc. cit.) regard dhmâtārî (Padap. dhmâtári) as a nom. sing. masculine. I think that Geldner (Vedische Studien, I, 146, note 1) and Bartholomae (Indogermanische Forschungen, I, 496, note 2) are right in explaining it as a locative infinitive. Compare also Johansson, Kuhn's Zeitschrift, XXX, 415; Joh. Schmidt, Pluralbildungen der Indogermanischen Neutra, p. 247. Macdonell translates, 'as in a smelting furnace.'

Verse 6.

Note 1. The poet, who has begun his sentence in the first person singular ('may I'), goes on in the plural.

Verse 7.

Note 1. 'He,' i. e. Agni, or 'it,' i. e. the wealth?

MANDALA V, HYMN 10.

ASHTAKA IV, ADHYĀYA 1, VARGA 2.

1. Agni, bring us the mightiest splendour, O liberal one¹! With wealth and plenty cleave a path for us to booty.

2. Thou, O wonderful Agni, (protect) us, through thy power of mind, through the bounteousness of thy strength. Upon thee mysterious power has entered. (Thou art) indeed¹ like worshipful Mitra.

3. Thou, O Agni, increase for our sake the dominion and the prosperity of those liberal givers, (of those) men who have accomplished liberalities (towards us) for our songs of praise.

4. They who adorn prayers for thee, O bright Agni, the givers of horses¹: those men are powerful in their power, whose glory awakes by itself (shining) more mightily than even the sky².

5. Those shining flames of thine, Agni, go fiercely along, like lightnings (flashing) around the earth, like a thundering chariot bent on victory.

6. Now then, Agni, (come) for our protection, and for the reward of the urgent (worshipper)! May our liberal patrons pass across¹ all regions²!

7. Thou, O Agni, Aṅgiras, who hast been praised and who art being praised, bring us, O Hotṛi, wealth which overpowers (even) skilful men, to thy praisers, and thou shalt be praised by us. And help us to grow strong in fights¹.

NOTES.

The same Rīshi. Metre, Anuṣṭubh (verses 4, 7, Pañkti).
—Verse 1 = SV. I, 81. The hymn seems to stand parallel with V, 9.

Verse 1.

Note 1. On adhrigo, compare above, III, 21, 4, note 1 (p. 284).

Verse 2.

Note 1. Krāñā : see I, 58, 3, note 1 (p. 47) ; von Bradke, Dyāus Asura, p. 35 ; Pischel, Vedische Studien, I, 71.

Verse 4.

Note 1. Sumbhānti āsva-rādhasaḥ ; see X, 21, 2.

Note 2. On the ablative dependent on a positive, compare Speijer, Sanskrit Syntax, p. 78, and see also Delbrück, Grundriss der vergleichenden Grammatik (Brugmann), III, 1, 216 ; Pischel, Göttinger Gelehrte Anzeigen, 1884, 509.

Verse 6.

Note 1. On the use of this infinitive, see Delbrück, Altindische Syntax, p. 416.

Note 2. The last Pāda is identical with IV, 37, 7.

Verse 7.

Note 1. The last words are identical with those of V, 9, 16, 17.

MANDALA V, HYMN 11.

ASHTAKA IV, ADHYĀYA 1, VARGA 3.

1. The guardian of people, the watchful one, Agni, the highly dexterous, has been born, for the sake of new welfare. With ghṛita on his face, with his mighty, heaven-touching (light) he, the bright one, brilliantly shines for the Bharatas.

2. Agni, the beacon of sacrifice, the first Purohita¹ men have kindled in the threefold abode². (Driving) on the same chariot with Indra and with the gods, he, the highly wise Hotṛi, has sat down on the Barhis for sacrificing.

3. Though not cleansed, thou art born bright from thy two mothers¹. Thou hast arisen as the joy-giving sage belonging to Vivasvant². They have strengthened thee by ghṛita, O Agni, into whom oblations are poured. Smoke, reaching the sky, has become thy beacon.

4. May Agni straightway come to our sacrifice. Men carry Agni here and there, house by house. Agni has become the messenger, the carrier of oblations. Choosing Agni they choose a thoughtful (god).

5. For thee, O Agni, is this sweetest speech, for thee this prayer; may this one do thy heart good¹! The prayers fill thee with power and strengthen thee, like great rivers the Sindhu.

6. Thee, O Agni, who wert hidden, dwelling here and there in every wood, the Aṅgiras have discovered¹. Thus thou art born, produced by attrition, a mighty force. Thee, O Aṅgiras, they call the son of strength.

NOTES.

The Rishi is Sutambhara Âtreya, the metre Gagati.—
Verses 1, 6, 2=SV. II, 257-259; TS. IV, 4, 4, 2-3.
Verses 1, 6, 5=MS. II, 13, 7. Verses 1, 6=VS. XV, 27-28. Verse 3=TB. II, 4, 3, 3.

Verse 2.

Note 1. This Pâda is identical with the first Pâda of X, 122, 4.

Note 2. The three sacrificial fires are alluded to.

Verse 3.

Note 1. The two kindling-sticks.

Note 2. Vivâsvatah is genitive, not ablative, as Pischel, Vedische Studien, I, 241, believes. Agni opens his earthly career by doing service at the sacrifice of Vivasvant, i. e. originally, in my opinion, the first man. Comp. H. O., Religion des Veda, p. 122.

Verse 5.

Note 1. On the curious spelling manîshâ iyâm in the Samhitâ text, instead of manîsheyâm, see the Rig-veda Prâtisâkhya 163; H. O., Prolegomena, p. 386.

Verse 6.

Note 1. The ancestors of the priestly tribes, being the first priests themselves, discover Agni.

MANDALA V, HYMN 12.

ASHTAKA IV, ADHYĀYA 1, VARGA 4.

1. To the mighty, sacrificial Agni, to the bull of *Rita*¹, the Asura, I bring this prayer and this song, which is turned towards him, to (him) the bull, as well-clarified ghṛita (is poured) into his mouth at the sacrifice.

2. O knower of Rita, know the Rita! Bore for many streams of Rita. I (do) not (serve) a *Yātu*¹ by violence nor by falsehood; I serve the Rita of the red bull².

3. How, O Agni, performing the Rita through Rita, mayst thou become a witness of our newest¹ hymn? The god, the protector of the seasons, knows of my seasons². I (do) not (know another) lord but him who attains (for us) this wealth.

4. Who, O Agni, are thy fetterers to (fetter) the impostor¹? What brilliant guardians were successful? Who, O Agni, drink the drink of falsehood? Who are the protectors of untrue speech?

5. These friends of thine, O Agni, turning themselves from (thee)¹, they who had been kind, have become unkind. They have harmed themselves by their own speeches, uttering wrong words to the righteous.

6. He who magnifies thy sacrifice, O Agni, by adoration, and serves¹ the Rita of the red bull: may a large, good dwelling come to him, to the offspring of the advancing Nahusha.

NOTES.

The same Rishi; the metre is Trishúbh.—No verse of this hymn occurs in the other Samhitás.

Verse 1.

Note 1. The genitive ritásya seems to depend on vríshne, not on mánma. On the connection of Agni with the Ríta, see Bergaigne, III, 229 seq.; H.O., Religion des Veda, 201.

Verse 2.

Note 1. A bad demon.

Note 2. Of Agni.

Verse 3.

Note 1. I think that návyaḥ stands for návyasaḥ. Thus Ludwig translates: 'des neuen liedes.' It seems evident that it is not the nominative of návya, 'praiseworthy' (Böhtlingk-Roth, Grassmann).

Note 2. Probably we ought to read ritapá ritánâm. Cf. IV, 23, 4. deváh bhuvat návedáh me ritánâm, and see III, 20, 4, note 1 (above, p. 282). The translation will be: 'The god, the protector of Ríta, knows of my (deeds of) Ríta.'

Verse 4.

Note 1. Or ripávaḥ? 'Who, O Agni, are the impostors who fetter thee?'

Verse 5.

Note 1. On víshunáh, compare V, 34, 6: ásunvataḥ víshunáh sunvatáh vridháh.

Verse 6.

Note 1. The second verse (ritám sapâmi arushásya vríshnaḥ) shows with evidence that for sá páti we ought to read sápâti (see Roth, Kuhn's Zeitschrift, XXVI, 49, and compare on the expression ritám sap, Geldner, Vedische Studien, II, 135).

MANDALA V, HYMN 13.

ASHṬAKA IV, ADHYĀYA 1, VARGA 5.

1. Praising we call¹ thee ; praising let us kindle¹ thee, Agni, praising, for thy help.

2. Desirous of riches, we devise to-day an effective song of praise, of Agni the heaven-touching god¹.

3. May Agni take pleasure in our prayers, he who is the Hotri among men. May he sacrifice¹ to the divine host.

4. Thou, O Agni, art widely extended, the gladly accepted, desirable Hotri ; through thee they spread out the sacrifice.

5. The priests make thee grow, O Agni, the greatest acquirer of wealth, the highly praised one. Bestow thou on us abundance of heroes.

6. Agni ! Thou encompassest the gods as the felly (encompasses) the spokes (of a wheel). Thou strivest¹ for brilliant wealth.

NOTES.

The same Rishi. The metre is Gāyatrī.—Verse 2=MS. IV, 10, 2 (cf. TS. V, 5, 6, 1). Verses 2-4=SV. II, 755-757. Verse 4=TB. II, 4, 1, 6 ; MS. IV, 10, 2. Verse 5=TS. I, 4, 46, 3 ; MS. IV, 11, 4. Verse 6=TS. II, 5, 9, 3. As the Sāma-veda forms a Trika of the verses 2-4, not 1-3 or 4-6, we have here an instance of those liberties which the arrangers of the Sāma-veda not unfrequently took with regard to the Rig-veda text (see H. O., Zeitschrift der Deutschen Morgenländischen Gesellschaft, XXXVIII, 469).

seq.) ; we have no reason, in such a case, to resort to such an expedient as changing the traditional order of verses in the Rig-veda text.

Verse 1.

Note 1. We have first the indicative, then the optative.

Verse 2.

Note 1. Divispr̥śah no doubt is genitive sing. referring to Agni, not nominative pl. referring to the worshippers.

Verse 3.

Note 1. Ludwig is right in observing here : ‘eigentlich er spreche die yāgyās als einladung für die götter.’

Verse 6.

Note 1. On riñgase, comp. Bartholomae, Indogermanische Forschungen, II, 281 ; Neisser, Bezzenberger's Beiträge, XX, 59. I take the form here as 2nd singular.

MANDALA V, HYMN 14.

ASHTAKA IV, ADHYĀYA 1, VARGA 6.

1. Awaken ¹ Agni by thy song of praise, kindling (him) the immortal one. May he place our offerings among the gods.

2. Him, the immortal god, the mortals magnify at their sacrifices, the best sacrificer among the tribe of men.

3. Him indeed they all magnify, the god, with the (sacrificial) ladle that overflows with ghṛita, Agni, in order that he may bear the oblation.

4. Agni when born has shone, killing the Dasyus, (killing) darkness by light. He has found the cows, the waters, the sun ¹.

5. Worship Agni, the sage who should be magnified, whose back is covered with ghṛita. May he come and hear my call ¹.

6. They have made Agni grow by ghṛita, him who dwells among all tribes, and by longing, eloquent praises.

NOTES.

The same Rishi and metre. — Verse 1 = TS. IV, 1, 11, 4; MS. IV, 10, 1; VS. XXII, 15. Verse 3 = TS. IV, 3, 13, 8; MS. IV, 10, 1. Verse 4 = MS. IV, 10, 2.

Verse 1.

Note 1. We have no reason and, unless we write bodhaya, no right for taking bodhaya as an equivalent of bodhayāni (Ludwig).

Verse 4.

Note 1. Agni is considered here, as is done frequently, as the performer of deeds which properly belong to Indra (see H. O., Religion des Veda, 98 seq.). Indra is the conqueror of the cows and of the waters ; as to the sun, it may be said of both gods with the same right that they have acquired it for mankind (Religion des Veda, 110 seq. ; 15c seq.).

Verse 5.

Note 1. Although me can be accusative (Pischel, Zeitschrift der Deutschen Morgenländischen Gesellschaft, XXXV, 714 seq.), I have no doubt that it is here genitive, and depends on hávam. Cf. II, 24, 15. véshi me hávam ; X, 61, 4. vítám me yagñám.

MANDALA V, HYMN 15.

ASHTAKA IV, ADHYĀYA 1, VARGA 7.

1. I bring a prayer to the worshipper, the renowned sage, the glorious, ancient one. Agni is the highly gracious Asura, taking his seat in ghṛita, the holder of wealth, supporting goods.

2. By Rita they have supported the supporting Rita, near the powerful (performer)¹ of sacrifice, in highest heaven, the men who sit² on the supporting support of the sky, and who with born (men) attained to the unborn.

3. Dispelling anguish¹ they spread out for the ancient one² his bodies³, mighty vital power, difficult to overcome. May he, the new-born, traverse the spaces. They have stood round him as round an angry lion.

4. When thou carriest, spreading out, man after man like a mother, for their nourishment and for their sight, when thou growest old¹ assuming life after life, thou goest around by thyself in manifold shapes.

5. May gain protect now the boundaries of thy strength, the wide, firmly supporting milkstream¹ of wealth, O god! Putting down thy foot in secret like a thief², thou hast enlightened and freed Atri for the sake of wealth mightily³.

NOTES.

The Rishi is Dharuṇa Āṅgīrasa (cf. dharúṇaḥ vásvaḥ agníḥ, verse 1; ritám dharúṇam, diváh dhárman dharúne, verse 2; dógham dharúṇam, verse 5); the metre, Trishúbh.—No verse of this hymn occurs in the other Samhitás.

Verse 2.

Note 1. It may be asked whether sáká, beside its meaning 'the powerful (helper),' may also mean 'the power.' This would suit very well, V, 30, 10. sám táḥ (scil. gáh) índraḥ asrigat asya sákáḥ; VI, 19, 4. tám vaḥ índram katínam asya sákáḥ ihá núnám vāgayántaḥ huvema. The translation then would be: 'by the power of sacrifice.' Böhtlingk-Roth conjecture sáke.

Note 2. I believe that sedúshaḥ stands for the nominative, cf. deváh ábibhyushaḥ, I, 11, 5; S. B. E. XXXII, p. 28. This sedúshaḥ led on to a second accusative standing for the nominative, nr̥ṇ.—The men sitting on the support of the sky seem to be the forefathers who have established the universal laws, the Āṅgīras.

Verse 3.

Note 1. I consider amhoyúvaḥ as nom. plur. masc., but it may also be gen. sing. masc., or acc. plur. fem., as an epithet either of Agni or of his tanvāḥ.

Note 2. The ancient one (pūrvyá) seems to be Agni (cf. verse 1).

Note 3. Cf. VI, 46, 12. yátra sūrásaḥ tanvāḥ vitanvaté.

Verse 4.

Note 1. I think, like Ludwig, that garase should be accented.

Verse 5.

Note 1. These are accusatives.—Cf. on this passage, Pischel, Vedische Studien, I, 39 seq.

Note 2. Cf. H. O., Prolegomena, p. 73.

Note 3. Cf. VI, 1, 2. maháḥ rāyé kitáyantaḥ.—See Geldner, Ved. Studien, I, 268.

MANDALA V, HYMN 16.

ASHṬAKA IV, ADHYĀYA 1, VARGA 8.

1. Sing¹ (a song that gives) mighty vital power, to the light, to god Agni, whom the mortals have placed in front² like Mitra by their praises³.

2. For he, Agni, the Hotṛi of men, day by day, in the arms of Daksha, discloses the offering in the due way, as Bhaga¹ (discloses) a treasure.

3. (We abide [?]) in his praise, the liberal (god's), in his friendship, the mightily brilliant one's, in whom, the loudly roaring Aryan, all (beings) have put together their strength.

4. For verily, O Agni, (thou belongest [?]) to them¹ through thy bounteousness² in (bestowing) abundance of heroes. Him indeed, the vigorous one, his glory the two worlds could not encompass³.

5. Now then, Agni, come hither and, being praised, bring treasure¹ to us who, we ourselves and our liberal givers, may acquire welfare together. And help us to grow strong in fights.

NOTES.

The Rishi is Pûru Âtreya (cf. 17, 1); the metre Anushubh (verse 5, Pañkti). This hymn and V, 17 are parallel hymns; the concluding words of both are identical (see also V, 9, 7; 10, 7).—Verse 1=SV. I, 88.

Verse 1.

Note 1. Ārka may be first or second person.

[46]

D d

Note 2. Dadhiré puráh: they have made him their Purohita.

Note 3. Comp. above, V, 9, 6.

Verse 2.

Note 1. On Bhaga, the divine Bestower or Dispenser of riches, cf. Herbert Baynes. The Biography of Bhaga (Actes du huitième Congrès intern. des Orientalistes, Sect. II, fasc. 1, pp. 83 seq.).

Verse 4.

Note 1. To them, i. e. the Maghavans. Compare below, 18, 3. 4.

Note 2. Mamhánâ seems to be instrumental. Comp. 10. 2; 18, 2.

Note 3. Agni is himself yahvá; so ná cannot be the comparative particle, but it must be the negation. Similarly it is said in II, 16, 3 that Heaven and Earth cannot encompass the indriya of Indra; cf. also X, 27, 7.

Verse 5.

Note 1. Váryam seems to depend on á bhara. With the whole phrase compare the first Pâda of V, 17, 5.

MANDALA V, HYMN 17.

ASHTAKA IV, ADHYĀYA 1, VARGA 9.

1. May the mortal truly by sacrifices, O god, (magnify) the stronger one for help; may the Pûru, when good service has been performed, magnify Agni (and thereby draw him) hither for his aid.

2. For thou art manifestly considered as his (i. e. Agni's) disposer, highly brilliant by thyself¹: (magnify then Agni who is) a firmament of bright splendour, lovely beyond² thought³.

3. (It is) yonder (sun?) who verily has been yoked by his (i. e. Agni's) light¹ through the impetuous speech²—(by the light of Agni) whose flames mightily shine as if (they were made to shine) by the sperm of heaven³.

4. Through his, the wise one's, insight there is wealth on his, the wonderful (Agni's), chariot. And Agni is praised, he who is to be invoked among all peoples.

5. Now indeed our liberal lords have manifestly attained¹ treasure. Offspring of vigour! Protect us for the sake of victory! Help us to welfare! And assist us to grow strong in fights!

NOTES.

The same Rishi and metre.—No verse occurs in the other Samhitās.

Verse 2.

Note 1. I have translated the text in its traditional form, which I think is correct. On the vocative vidharman, comp. Delbrück, Altindische Syntax, p. 106. One could think, however, of reading vídharman as a locative, and sváyasastare, and of considering mányase as a first person, like arkase, &c.: 'For in his extension, brilliant by itself, I manifestly comprehend that firmament,' &c.

Note 2. Cf. VIII, 72, 3. antáh ikkhanti tám gáne rudrám paráh manisháyá. 'Ueber alle Vorstellung hinaus.' Ludwig.

Note 3. If we read sváyasastaráh, vídharman, and explain mányase as second person, the following translation of this difficult verse may be attempted: 'Thou art manifestly, indeed, considered as very brilliant by thyself in its (the firmament's) extension: that firmament of bright splendour (I praise), lovely beyond thought.' It is not very probable, however, that ásyā should refer to anything else but Agni.

Verse 3.

Note 1. Sâyana, whom Ludwig follows, very probably is right in interpreting asáu as the sun.—On the Sandhi, compare Roth, Zeitschrift der Deutschen Morgenländ. Gesellschaft, XLVIII, 679.

Note 2. Through the sacred spell, by which the sun is made to rise through the kindling of the fire.—Cf. VIII, 17, 15. tugá . . . grībhá.

Note 3. Does this mean that Agni's flames shine like lightning which receives its light from the waters of the cloud, the sperm of heaven? Cf. IX, 74, 1, where it is said of the Soma mixed with water: diváh rétasā sakate.

Verse 5.

Note 1. I think that sakanta should be accented, because it is connected with hí.

MANDALA V, HYMN 18.

ASHTAKA IV, ADHYĀYA 1, VARGA 10.

1. May Agni, beloved of many, the guest of the house¹, be praised in the morning, the immortal who delights² in all offerings among the mortals.

2¹. To Dvita who by the liberal power of his dexterousness carries away injury², this praiser of thine, O immortal, prepares Soma in the due way.

3. I call for your sake Him who flames through long life, with the speech that belongs to the liberal patrons¹ whose chariot moves uninjured, O giver of horses²;

4. And in whom (dwells) brilliant thought, who guard the hymns of praise in their mouth, (whose) sacrificial grass is spread in the realm of the sun: they have invested themselves with glory.

5. On the liberal patrons who have given me fifty horses for my song of praise¹, bestow brilliant, mighty, high glory, O Agni; on those men (bestow glory) with (valiant) men, O immortal!

NOTES.

The Rishi is Mṛiktavâhas Dvita Âtreya (see verse 2); the metre is the same.—Verse 1 = SV. I, 85. Verse 5 = TB. II, 7, 5, 2.

Verse 1.

Note 1. Viśāh . . . âtithiḥ: cf. above, V, 3, 5.

Note 2. On ran with the accusative, compare Gaedicke, p. 76.

Verse 2.

Note 1. Compare on this verse Macdonell, Journal Roy. As. Soc., 1893, p. 463 seq.

Note 2. Dvita, who seems to be identified with Agni, is, in the same way as Trita (see Bloomfield, Proceedings Amer. Or. Soc., March, 1894, p. cxix seqq.), supposed to take away human sin and all sorts of mischief and misfortune (cf. VIII, 47, 16. Tritāya ka Dvitāya ka úshaḥ dushvāpnyam vaha). Thus he is invoked here as carrying away mṛiktá, i.e. injury.

Verse 3.

Note 1. The speech of the priest belongs to the sacrificer who has engaged him.

Note 2. This seems to be Agni, with an evident allusion to the human giver of horses (see verse 5).

Verse 5.

Note 1. Sadhástuti seems to be instrumental. Cf. Lanman, p. 381.

MANDALA V, HYMN 19.

ASHTAKA IV, ADHYĀYA 1, VARGA 11.

1. They are born for retirement¹. Out of the cover he² has shone forth, being a cover himself. In the lap of the mother he looks about³.

2. Causing him to discern (the pious and the impious?), they have sacrificed. With unwinking eyes they protect his manly power. They have penetrated into the firm stronghold¹.

3. The people of Svaitreya¹, his clans, have thriven brilliantly. Br̥haduktha with a golden ornament at his neck, is eager for the race as if by this honey-drink².

4. Like the dear milk of love¹—(a thing) unrelated with two (things) related²—like the gharma vessel with booty in its belly—undeceived, the deceiver of all³.

5. Sporting, O beam of light, appear to us, joined with the ash, with the wind. May those well sharpened . . . of his, standing on . . . , be sharp like . . .¹.

NOTES.

The R̥ishi is Vavri Ātreya (cf. verse 1. prá vavrēh vavrīh kīketa). The metre is Gāyatrī in verses 1, 2, Anuṣṭubh in verses 3, 4, Virāḍrūpā in verse 5.—No verse occurs in the other Samhitās.

This Sūkta seems to be anything rather than an ordinary Agni hymn. It may be a collection of verses belonging to an Ākhyāna, or of verses serving another purpose which we can scarcely hope to discover. In several parts of this Sūkta I must content myself with translating the words without being able to elucidate the poet's meaning.

Verse 1.

Note 1. I translate the noun avasthā in accordance with the Vedic meaning of the verb ava-sthā. Possibly it means the secret parts, cf. avastha, AV. VII, 90, 3 (B.-R.). Ludwig translates: 'Ein zustand erzeugt einen andern,' and paraphrases, 'Nur zustände und formen, gestalten lernen wir kennen, das wesen des gottes bleibt uns verborgen.' This seems too modern. Prof. Max Müller proposes: 'The remnants (afterbirth) have been brought forth. Skin has shone forth from skin.'—On the question who are the beings 'born for retirement,' I do not venture any conjecture.

Note 2. Is Agni meant?

Note 3. Cf. X, 5, 1. (Agnih) asmāt hridāh bhūrganmā ví kash/c.

Verse 2.

Note 1. The meaning seems to be that the worshippers (possibly the first worshippers, the Āṅgiras), by discovering Agni and by worshipping him, have conquered the hostile strongholds.

Verse 3.

Note 1. Svaitreya is mentioned as a victorious hero also in I, 33, 14.

Note 2. Does this phrase allude to the rite of offering, at the Vāgapeya sacrifice, to the horses that were going to run the sacred race, a naivāra karu? In the Mantras connected with this rite the words occur: 'Drink of this honey-drink' (asyā mādхваh pibata). See Rig-veda VII, 38, 8; Taittirīya Samhitā I, 7, 8, 2; Weber, Ueber den Vāgapeya, p. 30.

Verse 4.

Note 1. The retas?

Note 2. Does this refer to an offering or the like, composed of two substances related among each other (such as milk and butter), and a third substance unrelated (such as rice)? Of course all this is absolutely uncertain.

Note 3. Is this Agni?

Verse 5.

Note 1. The meaning of dhr̥ishág, vakshī, vakshanesthá is unknown.—On the first hemistich of this verse, compare Pischel, Vedische Studien, II, 54.

MANDALA V, HYMN 20.

ASHTAKA IV, ADHYĀYA 1, VARGA 12.

1¹. Whatever good, O Agni, best acquirer of gain, thou thinkest (fit), praise thou ² that (good), which is celebrated in songs, among the gods as our share.

2. They, Agni, who do not set into motion for thee (prayers or offerings), when grown full of mighty strength ¹, turn away to encounter the hatred and the tricks of him who follows another (i. e. a wrong) law ².

3. We choose thee as our Hotri; Agni, the giver of skill; offering delight (to thee) we call with our prayer (thee), the foremost at the sacrifices.

4. So that we, O strong one, (may be ready) for thy favour, for wealth and Rita, O highly wise one : thus may we day by day rejoice ¹ with cows and rejoice with heroes.

NOTES.

The Rishi is Prayasvanta Ātreya (cf. verse 3. prāyasvantaḥ havāmahe), the metre Anuṣṭubh, verse 4 Pañkti.— Verse 1 = VS. XIX, 64.

Verse 1.

Note 1. Professor Max Müller proposes to read vāgasā-tamam, as in IX, 98, 1. Pischel (Vedische Studien, I, 200) translates this verse : 'O Agni, das rühmenswerte Gut, das du für geeignet hältst, das preise du zugleich mit unsern Liedern (no gīrbhīr yūgam) den Göttern an (diis vendita).' He explains : 'Agni soll den Göttern Gut bringen und sie veranlassen, es den Menschen für die Lieder zu schenken.' I cannot follow Pischel's theory about the identity of the roots pan and paṇ (comp. about paṇ the quotations collected by Bartholomae, Indogermanische Forschungen, III, 180); and the paraphrase 'diis vendita' seems inadmissible to me. I differ from Pischel, besides, in the interpretation of yúgam; cf. rayám . . . yúgam, IV, 37, 5; ráyá yugá, VII, 43, 5; 95, 4.

Note 2. Neisser, Bezzenberger's Beiträge, XX, 55, explains panayá as standing for panayâma, and compares V, 56, 2 (?).

Verse 2.

Note 1. On vṛidh with the genitive, compare Delbrück, Altindische Syntax, p. 158; Macdonell, Journal Roy. As. Soc., 1893, p. 433. Grassmann's conjecture vṛiddhâ(v) is a failure.

Note 2. With the second hemistich compare VS. XXXVIII, 20 (Satapatha Brâhmaṇa XIV, 3, 1, 9); TÂr. IV, 11, 4 (cf. V, 9, 7).

Verse 4.

Note 1. Syâma stands, as the accent shows, in an independent clause. Prof. Max Müller proposes to change the accent: 'So that we . . . may for thy favour, for wealth and Rîta day by day rejoice with cows.'

MANDALA V, HYMN 21.

ASHTAKA IV, ADHYĀYA 1, VARGA 13.

1. Let us lay thee down, as Manus did. Let us kindle thee, as Manus did. O Agni Aṅgiras, sacrifice to the gods for the worshippers of the gods as (thou didst) for Manus.

2. For thou, O Agni, art kindled, highly pleased, among human people. To thee the (sacrificial) ladles proceed in due order, O well-born one who drinkest butter.

3. Thee all the gods unanimously have made their messenger. Serving thee, O sage, they magnify at the sacrifices (thee) the god.

4. Let the mortal magnify for your sake Agni, the god, with worship as is due to the gods. Being kindled, O brilliant one, shine! Sit down in the abode¹ of Rīta; sit down in the abode¹ of herbs².

NOTES.

The Rīshi is Sasa Ātreya (cf. verse 4); the metre is the same.—Verse 1 = TB. III, 11, 6, 3.

Verse 4.

Note 1. Literally 'in the womb.'

Note 2. On sasá, see III, 5, 6, note 2. Is the abode (or womb) of the herbs the Barhis? 'Is it satyasya?' M.M.

MANDALA V, HYMN 22.

ASHṬAKA IV, ADHYĀYA 1, VARGA 14.

1. Lo, Visvasāman! Like Atri sing to him who purifies with his flames, to the Hotri who should be magnified at the sacrifices, most delightful in the clan.

2¹. Lay down Agni Gâtavedas, the god, the priest. May the sacrifice which best encompasses the gods, proceed to-day in due order.

3. We, the mortals, approaching thee, the attentive-minded god, for thy help, have thought of thy desirable aid.

4. Agni, be intent on this—on this our word¹, O strong one. As such, O strong-jawed² lord of the house, the Atris strengthen thee by their praises; the Atris beautify thee by their prayers.

NOTES.

The Rishi is Visvasāman (see verse 1); the metre is the same.—No verse of this hymn occurs in the other Samhitās.

Verse 2.

Note 1. With this verse compare below, V, 26, 7. 8.

Verse 4.

Note 1. The verb kit stands here first with the genitive asyá, then with the accusative idám vákaḥ.

Note 2. Compare vol. xxxii, p. 301 (II, 34, 3, note 3).

MANDALA V, HYMN 23.

ASHTAKA IV, ADHYĀYA 1, VARGA 15.

1. Agni, bring hither, through the power of thy splendour, powerful wealth which may manifestly prevail over all tribes in the (contests for) booty.

2. O powerful Agni! Bring hither that wealth powerful in battles. For thou art the true, wonderful giver of booty rich in cows.

3. For all men who have spread out the sacrificial grass, unanimously ask thee, the beloved Hotri in the seats (of sacrifice), for many boons.

4. For he who dwells among all tribes, has invested himself with power against assault¹. Agni! In these dwelling-places shine to us richly, O bright one, shine brilliantly, O purifier!

NOTES.

The Rishi is Dyumna Visvakarshani Ātreya (cf. verse 1); the metre is the same.—Verses 1-2 = TS. I, 3, 14, 6-7.

Verse 4.

Note 1. Is abhīmāti (abhīmāti?) a dative? Should we read abhīmāti-sahāḥ (cf. X, 83, 4) as a compound: 'he has been established as the conqueror of assaults.'

MANDALA V, HYMN 24.

ASHTAKA IV, ADHYĀYA 1, VARGA 16.

1. Agni, be thou our nearest (friend) and our kind, protecting guardian.
2. Agni is Vasu, renowned as Vasu (or, renowned by goods). Obtain, (and) bestow (on us), most brilliant wealth ¹.
3. Listen to us then; hear our call; deliver us from every harmful man.
4. We entreat thee now, O brightest, shining (Agni), for thy grace, for our friends.

NOTES.

The Rishis are the Gaupāyanas or Laupāyanas, Bandhu (verse 1), Subandhu (verse 2), Srutabandhu (verse 3), Viprabandhu (verse 4). The metre is Dvipadā Virāg.—Verses 1, 2, 4, 3 = VS. III, 25–26. Verses 1, 4, 2, 3 = MS. I, 5, 3. Verses 1, 2, 4 = SV. II, 457–459; VS. XV, 48; XXV, 47. Verses 1, 4, 2 = TS. I, 5, 6, 2–3; IV, 4, 4, 8. Verse 1 = SV. I, 448.

Verse 2.

Note 1. The accusative dyumáttamam rayīm seems to depend both on ákṣhā nakshi and on dāh. I cannot find any reason for preferring the reading of SV. and TS. dyumáttamah (Ludwig).

MANDALA V, HYMN 25.

ASHTAKA IV, ADHYÂYA 1, VARGA 17-18.

1. Address thy song¹ for your sake to the god Agni, for his help. He is our Vasu. May the son of the dawns(?)² give us (wealth). May the righteous one help us across our enemies.

2. He is the true one, whom the men of old, whom the gods have kindled, the Hotri with the delightful tongue, rich in splendour with glorious shine.

3. As such, with thy widest thought and with thy best favour, shine wealth on us, excellent Agni, for our beautiful praises¹.

4. Agni reigns among the gods, Agni among mortals, entering among them. Agni is the carrier of our offerings. Serve ye Agni with prayers!

5. Agni gives to the worshipper a son most mightily renowned, a knower of mighty spells, most excellent, unconquered, who brings renown to his lord¹.

6. Agni gives a good lord who is victorious in battles with his men; Agni (gives) a steed, swiftly running, victorious (in races), unconquered.

7. Sing mightily to Agni the (song) which may best bring him (to us), O (god) rich in splendour¹! From thee (proceeds) wealth (mighty) like a buffalo-cow²; from thee proceed gains.

8. Thy brilliant flames resound mightily like the pressing-stone (of the Soma)¹. And thy roaring arose like thunder by itself from heaven².

9. Thus we have paid homage, desirous of goods, to powerful Agni. May he, the highly wise one, help us, as with a ship, across all enemies.

NOTES.

The Rīshis are the Vasūyavañ Ātreyañ (cf. verse 9); the metre is Anushūbh. Verse 5=MS. IV, 11, 1. Verse 6=MS. IV, 11, 1. Verse 7=SV. I, 86; VS. XXVI, 12; TS. I, 1, 14, 4. The Sūkta consists of hymns of three verses each.

Verse 1.

Note 1. On gāsi, comp. Neisser, Bezenberger's Beiträge, XX, 70, note 1; Bartholomae, Indogermanische Forschungen, II, 278, 283.

Note 2. Rishûñām: comp. above, I, 127, 10, note 5.

Verse 3.

Note 1. On suvrīktī, comp. above, II, 4, 1, note 1.

Verse 5.

Note 1. I.e. to his father? Or to his patrons?

Verse 7.

Note 1. This vocative very probably refers to Agni.

Note 2. Or 'like a king's consort'? It may be doubted whether the difference of accent (māhishî and mahishî) holds good for the Rig-veda.—Comp. on māhishiva, Roth, Zeitschr. der Deutschen Morgenländ. Gesellschaft, XLVIII, 680.

Verse 8.

Note 1. Brīhat is not the name of the Sāman; cf. X, 64, 15 (100, 8). grāvā yātra madhu-sút ukyāte brīhāt. Comp. Hillebrandt, Vedische Mythologie, I, p. 153.—The singular ukyate is explained by the connection with grāvā.

Note 2. With the last Pāda comp. the conclusion of V, 52, 6 (vol. xxxii, p. 312).

MANDALA V, HYMN 26.

ASHTAKA IV, ADHYĀYA 1, VARGA 19-20.

1. Agni, purifier! With thy splendour, with thy delightful tongue, O god, bring hither the gods and perform the sacrifice.

2. Thee therefore we approach, who swimdest in *ghṛita*¹, O (god) with brilliant light, thee of sun-like aspect. Bring hither the gods that they may feast.

3. Let us kindle thee, O sage, the brilliant offerer of feasts (to the gods), O Agni, the mighty (god) at the sacrifice.

4. Agni, come hither with all the gods to the gift of the offering. We choose thee as our Hotri.

5. Bring to the sacrificer who presses (Soma), Agni, abundance of heroes. Sit down on the sacrificial grass together with the gods.

6. Being kindled, Agni, conqueror of thousandfold (wealth), thou makest the ordinances (of the world) thrive, the praiseworthy messenger of the gods.

7¹. Lay down Agni Gâtavedas, the carrier of offerings, the youngest, the god, the priest.

8. May the sacrifice which best encompasses the gods, proceed to-day in due order. Spread the sacrificial grass that (the gods) may sit down on it.

9. May the Maruts, the Asvins, Mitra and Varuṇa sit down on this (sacrificial grass), the gods with all their folk.

NOTES.

The same Rishis. Metre, Gâyatri. Verses 1-3=SV. II, 871-873. Verse 1=TS. I, 3, 14, 8; 5, 5, 3; IV, 6, 1, 2; MS. I, 5, 1; II, 10, 1; IV, 10, 1; VS. XVII, 8. Verse 3=TS. I, 1, 11, 2; VS. II, 4; comp. MS. I, 1, 12. Verse 7=MS. IV, 11, 1.

As V, 26, this Sûkta also consists of Trika hymns.

Verse 2.

Note 1. Comp. above, IV, 2, 3, note 1.

Verse 7.

Note 1. With verses 7 and 8, compare above, V, 22, 2.

MANDALA V, HYMN 27.

ASHTAKA IV, ADHYĀYA 1, VARGA 21.

1. The good lord has presented me with two oxen together with a car, the most brilliant Asura among the liberal givers¹. Tryaruna, the son of Trivri-shan, O Agni Vaisvânara², has distinguished himself by (his gift of) ten thousand (cows ?)³.

2. To him who gives me one hundred¹ and twenty cows and two fallow steeds, harnessed and well-yoked, to Tryaruna grant thy protection, Agni Vaisvânara, who art highly praised and grown strong.

3. Thus, O Agni, desiring thy favour¹, Trasadasyu² (sings) for the ninth time³ to thee the youngest (god)—Tryaruna who responds to my, the strong-born's, many hymns with (the gift of) a yoked (chariot)⁴—

4¹. Who may thus announce me² to Asvamedha the liberal (prince): may he give to him who with his verse strives for gain; may he give to him who lives in the Rita for (acquiring) wisdom³—

5. Asvamedha whose gifts, a hundred speckled bulls, delight me like Soma juices with threefold admixture¹.

6. Indra-Agni! Bestow on Asvamedha, the giver of a hundred (bulls), abundance of heroes and mighty royal power, like the never-ageing Sun in heaven.

NOTES.

The Rīshis are Tryaruna Traivṛishna, Trasadasyu Paurukutsya, and Asvamedha Bhārata, or, according to others, Atri alone. The metre is Trishṭubh in verses 1-3, Anuṣṭubh in verses 4-6.

The position of this Sūkta shows that it is a later addition to the original collection.

Verse 1.

Note 1. With Delbrück, Grassmann, von Bradke (Dyaus Asura, p. 67) I read maghónām instead of maghónāh. Cf. III, 3, 4. ásurah vipah-kítām.

Note 2. On the invocation of Agni in Dānastutis, comp. H. O., Zeitschrift der Deutschen Morgenländischen Gesellschaft, XXXIX, 87.

Note 3. Geldner (Ved. Studien, I, 268) is right in observing: 'Hier ist unter sahasrāni eine bestimmte Geld- oder Wertsumme zu verstehen,' and in adding that it is not necessary that such a sum consisted in cows.

Verse 2.

Note 1. On satá, 'one hundred,' compare Delbrück, Altindische Syntax, p. 82.

Verse 3.

Note 1. Cf. X, 148, 3. sumatīm kakánāh.

Note 2. That is, very probably, a descendant of Trasadasyu.

Note 3. I do not adopt Sáyana's explanation navamam = navatamām, though I do not know what the number 'nine' means here. Ludwig is absolutely right in observing 'dass man eben hier, wo es sich um specielle concrete, uns aber sonst her nicht bekannte verhältnisse und ereignisse handelt, eben sich bescheiden muss, nichts zu wissen.'—Prof. Max Müller believes that navishtāya makes navamam for navatamam excusable : 'to the newest god the newest song.'

Note 4. Sāyana supplies to yuktena, not rathena, but manasā.

Verse 4.

Note 1. I do not think that Ludwig is right in believing that with verse 4 a new, independent section begins.—Comp. on this verse, vol. xxxii, p. 304 (II, 34, 7, note 3).

Note 2. Me may be accusative, as it frequently is. Should it be a dative, we should have to translate : 'Who may tell Asvamedha for my sake.'

Note 3. Medhām can scarcely depend on dādat ; wisdom is not a gift which liberal princes may bestow on singers.

Verse 5.

Note 1. Of milk, curds, and barley. See Hillebrandt, Vedische Mythologie, I, p. 209.

MANDALA V, HYMN 28.

ASHTAKA IV, ADHYĀYA 1, VARGA 22.

1. Agni kindled has sent his light to the sky ; turned towards the dawn he shines far and wide. (The sacrificial ladle) goes forward with adoration, rich in all treasures, magnifying the gods with sacrificial food.

2. Being kindled thou reignest over immortality ; thou attendest for welfare the man who prepares the sacrificial food. He whom thou furtherest, acquires all wealth and puts in front hospitality (towards thee), O Agni¹.

3. Agni, show thy prowess for the sake of great bliss. May thy splendours be highest. Make our householdership easy to conduct¹. Set thy foot on the greatness of those who show enmity to us.

4. I adore thy beauty, Agni, who hast been kindled, who art highly exalted. A bull, brilliant art thou. Thou art kindled at the sacrifices.

5. Being kindled, Agni into whom offerings are poured, sacrifice to the gods, best sacrificer, for thou art the carrier of oblations.

6. Sacrifice into (Agni) ; exalt Agni, while the sacrifice is going on. Choose him for your carrier of oblations.

NOTES.

The Rishi is Visvavârâ Âtreyaî (cf. verse 1); the metre is Trishûbh in verses 1 and 3, Gagatî in verse 2, Anushûbh in verse 4, Gâyatrî in verses 5 and 6. Verse 3=AV. VII, 73, 10; VS. XXXIII, 12; TS. II, 4, 1, 1; 5, 2, 4; MS. IV, 11, 1. Verse 5=TS. II, 5, 8, 6. Verses 5-6=TB. III, 5, 2, 3.

The Sûkta is a later addition to the original Samhitâ.

Verse 2.

Note 1. Should not dhatte be accented? 'He whom thou furthest and (who) puts in front hospitality (towards thee), O Agni, acquires all wealth.'

Verse 3.

Note 1. Cf. X, 85, 23. sâm gâspatyâm suyâmam astu devâh. The additions to the single Mandalas seem, as a rule, to be of later origin than the hymns of the tenth Mandala (see H.O., Prolegomena, p. 265); so it may be conjectured that the author of our verse imitated that passage of the great marriage hymn.

APPENDICES.

- I. INDEX OF WORDS.
- II. LIST OF THE MORE IMPORTANT PASSAGES QUOTED IN THE NOTES.

THE following is not (like the Index to vol. xxxii) a complete Index verborum to the hymns translated in this volume, but only an Index of all the words which can be of any importance. It contains all rare, difficult, and doubtful words, all words of any mythological importance, and especially all words about which something is said in the Notes.

Three figures refer to Mandala, hymn, and verse, a small figure to a note. If a word occurs in a note only, the passage is put in parentheses.

M. W.

I. INDEX OF WORDS.

- a, demonstr. pronoun : ayá, II, 6, 2¹.
Amsa, one of the Ādityas, II, 1, 4². amsú, Soma shoot, IV, 1, 19.
amhab-yú, dispelling anguish, V, 15, 3¹.
amhatí, distress, I, 94, 2.
ámhas, evil, distress, anguish, I, 36, 14; 58, 8; 9; III, 15, 3; IV, 2, 8; 9; 3, 14; 11, 6; 12, 6.
aktú, night, I, 36, 16; 68, 1; 94, 5; II, 10, 3; III, 7, 6; IV, 10, 5; áti aktúb (conj. áti aktún), I, 143, 3².
aktú, ointment : aktú-bhiḥ agyate, III, 17, 1¹.
akrá, a racer, I, 143, 7²; 189, 7²; III, 1, 12¹; IV, 6, 3². akshán, eye : śatám ákshānab akshā-bhiḥ, I, 128, 3.
akshí, eye : diváb akshí íti, I, 72, 10¹.
ákshita, imperishable, I, 58, 5.
ákshiyamāna, inexhaustible, III, 26, 9. agótā, want of cows, III, 16, 5.
ágopā, without a keeper, II, 4, 7.
Agní, fire, and god of fire, I, 1, 1, &c.; III, 2, 9²; agním-agnim, I, 12, 2; agnínā agnib sám idhyate, I, 12, 6; agne agnibhiḥ, I, 26, 10; agním (ā vaha āgne), I, 44, 8¹; vayáb íti agne agnáyab te anyé, I, 59, 1; índram agním, III, 12, 3; puríshyāsab agnáyab, III, 22, 4; āgne víṣvebhiḥ agnī-bhiḥ, III, 24, 4; āgne índrab ka, III, 25, 4; agnáyab agnīshu, V, 6, 6.
agni-gihvá, fire-tongued : agni-gihvāb, I, 44, 14.
agnídh, the Agnídh (priest) : agnít (conj. agnít), II, 1, 2².
agni-ṛṣí, possessing the beauty of Agni, III, 26, 5¹.
ágra, summit : ripáb ágram, III, 5, 5¹; ágre, at first, I, 31, 5; in front of, I, 127, 10.
agriyá, foremost : agriyám, I, 13, 10.
agrú, virgin : agrúvab, I, 140, 8¹; III, 29, 13².
aghá, evil, I, 97, 1¹-8; 128, 5; V, 3, 7; harmful foe, I, 189, 5.
agha-yát, harmful, IV, 2, 6; 24, 3.
agha-yú, harmful, I, 27, 3¹; 147, 4; IV, 2, 9.
aghá-samsa, attacking with evil spells, IV, 4, 3; V, 3, 7.
ághnyā, cow, IV, 1, 6.
āngá : yát āngá, whatever, I, 1, 6.
Āngiras, N. of Agni, I, 1, 6; 31, 1; 17; 74, 5; IV, 2, 15; 3, 15; 9, 7; V, 8, 4; 10, 7; 11, 6; 21, 1; gyéshítam āngirasām, I, 127, 2; āngirab-tamab, the highest Āngiras, I, 31, 2; 75, 2;—pl. the Āngiras (Rishis), I, 71, 2¹; IV, 3, 11¹; V, 11, 6¹;—āngirasvát, I, 31, 17; 45, 3; 78, 3. akítta, unseen, IV, 3, 1. ákitti, folly, IV, 2, 11; thoughtlessness : ákitti-bhiḥ, IV, 12, 4.
ákṣbāvāka, a certain priest, (I, 142, 4²).
ákṣbidra, flawless, I, 58, 8; II, 3, 8; III, 15, 5.
ákṣbidra-úti, whose blessings are flawless, I, 145, 3. ákyuta, unshakeable, II, 3, 3.

ag, to drive: út agate, he raises up, I, 95, 7; út âgan, they have driven out, IV, 1, 13; â agâti, may he lead, V, 2, 5; sám agâti, may he get together, V, 2, 12; agur yamub, V, 6, 10².

agá, goat, I, 67, 5¹.

agára, undecaying, never ageing, I, 58, 2; 4; 127, 5; 9; 143, 3; 144, 4; 146, 2; II, 8, 4¹; III, 2, 2; 6, 4; 8, 2; 18, 2; 23, 1; V, 4, 2.

ágasra, unwearied, I, 189, 4; III, 1, 21; 26, 7.

ágâta, unborn, V, 15, 2.

ágâmi, unrelated, IV, 4, 5; V, 19, 4.

agirá, agile, I, 140, 4; III, 9, 8.

aguryá, undecaying, I, 146, 4; II, 3, 5; 8, 2; III, 7, 4; 7; aguryám (conj. aguryáb), I, 67, 1².

ágñâta-keta, with unknown design, V, 3, 11.

ágma, course, III, 2, 12.

ágman, race, I, 65, 6.

âgra, plain: brîhatâb âgrân, IV, 1, 17.

âg, to anoint, I, 95, 6, &c.;—sam-ânagé, he has shaped, I, 188, 9; sám âgatab, II, 3, 7¹; trîdhâ sám-aktam, thrice-anointed, II, 3, 10; aktû-bhiâ agyate, III, 17, 1¹; ankte, he anoints himself, V, 1, 3; anakti, IV, 6, 3².

âgí, ointment: âgí-bhiâ, I, 36, 13¹.

âtandra, unwearied, I, 72, 7; 95, 2¹; IV, 4, 12.

atasá, brushwood, I, 58, 2; 4; II, 4, 7; III, 7, 3²; IV, 4, 4; 7, 10.

âtithi, guest, I, 44, 4; 58, 6; 73, 1²; II, 2, 8; 4, 1; III, 2, 2; 3, 8; 26, 2; IV, 1, 20¹; 2, 7; V, 1, 8; 9; 3, 5; 4, 5; 8, 2; 18, 1.

atúrta, unconquered, V, 25, 5.

atripá, insatiable, IV, 5, 14.

átka, vesture, I, 95, 7.

átya, racer: átyab ná prishbám rokate, I, 58, 2¹;—I, 65, 6; 149, 3; II, 4, 4; III, 2, 3; 7; 7, 9; átyam ná sáptim, III, 22, 1¹; IV, 2, 3; V, 25, 6.

Átri, V, 2, 6; 7, 10;—pl. the Atris, V, 22, 4;—atri-vát, I, 45, 3¹; V, 4, 9; 7, 8¹; 22, 1.

átri, devourer, II, 8, 5¹.

atrin, ghoul, I, 36, 14¹; 20; 94, 9.

átha, and, I, 26, 9.

atharí, elephant (?): atharyâb ná dântam, IV, 6, 8².

ad, to eat: âdat, I, 127, 6².

adát, having no teeth, I, 189, 5.

ádabdhâ, undeceivable, I, 76, 2; 95, 9; 128, 1; 143, 8; II, 9, 6; III, 1, 6; IV, 4, 3; V, 19, 4.

ádabdhavratâ-pramati, protector of infallible laws, II, 9, 1¹.

adás: asaú, yonder (sun), V, 17, 3¹.

ádâbhya, undeceivable, I, 31, 10; III, 11, 5; 26, 4; V, 5, 2.

Áditi, I, 94, 16; 95, 11; 98, 3; II, 1, 11; III, 4, 11; IV, 12, 4; mâtâ Áditib, I, 72, 9;—a name of Agni, I, 94, 15¹;—Freedom, IV, 1, 20¹;—âditim urushya, IV, 2, 11²;—m., IV, 3, 8².

ádripta, undismayed, I, 143, 8; not proud, IV, 3, 3.

ádripta, never foolish, I, 69, 3.

ádeva, goddess, III, 1, 16; V, 2, 9; 10.

ádeva-yu, not caring for the gods, I, 150, 2.

ádbhuta, mysterious, wonderful, I, 77, 3²; 94, 12; 13; 142, 3; 10; II, 7, 6; V, 10, 2; 23, 2;—secret, IV, 2, 12.

ádman, food, I, 58, 2.

ádri, rock, I, 70, 4¹; 71, 2; 73, 6; 149, 1; IV, 1, 14; 15; 2, 15²; 3, 11;—press-stone, III, 1, 1.

adrúh, guileless, II, 1, 14²; III, 9, 4; 22, 4.

adroghá, guileless, III, 14, 6.

ádvayâ, truthful, III, 29, 5.

ádvayâvin, in whom is no falsehood, III, 2, 15.

ádha, then: ádha ksharanti (for adháb ksharanti?), I, 72, 10².

ádhi, prep. with abl, on behalf of: ritât ádhi, I, 36, 11¹.

ádhi-iti, remembrance, II, 4, 8.

adhi-mánthana, the support on which the rubbing (for producing the fire) is performed, III, 29, 1².

adhivásâ, upper garment, I, 140, 9.

ádhriḡu, liberal, III, 21, 4¹; V, 10, 1. Adhriḡ? V, 7, 10¹.

ádhvan, way, I, 31, 16; 71, 9;

ádhvanâb deva-yânân, I, 72, 7².

adhvarâ, worship, rite, sacrifice, I, 1, 4¹; 8; 12, 7, &c.: adhvarám yaga, I, 26, 1; pátib adhvarâ-nân, I, 44, 9; rāgantam adh-

- varāwām, I, 45, 4; yagñāsya adhvarāsya, I, 128, 4¹; adhvarāiva (conj. adhvaré-iva), III, 6, 10³; adhvarāsya pra-netā, III,
 23, 1.
 adhvara-srī, beautifier of sacrifices,
 I, 44, 3².
 adhvari, to be as an Adhvaryu:
 adhvari-yasi, II, 1, 2.
 adhvari-yāt, performing the sacrificial service, IV, 9, 5.
 adhvaryú, the Adhvaryu priest, I,
 94, 6; II, 5, 6; III, 5, 4; IV,
 6, 4; adhvaryú-bhiḥ pañká-bhiḥ,
 III, 7, 7.
 ánagna, not naked, III, 1, 6. ánagni-trā, not standing under Agni's protection, I, 189, 3. ánadat, not eating, III, 1, 6.
 anantá, infinite, IV, 1, 7².
 anapa-vrīgá, interminable, I, 146, 3.
 anamivá, free from plagues, III, 16, 3; 22, 4.
 anarván, untouched, I, 94, 2¹; unattainable, II, 6, 5.
 anavadyá, blameless, I, 31, 9; 71, 8; 73, 3.
 anavabhra-rādhās, with gifts that cannot be taken away, III, 26, 6.
 ánasvat, together with a car, V, 27, 1.
 ánākṛita, whom it is not possible to drive to a place, I, 141, 7¹.
 ánāga, sinless, IV, 12, 4.
 ánāgāb-tvá, sinlessness, I, 94, 15.
 ánāyata, unsupported, IV, 13, 5.
 anāyudhá, unarmed, IV, 5, 14.
 aniná, feeble, I, 150, 2.
 anindrá, Indra-less, V, 2, 3.
 áni-baddha, unattached, IV, 13, 5.
 ani-bādhá, unbounded, III, 1, 11¹.
 ánihrishya-tavishi, of undecaying strength, V, 7, 7.
 ani-māná, immeasurable, I, 27, 11.
 ánimishat, never slumbering, I, 143, 8.
 áni-misham, with unwinking eyes,
 V, 19, 2.
 áni-mesham, unremittingly, I, 31, 12.
 anirá, sapless, IV, 5, 14.
 áni-vṛita, unrestrained, III, 29, 6.
 anishagá, without a quiver, I, 31, 13².
 ánika, face, II, 9, 6; III, 1, 15; 19, 4¹; IV, 5, 9¹; 15; 10, 3; 11,
 1; 12, 2; V, 2, 1.
 ánu, prep. with ablat., I, 141, 3².
 anukthá, hymnless, V, 2, 3.
 ánupa-kshita, undecaying, III, 13, 7.
 anushṭbú, by one's present power, I, 95, 3.
 anushṭbuyá, by one's present power,
 IV, 4, 14.
 anu-satyá, follower of truth, III, 26, 1.
 anu-svadhám, according to one's wont or nature, II, 3, 11; III, 6, 9.
 ánūna, without flaw, I, 146, 1; II,
 10, 6; III, 1, 5; IV, 2, 19; 5, 1. ánṛigu, sinful, IV, 3, 13.
 anṛitá, sinful, IV, 5, 5.
 ánṛita, falsehood, V, 12, 4.
 anehás, unmenaced, III, 9, 1.
 antab-vidváms, knowing, I, 72, 7.
 ántama, nearest (friend), I, 27, 5;
 III, 10, 8; V, 24, 1.
 ántara, closest, I, 31, 13; nearer,
 III, 18, 2;—in the midst, I, 44, 12.
 antáriksha, air, I, 73, 8; III, 6, 8;
 8, 8; 22, 2; IV, 14, 2; V, 1, 11.
 ánti, nigh, I, 79, 11; 94, 9.
 andhá, blind, I, 147, 3¹; 148, 5².
 ándhas, darkness, I, 94, 7.
 ándhas, sap, IV, 1, 19.
 áнна, food: shirā ánnā, I, 127, 4³;
 IV, 7, 10; tri-vṛit ánnam, I,
 140, 2²; ánnā, instr., IV, 7, 11¹.
 ánniyat, desirous of food, IV, 2, 7.
 anyád-anyad, the one and the other,
 I, 95, 1.
 anyá-vrata, following another law,
 V, 20, 2.
 áp, pl., water, Waters, I, 36, 8; 95, 3¹; 96, 1; 2; IV, 3, 12, &c.; gár-bhaś apām, I, 70, 3; III, 1, 12;
 13; 5, 3; apām nāpāt, I, 143,
 1²; III, 9, 1; apām upá-sthe,
 I, 144, 2; apām sadhá-sthe, I,
 149, 4; II, 4, 2; áyub apām,
 III, 1, 5; mātṛib apáb, III,
 9, 2; ap-sú sritám, III, 9, 4;
 apām duroné, III, 25, 5; ávindat apáb, V, 14, 4¹.
 ápatya, offspring, I, 68, 7.
 ápará-gita, unconquered, III, 12,
 9; V, 25, 6.
 ápari-vṛita, uncovered, II, 10, 3.
 apaśyá, bereft of sight, I, 148, 5².
 ápas, work, I, 68, 5; 69, 8²; 70, 8;
 II, 3, 6; III, 3, 3; 12, 7; IV,
 2, 14; see apás.
 apás, active, I, 31, 8; 71, 3; 95, 4;
 III, 2, 5; 7; 8, 5;—work:

- apási (conj. upási), III, 1, 3³; 11⁴; apáb (conj. ápaḥ), III, 6, 7².
- apasyú, ever active, I, 79, 1.
- apād, footless, IV, 1, 11.
- apārá, boundless, III, 1, 14.
- api-dhí, covering, I, 127, 7³.
- api-jarvará, approach of darkness, III, 9, 7².
- api-sthitá, standing on, I, 145, 4⁶.
- ápūrvya, wonderful, III, 13, 5.
- áprinat, not giving, V, 7, 10.
- ap-túr, crossing the waters, III, 27, 11⁸.
- ap-tūrya, crossing the waters, III, 12, 8¹.
- Ápnavāna, IV, 7, 1.
- ápnasvat, rich: ápnasvatishu urvá-rāsu, I, 127, 6.
- ápya, living in the water, I, 145, 5.
- ápra-āyu(s), unremitting, I, 127, 5⁴.
- áprati-skuta, unrepressed, III, 2, 14.
- ápra-drīpita, unconfused, I, 145, 2.
- apra-mrīshyá, not to be despised, IV, 2, 5.
- ápra-yukṣbat, never failing, unremitting, I, 143, 8; II, 9, 2; III, 5, 6; 20, 2.
- ápra-vītā, virgin, IV, 7, 9¹.
- apsu-sád, dwelling in the waters, III, 3, 5.
- abhi-khyá, looking at, I, 148, 5².
- abhi-gñú, on one's knees, I, 72, 5.
- abhi-dyu, striving for heaven, I, 127, 7; III, 27, 1.
- abhi-pitvá, the time of rest, I, 189, 7^{2, 3}.
- abhi-māti, plotter, III, 24, 1; assault, V, 23, 4¹.
- abhimāti-sáh, victorious over hostile plots, II, 4, 9.
- abhi-yúg, attack, III, 11, 6; V, 4, 5.
- abhi-jasti, curse, I, 71, 10; V, 3, 7; 12.
- abhi-jasti-kātana, dispeller of curses, III, 3, 6.
- abhi-jasti-pāvan, protector against imprecations, I, 76, 3.
- abhi-jrī, leading to, or striving for, gloriousness, I, 98, 1¹; 144, 6.
- abhi-shri, victory, V, 17, 5.
- abhi-shri-krīt, helpful, IV, 11, 4.
- abhi-hrút, injury, I, 128, 5; anything leading astray, I, 189, 6¹.
- abhiḥke with ablat., I, 71, 8⁴.
- abhrá, cloud, I, 79, 2.
- abhrāt-ri, brotherless: abhrátaráb, IV, 5, 5².
- ábhya, wondrous, I, 140, 5; monstrous might, II, 4, 5.
- am, to plague: abhi ámanta, I, 189, 3¹.
- áma, vehemence, I, 66, 7; fear: áme dhāt, I, 67, 3.
- amāti, impetuous splendour, I, 73, 2³.
- ámati, lack of thoughts, senselessness, III, 8, 2¹; 16, 5; IV, 11, 6.
- ámartya, immortal, I, 44, 1; 11; 58, 3; III, 2, 11; 10, 9; 11, 2; 24, 2; 27, 5; 7; IV, 1, 1; 8, 1; 9, 2; V, 4, 10.
- ámardhat, never failing, III, 25, 4.
- áma-vat, violent, impetuous, I, 36, 20; IV, 4, 1.
- amitra, enemy, III, 18, 2; IV, 4, 4; 12, 2.
- amitra-dámbhana, deceiver of foes, IV, 15, 4.
- amitra-yúdh, attacking the enemies, III, 29, 15.
- áminat, innocent, IV, 5, 6.
- amíva-kātana, driving away sickness: amíva-kātanam, I, 12, 7.
- ámivā, plague, I, 189, 3; III, 15, 1.
- ámúra, not foolish, unerring, wise, I, 68, 8¹; 72, 2; 141, 12; III, 19, 1; 25, 3; IV, 4, 12; 6, 2; 11, 5.
- ámrikta, uninjured, inviolable, III, 6, 4; 11, 6; IV, 3, 12¹.
- amrita, immortal (Agni), I, 26, 9¹; 44, 5¹; 58, 1; 70, 4², &c.;—pl. the immortal gods, I, 59, 1, &c.;—immortality, I, 13, 5²; 68, 4¹; 72, 1¹; 6; III, 1, 14; 23, 1²; 25, 2; V, 3, 4; 28, 2; amritasya nábhim, III, 17, 4;—ambrosia, I, 71, 9²; III, 26, 7; V, 2, 3².
- amrita-tvá, immortality, I, 31, 7; 72, 9; 96, 6; V, 4, 10.
- ámrityu, immortal, III, 2, 9.
- áyas, ore, IV, 2, 17³.
- ayá, thus, III, 12, 2.
- ayás, never-tiring (flame), III, 18, 2¹; IV, 6, 10.
- ará, spoke of a wheel, I, 141, 9; V, 13, 6.
- arakshás, benevolent, II, 10, 5.
- árana, stranger, V, 2, 5.
- aráni, kindling-stick, I, 127, 4¹; III, 29, 2; V, 9, 3.

- aratí, steward (?), I, 58, 7¹; 59, 2; 128, 6; 8; II, 2, 2; 3; 4, 2; III, 17, 4; IV, 1, 1; 2, 1; V, 2, 1¹.
- áram, enough, I, 66, 5; dávat áram, he satisfies, I, 70, 5; readily, II, 5, 7²; 8; purú vā áram (conj. puruvāram), I, 142, 10³.
- aram-kṛt, doing service, II, 1, 7¹.
- árarivams, niggardly, I, 147, 4; 150, 2; III, 18, 2.
- árāti, malign power, II, 7, 2; III, 18, 1; 24, 1; IV, 4, 4; árātau (conj. for arataú), V, 2, 1¹; pl., V, 2, 6.
- arāti-yāt, niggard, I, 99, 1².
- arāti-ván, malicious, I, 147, 4.
- árāvan, niggard : árāvnab, I, 36, 15; 16.
- arí, poor : aryáb, I, 70, 1¹; 71, 3²; 150, 1¹—he who does not give, niggard, I, 73, 5¹; II, 8, 2; IV, 4, 6; V, 2, 12.
- arí, the Arya : aryáb, IV, 2, 12³; 18³.
- árishra, uninjured, V, 18, 3.
- árishtat, unharmed : árishtanta, II, 8, 6.
- aruná, red, I, 73, 7; II, 1, 6.
- aruní, the red (cow, or Dawn), I, 140, 13; IV, 1, 16³; 2, 16; 14, 3¹.
- árupita? IV, 5, 7¹.
- arushá, red, ruddy, I, 36, 9; 141, 8; II, 2, 8; III, 1, 4; 7, 5; 15, 3; 29, 6; IV, 15, 6²; V, 1, 5; arushá, the two ruddy horses, I, 94, 10; II, 10, 2¹; IV, 2, 3; arushásab, I, 146, 2²; IV, 6, 9; arushásya vrishnab, V, 12, 2²; 6; —árushīm (conj. árushīb?), I, 71, 1²; árushīb, I, 72, 10⁴.
- arushá-stūpa, whose summit is red, III, 29, 3.
- árūkshita, soft, IV, 11, 1.
- arepás, stainless, IV, 10, 6.
- arká, song, I, 141, 13; III, 26, 7¹; 8; IV, 3, 15; 10, 3; V, 5, 4.
- ark, to sing, praise : arkan, III, 14, 4; árkāmi, IV, 4, 8; ānrikúb, V, 6, 8; árkañtab, V, 13, 1; árka, V, 16, 1¹; 22, 1; 25, 7;—abhí kārām arkan, they sang triumphantly, IV, 1, 14²;—prá arkānti, III, 12, 5; prá arka, I sing, III, 13, 1¹.
- arkí, flame, I, 36, 3; 20, &c.
- arkís, flame, IV, 7, 9; V, 17, 3.
- árna, flood : diváb arnam, III, 22, 3.
- arnavá, waving, III, 22, 2².
- árnas, wave, IV, 3, 12.
- ártha, aim, I, 144, 3²; III, 11, 3²; IV, 6, 10.
- árbha, small, I, 146, 5.
- arbhaká, little : arbhakébhya, I, 27, 13.
- ármizí in nārmizí? (I, 149, 3¹).
- aryá, Aryan, IV, 1, 7; (2, 12³; 18⁵;) V, 16, 3.
- Aryamán, I, 26, 4; 36, 4; 44, 13; 79, 3; 141, 9; II, 1, 4; IV, 2, 4; 3, 5; V, 3, 2.
- arvák : arvákam yáksuva, sacrifice and bring hither, I, 45, 10.
- árvat, horse, I, 27, 9; 73, 9; 145, 3¹; II, 2, 10; IV, 15, 6; V, 6, 1; 2.
- árvan, horse, I, 149, 3; IV, 7, 11; 11, 4.
- arhánā, deservedly, I, 127, 6.
- árhat, worthy, I, 94, 1; II, 3, 1; 3; V, 7, 2.
- av, to protect, bless, help : ávāb, I, 27, 7; avishab, III, 13, 6, &c.
- áva : agnéb ávena for agné rávena, I, 128, 5¹.
- avadyá, disgrace, IV, 4, 15.
- aváni, course, I, 140, 5;—river, V, 11, 5.
- avamá, lowest (god), IV, 1, 5.
- ávata, later (or, nearer), I, 141, 5;—lower, II, 9, 3.
- ávasāna, not clothed, III, 1, 6.
- avástāt, below, III, 22, 3.
- ava-sthá, retirement, V, 19, 1¹.
- avasyú, desiring help, II, 6, 6.
- avitrí, helper, I, 36, 2; 44, 10; III, 19, 5.
- ávi-mat, rich in sheep, IV, 2, 5¹.
- avishyāt, wishing to drink, I, 58, 2.
- avishyú, greedy, I, 189, 5.
- avīratā, want of heroes, III, 16, 5.
- avriká, without danger, I, 31, 13;—keeping off the wolf, IV, 4, 12.
- as, to eat : prá asāna, III, 21, 1.
- asatrú, without a foe, V, 2, 12.
- asáni, thunderbolt, I, 143, 5.
- asás, cursing, IV, 4, 15.
- ásiva, unkind, V, 12, 5.
- asīrshán, headless, IV, 1, 11.
- ásman, stone (flint), II, 1, 1; III, 29, 6.

- āsma-vraga, dwelling in the rock-stable, IV, 1, 13.
 āsramishṭba, never tiring, IV, 4, 12.
 āsrita, not resting on (?), IV, 7, 6².
 asva-dāvan, giver of horses, V, 18, 3².
 āsva-peṣas, the ornament of which are horses, II, 1, 16.
 āsvam-ishṭi, winner of horses, II, 6, 2².
 Asva-medha, N. p., V, 27, 4-6.
 āsva-rādhas, giver of horses, V, 10, 4¹.
 āsvā, mare, III, 1, 4; 7, 2².
 asvin, rich in horses, IV, 2, 5¹; V, 4, 11.
 Arvīnau, du., the two Asvins, I, 44, 2; 8; 14; III, 20, 1; 5; 29, 6¹; IV, 2, 4; 13, 1; 15, 9; 10; V, 26, 9.
 ārvya, of the horses, I, 74, 7. āshā/ba, invincible, III, 15, 4.
 ashṭamā, eighth (rein or priest of Agni), II, 5, 2¹.
 ashṭā-padī, eight-footed (i.e. cow with calf), II, 7, 5².
 as, to be: prā astu, may it be foremost, I, 13, 9;—satāb ka bhā-vatāb ka, I, 96, 7; tvām tām sām ka prāti ka asi, thou art united with them and equal to them, II, 1, 15.
 as, to throw: ava-āsyā, I, 140, 10.
 āsat, nothingness, IV, 5, 14;—untrue, V, 12, 4.
 asanā, weapon, I, 148, 4.
 asamanā, striving apart, I, 140, 4.
 āsam-dita, unfettered, IV, 4, 2.
 āsam-mrisha, not cleansed, V, 11, 3. asaṣkāt, not sticking together, I, 13, 6; 142, 6.
 āsasat, never sleeping, I, 143, 3.
 āsita, black, IV, 13, 4.
 āsu, vital spirit, I, 140, 8.
 āsura, the Asura, miraculous lord, II, 1, 6; III, 3, 4¹; 29, 14¹; IV, 2, 5²; V, 12, 1; 15, 1; 27, 1.
 asuryā, mysterious power, V, 10, 2.
 āsta, stall, I, 66, 9;—home: āstam yānti, V, 6, 1.
 āsta-tāti, homestead, V, 7, 6.
 āstri, archer, I, 66, 7; 70, 11; 71, 5¹; 148, 4; IV, 4, 1.
 āstrita, indestructible, I, 140, 8.
 āspandamāna, without trembling, IV, 3, 10.
 asmād, pers. pronoun: asmākam astu, may he be ours, I, 13, 10; prā vab īmahe, we entreat for you, I, 36, 1¹; vab untranslated, I, 66, 9¹; sāv nab, thus (give) us, II, 6, 5¹; āre asmāt, IV, 11, 6¹.
 asma-drūh, he who deceives us: asma-dhrūk, I, 36, 16.
 asmadryāk, turned towards us, V, 4, 2.
 asma-yū, inclined towards us, I, 142, 10.
 asrīdh, not failing, I, 13, 9; V, 5, 8. āsredhat, unerring, III, 14, 5. asremān? III, 29, 13¹.
 āsvapnag, never sleeping: āsvapnagab, IV, 4, 12.
 āhan, day, I, 71, 2; dīrghā āhā, I, 140, 13; āhnab, by day, IV, 10, 5; āgre āhnām, V, 1, 4; 5.
 āhi, snake, I, 79, 1.
 ahūryā, not to be led astray: ahūr-yāb (conj. for āhūryab), I, 69, 4¹.
 āhraya, fearless, I, 74, 8; glorious, III, 2, 4. āhrayāna, fearless, IV, 4, 14.
 āké, near, II, 1, 10.
 ā-kshita, habitable, V, 7, 7.
 āgas, sin, IV, 3, 5; 12, 4; V, 3, 7; 12.
 ā-gāni, birth: tistrāb ā-gāni, III, 17, 3¹.
 āt, then, I, 148, 4¹.
 ā-tāni, an expander: yagñām ā-tāni, II, 1, 10.
 ātithyā, hospitality, I, 76, 3; IV, 4, 10; V, 28, 2.
 ātmán, vital breath: ātmā-iva révab, I, 73, 2.
 ā-dadi, seizer: ādat ā-dadīb, I, 127, 6².
 Ādityā, IV, 1, 2; pl., the Ādityas, I, 45, 1; 94, 3; 188, 4; II, 1, 13; 3, 4¹; III, 8, 8; 20, 5.
 ā-deva, godly, II, 4, 1; devām ā-devam, IV, 1, 1¹.
 ā-dhavā, purification, I, 141, 3².
 ā-dhrīsh, attack, II, 1, 9.
 ādhrā, weak: ādhrāsyā, I, 31, 14².
 ānushák, in due order, I, 13, 5¹; 58, 3; 72, 7; II, 6, 8; III, 11, 1; IV, 4, 10; 7, 2; 5; 12, 3; V, 6, 6¹; 10; 9, 1; 16, 2; 18, 2; 21, 2; 22, 2; 26, 8.
 āp: pári āpa, he has won, I, 76, 1.
 Apayā, N. of a river, III, 23, 4.
 āpi, companion, I, 26, 3; 31, 16; IV, 3, 13.

- â-prikkhya, whose leave should be asked, I, 60, 2.
 âpya, companionship, I, 36, 12; III, 2, 6.
 âmâ, raw, IV, 3, 9².
 â-yagishta, best performer of sacrifices, II, 9, 6.
 âyasa, of iron, I, 58, 8.
 âyû, the living, I, 31, 2²; II, 66, 1; 140, 8; 147, 1¹;—lively: âyûvab dhenāvab, II, 5, 5;—Âyû, N. p., I, 96, 2²; II, 2, 8; 4, 2; IV, 2, 12¹; 18^{4, 6}; V, 7, 6; samsam âyôb, IV, 6, 11²; V, 3, 4²; pl., the Âyus, I, 58, 3²; 60, 3; IV, 7, 4;—n., life, III, 3, 7.
 âyudha, weapon, V, 2, 3.
 âyus, life: vîsvam âyub, I, 73, 5; âyub apâm, III, 1, 5²; dirghâm âyub pra-yâkshe, III, 7, 1; trîni âyûmshi, III, 17, 3¹, &c.
 â-rôdhana, ascent, IV, 7, 8; 8, 2; 4.
 ârtanâ? I, 127, 6¹.
 ârtvigya, duty of a priest, I, 94, 6.
 ârya, the Aryan, I, 59, 2; vîsab ârib, I, 77, 3²; 96, 3.
 âvib-rigîka, (I, 44, 3¹).
 âvib-tya, visible, I, 95, 5.
 âvîs, manifest: âvib bhava, I, 31, 3¹; âvib babhûtha, V, 1, 9; âvib krintute, V, 2, 9.
 â-sâs, hope: â-sâsâ, IV, 5, 11¹.
 ârâ, region, V, 10, 6.
 ârinâ, old (?), I, 27, 13¹.
 ârû, swift racer, I, 60, 5; IV, 7, 11.
 âru-ârya, plenty of swift horses, V, 6, 10.
 âru-yâ, quickly, IV, 4, 2.
 âru-sukshâni, flaming, II, 1, 1.
 ârushânâ, aspiring after, IV, 1, 13.
 âru-hêman, quick inciter, II, 1, 5².
 âs: ūpa âsate, they approach reverentially, I, 36, 7; III, 2, 6;—sam-âsate, they lie down round about, III, 9, 7.
 âs, mouth: âsâ, I, 76, 4¹; 140, 2; II, 1, 14¹; in the presence of, IV, 5, 10; manifestly, V, 17, 2; 5; 23, 1.
 âsân, mouth, I, 75, 1; III, 26, 7; V, 6, 9; 18, 4.
 âsâ, face: yâsya âsayâ, in whose presence, I, 127, 8.
 âsât, adv., near, I, 27, 3.
 â-sutî, drink, II, 1, 14.
 âsurâ, of the Asura: gârbhab âsurâb, III, 29, 11.
 âskra, united, III, 6, 4².
 âsyâ, mouth, II, 1, 13; V, 12, 1.
 â-huta, see hu.
 â-hûrya, to be led astray: â-hûryab (conj. ahûryâb), I, 69, 4¹.
 i: ayate, he proceeds, I, 127, 3⁶; yântab, corrupt for vyântab? I, 140, 13²; sanîm yaté, striving for gain, V, 27, 4;—âdhi ihi, think thou (of us), I, 71, 10²;—sâb nû iyate (Samhitâ: sâ nvî-yate), conj. sânu (= sâ ânu) iyate, I, 145, 1¹;—ântab iyase, thou passest between, II, 6, 7;—âpa aiyeb, V, 2, 8;—ûpa â imasi, we approach, I, 1, 7;—pari-etâ, will overtake, I, 27, 8;—pra-yatî yagñé, while the sacrifice is going on, III, 29, 16; V, 28, 6; pra-yatî devébhyab, that the gods may come forth, I, 142, 6; éti prá, I, 144, 1²;—ná prâti-itaye, not to be withstood, I, 36, 10;—sâm yanti, come together, I, 31, 10; see sam-yât.
 id, nourishing power, sacred food: iâ kritâni, I, 128, 7; iâb padé, I, 128, 1; II, 10, 1²; hôtâram iâb, III, 4, 3.
 iâ, 'Nourishment,' N. of a goddess, I, 13, 9¹; 31, 11²; 142, 9; 188, 8; II, 1, 11¹; 3, 8; III, 1, 23¹; 4, 8; 7, 5; 27, 10²; V, 4, 4; 5, 8; iâyâb padé, III, 23, 4²; 29, 4; iâ, instr., III, 24, 2; iâyâb putrâb, III, 29, 3².
 iâ-vat, rich in nourishment, IV, 2, 5.
 itâb-ûti, who from here distributes his blessings, I, 146, 2.
 iti, thus: iti krâtvâ, with this intention, IV, 1, 1¹.
 itthâ, truly, I, 36, 7; 141, 1; V, 17, 1; itthâ dhiyâ, with right thought, III, 27, 6.
 itthâ-dhî, thus minded, IV, 11, 3.
 idâm, this: asmai (after the plural yé), I, 67, 8¹; asmai (verb to be supplied), I, 70, 4¹; yâdi idâm, when here (all this happened), I, 79, 2²; yâdi idâm, as I am here, IV, 5, 11²;

- there, II, 5, 5; eshâm (conj. eshâm), IV, 2, 4¹.
- idā kit-idā kit*, now-now, IV, 10, 5.
- idhmā*, fuel, I, 94, 4; III, 18, 3.
- in: inōshi, thou drivest away, IV, 10, 7;—prā ainot, he has driven forward, I, 66, 10.
- inā*, strong, I, 149, 1.
- īndu*, Soma, V, 18, 2.
- Indra*, I, 13, 12; 142, 4; 5; 12; 13; II, 1, 3; 3, 3; 8, 6; III, 4, 6; 11; 22, 1; 25, 4; IV, 2, 17; V, 2, 8; 3, 1; 5, 3; 11; 11, 2; īndram agnīm, III, 12, 3.
- īndrāgni*, du., III, 12, 1; 2; 4-9; V, 27, 6.
- īndrāvishnū*, du., Indra and Vishnu, IV, 2, 4.
- inv, to stir up, to further: īnvati, I, 128, 5; īnvatab, I, 141, 4; īnvasi, I, 94, 10; 141, 10; V, 28, 2; īnvantab, III, 4, 5; invire, V, 6, 6.
- ībha*, elephant, IV, 4, 1¹.
- ībhya*, rich, I, 65, 7.
- iva*: svēna-iva, read svēna evā? I, 145, 2².
- ish*, to long, seek: īkkbānta, I, 68, 8; īkkbāntab, I, 72, 2; īshub, III, 1, 2.
- ish*, to incite: ishé, infin., I, 71, 8²; ishāyanta mánma, they have stirred up our prayers, I, 77, 4²; ishāni, II, 2, 9²; ishitá, III, 3, 2; 4, 3; 12, 1.
- ish*, food, I, 12, 11; 27, 7; 36, 11, &c.; V, 6, 1-10; ishān netā, III, 23, 2².
- ishá*, food-giving, I, 189, 8².
- Ishá*, N. p., V, 7, 10.
- ishany*: ishanyanti, they speed it hither, V, 6, 6¹.
- ishay*, to seek nourishment: ishāyanta, II, 2, 11¹.
- ishirā*, vigorous, quick, I, 128, 5; III, 2, 13; 5, 4.
- ishudhyát*, supplicant: ishudhyaté, I, 128, 6¹.
- ishuy*, to fly like an arrow, to shoot arrows (?): ishūyate, I, 128, 4².
- ishu-yát*, desiring food (?), I, 128, 4².
- ishráni*? I, 127, 6¹.
- ishrí*, wish, search, I, 143, 8²; 145, 1; 148, 3; IV, 4, 7.
- ishrí*, sacrifice, II, 1, 9¹.
- ishrí*, incitement (?), IV, 6, 7².
- ī*: prā imahe vab, we entreat for you, I, 36, 1¹;—ā imahe, we implore, III, 26, 5.
- id*, to magnify: īle, I, 1, 1²; 44, 4; III, 1, 15; 27, 2; 12; IV, 3, 3; 9¹; īlate, I, 36, 1; 128, 8; III, 6, 3; 10, 2; 13, 2; 27, 14; V, 1, 7; 8, 3; 9, 1; 14, 2; 3; 21, 3; īlata, I, 96, 3¹; īlte, V, 12, 6; īlita, V, 17, 1; 21, 4; īlāna, II, 6, 6; 28, 1; īlita, I, 13, 4¹; 142, 4¹; II, 3, 3; V, 5, 3; 7.
- īlénya*, to be magnified, I, 79, 5; 146, 5; III, 27, 13; V, 1, 9; 14, 5.
- īdya*, worthy of being magnified: īdyab, I, 1, 2; 12, 3²; 75, 4; 188, 3; II, 1, 4; III, 2, 2; 5, 6; 9; 9, 8; 17, 4; 27, 4; 29, 2; 7; IV, 7, 1; 2; V, 22, 1.
- īr*: īratām, may they arise, IV, 8, 7; īrayādhyai, he shall rise up, IV, 2, 1¹;—ā-īriré, they have raised, set to work, I, 143, 4; III, 11, 9; 29, 15;—ní erire, they have roused, I, 128, 8; II, 2, 3; IV, 1, 1.
- īvat*, like this, IV, 4, 6; 15, 5.
- īr*, to rule: īrata, I, 36, 16; II, 7, 2; vāsvab īre, I, 71, 9; yāvat īre, as far as I have power, III, 18, 3.
- īrānā*, master, lord, I, 73, 9; 79, 4; 141, 3.
- īsh*: īshate, they flee, I, 141, 8;—ā īshate, he advances, I, 149, 1².
- ukthá*, hymn, litany, I, 27, 12; 71, 2; 140, 13; II, 8, 5; III, 5, 2; 13, 6; 20, 1; IV, 3, 4; 16; 6, 11; 11, 3; V, 4, 7; 6, 9; 18, 4.
- ukthāvāhas*, (I, 127, 8¹).
- uktha-jás*, chanting litanies, IV, 2, 16.
- ukthín*, rich in hymns, III, 12, 5.
- ukthya*, praiseworthy, I, 79, 12; III, 2, 13; 15; 10, 6; 26, 2; V, 26, 6.
- uksh*, to sprinkle: aúkshan, III, 9, 9; satyám ukshan, IV, 1, 10.
- uksh*, to grow. See vaksh.
- ukshán*, bull, I, 146, 2; II, 7, 5; III, 7, 6; 7²; V, 27, 5.
- ugrá*, strong, mighty, I, 127, 11; III, 26, 5; IV, 2, 18².
- Ugrá-deva*: ugrá-devam, I, 36, 18¹.

- ukátha, hymn, I, 73, 10; 143, 6; IV, 2, 20; V, 12, 3.
 uttáná: uttáná, lying extended on her back, II, 10, 3¹; III, 29, 3²; V, 1, 3⁴;—nyāñ uttánáb, spread out downwards-turned, IV, 13, 5.
 uttáná-hasta, with outstretched hand, III, 14, 5¹.
 ut-vát: ut-vátāb ni-vátāb, to the heights and to the depths, III, 2, 10.
 útsa, spring, III, 26, 9.
 udanyā, of water, II, 7, 3.
 údyata-sruṭ, the sacrificer who raises the spoon, I, 31, 5.
 und, to moisten: havyám undán, II, 3, 2.
 upa-ābhrit, the bringing: ūrgām upa-ābhriti, I, 128, 2.
 úpa-iti, approaching, supplication, I, 76, 1¹; III, 18, 1.
 upa-kshetrí, follower, III, 1, 16.
 upabdí, noise produced by going, I, 74, 7¹.
 upa-mā, high up, I, 31, 15¹.
 upamā, likeness, (I, 31, 15¹).
 upa-māda, enjoyment, III, 5, 5.
 upa-mít, supporting, I, 59, 1²; pillar, IV, 5, 1.
 úpara, lower, I, 79, 3²; 128, 3; úparāsu, in our neighbourhood, I, 127, 5²; úparasya, nearer, IV, 2, 18²; úparān, getting behind, II, 4, 9¹.
 upa-vaktrí, the U. priest, IV, 9, 5¹.
 upás, lap: upási (conj. for apási), (III, 1, 3²; 11⁴).
 upa-sád, sitting down (reverentially), II, 6, 1¹.
 Upa-stutá, I, 36, 10¹; 17¹.
 úpa-stuti, praise, I, 148, 2.
 upá-stha, lap, I, 95, 4; 5; pitrób upá-sthe, I, 31, 9; 146, 1; III, 5, 8; 26, 9; apām upá-sthe, I, 144, 2; mātúb upá-sthe, III, 8, 1; 29, 14; V, 1, 6; 19, 1.
 upa-stháyam karati, he goes to greet them, I, 145, 4².
 úpāka, neighbouring, I, 142, 7; III, 4, 6.
 upāké, near at hand, I, 27, 6; IV, 10, 5; 11, 1.
 úpeti, see úpa-iti.
 ubh: ubdhám, closed, IV, 1, 15;—sám-ubdham, confined, V, 2, 1¹.
 ubhá, both: ubhá for ubhé, I, 140, 3¹; ubhé íti toké íti tánaye, I, 147, 1².
 ubháya, both, I, 26, 9¹; 31, 7; ubháyan, both (kinds of men, the pious and the impious), I, 189, 7²; of both kinds (wealth), II, 9, 5¹.
 urú, wide: urú ksháyāya kākriṇe, I, 36, 8; urvī, the wide (Earth), I, 146, 2; II, 4, 7; urú, wide space, III, 1, 11¹.
 uru-gāyá, wide-ruling, II, 1, 3; III, 6, 4²; IV, 3, 7; 14, 1.
 uru-grāyas, extending over wide spaces, V, 8, 6.
 uru-vyāñk, far-reaching, V, 1, 12.
 uru-sāmsa, widely-renowned: uru-sāmsāya, I, 31, 14.
 urushy, to guard, deliver: urushya, I, 58, 8; 9; IV, 2, 6; to keep off: áditim urushya, IV, 2, 11²; urushyát, he has escaped into wide space, III, 5, 8.
 urvárā, field, I, 127, 6.
 Urvári: urvárīb, IV, 2, 18⁴.
 urviyā, far and wide, I, 141, 5; II, 3, 5; III, 1, 18; V, 28, 1.
 ulkā, firebrand, IV, 4, 2.
 us, see vas.
 usádhak, eagerly burning, III, 6, 7².
 Usíg, (Agni) the Usig (or willing one), III, 3, 7; 8; 11, 2¹; 27, 10²;—pl., the Usigs, mythical priests, I, 60, 2¹; 4; 128, 1²; 189, 7; II, 4, 5²; III, 2, 4²; 9; 15, 3²; IV, 1, 15¹; V, 3, 4.
 ush, to burn down: ushán, II, 4, 7;—ní oshatāt, burn down, IV, 4, 4.
 ush, to shine. See vas.
 usháb-búdh, awakening with the dawn, I, 44, 1; 9; 65, 9; 127, 10; III, 2, 14; IV, 6, 8.
 ushár, dawn: usráb, gen. sing., I, 71, 2².
 ushás, dawn, I, 71, 1; 94, 5; ushásab návedāb, I, 79, 1²; vástob ushásab, I, 79, 6; doshá ushási, II, 8, 3; IV, 2, 8; prāti doshám ushásam, IV, 12, 2; ushásab vi-roké, III, 5, 2; ushásab ví-ushrau, III, 15, 2; IV, 1, 5; 14, 4;—Dawn, the goddess, I, 44, 1¹; 2; 8; 14; III, 17, 3¹; 20, 1; IV, 2, 15; 3, 11²; V, 1,

- 1; 28, 1; usháb gârâb, lover of the Dawn, I, 69, 1¹; 9; devî ushâb, III, 20, 5; IV, 1, 17; 14, 3; doshâm ushâsam, Night and Morning, V, 5, 6;—du., nâktâ ka ushâsâ, I, 73, 7; ushâsau, the two Dawns, Night and Dawn, I, 188, 6²; III, 4, 6¹; 14, 3; V, 1, 4;—ushâsab, the Dawns, I, 44, 10; II, 2, 2; 7; 8; III, 5, 1; IV, 1, 13²; 2, 19; 5, 13; 14, 1; ushâb vi-bhâtîb, III, 6, 7; ushâsab ūshub, III, 7, 10; ushâsâm āgram, IV, 13, 1.
- ushâsânâktâ*, Dawn and Night, II, 3, 6.
- usrâ*, bright, I, 69, 9.
- usrâ*, milch-cow, IV, 1, 13; see also ushar.
- usrîyâ*, ruddy cow, III, 1, 12⁴; IV, 5, 8²; 9.
- ûtî*, blessing, protection, I, 36, 13, &c.
- ūdhan*, udder, I, 69, 3¹; 146, 2; III, 29, 14; IV, 1, 19; 3, 10; pitûb ūdhab, III, 1, 9¹; sâsmin ūdhan, IV, 7, 7²; 10, 8¹.
- ūma*, helpful, III, 6, 8¹.
- ūrg*: mâhi ūrgâyantîb, giving mighty vigour, III, 7, 4.
- ūrg*, vigour: ūrgâm pate, I, 26, 1; ūrgâb napât, I, 58, 8; II, 6, 2; III, 27, 12; V, 7, 1; 17, 5; ūrgâb putrâm, I, 96, 3; ūrgâ pinvasva, III, 3, 7.
- ūrna-mradas*, soft like wool, V, 5, 4¹.
- ūrnu*: vî ūrnot, he has revealed, I, 68, 1; vî aurnot, he has opened, I, 68, 10.
- ūrdhvâ*, straight, standing erect, I, 36, 13; 14; 95, 5, &c.
- ūrmi*, wave, I, 27, 6; 44, 12; 95, 10.
- ūrmyâ*, night, II, 4, 3.
- ūrvâ*, stable, stall, prison, I, 72, 8; III, 1, 14; IV, 2, 17; 12, 5.
- ūh*: ūhé, he is considered, V, 3, 9¹.
- ri*, to go, &c.: rinvati, he procures, I, 128, 6; he hastens, I, 144, 5; arta tmânâ divâb, arose, V, 25, 8²;—abhî ârub, they ran up to, III, 1, 4;—ut-âritha, thou hast sprung, II, 9, 3; ût iyarti vâtam, he raises his voice, III, 8, 5³; ût arta, it rose up, IV, 1, 17; ût aram, IV, 15, 7;—prâ ârûb, they have risen, III, 7, 1; prâ iyarmi, I stretch forth, III, 19, 2; prâ ârta, it came forth, IV, 1, 12;—vî rinvati, he discloses, I, 58, 3; vî rinvan, they opened, I, 69, 10; vî rinvati, he opens, I, 128, 6; V, 16, 2;—sam-ârata, he has come together, I, 145, 4¹; sâm rinvati, it accomplishes, III, 2, 1; he sets himself in motion, III, 11, 2²; sâm-ritâb, erected, IV, 13, 5.
- rikvan*, singer, III, 13, 5.
- rigmîya*, praiseworthy, III, 2, 4.
- rik*, see ark.
- rik*, hymn, (sacrificial) verse, I, 36, 11; II, 3, 7; V, 6, 5; 27, 4.
- rig*, riñg, to press on, strive forward: riñgasânâ, I, 58, 3; 96, 3; riñgân, I, 95, 7; riñgate, I, 141, 6; 143, 7; II, 1, 8; 2, 5; riñgase, I press on, IV, 8, 1;—abhî rigyate, I, 140, 2;—â riñgase, V, 13, 6¹;—nî riñgate, he throws down, I, 143, 5; nî riñge, I catch hold, III, 4, 7.
- rigîka*, (I, 44, 3¹).
- rigû*, rightly, II, 3, 7; right deeds, IV, 1, 17.
- rigu-âñk*, going straight forward, IV, 6, 9.
- rigu-mushkâ*, puissant, IV, 2, 2; 6, 9.
- rigu-yât*, righteous, V, 12, 5.
- rinâ*, debt, IV, 3, 13².
- ritâ*, the Rita, Right, I, 1, 8; 75, 5¹; 79, 3; 141, 1; 11; III, 4, 7; 6, 6; IV, 1, 13²; 2, 3¹; 14²; 16; 19¹; 3, 4²; 9-12; 5, 11; V, 1, 7; 12, 1¹; 6¹; 15, 2; 20, 4; ritât âdhi, on behalf of Rita, I, 36, 11¹; ritâsya vratâ, I, 65, 3; ritâsya yôni, I, 65, 4; III, 1, 11; IV, 1, 12; V, 21, 4; dhârâm ritâsya, I, 67, 7¹; V, 12, 2; ritâ sâpantâb, I, 67, 8; 68, 4; ritâsya prêshâb ritâsya dhîtîb, I, 68, 5¹; dâdhan ritâm, I, 71, 3¹; ritâsya dhenâvâb, I, 73, 6; ritâsya pathâ, I, 128, 2; yahvî iti ritâsya, mâtârâ, I, 142, 7; V, 5, 6; ritâsya dhûb-sâdam, I, 143, 7; ritâsya dohânâb, streams of Rita, I, 144, 2¹; rathîb ritâsya, III, 2, 8; IV, 10, 2; ritâsya sâman, I, 147,

- 1⁴; ritám yaté, I, 188, 2; pûr-vib ritásya sam-drśab, III, 5, 2; ritásya sādasi, III, 7, 2; gopāb ritásya, III, 10, 2; ritásya pathyāb ānu, III, 12, 7; ritásya yóge vanúshab, eager to set to work the Rita, III, 27, 11¹; riténa ritám ni-yatam, IV, 3, 9^{1,2}; ritásya padé, IV, 5, 9; ritásya dhāman, IV, 7, 7²; ritásya raśmim, V, 7, 3; riténa, in the right way, III, 4, 5; 5, 3;—adj., righteous, IV, 3, 8¹.
- rita-ñit*, intent upon Rita (Right), I, 145, 5; IV, 3, 4; V, 3, 9.
- ritā-gāta*, born in or from the Rita: ritā-gātab, I, 36, 19; 144, 7; 189, 6; III, 6, 10; 20, 2.
- rita-gñā*, knowing the right way, I, 72, 8.
- rita-pā*, protecting the Rita, (III, 20, 4¹; V, 12, 3²).
- ritā-pragāta*, born from Rita, I, 65, 10.
- ritā-pravita*, penetrated by Rita, I, 70, 7.
- ritay*, to perform the Rita: ritāyan riténa, V, 12, 3.
- rita-yāt*, righteous, II, 1, 2; IV, 8, 3; V, 27, 4.
- rita-yú*, loving Rita, V, 8, 1.
- ritā-van*, righteous, I, 77, 1; 2; 5; III, 2, 13; 6, 10; 13, 2; 14, 2; 20, 4; IV, 1, 2; 2, 1; 6, 5; 7, 3; 7; 10, 7; V, 1, 6; 25, 1.
- rita-vridh*, increaser of Rita, I, 13, 6; 44, 14; 142, 6; III, 2, 1.
- ritú*, season, I, 95, 3²; V, 12, 3².
- ritu-thā*, observing the right time, II, 3, 7.
- ritu-pā*, guardian of the seasons, III, 20, 4¹; V, 12, 3².
- ritvīg*, ministrant, priest, I, 1, 1; 44, 11; 45, 7; 60, 3; II, 5, 7¹; III, 10, 2; V, 22, 2; 26, 7.
- ritviya*, at the appointed season, I, 143, 1; II, 1, 2; III, 29, 10.
- ridh*, to accomplish: ridhyāma, I, 31, 8; IV, 10, 1¹.
- ridhak*, in one's peculiar way, III, 25, 1¹.
- Ribhú*, II, 1, 10¹; III, 5, 6¹; V, 7, 7.
- rishi*, a Rishi, I, 1, 2; 31, 1; 66, 4; III, 21, 3; sahāśram rīshibhiḥ, I, 189, 8.
- rishi-kṛt*, making (one) a Rishi, I, 31, 16².
- rishú*, pl., dawns (?), I, 127, 10²; V, 25, 1².
- rishvá*, tall, I, 146, 2; III, 5, 5; 7; 10; IV, 2, 2.
- éka: ékaḥ-ekab, every one, III, 29, 15.
- éka-āyu, of unique vigour, I, 31, 5.
- éna, variegated: éni iti, I, 144, 6¹.
- énas, sin, I, 189, 1; III, 7, 10²; IV, 12, 4; 5; V, 3, 7.
- éman, course, path, I, 58, 4¹; IV, 7, 9.
- éva, way: évaib, in due way, I, 68, 4; 95, 6; évena, in his way, I, 128, 3; aryāb évaib, IV, 2, 12²;—the going, I, 79, 2.
- evá, thus, I, 76, 5; 77, 5; 95, 11; III, 17, 2; evām, Samh., V, 6, 10¹.
- eshá, rapid, (IV, 2, 4¹).
- óka, homestead, I, 66, 3.
- ogāyāmāna, displaying his power, I, 140, 6.
- ógishṭba, richest: ógishṭbam médaḥ, III, 21, 5¹.
- óshadhī, herb, I, 59, 3; 98, 2; II, 1, 1; 4, 4; III, 1, 13; 5, 8¹; 22, 2; V, 8, 7.
- óha, heedfulness, IV, 10, 1².
- Kánva, I, 36, 8; 10¹; 11; 17; 19; kānvāsab, I, 44, 8; Kānvasya sūnāvab, I, 45, 5.
- katidhāñit, everywhere, I, 31, 2.
- kadā kaná, never, I, 150, 2.
- kan: tásya kñkan, therewith he is satisfied, I, 148, 2; kakñáb, loving, III, 5, 2; kānishab, take joyfully, III, 28, 5; kakñáb, delighting, desiring, V, 3, 10; 27, 3¹;—ā kake, he desires, III, 3, 3; ā kake, I love, III, 3, 10.
- kanyā, maiden, I, 66, 8¹; kanñnām, V, 3, 2.
- kāya: kāyasya ñit, of whomsoever, I, 27, 8; kāyā, how, V, 12, 3.
- kar, to praise, (I, 45, 4¹).
- karásna, arm: sriprā karásnā, III, 18, 5¹.
- karmanyā, able, III, 4, 9.
- kārman, work, deed, I, 31, 8; III, 12, 6.
- kalyāna, beautiful, I, 31, 9.
- kaví, sage, I, 12, 6; 7; 13, 2; 8, &c.; I, 95, 8²; dhīrāsab kavāyab, I, 146, 4¹.

- kavi-kratu, having the mind of a sage, thoughtful, I, 1, 5; III, 2, 4; 14, 7; 27, 12; V, 11, 4.
- kavi-kṛd, showing himself as a sage, III, 12, 3¹.
- kavi-tama, the highest sage, III, 14, 1.
- kavi-prastā, praised by sages, V, 1, 8.
- kavi-jastā, praised by the sages, III, 21, 4; 29, 7.
- kavyātā, wisdom, I, 96, 2.
- kā: kāyamānab, finding pleasure, III, 9, 2. See kan.
- kāmya, of love: dugdhām nā kāmyam, V, 19, 4¹.
- kārā, race: bhāgam nā kārē, I, 141, 10¹;—triumph: abhī kārām arāṇ, IV, 1, 14².
- kārū, singer, I, 31, 8; 9; 148, 2; II, 2, 9; III, 6, 1.
- kāvya, quality of a sage, wisdom, I, 72, 1¹; 96, 1; II, 5, 3; III, 1, 8; 17; 18; IV, 3, 16; 11, 3; V, 3, 5.
- kāshībā, pl., the (aerial) arena, I, 59, 6; race-course, I, 146, 5.
- kīyat, however small, IV, 5, 6.
- kīrī, poor, humble, I, 31, 13⁸; V, 4, 10¹.
- Kistā: Kistāsab, the Kistas, I, 127, 7¹.
- kūpaya, agitating, I, 140, 3.
- kumārā, prince, IV, 15, 7-10; boy, V, 2, 1¹; 2.
- kūlija, axe, III, 2, 1.
- Kujikā, pl., the Kuikas, III, 26, 1¹; 3; 29, 15.
- kūṇit-arthīn, striving for all that is desired, IV, 7, 6.
- kri*, to make, &c.: yagñām kṛinotana, I, 13, 12; kṛinuhi, I, 31, 8; kṛidhī nab rāyē, help us to wealth, III, 15, 3⁸; kṛinōti devān mārtYEShu, he conveys the gods to the mortals, I, 77, 1¹; kārikṛatāb, displaying, I, 140, 5¹; kṛitāḥ (read pāriṣh-kṛitāb?), adorned, I, 141, 8¹; dhiyā ṭakre, III, 27, 9¹; krāntāb, IV, 2, 14; ākarma te, we have done our work for thee, IV, 2, 19;—āram karat, he may readily serve, II, 5, 8; urū ṭakrire, they have made wide room for, I, 36, 8; satṛā ṭak-rānāb, I, 72, 1;—ā kṛinōshi, thou givest, I, 31, 7; ā kṛinudhvam, bring hither, I, 77, 2;—āpa ā kṛidhi, drive away, III, 16, 5²;—nī kab, he has brought down (i. e. surpassed), I, 72, 1¹;—pāri-kṛita, made ready, III, 28, 2;—sām akrinvan tégase, they have sharpened, III, 2, 10; see krānā.
- kṛidhū*, weak, IV, 5, 14.
- kṛip*: akṛipran, they have pined, IV, 2, 18⁴.
- kṛip*, body, I, 127, 1; 128, 2.
- krishīrī*, human race, I, 36, 19; 59, 5; 74, 2; 189, 3;—tribe, clan, V, 1, 6; 19, 3;—dwelling, II, 2, 10.
- krishnā*, black, I, 58, 4⁴; 73, 7; 141, 8²; krishnāb vṛishabhāb, I, 79, 2²; darkness, I, 140, 5; krishnāsu, in the dark nights, III, 15, 3.
- krishnā-adhvan*, whose path is black, II, 4, 6.
- krishnā-gamhas*, speeding on his black way, I, 141, 7.
- krishna-prūta*, immersed in darkness, I, 140, 3.
- krishnā-vyathi*, with a black trail, II, 4, 7¹.
- krishnā-sita*, drawing black furrows, I, 140, 4.
- kṛip*: ṭakṛipānta dhībhiḥ, they chanted their prayers, IV, 1, 14.
- kéta*, desire, I, 146, 3.
- ketú*, light, shine, splendour, I, 36, 14; IV, 7, 4; 14, 2; V, 7, 4; ketúm usṛāb, I, 71, 2²;—ketú, beacon, banner, I, 27, 12; III, 1, 17; 2, 14; V, 11, 3; vidā-thasya, I, 60, 1; yagñāsya, I, 96, 6; 127, 6; III, 11, 3; 29, 5; V, 11, 2; yagñānām, III, 3, 3; adhvarāsya, III, 8, 8; adh-varānām, III, 10, 4.
- kévala*, alone, I, 13, 10.
- kesin*, long-haired, I, 140, 8; long-maned, III, 6, 6.
- krātu*, power of mind, wisdom, I, 65, 9; 67, 2; 68, 3; 69, 2; 73, 2; 77, 3¹; 128, 4; 141, 6; 9; 143, 2; 145, 2; II, 5, 4; III, 2, 3; 6, 5; 9, 6; 11, 6; IV, 5, 7; 10, 1; 2; 12, 1; V, 10, 2; 17, 4;—mind, I, 66, 5²; will, I, 68, 9; ṭti krátvā, with this intention, IV, 1, 1¹;—power, I, 127, 9; 128, 5; III, 1, 5¹.

- krand, to neigh, bellow, roar : krándat, I, 36, 8; akikradat, I, 58, 2; kánikradat, bellowing, I, 128, 3¹; krándan, III, 26, 3.
- kram : pári akramít, he has circumambulated, IV, 15, 3.
- krāṇā, as soon as, I, 58, 3¹; V, 7, 8²; indeed, V, 10, 2¹.
- krīḍ, to sport : krī/antaḥ, IV, 4, 9; krī/ān, V, 19, 5.
- kshatrā, royal power, IV, 4, 8; V, 27, 6.
- kshatriya, royal power, IV, 12, 3¹.
- ksháp, night : kshápāḥ (conj. kshápāḥ), I, 44, 8²; kshápāḥ (conj. kshápāḥ), nights and dawns, I, 70, 7¹; kshápāḥ, by night, I, 79, 6; kshápāḥ sam-yātaḥ, II, 2, 2².
- kshápā-vat, earth-protecting, I, 70, 5¹.
- kshám, earth, (I, 79, 3²); III, 8, 7.
- ksháya, dwelling, I, 36, 8; 74, 4; 144, 7; III, 2, 6; 3, 2; 11, 7²; V, 9, 2; 12, 6; 23, 4; divi ksháyam (conj. divikshayám), III, 2, 13¹.
- kshar, to flow : ksharasi, I, 27, 6; ksharanti, I, 72, 10.
- kshā, earth, I, 67, 5²; 95, 10; 96, 7¹; 189, 3; vīsvāsu kshāsu, I, 127, 10².
- kshāman, earth, IV, 2, 16.
- kshi, to dwell : ksheti, I, 94, 2; ksheshyántaḥ, going to settle, II, 4, 3¹; ksháyāḥ, III, 8, 1; kshēpayat, may he give us dwelling, V, 9, 7; —prithivīm upa-kshéti, he dwells on the earth, I, 73, 3; —prati-kshiyántam, who abides turned towards, II, 10, 4; —to rule : ksháyan, III, 25, 3; kshayasi, IV, 5, 11.
- kshiti, dwelling, human settlement, I, 59, 1; 65, 5; 72, 7; 73, 4; II, 2, 3; III, 3, 9; 13, 4¹; 14, 4; IV, 5, 15¹; V, 7, 1; —tribe, III, 18, 1; V, 1, 10; kshitinām, daivínām, III, 20, 4.
- kshíp, finger : dāva kshípāḥ, III, 23, 3.
- kshiprá, a tossing (bow ?), IV, 8, 8¹.
- kshī, to fail : kshiyate, II, 9, 5.
- kshu-mát, rich in food, II, 1, 10; 4, 8; 9, 5; IV, 2, 18².
- kshé ? IV, 3, 6².
- kshétra, dwelling-place, V, 2, 3¹; 4.
- kshetra-sādhās, giving bliss to our fields, III, 8, 7².
- kshéma, safety, peace, I, 66, 3; 67, 2.
- kshema-yát, living in peace, III, 7, 2.
- kshóda, stream, I, 65, 5; 6¹; 10.
- khá, opening, IV, 11, 2.
- khyā : práti akhyat, he has looked on, IV, 13, 1; 14, 1; —vī akhyān, they looked around, IV, 1, 18.
- ganá, troop : ganám-ganam, III, 26, 6; crowd, V, 1, 3.
- gánya, belonging to the host, III, 7, 5.
- gabhirá, deep, IV, 5, 5²; 6.
- gam, to go : gagamyát, I, 58, 9; pari-sádantaḥ agman, IV, 2, 17²; —ákṣba gamema, we may obtain, IV, 5, 13; —sám-gatāni, comprised, I, 31, 5¹; sam-gagmānāsu kṛishṣhu, when the human tribes met (in battle), I, 74, 2; mānasā sám gagmúb, they agreed in their mind, III, 1, 13.
- gáya, home, I, 74, 2; dominion, V, 10, 3.
- gárbha, womb, I, 65, 4; 148, 5; —fruit of the womb, germ, I, 95, 2; 4; 146, 5; II, 10, 3; III, 1, 6; 10¹; 2, 10; 29, 2; 11; V, 2, 2; bhūtānām gárbham, III, 27, 9; —child, son : gárbhaḥ apām, vānānām, &c., I, 70, 3; III, 1, 12; 13; 5, 3; gárbhaḥ virúdhām, II, 1, 14; dádhate gárbham, IV, 7, 9¹.
- garbhīnī, pregnant, III, 29, 2.
- garh, to blame : garhase, IV, 3, 5.
- gavishá, see go-ishá.
- gávishri, see gó-ishri.
- Gávishṭbira, V, 1, 12.
- gávya, of the cows, I, 72, 8; IV, 2, 17; —bliss in cows, I, 140, 13.
- gavyát, longing for the cows, IV, 1, 15.
- gā, to go : pra-gigataḥ, coming forward, I, 150, 2.
- gā, to sing : ákṣba agnīm gāsi, V, 25, 1¹.
- gātú, path, course, I, 71, 2; 72, 9; 95, 10; 96, 4; III, 1, 2; 4, 4.
- gâyatrā, Gâyatra song, I, 12, 11; 27, 4; 79, 7; 188, 11.
- gâyatrā-vepas, moved by the Gâyatra song, I, 142, 12.
- gāh, to dive : āti gāhemahi, II, 7, 3.
- gīr, praise, prayer, I, 26, 5; 59, 4¹; II, 2, 1², &c.

- girl, hill, I, 65, 5.
 grívaṇas, loving praises, I, 45, 2; II, 6, 3.
 gu : góguve, he has loudly praised, I, 127, 10².
 gur : gugurvánīti, eager in praising, I, 142, 8;—abhí guguryāb, approve, I, 140, 13.
 gurú, heavy: mántrab gurúb, I, 147, 4.
 guh, to hide : guhámānab, IV, 1, 11.
 gúh, covert : guhá gúham, I, 67, 6³.
 gúhā, in secret, I, 65, 1; 67, 3; II, 4, 9¹; III, 1, 9; 14; V, 2, 1; 15, 5; gúhā bhávāntam, sántam, the hidden one, I, 67, 7; 141, 3; III, 5, 10; V, 8, 3; gúhā hitám, hidden, IV, 5, 8¹; 7, 6; V, 11, 6.
 gúhya, secret, I, 72, 6; IV, 5, 10; V, 3, 2; 3; 5, 10.
 gri, to praise, I, 44, 6, &c.; grínite, he is praised, I, 79, 12¹;—desh-nám abhí grínīhi, hail our gift, II, 9, 4; abhí grínītāb, they salute, III, 6, 10; girāb abhí grínāti, he responds to my hymns, V, 27, 3.
 gri : gāgri-vāmsab, having awoke, III, 10, 9; ágigar íti, he has awakened, V, 1, 3¹. See gri.
 grítsa, clever, III, 1, 2; 19, 1; IV, 5, 2.
 Grítsa-madá : grítsa-madáśab, II, 4, 9.
 gridhnú, greedy, I, 70, 11².
 gríhā-pati, master of the house, I, 12, 6; 36, 5; 60, 4; II, 1, 2³; IV, 9, 4; 11, 5; V, 8, 1; 2.
 gó, cow, I, 31, 12, &c.; 95, 8¹; V, 1, 3²; 3, 2²; ástam ná gāvāb, I, 66, 9; údhab ná gónām, I, 69, 3; puru-dámsam sanīm gób, III, 1, 23; ékā gaúb, III, 7, 2³; gúhyam náma gónām, V, 3, 3; ávindat gāv, V, 14, 4¹; ánasvantā gāvā, two oxen with a car, V, 27, 1.
 gó-agra, at the head of which are cows, II, 1, 16¹.
 go-ishá, fighting for cows, IV, 13, 2³.
 gó-ishri, 'striving for cows,' battle, I, 36, 8; (45, 7¹).
 gó-rigika, (I, 44, 3¹).
 Gótama, I, 79, 10; IV, 4, 11; pl., the Gotamas, I, 60, 5; 77, 5; 78, 1; 2¹.
 gopā, shepherd, guardian, protector, I, 96, 7; II, 9, 2; 6; III, 15, 2; V, 2, 5; 11, 1; 12, 4; gopām rítāśya, I, 1, 8; III, 10, 2; virām gopāb, I, 94, 5¹; 96, 4.
 gó-mat, rich in, or consisting in, cows, I, 79, 4; III, 16, 1; IV, 2, 5¹; V, 4, 11; 24, 2; vragām gó-mantam, full of cows, IV, 1, 15.
 gaurí, buffalo cow : gauryam, IV, 12, 6.
 gnā, wife, IV, 9, 4¹.
 gnāvat, accompanied by the divine wives : gnāvab (conj. gnāvab), II, 1, 5¹.
 grābhana-vat, a firm hold, I, 127, 5⁵.
 grāma, hamlet, I, 44, 10.
 grāvan, pressing-stone (of the Soma), IV, 3, 3¹; V, 25, 8¹.
 ghanā, club, I, 36, 16¹.
 gharma, offering of hot milk to the Asvins, III, 26, 7²; the gharma vessel, V, 19, 4.
 ghush : ghóshi, it resounded, IV, 4, 8.
 ghri, to besprinkle : gígharmi, II, 10, 4; 5.
 ghrinā, heat : ghrinā, I, 141, 4¹.
 ghrítā, the Ghríta, or ghee, I, 72, 3; 127, 1, &c.; II, 3, 11²; 5, 6¹; ghrítāni aksharan, I, 188, 5; ghrítam ná pútām, III, 2, 1; ghrítébhiā ā-hutab, worshipped by offerings of ghríta, II, 7, 4¹; sūki ghrítam ná taptām, IV, 1, 6.
 ghríta-āhavana, to whom ghríta oblations are poured out, I, 12, 5; 45, 5. ghríta-nirrig, whose stately robe is ghee, III, 17, 1; 27, 5.
 ghríta-prishṭa, whose back is covered with ghee, I, 13, 5; V, 4, 3; 14, 5. ghríta-pratika, whose face shines with ghee, I, 143, 7; III, 1, 18; V, 11, 1. ghríta-prasatta, taking his seat in ghee, V, 15, 1. ghríta-prúsh, ghríta-sprinkling, I, 45, 1; II, 3, 2.
 ghríta-yoni, having his abode in ghee, (I, 140, 1²); III, 4, 2¹; V, 8, 6.
 ghríta-vat, rich in ghee, I, 142, 2; III, 5, 6; 7; 21, 2.

- ghrita-śrūt, dripping with ghee, III, 21, 3; V, 14, 3.
 ghrita-śrī, adorned with ghee, I, 128, 4; V, 8, 3. ghrita-snā, swimming in ghee, IV, 6, 9. ghrita-snū, swimming in ghee, III, 6, 6¹; IV, 2, 3¹; V, 26, 2.
 ghrita-lā, (the ladle) full of ghee, III, 6, 1; 19, 2; 27, 1; IV, 6, 3; V, 28, 1.
 ghrī-śvi, brisk, IV, 2, 13.
 ghorā, terrible, IV, 6, 6. ghōsha, noise, III, 7, 6.
 ka, and : ka rātham for karātham, I, 70, 7²; (in the first member), I, 77, 2².
 kākri, maker, III, 16, 4.
 kaksh, to look : jatām kākshānab akshābhīb, I, 128, 3;—ānu kāksha, V, 2, 8;—abhi kakshase, V, 3, 9;—vi kashve, I, 98, 1; V, 19, 1³;—nab krīdhi sam-kākshē, make us behold, I, 127, 11.
 kākshana, appearance, I, 13, 5.
 kākshas, look, sight, I, 96, 2³; V, 15, 4.
 kat, to hide : kātantam, I, 65, 1;—prā kātāyasva, drive away, V, 4, 6.
 katub-akshā, four-eyed : katub-akshāb, I, 31, 13².
 kātub-pad, four-footed, I, 94, 5.
 kānab-hita, with satisfied mind, III, 2, 2; 7; 11, 2.
 kānas : kānab dhāb, accept, I, 26, 10.
 kandrā, gold, II, 2, 4².
 kandrā-ratha, with a shining chariot, I, 141, 12; III, 3, 5.
 kar, to move, walk : karāthāya gī-vāse, that we may walk and live, I, 36, 14; karāthā (conj. karāthā), I, 66, 9¹; karatab dhruvāsyā, of whatever moves or is firm, I, 146, 1; gūhā kārantaṁ, III, 1, 9²;—nīb karati, he comes forward, I, 95, 4;—te pāri karanti, they walk around thee, I, 127, 9²;—vi karanti, spread around, I, 36, 3;—abhi vi karanta, they have come hither and thither, III, 4, 5.
 karātha, all that moves, (I, 66, 9¹); sthātūb karātham, I, 58, 5²; 68, 1; 70, 7²; sthātām karātham, I, 70, 3; sthātṛin karātham ka, I, 72, 6².
 karishnū, speedy, IV, 7, 9.
 kārman, skin : saśasya kārma, III, 5, 6²; 7¹;—kārma-iva, like a hide, IV, 13, 4.
 karshanī, human tribe, I, 127, 2; III, 6, 5; 10, 1; IV, 7, 4; 8, 8; V, 23, 1. karshani-dhrī, supporting the human tribes, IV, 1, 2. karshani-prā, filling the dwellings of people, IV, 2, 13.
 kashāla-vat, with head-pieces, III, 8, 10¹.
 kāyū, respectful, III, 24, 4.
 kārū, beautiful, I, 58, 6, &c.; kārū, loc., I, 72, 2².
 kārū-pratīka, cheerful-faced, II, 8, 2.
 ki : ni-kāyā, revering, III, 26, 1;—vi kinavat, may he distinguish, IV, 2, 11. kikitvit-manas, attentive-minded, V, 22, 3.
 kit, to shine, light up : kitāyantam, II, 2, 4; kitayat, II, 2, 5; kitayema, II, 2, 10; kitreṇa kikitē bhāṣā, II, 4, 5; kiteta, II, 4, 6; kēkitānab, resplendent, III, 29, 7; kiteta, he has distinguished himself, V, 27, 1;—prā kiteta, he has shone forth, V, 19, 1;—vi kikitē, it shines, I, 71, 7².
 kit, to see, watch, be intent on : kikitā, I, 67, 7; kikitat asmai, may he pay attention to this (sacrificer), I, 69, 9; kitāyantab, awaking attention, I, 94, 4; kitati, I, 128, 4; III, 11, 3¹; kitāte, III, 14, 2; kikitānab akitān, seeing the unseen ones, III, 18, 2; kitatab, attentive, IV, 5, 4; kikitdhī, V, 22, 4¹; kitayat, he has enlightened, IV, 1, 9¹; kitāyan, enlightening, V, 15, 5²; kikitvān, knowing, I, 68, 6, &c.;—ā kiteta, he has understood, I, 95, 4;—keti prā, it has been known, III, 12, 9;—vi kitāyantab, causing to discern, V, 19, 2;—sam-kikitvān, looking over, IV, 7, 8.
 kiti, pile, (I, 67, 10²).
 kittā, mind, V, 7, 9.

- kitti*, splendour (?), I, 67, 10¹.
kitti, thought, III, 2, 3; 3, 3; wisdom, IV, 2, 11.
kitrá, bright, excellent, I, 66, 1; 6, &c.
kitrá-bhānu, with bright splendour, I, 27, 6; II, 10, 2; V, 26, 2.
kitrá-yāma, whose way is bright, III, 2, 13.
kitrá-śokis, of bright splendour, V, 17, 2.
kitrá-ravab-tama, whose glory is brightest, I, 1, 5; 45, 6.
kud, to quicken, promote: kodáyāsi, I, 94, 15; kodayata, I, 188, 8.
krī: vi krītānti, they get off, I, 67, 8.
kētana, brilliant, II, 5, 1²; III, 12, 2;—n., splendour, light, I, 13, 11; III, 3, 8; IV, 7, 2.
kētishība, most famous, I, 65, 9; most shining, I, 128, 8; most brilliant, V, 27, 1.
kodā, driver, I, 143, 6.
kodayāt-mati, stirring thoughts, V, 8, 6.
kyu: ā tvā akuṣyavub, they have made thee speed hither, I, 45, 8.
kbad, to show oneself: kbadayati, III, 9, 7.
kbâyā, shadow, I, 73, 8. gaṭbāra, belly, I, 95, 10; III, 2, 11; 22, 1; 29, 14¹.
gan, to be born: gagñānāb, I, 12, 3; gātāb and gāni-tvab, I, 66, 8¹; ganayat, he caused to be born, I, 71, 8¹; gātāsya ka gāyamānasya ka kshām, the earth (i.e. the support) of what is born and what will be born, I, 96, 7¹; gāyemahi, we may multiply with offspring, I, 97, 4; ganāmasi, III, 2, 1¹; gātāb gāyate, III, 8, 5¹; ganata, they have generated, IV, 1, 1; gātān ubhāyān, the two races (of men and gods), IV, 2, 2; gānitos, from giving birth, IV, 6, 7;—ā gāyamānam (conj. gāyamānā), I, 60, 3¹;—pragagñi-vān, generator, III, 2, 11.
gāna, man, people, I, 36, 2, &c.; daivyaṃ gānam, the divine host, I, 31, 17; 44, 6; 45, 1^{1,2}; 9; 10; V, 13, 3; gānāya śāsvate, I, 36, 19.
gānas, tribe: gānasī iti ubhé (ti, both tribes (of gods and of men), II, 2, 4.
gāni, wife, I, 66, 8; gānayab sāni/āb, I, 71, 1;—woman, III, 26, 3¹; IV, 5, 5. ganitrī, begetter, I, 76, 4¹; ganitā, rōdasyob, I, 96, 4; pitūb ka gārbham ganitūb ka, III, 1, 10¹; dyaūb pitā ganitā, IV, 1, 10.
gāni-tva, who will be born: gāni-tvam (conj. gāni-tvab), I, 66, 8¹.
gāniman, birth, III, 1, 4; 20; trīb gānimāni, IV, 1, 7;—devānām gānimāni, III, 4, 10; IV, 2, 17; 18;—offspring, V, 3, 3.
ganūs, birth: ganūshā, by birth, by nature, I, 94, 6; III, 1, 3; 9; 2, 2; ganūsham, I, 141, 4.
gantū, people, human creature, I, 45, 6, &c.; mānushab gantūbhiḥ, III, 3, 6.
gānman, birth: mānushasya gānasya gānma, I, 70, 2; devānām gānma, I, 70, 6; gānma-iva nityam tānayam, III, 15, 2¹;—birth-place: paramē gānman, II, 9, 3;—race: ubhāyāya gānmane, I, 31, 7; divyāya gānmane, I, 58, 6; devān (i.e. devām) gānma, I, 67, 3^{1,6}; gānmani iti ubhé (ti, I, 141, 11⁸; gānma ubhāyā, II, 6, 7; gānman-ganman, generation by generation, III, 1, 20; 21.
gānya, belonging to one's own people: gānyā-iva (conj. gānyab-iva), II, 6, 7¹.
gābāru? IV, 5, 7¹.
gāmbha, jaw, I, 143, 5; 148, 4; IV, 7, 10.
gar, see gri.
garāna, sound (?), I, 141, 7¹.
garat-vīsha, busy among the decayed (wood), V, 8, 2¹.
Garā-bodha, N. pr.: Gārā-bodha, I, 27, 10¹.
garitrī, praiser, I, 189, 4; II, 9, 5; III, 7, 6¹; 12, 2; 5; 15, 5; V, 3, 11.
garimān, old age, I, 71, 10.
gāvishība, most swift, IV, 2, 3.
gā, people: nab gāb, I, 143, 8.
gāb-patyā, householdership, V, 28, 3¹.

- gāgrivi*, watchful: gāgrivib, I, 31, 9; III, 2, 12; 3, 7; 24, 3; 26, 3; 28, 5; 29, 2; V, 11, 1.
- Gātā-vedas*, I, 44, 1; 5; 45, 3, &c.; 127, 1².
- gāna*, birth: trīni gānā, I, 95, 3.
- gāmarya*?, IV, 3, 9⁴.
- gāmī*, kinsman, I, 31, 10; 65, 7; 71, 7³; 75, 3; 4; IV, 4, 5; V, 19, 4; gāminām svāsrinām, uterine sisters, III, 1, 11; lokām gāmīm, the sister world, III, 2, 9⁴.
- gāyā*, wife, I, 66, 5; IV, 3, 2¹.
- gāyū*, victorious, I, 67, 1².
- gārā*, lover, I, 66, 8; 69, 1¹; 9.
- gi*, to conquer, to gain: gayati, I, 36, 4;—sam-gigivān, III, 15, 4.
- ginv*, to stir: ginvate, III, 2, 11;
- ginva*, III, 3, 7; 15, 6;—ūpa prā ginvan, they have excited, I, 71, 1¹.
- gīvri*, aged, I, 70, 10.
- gihmā*, down-streaming, I, 95, 5.
- gihvā*, tongue, I, 140, 2; II, 1, 13; 4, 4; III, 20, 2; IV, 5, 10; 7, 10; V, 26, 1.
- gīrā*, quick, I, 44, 11; III, 3, 6.
- gīrā-arva*, with quick horses, I, 141, 12; II, 4, 2.
- gīrā-dānu*, rich in quickening rain, I, 189, 8.
- gīv*, to live: gīvāse, I, 36, 14; 72, 7; 79, 9; gīvātave, I, 94, 4.
- gīvā*, living, I, 68, 3;—life, I, 140, 8.
- gīvā-dhanya*, the prize (of contests) which living beings have gained, (I, 149, 2¹).
- gīvāpita-sarga*, whose stream is drunk by living beings, I, 149, 2¹.
- gīva-yāgā*, a sacrifice of living (victims), I, 31, 15.
- gur*, see gri.
- gush*, to be pleased, accept gladly: gushasva, I, 12, 12; 75, 1; 144, 7; gushanta, I, 68, 3; 9; a-gushran, I, 71, 1, &c.; gushanta pānthām, they followed gladly his path, I, 127, 6; tanvām gushasva, III, 1, 1⁶; goshi, find pleasure, IV, 9, 7¹;—prāti goshayete iti, they caress, I, 95, 5; 6.
- gūshra*, welcome, I, 44, 2; 4;—grateful, I, 73, 10.
- guhū-āsyā*, whose mouth is the sacrificial spoon, I, 12, 6.
- guhurānā*, leading astray, I, 189, 1.
- guhū*, sacrificial ladle, I, 58, 4³; 76, 5³; 145, 3; II, 10, 6; IV, 4, 2¹; V, 1, 3; saptā guhvāb, I, 58, 7².
- gū*, to speed, incite: gunāb, I, 27, 7; gunāsi, I, 71, 6; gūgu-vat, impetuous, IV, 11, 4.
- gū*, speedy: gūvāb, I, 140, 4¹.
- gūti*, speeding, I, 127, 2;—solicitation, III, 3, 8;—yagñāsyā gūtyā, stirring, III, 12, 3.
- gūrvi*, flaming (?), I, 127, 10.
- gūrv*, to consume: ni-gūrvan, IV, 7, 11.
- gri*, to grow old: gūryati, I, 128, 2; gugurvān, II, 4, 5; gūryat-su, III, 23, 1; garāyan, making decay, II, 8, 2¹; garase, V, 15, 4¹.
- gri*, to praise: garate, he is praised (?), I, 59, 7;—sām te garetā, may it resound to thee, IV, 3, 15¹.
- gri*, to be awake: garate, I, 59, 7; 127, 10⁴; garase, I, 94, 14¹; garasva, III, 3, 7¹;—sām garatām, may it awaken, IV, 4, 8¹.
- gētri*, conqueror, I, 66, 3; V, 25, 6.
- gēnya*, noble, I, 71, 4; 128, 7; 140, 2; 146, 5; II, 5, 1; V, 1, 5.
- gōsha*, desire: gōsham ā, I, 77, 5.
- gohūtra*, to be invoked, II, 10, 1.
- gñā*, to know: ā gñāta, accept, I, 94, 8;—pra-gñān, prescient, II, 3, 10; ānu pra-gñān, III, 26, 8;—vi-gñān, discriminating, I, 69, 3¹;—sām gñāta, they were concordant, I, 68, 8¹; sam-gñānāb, being like-minded, I, 72, 5.
- gyāyas*, better, I, 27, 13.
- gyēshība*, the first, I, 127, 2; eldest, IV, 1, 2.
- gyotīb-ratha*, whose chariot is light, I, 140, 1.
- gyōtis*, light, I, 36, 19; 59, 2; III, 26, 8; divāb gyōtib, I, 69, 1; vipām gyōtimshi, III, 10, 5¹; vidānta gyōtib, IV, 1, 14; svāb nā gyōtib, IV, 10, 3¹.
- grāyas*, space, I, 95, 9; 140, 9; V, 8, 7.
- tākvan*, N. of an animal, I, 66, 2¹.
- taksh*, to fashion: hrīdā tashān māntrān, I, 67, 4; tatāksha, III, 8, 6; ataksham, V, 2, 11.

ta/it, lightning, I, 94, 7.

tát-ogas, having the strength of such a one, V, 1, 8.

tan, to spin out, stretch out: tántum tanushva, I, 142, 1; tántum tatám, II, 3, 6; tanvânáb yag-ñám, III, 3, 6;—áva tanuhi, unbend, IV, 4, 5;—â-tatántha, thou hast spread, III, 22, 2;—âti nîb tatanyub, may they spread out, I, 141, 13²;—vî tanvate, V, 13, 4; 15, 3³.

tán, continuation: jâsvatâ tânâ, constantly, I, 26, 6¹; tânâ, for ever, I, 77, 4; II, 2, 1²; III, 25, 1; 27, 9;—tokâsya nab tâne tanûnâm, II, 9, 2.

tânaya, offspring, I, 96, 4; III, 15, 2¹;—tokâsya tânaye, of kith and kin, I, 31, 12¹; toké iti tânaye, I, 147, 1³; tokâya tânayâya, I, 189, 2; IV, 12, 5.

tanayitnú, thunderbolt, IV, 3, 1.

tânâ, see tân.

tanû, body: tanvâb, I, 31, 12; 72, 3; 5³; ikkânta rétâb mithâb tanûshu, I, 68, 8¹; tâne tanûnâm, II, 9, 2; tanvâm gushasva, III, 1, 1⁶; tanvâ su-gâta, III, 15, 2; tanû-bhiô, IV, 2, 14; tanvâb tanvate vî, V, 15, 3³.

tanû-krit, the body's creator: tanû-krit, I, 31, 9.

Tânû-napât, 'son of the body,' I, 13, 2¹; 142, 2; 188, 2; III, 4, 2; 29, 11.

tanû-rûk, shining with his body, II, 1, 9.

tântu, thread (of sacrifice), I, 142, 1;—tântum tatám, warp, II, 3, 6;—web (of light), IV, 13, 4.

tand, to grow tired: tandate (by conjecture), I, 58, 1¹.

tanyatú, thunder, V, 25, 8.

tap, to burn, heat: tápo iti, tápa, III, 18, 2; tatápate, IV, 2, 6.

tápishtâ, hottest, IV, 4, 1; 5, 4.

tápu, hot, II, 4, 6.

tápub-gambha, with fiery jaws, I, 36, 16; 58, 5.

tápus, heat: tápûmshi, IV, 4, 2.

tamab-hán, destroyer of darkness, I, 140, 1.

támas, darkness: dvârâ támasab, III, 5, 1; tirâb támâmsi dar-jatâb, III, 27, 13.

taráni, strongly advancing, triumphant, I, 128, 6; III, 11, 3²; 29, 13; IV, 4, 12.

târas, advancing power, III, 18, 3. târutri, a winner, I, 27, 9.

târus: dâkshasya târushab, of superior strength, III, 2, 3.

tavás, strong, III, 1, 1¹; 2; 13.

tavishâ, powerful, III, 12, 8.

tâvishî, strength, I, 128, 5; III, 3, 5; 26, 4.

tâvyams, most powerful, I, 143, 1; V, 17, 1.

tâyú, thief, I, 65, 1; V, 15, 5².

tâvakâ, thy, I, 94, 11.

tigitâ, sharp, I, 143, 5.

tigmâ, sharp, IV, 6, 8; 7, 10; V, 19, 5.

tigmâ-anika, sharp-faced, I, 95, 2.

tigmâ-âyudha, with sharp weapons, V, 2, 10.

tigmâ-gambha, with sharp teeth, I, 79, 6; IV, 5, 4; 15, 5.

tigmâ-bhrishî, sharp-pointed, IV, 5, 3.

tigmâ-jokis, sharp-flaming, I, 79, 10.

tigmâ-heti, with the sharp weapon, IV, 4, 4.

tig, to sharpen: tégamânab, sharpened, III, 8, 11.

titvishânâ, rushing forward impetuously, V, 8, 5.

tir, see tri.

tirâb-ahnya, kept over night, I, 45, 10¹; III, 28, 3; 6.

tirâb-hita, dwelling in concealment, III, 9, 5.

tirâkâ, throughout, II, 10, 4.

tirás, through, III, 27, 13.

tu: tûtâva, he is strong, I, 94, 2.

tug, to stir, press onward: tutugyât, I, 143, 6; tûngamânâb, III, 1, 16; tugé, IV, 1, 3.

túg, impetuous: tugâ girâ, V, 17, 3².

túturi, conqueror, I, 145, 3.

tud, to strike: nî tundate (conj. nú tandate), I, 58, 1¹.

turâ, quick, I, 68, 9; 96, 8; III, 4, 11; IV, 3, 8.

turîpa, seed, I, 142, 10; III, 4, 9.

Turvâsa, I, 36, 18¹.

Turvîti, I, 36, 18¹.

tuvi-grâ, mightily devouring, I, 140, 9.

tuvi-grîva, with mighty neck, V, 2, 12.

tuvi-gâtâ, strong-born, IV, 11, 2; V, 2, 11; 27, 1.

- túvi-dyumna, highly glorious, III, 16, 3; 6.
 tuví-brahman, knower of mighty spells, V, 25, 5.
 tuvísravab-tama, most mightily renowned, III, 11, 6; V, 25, 5.
 túvishmat, mighty, IV, 5, 3.
 tuvi-sván, loudly roaring, V, 16, 3.
 tuvi-svanás, roaring mightily, IV, 6, 10; V, 8, 3.
 tuvi-sváni, loudly roaring, I, 58, 4; 127, 6.
 túrni, swift, III, 3, 5; 11, 5.
 túrni-tama, quickest, IV, 4, 3.
 tri, to get through, to overcome: ataran, I, 36, 8; táran, III, 24, 1; turyāma, V, 9, 6; tarishāni, may they pass across, V, 10, 6'; tuturyāt, may he traverse, V, 15, 3;—titirvāmsab āti srīdhab, I, 36, 7; āti tarema, III, 27, 3;—with prá, to prolong, promote: pra-tirán, I, 44, 6; prá tira, I, 94, 16; III, 17, 2; prá tirasi, IV, 6, 1; prá tāri pra-tarám, IV, 12, 6;—ví tārít, he has crossed, I, 69, 5²; 73, 1; vi-tāritratā, progressing, I, 144, 3.
 trína, grass, III, 29, 6.
 trid, to perforate: atrinat, IV, 1, 19;—ānu trindhi, V, 12, 2.
 trip, to satiate oneself: sómasya trimpatām, III, 12, 3.
 trish, to be thirsty: tatrishānāb, I, 31, 7²; ātrishyanti, free from thirst, I, 71, 3²; 4; tatrishānāb, II, 4, 6.
 trishú, thirsty, greedy, I, 58, 2; 4; IV, 4, 1; 7, 11.
 trishu-kyút, moving about thirstily, I, 140, 3. trishrá, pungent sharpness, III, 9, 3.
 tégas, sharp splendour, I, 71, 8²; sharpness: sám akrinvan tégase, III, 2, 10.
 tégishāba, hottest, I, 127, 4¹.
 tégiyas, sharpest, III, 19, 3.
 toká, children: toká tánaya, kith and kin, I, 31, 12¹; 147, 1³; 189, 2; IV, 12, 5; nitye toké, II, 2, 11; tokāsa táne tanū-nām, II, 9, 2; tokāya tugé, IV, 1, 3.
 toká-vat, with offspring, III, 13, 7.
 todá, an or the impeller, I, 150, 1².
 tośá, bounteous, III, 12, 4¹.
 tmánā, by oneself, by one's own power, I, 69, 10; 79, 6, &c. tmányā, thyself, I, 188, 10.
 tráyab-trimsat, thirty-three (gods), I, 45, 2.
 Trasādasyu, V, 27, 3².
 trā: trāsate, may he protect, I, 128, 5; 7.
 trā, protector, (I, 72, 5¹):
 trātrī, protector, I, 31, 12; V, 24, 1.
 trí, three, I, 13, 9, &c.; trí roka-nāni, the threefold light, I, 149, 4; tistrī-bhyab ā vāram, II, 5, 5²; tistráb devīb, II, 3, 8; III, 4, 8; V, 5, 8; trīni satú trī sahasrāni trimśat ka devāb náva ka, III, 9, 9; trīni āyūmshi, tistráb ā-gānīb, III, 17, 3¹; trí, tistráb, III, 20, 2.
 trimśat, thirty: trimśatam trīn ka devān, III, 6, 9.
 Trī-aruna, V, 27, 1-3.
 trī-āvir, with threefold admixture (Soma), V, 27, 5¹.
 Tritá, V, 9, 5.
 tri-dhātu, threefold: arkáb tri-dhātub, III, 26, 7¹.
 tri-mūrdhān, having three heads, I, 146, 1¹.
 tri-várūtha, thrice-protecting, V, 4, 8.
 tri-vishī, thrice, IV, 6, 4; 15, 2¹.
 tri-vrīt, threefold: tri-vrīt ānnam I, 140, 2².
 tris, thrice: trīb saptá, I, 72, 6¹; trīb āban, III, 4, 2; trīb (read trī?), IV, 1, 7¹.
 tri-sadhassthā, dwelling in three abodes, V, 4, 8;—threefold abode, V, 11, 2².
 Traivriśhná, the son of Trivriśhan, V, 27, 1.
 tvák, skin, III, 21, 5;—leather-bag (cloud), I, 79, 3²;—tvakī upamāsyām, I, 145, 5².
 tvád, pers. pron.: tvé iti, in thee, I, 26, 6; 36, 5¹; 6; te, acc., I, 127, 9²; V, 6, 4¹; te túbhyam, V, 6, 5¹.
 tvadrík, directed towards thee, V, 3, 12.
 Tváshtri, N. of a god, I, 13, 10; 95, 2²; 5²; 142, 10; 188, 9; II, 1, 5; 3, 9; III, 4, 9; V, 5, 9.
 tvā-ūta, guarded by thee, I, 73, 9; 74, 8; III, 19, 3; IV, 4, 14; V, 3, 6.

tvā-dāta, given by thee, V, 7, 10.
 tvā-dūta, with thee as messenger,
 II, 10, 6; V, 6, 8.
 tvā-yā, desire of worshipping thee,
 IV, 2, 6; 14.
 tvā-vat, like thee: tvā-vān, I, 189, 6.
 Tvāshtrā, son of Tvashtri, III, 7, 4¹.
 tvish, see titvishānā.
 tvīshi, impetuous power, I, 71, 5;
 V, 8, 5.
 tveshā, impetuous, fierce, I, 36, 20;
 66, 6; 70, 11; 95, 8; 143, 3;
 II, 9, 1; III, 22, 2; 26, 5;
 IV, 6, 10; V, 8, 6.
 tveshātha, fierceness, I, 141, 8.
 tveshā-pratika, with sharp point, I, 66, 7.
 tsar: tatsāra, he steals upon (his prey), I, 145, 4;—āva tsarat, he stealthily approached, I, 71, 5.
 damr, to bite: dārate, I, 189, 5.
 damsānā, wonderful deed, III, 3, 11; wonderful power, III, 9, 7.
 dāmsas, wonderful deed, I, 69, 8.
 dāksha, mind, I, 68, 8;—power, ability, skill, I, 76, 1; 95, 6¹;
 141, 11²; III, 2, 3; 13, 2; IV,
 10, 2; V, 10, 2; 18, 2; 20, 3;
 dāksham (conj. yakshām), IV,
 3, 13³; Dāksha personified,
 III, 27, 9²; 10; V, 16, 2;—
 skilful, I, 59, 4; III, 14, 7.
 dāksha-pati, lord of power, I, 95, 6.
 dākshas, ability, II, 1, 11.
 dakshāyya, to be treated kindly, II, 4, 3.
 dakshinatās, from the right side, I,
 95, 6².
 dākshinā, the sacrificial gift, V, 1, 3³.
 dakshinā-āvrīt, turned to the right,
 I, 144, 1³. dakshinā-vāh, carrying from left to right, III, 6, 1². dāgdhri, burner, V, 9, 4.
 datvāt, having teeth, I, 189, 5.
 Dadhī-krā, III, 20, 1²; 5.
 dán, house: pátib dán, lord of the house, I, 149, 1².
 dánta, tooth: atharyāb ná dántam,
 IV, 6, 8².
 dabh, to deceive: dípsanta ná de-bhub, I, 147, 3; dadabhanta, I, 148, 2; dabhan, I, 148, 5;—
 sátram ā-dabhúb, III, 16, 2.
 dábha, deceiver, V, 19, 4³.

dabhrā, few, I, 31, 6.
 dām, house: dām-su, I, 141, 4.
 dáma, house, I, 1, 8, &c.; II, 1, 7²;
 8; kítib apām dáme, I, 67, 10¹; dáme-dame, house by house, I, 128, 4; IV, 7, 3; V, 1, 5; 6, 8.
 dāmūnas, domestic, friend of the house, I, 60, 4²; 68, 9; 140,
 10; 141, 11; III, 1, 11; 17;
 2, 15; 3, 6; 5, 4; IV, 4, 11;
 11, 5; V, 1, 8¹; 4, 5; 8, 1.
 dām-pati, master of the house, I, 127, 8; V, 22, 4;—dām-patī, husband and wife, V, 3, 2.
 dāmya, domestic, III, 1, 15; 2, 8. day, to bestow: dayasva, I, 68, 6;—
 vi dāyamānab, distributing, III, 2, 11; ví dayate, he tears to pieces, IV, 7, 10.
 dārvī, sacrificial ladle, V, 6, 9.
 darsatā, conspicuous, beautiful, I,
 36, 9; 141, 1; 144, 7; III, 1, 3; 10, 6; 27, 13.
 dāra-pramati: dāsa-pramatim, read:
 dāsa prāmatim, I, 141, 2⁴.
 darasy: sám darasya, forgive, III, 7, 10. das: sam-dadasvān, being exhausted (?), II, 2, 6¹.
 dasmā, wonderful, I, 77, 3; 148, 4;
 II, 1, 4; 9, 5; III, 1, 7; 3, 2;
 IV, 1, 3; 6, 9; V, 6, 5; 17, 4.
 dasmāt, possessed of wonderful power, I, 74, 4.
 Dāsyu, I, 36, 18; 59, 6; V, 4, 6;
 pl., the Dasyus, I, 78, 4; III,
 29, 9; V, 7, 10; 14, 4.
 dah, to burn: dāha, I, 12, 5, &c.; dhākshat, burning, II, 4, 7;—
 ānu dhakshi, II, 1, 10;—prā dhakshi, I, 76, 3;—prāti dahatāt, burn against, III, 18, 1;—sām dāha, I, 36, 14; 20.
 dā, to give: ānu dāb, they give way,
 I, 127, 4;—ná pára dāt, he will not surrender, V, 3, 12.
 dā, to bind: ní-dadub, (V, 2, 6²);
 ní-ditam, V, 2, 7.
 dā (do), to cut, to shear: dāti, I, 65,
 8; V, 7, 7.
 dātrī, giver, I, 13, 11.
 dātri, mower, V, 7, 7.
 dāna, gift, V, 27, 5.
 dāvān: dāvāne, for the sake of giving,
 II, 1, 10.

- dār, to offer, worship: dadāsa, I, 36, 4, &c.; yāb tūbhyam dārat, I, 68, 6; dārat, IV, 2, 9; dārat yāb asmai āram, who satisfies him, I, 70, 5; nāmab dārat, I, 71, 6; agnāye dāshri āvase, I, 127, 4¹.
- dāś, worship, I, 127, 7.
- dāśu-adhvara, performing worship, I, 75, 3¹.
- dāśvāms, worshipper, liberal giver, I, 1, 6; 27, 6, &c.
- dās: abhi-dāsati, he tries to harm, I, 79, 11.
- dāsā-patnī, (strongholds) of which the Dāsas are the lords, III, 12, 6.
- dāsvat, munificent, I, 127, 1; II, 4, 3; IV, 2, 7; V, 9, 2.
- Diti, IV, 2, 11¹.
- didrikshēnya, worthy to be looked for, I, 146, 5.
- didrikshēya, visible, III, 1, 12.
- didyū, arrow, I, 71, 5.
- didyūt, shaft, I, 66, 7.
- didhishāyā, worthy to be searched for, desirable, I, 73, 2⁴; II, 4, 1.
- didhishū, seeking to obtain, I, 71, 3².
- dīv, see dyū.
- divab-rūt, shining from heaven, III, 7, 5.
- divākshas, dwelling in heaven, III, 7, 2¹.
- divā-tarāt, more than by day, I, 127, 5².
- divi-kshayā, dweller in heaven: divi-kshayām (conj. for divi kshāyam), III, 2, 13¹.
- divitmat, going to heaven, I, 26, 2.
- divishri, the striving for day, I, 45, 7¹; 141, 6: — heaven-aspiring sacrifice, IV, 9, 3.
- divi-sprīś, attaining to Heaven, I, 142, 8; V, 11, 1; 13, 2¹.
- divyā, heavenly, I, 143, 5; 144, 6; III, 2, 4; — divine: divyāya gānmane, I, 58, 6.
- dīs, quarter of the world: dīsab, I, 31, 14²; prā dīsam (for prādīsam), I, 95, 3².
- dī, didī, to shine, I, 36, 11, &c.; rayim asmāsu didīhi, shine upon us with thy wealth, II, 2, 6; didayet, may he illuminate, II, 4, 3; dīdyat (conj. dīdhyat), III, 1, 1²; devān ākṣba dīdy- ānab, brightly shining towards the gods, III, 15, 5¹; dīdyatam brihāt, III, 27, 15.
- dīdi-vāms, resplendent, I, 12, 5; 10, &c.
- dīdivi, shining, I, 1, 8.
- dīdhiti, (adoring) thought, devotion, III, 4, 3; IV, 2, 16²; V, 18, 4.
- dirghā, long-lasting: dirghāb rayīb, IV, 2, 5.
- dirghā-āyus, long living, IV, 15, 9; 10.
- dirghāyu-śokis, flaming through long life, V, 18, 3.
- dub-itā, trouble, misfortune, danger, I, 99, 1; 128, 5; III, 20, 4; V, 3, 11; 4, 9; 9, 6.
- dub-uktā, evil word, I, 147, 4.
- dub-ēva, of evil conduct, IV, 5, 5; V, 2, 9.
- dub-gā, trouble, I, 99, 1; 189, 2.
- dub-gāha, difficulty, V, 4, 9.
- dub-grībhī, difficult to seize, I, 140, 6.
- dub-grībhīy: dub-grībhīyase, thou showest thyself hard to seize, V, 9, 4.
- dub-dābha, undeceivable, III, 2, 2; IV, 9, 2; 8.
- dúb-dhita, badly-composed (prayer). I, 140, 11.
- dub-dhī, malicious, I, 94, 8; 9; III, 16, 2.
- dub-matī, hatred, ill-will, III, 15, 6; IV, 11, 6.
- dub-sāmsa, one who curses, I, 94, 9.
- dugdhā, milk, V, 19, 4¹.
- dukkṣūnā, misfortune, I, 189, 5.
- dúdhita, confused, IV, 1, 17¹.
- dúr, gate, door, I, 68, 10; II, 2, 7¹; IV, 4, 6; dúrab, the doors (of heaven), I, 69, 10; 188, 5¹; rāyāb dúrab, I, 72, 8.
- duritā, see dub-itā.
- durōka-śokis, he to whose flame men do not get accustomed, I, 66, 5¹.
- duronā, house, I, 69, 4; 5; 70, 4¹, &c.
- durgā, see dub-gā.
- dúryā, pl., dwelling, IV, 1, 9; 18; 2, 12.
- dúvas, worship, I, 36, 14²; III, 2, 6; 16, 4; IV, 2, 9; 8, 6.
- duvasanā, hastening, IV, 6, 10².
- duvasy, to exalt: duvasyati, I, 78, 2; III, 3, 1; duvasyan, III, 1, 2; 13; duvasyāta, III, 2, 8; V, 28, 6.

- dush, to violate: dūdushat, III, 3, 1.
dustāra, invincible, I, 79, 8¹; II, 2, 10; III, 24, 1; V, 15, 3.
duh, to milk: dohāse, I, 141, 2; amṛitam dūhānāb, III, 1, 14.
duhitṛī, daughter, I, 71, 5¹.
dūtā, messenger (Agni), I, 12, 1; 8; 36, 3-5; 44, 2; 3; 9; 11; 58, 1; 60, 1; 72, 7; 74, 4; 188, 1; II, 6, 6; 7; 9, 2; III, 3, 2; 5, 2; 9; 6, 5; 9, 8; 11, 2; 17, 4; IV, 1, 8; 2, 2; 7, 4; 9; 11; 8, 1; 9, 2; V, 3, 8; 8, 6; 11, 4; 21, 3; 26, 6.
dūtyā, the work of a messenger: dūtyām (yāsi), I, 12, 4; 44, 12; 74, 7; messengership, I, 71, 4³; IV, 7, 8; 8, 4; 9, 6.
dūrē-bhā, far-shining, I, 65, 10.
dri, to rend: dadri-vāmsab, IV, 1, 14.
driḷbā, strong, I, 71, 2; 72, 8.
driṣika, beautiful, I, 27, 10;—sight, I, 65, 10; 69, 10.
driṣya, visible, IV, 2, 12.
driśāt-vatī, N. of a river, III, 23, 4.
devā, god, I, 1, 2, &c.; devāb devē-bhiḥ, devānām, &c., I, 1, 5; 13, 11; 31, 1; 9; 68, 2¹; 94, 13; 142, 11; II, 3, 1; IV, 15, 1; devām-devam, this or that god, I, 26, 6; bhūvab devānām pitā putrāb sán, I, 69, 2; devānām gánma, I, 70, 6; devān (i. e. devām) gánma, I, 71, 3⁵; IV, 1, 2²; 2, 17²; pāthab devēbhyab, I, 188, 10¹; devānām gánimāni, III, 4, 10; devānām gūhyā nāmāni, V, 5, 10; devāsab sārvaḥ viśā, V, 26, 9;—viśve devāb, II, 3, 4¹; V, 3, 1; 26, 4;—divine, I, 1, 1; III, 20, 4; dvārab devīb, I, 13, 6; II, 3, 5; V, 5, 5; dēva barhiḥ, II, 3, 4; dhiyam devim, III, 18, 3; devīb pātnīb, IV, 5, 13.
deva-avī, eagerly longing for the gods, III, 29, 8.
devā-kāma, loving the gods, II, 3, 9; III, 4, 9.
devā-gusha, agreeable to the god, I, 77, 1.
devā-gūta, sent by the gods, IV, 11, 4.
devā-tāti, the divine world, host of the gods, I, 127, 9; 141, 10; III, 19, 2; 4; 26, 2; IV, 6, 3; 9; devā-tātā, among the gods, I, 58, 1; 95, 8²; 128, 2; III, 19, 1; IV, 6, 1.
deva-trā, to the gods, I, 128, 6²; III, 1, 22;—among the gods, III, 8, 7; V, 20, 1.
deva-tvā, divinity, I, 68, 4; 69, 6¹.
devadryāḥ, turned towards the gods: devadrīkim, III, 6, 1². devāpsara-b-tama, most agreeable to the gods, I, 75, 1.
devā-bhakta, god-given, IV, 1, 10.
deva-yagyā, worship as is due to the gods, V, 21, 4.
deva-yāt, worshipping, or longing for, the gods, pious, I, 36, 1⁴; 77, 3; III, 5, 1; 6, 1; 3; 8, 1; 4; 6; 10, 7; 29, 12; IV, 2, 17; 11, 5; V, 1, 4; 21, 1.
deva-yā, approaching the gods, III, 8, 5².
deva-yāna, (the ways) which the gods go: ādhvanab deva-yānān, I, 72, 7². deva-yū, godly, IV, 2, 7; 9, 1.
devā-vāta, beloved by the gods, III, 20, 2; IV, 3, 15;—Devavāta, N. p., III, 23, 2.
deva-vāhana, drawinghither the gods, III, 27, 14.
deva-vītama, most excellently repairing to the gods, I, 36, 9.
devā-vīti, feast of the gods, I, 12, 9; III, 17, 5; 21, 2.
devāvyakab-tama, which best receives the gods with its wide extent, I, 142, 5; IV, 26, 8; V, 22, 2.
devā-vyakas, receiving the gods, III, 4, 4.
deva-jās, for each of the gods, III, 21, 5.
Devā-sravas, N. p., III, 23, 2; 3.
deva-hūtama, best invoker of the gods, III, 13, 6.
devāhūti, invocation of the gods, I, 12, 12.
devāḥ, turned towards the gods, I, 127, 1.
devī, goddess, I, 13, 9; III, 7, 2²; 25, 3; IV, 14, 3; tisrāb devīb, II, 3, 8; III, 4, 8; V, 5, 8.
devyā, godhead, I, 140, 7.
deshnā, gift, II, 9, 4.
Daiva-vātā, (Agni) of Devavāta, III, 23, 3;—son of Devavāta, IV, 15, 4¹.
daivya, divine, I, 27, 12; II, 5, 2;

- III, 20, 4; daivyâ hôtârâ, I, 13, 8¹; 142, 8; 188, 7; II, 3, 7; III, 4, 7; V, 5, 7; daivya gânam, host of the gods, I, 31, 17; 44, 6; 45, 1²; 9; 10; V, 13, 3; daivyâni vratâ, I, 70, 2; daivya jamitâ, II, 3, 10; mâdhunâ daivya, III, 8, 1²; vâkasâ daivya, IV, 1, 15; daivya ni, divine powers, IV, 4, 5.
- do, see dâ.
- dôgha*, milkstream, V, 15, 5¹.
- doshâ*, evening: doshâ ushâsi, II, 8, 3; IV, 2, 8; prâti doshâ ushâsam, IV, 12, 2; V, 5, 6; doshâ, at evening, IV, 11, 6.
- dôshâ-vastar*, shining in the darkness, I, 1, 7¹; IV, 4, 9¹.
- dohâna*, stream (?), I, 144, 2¹.
- dyâvâkshâmâ*, du., Heaven and Earth, I, 96, 5; 140, 13; III, 8, 8¹.
- dyāvâprithivî*, du., Heaven and Earth, I, 31, 8; II, 1, 15; 2, 3; 7; III, 3, 11; 25, 3; 26, 8; IV, 14, 2.
- dyû*, sky, heaven, Heaven, I, 31, 4¹, &c.; 67, 5²; upa-mâ divâb, I, 31, 15¹; divâb nâ sânu, I, 58, 2; mûrdhâ divâb, I, 59, 2; III, 2, 14; divâb brihatâb, I, 59, 5; 71, 2; dyaûb nâ bhûma, I, 65, 3¹; divâb gyôtib, I, 69, 1; mahe pitre divê, I, 71, 5¹; IV, 1, 10; dyaûb (conj. dyôb), I, 71, 8²; divâb akshî îti, I, 72, 10¹; pârigmânam-iva dyâm, I, 127, 2³; dyâvâ prithivî îti, Heaven and Earth, I, 143, 2; vîsvâ divâb rokanâ, I, 146, 1; III, 6, 8; 12, 9; dyû-bhih tvâm (conj. dyû-bhya), II, 1, 1²; âsurâb mahâb divâb, II, 1, 6; divâb-iva aratib, II, 2, 2; dyaûb nâ strî-bhih, II, 2, 5; IV, 7, 3; tisrâb divâb, II, 3, 2; divâb kavînam, III, 1, 2; divâb prithivyâb, III, 1, 3; 6, 2³; 3; 25, 1; IV, 5, 11; divâb yahvib, III, 1, 6; 9²; divâb prishitâb, III, 2, 12; divî kshâyam (conj. divikshayâm) III, 2, 13¹; ketûm divâb, III, 2, 14; divâb nâbhâ, III, 4, 4; vârshman divâb, III, 5, 9; dyâvâ, III, 6, 4²; divâb ârnam, III, 22, 3; divâb putrâb, IV, 2, 15; divâb kikitvân, IV, 3, 8; divâb â-rôdhanânî, IV, 7, 8; 8, 2; 4; divâb skambhâb, IV, 13, 5; divâb sîsum, IV, 15, 6²; divâb it brihât, more mightily than even the sky, V, 10, 4²; divâb dhârman, V, 15, 2²; divâb nâ rétasâ, V, 17, 3².
- dyû*, day: divê-dive, day by day, I, 1, 3; 7, &c.; divâb pûrvâb, before daybreak, I, 60, 2; ânu dyûn, day by day, I, 71, 6; 148, 4; III, 23, 2; IV, 4, 8; 9; divâ nâktam, I, 98, 2; 144, 4²; trib â divâb, I, 142, 3; dyû-bhih, day by day, III, 3, 2; V, 16, 2.
- dyukshâ*, heavenly, II, 2, 1.
- dyut*, to shine: vî abhîdyaut, mayest thou beam forth, IV, 4, 6;—vî didyutâb, make shine, II, 2, 7; vî adyaut, thou hast shone forth, III, 1, 8; 18; vî didyutânâb, flashing, III, 7, 4;—sâm adyaut, III, 5, 2.
- dyû-bhakta*, assigned by Heaven, I, 73, 6; IV, 1, 18.
- dyu-mât*, brilliant, I, 74, 9; II, 7, 1; 9, 6; III, 10, 8; 13, 7; V, 23, 4.
- dyumât-tama*, most brilliant, V, 24, 2¹.
- dyumnâ*, splendour, I, 73, 4, &c.; dyumnâib, with (songs full of) splendour, I, 78, 1-5; dyumnâsya sâvasâ, V, 7, 3.
- dyumnâ-vat*, brilliant, III, 29, 15.
- dyumnîn*, brilliant, I, 36, 8.
- dyumnîn-tama*, most brilliant, I, 127, 9.
- drapsâ*, spark, I, 94, 11;—banner, IV, 13, 2².
- dravât*, see dru.
- dravinâb-dâs*, giver of wealth, II, 6, 3.
- dravinâb-dâ*, giver of wealth, I, 96, 1-8; II, 1, 7.
- drâvinas*, wealth, I, 96, 8;—wealth-giver, III, 7, 10.
- dravinasyû*, aspiring after wealth, II, 6, 3; V, 13, 2.
- dru*, to run: dravât, speedily, I, 44, 7; drâvatâm, III, 14, 3; drû-nânâb? IV, 4, 1².
- drû-anna*, feeding on wood, II, 7, 6.
- drûh*, guile, IV, 4, 15.
- dru-hântara*, a mighty woodcutter, (I, 127, 3²).
- druham-tarâ*, conqueror of deceitful foes, I, 127, 3².

- dvayá, falsehood, I, 147, 4; 5; V, 3, 7; 12, 2.
 dvār, door: dvārab devīb, the divine doors, I, 13, 6; 142, 6; II, 3, 5; V, 5, 5; dvārā, the two folds of the door, I, 128, 6; dvārā tāmasab, III, 5, 1.
 dvīb páñka, twice five, IV, 6, 8¹.
 dvi-gánman, of double birth (Agni), I, 60, 1¹; 140, 2¹; 149, 4; 5.
 Dvitá, V, 18, 2².
 dvitā, forsooth, verily, I, 127, 7; II, 4, 2²; III, 2, 1³; 17, 5¹. dvi-pád, two-footed, I, 94, 5.
 dvi-bárhas, twofold, I, 71, 6;—doubly-powerful, IV, 5, 3¹.
 dvi-mâtrī, having two mothers, I, 31, 2¹.
 dvīsh, hostile power, I, 97, 7; II, 7, 2; 3; III, 15, 1. dveshab-yút, driving away malice, IV, 11, 5; V, 9, 6.
 dvéshas, hatred, malice, II, 6, 4; IV, 1, 4; 10, 7; V, 20, 2;—hostile power, III, 16, 5; 27, 3.
 dhakshi (Samhitā: dakshi), voc. (?), O burning one (?), I, 141, 8². dhákshu, burning, II, 4, 4.
 dhakshús, burning, I, 141, 7.
 dhan: dhanáyan, they set into motion, I, 71, 3;—dadhanyub (read dadhanvub?), IV, 3, 12².
 dhána, prize, I, 31, 6; 8; 36, 4.
 dhanam-gayá, winning the prize, I, 74, 3.
 dhana-sá, gaining wealth, II, 10, 6¹.
 dhana-sprít, winner of prizes, I, 36, 10; V, 8, 2.
 dhanín, rich, I, 150, 2;—containing the prize of the contest, IV, 2, 15³.
 dhánus, dry land: dhánob ádhi, I, 144, 5².
 dhánya, precious, III, 1, 16.
 dhanv, to run along: dadhanvé, II, 5, 3; dadhanvub, (IV, 3, 12²).
 dhánvan, dry ground, I, 95, 10;—desert, V, 7, 7.
 dhanva-sáh, a conquering bowman, I, 127, 3⁶.
 dham, to melt: dhámantaś, IV, 2, 17¹;—úpa dhámati dhmâtári, V, 9, 5³.
 dháríman, firm law, I, 128, 1¹.
 dharúna, supporter: dharúnab rayi-nām, I, 73, 4²; supporting, V, 15, 1; 2; 5¹;—firm ground, III, 3, 1.
 dharvasí, firm, I, 141, 11;—supporter, V, 8, 4.
 dharuś, supporter, I, 127, 7. dhartrī, supporter, V, 1, 6; 9, 3. dhárman, law, ordinance, III, 3, 1; V, 26, 6; prathamā́nu dhárma, III, 17, 1; ánu dhárma, III, 17, 5;—support, V, 15, 2.
 dhâ, to put, place, give: dadhiré, I, 26, 8, &c.; kánaś dhâb, accept, I, 26, 10; dadhire, have been laid down, I, 59, 3¹; dádhanâb, obtaining, I, 73, 5³; mákiś nab dub-itāya dhāyīb, do not deliver us to distress, I, 147, 5; dádhat, 3rd pers. or part., I, 188, 2¹; dadhire puráb, they have placed in front (as Purohita), III, 2, 5; dhishva, III, 6, 6; didhishantu, may they bestow, III, 8, 6; dhâmahe, may we acquire, V, 16, 5;—â dadhe, I have established, III, 27, 9²;—ní dadhe, he has established, I, 36, 19; ní dadhe, I have laid down, III, 23, 4¹; 27, 10¹; ní dadhub (conj. ní dadub?), V, 2, 6²; ní dhatte puráb, V, 28, 2¹;—vi-dhâti, he worships (conj. for vi-bhâti), I, 71, 6¹; ví dhâb, distribute, I, 72, 7; IV, 6, 11; ví dadhau, he determines, I, 95, 3.
 dhâ, to suckle: dhâpayete íti, I, 96, 5; adhayat, I, 144, 2; III, 1, 10; V, 1, 3³;—úpa dhâpayete íti, I, 95, 1.
 dhât, establisher, IV, 7, 1.
 dhâna: pári dhānam aktób, about nightfall (?), III, 7, 6.
 dhāman, foundation, I, 95, 9¹; 144, 1⁴; III, 3, 4; IV, 7, 7;—abode, II, 3, 2; 11;—statute, law, III, 2, 10; 7, 6; IV, 5, 4;—form: sapta dhāma-bhīb, IV, 7, 5¹.
 dhāyas, prospering, I, 31, 13;—refreshment, refreshing drink, I, 72, 9; 94, 12; 141, 6; II, 5, 7; V, 7, 6; 9; 15, 4.
 dhārā, stream: dhārām ritāsya, I, 67, 7¹; V, 12, 2; dhārāb udan-yāb-iva, II, 7, 3; dhārāb, III, 1, 8; 9.

- dhâv : ní dhâvate, he runs down, I, 141, 5.
 dhâsí, drink, I, 140, 1²; III, 7, 1¹; 3²; IV, 3, 9; V, 12, 4.
 dhitâ-van, in whom (wealth) has been laid down, III, 27, 2.
 dhiyam-dhâ, thoughtful, I, 67, 4; 72, 2.
 dhiyâ-vasu, giving wealth for prayer, I, 58, 9; 60, 5; III, 3, 2; 28, 1.
 Dhishânâ, N. of a goddess, I, 96, 1²; III, 2, 1². dhishnya, liberal (?), III, 22, 3¹. dhishnyâ, the Dhishnya altar, IV, 3, 6¹.
 dhî, to think : d-vân âkka dîdhyat (conj. for dîdyat), III, 1, 1²;—ânu vratam dîdhyânâb, contemplating the law, III, 4, 7.
 dhî, (pious) thought, prayer, I, 1, 7; 27, 11, &c.; 95, 8²; III, 11, 2; 3; 12, 1; yantâram dhînâm, III, 3, 8; dhiyâ âkre, III, 27, 9¹; âkripânta dhîbhîb, IV, 1, 14.
 dhîtî, thought, I, 68, 5¹; 71, 3¹; III, 12, 7; 13, 5; V, 25, 3; devotion, I, 77, 4; pious thought, i. e. hymn, or prayer, I, 143, 1; 144, 5; IV, 5, 7.
 dhîra, wise, I, 65, 2, &c.
 dhûni, roaring, I, 79, 1².
 dhur, to harm : âdhûrshata, V, 12, 5.
 dhûr, pole, III, 6, 6.
 dhû, to shake : âdhûnot, I, 59, 6; davidhâva, I, 140, 6; dodhaviti, he waves, II, 4, 4²; adhûnutam, you have hurled down, III, 12, 6; dâvidhvat, shaking, IV, 13, 2; dâvidhvatab, having shaken, IV, 13, 4²;—ava-dhûnushé, thou hurlest away, I, 78, 4.
 dhûb-sâd, charioteer, I, 143, 7; II, 2, 1².
 dhûmâ, smoke, I, 36, 9; III, 29, 9; IV, 6, 2; V, 11, 3. dhûmâ-ketu, whose banner is smoke, I, 27, 11; 44, 3.
 dhûma-ketu, banner of smoke, I, 94, 10¹.
 dhûmîn, smoky, V, 9, 5².
 dhûrtî, mischief, I, 36, 15; 128, 7.
 dhri, to hold : dâdhâra, I, 66, 3, &c.;—ni-dhârâyantab, setting down, IV, 2, 12.
 dhritâ-vrata, whose laws are firm, I, 44, 14; 141, 9; II, 1, 4.
 dhrîsh : â dadharshît, may he defy, IV, 4, 3; ná â-dhrîshe, not to be defied, V, 8, 5. dhrîshâg? V, 19, 5¹.
 dhrîshatâ, fiercely, I, 71, 5; IV, 4, 2; 5, 6.
 dhrîshau-yâ, fiercely, V, 10, 5.
 dhênâ, stream, I, 141, 1; shower, III, 1, 9².
 dhenû, milch cow, I, 66, 2; 73, 6; II, 2, 2; 9¹; 5, 5¹; III, 1, 7; 6, 4; IV, 1, 6; 16; dhenû itî, I, 146, 3²; divâkshasab dhenâvab, III, 7, 2².
 dhmâ, see dham.
 dhmâtîrî, smelter, V, 9, 5.
 dhrag : úpa dhrágantam, speeding forward, I, 149, 1.
 dhrágîmat, hastening, I, 79, 1.
 dhruvâ, firm, I, 36, 5¹, &c.; kâratâb dhruvâsya, I, 146, 1; dhruvé (for Pada : dhruvâb), III, 6, 4¹.
 dhruvâ-kshema, dwelling in firm peace, IV, 13, 3.
 dhvams : dhvasâyantam, sparkling, I, 140, 3; dhvasâyantab, I, 140, 5. dhvasmán, bespatterer, IV, 6, 6.
 dhvri, see dhur.
 ná, 'like,' and ná, 'not,' I, 127, 3⁶.
 nákis, not, I, 27, 8; 69, 7.
 náкта, Night : náktâ ka ushâsâ, I, 73, 7; náktam, by night, I, 98, 2; 127, 5; 144, 4²; V, 7, 4.
 nakta-yâ, by night, IV, 11, 1.
 nákti, Night : náktîb ushâsâb, II, 2, 2.
 Náktoshâsâ, du., Night and Dawn, I, 13, 7; 96, 5; 142, 7.
 naksh, to reach : nákshante, I, 66, 9;—abhî nakshati, I, 95, 10.
 nad : nânadat, roaring, I, 140, 5; III, 2, 11.
 nápât, offspring : úrgab napât, I, 58, 8; II, 6, 2; III, 27, 12; V, 17, 5;—apâm nápât, the child of the Waters, I, 143, 1²; III, 9, 1.
 náptri, offspring : úrgab náptre, V, 7, 1.
 nabhanyâ? I, 149, 3².
 nábhas, cloud, I, 71, 10; II, 4, 6; III, 12, 1¹.
 nam : â-námam, to direct, IV, 8, 3.
 námab-ukti, praise, I, 189, 1; III, 14, 2².
 námas, adoration, reverence, I, 1, 7,

- &c.; nāmasâ, adoringly, III, 14, 5.
namasy, to worship, adore: namasy-ānti, I, 36, 19; namasyā, I, 44, 6¹; namasyan, I, 72, 5; namasyāta, III, 2, 8; namasyāmaḥ, III, 17, 4; namasyāntaḥ, adoring, IV, 6, 11.
namasyā, to be adored, venerable, I, 72, 5²; II, 1, 3; 10; III, 5, 2; 27, 13.
namasvīn, adorer, I, 36, 7.
Nārāmsa, 'song of men' or 'praised by men,' I, 13, 3¹; 142, 3; II, 3, 1; III, 29, 11; V, 5, 2.
nārya, manly power, I, 72, 1¹.
nāva, new, young, I, 31, 8, &c.;—nāvyaṃs, nāvyaśi, I, 27, 4; 60, 3; 141, 5; 143, 1; III, 2, 13; nāvīyaśa, I, 12, 11;—nāvyaḥ, gen., V, 12, 3¹;—nāvishṭa, youngest, V, 27, 3.
nava-gā, new-born, IV, 6, 3.
nāva-gāta, new-born, V, 15, 3.
navati, ninety: navatīm pūraḥ, III, 12, 6.
navamām, for the ninth time, V, 27, 3².
Nāva-vāstva, I, 36, 18¹.
nāvedas, watcher: ushāsaḥ nāvedāḥ, I, 79, 1²;—witness, V, 12, 3.
nāvya, young, I, 141, 10; 189, 2.
naś, to attain: naśate, V, 4, 11;—āśnat, I, 71, 8.
naś: nērat, it disappeared, IV, 1, 17.
Nāhusha, N. of a clan, I, 31, 11²; V, 12, 6.
Nahus, (I, 31, 11²).
nāka, sky, firmament: pipēsa nākam strībhiḥ, I, 68, 10;—III, 2, 12; 5, 10; IV, 13, 5; V, 1, 1; 17, 2.
nānā-rathām, on many chariots, III, 6, 9.
nāndī, delight: nāndyē, I, 145, 4.
Nābhānedishṭa, (I, 142, 10¹).
nābhi, navel, centre, I, 59, 1²; 142, 10¹; III, 5, 5; IV, 10, 8; nābhiḥ prithivyāḥ, I, 59, 2; 143, 4; II, 3, 7; III, 5, 9; 29, 4; pra-gām nābhim, II, 3, 9; divāḥ nābhā, III, 4, 4; amṛtasya nābhim, III, 17, 4.
nāman, name: deva-tvām nāma, amṛtām nāma, I, 68, 4¹; nāmāni dadhire yagñīyāni, I, 72, 3; prathamām nāma dhenōḥ, IV, 1, 16; gūhyam nāma, V, 3, 2; 3; 5, 10; bhūri nāmā da-dhāti, V, 3, 10.
nārī, wife, I, 73, 3.
nārminī? I, 149, 3¹.
nāvā, boat: nāvāyā, I, 97, 8¹.
Nāsatya, IV, 3, 6³;—du., the Asvins, IV, 14, 1².
nims, to kiss: nīmsate, I, 144, 1⁴.
ni-kāma, desirous of, III, 1, 15.
niksh: vi-nīkshe, to pierce, V, 2, 9.
ni-kīra, watchful, III, 9, 4.
nizik, secretly, IV, 5, 8¹.
ninyā, hidden, I, 95, 4²; inmost, IV, 3, 16.
nītya, one's own, I, 66, 1¹; 5; 71, 1; 140, 7; 148, 3; 5; II, 2, 11;—true (friend of men), I, 141, 2²;—nītyam, constantly, I, 73, 4.
nītya-aritra, with its own rudders, I, 140, 12¹.
nid: nidānāḥ, scolding, IV, 5, 12.
nīd, scoffer, III, 16, 5;—revilement, IV, 4, 15.
ninitśū, who tries to revile, I, 189, 6.
ninditrī, reproacher, V, 2, 6.
nīndya, reproachable, V, 2, 6.
ni-mish, closing of the eyes, I, 72, 5⁴.
ni-vātana, invocation, I, 189, 8;—recitation, IV, 3, 16.
ni-vāt, depth: ut-vātaḥ ni-vātaḥ, III, 2, 10.
ni-vārtana, return, III, 9, 2. ni-vīd, the Nivid formula, I, 96, 2¹.
nishkā-grīva, with a golden ornament at his neck, V, 19, 3.
nī-hita, laid down, I, 72, 6.
nī, to lead: padām nayanti, they follow his track, I, 146, 4²;—pāri nayanti, they carry around, I, 95, 2⁴; pāri nīyate, he is led around, IV, 15, 1.
nīlā, nest, IV, 1, 11; 12.
nīthā, song, IV, 3, 16.
nītha-vīd, knowing all the ways, III, 12, 5.
nīla-prishṭa, with the dark blue back, III, 7, 3.
nu, to low, roar: nāvanta, I, 66, 10; nonāva, I, 79, 2;—to shout (hymns of praise): nāvanta, I, 69, 10;—abhi prā nonumaḥ, I, 78, 1-5; abhi anūshata, they have greeted with shouts, I, 144, 2; IV, 1, 16; abhi anūshata,

- (the hymns) have been sung, V, 5, 4;—sām navanta, IV, 3, 11.
- nú*, now: nú kīṭ nú, I, 58, 1¹; nú ka purā ka, I, 96, 7.
- nūṭana*, present, recent, I, 1, 2; III, 1, 20.
- nūnām*, now: adyā nūnām ka, I, 13, 6; nūnām aparām, now and in future, I, 189, 4.
- nṛī*, man: nṛīn (for various cases), I, 146, 4⁰; III, 14, 4¹; IV, 2, 15²; V, 15, 2²; narab mṛutab, III, 16, 2¹; jāmse nṛinām, III, 16, 4.
- nṛī-kāśhas*, beholding men, III, 15, 3; 22, 2; IV, 3, 3.
- nṛī-tama*, manliest, I, 59, 4; 77, 4; III, 1, 12; 19, 3; IV, 5, 2; V, 4, 6.
- nṛī-pāti*, lord of men, I, 71, 8³; II, 1, 1; 7.
- nṛī-pēras*, (the divine doors) with men as their ornaments, III, 4, 5³, 4.
- nṛīmā*, manly power, I, 67, 3; V, 19, 2.
- nṛī-vāt*, with men, V, 18, 5.
- nṛivāt-sakhi*, rich in manly friends, IV, 2, 5¹.
- nṛī-sādana*, seat of men, V, 7, 2.
- nṛī-hān*, man-killer, IV, 3, 6.
- netṛī*, leader, III, 15, 4; 20, 4; iśhām netā, III, 23, 2².
- nédishṭba*, near, nearest, I, 127, 11; IV, 1, 5.
- nemá-dhiti*, discord, I, 72, 4².
- nemí*, felly, I, 141, 9; II, 5, 3; V, 13, 6.
- nésha-tama*, best leading, I, 141, 12.
- néshtri*, the N. priest, II, 5, 5¹.
- neshtrá*, office of the Neshtri (priest), II, 1, 2.
- naú*, boat: nāvā-iva, I, 97, 7; 99, 1; V, 25, 9; sindhūm ná nāvā, V, 4, 9; nāvam nitya-aritrām pat-vātim, I, 140, 12¹.
- nyāñk*, directed downwards: nññib, I, 66, 10²; 72, 10⁴.
- pakvá*, ripe, I, 66, 3; IV, 3, 9.
- paṭatá*, baked, III, 28, 2.
- pāññan*, five: ádhi pāññā krishṭishu, over the fivefold dwellings (of the five peoples), II, 2, 10.
- paññāśat*, fifty, V, 18, 5.
- pat*: patyate, he rules, I, 128, 7; patyase, thou possessest, II, 1, 8.
- pat*, to fly: pátanti mīhab, I, 79, 2.
- patangá*, winged (flames), IV, 4, 2.
- patatrín*, winged, I, 58, 5²; 94, 11.
- patará*, winged: prisnyāb patarám, II, 2, 4.
- pāti*, lord, I, 26, 1, &c.; pátib dán, I, 149, 1²;—husband, I, 66, 8; 71, 1; IV, 3, 2¹.
- pátigushṭā* (nāri), (a wife) beloved by her husband, I, 73, 3.
- pati-rip*, deceiving her husband, IV, 5, 5.
- pátnī*, consort: devīb pátnīb, IV, 5, 13.
- pátnī-vat*, together with the wife, I, 72, 5; III, 6, 9.
- pátman*, flight, I, 141, 7; V, 5, 7.
- pat-vát*, having feet, I, 140, 9; pat-vātim nāvam, I, 140, 12¹.
- pátvan*, flight, V, 6, 7.
- pathyā*, path, III, 14, 3.
- pad*, to fall: padishṭá, I, 79, 11;—áva padyate, IV, 13, 5.
- pád*, foot: padáb ní dadhâti, I, 146, 2; pad-bhñib (conj. for par-bhñib), IV, 2, 14².
- padá*, footstep, footmark, track, I, 65, 2; 67, 6²; IV, 5, 3; padám nayanti, they follow his track, I, 146, 4²; padám véb, III, 5, 5¹; 6; IV, 5, 8⁴; padám Vishnob upa-mām, V, 3, 3;—standing-place, abode: padé paramé, I, 72, 2; 4; trib saptá gúhyāni padá, steps or places, I, 72, 6¹; iláb padé, I, 128, 1; ritásya padé, IV, 5, 9; mâtúb padé paramé, IV, 5, 10.
- pada-vī*, following the footsteps, I, 72, 2²; III, 5, 1¹.
- pan*, to praise: pánanta, II, 4, 5¹; panáyanta, III, 6, 7; panaya, V, 20, 1², 3.
- pánishṭba*, most wonderful, III, 1, 13.
- páníyams*, highly miraculous, V, 6, 4.
- panū*, praise, I, 65, 4.
- páyas*, milk, I, 66, 2; 79, 3; IV, 3, 9; 10.
- páyasvat*, rich in milk, II, 3, 6.
- par*, see pri.
- pára*, distant, III, 18, 2.
- parab-pá*, a protector far and wide, II, 9, 2; 6.
- parasú*, axe, I, 127, 3; IV, 6, 8.

- parás, beyond : paráb manisháyâ, V, 17, 2².
- paríśtât, on high, III, 22, 3.
- parā-vátāb, from afar, I, 36, 18 ; 73, 6 ; III, 9, 5.
- pári, prep., from, I, 31, 4 ;—for the sake of, III, 5, 10¹.
- pari-kshít, encompassing, III, 7, 1.
- pári-gman, walking round the earth, I, 79, 3² ; 127, 2² ; III, 2, 9³ ; IV, 3, 6⁴ ; V, 10, 5.
- pári-takmya, the decisive moment, I, 31, 6^{3,4}.
- pari-bádh, hindrance, V, 2, 10.
- pari-bhū, encompassing, I, 1, 4 ; 97, 6 ; 141, 9 ; III, 3, 10.
- pári-víta, enveloped, I, 128, 1³ ; III, 8, 4¹ ; IV, 1, 7.
- párishri, encompassing, I, 65, 3¹.
- párinās, abundance, III, 24, 5 ; V, 10, 1.
- parishri, searching, (I, 65, 3¹).
- parushá, speckled, V, 27, 5.
- párvan, joint (of the month) : pár-vaṇā-parvaṇā, I, 94, 4¹.
- palitá, grey, I, 144, 4 ; fem. páliknī, V, 2, 4².
- pav'tra, purification, III, 1, 5 ;—purifying strainer, III, 26, 8.
- par, to see : āti paryasi, I, 94, 7 ;—pári aparyanta, they have searched, I, 146, 4 ;—ví parya, look forth, III, 23, 2².
- pár, eye : par-bhíś, IV, 2, 12² ; par-bhíś (conj. pad-bhíś), IV, 2, 14².
- parśú, animal, beast : parśá ná táyúm, I, 65, 1^{1,2} ; parśúb rá śivâ, I, 65, 10 ; (Agni), II, 4, 7 ; V, 7, 7 ; cattle, I, 67, 6² ; 72, 6 ; III, 9, 7 ; IV, 2, 18¹ ; V, 2, 5 ; victim, IV, 6, 3.
- paru-pá, shepherd, I, 144, 6 ; IV, 6, 4.
- paru-sá, winner of cattle, I, 127, 10¹.
- parśvā-yantra, taking . . . as an instrument (?), IV, 1, 14.
- pastyâ, dwelling, IV, 1, 11.
- pā : sáb pāti (conj. sápāti), V, 12, 6¹.
- pāka, simple, I, 31, 14 ; III, 9, 7 ; IV, 5, 2.
- pāgas, stream of light, I, 58, 5 ; III, 14, 1 ; 15, 1 ; 29, 3 ; IV, 4, 1 ; V, 1, 2.
- pāthas, abode, I, 188, 10¹ ; II, 3, 9 ; III, 8, 9 ; pātháb (conj. pa-tháb?), II, 2, 4¹.
- pâyú, guardian, I, 31, 12 ; 13 ; 95, 9 ; 143, 8 ; 147, 3 ; 189, 4 ; II, 1, 7 ; 2, 4 ; III, 15, 4¹ ; IV, 2, 6 ; 4, 3 ; 12 ; V, 12, 4.
- pārthiva, dweller on earth, I, 95, 3 ;—the terrestrial (space), I, 128, 3 ; 144, 6 ; grāyāmsi pārthivâ, V, 8, 7.
- pāvaká, purifier, I, 12, 9 ; 10 ; 13, 1 ; 60, 4 ; 95, 11 ; 142, 3 ; 6 ; II, 3, 1 ; 7, 4 ; III, 5, 7 ; 10, 8 ; 17, 1 ; 21, 2 ; 27, 4 ; IV, 5, 6 ; 6, 7 ; V, 4, 3 ; 7 ; 7, 4 ; 26, 1.
- pāvaka-jókī, whose flame is purifying, III, 2, 6.
- pāvaká-jókis, purifying with his flames, III, 9, 8¹ ; 11, 7 ; IV, 7, 5 ; V, 22, 1.
- pāsa, fetter, V, 2, 7.
- pitú, food, I, 69, 3 ; V, 7, 6.
- pitū-mát, rich in food, I, 141, 2² ; 144, 7 ; IV, 1, 8.
- pitṛ, father : mahé pitṛé divé, I, 71, 5 ; pitúb paramāt (Heaven), I, 141, 4¹ ; pitúb ka ganitúb ka, III, 1, 10¹ ; pitá yagñānām, III, 3, 4 ;—V, 3, 9¹ ; 10¹ ;—du., parents, I, 140, 7² ; III, 7, 1¹ ; 18, 1¹ ; pitṛób upá-sthe, I, 146, 1² ; III, 26, 9 ; mâtará pitárâ, IV, 6, 7 ;—pitárâb Āngirasab, I, 71, 2¹ ; pitá pitṛi-bhyab útāye, II, 5, 1³ ; pitárâb manushyâb, IV, 1, 13¹ ; pitárâb párasab prasnâsab, IV, 2, 16.
- pitṛi-vittá, acquired by the fathers, I, 73, 1¹ ; 9.
- pítrya, paternal : sakhyâ pítryāni, I, 71, 10.
- pinv, to swell : pínvamânâb, III, 1, 7 ; pinvasva, III, 3, 7.
- piś, to adorn : pipéśa, I, 68, 10.
- piśānga-rūpa, tawny-coloured, II, 3, 9.
- pīy, to abuse : pīyati, I, 147, 2.
- putrín, with sons, V, 4, 11.
- púnar : púnab astu sáb asmai, may it (the spell) recoil on him, I, 147, 4 ; púnab, give us back, I, 189, 3.
- púr, stronghold : púb-bhíś áyasibhíś, I, 58, 8 ;—I, 149, 3 ; 189, 2 ; III, 12, 6 ; 15, 4 ; V, 19, 2.
- purab-etrá, leader, I, 76, 2¹ ; III, 11, 5.
- purab-gá, going in front, I, 188, 11.
- purab-sád, sitting in front, I, 73, 3.
- puráb-hita, the Purohita, I, 1, 1 ;

- 44, 10¹; 12; 58, 3; 94, 6¹, 2;
128, 4; III, 2, 8; 3, 2; 11, 1;
V, 11, 2.
- Púram-dhi, Liberality of the gods,
II, 1, 3³.
- purás, in front: dadhiré puráb, III,
2, 5; V, 16, 1².
- purā, before (with gen.), I, 71, 10;
—formerly, I, 96, 7.
- purishyā, of the soil: purishyāsab agnāyab, III, 22, 4¹.
- purú, many, I, 36, 1³, &c.; III, 4, 5²; purú vā áram (conj. puruvāram), I, 142, 10²; ánu pūrvāb, III, 15, 3¹;—mightily, I, 127, 3.
- puru-anika, with many faces, I, 79, 5.
- puru-kshú, rich in food, I, 68, 10;
III, 25, 2.
- puru-kandrá, rich in splendour, I,
27, 11; II, 2, 12; III, 25, 3;
V, 8, 1.
- puru-trā, in many places, I, 70, 10;
146, 5.
- puru-dāmsa, wonderful, III, 1, 23.
- puru-drúh, full of deceit, III, 18, 1.
- purudhá-pratíka, with many faces,
III, 7, 3.
- purudhá, manifoldly, IV, 2, 19.
- puruniḥ-sthá, growing up in many places, V, 1, 6.
- Puru-nithá, N. pr., I, 59, 7.
- puru-péśa, manifoldly-adorned, II,
10, 3².
- puru-péśas, manifold-adorned, III,
3, 6.
- puru-prasastá, praised by many, I,
73, 2.
- puru-priyá, beloved of many, I, 12, 2; 44, 3; 45, 6; III, 3, 4; V,
18, 1.
- puru-praishá, he who pronounces many Praishas, I, 145, 3².
- puru-rúpa, of all kinds, manifoldshaped, II, 2, 9; V, 8, 2; 5.
- puru-vásu, rich in wealth, II, 1, 5.
- puru-vāra, with many treasures, bountiful: puru-vāram (conj.
for purú vā áram), I, 142, 10²;
—II, 2, 2; IV, 2, 20; 5, 15.
- puruvāra-pushi, lord of bountiful prosperity, I, 96, 4.
- purusha-trā: conj. purusha-tā, men as we are, IV, 12, 4¹.
- puru-stutá, praised by many, I, 141,
6; V, 8, 5.
- puru-spríh, much desired, I, 142, 6;
II, 7, 1; IV, 8, 7; V, 7, 6.
- puru-hútá, much-invoked, I, 44, 7.
- Purúrávas, I, 31, 4.
- puroḥās, sacrificial cake, III, 28, 1-6.
- puróhita, see puráb-hita.
- push, to make prosper: pushyasi, I,
94, 6; V, 26, 6; pushyata, I,
94, 8; pushyati, III, 10, 3; púshyantab, causing to thrive,
IV, 8, 5.
- pushi, prosperity, I, 65, 5; 77, 5;
II, 4, 4; V, 10, 3.
- pushi-mát, with prosperity, III,
13, 7.
- pushim-bhará, bringing prosperity,
IV, 3, 7.
- pushi-várdhana, augments of prosperity, I, 31, 5.
- pû, to purify: punānāb, II, 3, 5;
krátum punānāb, III, 1, 5¹;
punānti, III, 8, 5; ápuṣot, III, 26, 8;—abhí punatī, IV, 5, 7.
- pûtá, purified, I, 79, 10.
- pûtá-daksha, of pure powers, III,
1, 3².
- Pûrú, the Pûrus, I, 59, 6; V, 17, 1.
- pûrva, former, ancient, I, 1, 2, &c.;
pûrva-vát, as for the ancients,
I, 31, 17;—diváb pûrvab, before daybreak, I, 60, 2; to the front,
I, 94, 8¹; mánushāt pûrvab, II,
3, 3²; tvát hótá pûrvab, III,
17, 5;—eastern: pûrvám ánu
pra-dīsam, I, 95, 3.
- pûrvá-thā, in the old way, III, 29, 1.
- pûrvyá, ancient, I, 26, 5; 94, 6;
III, 14, 3²; 23, 3; V, 15, 3²;—
foremost, I, 74, 2¹.
- Pûshan, II, 1, 6; IV, 3, 7.
- pûshan-vát, accompanied by Pûshan,
I, 142, 12.
- pri or par, to bring across: piparshi, thou ledest forward, I, 31, 6⁴;
párshi, II, 7, 2; párshat, III, 20, 4; pipritam, III, 26, 9; parshati dvisháb, may he help us across our enemies, V, 25, 1; 9;—áti páraya, I, 97, 7; áti parsha, I, 97, 8; áti parshat, I, 99, 1.
- pri, to till: pûrdhi, I, 36, 12; paprá,
I, 69, 1;—âpapi-vân, I, 73, 8;
146, 1; â aprimat, III, 2, 7; â
aprinab, III, 3, 10; â apráb,
IV, 14, 2;—prá-pra prinitana,

- fill (with bliss) further and further, V, 5, 5.
- priksh*, nourishment, I, 71, 7¹; 73, 5; II, 1, 6.
- prikshā*, power, I, 127, 5¹; II, 1, 15²; —powerful, I, 141, 2¹; saptā prikshāsab, III, 4, 7¹.
- prikshā-prayag*, mighty sacrificer, III, 7, 10¹.
- prikshúdh*: prikshúdhah? I, 141, 4².
- prik*: priṅkanti, they fill, I, 79, 3; priṅkátē, they grow, I, 128, 5; paprikānāsab, swelling, I, 141, 6²; paprikāsi, make swell, I, 141, 11²; —tāmase vi-prike, for dispersing the darkness, IV, 13, 3; vi-prikvat, cleared from admixture, V, 2, 3²; —sam-priṅkānáb, being united, I, 95, 8.
- prít*, battle, I, 27, 7; 79, 8; V, 9, 7; 10, 7; 16, 5; 17, 5.
- prítanā*, battle, III, 16, 2; 24, 1.
- pritanāgya*, racing of battle, III, 8, 10.
- pritanā-yú*, seeking to combat, III, 1, 16.
- pritanā-sáh*, powerful in battles, III, 29, 9; V, 23, 2.
- prítanyát*, foe, II, 8, 6.
- pritsutí*, hostility, V, 4, 1.
- prithiví*, earth, Earth: nābhiḥ prithivyāb, I, 59, 2; III, 29, 4; agnih dāti rōma prithivyāb, I, 65, 8; kshām and prithivīm, I, 67, 5; dyāvā prithiví ití, Heaven and Earth, I, 143, 2; divāb prithivyāb, III, 1, 3; mahinā prithivyāb, III, 7, 10²; vārshman prithivyāb, III, 8, 3; vāre ā prithivyāb, III, 23, 4²; divāb sūnób prithivyāb, III, 25, 1; —Earth, I, 72, 9; 94, 16; 95, 11; 98, 3; III, 8, 8¹; 17, 2; IV, 3, 5.
- prithú*, broad, I, 65, 5; II, 1, 12.
- prithu-pāgas*, with broad stream of light, III, 2, 11; 3, 1; 5, 1; 27, 5.
- prithú-pragāna*, with broad passages, III, 5, 7.
- prithú-pragāman*, proceeding on his broad way, I, 27, 2.
- prithu-budhnā*, broad-based, IV, 2, 5.
- prisanī*, the speckled (cow), I, 71, 5¹.
- prisni*, speckled, IV, 3, 10²; —Prisni, the mother of the Maruts, II, 2, 4²; IV, 5, 7¹; 10.
- prishat-arva*, with the spotted deer as horses, III, 26, 6².
- prishatí*, the spotted deer, III, 26, 4².
- prishra-bandhu*, after whose relations men ask, III, 20, 3².
- prishrabā*, back, I, 58, 2¹; IV, 2, 11²; ridge, V, 7, 5; —a certain Stotra? IV, 5, 6¹.
- prishtbodyā*, of the back: pāyasā prishtbodyēna, IV, 3, 10¹.
- péras*, the ornamented form: yagñā-sya pérasab, II, 3, 6².
- Péshī*, V, 2, 2¹.
- pótri*, the Potri priest, I, 94, 6; II, 5, 2; IV, 9, 3.
- potrá*, service of a Potri, I, 76, 4²; II, 1, 2.
- pósha*, welfare, I, 1, 3; V, 5, 9.
- poshayitnú*, which is to thrive, III, 4, 9.
- pyai*, to swell: pipáyanta, they were exuberant, I, 73, 6; pipayat, may he augment, I, 77, 5; piyānab (conj. piyānam), I, 79, 3²; pipāya, it has prospered, II, 2, 9; piyānāb, rich in milk, III, 1, 10²; —prá pipaya, increase, III, 15, 6.
- pra-avitri*, protector, I, 12, 8; furtherer, III, 21, 3.
- pra-avis*, zealous, IV, 9, 2.
- pra-ketá*, splendour, I, 94, 5.
- prá-ketas*, provident, wise, I, 44, 7; 11; II, 10, 3; III, 25, 1; 29, 5.
- prakb*, to look for: prishrabā, I, 98, 2¹.
- pra-gánana*, the creative organ, III, 29, 1².
- pra-gā*, children: pra-gāb utá (conj. pra-gāsu), I, 67, 9¹; pra-gām ví syatu, may he deliver a son, II, 3, 9.
- pragā-vat*, procuring offspring, I, 76, 4; pragā-vat rádhas, abundance of progeny, I, 94, 15; accompanied by offspring, II, 2, 12; III, 8, 6; 16, 6; rich in offspring, III, 16, 3; IV, 2, 5.
- pra-tárana*, carrying forward, II, 1, 12.
- prá-tavas*, strong, IV, 3, 6.
- práti*, equal to, II, 1, 8; 15; 3, 2.
- pratítya*, to be listened to, IV, 5, 14.
- pratná*, old: pratnám, I, 36, 4; II, 7, 6; III, 9, 8.
- pratná-thā*, in the ancient way, I, 96, 1; III, 2, 12; V, 8, 5.

- pratyáñk, turning back, I, 95, 5; II, 3, 1; III, 18, 1.
- prath, to spread out: pratháyan nrñ, III, 14, 4; paprathánáb, V, 15, 4;—vi prathantám, may they open wide, II, 3, 5; vi prathasva, spread thyself, V, 5, 4.
- prathamá: prathamá ánu dhárma, after the primitive ordinances, III, 17, 1.
- prathama-gá, first-born (son), III, 29, 15¹.
- pra-dakshinít, from left to right, III, 19, 2¹; IV, 6, 3.
- pra-diva, ancient, II, 3, 1.
- pra-divas, from of old, I, 141, 3²; IV, 6, 4; 7, 8; V, 8, 7.
- pradís, commandment: pradísab, (I, 31, 14³).
- pra-dis, region: pra-dísam (conj. for prá dísam), I, 95, 3².
- prá-niti, guidance, III, 15, 1; IV, 4, 14.
- pra-netrí, leader, II, 9, 2; III, 23, 1.
- pra-pitvá, the time of the advancing day, I, 189, 7².
- prá-bharman, the bringing forward, I, 79, 7.
- pra-bhú, eminent: pra-bhváb (dúrab), I, 188, 5¹; 9.
- prá-bhúti, copiousness, III, 19, 3.
- prá-mati, guardian, I, 31, 9; 10; 14; 16; 141, 2⁴;—kindness, I, 71, 7; care, I, 94, 1.
- prá-mahas, highly exalted, V, 28, 4.
- prá-yagyu, friend of sacrifices, III, 6, 2¹.
- prá-yata, forward-bent, IV, 5, 10.
- práyata-dakshina, giving sacrificial fees, I, 31, 15.
- pra-yantrí, giver, I, 76, 4⁴.
- práyas, joy, delight, feast, I, 31, 7; 45, 8; 58, 7²; 71, 3; III, 11, 7; 12, 8; IV, 5, 6; 15, 2².
- práyasvat, offering enjoyment, I, 60, 3; III, 6, 3; V, 20, 3.
- pra-yá, onset, III, 29, 15.
- pravaná, hill-side, III, 22, 4.
- pra-vát, declivity, I, 144, 5²;—precipitous: pra-vátâ, III, 5, 8.
- pra-vátya, to be openly uttered, IV, 5, 8.
- pra-vid, finding out, III, 7, 6.
- pra-jámsya, deserving of praise, II, 2, 3; 11.
- pra-jastá, praised, glorious, precious, I, 36, 9; 60, 1; 66, 4.
- prá-jasti, praise, I, 26, 9; 70, 9; 74, 6; 148, 3; V, 9, 6; 16, 1.
- pra-jâstrí, the Prasâstri priest, I, 94, 6¹; II, 5, 4.
- pra-jâstrá, office of the Prasâstri priest, II, 1, 2.
- pra-jish, command, I, 145, 1.
- pra-sáh, power, V, 23, 1.
- prá-siti, onslaught, IV, 4, 1.
- pra-sû, sprouting grass, I, 67, 9²; 95, 10²; III, 5, 8.
- Práskanva, I, 44, 6; 45, 3.
- prá-svanita, roaring, I, 44, 12¹.
- pra-hoshá, libation, I, 150, 2.
- prâkâ-gihva, stretching forward his tongue, I, 140, 3.
- prâkîna, eastward-turned (barhís), I, 188, 4.
- prâñk, inclined towards, II, 2, 7;—eastward: prâñkam yagñám kâkrîma, III, 1, 2²; prâkî iti, III, 6, 10¹;—turned forwards, III, 7, 7.
- prâná, breath: áyub prânáb, I, 66, 1.
- prâtab-yávan, coming early in the morning, I, 44, 13; 45, 9.
- prâtab-sávâ, morning libation, III, 28, 1.
- priyá, beloved, I, 13, 3, &c.; dear= φίλος, I, 67, 6¹; saptá priyásab, seven friends, IV, 1, 12; priyám tvâ krináivate, he gratifies thee, IV, 2, 8.
- priyá-dhâma, whose foundations are pleasant, I, 140, 1.
- Priyá-medha: priyamedha-vát, I, 45, 3¹; priyá-medhâb, I, 45, 4¹.
- prî, to please: prîñanáb, I, 73, 1; píprishati, he longs to gladden, IV, 4, 7;—â píprayab, gladden (the gods), II, 6, 8¹.
- prítâ, well-cared for, I, 66, 4¹; 69, 5.
- prush, to sprinkle, shower: prushitâ, I, 58, 2; prushnávat, III, 13, 4.
- pretrí, friend, I, 148, 5.
- présha, instigation, I, 68, 5¹.
- praishá, sacrificial command of a priest, (I, 145, 3²).
- phalgvá, feeble, IV, 5, 14.
- bát, lo! I, 96, 1; 141, 1.
- bándhana, fetterer, V, 12, 4.
- bandhútâ, kinship, IV, 4, 11.
- babhrí, carrying (the prize), III, 1, 12.

babhrū, brown (plants), I, 140, 6¹.
 bārhiṣṭam, most powerfully, III, 13, 1.
 bārhiṣmat, he who has spread the Barhiṣ, V, 2, 12.
 barhiṣ, the sacrificial grass, I, 12, 4; 13, 5; 7; 9, &c.; prākīnam barhiṣ, I, 188, 4; déva barhiṣ, II, 3, 4; mádhye ā barhiṣ, III, 14, 2.
 barhi-sād, sitting on the Barhiṣ, II, 3, 3.
 balí, tribute, I, 70, 9; V, 1, 10.
 bahú, many: bahvīb ka bhūyasib ka yāb dūrab, I, 188, 5.
 bahulá, large, I, 189, 2.
 bādh, to drive away: bādhmānab, III, 8, 2; bādhasva, beat away, III, 15, 1.
 bāhú, arm, III, 29, 6.
 budh, to take notice: bodhi, III, 14, 7; V, 24, 3; sāb ka bōdhāti, may he be attentive, I, 77, 2¹;—to think: bōdhat, IV, 15, 7¹;—ābodhi, he has been awakened, V, 1, 1; 2; būdhyamānab, awaking, V, 3, 6; bodhaya, awaken, V, 14, 1¹;—vi bodhaya, awaken, I, 12, 4.
 budhná, bottom, base, I, 95, 8²; 9; 96, 6; II, 2, 3; mahāb budhné rāgasab, IV, 1, 11¹;—depth, I, 141, 3¹.
 brīhát, great: brīhát bhāb, I, 45, 8¹; brīhatī ivēti brī, I, 59, 4¹; ā brīhát vadema, loud, II, 1, 16; mightily, III, 3, 11¹; V, 25, 8¹.
 Brīhát-uktha, V, 19, 3.
 brīhat-ūksh, mightily growing, III, 26, 4. brīhát-ketu, with mighty light, V, 8, 2.
 brīhát-diva, dwelling in the great heaven, II, 2, 9.
 brīhát-bhānu, with bright light, I, 27, 12; 36, 15.
 Brīhát-ratha, I, 36, 18¹.
 Brīhaspáti, III, 20, 5; 26, 2².
 bradhná, ruddy, III, 7, 5.
 brahmán, the Brahman (priest), II, 1, 2²; 3²; IV, 9, 4². brāhman, (sacred) spell, I, 31, 18; II, 2, 7; 10; III, 8, 2; 13, 6; 18, 3; V, 2, 6; prathama-gāb brāhmanab III, 29, 15¹;—sacred word, II, 5, 3¹; IV, 3, 15; 4, 6;—prayer, hymn: voḷéma brāhma, I, 75, 2; brahmanab pate, Brahmanaspati, II, 1, 3; ākāri brāhma, IV, 6, 11.

 brū: upa-bruvé, I invoke, I, 188, 8. bhága, good fortune, I, 141, 6²; 11¹;—love, V, 7, 8²;—a winner (in a contest), I, 141, 10¹; 144, 3²;—Bhaga, the god, I, 44, 8; II, 1, 7; III, 20, 4; 5; IV, 3, 5; V, 16, 2¹.
 bhag, to obtain: bhāganta . . nāma, I, 68, 4; bhaktám ābhaktam āvab, blessings enjoyed or not enjoyed (before), I, 127, 5⁶;—ā nab bhaga, let us partake, I, 27, 5.
 bhadrá, good, I, 1, 6; fortunate, I, 67, 2; blissful, I, 94, 1; glorious, I, 94, 14, &c. bhadra-jōki, with glorious light, V, 4, 7.
 bhand: bhādamāne iti, of glorious appearance, I, 142, 7; III, 4, 6²; bhādamānab, glorified, III, 2, 12; bhandate, he is glorified, III, 3, 4.
 bhāndishṭā, most glorious, I, 97, 3; V, 1, 10¹.
 Bharatá, Agni the B., I, 96, 3²; pl., the Bharatas, V, 11, 1.
 Bharát-vāga, the Bharadvâgās, I, 59, 7.
 bhārgas, splendour, I, 141, 1.
 bhav, to chew: bhārvati, I, 143, 5.
 bhas: prá babhasat, may he consume, IV, 5, 4.
 bhásman, ash, V, 19, 5.
 bhā, to shine: ānu bhāsi, III, 6, 7;—vi-bhāti, heshines (conj. vidhāti), I, 71, 6¹; vi bhāsi, thou shinest, II, 1, 10¹; 2²; vi bhāhi, I, 95, 11.
 bhāb-rīgika, whose rīgika (?) is light, I, 44, 3¹; III, 1, 12; 14.
 bhâga, share, portion, I, 73, 5²; II, 10, 6; III, 1, 19.
 bhâga-dhēya, portion, III, 28, 4. bhâgayú, desirous of distributing (goods), II, 1, 4.
 bhā-tvakshas, whose power is light, I, 143, 3.
 bhânú, ray, I, 36, 3; 97, 5; III, 1, 14; flame, I, 143, 3; V, 1, 1; light, splendour, II, 2, 8, &c.

- bhānu-māt, shining, V, 1, 11.
bhāma, splendour, III, 26, 6;—flame, V, 2, 10.
bhāmn, luminous, I, 77, 1.
bhārā, burthen, I, 31, 3.
Bhārata, (Agni) of the Bharata tribe, II, 7, 1¹; 5;—Bhāratā, the two Bharatas, III, 23, 2¹.
Bhāratī: Hotrā Bhāratī, I, 142, 9²; II, 1, 11¹;—I, 188, 8; II, 3, 8; bhāratī bhāratibhiḥ, III, 4, 8.
bhās, light: brīhāt bhāb, I, 45, 8¹; IV, 5, 1¹;—II, 4, 5; IV, 7, 9. bhiksha, to implore, I, 73, 6; 7.
bhid: āva bhet, he cut down, I, 59, 6.
bhug: bhógate, receives nourishment, I, 72, 8²; bhugé, to enjoy, I, 127, 8; 11; bhúgam, for the enjoyment, III, 2, 9;—yásya sam-bhúgam, whom I may enjoy, II, 1, 4¹.
bhugmān, fertile: bhúgma (conj. bhugmā), I, 65, 5¹.
bhur: gārbhurat, hurrying around, II, 2, 5; gārbhurānab, II, 10, 5; bhurānta, they have made tremble, V, 6, 7¹;—pari-gārbhurānab, hurrying around, I, 140, 10.
bhuranyú, quick, I, 68, 1.
bhurig, pole-arm (?), IV, 2, 14³.
bhúvana, world, I, 31, 2; 73, 8; II, 3, 1; III, 2, 10; 3, 10; IV, 14, 2; bhúvanasya magmānā, I, 143, 4¹;—being, I, 98, 1; III, 16, 4.
bhū: satāb ka bhāvatab ka, of what is and what comes into being, I, 96, 7;—bhavatāt, be, III, 23, 2²;—pāri bhúvat, he encompassed, I, 68, 2; pāri babhútha, thou hast excelled, I, 69, 2.
bhūman, earth, I, 65, 3¹; II, 4, 7;—being: etā bhūma, I, 70, 6;—world: vīsvāni bhūma, II, 4, 2;—V, 7, 5. bhūyams, many, I, 31, 6.
bhūri, rich, I, 73, 4;—bhūri kṛitvab, many times, III, 18, 4.
bhūri-poshīn, rich in manifold prosperity, III, 3, 9.
bhūri-retas, rich in seed, III, 3, 11.
bhūri-varpas, manifold-shaped, III, 3, 4. bhūrni, quick, I, 66, 2; III, 3, 5.
bhūsh, to be busy: bhūshan, I, 140, 6; III, 25, 2;—ūpa bhūshema, may we honour, III, 3, 9;—pāri bhūshasi vratām, thou administerest the law, I, 31, 2; pāri bhūshanti, they celebrate, I, 95, 3; pāri bhūshati, he takes care of, III, 3, 2; pāri bhūshathab, you display, III, 12, 9.
bhri, to bring: nāmaḥ bhārantaḥ, I, 1, 7; bhār īti bhāb, I, 128, 2; bibharshi (conj. bībharshi), V, 3, 2¹;—ūt-bhrita, taken out, III, 21, 5;—prā gabhrire, I, 72, 4; prā bhara (Samhitā: bharā), 2nd or 1st person, I, 140, 1¹; prā-bhrita, proffered, I, 147, 2;—vī bharanta, they have brought to different places, I, 70, 10¹; vī-bhritab, brought to many places, I, 71, 4¹; dispersed, I, 144, 2; vī bhāribhrat, quickly shaking, II, 4, 4².
Bhrīgavāna, Bhrigu-like, I, 71, 4²;—belonging to the Bhrigus, IV, 7, 4.
Bhrigu, I, 60, 1;—bhrīgavab, the Bhrigus, I, 58, 5; 127, 7; 143, 4; II, 4, 2; III, 2, 4¹; 5, 10; IV, 7, 1. bhrīmi, quick, I, 31, 16².
bhógana, food: vīsvasya bhogana, O food on which everything lives, I, 44, 5¹;—possession, V, 4, 5.
bhogyā, bounty, I, 128, 5.
bhramā, whirl, IV, 4, 2.
bhrāg, to shine: bhrāgante, I, 44, 12; ābhrāt, I, 66, 6; IV, 6, 5.
bhrāgat-rishī, with brilliant spears, I, 31, 1. bhrātri, brother, I, 65, 7; bhrātaram vārunam, IV, 1, 2; bhrātuḥ rinām, IV, 3, 13².
bhrātrā, brotherhood, II, 1, 9; IV, 10, 8. manhānā, bountifulness, IV, 1, 6; V, 10, 2; manhānā, instr., V, 16, 4²; 18, 2. māmhishṭha, most rich in liberal gifts, I, 147, 2¹.
makshū, quickly, I, 58, 9, &c.
maghā, wealth, III, 13, 3;—liberal boon, III, 19, 1;—liberality, V, 10, 3.
maghā-vat, generous, I, 58, 9; 140, 10.

- maghá-van, liberal giver, I, 31, 12; 58, 9; 73, 5; 8; 77, 4; 98, 3; 127, 11; 140, 12; 141, 13; 146, 5; II, 6, 4; V, 16, 3; 18, 3; 5; maghónab (conj. maghónām), V, 27, 1¹.
- magmán, greatness, power, I, 128, 5; 141, 6; 143, 2; 4¹; II, 1, 15.
- matí, (pious) thought, I, 60, 5; III, 26, 8;—prayer, I, 141, 1; 142, 4; III, 5, 3; IV, 3, 16; vākāb matím, I, 143, 1¹.
- math or manth, to produce by attrition: máthit, I, 71, 4; 148, 1; mathnántab, I, 127, 7; máthib, I, 127, 11; mathâyáti, I, 141, 3; mathitá, III, 9, 5; ámanthishrām, III, 23, 2; manthāma, III, 29, 1; manthata, III, 29, 5; manthanti, III, 29, 6; mathyāmānab, V, 11, 6;—nib-mathitab, produced by attrition, III, 23, 1; 29, 12.
- mad or mand, to be pleased, rejoice: mándasva (with gen.), I, 26, 5; mādayante, I, 59, 1¹; mādāyasva, II, 3, 11¹; III, 6, 9; madanti, III, 4, 7; 7, 7; mādāyantām, III, 4, 11; mādantam, III, 26, 9; mādayethām, IV, 14, 4;—abhí prá mande, I glad-den, V, 4, 1.
- mád, pronoun: me, acc., V, 27, 4².
- máda, delight, I, 127, 9; V, 2, 10.
- mádhu, sweet drink: mādhuab ādhavé, I, 141, 3³;—honey, I, 142, 3; 188, 2; III, 1, 7; 8; mādhunā dāvyena, III, 8, 1²;—honey-drink, V, 19, 3².
- mádhu-gihva, honey-tongued, I, 13, 3; 44, 6; 60, 3.
- madhu-péya, honey-drink, IV, 14, 4².
- madhu-prík, mixing the honey-drink, II, 10, 6.
- mádhu-mat, rich in honey, I, 13, 2; 142, 2; honey-sweet, I, 78, 5; III, 4, 2; IV, 3, 9; 12;—sweet (food), III, 7, 2.
- mádhumat-tama, sweetest, V, 11, 5.
- mádhu-vaśas, sweet-tongued, IV, 6, 5.
- madhu-sút, Madhu-presser, IV, 3, 3.
- mádhu-hastya, with honey in his hand, V, 5, 2.
- madhyatáb, out from the midst, III, 21, 5.
- madhyamá, middle: madhyaméshu, I, 27, 5.
- man: manvata, they have devised, IV, 1, 16; mánayase, thou art considered, V, 17, 2¹, 3.
- mananá, thought, III, 6, 1¹.
- mánas, thought: mánab ná sadyáb, I, 71, 9; mind: mánasab várāya, I, 76, 1¹; ghrīta-prúshā mánasā, his mind being intent on scattering ghrīta, II, 3, 2; mánasā sám gagmúb, they agreed in their mind, III, 1, 13.
- manishā, (pious) thought: manishā (Pada text for manishāb?), I, 70, 1²; 76, 1; III, 8, 5; prayer, IV, 5, 3; 6, 1; V, 11, 5¹;—thoughtful mind, I, 94, 1;—wise thoughts, IV, 11, 2; 3;—paráb manisháyā, beyond thought, V, 17, 2².
- manishín, thoughtful man, I, 13, 5; III, 10, 1.
- mánu, man, I, 96, 2; 140, 4; V, 2, 12;—mánave, to the man, or to Manu, I, 189, 7⁴;—Manu, N.p., I, 31, 4; 36, 10; 19; 68, 7; 128, 2.
- mánu-bhita, instituted by Manus, I, 13, 4²; III, 2, 15.
- Mánu-gāta, offspring of Manu, I, 45, 1².
- Manu-vát, like Manu, II, 10, 6.
- mánusha, man, I, 31, 11².
- manushyā, man, I, 59, 4;—belonging to men, III, 1, 10.
- Manushvát, as for Manu, I, 31, 17; II, 5, 2; III, 17, 2; as Manus did, I, 44, 11; V, 21, 1.
- mánuś, man, (I, 31, 11²); I, 36, 7; III, 26, 2; IV, 1, 9¹; 6, 11; V, 3, 4; 5, 7; mánushab, (Aryan) men, I, 189, 7²;—mánushab, of the man, or, of Manus, II, 2, 6; 8;—Manus, N.p., I, 26, 4; 76, 5¹; 128, 1; II, 10, 1; IV, 2, 1¹; mánushab puráb-hitab, III, 3, 2;—Mánushab gantú-bhiḥ, III, 3, 6; manótri, deviser, II, 9, 4.
- mántra, hymn, I, 31, 13; spell, I, 67, 4; 5; 147, 4; prayer, I, 74, 1.
- mand, see mad.
- mandíá, joy-giving, cheerful, I, 26, 7, &c.; lovely, delightful, V, 17, 2; 26, 1.

mandrá-gihva, with lovely tongues, I, 142, 8; — with agreeable speech, IV, 11, 5; — with the delightful tongue, V, 25, 2.
 mandrá-tama, most delightful, V, 22, 1.
 mandrá-tara, a great joy-giver, III, 7, 9. mánman, thought, I, 26, 2¹; III, 14, 5; IV, 6, 1; — prayer, I, 77, 4; 127, 2; 140, 1; 11; 148, 2; II, 4, 8; III, 11, 8; IV, 3, 3; 15; 5, 6; 11, 2; V, 12, 1.
 manma-sādhana, fulfiller of thought, I, 96, 6.
 manyú, spirit, V, 7, 10¹.
 māmaka, mine, I, 31, 11³.
 mayab-bhū, comfort-giving, I, 13, 9; III, 16, 6; IV, 11, 4; V, 5, 8. máyas, happiness, I, 31, 7; freshness, III, 1, 3¹.
 Marút : marútāb, the Maruts, I, 31, 1; 44, 14; 94, 12; 128, 5; 142, 9¹; III, 26, 4-6; 29, 15; IV, 1, 3; 2, 4; V, 3, 3; 5, 11; 26, 9; marútām-iva svanāb, I, 143, 5; marútām jārđhab, II, 3, 3; IV, 3, 8; víśve marútāb, III, 14, 4; narāb marutāb, III, 16, 2¹.
 marútvat, accompanied by the Maruts, I, 142, 12; III, 4, 6.
 marút-vridh, whom the Maruts strengthen, III, 13, 6¹.
 mártā, mortal, man : mártān (for mártām, gen. plur ?), I, 70, 6¹; IV, 2, 3²; 11¹; mártāya (for mártāyā ?), I, 77, 2¹; mártam jāmsani, praise of mortals, I, 141, 6⁴.
 mártya, the mortal, I, 26, 9¹; mártyeshu devān kṛimōti, I, 77, 1¹; devāsya mártasya ka, II, 7, 2.
 márya, manly, I, 77, 3.
 maryaká, young bull, V, 2, 5¹.
 márya-jrī, like a beautiful youth, II, 10, 5.
 maryādā, limit, IV, 5, 13.
 mah : mamahantām, may they grant, I, 94, 16; 95, 11; mamahé me, he has presented me, V, 27, 1; — to exalt : mahayanta, III, 3, 3; mahāyan, III, 3, 11; mahaya, III, 24, 4; mahāyamānāb, III, 25, 5; — sám mahema (conj. sám aheha), I, 94, 1¹.

máh, great : maháb (acc. pl.), I, 31, 3², &c.; IV, 4, 11¹; mahīnām, of the great (waters), III, 1, 12¹.
 máh, greatness : mahé, III, 7, 10.
 mahá, great : maháb, I, 146, 5².
 mahán, greatness : mahnā mahát-bhiḥ, I, 72, 9.
 máhas, power : máhab-bhiḥ, II, 10, 3⁴; III, 4, 6³; with all their might, IV, 14, 1¹; — mightily : maháb rāyē kitāyan, V, 15, 5³.
 máhi, great, I, 79, 4.
 Máhi-keru : máhi-keravaḥ, I, 45, 4¹.
 mahi-tvá, greatness, might, I, 59, 5; 6; mahi-tvá, I, 67, 9; 68, 2; growth, III, 1, 4. mahinā, greatness, III, 6, 2; 7, 10².
 mahimán, greatness, I, 59, 7.
 mahi-ratna, possessor of great treasures, I, 141, 10.
 mahi-vrata, lord of high laws, I, 45, 3.
 mahishá, buffalo, I, 95, 9¹; 141, 3¹.
 máhishī, queen, V, 2, 2¹; buffalo-cow, V, 25, 7².
 Mahī, 'the Great One,' N. of a goddess, I, 13, 9¹; 142, 9; V, 5, 8.
 mâ, to create, produce : amimita, he produced, II, 4, 5; mimitē, III, 1, 5; amimita (mâtāri), he has been shaped, III, 29, 11¹; mīmānam, preparing, V, 2, 3; — úpa māsī, measure out, I, 142, 2; — ví rāgab mame, he passes through the air, I, 58, 1; vimānāb, traversing, III, 26, 7; — sam-māya, building, I, 67, 10.
 mākis, not, I, 147, 5.
 Mâtariśvan, I, 31, 3; 60, 1; 71, 4¹; 96, 4¹; 128, 2; 141, 3; 143, 2; 148, 1; III, 2, 13; 5, 9; 10; 9, 5; 26, 2¹; 29, 11¹.
 mâtṛī, mother : mâtā Áditīb, I, 72, 9; mother (Earth), I, 140, 9¹; mâtúb, II, 5, 6¹; mâtúb upāsthe, III, 8, 1³; 29, 14; V, 1, 6; amimita mâtāri, III, 29, 11¹; trīb saptā mâtúb paramāni, IV, 1, 16¹; mâtúb uśhāsāb, IV, 2, 15; mâtúb gób, IV, 5, 10¹; mâtā yuvatīb, V, 2, 1; 2; mâtā-iva, V, 15, 4; — du., ubhā mâtārā, I, 140, 3¹; mâtārā samikī, the parents turned towards each other (Heaven and Earth), III, 1, 7¹; parents, III, 2, 2; 5, 7²; 7, 1¹; V, 11, 3¹; mâtārā pitārā,

- IV, 6, 7; yahvī iti rītāsya mātārā, V, 5, 6;—pl., mothers, I, 95, 7; 141, 5¹; vatsāb mātṛīb ganayata, I, 95, 4²; saptā jivāsu mātṛīshu, I, 141, 2²; mātṛīb apāb, III, 9, 2; sū-gātam mātṛīshu, III, 23, 3; jāsvatīshu mātṛīshu, IV, 7, 6.
- mādhyaṇdina, midday: mādhyaṇdine sāvane, III, 28, 4.
- Māna, N. p.: mānasyasūnūb, I, 189, 8¹.
- mānavasyāt, acting as men do, I, 140, 4.
- mānusha, man, I, 58, 5, &c.;—belonging to men, I, 44, 10¹; 128, 7; human, I, 59, 5; 60, 3; mānushasya gānasya gānma, I, 70, 2; mānushī vit, I, 72, 8; dhīb mānushā, II, 2, 9; human (sacrificer): mānushāt pūrvab, II, 3, 3²;—belonging to Manu, III, 9, 6; mānushē (conj. mānushab), III, 23, 4⁴.
- Māmatelyā, son of Mamatā, I, 147, 3¹.
- māyā, wonderful power, I, 144, 1;—secret power, III, 20, 3²; 27, 7¹;—wile, V, 2, 9.
- māyān, powerful, III, 20, 3.
- Māruta, of the Maruts: sārddhab mārutam, I, 127, 6; II, 1, 6; IV, 6, 10.
- mārgāya, liking to be groomed, V, 1, 8.
- mārd kā, mercy, I, 79, 9².
- mā-vat, like me, I, 141, 2.
- māhina, mighty, III, 6, 4; 7, 5.
- mi, to erect: miyāmānab, III, 8, 3;—ni-mimyūb, they have fastened down, III, 8, 6; nī-mita, III, 8, 7.
- miksh, to mix: mimikshati, I, 142, 3; ghrītām mimikshe, he is joined with ghrīta, II, 3, 11².
- mitā-dru, measuredly running, IV, 6, 5.
- mitrā, friend, I, (36, 17¹); 67, 1; 75, 4;—friend or Mitra, the god, I, 96, 1²; II, 2, 3; 4, 1; III, 5, 3;—Mitra, the god, I, 26, 4; 36, 4; 44, 13; 58, 6; 77, 3²; 79, 3; 94, 12¹; 13¹; 16; 95, 11; 98, 3; 141, 9; 143, 7; II, 1, 4; III, 4, 2; 6; 5, 9; 14, 4; IV, 1, 18; 2, 4; 3, 5; 5, 4; 6, 7²; 13, 2; V, 3, 1; 2³; 9, 6; 10, 2; 16, 1; 26, 9; mitrā, the two Mitras i.e. Mitra and Varuṇa, I, 36, 17¹; ksheshy-āntab nā mitrām, II, 4, 3¹; mitrāb agnīb bhavati, III, 5, 4.
- mitra-mahas, great like Mitra, I, 44, 12; 58, 8; II, 1, 5; IV, 4, 15.
- Mitrāvāruṇau, du., Mitra and Varuṇa, I, 71, 9²; 75, 5; III, 20, 5.
- mītrya, belonging to one's allies, II, 6, 7.
- mithās, mutually, I, 26, 9;—together, I, 68, 8.
- mithunā, twin, I, 144, 4.
- miyédha, sacrificial meal, III, 19, 1; 5.
- miyédhya, sacrificial, I, 26, 1;—holy: I, 36, 9; 44, 5.
- mish: nī mishati, he closes his eyes, III, 29, 14.
- mīsh, mist, I, 79, 2; 141, 13.
- mī, to break (a law): minantī, I, 69, 7; yāsya vratām nā miyate, II, 8, 3;—to impair: mināti, I, 71, 10;—mināt, fading, V, 2, 1²;—ā aminanta (Samhitā text: °ntañ), they were disparaged, I, 79, 2¹;—āmemyāne ity ā-mēmyāne, constantly destroying, I, 96, 5;—prā minanti, they diminish, III, 28, 4; pra-minatāb, trespassing, IV, 3, 13; prā mināti, he destroys, V, 7, 4.
- mīdbvāms, bountiful, I, 27, 2; II, 8, 1; III, 16, 3; IV, 3, 5; 5, 1; 15, 5.
- muk, to loosen: mūkyase, I, 31, 4.
- mūd, joy, I, 145, 4.
- mumukshū, striving to break loose, I, 140, 4.
- muhub-gīr, the sudden devourer, I, 128, 3.
- mūrdhān, head: mūrdhā divāb, I, 59, 2; III, 2, 14; mūrdhānam tatāpate, IV, 2, 6;—summit: mūrdhān yagñāsya, II, 3, 2.
- mri, to die: marmrūshīb, I, 140, 8.
- mri: prā mriṇīhi, crush, IV, 4, 5.
- mriktā-vāhas, carrying away injury, V, 18, 2².
- mrigā, animal, I, 145, 5.
- mrik, to injure: markāyati, mrik-sh'shta, I, 147, 4; 5; V, 3, 7.
- mrig, to rub: margāyantab, I, 60, 5; marmrigēnya, to be smoothed down, I, 189, 7; II, 10, 1;—to clean, brighten: marmrigmā, III, 18, 4; marmrigata, IV, 1,

- 14; mármrigatab, IV, 2, 19; margayema, IV, 4, 8; marmri-gyánte, IV, 15, 6; margayanta, they have cleansed themselves, V, 3, 3';—to groom: mriganti, V, 1, 7; mrigyate, V, 1, 8;—pári marmrigyate, purifies, I, 95, 8².
- mrid*, to be merciful: mrilaya, I, 12, 9; mrila, I, 36, 12; 94, 12; IV, 9, 1.
- mrilayát-tama*, most merciful, I, 94, 14.
- mriliká*, mercy, IV, 1, 3; 5.
- mrís*: abhi mrísate, he strokes, I, 145, 4; ná abhi-mríse, not to be touched, II, 10, 5.
- mrísh*, to forgive: mímriśhab, I, 31, 16; to forget: má prá marshi-śháb, I, 71, 10; ná tát pra-mríshe, it should not be slighted, III, 9, 2.
- mell*, roaring (?), III, 26, 9¹; IV, 7, 11².
- métrí*, builder, IV, 6, 2.
- médas*, fat, III, 21, 1; 2; 4; 5¹.
- médha*, sacrifice, I, 77, 3.
- medhá*, wisdom, V, 27, 4.
- médhira*, wise, I, 31, 2; 127, 7; 142, 11; III, 1, 3; 21, 4.
- médhya*, holy, V, 1, 12.
- Médhya-atithi*, I, 36, 10¹; 11; 17¹.
- menâ*, woman, I, 95, 6.
- yaksh* with prá, to aspire after: pra-yákshan vásu, II, 5, 1; pra-yákshé, III, 7, 1.
- yakshá*, a spirit, IV, 3, 13¹, 3 (bis).
- yag*, to sacrifice: yákshi, I, 13, 1; 31, 17; 36, 6; yáshave, I, 13, 6; yagñám yakshatâm, I, 13, 8; arvāñtām yákshva, I, 45, 10; yágadhyai, III, 4, 3; áyagab hotrá, III, 17, 2; yát yágási, III, 19, 4²; dhruvám ayāb, III, 29, 16; yagáthâya, see yagátha;—áva yakshva, cause, by sacrificing, to go away, IV, 1, 5;—ā yágati, procures (blessings) by sacrificing, I, 26, 3; ā-yágase, I, 94, 2; ā yaga, produce by sacrifice, I, 188, 9; ā yagasva, obtain by sacrificing, III, 1, 22; ā-yágante, they bring hither by sacrifice, III, 4, 2; ā yakshat, V, 13, 3¹.
- yagatá*, to be worshipped, worshipful, I, 59, 7; 128, 8; II, 5, 8; III, 5, 3; IV, 1, 1²; 15, 8; V, 1, 11; 8, 1.
- yágatra*, deserving worship, worshipful, I, 65, 2², &c.
- yagátha*, the sacrificing, sacrifice: yagáthâya, III, 4, 1; 5, 9; 17, 1; 19, 5; V, 1, 2; 11, 2.
- yágamâna*, sacrificer, I, 127, 2; V, 26, 5.
- yágishtha*, best sacrificer, I, 36, 10; 44, 5; 58, 7; 77, 1; 127, 1; 128, 1; 149, 4; II, 6, 6; III, 10, 7; 13, 1; 14, 5; IV, 1, 4; 19, 2, 1; 7, 1; 5; 8, 1; V, 14, 2.
- yágíyams*, the best, or excellent, sacrificer, II, 9, 4; III, 4, 3; 17, 5; 19, 1; IV, 6, 1; V, 1, 5; 6; 3, 5.
- yagñá*, sacrifice, I, 1, 1; 4¹, &c.; II, 2, 1¹; yagñānām adhvara-riyam, I, 44, 3²; mūrdhán yagñásya, II, 3, 2; yagñásva netári, II, 5, 2; rudrám yagñā-nām, III, 2, 5¹; ketúm yagñā-nām, III, 3, 3; 11, 3; 29, 5; pitā yagñānām, III, 3, 4; yagñām-yagñam, III, 6, 10; yagñásya netā prathamásya, III, 15, 4.
- yagñá-bandhu*, kinsman of sacrifice, IV, 1, 9¹.
- yagñá-vat*, performing the sacrifice, III, 27, 6.
- yagñá-vanas*, accepting the sacrifice, IV, 1, 2.
- yagñá-vâhas*, fitting out the sacrifice as a vehicle, III, 8, 3¹; 24, 1¹.
- yagñā-sādh*, performer or promoter of sacrifices, I, 96, 3; 128, 2.
- yagñā-sādhana*, accomplisher of sacrifices, I, 145, 3.
- yagñíya*, worshipful, I, 27, 10²; 72, 3; 4; 6; 73, 7; 148, 3¹; II, 3, 4; III, 1, 21; 2, 13; 6, 3; IV, 1, 20; V, 10, 2;—sacrificial, V, 12, 1.
- yágyu*, sacrificer, I, 31, 13; III, 19, 4.
- yágvan*, sacrificer, I, 13, 12; III, 14, 1.
- yat*: yatate, he ranges (the wings of his army), I, 95, 7²; he unites with, I, 98, 1²; yátānāb, ranging themselves, III, 8, 9;—yátate, he stands firm, III, 16, 4;—

- yātayāse, thou wilt requite, V, 3, 9.
 yātab, since, I, 128, 4.
 yatā-sruk, holding forth the sacrificial ladle(s), I, 142, 1; 5; III, 2, 5; 27, 6; IV, 2, 9; 12, 1;—to which the sacrificial ladles have been raised, III, 8, 7¹.
 yád, adv. when (repeated twice), I, 141, 4³.
 yádi, when: yádi idám, when here (all this happened), I, 79, 2³;—as I am, IV, 5, 11².
 Yádu, I, 36, 18¹.
 yantúr, governor, III, 27, 11².
 yantrí, guider: yantáram dhínám, III, 3, 8;—guide, III, 13, 3.
 yam, to command: yántâ, I, 27, 7;—to hold: yayantha, I, 59, 1; yámati, it can hold, I, 141, 11³; yemânám, fast-holding, IV, 1, 15; yemub, they have held up, IV, 2, 14;—to bridle: jakéma yámam, I, 73, 10¹; II, 5, 1⁴; III, 27, 3; yamate, he holds himself back, I, 127, 3;—áyâmite, it has been offered to thee, III, 14, 2¹;—to lead: agur yamub, V, 6, 10²;—â-yemiré, they have turned themselves hither, III, 6, 8;—út yamyamiti, he raises again and again, I, 95, 7; út yamsate, may he lift up, I, 143, 7;—ní-yata, ruled, IV, 3, 9;—with prá, to bestow: prá yamsi, III, 1, 22; prá yandhi, bestow, IV, 2, 20; prá-yatâ, IV, 15, 8;—ví yamsat, may he spread out, I, 189, 6;—sám ayamsta, he pulls in (the reins), I, 144, 3.
 yamâ, twin: yamâb ha gâtâb yamâb gâni-tvam, I, 66, 8¹.
 Yayâti: yayâti-vât, I, 31, 17.
 yáva, barley, I, 66, 3; corn, II, 5, 6. yávasa, meadow, V, 9, 4.
 yavasa-ád, grass-consuming, I, 94, 11.
 yávishtâ, the youngest (god, Agni), I, 26, 2; 44, 4; 141, 4; 10; 147, 2; 189, 4; II, 6, 6; 7, 1; III, 15, 3; 19, 4; IV, 2, 10; 13; 4, 6; 11; 12, 3; 4; V, 1, 10; 3, 11.
 yávishtâya, youngest (Agni), I, 36, 6; 15; 44, 6; III, 9, 6; 28, 2; V, 8, 6; 26, 7.
 yáva, bliss in crops, I, 140, 13.
 yasâb-tama, most glorious, II, 8, 1.
 yasâs, bringing glory, glorious, I, 1, 3; 31, 8; 60, 1; II, 3, 5; III, 1, 19; V, 15, 1; yasâsab (fem.), III, 1, 11^{2,3}; yasâsâ gób, through the brilliant (milk?) of the cow, IV, 1, 16⁴; mártasya yasâsâ, through the mortal's brilliant (offering), V, 8, 4¹.
 yá-asvat, glorious, I, 79, 1⁴; III, 16, 6. yahú, young son: sahasab yaho íti, I, 26, 10¹; 74, 5¹; 79, 4.
 yahvá, vigorous, I, 36, 1²; III, 2, 9¹; 3, 8; 5, 5; 9; 28, 4; IV, 5, 6; V, 16, 4³; restless, III, 1, 12⁶; IV, 5, 2; 7, 11;—young, V, 1, 1;—yahvíb, new, I, 59, 4;—saptâ yahvíb, I, 71, 7²; 72, 8¹; III, 1, 4¹; IV, 13, 3;—diváb yahvíb, young (daughters), III, 1, 6; 9⁴;—yahví íti mâtârâ, I, 142, 7²; V, 5, 6.
 yâ, to go: yâmi rátanam, I pray for treasure, I, 58, 7³; yâsat, may he drive on, I, 71, 6³;—âkkba yâhi, come hither, I, 31, 17; devân âkkba yâtave, I, 44, 4¹;—ava-yâtâm (conj. ava-yâtâ), I, 94, 12¹; âva yâsisishabâb, mayest thou deprecate, IV, 1, 4.
 Yâtú, a bad demon, V, 12, 2¹.
 yâtu-gú, inciting demons, IV, 4, 5.
 yâtu-mâvat, ally of the Yâtus: yâtu-mâvatab, I, 36, 20.
 yâtri, avenger (?), I, 70, 11³.
 yâma, procession, V, 3, 12.
 yâman, way, III, 2, 14; 29, 6¹.
 yu: yúyûshatab, they try to draw towards themselves, I, 144, 3;—yuyodhi, drive away, I, 189, 1; 3; II, 6, 4; yódhi, V, 3, 9²;—â yuvâmânâb, seizing, I, 58, 2; â-yôyuvânâb, drawing towards himself, IV, 1, 11;—ví yoshat, may he be deprived of, IV, 2, 9.
 yú, going: yób, I, 74, 7².
 yuktâ, see yug.
 yuktâ-grâvan, who sets to work the pre-s-stones, III, 4, 9.
 yugâ, generation, tribe: mânushâ yugâ, I, 144, 4; II, 2, 2;—age: yugé-yuge, III, 26, 3.
 yug, to harness, yoke: yugânám, I, 65, 1³; âyukthâb, I, 94, 10; ayukshata, III, 26, 4; dâkshinâ

- yugyate, V, 1, 3²; yuktá, V, 27, 2; 3⁴;—to join: nri-bhiḥ yuktáb, I, 69, 8;—yuñgē, I make ready, III, 1, 1⁴.
- yúg, share: yúgam, V, 20, 1¹.
- yúgya, companion: yúgyebhiḥ, I, 145, 4².
- yúdh, the fighting, I, 59, 5; battle, I, 140, 10; V, 25, 6.
- yuvati, young woman: dāra yuvatā-yab, I, 95, 2²;—III, 1, 6; V, 2, 1; 2; 4¹.
- yúvan, young, I, 12, 1; 27, 13; 71, 8; 141, 10; 144, 4; III, 23, 1; IV, 1, 12; V, 1, 6; yúvā su-vāsāb, III, 8, 4¹;—see yāvishṭba, yāvishṭbā.
- yushmád, pron.: vab, dativus ethicus, I, 143, 7¹; vām, III, 4, 4¹.
- yúthá, herd, I, 58, 5; IV, 2, 18; V, 2, 4¹.
- yúpa, sacrificial post, (I, 13, 11¹); V, 2, 7.
- yóga, the yoking, II, 8, 1;—setting to work, III, 27, 11.
- yogyā, the harnessing, III, 6, 6.
- yóni, womb, I, 149, 2; II, 3, 11; 9, 3; ritásya yónau, I, 65, 4; III, 1, 11; IV, 1, 12; V, 21, 4¹; úparasya yónau, I, 79, 3³; ghritásya yónau, III, 1, 7; rágasab yónau, IV, 1, 11;—couch, I, 66, 5;—receptacle, I, 140, 1²;—birthplace, I, 144, 2; III, 29, 10;—abode: samāné yónā, I, 144, 4; su-kritásya yónau, III, 29, 8;—place, III, 5, 7¹; home, IV, 3, 2.
- yóshan, young female: dāra yóshanab, I, 141, 2⁴; abhrātārab ná yóshanab, IV, 5, 5².
- yós: sám yób, with luck and weal, I, 189, 2; III, 17, 3; 18, 4; IV, 12, 5.
- ramh, to hasten: rarahānāb, I, 148, 3.
- rámhyā, rapidly, IV, 1, 3.
- rákshas, pl., rákshāmsi, the Rakshas (devils), I, 79, 12; IV, 3, 14; V, 2, 9; 10.
- rakshás, sorcerer, I, 36, 15; 76, 3; 79, 6; III, 15, 1; IV, 4, 1; 4, 15.
- rakshasvín, sorcerer, I, 12, 5; 36, 20.
- raghú, swift, IV, 5, 13.
- raghu-drú, quickly running, I, 140, 4; V, 6, 2.
- raghu-yát, quickly moving, IV, 5, 9.
- raghu-syád, swift runner, I, 140, 4; III, 26, 2; IV, 5, 9; V, 25, 6.
- rágas, air, atmosphere, aerial space, I, 58, 1; 5; 79, 1; 141, 7; 149, 4; II, 2, 3; 4; III, 1, 5; 4, 4²; 26, 7; rágasab yónau, IV, 1, 11².
- rágishṭba, straightest, I, 79, 3.
- ran, to rejoice, delight: ranáyanta, I, 147, 1; rananti, III, 7, 5; ranáyanta, IV, 7, 7; havyā ranayati, V, 18, 1².
- rána, battle: rāne-rane, I, 74, 3.
- ranv, to be joyful: ranvitē iti, II, 3, 6.
- ranvā, pleasant, lovely, I, 65, 5; 66, 3-5; 128, 8; II, 4, 4; IV, 1, 8;—gay, joyous, cheerful, I, 144, 7; II, 4, 6; III, 26, 1; IV, 7, 5; V, 7, 2.
- rátna, treasure: yāmi rátnam, I, 58, 7²; vāsu rátnā, III, 2, 11; kridhī rátnam, III, 18, 5.
- ratna-dhā, bestower of treasures, II, 1, 7.
- ratna-dhātama, highest bestower of treasures, I, 1, 1; V, 8, 3.
- ratna-dhéya, bestowal of treasures, IV, 13, 1.
- rátna-vat, blessed with treasures, III, 28, 5.
- rátha, chariot: rátham-iva védyam, II, 2, 3²; ráthab ná sásniḥ, like a victorious car, III, 15, 5.
- rathirá, charioteer, III, 1, 17; 26, 1.
- rathí, drawing a chariot: ásvasab rathyab, I, 148, 3; III, 6, 8;—charioteer, I, 77, 3; III, 3, 6; IV, 15, 2; rathíḥ adhvarānām, I, 44, 2; rathíḥ ritásya, III, 2, 8; IV, 10, 2.
- ráthya, of a chariot: átyab ráthyab, II, 4, 4; ráthyā-iva (supply akrá?), II, 4, 6²; akráram ráthyā-iva (rather ráthyam-iva?), IV, 1, 3¹.
- rad, to cleave: rātsi, V, 10, 1.
- radhrá: radhrásya for ādhrásya, (I, 31, 14²).
- rápas: rápāmsi, Pada text instead of ápāmsi, I, 69, 8².
- rabh: sám rebhire, they have embraced, I, 140, 8;—abhi sám rabhante, they take care of, III, 29, 13.

rābhas, vigour, I, 145, 3.
 rabhasā, robust, II, 10, 4¹; fierce, III, 1, 8.
 rām-su, joyously, II, 4, 5.
 rām-sugihva, with lovely tongue, IV, 1, 8.
 rayī, riches, treasures: kshapā-vān rayinām, I, 70, 5¹.
 rayi-pāti, treasure-lord: rayi-pātib rayinām, I, 60, 4; 72, 1; II, 9, 4.
 rayi-vīd, gainer of wealth, II, 1, 3; III, 7, 3. rayishāh, conqueror of wealth, I, 58, 3.
 rāva, shouting, roaring, I, 71, 2; 94, 10; agnē rāvena (Pada: agnēb āvena), I, 128, 5¹.
 rāvanā, rope, (I, 13, 11¹); IV, 1, 9²; V, 1, 3¹.
 rasmī, ray, I, 59, 3; IV, 13, 4; 14, 2; 3; V, 19, 5;—saptā rasmāyab, seven rays or reins, II, 5, 2;—rein, I, 141, 11; III, 7, 9¹; ritāsyā rasmim, V, 7, 3.
 rāsa, sap, I, 71, 5¹.
 Rāhūgana, plur., the Rāhūganas, I, 78, 5¹.
 rā, to give: rāsate, I, 96, 8; rarishe, II, 1, 5; rarimā, II, 5, 7; rārānāb, a liberal giver, III, 1, 22; IV, 1, 5; 2, 10.
 rāg, to be king or lord: rāgantam adhvarānām, I, 1, 8; 45, 4; rāgasi, I, 36, 12; 188, 1; rāgan (conj. rāgan), I, 79, 6¹;—virāgatha, I, 188, 4;—ādhi virāgatab, you reign high, I, 188, 6¹.
 rāgan, king, I, 59, 3; 5, &c.; rāgānā mitrāvarunā, I, 71, 9²; rāgā Vārunab, II, 1, 4; IV, 1, 2; rāgā viśām, II, 2, 8; vasām rāgānam, V, 2, 6¹.
 rātā-havya, who has made offerings: rātā-havyab, I, 31, 13⁴;—to whom offerings are made, IV, 7, 7.
 rātī, gift, I, 60, 1; II, 1, 16; III, 2, 4; 19, 2². rātīnī, full of gifts, III, 19, 2; IV, 6, 3.
 Rāti-sāk, pl., the Rātisāk or 'bounteous' gods, II, 1, 13.
 rātri, night, I, 94, 7.
 rād̥h, to worship: ārad̥hi, I, 70, 8²;—

mā nab rīradhab, give us not up, III, 16, 5.
 rād̥has, abundance, wealth, I, 94, 15; II, 9, 4.
 rād̥hya, beneficent, IV, 11, 3.
 rāmyā, night, II, 2, 8.
 rāyāb-kāma, desirous of riches, I, 78, 2.
 ri, to let loose: ārināt, III, 3, 11¹;—svādhitib-iva rīyate, it streams, V, 7, 8¹;—nī rināti, he destroys, I, 127, 4; 148, 4.
 rik̥, ririkvāmsab, abandoning, I, 72, 5³;—with prā, to exceed: prā riri̥ke, I, 59, 5; prā rik̥yase, II, 1, 15; prā rikthāb, III, 6, 2.
 rīp, deceive: priyām rīpāb āgram, III, 5, 5¹.
 ripū, impostor, I, 36, 16; 147, 3; 148, 5; 189, 5; IV, 3, 13³; V, 3, 11; ripāve (conj. ripāvab?), V, 12, 4¹.
 ririkshū, who tries to harm, I, 189, 6.
 riśādas, triumphant with riches (?), I, 26, 4¹; 77, 4¹.
 rish, to do harm: rishatab, I, 12, 5; 36, 15; mā rishāma, may we suffer no harm, I, 94, 1-14; IV, 12, 5; reshāyanti, I, 148, 5; rishate, I, 189, 5; V, 3, 12.
 rīsh, harm, I, 98, 2.
 rishayū, harmful foe, I, 148, 5.
 rih, to lick: rērihat śādā, licking and licking, I, 140, 9; rihānti ūdhab, I, 146, 2;—pāri rihān, licking everywhere, I, 140, 9.
 rī, see ri.
 ru: rōruvat, roaring, I, 140, 6.
 rukmā, gold, I, 96, 5¹; IV, 10, 5; 6; V, 1, 12.
 rukmin, with golden ornaments, I, 66, 6.
 ru̥k, to shine: rokate, I, 58, 2, &c.; rurukvān, I, 149, 3; su-rūkā ru̥kānāb, III, 15, 6; rokata, IV, 10, 6¹;—āti rokase, thou shinest forth, I, 94, 7;—prā arokayat, it filled with light, I, 143, 2;—virōkamānam, I, 95, 2; 9; vi rokase, II, 7, 4; vi-rurukūb, they have made shine, IV, 7, 1.
 rug, to break: rugan, I, 71, 2; ādrim rugema, IV, 2, 15³;—vi ruga, destroy, IV, 3, 14.
 Rudrā, a name of Agni, I, 27, 10³; IV, 3, 1¹; rudrām yagñānām,

III, 2, 5¹;—Rudra, the father of the Maruts, II, 1, 6; IV, 3, 6; 7; V, 3, 3²;—pl., the Rudras, I, 45, 1; 58, 3; III, 8, 8; 20, 5.
Rudriya, Rudra-like: rudriyā, I, 72, 4¹;—pl., the sons of Rudra, III, 26, 5.
rudh: vi ródhat, he grows up, I, 67, 9.
rúp: rupáb? IV, 5, 7¹; 8.
rúsat, bright, brilliant, III, 29, 3; IV, 3, 9; 5, 15; 11, 1; V, 1, 2;—red, IV, 7, 9.
rúsat-úrmi, with fiery waves, I, 58, 4.
ruh: vayáb-iva ánu rohate, he mounts up as on the branches (of a tree), II, 5, 4¹.
rúpá, appearance, I, 71, 10; 95, 8; IV, 11, 1².
réku, empty (?), IV, 5, 12¹.
rékñas, property, I, 31, 14.
reg, to tremble: áregetām, I, 31, 3; regante, they roll forward, I, 143, 3.
rétas, seed, sperm, I, 68, 8¹; 71, 8; 128, 3; rétab (read répab), IV, 3, 7²; diváb ná rétasā, V, 17, 3².
répas, sin: répab (conj. for rétab), IV, 3, 7²; stain, IV, 6, 6.
rebhá, singer, I, 127, 10⁶.
revát, rich: revān, I, 27, 12;—revát, with riches, I, 79, 5; 95, 11; II, 2, 6; 9, 6; III, 7, 10; 18, 4; 5; 23, 2; 4; V, 23, 4.
reshaná, harm-doer, I, 148, 5.
raí, wealth: rāyab, gen., I, 68, 10¹; yāsat rāyā sa-rātham, I, 71, 6²; rāyáb dūrab, I, 72, 8; rāyáb su-dhūrab, I, 73, 10¹; rāyáb jīsihi, III, 16, 3².
roká, shining light, III, 6, 7. rokaná, light: visvā diváb rokanā, I, 146, 1; III, 12, 9; diváb rokané, III, 6, 8; trī rokanāni, I, 149, 4; ut-tamāb rokanānām, III, 5, 10; rokané sūryasya, III, 22, 3. rokanāsthā, dwelling in light, III, 2, 14.
rok's, splendour, V, 26, 1.
ródasī, du., the two worlds, Heaven and Earth, I, 31, 3, &c.; I, 59, 2; 4¹; III, 7, 9²; V, 16, 4³.
ródhas, bank, IV, 5, 1².
róman, hair, I, 65, 8.
róhita, red (horses), I, 94, 10; II, 10, 2; III, 6, 6; IV, 2, 3; 6, 9.

rohit-asva, lord of red horses, I, 45, 2; IV, 1, 8.
loká, world: lokām gāmim, III, 2, 9¹;—svē u loké, space, III, 29, 8;—surabhaú u loké, in the sweet-smelling place, V, 1, 6; lokām syonám, pleasant freedom, V, 4, 11.
váktva, (speech) to be uttered, III, 26, 9. vákvan? I, 141, 7¹.
vákvara, moving crookedly: vákvarī iti, I, 144, 6¹.
vaksh, to grow: ukshitā, I, 36, 19; II, 3, 6; V, 8, 7; ukshāmānam rāgasi, II, 2, 4; vavakshe, III, 5, 8; vaváksha, IV, 7, 11;—āti vavakshitha, III, 9, 3¹;—abhi vavakshe, he has grown up, I, 146, 2.
vakshane-sthā? V, 19, 5¹.
vakshātha, growth, IV, 5, 1. vakshī? V, 19, 5¹.
vak, to pronounce (a prayer): vokeṃa, I, 74, 1; 75, 2; vak-yāte, I, 142, 4²;—ānu vókat brāhmāni, II, 5, 1¹;—with prā, to announce: prā vókat, I, 27, 4; pra-vókatī, V, 27, 4; piā vavāta, he indicates, I, 67, 8.
vákas, word: vákab, instr., I, 26, 2²; adroghēna vákasā satyām, according to thy guileless word, III, 14, 6;—prayer, I, 26, 10, &c. vakasyā, eloquence, II, 10, 6.
vakasyú, eloquent, V, 14, 6.
vañk, to stir: vakyāmāna, III, 6, 1; vakyántām, may they move along, III, 6, 2.
vat: āpi vātayāmasi, we render attentive, I, 128, 2¹.
vatsā, calf, I, 72, 2¹; 95, 1¹; 4²; 146, 3; II, 2, 2.
vadhā, weapon, I, 94, 9; V, 4, 6.
van, to accept: vanóshi, I, 31, 13⁴; vanishishṭa, I, 127, 7; vaner iti vaneb, II, 6, 1; vanvānáb, III, 8, 2;—to gain, win: vanóshi, I, 31, 14¹; vavne, I, 36, 17; vanéma, I, 70, 1²; II, 5, 7; vanvántab, attaining (their aim), II, 4, 9; vanate, may he obtain, III, 19, 1; V, 4, 3;—to conquer, overcome: vanuyāma, I, 73, 9;

- vanavat, V, 3, 5; vanuyâma, V, 3, 6;—vanúshab, addicted to, eager, I, 150, 3; III, 27, 11; vavánab, thou wilt hold dear, IV, 11, 2;—to grant: vanate, V, 3, 10;—â vanase, win thou, I, 140, 11;—sám vânamabe, we get together, V, 7, 3.
- vána, forest = fuel, wood, I, 58, 5¹; II, 4, 6¹; III, 1, 13¹; 9, 2; 23, 1¹; váne â vitám, IV, 7, 6¹;—tree: gárbhab vânanâm, I, 70, 3; 9;—forest: vâná-iva yât sthirâm, I, 127, 3²;—I, 128, 3², &c.
- vanád, eater of the forests, II, 4, 5².
- vanargú, walking in the forest, I, 145, 5¹.
- vânaspati, lord of the forest, tree (i.e. sacrificial post), I, 13, 11¹; 142, 11¹; 188, 10; II, 3, 10; III, 4, 10¹; 8, 1¹; 3; 6; II; V, 5, 10;—vânaspatin prá minâti, V, 7, 4.
- vânitri, winner, III, 13, 3.
- vanin, wooden stick, I, 58, 4;—tree, I, 94, 10; 140, 2.
- vand, to worship, salute: vandádhyai, I, 27, 1; III, 4, 3.
- vandáru, reverer, I, 147, 2; V, 1, 12.
- vándya, venerable, I, 31, 12; 79, 7; II, 7, 4.
- vandhúra, chariot-seat: vandhúre-iva (conj. for vandhúra-iva), III, 14, 3⁴.
- vap: â úpishe, thou pourest forth, I, 31, 9.
- vapúb-tara, very marvellous, II, 3, 7.
- vápusha: vápushâya darjatám, wonderful to behold, III, 2, 15.
- vapushy, to wonder: vapushyan, III, 1, 4.
- vapushyâ, of marvellous appearance, IV, 1, 8; 12; V, 1, 9.
- vápus, a wondrous sight, wonder, I, 141, 1; IV, 7, 9; wondrous body, wonderful shape, I, 141, 2²; 144, 3; 148, 1; III, 1, 8; 18, 5.
- vayab-krit, giver of strength: vayab-krit, I, 31, 10.
- vayab-dhâ, giving vigour, I, 73, 1; II, 3, 9; IV, 3, 10.
- vayab-vridh, increaser of vital strength, V, 5, 6.
- váyas, vigour, strength, vital power, I, 66, 4, &c.; váyab-vayab, life after life, V, 15, 4.
- vayâ, branch, I, 59, 1; II, 5, 4¹; V, 1, 1.
- vayí, weaver (?): vayyâ-iva, (II, 3, 6¹).
- vayúna, established order, rule: vid-vân vayúnâni, I, 72, 7¹; 189, 1; III, 5, 6; vayúnâ návâ adhita, I, 144, 5²; 145, 5; vayúnam vâghátâm, III, 3, 4²; vayúne, in the due way, III, 29, 3³;—ká vayúnâ, what are the objects, IV, 5, 13.
- vára, wish: mânasab várâya, to thy mind's taste, I, 76, 1¹; a choice boon, I, 140, 13; tis-í-bhyab â váram, according to the wish of the three (sisters), II, 5, 5; desire, II, 10, 6.
- vára, the holding back: ná várâya, he is not to be kept back, I, 143, 5.
- várvas, wide space, I, 59, 5.
- Várúna, I, 26, 4; 36, 4; 44, 14; 79, 3; 94, 12¹; 16; 95, 11; 98, 3; 128, 7; 141, 9; 143, 4; II, 1, 4; III, 4, 2; 6; 5, 4; 14, 4; IV, 1, 2-5; 18; 2, 4; 3, 5; 13, 2; V, 3, 1; 5, 11; 26, 9.
- várútha, shelter, I, 58, 9; 148, 2; 189, 6.
- varúthyâ, protecting, V, 24, 1.
- várenya, elect, desirable, excellent, I, 26, 2; 3; 7, &c.
- várêas, splendour, III, 8, 3; 22, 2; 24, 1.
- várna, colour, I, 73, 7; II, 1, 12; 4, 5;—(bright) colour, splendour, II, 5, 5; IV, 5, 13;—appearance, I, 96, 5;—race, II, 3, 5¹.
- vartaní, way: vartaníb (Pada: vartaníb), I, 140, 9²;—III, 7, 2.
- várdhana, increaser: várdhanam pitúb, I, 140, 3².
- várpas, sight, shape, I, 140, 5¹; 7; 141, 3.
- várman, armour, I, 31, 15; 140, 10.
- varshá-nirnig, clothed in rain, III, 26, 5.
- várshishúba, most powerful, III, 13, 7; 16, 3; 26, 8; V, 7, 1.
- várshman, summit: várshman diváb, III, 5, 9; várshman prithivyâb, III, 8, 3.
- vavâtâ, a favourite wife, IV, 4, 8.
- vavrá, prison, IV, 1, 13.

- vavri, cover, V, 19, 1.
 var, to be willing, long for, love :
 usatáb, I, 12, 4; usatíb usántam,
 I, 71, 1; usatáb (read usaté?),
 I, 71, 6²; usmási, I, 94, 3;
 usatíb, I, 145, 4⁶; II, 4, 3; vákshi, III, 1, 1¹; usántam
 usánáb, III, 5, 7; vāvarānáb, III, 20, 1; vāvarāna, III, 22, 1; usatí, loving, IV, 3, 2;—ānu vashri, I, 127, 1;—abhi vashri,
 IV, 1, 8.
 varā, heifer, II, 7, 5.
 varin, lord, III, 23, 3.
 vāshar-kriti, the word Vashar, I, 31, 5.
 vas, to shine : ukkātāntam, I, 71, 1;
 tshub, III, 7, 10; ritām avasran, IV, 2, 19¹.
 vas, to clothe : vāsishva, I, 26, 1;
 vāsaya (Samhitā : vāsaya), clothe, or I clothe, I, 140, 1¹;
 srīyam vāsānab, II, 10, 1; sukṛā vāsānab, arraying themselves in brightness, III, 8, 9; rūsat vāsānab, clothed in brilliancy,
 IV, 5, 15;—pāri vāsānab, III,
 1, 5².
 vas, to dwell : avāsayat, he has made depart, III, 7, 3;—prāti avāsaya, thou hast harboured, III, 1, 17;—sam-vāsānab, dwelling together, IV, 6, 8.
 vās, dwelling (?) : vāsām rāgānam,
 V, 2, 6¹.
 vasatí, dwelling, I, 31, 15; 66, 9¹.
 vāsana, garment, I, 95, 7.
 vasavyā, wealth, II, 9, 5¹.
 vāsishṭha, the highest Vasu, II, 9, 1.
 vāsu, excellent : vāsvibhiḥ dhītī-bhiḥ,
 III, 13, 5¹;—wealth, treasure, goods, I, 27, 5, &c.; vīsvab vāsub (conj. vīsvā vāsū), I, 128, 6²; vāsvab rāgati, I, 143, 4; vāsu rātnā, III, 2, 11; goods, or Vasus, III, 19, 2²;—see vāsya.
 Vāsu, ep. of Agni, I, 31, 3; 44, 3;
 45, 9; 60, 4; 79, 5; 127, 1¹;
 II, 7, 1; III, 4, 1²; 15, 3; 18,
 2; 19, 3; 21, 5; IV, 5, 15; V,
 3, 10; 12; 6, 1; 2; 24, 2; 25,
 1; vāsub vāsūnām asi, I, 94, 13;
 vāsub vāsu-bhiḥ, I, 143, 6;—
 pl., the Vasus, a class of gods, I,
 45, 1; 58, 3; 143, 1; II, 3, 4¹;
 III, 8, 8; 19, 2²; 20, 5; IV,
 12, 6; V, 3, 8.
 vāsu-dāvan, giver of goods, II, 6, 4.
 vāsu-dhiti, dispenser of goods, I, 128, 8.
 vāsu-dhiti, place of wealth, IV, 8, 2¹.
 vāsu-pati, lord of wealth, II, 1, 11; 6,
 4; V, 4, 1.
 vasu-yā, desire for wealth, I, 97, 2.
 vasu-yū, desirous of goods, I, 128,
 8; III, 26, 1; V, 3, 6; 25, 9. vasuvīt-tamā, the greatest acquirer of wealth, I, 45, 7.
 vāsu-sṛavas, renowned as Vasu (or,
 as goods), V, 24, 2.
 vāstu, daybreak : vāstob ushāsab, I, 79, 6.
 vāstrī, illuminator : kshapām vāstā,
 (I, 1, 7¹).
 vāstra, clothing, I, 26, 1.
 vāsman, cloth, IV, 13, 4.
 vāsya, better things, I, 31, 18;—
 bliss, I, 141, 12; welfare, II, 1, 16;—greater wealth, II, 9, 2;—
 wealthier, IV, 2, 20.
 vah, to carry : vākshi, (III, 1, 1¹);
 havyāya vólave, I, 45, 6; III,
 29, 4;—abhi vakshi vāgam, III, 15, 5²;—ā vakshati, may he conduct, I, 1, 2; ā vakshat, may he carry hither, III, 5, 9; ā vakshi, bring, III, 14, 2; ā-vāhantī, carrying (bliss), IV, 14, 3².
 vahāt, stream, III, 7, 4².
 vāhishṭha, (horses) most ready to drive, IV, 13, 4; 14, 4.
 vāhni, driven (on a chariot) : vāhnibhiḥ devaib, I, 44, 13¹;—carrier
 (of the gods), I, 60, 1; 128, 4³;
 III, 1, 1; 5, 1; 11, 4¹; 20, 1¹;—
 carrying : vāhniḥ āsā, I, 76, 4¹; —horse : vāhnayab, III, 6, 2²;—
 vāhni and vāhas, (I, 127, 8¹).
 vāhni-tama, best carrier (of the gods),
 IV, 1, 4.
 vā, to blow : vātab ānu vāti, I, 148,
 4;—āva vāti, he blazes down, I,
 58, 5.
 vā : vivāsasi, thou winnest, I, 74, 9;
 —ā-vivāsati, (who) invites, I, 12, 9; 58, 1; ā-vivāsasi, thou invitest, I, 31, 5²;—ā vivāsanti, they seek to win, IV, 11, 5.
 vā, to weave : samvāyantī iti sam-vāyantī, II, 3, 6.
 vāghāt, worshipper, I, 31, 14; 36, 13²; 58, 7; IV, 2, 13; invoking,

- III, 2, 1; 3, 8; 8, 10; sacrificer, III, 3, 4.
vāk, word, I, 79, 10.
vāga, strength, I, 27, 8¹; 11; 77, 5; II, 1, 10¹; 12; 2, 7; 4, 8; 6, 5; III, 10, 6; 11, 9; 19, 1; 22, 1; 25, 2; 3; 27, 1; 11; 29, 9; vāgasya pátib, I, 145, 1;—deed of strength, III, 12, 9;—booty, I, 27, 5, &c.;—prize, gain, III, 2, 3¹; 4, &c.; abhi vakshi vāgam, III, 15, 5²;—race (striving for gain, contest for booty), I, 27, 7¹; 9¹; 36, 2; III, 27, 7; V, 23, 1.
Vāga, pl., the Vāgas, III, 26, 4¹.
vāga-gatbāra, with booty in its belly, V, 19, 4.
vāga-pati, lord of booty, IV, 15, 3.
vāga-prasūta, bent on the prize, I, 77, 4².
vāgam-bharā, winning the prize, I, 60, 5; winning booty, IV, 11, 4.
vāgay, to run a race: vāgayān-iva, II, 8, 1¹;—to further strength: vāgayānti iti, III, 14, 3¹;—to drive forward: vāgayate, IV, 7, 11;—to strive for gain: vāgayānti, V, 1, 3; vāga-yāntab, V, 4, 1.
vāga-yú, bent on victory, V, 10, 5;—eager for the race, V, 19, 3.
vāga-vat, bestowing strength, I, 31, 18.
vāga-ravas, renowned for strength, III, 2, 5.
vāga-sātama, highest winner of booty, I, 78, 3; III, 12, 4; V, 13, 5; 20, 1¹.
vāga-sāti, winning of the prize, III, 2, 7¹.
vāgín, strong, II, 2, 11; III, 6, 1;—the strong horse, racer, I, 66, 4¹, &c.; II, 5, 1⁴; III, 27, 3¹; ārvab ná vāgí, III, 29, 6.
vāgina, strength, III, 20, 2.
vāñi, sound: saptá vāñib, III, 1, 6¹; 7, 1¹.
vāta, wind, I, 79, 1; 148, 4; IV, 7, 10; 11; vātaib arunaib, II, 1, 6; vātasya pathyābhīb, III, 14, 3; vātasya sárgab, III, 29, 11²; vātasya pátman, V, 5, 7; Vāta, the god, IV, 3, 6.
vāta-kodita, stirred by the wind, I, 58, 4; 141, 7.. vāta-gūta, stirred or driven by the wind, I, 58, 4; 65, 8; 94, 10; 140, 4.
vāmá, happy, I, 141, 12;—pleasant (wealth), IV, 5, 13.
Vâyú, the god, I, 142, 12¹;—vâyú, wind, V, 19, 5.
vār, water, II, 4, 6; usriyānām vāb-iva, IV, 5, 8.
vāra, treasure, I, 128, 6; V, 16, 2.
vāra, tail, II, 4, 4.
vāraná, stubborn, I, 140, 2.
vāra-vat, long-tailed, I, 27, 1.
vārya, excellent wealth, treasure, I, 26, 8; III, 8, 7; V, 16, 5¹; 17, 5; desirable boon, I, 58, 3; III, 21, 2; V, 23, 3; best gifts, I, 149, 5; III, 11, 9.
vār, to roar, low: avārayab, I, 31, 4¹; vāvañāñb, I, 73, 6; vavāñire, II, 2, 2.
vārā, lowing, I, 95, 6. vāhas, vehicle, (I, 127, 8¹); III, 11, 7¹.
vāhishṛba, which may best bring, V, 25, 7.
vi, to weave. See vā.
vi, bird: vér iti véb, I, 72, 9¹; 96, 6²; III, 5, 5¹; 6; III, 7, 7¹; IV, 5, 8⁴; váyab, I, 141, 8; vayyā-iva? II, 3, 6¹.
ví, away from, I, 150, 2.
vi-adhvan, straying everywhere, I, 141, 7.
vi-úsh, the break of dawn, V, 3, 8.
vi-ushri, dawning: vi-ushrishu, I, 44, 3; 4; 8; III, 20, 1; ushásab vi-ushrau, at the break of dawn, III, 15, 2; IV, 1, 5; 14, 4.
vi-oman, heaven: paramé vi-omani, I, 143, 2; V, 15, 2.
vi-gāhá, diver, III, 3, 5.
vi-kakshana, far-seeing, III, 3, 10.
vi-karshani, dwelling among all tribes, I, 31, 6⁴; 78, 1; 79, 12; III, 2, 8; 11, 1.
vi-ketas, wise, I, 45, 2; II, 10, 1; 2; IV, 5, 2; 7, 3.
vig: vevigé iti, they are affrighted, I, 140, 3.
vigā-van, continuing our race: sūnúb tánayab vigā-vā, III, 1, 23.
vid, to find: vévidāñb, acquiring (or, exploring?), I, 72, 4; avidan (conj. ávidan), I, 72, 6¹.
vid, to know: yáthā vidé, as it is

- known, I, 127, 4; vidvân, knowing (with gen. and acc.), V, 1, 11¹;—pári véda, I, 31, 5¹;—ví vidvân, distinguishing, I, 189, 7.
- víd, knowledge: vidā, I, 31, 18.
- vidátha, sacrifice, I, 31, 6²; 60, 1²; 143, 7; III, 1, 1²; 18; 3, 3; 4, 5; 8, 5; 14, 1¹; 27, 7²; IV, 6, 2; trīṣṭhe vidáthe, II, 4, 8¹;—vidáthā, sacrificial ordinances, III, 1, 2³; 26, 6²;—sacrificial distribution, III, 28, 4; vidátheshu áhñâm, V, 3, 6¹;—assembly, II, 1, 4³; 16².
- vidathya, influential in council, (I, 31, 6²).
- vidúb-tarab, the greatest sage, I, 31, 14; II, 3, 7.
- vidús, possessed of knowledge, I, 71, 10².
- vidmanā-apas, active in wisdom, I, 31, 1¹.
- vi-dyút, lightning, III, 1, 14; V, 10, 5.
- vidyút-ratha, whose chariot is lightning, III, 14, 1.
- vidh, to worship: vidhema, I, 36, 2; vidhatáb, I, 73, 1, &c.
- vidh, vyadh, to pierce, to shoot: vidhya, IV, 4, 1.
- Vidhartrí, he who keeps asunder all things, II, 1, 3³.
- ví-dharman, sphere, III, 2, 3;—disposer, V, 17, 2^{1, 3}.
- vip, to tremble: prá vepayanti, they make tremble, III, 26, 4.
- víp, prayer, III, 3, 1¹; 7; vipām gyótimshi, III, 10, 5.
- vipab-kít, knowing prayers, III, 3, 4¹; 26, 9; 27, 2.
- vipanyá, vipanyáyā, in thy admirable way, III, 28, 5; vipanyá, wonderfully, IV, 1, 12.
- vipanyú, full of admiring praise, III, 10, 9.
- vípra, priest, I, 27, 9, &c.; saptá vipráb, III, 7, 7; IV, 2, 15¹.
- vi-bhaktrí, distributor: vi-bhaktā, I, 27, 6.
- vi-bhâtí, resplendent, III, 6, 7.
- vibhā-van, resplendent, I, 58, 9; 59, 7; 66, 2; 69, 9; 148, 1; 4; III, 3, 9; IV, 1, 8; 12; V, 1, 9; 4, 2.
- vibhā-vasu, rich in splendour, I, 44, 10; III, 2, 2; V, 25, 2; 7¹.
- vi-bhú, mighty, I, 31, 2; 141, 9; III, 6, 9; V, 4, 2; 5, 9; vi-bhvíb (dúrab), I, 188, 5¹;—far-extending, I, 65, 10;—spreading, IV, 7, 1.
- ví-bhrít-ra, widely-spread, I, 71, 3²; 95, 2; wide-ranging, II, 10, 2.
- ví-bhrāshri, shine, I, 127, 1.
- vibhva-sáh, overpowering skilful men, V, 10, 7.
- vi-mána, measure, III, 3, 4².
- ví-yutā? IV, 7, 7¹.
- vi-rág, Prince, I, 188, 5.
- virúkmat, shining, I, 127, 3.
- ví-rúpa, of different shapes or forms, I, 70, 7¹; 73, 7; 95, 1; III, 1, 13; 4, 6;—of different colour, V, 1, 4¹.
- Vírúpa: virúpa-vát, I, 45, 3.
- vi-roká, the bursting forth: ushásab vi-roké, III, 5, 2.
- vivasvat, irradiating: vivasvat (conj. vivasvan), I, 44, 1¹; vivasvatā kákshasā, I, 96, 2⁵.
- Vivasvat, N. pr., I, 31, 3; 58, 1^{1, 2}; IV, 7, 4; V, 11, 3².
- vivasvan, the shining forth: vivasvat (conj. vivasvan) ushásab, at the rising of the dawn, I, 44, 1¹.
- vívikí, separating, V, 8, 3¹.
- vís, house, clan, tribe: visé-vise, I, 27, 10², &c.; visām ná visvab, I, 70, 4²; mánushí vít, I, 72, 8; rágā visām, II, 2, 8; visām kavím vispátim, III, 2, 10; purab-etā visām mánushinām, III, 11, 5; visab mártán, IV, 2, 3²; visáb átithib, V, 18, 1; devásab sárwayā visā, the gods with all their folk, V, 26, 9.
- vi-śkshu, a hewer, II, 1, 10³.
- vispáti, lord of the clans, I, 12, 2; 26, 7; 27, 12; 31, 11; 60, 2; 128, 7; II, 1, 8; III, 2, 10; 3, 8; 13, 5; V, 4, 3; 6, 5.
- vispátní, housewife, III, 29, 1⁴.
- vispā, lord of clans, (I, 70, 4²).
- visva, every one: visām ná visvab, I, 70, 4²; visvam idám, this whole world, I, 98, 1; visve devāb, II, 3, 4¹; V, 3, 1; 26, 4; visvam ít vidub, III, 29, 15¹.
- visvá-apsu? I, 148, 1².
- visvá-āyu, having a full life, or, in whom all life dwells, I, 27, 3; 67, 6; 10; 73, 4; 128, 8; visvá-

- âyub (conj. visvá-âyob), I, 68, 5².
visvá-âyus, adv., eternally (?), (I, 68, 5²).
visvá-kṛishī, extending over all dominions, I, 59, 7; belonging to all races of men, III, 26, 5.
visvá-karshāni, dwelling among all tribes, I, 27, 9²; III, 2, 15; V, 6, 3; 14, 6; 23, 4.
visvá-ganya, encompassing all people, III, 25, 3. visvatab-mukha, whose face is turned everywhere, I, 97, 6; 7.
visvá-tūrti, all-victorious, II, 3, 8.
visvá-thā, everywhere, I, 141, 9.
visvá-darśata, visible to all, I, 44, 10; 146, 5; V, 8, 3.
visvá-deva, accompanied by the Vive devāb, I, 142, 12.
visvá-devya, belonging to all gods, I, 148, 1; united with all the gods, III, 2, 5.
visvādhā, everywhere, I, 141, 6; always, V, 8, 4.
visvá-dhāyas, possessing every refreshment, I, 73, 3; V, 8, 1.
visvá-bharas, supporter of everything, IV, 1, 19¹.
visvá-bhānu, all-brilliant, IV, 1, 3. visvam-invā, all-embracing, I, 76, 2; —all-enlivener, III, 20, 3.
visvá-rūpa, all-shaped, I, 13, 10; assuming every shape, III, 1, 7.
visvá-vāra, rich in all boons, III, 4, 3; giver of all treasures, III, 17, 1; with all goods, V, 4, 7; rich in all treasures, V, 28, 1.
visva-vid, all-knowing, III, 19, 1; —omniscient, III, 29, 7; V, 4, 3.
visvá-vedas, all-possessor, possessor of all wealth, I, 12, 1; 36, 3; 44, 7; 128, 8; 143, 4; 147, 3; III, 20, 4; 25, 1; 26, 4; IV, 8, 1.
visvá-jrushī, always listening, I, 128, 1.
Visva-sāman, V, 22, 1.
Visvāmitra, pl., the Visvāmitras, III, 1, 21; 18, 4.
visvāyu-poshas, lasting all our life, I, 79, 9².
visvāhā, day by day, III, 16, 2. vish, to accomplish: viuddhi, I, 27, 10; vévishat, busy, III, 2, 10.
vishvāna, manifold, IV, 6, 6; —turning oneself from one, V, 12, 5¹.
vishu-rūpa, in manifold shapes, V, 15, 4.
vishrá? I, 148, 1¹.
Vishru, II, 1, 3; IV, 3, 7; V, 3, 3.
vishpár, descrier: vishpár, I, 189, 6¹.
vishvak, in all directions, I, 36, 16; IV, 4, 2.
vi-sārā, expanse, I, 79, 1¹.
vi-stīr, laid out: vi-stīrab, I, 140, 7¹.
vi-havā, the emulating call, III, 8, 10.
vī-hāyas, far-reaching, I, 128, 6¹; whose energy expands round-about, IV, 11, 4¹.
vī, to accomplish, pursue, perform eagerly: vivéb rāpāmsi (rather vivér āpāmsi), I, 69, 8²; véshi (hotrām), I, 76, 4; véb, II, 5, 3²; IV, 7, 8; —to come or approach eagerly, to move: véshi, I, 74, 4; 189, 7; IV, 9, 5; 6; véb, he repairs, I, 77, 2; IV, 7, 7; vetu, I, 77, 4; véti, I, 141, 6; vítāye, that they may eagerly come or partake, I, 74, 6; II, 2, 6²; see also vītí; —vihi, accept eagerly, III, 28, 3; —vyántab, tending to, I, 127, 5; vyantu, may they eagerly seek, III, 8, 7; vihi mrihikām, love mercy, IV, 1, 5; mā veb, require not, IV, 3, 13; —ā dūtyām vivāya, he has undertaken the messengership, I, 71, 4²; —ūpa vetu, may he come, V, 11, 4; —prā-vita, having conceived, III, 29, 3; —prāti vihi, accept eagerly, III, 21, 5. vī, to envelop. See vyā.
vī, eager: vīb, I, 143, 6.
vīlū, strong, safe, I, 127, 3; 5; IV, 3, 14; —fortress, I, 71, 2.
vīlū-gambha, with strong jaws, III, 29, 13.
vītā, straight, IV, 2, 11.
vītí, (sacrificial) feast: vítāye, I, 13, 2; 74, 4; 142, 13; III, 13, 4; V, 26, 2.
vītí-hotra, offerer of a feast (to the gods), III, 24, 2; V, 26, 3.
virā, hero, a manly son, I, 73, 3, &c.
virā-peras, adorned with heroes, IV, 11, 3¹.
virā-vat, with valiant heroes, I, 12, 11; 96, 8; III, 24, 5; V, 4, 11.

- vīrávat-tama, high bliss of valiant offspring, I, 1, 3.
- vīrúdh, plant, I, 67, 9; 141, 4; gár-bhab vīrúdhām, II, 1, 14.
- vīryā, mighty deed, III, 12, 9;—heroic power, III, 25, 2.
- vri, to choose: vrinimahe, I, 12, 1, &c.; vrinité, he demands, I, 67, 1;—urânáb, choosing, III, 19, 2; IV, 6, 3; chosen, IV, 6, 4; 7, 8.
- vri, to hold back, hinder: varâte, I, 65, 6; váranta, IV, 6, 6; ávâri, IV, 6, 7;—āpa vridhi, open, II, 2, 7; āpa āvar ity āvab, he has opened, III, 5, 1; āpa vrân, they have uncovered, IV, 5, 8; āpa vran, they disclosed, IV, 2, 16;—kāmam ā-varat, would he fulfil our desire, I, 143, 6;—pāri-vrita, hidden, I, 144, 2;—see ūruu.
- vrīktā-barhis, havingspread the sacrificial grass, I, 12, 3¹; III, 2, 5; 6; V, 23, 3;—where they spread sacrificial grass, V, 9, 2.
- vrīgāna, settlement, I, 60, 3²; 73, 2²; II, 2, 1⁴; 9;—enclosure, I, 128, 7;—masc. ? I, 189, 8².
- vriginā, wrong, dishonest, IV, 1, 17; V, 3, 11; 12, 5.
- vriginā-vartani, following crooked ways, I, 31, 6^{1, 4}.
- vrīṅg, to trim: vrīṅgé, I, 142, 5²;—to turn: vrinākti, IV, 7, 10;—ā vrikshi, may I draw on myself, (I, 27, 13²);—pāri vrinakti, he spares, III, 29, 6.
- vrītrā, foe, I, 36, 8¹.
- vrītra-hātha, the killing of foes, III, 16, 1.
- vrītra-hān, slayer of foes or of Vrītra, I, 59, 6¹; 74, 3; II, 1, 11; III, 12, 4²; 20, 4².
- vrītrahān-tama, the greatest destroyer of enemies (or of Vrītra), I, 78, 4.
- vrīthā, lightly, I, 58, 4¹;—wildly, I, 140, 5.
- vriddhā-jōis, mightily brilliant, V, 16, 3.
- vrīdh, to increase, grow, &c.: vār-dhamāna, increasing, I, 1, 8, &c.; vavridhasva, be magnified, I, 31, 18; vrīdhé, for welfare, prosperity, III, 3, 8; 6, 10; IV, 2, 18; vrīddhā, grown full of, V, 20, 2¹;—vārdhanti, they nourish, I, 65, 4;—vardhayā-masi, we extol, I, 36, 11; vardhaya gīrab, make prosper, III, 29, 10;—vī vavridhe (conj. vi-vavridhé), I, 141, 5².
- vrīdh, furtherer, III, 16, 2².
- vrīdhā, helper, furtherer, (III, 16, 2²); IV, 2, 10.
- vrīdhasānā, growing: vrīdhasānāsu, in the growing (plants), II, 2, 5².
- vrīdha-snū, mighty, IV, 2, 3¹.
- vrīshan, manly, bull, I, 36, 8²; 10¹, &c.; III, 29, 9¹; ritāsyā vrīshne, V, 12, 1¹; arushāsyā vrīshnab, V, 12, 2².
- Vrīshan, N. pr., I, 36, 10¹.
- vrīshabhā, bull (Agni), I, 31, 5, &c.; I, 141, 2²; IV, 1, 11²; 12²; V, 2, 12¹; kṛishnāb vrīshabhāb, I, 79, 2².
- vrīshay: vrīsha-yāse, thou rushest on (acc.) like a bull, I, 58, 4²;—vrīsha-yānte, they are full of (sexual) desire, III, 7, 9.
- vrīshī, rain, II, 5, 6; 6, 5.
- védas, property, I, 70, 10; 99, 1; V, 2, 12.
- vēdi, sacrificial altar: vēdi īti asyām, II, 3, 4.
- vedī-sād, sitting on the sacrificial bed, I, 140, 1.
- vēdya, well known: rātham-iva vedyam, II, 2, 3²;—renowned, V, 15, 1.
- vedhab-tama, best worshipper, I, 75, 2.
- vedhās, worshipper, I, 60, 2; 65, 10; 69, 3; 72, 1¹; 73, 10; III, 10, 5; 14, 1; IV, 2, 15; 20; 3, 3; 16; 6, 1;—helpful, I, 128, 4 (bis).
- vēpas, trembling, IV, 11, 2.
- veśā, vassal, IV, 3, 13.
- vēshana, officiating, V, 7, 5.
- Vairvānarā, I, 59, 1-7; 98, 1-3; III, 2, 1; 11; 12; 3, 1; 5; 10; 11; 26, 1-3; IV, 5, 1; 2; V, 27, 1²; 2.
- vōlbri, draught-horse, I, 144, 3.
- vyākasvat, far-embracing, II, 3, 5.
- vyākishṭha, most capacious, II, 10, 4.
- vyāthis, track, IV, 4, 3.
- vyadh, see vidh.
- vyā (vi), to envelop: ava-vyāyan, re-

- moving, IV, 13, 4;—ā vītām, enveloped, IV, 7, 6¹;—pāri-vita, dressed (in offerings and prayers?), IV, 3, 2².
vyōman, see vi-oman.
vrag, to go: vavrāga, III, 1, 6;—abhi-vrāgan, proceeding, I, 58, 5²; abhivvrāgat-bhiḥ, approaching, I, 144, 5³.
vragā, stable, IV, 1, 15; V, 6, 7.
vratā, law, I, 31, 1; 2; 12; 65, 3; 69, 7; II, 8, 3; III, 3, 9; 4, 7; 6, 5; 7, 7; IV, 13, 2; vratā dhruvā, I, 36, 5¹; II, 5, 4; daivyaṇi vratā, I, 70, 2;—ānu vratām, according to his will, I, 128, 1;—duty, I, 144, 1.
vratā-pā, guardian of the law, I, 31, 10; III, 4, 7; V, 2, 8³.
vrasak: unāgyāyasab sāmsam ā vrikshi, may I not fall as a victim to the curse of my better, I, 27, 13²; vrikśāsab, hewn, III, 8, 7.
vrā, host, IV, 1, 16².
vrāta, host: vrātam-vrātam, III, 26, 6.
vrādh: vrādhanta, they have boasted, V, 6, 7.
vrāadhan-tama, most powerful, I, 150, 3.
vrīś, finger: dāsa vrīśab, I, 144, 5¹.
sams, to recite: āsamsan, I, 67, 4; mānma samsi, II, 4, 8;—to teach: ritām sāmsantab, III, 4, 7.
sāmsā, curse, I, 27, 13²; 94, 8; III, 18, 2; sāmsāt aghāt, from evil spell, I, 128, 5;—praise, I, 141, 6⁴; 11; sāmse nrinām, III, 16, 4; ubhā sāmsā, IV, 4, 14¹; sāmsam āyōb, IV, 6, 11²; V, 3, 4².
sak, to be able: saknāvāma, I, 27, 13; sakēma yāmam, I, 73, 10¹; II, 5, 1⁴; III, 27, 3; sakema sam-idham, I, 94, 3;—to help to: sagdhi (with gen.), II, 2, 12; III, 16, 6; sagdhī svastāye, V, 17, 5.
sakti, skill: saktī, I, 31, 18.
sagmā, mighty, I, 143, 8.
saki-vat, full of power, III, 21, 4.
satā, hundred: satā ka vimśatim ka, V, 27, 2¹.
satā-ātman, endowed with hundred-fold life, I, 149, 3. satadāvan, giver of a hundred (bulls), V, 27, 6.
satā-dhāra, with a hundred rills, III, 26, 9.
satā-valsa, with a hundred branches, III, 8, 11.
sata-sēya, attainment of hundred-fold blessings, III, 18, 3.
satā-hima, living a hundred winters, II, 1, 11.
satā-himā, pl., a hundred winters, I, 73, 9.
satīn, hundredfold, I, 31, 10; II, 2, 9; satīnibhiḥ, with his hundred-fold blessings, I, 59, 7.
sātru, enemy: sātrum ā-dabhūb, III, 16, 2⁴.
satru-yāt, being at enmity, V, 4, 5; 28, 3.
sad, to be glorious: sāsadré, I, 141, 9.
saphā, hoof, V, 6, 7.
sam, to toil (esp. in performing worship): samānā, who has toiled hard, I, 141, 10; 142, 2; III, 18, 4; IV, 2, 9; 13; samishṭbāb, III, 29, 16; śa-mishṭa, he toiled, V, 2, 7.
sām, bliss, luck: sām yōb, with luck and weal, I, 189, 2; III, 17, 3; 18, 4; IV, 12, 5; sām nab soka, III, 13, 6; sām kridhi, IV, 1, 3; sām āsti, he satisfies, V, 7, 9; sām hridé, V, 11, 5.
samāy, to toil: sam-āyé, III, 1, 1.
sāmi, toiling, (sacrificial) work: sāmyā, II, 1, 9¹; sāmyai (read sāmyāb?), IV, 3, 4¹.
samitrī, the sacrificial butcher, or slaughterer, (I, 13, 12¹); II, 3, 10; III, 4, 10.
sam-gayā, bringing happiness to our home, II, 1, 6.
sām-tama, most agreeable, beneficial, blissful, I, 76, 1¹; 77, 2; 128, 7; III, 13, 4.
Sāmbara, I, 59, 6.
sam-bhū, refreshing, I, 65, 5; bringing luck, III, 17, 5.
sayū, reposing, I, 31, 2.
sarāni, fault (?), I, 31, 16¹.
sarād, autumn: tisrāb sarādab, I, 72, 3.
sāru, weapon, IV, 3, 7. sārdha, host, I, 71, 8⁸; IV, 1, 12¹, 8; sārdhāya marūtām, IV, 3, 8.
sārdhas, host: sārdhab mārutām, I,

127, 6; II, 1, 6; IV, 6, 10;
marútām sárdhab, II, 3, 3;
narām sárdhab, II, 1, 5¹; sárdhab divyám, III, 19, 4; —sárdhab,
 m. or n.? IV, 1, 12¹, 3.
sárman, shelter, protection, I, 58, 8, &c.; sármani syām, III, 15, 1; ákkhidrá sárma, III, 15, 5¹.
sarma-sád, sitting under shelter, I, 73, 3.
sáryā, arrow, I, 148, 4.
sávas, strength, might, power: sávasā (conj. sávasab), I, 27, 2¹, &c.; sávasab sushminab pátib, I, 145,
 1; savasab pate, V, 6, 9. sávishtā, most powerful, I, 77, 4;
 mightiest, I, 127, 11.
sásvat: sásvatā tánā, constantly, I,
 26, 6¹; sásvatib, constant, I, 27,
 7; gánāya sásvate, all people, I,
 36, 19; sásvatab, many, I, 72, 1¹.
sasvat-tamām, for ever, III, 1, 23.
sasti, hymn, praise, IV, 3, 3; 15.
sā, to sharpen, further: sīśhi, III,
 16, 3¹; 24, 5¹; sīśite, V, 2, 9; 9, 5; —āti sīśite, I, 36, 16; —ni- sīshat, he stirs up, IV, 2, 7¹.
sākā, powerful, V, 15, 2¹.
Sāta-vaneyā, N. pr., I, 59, 7.
sās, to teach, instruct: sarāsūb, III,
 1, 2; IV, 2, 12; —ānu-sīshā, instructed, V, 2, 8; —prā sāsī, thou instructest, I, 31, 14; prā- sāsāt, commanding, I, 95, 3.
sās, command, I, 68, 9.
sāsana, command, III, 7, 5.
sāsani, teacher, I, 31, 11.
sāsus, command, instruction, I, 60, 2; 73, 1.
sāsya, governable, I, 189, 7¹.
sīkvan, plur., locks of flames, I, 141, 8¹.
sīksh, to help one to, to favour with a thing (gen.): sīksha, I, 27, 5; III, 19, 3; yāb te sīkshāt, who does service to thee, I,
 68, 6¹.
sīkshū, rich in favours: sīkshób (conj. sīksho), III, 19, 3¹.
siti-prīshṭā, white-backed, III, 7, 1¹.
sīmī-vat, powerful (?), I, 141, 13¹.
sīrinā? II, 10, 3³.
sivā, kind, bounteous, gracious, blessed: I, 31, 1; 79, 2; 143,
 8; III, 1, 9; 19; IV, 10, 8;
 11, 6; V, 24, 1.
sīsu, the young one: parūb nā sīvā,

like a pregnant cow, (I, 65, 10¹); young calf, I, 96, 5¹; the young child (Agni), I, 140, 3; 145, 3; V, 9, 3; a foal, III, 1, 4; divāb sīsum, (Soma) the child of heaven, IV, 15, 6².
sīsu-matī, the mother of the young child, I, 140, 10¹. sīsvan (?), young: parūb nā sīvā, I,
 65, 10¹.
sīrā, sharp, III, 9, 8.
sukrá, bright, I, 12, 12, &c.; —brightness: sukrá vásānāb, III, 8, 9.
sukrá-varna, whose colour is bright,
 I, 140, 1; 143, 7.
sukrá-sokis, brightly shining, II, 2, 3.
suk, to shine forth, flame up: sókasva,
 I, 36, 9; susukvān, flaming, I, 69, 1; sukáyantab, the resplendent ones, I, 147, 1; susu- kānā, I, 149, 4; sām nab soka, III, 13, 6; śókāt, III, 29, 14;
sukādhyai, IV, 2, 1¹; —to kindle:
sukāntab agnīm, IV, 2, 17; — āpa nab sósukat aghām, driving away evil with thy light, I, 97, 1-8; —susugdhī ā rayīm, shine upon us with wealth, I, 97, 1; — vī sósukānab, flaming, III, 15, 1.
súk, flash: sukā-sukā, flash by flash,
 III, 4, 1.
súki, brilliant, bright, I, 31, 17, &c.;
 V, 7, 8¹; súkim sūkayab, I, 72,
 3¹; súki it (for súkim it?), IV,
 2, 16².
súki-ganman, whose birth is bright,
 I, 141, 7.
súki-gihva, pure-tongued, II, 9, 1.
súki-dant, with brilliant teeth, V, 7, 7.
súki-peṇas, brightly adorned, I, 144, 1.
súki-pratīka, whose face is bright, I, 143, 6.
súki-bhrāgas, brightly resplendent, I, 79, 1.
súki-varna, brilliant-coloured, V, 2, 3.
Sūnab-sēpa, V, 2, 7.
sunām, prosperously, IV, 3, 11.
subh, to adorn, beautify: subbhānti,
 V, 10, 4¹; 22, 4.
súbh, a triumphal procession, I, 127, 6; III, 26, 4¹.
subham-yā, going in triumph, IV,
 3, 6².
subhrā, beautiful, III, 26, 2.
surúdh, gift, I, 72, 7².
sush, see svas.

śūshka, dry (wood), I, 68, 3.
 śūshma, roaring, IV, 10, 4;—power,
 V, 10, 4; 16, 3.
 śushmān, mighty, powerful, I, 145,
 1; III, 16, 3; V, 10, 4.
 śushmān-tama, strongest, I, 127, 9.
 śūra, mighty, I, 70, 11;—hero, IV, 3, 15.
 śūra-sāti, strife of heroes: śūra-sâtā,
 I, 31, 6.
 śūshā, song of praise, III, 7, 6.
 śrīṅga, horn, III, 8, 10; V, 2, 9.
 śrīṅgin, horned animal, III, 8, 10.
 śridh: śardha, show thy prowess, V, 28, 3.
 śēva, a kind friend, I, 58, 6; 69, 4; 73, 2;—friendship, III, 7, 5.
 śē-vridha, joy-furthering, III, 16, 2.
 śēsha, offspring, V, 12, 6.
 śōka, flame, IV, 6, 5.
 śokīb-keśa, whose hair is flame, I,
 45, 6; 127, 2; III, 14, 1; 17,
 1; 27, 4; V, 8, 2.
 śokishṭha, brightest, V, 24, 4.
 śokishmat, flaming, II, 4, 7.
 śokis, splendour, flame, I, 12, 12, &c.
 śkut, to drip down: śkotanti, III, 1, 8; 21, 2; 4, 5.
 śyāva, dark: śyāvīm (conj. śyāvīb?),
 I, 71, 1^a; śyāvā, the two tawny horses, II, 10, 2.
 syetā, reddish, I, 71, 4.
 syenā, hawk, IV, 6, 10.
 syēñī, the reddish white one, I, 140, 9^a.
 śrath, to let loose: śirathat, I, 128,
 6;—vī śirathāb, release from,
 IV, 12, 4.
 śram: śramānāb, toiling, IV, 12, 2.
 śramayū, wearying oneself, I, 72, 2.
 śravayāt-pati, who brings renown to his lord, V, 25, 5¹. śrāvas, glory, renown, I, 31, 7, &c.; śrāvase, I, 73, 5².
 śravasyā, glorious, II, 10, 1.
 śravasyāt, aspiring to renown, I, 128, 1.
 śravasyā, desire of glory, I, 128, 6;
 149, 5.
 śravasyū, glorious, V, 9, 2.
 śravāyya, glorious, celebrated, I, 27,
 8; 31, 5; V, 20, 1.
 śrā, see śrī.
 śri, to rest, abide: asi śritāb, I, 75, 3; III, 9, 3; śiriyānā, dwelling here and there, V, 11, 6;—asret, he has spread forth, established,

III, 14, 1; 19, 2;—to send:
śirdhvām asret, he has sent upwards, IV, 6, 2; 13, 2; 14, 2;
asret, he has sent, V, 1, 12; 28,
 1;—ūt śrayasva, rise up, III, 8, 2;—with vī, to open (intr.): vī
śrayantām, I, 13, 6; 142, 6; II, 3, 5; vī śrayadhvam, V, 5, 5.
 śrī, to cook: śrīnān, I, 68, 1¹; śirītā, he has ripened, I, 149, 2; śrī- nishe, thou warmest, V, 6, 9.
 śrī, splendour, beauty, glory, I, 72,
 10^a, &c.; śrīyam vāsānāb, II,
 10, 1; śrīyé, gloriously, IV, 5, 15.
 śru, to hear: śrudhi, I, 26, 5, &c.; śrúvat (conj. śrúvat), it melts away, I, 127, 3⁴; śrōshamānāb, hearing, III, 8, 10;—vī śrin- vire, they are renowned, IV, 8, 6.
 śrúti, glory, II, 2, 7.
 śrut-karna, with attentive ears, I, 44, 13; 45, 7.
 śrútya, glorious, I, 36, 12.
 śrushī, obedience, I, 67, 1^a; III, 9, 8;—hearing, readiness to hear,
 I, 69, 7; II, 3, 9; 9, 4.
 śrushī-vān, ready to listen, hearing,
 I, 45, 2; III, 27, 2;—obedient,
 I, 127, 9.
 śreni-śās, in rows, III, 8, 9.
 śvas, to hiss: śvasīti ap-sū, I, 65, 9;
 —abhi-śvasān, panting, I, 140,
 5;—āśushānāb, aspiring after, I,
 147, 1; IV, 2, 14; 16.
 śvasīvat, mightily breathing, I, 140, 10.
 śvâtrâ, power (?), I, 31, 4².
 śvântâ? I, 145, 4⁴.
 śvetâ, white (horse?), I, 66, 6¹;—
śvetām gagānām, who had been born white (Agni), III, 1, 4.
 Svaitreyâ, V, 19, 3¹.
 samyât-vīra, with a succession of valiant men, II, 4, 8.
 samvatsarâ, year: samvatsaré, after a year, I, 140, 2³.
 sâkman, company: sâkman (loc.), I,
 31, 6⁴.
 sa-kshîta, dwelling together, I, 140, 3.
 sâkhi, friend, I, 31, 1; 75, 4; III,
 9, 1¹; sâkhâ sâkhye, I, 26, 3;
 III, 18, 1; sâkhâ sâkhyub ni- mîshi rākshamānāb, I, 72, 5⁴;
gūhâ sâkhi-bhih, III, 1, 9³.

- sakhi-yāt, wishing to be a friend, I, 128, 1.
 sakhyā, friendship, I, 26, 5; 71, 10; 94, 1-14; III, 9, 3; IV, 10, 8.
 sagh, to sustain : āsaghnob, I, 31, 3.
 sak (sark), to be united with, accompany : sātāsva nab, stay with us, I, 1, 9; sakase, II, 1, 3; sakire, II, 1, 13;—to attend, worship : sakante, I, 59, 6; sākanta, I, 73, 4; sakantām, I, 98, 3;—to follow : sakante, I, 60, 2; sisakshi, I, 73, 8;—to hold, cling, adhere : sisakti, I, 66, 2; sakate (krātvā), I, 145, 2; sākante, III, 13, 2; saskata, III, 16, 2;—sakanta, they have attained, V, 17, 5¹;—ānu sakate vartanāb, she follows her ways, I, 140, 9²;—āpa sakire, they turn away to encounter, V, 20, 2;—abhi sakante, go towards, I, 71, 7¹;—ā sātayam, whom men should attach to themselves, I, 140, 3.
 sātānas, graciously united, I, 127, 11.
 sātā, together with : sātā sāt, being attached, I, 71, 4;—III, 12, 2; IV, 5, 10.
 sa-gātyā, relationship, II, 1, 5².
 sa-gītvān : sa-gītvānā, united conquerors, III, 12, 4.
 sa-gūṣh, united with : sa-gūṣh, I, 44, 2; 14.
 sa-gōṣha, unanimous, concordant, I, 65, 2; 72, 6.
 sa-gōṣhas, in concord with, unanimous, III, 4, 8; 8, 8; 20, 1; 22, 4; IV, 5, 1; V, 4, 4; 21, 3; 23, 3.
 sāmgāṭa-rūpa, of familiar form, I, 69, 9.
 sāttri, sitting down, III, 17, 5.
 sāt-pati, lord of beings, II, 1, 4;—a good lord, V, 25, 6; 27, 1.
 satyā, true, truthful, I, 1, 5; 73, 2; 79, 1; 98, 3; kṛinvān satyā, I, 70, 8; satyām, true (fulfilment), IV, 1, 18;—satyām, verily, I, 1, 6;—efficacious, I, 67, 5;—real, IV, 1, 10.
 satyā-gīrvāhas, truly carried by prayers as by a vehicle, I, 127, 8¹.
 satyā-tara, highly truthful, I, 76, 5; III, 4, 10.
 satyā-tāti, truth, IV, 4, 14.
 satyā-dharman, whose ordinances are true, I, 12, 7.
 satyā-manman, truthful, I, 73, 2.
 satya-yāg, truly sacrificing, IV, 3, 1.
 satya-vāk, truth-speaking, III, 26, 9.
 satyā-rushma, truly strong, I, 59, 4; IV, 11, 4.
 satrā, altogether, I, 71, 9;—together : satrā kākṛānāb, I, 72, 1.
 satrā-sāha, always conquering, I, 79, 7. sātvan, warrior, I, 140, 9; IV, 13, 2³.
 sad, to sit : ūpa sīdan, they reverentially approached, I, 72, 5;—pari-sādantab, besieging, IV, 2, 17⁴.
 sādana, (priestly) seat, I, 31, 17;—seat, abode, I, 95, 8; 96, 7.
 sa-drīś, of like appearance, I, 94, 7.
 sādman, seat, I, 67, 10; the (sacrificial) seat, I, 73, 1; IV, 1, 8; 9, 3; V, 23, 3.
 sadyāb-ārtha, immediately successful, I, 60, 1.
 sadyās, instantly, I, 27, 6, &c.; quickly, I, 71, 9¹.
 sadhani-tvā, companionship, IV, 1, 9.
 sa-dhanī, companion : sa-dhanyāb, IV, 4, 14.
 sadha-māḍ, rejoicing, V, 20, 4.
 sadha-māḍya, sharing in rejoicings, IV, 3, 4.
 sadhā-stuti, song of praise, V, 18, 5¹.
 sadhā-stha, abode, II, 9, 3; III, 6, 4; 7, 4; 12, 8; 23, 1; 25, 5; apām sadhā-sthe, I, 149, 4; II, 4, 2; trī sadhā-ssthā, III, 20, 2.
 sadhryāñk, together, IV, 4, 12.
 san, to win : sanēma, I, 73, 5; 189, 8; sanishyān, sanishyāntab, desirous of winning, III, 2, 3¹; 4; 13, 2; sanishāmahe, III, 11, 9; sasa-vān, having obtained, III, 22, 1; sasa-vāmsab, successful, IV, 8, 6; sanishanta, they were successful, V, 12, 4;—see also sā.
 sāna, old, I, (27, 13¹); 95, 10; III, 1, 6; 20.
 sanakāt, from of old, III, 29, 14.
 sanātā, from of old, II, 3, 6; III, 3, 1.
 sanāya, ancient, III, 20, 4.
 sánara, united with strong men, I, 96, 8¹.
 sāna-ruta, old-renowned, III, 11, 4.

- sanâ-gû, inciting from old, I, 141, 5³.
 sanî, efficient, I, 27, 4;—sanî, gain:
 sanâye, I, 31, 8; sanîm gôb, the acquiring of the cow, III, 1, 23; sanîm yaté, V, 27, 4.
 sánitri, a gainer, winner: sánitâ, I, 27, 9; 36, 13; sanitûb, V, 12, 3.
 sâ-nî/a, dwelling in the same nest,
 I, 69, 6; 71, 1.
 sanutâr, far, V, 2, 4.
 sánemi, entirely, IV, 10, 7.
 santya (voc.), good, I, 36, 2; 45, 5;
 9; III, 21, 3.
 sap, to serve, worship: ritâ sâpantab,
 I, 67, 8; 68, 4; sapema, IV, 4, 9; sapâmi, V, 12, 2; sâpâti (Pada: sab pâti), V, 12, 6¹;—
 to attach oneself: sapanta, V, 3, 4.
 sapâtñi, the two wives, III, 1, 10³;
 6, 4.
 sapary, to worship, do service:
 saparyâti, I, 12, 8; saparyâmi prâyasâ, I, 58, 7³; saparyân, I, 72, 3²; saparyâtab, I, 144, 4;
 saparyéma saparyâvab, II, 6, 3;
 saparyata, III, 9, 8; V, 14, 5; 25, 4; asaparyan, III, 9, 9;
 saparyântab, V, 21, 3;—â sa-paryân, IV, 12, 2;—vi saparyan,
 I, 70, 10.
 saparyû, devoted servant, II, 6, 3.
 saptâ-gihva, seven-tongued, III, 6, 2³.
 saptâ-dhâtu, consisting of seven elements, IV, 5, 6².
 saptân, seven: saptâ guhvâb, I, 58,
 7; yahvîb, I, 71, 7; 72, 8¹; III,
 1, 4¹; rasmâyab, II, 5, 2¹; vâñîb,
 III, 1, 6¹; 7, 1¹; hotrâñi, III,
 4, 5²; priksâsab, III, 4, 7¹;
 viprâb, III, 7, 7; IV, 2, 15¹;
 hóttri-bhih, III, 10, 4¹; priyâsab,
 IV, 1, 12; dhâma-bhih, IV, 7,
 5¹; râtñâ, V, 1, 5;—trib saptâ,
 I, 72, 6¹; IV, 1, 16¹. saptâ-rañmi, having seven rays (or reins), I, 146, 1¹.
 saptâ-siva: saptâ-sivâsu, read: saptâ sivâsu, I, 141, 2³.
 saptâ-sirshan, seven-headed, III, 5, 5³.
 saptâ-hotri, the god of the seven Hotris, III, (10, 4¹); 29, 14.
 sâpti, racer: âtyam ná sâptim, III,
 22, 1¹.
 saprâthab-tama, most widely extended, I, 45, 7²; most widely-sounding, I, 75, 1¹; most wide-reaching, I, 94, 13.
 sa-prâthas, widely extended: járma sa-prâthab, a big shelter, I, 142,
 5;—V, 13, 4.
 sabab-dûgha, juice-yielding, III, 6, 4⁴.
 sâbandhu, bound in kinship, III, 1, 10.
 sa-bâdh, pressing: sa-bâdhab ā kakruh, III, 27, 6¹.
 sa-bâdhas, urgent, V, 10, 6.
 sabhâ-vat, with (brilliant) assemblies,
 IV, 2, 5.
 sám, together: yajâsab sám hí pûrvîb, many glorious ones have come together, III, 1, 11³.
 sama, every, V, 24, 3.
 samád, contest: tveshâb samât-su, I, 66, 6; 70, 11.
 sâ-manas, one-minded, V, 3, 2.
 samanâ, alike, IV, 5, 7.
 sám-antam, in the neighbourhood of, V, 1, 11.
 sa-manyû, concordant, IV, 1, 1.
 samâyâ, through the midst, I, 73, 6.
 sa-maryâ, assembly, III, 8, 5;—contest, V, 3, 6.
 samânâ, companion, I, 69, 8¹;—
 common, I, 127, 8, &c.; samânám ártam, I, 144, 3².
 sám-iti, meeting, I, 95, 8.
 sam-ithâ, battle, I, 73, 5;—assembly,
 III, 1, 12.
 sam-îdh, log of wood, fuel, I, 95, 11;
 II, 6, 1; III, 1, 2; 10, 3; IV,
 4, 15; V, 1, 1; 4, 4; 6, 4²;
 tistrâb sam-îdhab, III, 2, 9;
 samît-samit, log by log, III,
 4, 1¹.
 samudrá, ocean, I, 71, 7; 95, 3¹.
 sám-riti, battle, I, 31, 6;—onslaught,
 I, 127, 3³; V, 7, 2¹.
 sám-okas, dwelling together, I, 144, 4.
 sam-gâmana, assembler, I, 96, 6.
 sám-tarutra, victorious, III, 1, 19.
 sam-drîs, the shine (of the sun), I,
 66, 1;—appearance, aspect, II,
 1, 12; III, 5, 2; IV, 1, 6; 6, 6.
 sám-drîshtri, aspect, I, 144, 7; II, 4,
 4; IV, 10, 5.
 sam-bhûga, enjoyment, (II, 1, 4¹).
 sám-misla, united, III, 26, 4².
 samyâñk, turned towards each other:
 samîkñî íti sam-îkñî, I, 69, 1; 96, 5²; II, 3, 6; III, 1, 7¹;—united:

- sam-īkīb, III, 29, 13; sam-yāñkam, V, 7, 1.
 sam-yāt: kshāpab sam-yātab, on continuous nights, II, 2, 2³.
 sam-rāg, the Sovereign, I, 188, 5; III, 10, 1.
 sam-rāgat, king: sam-rāgantam, I, 27, 1.
 sam-vāt, space, V, 15, 3.
 sam-sād, companionship, I, 94, 1;—assembly, IV, 1, 8.
 sam-stīr, laid together: sam-stīrab vi-stīrab, I, 140, 7¹.
 sam-sthā, abode, V, 3, 8.
 sam-hāt, a compact mass, III, 1, 7.
 sayāvan, accompanying, I, 44, 13.
 sā-yoni, having the same origin, III, 1, 6.
 sarany, to speed: saranyān, III, 1, 19.
 sa-rātham, on one chariot with, I, 71, 6³; III, 4, 11; 6, 9; V, 11, 2.
 Sarāmā, I, 72, 8.
 Sārasvatī, N. of a goddess, I, 13, 9¹; 142, 9; 188, 8; II, 1, 11¹, 2; 3, 8; III, 4, 8; V, 5, 8;—N. of a river, III, 23, 4. sārīman, swift course, III, 29, 11².
 sārga, rush: vātasya sārgab, III, 29, 11²;—the letting loose, IV, 3, 12.
 sārga-prataкта, urged forward, I, 65, 6.
 sarpīb-āsuti, drinking butter, II, 7, 6; V, 7, 9; 21, 2.
 sarpīs, butter, I, 127, 1; V, 6, 9.
 sarvā-tāti, health and wealth, I, 94, 15.
 sāvana, libation, III, 1, 20; trītiye sāvane, III, 28, 5; mādhyaṇdine sāvane, III, 28, 4.
 sā-vayas, of the same age, I, 144, 3¹; 4.
 Savitrī, I, 36, 13; 44, 8; 73, 2; 95, 7¹; II, 1, 7; III, 20, 5; IV, 6, 2; 13, 2; 14, 2.
sak, see sak.
 saśkāt, hindrance, III, 9, 4¹.
 sasā, herbs, III, 5, 6²; IV, 5, 7¹; 7, 7¹; V, 21, 4².
 sasahl, victorious, III, 16, 4.
 sāsni, victorious, III, 15, 5.
 sa-srūt, flowing, I, 141, 1.
 sah, to overcome, be victorious: sahvān, III, 11, 6; sāhasva, III, 24, 1; āsahanta, III, 29, 9; sasāha, V, 25, 6;—abhi sasāhat, it may prevail, V, 23, 1;—nib-sāhamānab, conquering, I, 127, 3;—pra-sākshat, victorious, IV, 12, 1.
 sahab-krīta, produced by strength, I, 45, 9; III, 27, 10; V, 8, 1.
 sahab-gā, strength-begotten, I, 58, 1.
 sahab-vrīdh, augments of strength, I, 36, 2; III, 10, 9.
 sāhan-tama, mightiest, I, 127, 9.
 sahintya, conqueror, I, 27, 8. sāhamāna, victorious, IV, 6, 10.
 sāhas, strength: sahasab yaho iti, I, 26, 10¹; 74, 5¹; 79, 4; sūno iti sahasab, I, 58, 8; 127, 1; 143, 1; III, 1, 8; 11, 4; 24, 3; 25, 5; 28, 3; 5; IV, 2, 2; 11, 6; V, 3, 9; 4, 8; sāhasā gāya-mānab, I, 96, 1¹; sāhasab yātab gāni, I, 141, 1; sahasab yuvan, O young (son) of strength, I, 141, 10; sāhasab putrāb, II, 7, 6; III, 14, 1; 4; 6; 16, 5; 18, 4; V, 3, 1; 6; 4, 6; 11, 6;—sāhab, (Agni our) strength, I, 36, 18;—sāhasā, strongly, I, 98, 2;—might, power, I, 127, 9; 10; V, 1, 8; devāsya sāhasā, V, 3, 10; abhi-māti sāhab dadhē, V, 23, 4¹;—violence, V, 12, 2.
 sahasānā, mighty, strong, I, 189, 8; II, 10, 6; V, 25, 9.
 sāhasā-vat, mighty, strong, I, 189, 5; III, 1, 22; V, 20, 4. sahasin, strong, IV, 11, 1.
 sahasya, strong, I, 147, 5; II, 2, 11; V, 22, 4.
 sahasra, thousand: sahasrāni jāṭā dāra, II, 1, 8; sahasrāt yūpāt, V, 2, 7; darā-bhiḥ sahasraib, V, 27, 1³.
 sahasra-akshā, thousand-eyed, I, 79, 12.
 sahasra-git, conqueror of thousand-fold wealth, I, 188, 1; V, 26, 6.
 sahasram-bharā, bringing thousand-fold gain, II, 9, 1.
 sahasra-retas, with thousandfold sperm, IV, 5, 3. sahasra-vat, thousandfold, III, 13, 7.
 sahasra-valsa, with a thousand branches, III, 8, 11.
 sahasra-vira, blessing with a thousand men, I, 188, 4¹.
 sahasra-śrīga, with a thousand horns, V, 1, 8.

- sahasra-sā, a winner of thousandfold bliss, I, 188, 3.
 sahasra-sātama, the greatest winner of thousandfold wealth, III, 13, 6.
 sabasrin, thousandfold, I, 31, 10; 188, 2; II, 2, 7. sāhasvat, mighty, strong, I, 97, 5; 127, 10; 189, 4; III, 14, 2; 4; V, 7, 1; 9, 7; 23, 2.
 sāhīyas, mightier, I, 71, 4.
 sāhūti, joint invocation, I, 45, 10.
 sahvāt, strong, I, 58, 5.
 sâ: sîsāsantab, wishing to acquire, I, 146, 4.
 sâ: ānava-syantab ārtham, never losing their object, IV, 13, 3;—
 vî syatu, may he pour forth, I, 142, 10; pra-gām vî syatu, may he deliver a son, II, 3, 9; vî syasva, send forth, III, 4, 9; vî sâhi, disclose, IV, 11, 2.
 sâtî, acquirement (of wealth), success, I, 36, 17; 143, 6; V, 5, 4; 9, 7.
 sātu, womb, mother (?), IV, 6, 7¹.
 sâdh, to prosper (intr.): sâdhati, I, 94, 2;—sâdhate matib, the prayer goes straight to him, I, 141, 1²; sâdhan, straightway, III, 1, 17;—to prosper (tr.), further: sâdhāya, I, 94, 3; pra-tarām sâdhaya, I, 94, 4; sâdhan, I, 96, 1;—to accomplish, perform: sâdhayantî dhīyam, II, 3, 8; sâdhan, III, 1, 18; 5, 3.
 sâdhat-ishî, accomplishing the oblations, III, 2, 5; 3, 6.
 sâdhana, performer: yagñāsya (vidāthasya) sâdhanam, I, 44, 11; III, 3, 3; 27, 2; 8;—giver, V, 20, 3. sâdhishîba, best, I, 58, 1.
 sâdhû, good, I, 67, 2;—going straight (to his aim), I, 70, 11; straight-forward, I, 77, 3; III, 18, 1;—real, IV, 10, 2; efficacious, V, 1, 7.
 sâdhu-yâ, straightway, V, 11, 4. sânasî, successful, winning (booty), I, 75, 2; IV, 15, 6.
 sânu, ridge, I, 128, 3; divāb nâ sânu, I, 58, 2; ādhi sânushu trishû, II, 3, 7;—surface, I, 146, 2;—top, III, 5, 3.
 sâman, song: ritāsya sâman, I, 147, 1⁴;—the Sâman, IV, 5, 3.
 sām-rāgya, sovereignty, I, 141, 13.
 sārathi, charioteer (Agni), I, 144, 3⁴.
 sârasvatâ, beings belonging to Sarasvatî, III, 4, 8.
 Sâha-devyâ, Sahadeva's son, IV, 15, 7-10.
 simhâ, lion, I, 95, 5; III, 9, 4; 11; 26, 5; V, 15, 3.
 sîk, wing (of an army): sîkau, I, 95, 7².
 si(ñ)k: nî-siktam, poured down, I, 71, 8;—pâri-sikta, poured, IV, 1, 19.
 sitâ, bound: padî sitām, IV, 12, 6.
 sidh, to scare away: sedhati, I, 79, 12.
 sidhrâ, successful, I, 142, 8; effective, V, 13, 2.
 sîndhu, river, stream, I, 27, 6; 72, 10; 73, 6; 97, 8; 99, 1; 143, 3; 146, 4³; III, 5, 4; V, 4, 9; gāmib sîndhûnâm, I, 65, 7; pl., the Rivers, I, 140, 13;—the river Sindhu, I, 44, 12¹; 94, 16; 95, 11; 98, 3; V, 11, 5; sîndhub nâ kshôdab, I, 65, 6¹; 10.
 simâ, self, I, 95, 7³; 145, 2¹. sîv, see syû.
 su, to bear. See sû.
 su, to press Soma: sunvatâb, I, 94, 8; sunavâma, I, 99, 1; sunvaté, I, 141, 10; V, 26, 5; sômam sutâm, III, 22, 1.
 su-agnî, possessed of a good Agni (fire): su-agnâyab, I, 26, 7; 8 (bis).
 su-ânâ, fleet, IV, 6, 9.
 su-adhvarâ, best performer of worship, I, 44, 8; 127, 1; II, 2, 8; III, 2, 8; 9, 8; V, 9, 3; 28, 5;—receiving good sacrifices, I, 45, 1¹;—yagñé su-adhvaré, at the decorous service of the sacrifice, I, 142, 5;—splendid worship, III, 6, 6; 29, 12; V, 17, 1.
 su-anîka, with beautiful face, II, 1, 8; IV, 6, 6.
 su-apatyâ, with good offspring, I, 72, 9³; II, 2, 12; 4, 8; 9, 5;—blessed with offspring, III, 3, 7; consisting in offspring, III, 16, 1;—good offspring, III, 19, 3.
 su-âpas, good worker, IV, 2, 19; V, 2, 11.
 su-apasyâ, great skill, III, 3, 11.

su-apâka, most skilful, IV, 3, 2³.
 su-arâks, endowed with beautiful light, II, 3, 2.
 su-ârtha, pursuing a good aim, I, 95, 1;—well-employed, I, 141, 11.
 su-âvas, giving good help, V, 8, 2.
 su-ârva, with good horses, IV, 2, 4;—rich in horses, IV, 4, 8; 10.
 su-ârva, abundance in horses, II, 1, 5; III, 26, 3.
 su-âdhî, of a good mind, kind, well-wishing, I, 67, 2; 70, 4²; 71, 8;—with good intentions, I, 72, 8; IV, 3, 4;—full of pious thoughts, III, 8, 4;—longing, V, 14, 6.
 su-âbhû, truly helpful: râyé su-âbhûvam, V, 6, 3¹.
 su-âsa, whose mouth is beautiful, IV, 6, 8.
 sú-âhuta, best receiver of offerings, I, 44, 4; 6; III, 27, 5.
 su-uktâ, well-spoken (prayer), I, 36, 1; 70, 5; II, 6, 2.
 su-upâyanâ, easy of access, I, 1, 9.
 su-kârman, well performing the acts (of worship), IV, 2, 17.
 su-kîrtî, beautiful praise, I, 60, 3;—glory, V, 10, 4.
 su-krit, well-doing: su-krite sukrî-taraâ, I, 31, 4; righteous, I, 128, 6; who has done good deeds, I, 147, 3²; virtuous, well-doer, IV, 13, 1; V, 4, 8; 11.
 su-kritâ, good works, III, 29, 8.
 su-keîû, bright, III, 7, 10.
 su-krâtu, highly wise, I, 12, 1; 128, 4; III, 1, 22; IV, 4, 11; V, 11, 2; 20, 4; 25, 9;—full of good-will, I, 141, 11; 144, 7; III, 3, 7.
 sukratu-yâ, high wisdom, I, 31, 3.
 su-kshîtî, with fine dwellings, V, 6, 8.
 su-kshetriyâ, desire for rich fields, I, 97, 2.
 su-khâ, easy-going, V, 5, 3.
 sukhâ-tama, easy-moving: sukhâ-tame (râthe), I, 13, 4.
 su-gâ, a good path, I, 94, 9;—going well, I, 94, 11.
 sugâtu-yâ, desire for a free path, I, 97, 2.
 su-gârhapatyâ, with a good household, V, 4, 2¹.
 su-ândrâ, resplendent, I, 74, 6; IV, 2, 19; V, 6, 5; 9.

su-keîunâ, through thy kindness, I, 79, 9¹; benignantly, I, 127, 11.
 sú-gâta, well born, I, 65, 4; 72, 3¹; II, 1, 15; 2, 11; 6, 2; III, 15, 2; 23, 3; V, 6, 2; 21, 2.
 su-gihvâ, with beautiful tongue(s), I, 13, 8; 142, 4.
 su-gûrni, glowing, IV, 6, 3.
 su-gyôti, rich in light, III, 20, 1.
 sutâ, the pressed (Soma), III, 12, 1; 2.
 sutâ-vat, rich in pressed (Soma), III, 25, 4.
 sutâ-soma, having pressed Soma, I, 44, 8; 45, 8; 142, 1; IV, 2, 13.
 su-tûka, quick, I, 149, 5.
 su-dâmsas, endowed with wonderful power, II, 2, 3.
 su-dâksha, highly dexterous, II, 9, 1; III, 4, 9; 23, 2; V, 11, 1.
 sudârja-tara, more visible, I, 127, 5².
 su-dânu, giving good rain, I, 44, 14; 45, 10; 141, 9; III, 26, 1; 5; 29, 7;—blessed with good rain, IV, 4, 7.
 su-dâvan, good giver, I, 76, 3.
 su-dîna, auspicious day, IV, 4, 6; 7.
 sudîna-tvâ, auspiciousness of days, III, 8, 5; sudîna-tvé âhnâm, III, 23, 4.
 su-dîditi, with fine splendour, III, 9, 1².
 su-dîti, resplendent, III, 2, 13; 17, 4; 27, 10; V, 25, 2;—glorious splendour, V, 8, 4. sudûgha, flowing with plenty, II, 3, 6; su-dûghâb usrâb, IV, 1, 13.
 su-drîs, full of beauty, III, 17, 4; V, 3, 4¹.
 su-drîsika, beautiful to behold, V, 4, 2.
 sudrîsika-rûpa, with his shape beautiful to behold, IV, 5, 15.
 su-devâ, a friend of the gods, I, 74, 5.
 su-dôgha, rich in milk, III, 15, 6.
 su-dyût, brilliant, I, 140, 1; 143, 3.
 su-dyumnâ, splendid, III, 19, 2.
 su-dyôtman, brilliant, I, 141, 12; II, 4, 1.
 su-dravînas, possessor of beautiful wealth, I, 94, 15.
 sú-dhita, well-composed (prayer), I, 140, 11;—blissful gift, III, 11, 8;—well-preserved, III, 23, 1; lying safe, III, 29, 2;—well-ordered, IV, 2, 10;—well-placed,

- IV, 6, 3; well-established, IV, 6, 7³; V, 3, 2.
 su-dhī, wise, IV, 2, 14.
 su-dhūr, well-harnessed: rāyāb su-dhūrāb, I, 73, 10¹; hārī īti su-dhūrā, well-yoked, V, 27, 2.
 sunib-māth, skilful rubbing, III, 29, 12.
 su-nidhā, skilful establishing, III, 29, 12.
 su-nīthā, the best leader, II, 8, 2; III, 8, 8.
 su-pātha, good path, I, 189, 1.
 su-parā, beautifully-winged, I, 79, 2.
 su-pānī, with graceful hands, I, 71, 9².
 su-putrā, with noble sons, III, 4, 11.
 sú-pūta, well-clarified, V, 12, 1.
 su-péśas, wearing beautiful ornaments, I, 13, 7; 142, 7¹; 188, 6.
 supra-ayanā, easily passable, II, 3, 5; V, 5, 5.
 supra-avyā, ready, I, 60, 1.
 su-prātika, whose face is beautiful, I, 94, 7; 143, 3; III, 29, 5; V, 5, 6.
 su-prātūrti, gloriously advancing, III, 9, 1.
 su-prānīti, a good guide, I, 73, 1; III, 1, 16; 15, 4; IV, 2, 13.
 su-prayās, receiver of good offerings, II, 2, 1; 4, 1.
 su-bāndhu, well-allied, III, 1, 3.
 su-barhīs, possessor of good sacrificial grass, I, 74, 5.
 su-bhāga, blessed, I, 36, 6; III, 1, 4; 13; 9, 1²; 16, 6; 18, 5; IV, 1, 6; 4, 7; V, 8, 3.
 su-bhāra, rich in gain, II, 3, 4; 9.
 sú-bhrīta, well kept, II, 1, 12.
 sú-makha, martial, IV, 3, 7; 14¹.
 su-māt, together, I, 142, 7²;—see sumāt-yūtha.
 su-matī, favour, I, 31, 18, &c.; III, 4, 1²; V, 27, 3¹; kindness: su-matī, IV, 1, 2².
 sumāt-yūtha, together with the herd: sumāt-yūtham (conj. for sumāt yūthām), V, 2, 4¹.
 sumāt-ratha, on his chariot, III, 3, 9.
 su-mānas, gracious, kind-hearted, I, 36, 2, &c.;—joyous, IV, 4, 9.
 su-mānman, rich in good thoughts, III, 2, 12.
 su-mahas, very great, IV, 11, 2.
 sú-miti, skilful erection, III, 8, 3.
 su-mrīṣikā, merciful, IV, 1, 20; 3, 3.
 su-méka, well-established, I, 146, 3¹; III, 6, 10²; 15, 5³; IV, 6, 3.
 su-medhās, wise, II, 3, 1; III, 15, 5.
 sumná, blessing, III, 2, 5; 3, 3;—favour, grace, V, 3, 10; 24, 4;—pleasant, III, 14, 4.
 sumna-yú, desirous of favour, I, 79, 10; III, 27, 1; V, 8, 7.
 su-yág, excellent sacrificer, V, 8, 3.
 su-yagñā, skilled in sacrifice, III, 17, 1.
 su-yāma, well-manageable, III, 7, 3; (4²); V, 28, 3¹.
 su-yāvasa, good pasture: suyāvasā-iva, conj. for svāsya-iva, II, 4, 4¹.
 su-yāmā, easily directing, III, 7, 9¹.
 su-yúg, well-yoked, IV, 14, 3.
 su-rāna, joyous, III, 3, 9; 29, 14.
 su-rātha, with good chariot: su-rāthasya (conj. su-ratha asya), III, 14, 7¹;—IV, 2, 4;—rich in chariots, IV, 4, 8. surabhī, sweet-smelling, V, 1, 6.
 su-rādhas, rich in wealth, IV, 2, 4; 5, 4.
 su-rukma, adorned with gold, I, 188, 6.
 su-rút, with beautiful splendour, II, 2, 4; III, 2, 5; 7, 5; 15, 6; IV, 2, 17.
 su-rétas, fertile, III, 1, 16.
 su-várkas, full of fine splendour, I, 95, 1.
 su-vák, adorned with fine speech, III, 1, 19;—well-spoken, III, 7, 10.
 su-vākas, fine-voiced, I, 188, 7.
 su-vāsas, well-clothed, III, 8, 4; IV, 3, 2.
 suvitā, welfare, I, 141, 12; 189, 3; II, 2, 6; III, 2, 13; IV, 14, 3; V, 11, 1.
 su-vidātra, bounteous, II, 1, 8; 9, 6.
 su-vīra, rich in heroes, in valiant men, I, 31, 10; II, 1, 16; 3, 4; 5; 4, 9; III, 29, 9;—giving valiant offspring, III, 8, 2.
 su-vīrya, abundance in heroes, bliss of valiant offspring, I, 36, 6; 17, &c.; I, 127, 11¹;—host of heroes, III, 16, 4.
 su-vrīktī, praised with beautiful praise, II, 4, 1¹;—beautiful prayer, or praise, III, 3, 9; V, 25, 3¹.
 su-véda, easily to be found, IV, 7, 6.

su-jāmsa, kind-spoken, I, 44, 6.
 su-jārman, well-protecting, III, 15, 1; V, 8, 2.
 su-ṣastī, best praise, III, 26, 6.
 su-ṣipra, strong-jawed, V, 22, 4².
 sū-ṣiṣvi, fine child, I, 65, 4.
 su-ṣéva, propitious, I, 27, 2; kind, gracious, II, 1, 9; III, 29, 5; IV, 4, 12; V, 15, 1.
 su-śoka, with pure splendour, I, 70, 1.
 su-śrī, in great beauty, III, 3, 5.
 sū-samṣita, well-sharpened, V, 19, 5.
 su-sanitri, best gainer, III, 18, 5.
 su-samdris, beautiful to behold, I, 143, 3.
 sū-samidha, well-kindled, I, 13, 1; V, 5, 1.
 su-samīdh, good fuel, V, 8, 7.
 su-sū, well-bearing, V, 7, 8.
 sū-sūta, well-born, II, 10, 3.
 sū-stuta, highly praised, V, 27, 2.
 su-stutī, rich in perfect praise, III, 19, 3.
 su-hāva, easy to invoke, readily hearing (our) call, I, 58, 6; III, 6, 8; 15, 1; IV, 1, 5.
 su-havis, offering good oblations, IV, 2, 4.
 su-havyā, giver of good oblations, I, 74, 5.
 su-hiranyā, rich in gold, IV, 4, 10.
 sū, to give birth: sūvāte īti, they give birth, V, 1, 4; —āsūta, V, 2, 2; 7, 8.
 sū, a progenitor, I, 146, 5.
 sūktā, see su-uktā.
 sūd, to further: sūdāyat, I, 71, 8; sūsūdab, I, 73, 8; —to shape: āsūdayanta, I, 72, 3; —to make ready: susūdati, I, 142, 11²; V, 5, 2; —sūdayāti, III, 4, 10; —sūdaya, accomplish, IV, 4, 14; —sūdayāti prā, may he make ready, II, 3, 10.
 sūnū, son, I, 1, 9, &c.; I, 59, 4¹; III, 1, 12²; sūno īti sahasab, I, 58, 8; 127, 1; III, 1, 8; 11, 4; nityab sūnūb, I, 66, 1.
 sūnu-māt, rich in sons, III, 24, 5.
 sūn-rītā-vat, rich in loveliness, I, 59, 7.
 sūra, Sun, I, 71, 9; 141, 13; 149, 3; III, 15, 2.
 sūrī, the rich man, liberal lord or patron, I, 31, 7, &c.; I, 73, 5¹; 141, 8².
 sūrya, the sun, or Sun, I, 59, 3; 98,

1; 146, 4⁴; III, 14, 4; IV, 1, 17; 13, 1-4; 14, 2; V, 1, 4; 4, 4; kāranam sūryasya, III, 5, 5; rokanē sūryasya, III, 22, 3; divī sūryam-iva agāram, V, 27, 6.
sri, to run: sasrānāb, I, 149, 2; sasrivāmsam-iva, III, 9, 5; —prā sarsrāte īti, they go forth, III, 7, 1; prā sirsrate, they stream forward, V, 1, 1; pra-sārsrānasya, advancing, V, 12, 6; —vī sasruḥ, they have broken through with their floods, I, 73, 6.
srig, to let loose: sēnā-iva srishṭā, like an army that is sent forward, I, 66, 7; 143, 5¹; srigāt didyūm asmai, he shot an arrow at him, I, 71, 5; srishṭāb, I, 72, 10; —āva sriga, let go, I, 13, 11; ava-srigān, letting go (the sacrificial food to the gods), I, 142, 11; II, 3, 10; mā āva srigab, do not deliver, I, 189, 5; —ūpa sriga, yield up, I, 188, 10; upa-srigānti, they pour out, II, 1, 16; —vī srigā, emit, I, 36, 9; —sām nab sriga, let us be united, I, 31, 18; III, 16, 6.
Srīṅgaya, son of Devavāta, IV, 15, 4¹.
srīni, sickle: srīnyā, I, 58, 4².
sriprā, mighty (?), III, 18, 5¹.
sriprā-dānu, bestower of mighty rain (?), I, 96, 3².
sēnā, army, I, 66, 7; sēnā-iva srishṭā, I, 143, 5¹.
sōtri, presser (of Soma), IV, 3, 3.
sōma, Soma (juice), I, 44, 14; 45, 10; 99, 1¹; III, 12, 3; 22, 1; 29, 16; sōmasya tavāsam, III, 1, 1¹; sōmāb, IV, 14, 4; V, 27, 5¹; —Soma, the god, I, 65, 10; II, 8, 6.
sōma-āhuta, fed with Soma, I, 94, 14.
Sōmaka, Sahadeva's son, IV, 15, 9.
sōma-pati, lord of Soma (Indra), I, 76, 3.
sōma-piti, drinking of Soma: sōma-pitaye, I, 44, 9. soma-péya, drink of Soma, I, 45, 9; III, 25, 4.
somyā, one who offers Soma, I, 31, 16.
saūbhaga, prosperity, delight, happiness, I, 36, 17; III, 8, 2; 3; 11; 15, 4; 16, 1; V, 28, 3.

- saubhaga-tvá, happiness, I, 94, 16.
 saumanasá, graciousness, I, 76, 2 ;
 kindness, III, 1, 21.
 skambhá, pillar, IV, 13, 5.
 stan, to thunder : stanáyan, I, 58, 2 ;
 140, 5 ; stanáyanti abhrá, I, 79,
 2 ; prá stanayanti, IV, 10, 4.
 stabhu-yámāna, firmly fixed, III, 7, 4.
 sta(m)bh, to uphold : tastāmbha, I, 67, 5 ;—út astambhī, he has upheld, III, 5, 10 ;—úpa stabhā-yat, he supports, IV, 5, 1 ; stabhāyat úpa dyām, he has reared ... up to the sky, IV, 6, 2. stāyam, stealthily : úpa stāyam karati, conj., (I, 145, 4³).
 stu, to praise : stāvānab, praised, I,
 12, 11 ; 31, 8, &c.
 stubh : pra-stubhānāb, incited by shouting, IV, 3, 12.
 stúbhvan, uttering (sacred) shouts,
 I, 66, 4.
 stri, to strew : strimīta, I, 13, 5 ;
 strinānāsab barhīb, I, 142, 5.
 strī, star : pipēra nākam strībhib, I,
 68, 10 ; dyaúb ná strī-bhib, II,
 2, 5 ; IV, 7, 3.
 stená, thief, V, 3, 11.
 stoká, drop, III, 21, 1-5.
 stotrí, praiser, I, 58, 8 ; II, 1, 16 ;
 III, 5, 2.
 stóma, praise, song of praise, I, 12, 12, &c. ; stómaib (conj. stó-mam), IV, 10, 1⁸.
 stómavāhas, (I, 127, 8¹).
 sthā, to stand : ūrdhvāb tīshība, I, 36, 13 ;—abhī tīshība, set thy foot on, V, 28, 3 ;—ā tasthūb, they have assumed, I, 72, 9² ;—
 úpa sthāt, he has approached,
 I, 68, 1 ; see upa-sthāyam ;—
 prá-sthītā, ready, III, 4, 4³ ;—
 abhī prá asthāt, he gains advantage, I, 74, 8¹ ;—with ví, to spread : ví tīshībate, I, 58, 4 ;
 ví tasthe, I, 72, 9 ; ví ásthāt, I, 65, 8 ; 141, 7 ; ví ásthiran, they are scattered, I, 94, 11 ; ví tīshībase, V, 8, 7.
 sthātú, what stands : sthātúb karátham, what is movable and immovable, I, 58, 5² ; 68, 1² ; 70, 7² ; (72, 6²).
 sthātri, that which stands : sthātām karáthām, I, 70, 3 ; what remains steadfast : sthāt-rñ, I,
 72, 6².
 sthirá, solid : sthirá kit ánnā, IV,
 7, 10.
 sthūnā, a column : sthūnā-iva upa-mīt, I, 59, 1⁸.
 snīhiti ? I, 74, 2².
 snēhiti, (I, 74, 2²).
 spár, spy, IV, 4, 3 ;—observer :
 spājam vísvasya gágatab, IV, 13, 3.
 spārhá, desirable, lovely, I, 31, 14 ;
 II, 1, 12 ; IV, 1, 6 ; 7 ; 12.
 spri : aspar íty aspaḥ, thou hast freed, V, 15, 5 ;—áva spridhi, protect, V, 3, 9.
 spris, to touch : sprisanti, I, 36, 3.
 sprīhayát-vara, having the appearance of one eagerly striving, II, 10, 5.
 sphātī, increase, I, 188, 9.
 sphur, to sparkle : práti sphura, IV, 3, 14.
 smát-ūdhni, with full udders, I, 73, 6.
 smi, to smile, laugh : smāyamānābhib,
 I, 79, 2⁴ ; smāyamānab (dyaúb),
 II, 4, 6³ ; smayete íti, III, 4, 6.
 syū : syūtām, well-stitched, I, 31, 15.
 syona-krít, making comfortable, I, 31, 15.
 syona-śī, comfortably resting, I,
 73, 1².
 sravát, river : sravátasaptá yāhvīb,
 I, 71, 7.
 sravátha, streaming, III, 1, 7.
 sridh : ásrēdhantaḥ, without fail,
 III, 29, 9.
 srídth, failure, I, 36, 7 ; III, 9, 4 ; 10, 7.
 sru, to flow : srúvat (conj. for srúvat), it melts away, I, 127, 3⁴.
 srúk, sacrificial ladle, I, 144, 1 ; V, 14, 3 ; 21, 2.
 srótas, stream, I, 95, 10¹.
 svá : tanvāb krinvata svāb, I, 72, 5² ;
 svāsyā-iva, conj. suyávasā-iva,
 II, 4, 4¹.
 svab-drīś, of sun-like aspect, I, 44,
 9 ; III, 2, 14 ; V, 26, 2.
 svāb-nara, the solar hero, II, 2, 1 ;—
 realm of the Sun, V, 18, 4.
 svāb-vat, together with the sun, I,
 59, 4 ; V, 2, 11.
 svab-víd, finding the sun, I, 96, 4 ;
 III, 3, 5 ; 10 ; 26, 1.

svá-gúrta, delightful by their own nature, I, 140, 13.
 svá-geṇya, noble by his own nature, V, 7, 5.
 svá-tavat, self-strong, IV, 2, 6.
 svad, to taste : svadante, II, 1, 14 ; asvadayat, II, 4, 7 ;—to make relishable, savoury : sisvadat, I, 188, 10 ; svada, III, 14, 7.
 svá-dharman, following his own ordinances, III, 21, 2.
 svadhā, inherent power : svadhābhiḥ, by one's self, by the power of his own nature, I, 95, 4 ; III, 26, 8 ; svadhāyā, according to their wont, II, 3, 8 ; III, 4, 7 ; by himself, III, 17, 5 ; by his own power, IV, 13, 5 ;—svadhāb adhayat, he drank the draughts, I, 144, 2^a. svadhā-vat, self-dependent, I, 36, 12 ; 144, 7 ; 147, 2 ; III, 20, 3 ; IV, 5, 2 ; 10, 6 ; 12, 3 ; V, 3, 2 ; 5 ; moving according to one's wont, I, 95, 1^a ; moving by his own strength, I, 95, 4.
 svá-dhiti, axe, III, 2, 10 ; 8, 6 ; 11 ; V, 7, 8¹.
 svan, to resound : svāñt, II, 4, 6.
 svanā, noise, I, 94, 11.
 sva-patyā, a man's own dominion : sva-patyāni (conj. for su-apatyāni), I, 72, 9^a. svāyasa-b-tara, highly brilliant by oneself, V, 17, 2¹, 2.
 svá-yasa, endowed with his own splendour, I, 95, 2 ; 5 ; 9.
 sva-yú, free, II, 4, 7.
 svár, sun, or Sun : sūrab ná sam-drík, I, 66, 1 ; svāb drísike, I, 66, 10^a ; 69, 10 ; svāb (loc.), I, 70, 8¹ ; 9¹ ; svāb vividub, I, 71, 2 ; svāb ná, I, 148, 1 ; II, 2, 7 ; 8 ; 10 ; 8, 4 ; svāb mahát, III, 2, 7 ; sūré, IV, 3, 8 ; āvib svāb abhavat, IV, 3, 11^a ; sūrab várnena, IV, 5, 13 ; svāb ná gyótib, IV, 10, 3¹ ; āvindat gāb apāb svāb, V, 14, 4¹.
 sva-rāg, king, I, 36, 7.
 sva-rāgya, royalty, II, 8, 5².
 sváru, sacrificial post, III, 8, 6¹ ; 9 ; 10 ; IV, 6, 3.
 svarṇri, sun-hero : svarṇab (?), (I, 70, 9¹).
 svārtha, see su-ārtha.

svásara, fold, II, 2, 2.
 svásri, sister, I, 65, 7 ; II, 5, 6¹ ; svásarab, I, 71, 1^a ; tisráb, II, 5, 5¹ ; dára, III, 29, 13² ; dvib páñka, IV, 6, 8¹ ; apási svásrínām, III, 1, 3^a ; 11.
 svastí, happiness, welfare, I, 1, 9, &c. ; svastí-bhiḥ, safely, I, 189, 2 ;—with welfare, happily, II, 9, 6 ; IV, 11, 6 ; V, 4, 11.
 svādana, sweetener, V, 7, 6.
 svādu-kshādman, having sweet food, I, 31, 15.
 svādman, sweetness, I, 69, 3¹.
 svāná, roaring, V, 2, 10 ; 25, 8 ;—thundering, V, 10, 5. svāñin, tumultuous, III, 26, 5.
 svāhā, the word Svāhā, I, 13, 12 ; III, 4, 11 ; V, 5, 11 ; svāhā havyām kartana, pronounce the Svāhā over the offering, I, 142, 12.
 svāhā-kṛta, (offerings) over which the Svāhā has been pronounced, I, 142, 13 ; II, 3, 11.
 svāhā-kṛti, pronouncing Svāhā, I, 188, 11.
 svid, to sweat : sisvidānāb, IV, 2, 6.
 svēda, sweat, V, 7, 5.
 hamsā, swan, I, 65, 9 ; III, 8, 9.
 han, to kill, slay : hāmsi, I, 31, 6 ; gīghāmsatab, I, 36, 15 ; āhan (without an object), I, 69, 8¹ ;—vī gahi, smite, I, 36, 16.
 har : hāryamāna, longed for, III, 6, 4 ;—prāti harya, accept graciously, I, 144, 7 ; prāti hāryāb, thou acceptest, V, 2, 11.
 hāri, golden, I, 95, 1 ;—bay horse, fallow steed : hāri-bhyām, I, 76, 3 ; IV, 15, 7¹ ; hāri ſti, IV, 15, 8 ; V, 27, 2.
 hāri-keśa, whose hair is golden, III, 2, 13.
 harít, pl., the golden horses, IV, 6, 9¹ ; haritab saptā yāhvib, the seven young fallow mares, IV, 13, 3.
 hāri-vrata, whose every law is golden, III, 3, 5¹.
 haryatā, delightful, III, 5, 3.
 hāva, invocation, I, 45, 3.
 havib-āda, eating the oblation, V, 1, 11 ; 4, 4.
 havib-kṛt, preparer of the sacrificial food, I, 13, 3.

II. LIST OF THE MORE IMPORTANT PASSAGES QUOTED IN THE NOTES.

RIG-VEDA.

	PAGE		PAGE
I, 1, 8	260	I, 61, 4.	110
6, 10.	312	62, 5.	106
10, 2.	262	62, 9.	18
11, 5.	400	64, 1.	203
15, 12	260, 306	64, 5.	105
19, 3.	192	64, 9.	90, 269
22, 10	122, 156	64, 14	19
24, 9.	251	66, 2.	243
26, 10	86	66, 4.	380
27, 10	327	69, 2.	65
29, 4.	71	69, 5.	380
30, 7.	257	70, 7.	76
31, 8.	224	70, 10	78
32, 14	73	71, 1.	294
33, 4.	162	71, 3.	65
33, 14	408	71, 4.	174
34, 2.	306	72	66
34, 3.	69	72, 5.	66
34, 6.	28, 272	72, 8.	66
34, 9.	269	76, 5.	319
34, 10	112	80, 4.	177
37, 3.	305	81, 5.	257
37, 12	172	84, 18	3
38, 13	195	88, 3.	84
42, 7.	257	89, 1.	134
44, 4.	211	89, 10	59
47, 1.	44	92, 3.	359
48, 9.	359	92, 8.	101
48, 10	40	95, 1.	168
51, 3.	243	95, 3.	27
51, 8.	183	95, 9.	150
52, 1.	286	95, 10	63
52, 6.	312	96, 3.	101
53, 7.	63	96, 5.	168
60, 1.	231	100, 7.	84
61, 3.	155, 203	100, 16	380

	PAGE		PAGE
I, 102, 1	122	I, 164, 6	62
102, 8	257	164, 35	66
104, 4	324	164, 51	117, 144, 250
105, 2	78	166, 2	58
105, 12	152, 162	166, 11	294
105, 14	156	166, 12	84
109, 3	121, 122	167, 4	274
109, 4	150	168, 6	312
111, 1	25	169, 5	265
112, 15	35	171, 1	112
113, 2	124	171, 2	53
113, 3	168	171, 6	112
113, 15	359	173, 1	177
115, 1	338	173, 6	184
116, 1	7	179, 1	81
116, 4	312	184, 2	155
116, 5	134	184, 4	111
116, 6	59	185, 2	58
118, 9	59	186, 4	69
119, 3	62	186, 10	311
119, 10	59	188, 4	224
120, 1	79	188, 5	239
120, 2	46	II, 1, 1	71
122, 14	71	1, 2	111
123, 9	250	1, 4	27
127, 5	192	1, 11	156
128, 1	327	1, 12	91
129, 5	98, 133	2, 2	76
129, 11	133	2, 3	312
130, 3	242	2, 6	319
130, 4	132	2, 8	319
130, 5	162	3, 9	156
130, 6	286, 370	3, 11	143, 238
132, 5	223	4, 1	90
134, 1	144	5, 1	91, 381
134, 5	58	5, 2	168
135, 4	133	5, 5	76
138, 3	310	5, 7	71
139, 1	223	11, 12	71
139, 2	35	14, 2	132
139, 4	269	14, 11	216
142, 7	239	16, 1	214
143, 5	97	16, 3	402
143, 7	184	17, 4	315
144, 1	245	17, 7	145
146, 1	207	18, 1	191
147, 3	334	19, 7	111
148, 1	78	24, 1	210
151, 1	152	24, 8	347
151, 4	224	24, 15	398
152, 6	321	26, 3	272
158, 5	368	34, 4	295
159, 5	107	35, 2	53
163, 4; 5	365	36, 2	294
164, 3	314	37, 6	25

	PAGE		PAGE
II, 39, I	210	III, 53, 16	380
40, 4	156	54, 3	48
41, 5	246	54, 19	113
III, 1, 6	19	54, 22	376
2, I	122	55, 3	223
2, 3	286	55, 4	78
2, 5	327	55, 6	25
2, 7	286	55, 11	76
2, 14	305	55, 12	226
3, 4	421	55, 21	90
4, 3	223	56, 5	312
4, 10	201	56, 7	81
5, 6	134	56, 8	312
5, 8	118	58, 7	44
6, I	161, 224	58, 9	144
6, 2	168	59, 2	65
6, 6	319	61, 3	162
6, 7	224, 272	62, 3	156
6, 9	201	IV, 1, 4	112
6, 10	269	1, 5	40
7, I	225	1, 6	383
7, 9	25	1, 9	365
8, I; 3; 6; II .	12	1, 11	106, 329
8, 10	35	1, 12	329
8, 11	12	1, 12 seq. . . .	80
10, 5	234	2, 3	246
11, 8	14	2, 5	91
12, 2	210	2, 9	274
14, 4	169	2, 15	314
15, 2	40	4, 15	210
15, 5	223	5, I	44, 50
16, 4	151	5, 7	242, 243
18, 2	214	5, 8	242
24, I	254	5, 10	145
27, I	294	5, 11	105
27, 3	91, 207	5, 13	152
27, 7	161	6, 3	255, 280
28, 4	27	6, 8	76
29, 3	29, 218	6, 9	319
29, 11	10	6, 11	27, 373
29, 13	76	7, 4	78
29, 14	260	7, 7	171, 243
30, 7	134	7, 9	48
30, 11	272	7, 10	133
30, 13	123	7, 11	295
30, 15	29	9, 6	78
31, I	323	11, 6	254
31, I-5	80	14, 2	80
31, 16	225	15, 6	118
34, 3	246	16, 4	315
38, I	286	16, 15	204
39, I	155	17, 14	106, 312
43, I	269	17, 18	298
43, 5	30	18, 4	59
49, 4	5, 41	19, 8	272

	PAGE		PAGE
IV, 19, 10	69	V, 56, 6	87
20, 4	329	57, 2	29
23, 4	105, 394	57, 5	65
23, 8	65, 77, 171	58, 6	25
23, 10	322	59, 8	25
24, 3	84	64, 2	136
29, 3	116	68, 1	234
33, 3	19	68, 3	216
33, 10	204	70, 4	330
34, 9	86	76, 1	255
35, 3	191	83, 1	105
36, 3	151	VI, 1, 2	400
37, 3	134	1, 9	26
37, 5	411	2, 8	381, 388
37, 7	390	2, 9	388
40, 2	357	3, 5	139
42, 1	65	4, 5	158
44, 2	79	5, 2	262
50, 4	243	5, 4	214
50, 11	71	6, 2	214
51, 4	243	6, 6	178
52, 2; 3	314	8, 1	27, 149
54, 3	355	8, 7	159
55, 5	210	10, 2	383
V, 1, 4	59	11, 2	98
1, 10	73	11, 4	328
3, 4	342	12, 2	328
3, 6	27	13, 1	270
4, 4	127	15, 5	305
6, 9	226	16, 2	25
7, 2	132	16, 9	98
7, 6	68	16, 15	35
11, 4	73, 78	16, 22	267
12, 2	63	16, 27	71
12, 3	105	16, 42	90
14, 3	3	16, 46	327
21, 4	243, 345	17, 15	210
25, 1	136	19, 3	123, 323
28, 1	3, 224	19, 4	400
29, 15	370	19, 10	216
30, 10	400	20, 5	93
30, 14	381	20, 11	36
31, 1	323	21, 4	97
31, 11	112	21, 12	272
34, 6	394	24, 2	190
42, 13	53	27, 7	361
42, 17	226	31, 3	69
43, 7	224	34, 1	270
44, 1	184	35, 5	184, 185
45, 2	314	37, 3	46
47, 5	226	38, 4	72
48, 4	383	39, 4	272
53, 11	295	45, 14	111
53, 16	140	46, 10	274
56, 2	411	46, 12	400

	PAGE		PAGE
VI, 47, 16 . . .	319	VII, 48, 3 . . .	71
48, 4 . . .	25	51, 3 . . .	200
48, 5 . . .	71, 189	56, 4 . . .	116
48, 21 . . .	84	56, 6 . . .	294
51, 2 . . .	27, 203, 322	56, 16 . . .	320
51, 8 . . .	251	57, 4 . . .	355
59, 8 . . .	274	58, 5 . . .	112
59, 9 . . .	107, 216	59, 2 . . .	97
61, 1 . . .	84	61, 5 . . .	116
61, 2 . . .	203	63, 2 . . .	286
61, 7 . . .	192	66, 10 . . .	205
63, 4 . . .	341	66, 11 . . .	27, 208
64, 2 . . .	359	77, 2 . . .	314
66, 1 . . .	329	77, 3 . . .	59
66, 5 . . .	112	82, 4 . . .	216
67, 10 . . .	134	82, 5 . . .	159
68, 9 . . .	95	83, 5 . . .	216
70, 1 . . .	127	83, 9 . . .	203
70, 4 . . .	3	86, 7 . . .	312
71, 6 . . .	190	87, 3 . . .	101
VII, 1, 21 . . .	272	87, 4 . . .	314
2, 3 . . .	218	90, 5 . . .	79
2, 5 . . .	239	91, 2 . . .	4
2, 6 . . .	200	91, 3 . . .	86
2, 7 . . .	11	95, 4 . . .	411
2, 8-11 . . .	239	96, 1 . . .	203
3, 3 . . .	214	97, 4 . . .	257
3, 4 . . .	345	97, 9 . . .	71, 203
3, 5 . . .	320	97, 10 . . .	216
4, 3 . . .	58	98, 2 . . .	222
7, 2 . . .	246	101, 1 . . .	105, 260
9, 3 . . .	63, 118	104, 21 . . .	132
9, 5 . . .	40	VIII, 1, 29 . . .	258
10, 5 . . .	72	5, 16 . . .	35
11, 1 . . .	50	5, 21 . . .	196
16, 9 . . .	98	5, 25 . . .	35
17, 4 . . .	210	5, 33 . . .	43
18, 2 . . .	81	6, 24 . . .	381
18, 18 . . .	84	7, 30 . . .	107
18, 25 . . .	274	8, 22 . . .	203
22, 8 . . .	46	12, 11 . . .	225
24, 5 . . .	135, 286	12, 32 . . .	161
31, 11 . . .	203	13, 1 . . .	225
32, 27 . . .	184, 185	13, 6 . . .	207
36, 1 . . .	105	13, 14 . . .	154
36, 6 . . .	226	15, 10 . . .	86
38, 8 . . .	408	17, 15 . . .	404
39, 1 . . .	238	19, 1 . . .	140
39, 3 . . .	373	19, 2 . . .	299
40, 3 . . .	18	19, 4 . . .	257
42, 1 . . .	177, 200	19, 22 . . .	212
42, 4 . . .	90	19, 31 . . .	41, 106
43, 2 . . .	238	21, 2; 9 . . .	257
43, 4 . . .	63	22, 12 . . .	174
43, 5 . . .	411	23, 23 . . .	171

	PAGE		PAGE
VIII, 23, 28 . . .	84	IX, 8, 4 . . .	162
24, 1 . . .	320	11, 5 . . .	150
24, 14 . . .	152	12, 9 . . .	380
25, 5 . . .	123	15, 8 . . .	162
26, 13 . . .	272	16, 6 . . .	353
27, 10 . . .	190	18, 4 . . .	140
31, 9 . . .	274	19, 1 . . .	216
31, 14 . . .	204	22, 3 . . .	234
32, 10 . . .	123, 278	33, 5 . . .	362
35, 19 . . .	44	38, 5 . . .	362
38, 2 . . .	265	39, 2 . . .	146
39, 1 . . .	201	40, 2 . . .	246
39, 2 . . .	71	43, 5 . . .	286
39, 9 . . .	210	47, 4 . . .	118
40, 1 . . .	133	50, 1 . . .	41
41, 3 . . .	208	53, 2 . . .	210
41, 10 . . .	62	59, 2 . . .	122
43, 2 . . .	53	62, 17 . . .	225
43, 31 . . .	258	63, 11 . . .	106
44, 19 . . .	260	64, 10 . . .	207
47, 16 . . .	406	65, 12 . . .	234
49, 2 . . .	56	66, 1 . . .	3
50, 2 . . .	56	67, 12 . . .	383
50, 8 . . .	183	68, 3 . . .	312
51, 4 . . .	242, 295	68, 8 . . .	200
52, 8 . . .	280	69, 5 . . .	264
53, 6 . . .	225	70, 3 . . .	245
59, 6 . . .	158	71, 1; 3 . . .	264
60, 3 . . .	132	71, 3 . . .	234
61, 7 . . .	210	71, 5 . . .	111
67, 3 . . .	191	71, 7 . . .	272
71, 12 . . .	255	73, 6 . . .	313
71, 15 . . .	136	74, 1 . . .	404
72, 3 . . .	243, 327, 404	74, 4 . . .	264
73, 12 . . .	190	75, 3 . . .	161, 180
74, 6 . . .	3	76, 4 . . .	65, 77
76, 9 . . .	44	81, 1 . . .	314
76, 12 . . .	212	82, 2 . . .	286
82, 3 . . .	97	83, 5 . . .	264
84, 1 . . .	195	85, 5 . . .	286
84, 4 . . .	97	85, 11 . . .	324
87, 4 . . .	156	86, 3 . . .	286
88, 1 . . .	195	86, 4 . . .	139
96, 10 . . .	203	86, 14 . . .	264
96, 13 . . .	93	87, 1 . . .	312, 365
98, 6 . . .	183	87, 2 . . .	90
101, 16 . . .	19	92, 5 . . .	183
102, 11 . . .	258	93, 1 . . .	162
102, 12 . . .	361	96, 10 . . .	93
102, 22 . . .	40	96, 20 . . .	286
103, 7 . . .	118, 171	97, 21 . . .	264
103, 8 . . .	35	97, 34 . . .	65, 77
103, 13 . . .	29	97, 48 . . .	90
IX, 5, 3 . . .	3	97, 57 . . .	162
5, 10 . . .	12	98, 1 . . .	410

	PAGE
IX, 100, 3 . . .	216
102, 1; 8 . . .	323
103, 3 . . .	225
106, 14 . . .	210
107, 18 . . .	344
111, 2 . . .	65, 77
111, 3 . . .	116, 127
X, 1, 2 . . .	78
2, 6 . . .	136
3, 2 . . .	225 seq.
3, 3 . . .	98
4, 3 . . .	162
4, 7 . . .	134
5, 1 . . .	408
6, 1 . . .	136
7, 5 . . .	171
8, 1 . . .	150
8, 2 . . .	306
9, 1 . . .	224
11, 5 . . .	196, 204
11, 6 . . .	234
12, 3 . . .	338
13, 3 . . .	242
14, 10; 11 . . .	29
15, 6 . . .	355
16, 5 . . .	225
17, 2 . . .	122
21, 1 . . .	258
21, 2 . . .	390
23, 7 . . .	80
26, 4 . . .	149
27, 4 . . .	184, 185
27, 7 . . .	402
27, 13 . . .	224
30, 6 . . .	122
31, 5 . . .	124
31, 7 . . .	272
32, 6 . . .	370
33, 2 . . .	254
33, 7 . . .	36
39, 4 . . .	19
39, 10 . . .	59
39, 14 . . .	58, 272
40, 2 . . .	100
41, 1 . . .	203
44, 1 . . .	86
44, 4 . . .	48
45, 1 . . .	189
45, 2 . . .	78
45, 10 . . .	59
46, 2 . . .	204
46, 8 . . .	171
46, 10 . . .	226
47, 6 . . .	243
47, 7 . . .	155, 245

	PAGE
X, 48, 2 . . .	384
49, 6 . . .	36
50, 1 . . .	267
52, 6 . . .	258
53, 1 . . .	200
53, 2 . . .	3, 73
53, 3 . . .	225
53, 6 . . .	43
61, 4 . . .	398
61, 7 . . .	80
61, 8 . . .	79
61, 13 . . .	323
61, 14 . . .	73
61, 21 . . .	165
63, 5 . . .	231
63, 8 . . .	251
64, 4 . . .	203
64, 11 . . .	163
64, 15 . . .	417
65 . . .	250
65, 6 . . .	250
65, 8 . . .	250
65, 10 . . .	11, 218
66, 12 . . .	224
66, 13 . . .	11
67, 1 . . .	242
70, 7 . . .	11
70, 10 . . .	12
73, 5 . . .	35
74, 3 . . .	324
76, 3 . . .	69
79, 2 . . .	270
79, 3 . . .	242, 243
79, 5 . . .	345
80, 4 . . .	78
80, 7 . . .	203
81, 1 . . .	264
82, 6 . . .	62
83, 4 . . .	414
84, 7 . . .	216
85, 18 . . .	116
85, 19 . . .	27
85, 23 . . .	424
87, 9 . . .	224
87, 18 . . .	20
87, 20 . . .	214
89, 7 . . .	132
89, 10 . . .	274
89, 11 . . .	267
90, 15 . . .	85
91, 1 . . .	191
91, 7 . . .	345
91, 10 . . .	189
92, 1 . . .	196
93, 4 . . .	106

	PAGE
X, 93, 6	177
93, 10	19
94, 7 ; 8	314
94, 11	77
96, 10	286
97, 1	144
99, 6	234
100, 8	417
101, 7	58, 380
103, 3	29
104, 8	330
106, 5	320
108, 3	90
108, 7	339
110	180
110, 3	238
110, 4	224
110, 9	238
110, 10	180
113, 8	345
114, 9	207
115, 3	98
115, 8 ; 9	35
118, 3	3

	PAGE
X, 118, 5	257
119, 13	257
121, 2	151
122, 3	380
122, 4	392
123, 4	65
125, 1	200
126, 8	355
132, 5	90
133, 3	71
138, 6	27
139, 2	90
139, 3	124
147, 1	69
148, 3	71, 421
150, 1	257
159, 5	19 seq.
164, 3	93
168, 3	306
172, 1	145
172, 1 ; 4	250
172, 2	267
176, 3	94
190, 2	27

ATHARVA-VEDA.

IV, 1, 2	195	XI, 2, 13	168
V, 4, 3	11	7, 5	295
28, 7	11	XII, 2, 45	376
VI, 43, 3	30	4, 6 ; 12 ; 26	20
VII, 90, 3	408	XV, 12, 6 ; 10	20
VIII, 2, 7	353	XIX, 39, 6-8	11

VÂGASANĒYI-SAMHITÂ.

V, 17	224	XX, 44	328
VI, 26	121	XXII, 2	171
35	121	XXIII, 57	27
IX, 4	369	XXVIII, 7	11
XVII, 54	254	XXXVIII, 20	411

MAITRÂYANÎYA-SAMHITÂ.

II, 4, 2	333
------------------	-----

TAITTIRÎYA-SAMHITÂ.

I, 3, 6, 1	12, 254	III, 1, 6, 2	369
5, 3, 2	168	IV, 1, 8, 3	156
6, 6, 1	20	2, 4, 2	286
7, 8, 2	408	V, 7, 8, 1	295
II, 4, 11, 4	20

AITAREYA-BRĀHMAṆA.

	PAGE		PAGE
II, 2	253	III, 34	80
40	267	VII, 34	361

SATAPATHA-BRĀHMAṆA.

I, 6, 3, 38	86	IV, 6, 6, 5	189
7, 4, 4	80	VII, 1, 1, 22 seq.	285
II, 1, 1, 8	306	XII, 4, 4, 2	386
4, 4, 4	361	5, 2, 15	144
III, 4, 1, 20	304 seq.	XIV, 3, 1, 9	411
4, 1, 21	306	9, 4, 3	19
9, 4, 18	121

TAITTIRĪYA-BRĀHMAṆA.

I, 2, 1, 13	305	III, 7, 3, 5	386
2, 1, 20	376

PAÑKAVIMSA-BRĀHMAṆA.

XIII, 3, 12	358	XXV, 7, 4	180
-----------------------	-----	---------------------	-----

TAITTIRĪYA-ĀRANYAKA.

IV, 11, 4	411	V, 9, 7	411
23	93

ĀSVALĀYANA-SRAUTASŪTRA.

III, 1, 8 seq.	253	IV, 8, 20	286
4, 1	284	V, 7, 3	197
12, 4	5	XII, 11, 1	102

SĀṆKHĀYANA-SRAUTASŪTRA.

V, 15, 2 seq.	253	VIII, 21	20
VIII, 16	267

KĀTYĀYANA-SRAUTASŪTRA.

IV, 8, 16	306	IX, 8, 11	189
VI, 3, 17	255	XII, 6, 10	44
IX, 8, 8 seq.	189	XXIV, 3, 42	44

SĀṆKHĀYANA-GR/HYASŪTRA.

II, 2, 1	200	V, 5, 4	5
--------------------	-----	-------------------	---

MANU.

VIII, 44	168
--------------------	-----

MAHĀBHĀRATA.

XIV, 280	224
--------------------	-----

CONSONANTS.	MISSIONARY ALPHABET.			Sanskrit.	Zand.	Pehlvi.	Persian.	Arabic.	Hebrew.	Chinese.
	I Class.	II Class.	III Class.
Gutturales.
1 Tenuis	k			क	𐬕	𐬕	𐬕	𐬕	𐬕	k
2 " aspirata	kh			ख	𐬖	𐬖	𐬖	𐬖	𐬖	kh
3 Media	g			ग	𐬗	𐬗	𐬗	𐬗	𐬗
4 " aspirata	gh			घ	𐬘	𐬘	𐬘	𐬘	𐬘
5 Gutturo-labialis	q			𐬙
6 Nasalis	h (ng)			ङ	{ 𐬚 (ng) 𐬛 (N) 𐬜 (ng/hv)
7 Spiritus asper	h			ह						h, hs
8 " lenis	,
9 " asper faucalis	'h
10 " lenis faucalis	'h
11 " asper fricatus	. . .	'h
12 " lenis fricatus	. . .	'h
Gutturales modificatae (palatales, &c.)
13 Tenuis	k			𐬠	𐬡	𐬡	𐬡	𐬡	𐬡	k
14 " aspirata	kh			𐬢	𐬣	𐬣	𐬣	𐬣	𐬣	kh
15 Media	g			𐬤	𐬥	𐬥	𐬥	𐬥	𐬥
16 " aspirata	gh			𐬦	𐬧	𐬧	𐬧	𐬧	𐬧
17 " Nasalis	𐬨			𐬩	𐬪	𐬪	𐬪	𐬪	𐬪

CONSONANTS (continued).	MISSIONARY ALPHABET.			Sanskrit.	Zend.	Pehlvi.	Persian.	Arabic.	Hebrew.	Chinese.
	I Class.	II Class.	III Class.
18 Semivocalis	y	. . .		य	𐬨 ^{init.} 𐬨𐬨𐬨	𐬨	𐬨	𐬨	י	y
19 Spiritus asper	. . .	(y)		. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .
20 " lenis	. . .	(y)		. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .
21 " asper assibilatus	. . .	s		श	𐬨𐬨𐬨	𐬨𐬨𐬨	𐬨𐬨𐬨	𐬨𐬨𐬨	. . .	z
22 " lenis assibilatus	. . .	z		. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .
Dentales.
23 Tenuis	t	. . .		त	𐬨𐬨𐬨	𐬨𐬨𐬨	𐬨𐬨𐬨	𐬨𐬨𐬨	ת	t
24 " aspirata	th	. . .		थ	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	ת	th
25 " assibilata	. . .	. . .	TH	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .
26 Media	d	. . .		द	𐬨𐬨𐬨	𐬨𐬨𐬨	𐬨𐬨𐬨	𐬨𐬨𐬨	. . .	. . .
27 " aspirata	dh	. . .		. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .
28 " assibilata	. . .	. . .	DH	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .
29 Nasalis	n	. . .		न	𐬨𐬨𐬨	𐬨𐬨𐬨	𐬨𐬨𐬨	𐬨𐬨𐬨	נ	n
30 Semivocalis	l	. . .		ल	𐬨𐬨𐬨	𐬨𐬨𐬨	𐬨𐬨𐬨	𐬨𐬨𐬨	ל	l
31 " mollis 1	. . .	l		. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .
32 " mollis 2	. . .	. . .	L	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .
33 Spiritus asper 1	s	. . .		ष	𐬨𐬨𐬨	𐬨𐬨𐬨	𐬨𐬨𐬨	𐬨𐬨𐬨	ש	s
34 " asper 2	. . .	ss	s (s)	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .
35 " lenis	z	. . .	z (z)	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	z
36 " asperimus 1	. . .	. . .	z (z)	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	zh
37 " asperimus 2	. . .	. . .	z (z)	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .

VOWELS.	MISSIONARY ALPHABET.			Sanskrit.	Zend.	Pehlvi.	Persian.	Arabic.	Hebrew.	Chinese.
	I Class.
	I Class.	II Class.	III Class.
1 Neutralis	o			...	...	...	...	...	...	...
2 Laryngo-palatalis	ē			...	...	...	...	...	...	...
3 " labialis	ō			...	...	...	...	...	...	...
4 Gutturalis brevis	a			अ	av	fin.	...	...	...	...
5 " longa	ā	(a)		आ	au	av init.	...	...	...	...
6 Palatalis brevis	i			इ	...	...	...	...	...	...
7 " longa	ī	(i)		ई	...	...	...	...	...	...
8 Dentalis brevis	ē			ए	...	...	...	...	...	...
9 " longa	ē			ऐ	...	...	...	...	...	...
10 Lingualis brevis	ri			र	...	...	...	...	...	...
11 " longa	ri			रि	...	...	...	...	...	...
12 Labialis brevis	u			उ	...	...	...	...	...	...
13 " longa	ū	(u)		ऊ	...	...	...	...	...	...
14 Gutturo-palatalis brevis	e			ए	...	...	...	...	...	...
15 " longa	é (ai)	(e)		ऐ	...	...	...	...	...	...
16 Diphthongus gutturo-palatalis	āi	(ai)		...	...	...	...	...	...	...
17 " "	ei (ēi)			...	...	...	...	...	...	...
18 " "	oi (ōu)			...	...	...	...	...	...	...
19 Gutturo-labialis brevis	o			...	...	...	...	...	...	...
20 " longa	āu	(o)		...	...	...	...	...	...	...
21 Diphthongus gutturo-labialis	eu (ēu)	(au)		...	...	...	...	...	...	...
22 " "	ou (ōu)			...	...	...	...	...	...	...
23 " "	ū			...	...	...	...	...	...	...
24 Gutturalis fracta	ī			...	...	...	...	...	...	...
25 Palatalis fracta	ū			...	...	...	...	...	...	...
26 Labialis fracta	ō			...	...	...	...	...	...	...
27 Gutturo-labialis fracta	ō			...	...	...	...	...	...	...

SACRED BOOKS OF THE EAST

TRANSLATED BY VARIOUS ORIENTAL SCHOLARS

AND EDITED BY

THE RIGHT HON. F. MAX MÜLLER.

* This Series is published with the sanction and co-operation of the Secretary of State for India in Council.*

REPORT presented to the ACADEMIE DES INSCRIPTIONS, May 11, 1883, by M. ERNEST RENAN.

‘M. Renan présente trois nouveaux volumes de la grande collection des “Livres sacrés de l’Orient” (Sacred Books of the East), que dirige à Oxford, avec une si vaste érudition et une critique si sûre, le savant associé de l’Académie des Inscriptions, M. Max Müller. . . . La première série de ce beau recueil, composée de 24 volumes, est presque achevée. M. Max Müller se propose d’en publier une seconde, dont l’intérêt historique et religieux ne sera pas moindre. M. Max Müller a su se procurer la collaboration des savans les plus éminens d’Europe et d’Asie. L’Université d’Oxford, que cette grande publication honore au plus haut degré, doit tenir à continuer dans les plus larges proportions une œuvre aussi philosophiquement conçue que savamment exécutée.’

EXTRACT from the QUARTERLY REVIEW.

‘We rejoice to notice that a second series of these translations has been announced and has actually begun to appear. The stones, at least, out of which a stately edifice may hereafter arise, are here being brought together. Prof. Max Müller has deserved well of scientific history. Not a few minds owe to his enticing words their first attraction to this branch of study. But no work of his, not even the great edition of the Rig-Veda, can compare in importance or in usefulness with this English translation of the Sacred Books of the East, which has been devised by his foresight, successfully brought so far by his persuasive and organising power, and will, we trust, by the assistance of the distinguished scholars he has gathered round him, be carried in due time to a happy completion.’

Professor E. HARDY, Inaugural Lecture in the University of Freiburg, 1887.

‘Die allgemeine vergleichende Religionswissenschaft datirt von jenem grossartigen, in seiner Art einzig dastehenden Unternehmen, zu welchem auf Anregung Max Müllers im Jahre 1874 auf dem

internationalen Orientalistencongress in London der Grundstein gelegt worden war, die Übersetzung der heiligen Bücher des Ostens’ (the Sacred Books of the East).

The Hon. ALBERT S. G. CANNING, ‘Words on Existing Religions.’

‘The recent publication of the “Sacred Books of the East” in English is surely

a great event in the annals of theological literature.’

OXFORD

AT THE CLARENDON PRESS

LONDON: HENRY FROWDE

OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS WAREHOUSE, AMEN CORNER, E.C.

FIRST SERIES.

VOL. I. The Upanishads.

Translated by F. MAX MÜLLER. Part I. The Khândogya-upanishad, The Talavakâra-upanishad, The Aitareya-âranyaka, The Kaushîtaki-brâhmana-upanishad, and The Vâgasaneyi-samhitâ-upanishad. Second Edition. 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

The Upanishads contain the philosophy of the Veda. They have become the foundation of the later Vedânta doctrines, and indirectly of Buddhism. Schopenhauer, speaking of the Upanishads, says: 'In the whole world there is no study so beneficial and so elevating as that of the Upanishads. It has been the solace of my life, it will be the solace of my death.'

[See also Vol. XV.]

VOL. II. The Sacred Laws of the Âryas,

As taught in the Schools of Âpastamba, Gautama, Vâsishtha, and Baudhâya. Translated by GEORG BÜHLER. Part I. Âpastamba and Gautama. Second Edition. 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

The Sacred Laws of the Âryas contain the original treatises on which the Laws of Manu and other lawgivers were founded.

[See also Vol. XIV.]

VOL. III. The Sacred Books of China.

The Texts of Confucianism. Translated by JAMES LEGGE. Part I. The Shû King, The Religious Portions of the Shih King, and The Hsiâo King. Second Edition. 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.

Confucius was a collector of ancient traditions, not the founder of a new religion. As he lived in the sixth and fifth centuries B. C. his works are of unique interest for the study of Ethology.

[See also Vols. XVI, XXVII, XXVIII, XXXIX, and XL.]

VOL. IV. The Zend-Avesta.

Translated by JAMES DARMESTETER. Part I. The Vendîdâd. Second Edition. 8vo, cloth, 14s.

The Zend-Avesta contains the relics of what was the religion of Cyrus, Darius, and Xerxes, and, but for the battle of Marathon, might have become the religion of Europe. It forms to the present day the sacred book of the Parsis, the so-called fire-worshippers.

[See also Vols. XXIII and XXXI.]

VOL. V. Pahlavi Texts.

Translated by E. W. WEST. Part I. The Bundahis, Bahman Yast, and Shâyast lâ-shâyast. 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.

The Pahlavi Texts comprise the theological literature of the revival of Zoroaster's religion, beginning with the Sassanian dynasty. They are important for a study of Gnosticism.

[See also Vols. XVIII, XXIV, XXXVII, and XLVII.]

VOLS. VI AND IX. The Qur'ân.

Parts I and II. Translated by E. H. PALMER. Second Edition. 8vo, cloth, 21s.

This translation, carried out according to his own peculiar views of the origin of the Qur'ân, was the last great work of E. H. Palmer, before he was murdered in Egypt.

VOL. VII. The Institutes of Vishnu.

Translated by JULIUS JOLLY. 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

A collection of legal aphorisms, closely connected with one of the oldest Vedic schools, the Kathas, but considerably added to in later time. Of importance for a critical study of the Laws of Manu.

VOL. VIII. The Bhagavadgîtâ, with The Sanatsugâtîya, and The Anugîtâ.

Translated by KÂSHINÂTH TRIMBAK TELANG. Second Edition. 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

The earliest philosophical and religious poem of India. It has been paraphrased in Arnold's 'Song Celestial.'

VOL. X. The Dhammapada,

Translated from Pâli by F. MAX MÜLLER; and

The Sutta-Nipâta,

Translated from Pâli by V. FAUSBÖLL; being Canonical Books of the Buddhists. Second Edition. 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

The Dhammapada contains the quintessence of Buddhist morality. The Sutta-Nipâta gives the authentic teaching of Buddha on some of the fundamental principles of religion.

VOL. XI. Buddhist Suttas.

Translated from Pāli by T. W. RHYS DAVIDS. 1. The Mahā-parinibbāna Suttanta; 2. The Dhamma-kakka-ppavattana Sutta. 3. The Tevigga Suttanta; 4. The Ākaṅkheyya Sutta; 5. The Ketokhila Sutta; 6. The Mahā-sudassana Suttanta; 7. The Sabbāsava Sutta. 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

A collection of the most important religious, moral, and philosophical discourses taken from the sacred canon of the Buddhists.

VOL. XII. The Satapatha-Brāhmaṇa, according to the Text of the Mādhyandina School.

Translated by JULIUS EGGELING. Part I. Books I and II. 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.

A minute account of the sacrificial ceremonies of the Vedic age. It contains the earliest account of the Deluge in India.

[See also Vols. XXVI, XLI, XLIII, and XLIV.]

VOL. XIII. Vinaya Texts.

Translated from the Pāli by T. W. RHYS DAVIDS and HERMANN OLDENBERG. Part I. The Pātimokkha. The Mahāvagga, I-IV. 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

The Vinaya Texts give for the first time a translation of the moral code of the Buddhist religion as settled in the third century B. C.

[See also Vols. XVII and XX.]

VOL. XIV. The Sacred Laws of the Āryas,

As taught in the Schools of Āpastamba, Gautama, Vāsishṭha, and Baudhāyana. Translated by GEORG BÜHLER. Part II. Vāsishṭha and Baudhāyana. 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

VOL. XV. The Upanishads.

Translated by F. MAX MÜLLER. Part II. The Kaṭha-upanishad, The Mundaka-upanishad, The Taittirīyaka-upanishad, The Brihadāraṇyaka-upanishad, The Svetāsvatara-upanishad, The Prasṇa-upanishad, and The Maitrāyana-brāhmaṇa-upanishad. Second Edition. 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

VOL. XVI. The Sacred Books of China.

The Texts of Confucianism. Translated by JAMES LEGGE. Part II. The Yî King. 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

[See also Vols. XXVII, XXVIII.]

VOL. XVII. Vinaya Texts.

Translated from the Pāli by T. W. RHYS DAVIDS and HERMANN OLDENBERG. Part II. The Mahāvagga, V-X. The Kullavagga, I-III. 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

VOL. XVIII. Pahlavi Texts.

Translated by E. W. WEST. Part II. The Dādīstān-ī Dīnīk and The Epistles of Mānūskīhar. 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.

VOL. XIX. The Fo-sho-hing-tsan-king.

A Life of Buddha by Asvaghosha Bodhisattva, translated from Sanskrit into Chinese by Dharmaraksha, A.D. 420, and from Chinese into English by SAMUEL BEAL. 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

This life of Buddha was translated from Sanskrit into Chinese, A.D. 420. It contains many legends, some of which show a certain similarity to the Evangelium infantiae, &c.

VOL. XX. Vinaya Texts.

Translated from the Pāli by T. W. RHYS DAVIDS and HERMANN OLDENBERG. Part III. The Kullavagga, IV–XII. 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

VOL. XXI. The Saddharma-puṇḍarīka ; or, The Lotus of the True Law.

Translated by H. KERN. 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.

'The Lotus of the True Law,' a canonical book of the Northern Buddhists, translated from Sanskrit. There is a Chinese translation of this book which was finished as early as the year 286 A.D.

VOL. XXII. Gaina-Sūtras.

Translated from Prākṛit by HERMANN JACOBI. Part I. The Ākāraṅga-Sūtra and The Kalpa-Sūtra. 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

The religion of the Gainas was founded by a contemporary of Buddha. It still counts numerous adherents in India, while there are no Buddhists left in India proper.

[See Vol. XLV.]

VOL. XXIII. The Zend-Avesta.

Translated by JAMES DARMESTER. Part II. The Sīrōzahs, Yasts, and Nyāyis. 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

VOL. XXIV. Pahlavi Texts.

Translated by E. W. WEST. Part III. Dīnā-ī Maīnōg-Khirad, Sikand-gūmānīk Vigār, and Sad Dar. 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

SECOND SERIES.

VOL. XXV. Manu.

Translated by GEORG BÜHLER. 8vo, cloth, 21s.

This translation is founded on that of Sir William Jones, which has been carefully revised and corrected with the help of seven native Commentaries. An Appendix contains all the quotations from Manu which are found in the Hindu Law-books, translated for the use of the Law Courts in India. Another Appendix gives a synopsis of parallel passages from the six Dharma-sūtras, the other Smṛitis, the Upanishads, the Mahābhārata, &c.

VOL. XXVI. The Satapatha-Brāhmaṇa.

Translated by JULIUS EGGELING. Part II. Books III and IV. 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.

VOLS. XXVII AND XXVIII. The Sacred Books of China.

The Texts of Confucianism. Translated by JAMES LEGGE. Parts III and IV. The Lǐ Kǐ, or Collection of Treatises on the Rules of Propriety, or Ceremonial Usages. 8vo, cloth, 25s.

VOL. XXIX. The Gṛihya-Sūtras, Rules of Vedic Domestic Ceremonies.

Part I. Sāṅkhāyana, Âsvalāyana, Pâraskara, Khâdira. Translated by HERMANN OLDENBERG. 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.

VOL. XXX. The Gṛihya-Sūtras, Rules of Vedic Domestic Ceremonies.

Part II. Gobhila, Hiranyakesin, Âpastamba. Translated by HERMANN OLDENBERG. Âpastamba, Yagña-paribhāṣā-sūtras. Translated by F. MAX MÜLLER. 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.

These rules of Domestic Ceremonies describe the home life of the ancient Âryas with a completeness and accuracy unmatched in any other literature. Some of these rules have been incorporated in the ancient Law-books.

VOL. XXXI. The Zend-Avesta.

Part III. The Yasna, Visparad, Âfrinagân, Gâhs, and Miscellaneous Fragments. Translated by L. H. MILLS. 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.

VOL. XXXII. Vedic Hymns.

Translated by F. MAX MÜLLER. Part I. 8vo, cloth, 18s. 6d.
[See also Vol. XLVI.]

VOL. XXXIII. The Minor Law-books.

Translated by JULIUS JOLLY. Part I. Nârada, Brîhaspati. 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

VOL. XXXIV. The Vedânta-Sûtras, with the Commentary by Saṅkarâcârya. Part I.

Translated by G. THIBAUT. 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.

[See also Vol. XXXVIII.]

VOLS. XXXV AND XXXVI. The Questions of King Milinda.

Translated from the Pâli by T. W. RHYS DAVIDS.

Part I. 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d. Part II. 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.

VOL. XXXVII. Pahlavi Texts.

Translated by E. W. WEST. Part IV. The Contents of the Nasks, as stated in the Eighth and Ninth Books of the Dinkard. 15s.

VOL. XXXVIII. The Vedânta-Sûtras. Part II. 8vo, cloth, with full Index to both Parts, 12s. 6d.

VOLS. XXXIX AND XL. The Sacred Books of China. The Texts of Tâoism. Translated by JAMES LEGGE. 8vo, cloth, 21s.

VOL. XLI. The Satapatha - Brâhmana. Part III.

Translated by JULIUS EGGELING. 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.

VOL. XLII. Hymns of the Atharva-veda.

Translated by M. BLOOMFIELD. 8vo, cloth, 21s.

VOL. XLIII. The Satapatha-Brâhmana.

Translated by JULIUS EGGELING. Part IV. Books VIII, IX, and X. 12s. 6d.

VOL. XLIV. The Satapatha-Brâhmana.

Translated by JULIUS EGGELING. Part V. Books XI, XII, XIII, and XIV. 18s. 6d.

VOL. XLV. The Gâina-Sûtras.

Translated from Prakṛit, by HERMANN JACOBI. Part II. The Uttarâdhyayana Sûtra, The Sûtrakṛitâṅga Sûtra. 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.

VOL. XLVI. Vedic Hymns. Part II. 8vo, cloth, 14s.

VOL. XLVII. Pahlavi Texts.

Translated by E. W. WEST. Part V. Marvels of Zoroastrianism. 8s. 6d.

VOL. XLVIII. The Vedânta-Sûtras, with Râmânuga's Sribhâshya.

Translated by G. THIBAUT.

[In the Press.]

VOL. XLIX. Buddhist Mahâyâna Texts. Buddhakarita, translated by E. B. COWELL. Sukhâvatî-vyûha, Vagarakkhe-dikâ, &c., translated by F. MAX MÜLLER. Amitâyur-Dhyâna-Sûtra, translated by J. TAKAKUSU. 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.

Anecdota Oxoniensia.

ARYAN SERIES.

Buddhist Texts from Japan. I. Vagrakkhedikâ ; The Diamond-Cutter.

Edited by F. MAX MÜLLER, M.A. Small 4to, 3s. 6d.

One of the most famous metaphysical treatises of the Mahâyâna Buddhists.

Buddhist Texts from Japan. II. Sukhâvatî-Vyûha : Description of Sukhâvatî, the Land of Bliss.

Edited by F. MAX MÜLLER, M.A., and BUNYIU NANJIO. With two Appendices : (1) Text and Translation of Saṅghavarman's Chinese Version of the Poetical Portions of the Sukhâvatî-Vyûha ; (2) Sanskrit Text of the Smaller Sukhâvatî-Vyûha. Small 4to, 7s. 6d.

The editio princeps of the Sacred Book of one of the largest and most influential sects of Buddhism, numbering more than ten millions of followers in Japan alone.

Buddhist Texts from Japan. III. The Ancient Palm-Leaves containing the Prajñâ-Pâramitâ-Hridaya-Sûtra and the Ushnisha-Vigaya-Dhârani.

Edited by F. MAX MÜLLER, M.A., and BUNYIU NANJIO, M.A. With an Appendix by G. BÜHLER, C.I.E. With many Plates. Small 4to, 10s.

Contains facsimiles of the oldest Sanskrit MS. at present known.

Dharma-Samgraha, an Ancient Collection of Buddhist Technical Terms.

Prepared for publication by KENJIU KASAWARA, a Buddhist Priest from Japan, and, after his death, edited by F. MAX MÜLLER and H. WENZEL. Small 4to, 7s. 6d.

Kâtyâyana's Sarvânukramant of the Rîgveda.

With Extracts from Shadgurusishya's Commentary entitled Vedârthadîpikâ. Edited by A. A. MACDONELL, M.A., Ph.D. 16s.

The Buddha-Karita of Asvaghosha.

Edited, from three MSS., by E. B. COWELL, M.A. 12s. 6d.

The Mantrapâṭha, or the Prayer Book of the Âpastambins.

Edited, together with the Commentary of Haradatta, and translated by M. WINTERNITZ, Ph.D. First Part. Introduction, Sanskrit Text, Varietas Lectionis, and Appendices. Small quarto, 10s. 6d.

OXFORD

AT THE CLARENDON PRESS

LONDON : HENRY FROWDE

OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS WAREHOUSE, AMEN CORNER, E.C.

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

UC-NRLF

B 3 022 021

REESE LIBRARY
OF THE
UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA.

Class No. 685

M146

v. 47

THE SACRED BOOKS OF THE EAST

HENRY FROWDE, M.A.

PUBLISHER TO THE UNIVERSITY OF OXFORD

LONDON, EDINBURGH AND NEW YORK

TRANSLITERATION OF ORIENTAL ALPHABETS ADOPTED FOR THE TRANSLATIONS
OF THE SACRED BOOKS OF THE EAST.

TRANSLITERATION OF ORIENTAL ALPHABETS.

CONSONANTS.	MISSIONARY ALPHABET.			Sanskrit.	Zand.	Pahlavi.	Persian.	Arabic.	Hebrew.	Chinese.
	I Class.	II Class.
		III Class.
Gutturales.
1 Tenuis	k	.	.	क	𐬕	𐬕	𐬕	𐬕	𐬕	k
2 " aspirata	kh	.	.	ख	𐬖	𐬖	𐬖	𐬖	𐬖	kh
3 Media	g	.	.	ग	𐬗	𐬗	𐬗	𐬗	𐬗	.
4 " aspirata	gh	.	.	घ	𐬘	𐬘	𐬘	𐬘	𐬘	.
5 Gutturo-labialis	q	.	.	𐬙	𐬙	𐬙	𐬙	𐬙	𐬙	.
6 Nasalis	h (ng)	.	.	𐬚	{ 3 (ng) } { 𐬛 (x) }	.	.	.	.	h, 𐬛
7 Spiritus asper	h	.	.	𐬛	𐬛	.	.	.	.	.
8 " lenis	,	.	.	𐬜	𐬜	.	.	.	.	.
9 " asper faucalis	th	.	.	.	.	.	.	.	.	.
10 " lenis faucalis	h	.	.	.	.	.	.	.	.	.
11 " asper fricatus	.	.	.	.	.	.	.	.	.	.
12 " lenis fricatus	.	.	.	.	.	.	.	.	.	.
Gutturales modificatae (palatales, &c.)
13 Tenuis	.	.	.	𐬝	𐬝	𐬝	𐬝	𐬝	𐬝	k
14 " aspirata	kh	.	.	𐬞	𐬞	𐬞	𐬞	𐬞	𐬞	kh
15 Media	g	.	.	𐬟	𐬟	𐬟	𐬟	𐬟	𐬟	.
16 " aspirata	gh	.	.	𐬠	𐬠	𐬠	𐬠	𐬠	𐬠	.
17 " Nasalis	g	.	.	𐬡	𐬡	𐬡	𐬡	𐬡	𐬡	.

TRANSLITERATION OF ORIENTAL ALPHABETS

CONSONANTS (continued).	MISSIONARY ALPHABET.			Sanskrit.	Zend.	Pehlevi.	Persian.	Arabic.	Hebrew.	Chinese.
	I Class.	II Class.	III Class.
18 Semivocalis	y			य	𐬨	𐬨	𐬨	ي	י	y
19 Spiritus asper		(y)
20 " lenis		(y)
21 " asper assibilatus		s		श	𐬰	𐬰	𐬰	س		s
22 " lenis assibilatus		z
Dentales.
23 Tenuis	t			त	𐬢	𐬢	𐬢	ت	ת	t
24 " aspirata	th									th
25 " assibilata			TH
26 Media	d			द	𐬤	𐬤	𐬤	د
27 " aspirata	dh
28 " assibilata			DH
29 Nasalis	n			न	𐬨	𐬨	𐬨	ن	נ	n
30 Semivocalis	l			ल	𐬌	𐬌	𐬌	ل	ל	l
31 " mollis 1		l
32 " mollis 2			L
33 Spiritus asper 1	s			स	𐬰	𐬰	𐬰	س	ס	s
34 " asper 2			s (S)
35 " lenis	z							ز	ז	z
36 " asperimus 1			z (z)
37 " asperimus 2			z (z)

THE SACRED BOOKS UNIVERSITY

Digitized by Google

TRANSLITERATION OF ORIENTAL ALPHABETS.

VOVELS.	MISSIONARY ALPHABET.			Sanskrit.	Zend.	Pehlvi.	Persian.	Arabic.	Hebrew.	Chinese.
	I Class.	II Class.	III Class.
1 Neutralis	0			...	...	...	...	...	...	...
2 Laryngo-palatalis	ē			...	...	...	...	...	...	...
3 " labialis	ō			...	...	...	...	...	...	...
4 Gutturalis brevis	a			अ	...	...	...	...	...	...
5 " longa	ā	(a)		आ	...	...	...	...	...	...
6 Palatalis brevis	i			इ	...	...	...	...	...	...
7 " longa	ī	(i)		ई	...	...	...	...	...	...
8 Dentalis brevis	h			ह	...	...	...	...	...	...
9 " longa	h			ह	...	...	...	...	...	...
10 Lingualis brevis	ri			रि	...	...	...	...	...	...
11 " longa	rī			रि	...	...	...	...	...	...
12 Labialis brevis	u			उ	...	...	...	...	...	...
13 " longa	ū	(u)		ऊ	...	...	...	...	...	...
14 Gutturo-palatalis brevis	e			ए	...	...	...	...	...	...
15 " longa	ē (ai)	(e)		ऐ	...	...	...	...	...	...
16 Gutturo-palatalis	āi	(ai)		ई	...	...	...	...	...	...
17 " "	ei (ēi)			...	...	...	...	...	...	...
18 " "	oi (ōu)			...	...	...	...	...	...	...
19 Gutturo-labialis brevis	o			...	...	...	...	...	...	...
20 " longa	ō (au)	(o)		...	...	...	...	...	...	...
21 Diphthongus gutturo-labialis	āu	(au)		...	...	...	...	...	...	...
22 " "	eu (ēu)			...	...	...	...	...	...	...
23 " "	ou (ōu)			...	...	...	...	...	...	...
24 Gutturalis fracta	ā			...	...	...	...	...	...	...
25 Palatalis fracta	ī			...	...	...	...	...	...	...
26 Labialis fracta	ū			...	...	...	...	...	...	...
27 Gutturo-labialis fracta	ō			...	...	...	...	...	...	...

THE SACRED BOOKS OF THE EAST

TRANSLATED

BY VARIOUS ORIENTAL SCHOLARS

AND EDITED BY

F. MAX MÜLLER

VOL. XLVII

Oxford

AT THE CLARENDON PRESS

1897

[All rights reserved]

REUSE

Oxford

PRINTED AT THE CLARENDON PRESS

BY HORACE HART, M.A.

PRINTER TO THE UNIVERSITY

PAHLAVI TEXTS

TRANSLATED BY

E. W. WEST

PART V

MARVELS OF ZOROASTRIANISM

Orford

AT THE CLARENDON PRESS

1897

[All rights reserved]

CONTENTS.

	PAGE
INTRODUCTION	ix
Abbreviations used in this volume	xlviii

MARVELS OF ZOROASTRIANISM.

DÎNKARD, BOOK VII.

CHAP.
1.	Descent of the glorious destiny	3
2.	Parentage of Zaratûst	17
3.	His birth, childhood, and youth till his conference	35
4.	His missions to the Karaps, and Vistâsp's conversion	50
5.	Events in the last thirty-five years of his life	73
6.	Further events till the death of Vistâsp	77
7.	„ „ till end of Sâsânian monarchy	82
8.	„ „ till end of Zaratûst's millennium	94
9.	Aûshêdar's millennium	107
10.	Aûshêdar-mâh's millennium	112
11.	Sôshâns and the renovation	116

DÎNKARD, BOOK V.

1.	Kaî-Loharâsp at Jerusalem, and descent of the religion	119
2.	Parentage, birth, and life of Zaratûst. Future apostles	122
3.	Events after Vistâsp's conversion and in later times	126
4.	Descent of the Irânians. The tribe having a Gyêmarâ	127

SELECTIONS OF ZÂD-SPARAM.

12.	Two old legends of Spendarmad and of the hero Srtô	133
13.	Parentage of Zaratûst	138
14.	Demons try to injure him before and at his birth	140
15.	Five Karap brothers opposed to Zaratûst and his four brothers	143
16.	One Karap tries to kill Zaratûst five times	144

CHAP.	PAGE
17. Another foretells his glorious destiny	147
18. His father disagrees with him	148
19. And he disagrees with his father and the chief Karap .	149
20. Legends indicative of his good disposition	151
21. His going to confer with Aŭharmazd	154
22. His conferences with the archangels	159
23. Dates of conversions, births, and deaths	163
24. Five dispositions of priests and ten admonitions . . .	167
INDEX	171
ERRATUM	182

Transliteration of Oriental Alphabets adopted for the Translations of the Sacred Books of the East	183

INTRODUCTION.

1. IN the summary account of the Spend Nask, given in the eighth book of the Dīnkard, chapter XIV, it is stated in § 4 (see S. B. E., vol. xxxvii, p. 32) that many marvels, owing to Zaratûst, are published therein, 'just as there are some which, collected and selected, are noticed by the Dīnkard manuscript.' This statement evidently refers to the seventh book of the Dīnkard, which contains the legendary history of Zaratûst and his religion, related as a series of marvels extending from the creation to the resurrection of mankind. A much briefer account of some of the same details occurs at the beginning of the fifth book of the Dīnkard, and appears to have been abridged from a compilation which was either derived partially from a foreign source, or prepared for the use of foreign proselytes. A third compilation of similar legends is found among the Selections of Zād-spāram. And a careful translation of these three Pahlavi Texts constitutes the Marvels of Zoroastrianism contained in this volume.

2. As the extent of Dk. VII is about 16,000 Pahlavi words (without allowing for one folio lost), it probably contains about four-fifths of the details included in the Spend Nask, the Pahlavi version of which has been estimated, in S. B. E., vol. xxxvii, p. 469, to extend to 20,500 words. It says very little about Zaratûst's conferences with the sacred beings (mentioned in Dk. VIII, xiv, 5, 6), and gives no description of the other world and the way thither (as reported ibid. 8). But it probably contains many verbatim extracts from other parts of the Pahlavi version of the Spend Nask, which appear, however, to have been previously collected in the Exposition of the Good Religion, an older MS. than the Dīnkard, which is quoted as an authority in Dk. VII, i, 2.

3. This seventh book commences with a detailed statement of the descent of the glorious ruling dynasty from the primeval man Gâyômarđ, through his descendants, the Pêsdâdian and Kayânian rulers, to Kaî-Vistâsp. Among the individuals, rarely mentioned elsewhere, are the sacred being Hadish (the protector of homesteads in the Visperad), Vâêgered the brother of king Hôshâng, Pâta-khsrôbô king of the Arabs, and Aôshnar the chancellor of Kaî-Ûs. Zaratûst and the three millennial apostles are also mentioned, but the contents of this first chapter are probably derived from the Kitradâđ Nask (see Dk. VII, xiii, 20) and from Yt. XIX, 25-93.

4. Chapter II begins the legendary history of Zaratûst with the descent of his glory, from the presence of Aûharmazd to the house in which Zaratûst's mother was about to be born; and, alarmed at her radiance, the Kaviğs and Karaps, or ruling priests of the district, oblige her father to send her away to another valley, where Pôrú-shâspô resided, to whom she was afterwards married; and several legends are related, in which both the archangels and archdemons are active agents, which lead on to the birth of Zaratûst, thirty years before the end of the ninth millennium of the universe, and his complete genealogy is given.

5. Chapter III begins with his laughing at birth, and describes the ill-will of the Karaps, or priests of those times, and their many attempts to destroy him during his childhood, till he openly defied them at the age of seven. At the end of the ninth millennium, when he was thirty years old, as he was bringing Hôm-water out of the fourth effluent of the Dâîtî river, he met the archangel Vohûmanô who had come to invite him to a conference with Aûharmazd, about which no details are given.

6. Chapter IV, however, proceeds to mention that, in two years, he returned from his first conference, by order of Aûharmazd, to preach his religion to the Kîgs and Karaps in the presence of their ruler, Aûrvâtâ-dang the Tûr. They seem to have listened attentively till he advocated Khvêtûkdas, when they demanded his death, and were supported by the Tûr's brother ; but the Tûr's son, who presided, remonstrated with them, and Aûrvâtâ-dang himself protected him, but refused to be converted. Zaratûst was afterwards sent to demand slaves and horses from Vêdvoist, a rich Karap, who refused them arrogantly ; he also went to Parshad-gau in Sagastân and cured his bull with Hôm-water, whereupon Parshad-gau joined him in worship, but not in public. Zaratûst repulsed the demons as in Vd. XIX, 1-4 ; he is then tempted by a Karap in the form of Spendarmad, whom he also repulses. And he is finally sent to the court of Vistâsp, where he is relentlessly opposed by the Kîgs and Karaps who obtained his imprisonment, during which he is saved from starvation by a miracle ; then some of the sacred beings arrive to assist him, and Vistâsp is at last converted, twelve years after the coming of the religion when Zaratûst went to his first conference with Aûharmazd.

7. Chapter V refers to the marvels of the last thirty-five years of Zaratûst's life, after Vistâsp's conversion, but says nothing about his own death, except that he departed to the best existence at the age of seventy-seven. It mentions the establishment of ordeals of thirty-three kinds, the victory of Vistâsp over Argâsp the Khyôn, the useful works and advice of Zaratûst, the compilation of the Avesta, and the birth of Pêshyôtan, the immortal ruler of Kangdæ.

8. Chapter VI continues this account of marvels till the death of Vistâsp, which occurred forty-three years later. The legends related are about the presentation of a heavenly chariot to Vistâsp by the soul of an old hero Sritô who had been killed about 350 years before ; and regarding the coming of two high-priests from the southern regions of the earth, ten years after the departure of Zaratûst, to enquire about the religion.

9. Chapter VII relates the marvels occurring after the death of Vistâsp until the end of the sovereignty of Irân ; mentioning king Vohûmanô who was a grandson of Vistâsp, the high-priest Sênôv who lived throughout the second century of the religion, the devastator Alexander the Great, the four successive high-priests who restore ortho-doxy in the fifth and sixth centuries of the religion, the apostate Rashn-rêsh of about the same period, king Artakhshatar the founder of the Sāsānian dynasty, his chancellor Tanvasar, Âtûrpâd-i Mâraspendân and his son surnamed Avarethrabau, with an anonymous arch-apostate of their time, and then king Khûsrô Anôshêrvân. Finally, it condemns the proceedings of the devastators in later times, whose names are not mentioned.

10. Chapter VIII deals with the ninth and tenth centuries of the religion, which bring the millennium of Zarâtûst to a close. After a bitter lamentation over the anarchy in religion and government—in which parts of §§ 34 and 36 are taken from the Varstmânsar commentary on Yas. XXXII in Dk. IX, xxxii, 17, 20—it refers to the arrival of Kitrô-mêhônö, ‘him of the racial home,’ a title of Pêshyôtanö, son of Vistâsp, and immortal ruler of Kangdez, who arrives with 150 disciples to restore the religion and destroy the wicked, including the Turkish demons, the Arabs, and the ecclesiastical Shêdâspô¹ (Theodosius?). In the thirtieth year before the end of this tenth millennium Aûshêdar, the Developer of Righteousness, is born, and confers with the archangels at the end of the millennium, when the sun stands still for ten days and nights.

11. Chapter IX describes the eleventh millennium, that of Aûshêdar, who produces much prosperity and progress which continue until the fifth century. Then the wizard Mahrkûs appears for seven years, and produces awful winters in four of them, in which most of mankind and animals perish, till he is himself destroyed by the Dâhmân Âfrîn. Afterwards, Yim’s enclosure is opened to replenish the earth with animals and men who then begin to subsist more upon the milk of cattle, which is plentiful; and Ashavahistô interferes to diminish the slaughter of cattle. At the end of the fifth century two-thirds of the Irânians have become righteous, and in the thirtieth year before the end of this eleventh millennium Aûshêdar-mâh, the Developer of Worship, is born, and confers with the archangels at the end of the millennium, when the sun stands still for twenty days and nights.

¹ This name can be read Shêdâsfar in Byt. III.

12. Chapter X describes the twelfth millennium, that of Aûshêzar-mâh, during which mankind continue to improve, are better supplied, and have fewer wants, while deaths occur only through old age and the executioner. During the last fifty-three years, they leave off eating meat and subsist upon vegetables and milk, for which latter they substitute water for the last three years. But the old tyrant Dahâk breaks loose, and Kerêsâspô has to be roused to smite him. In the thirtieth year before the end of this twelfth millennium Sôshâns, the Triumphant Benefiter, is born; Kaî-Khûsrô and his companions afterwards arrive to assist him, and the sun stands still for thirty days and nights.

13. Chapter XI describes how Sôshâns and his assistants destroy all the evil remaining in the world, during the course of fifty-seven years, while mankind subsist for seventeen years on vegetables, thirty years on water, and ten years on spiritual food. And, at the end of these fifty-seven years, Aharman and the fiend are annihilated, and the renovation for the future existence occurs.

14. Several of the details described in Dk. VII are briefly mentioned in Dk. V, i-iv, where they are introduced by a statement of the siege of Jerusalem by Nebuchadnezzar (Bûkht-Narsîh) assisted by Kaî-Lôharâsp, father of Vistâsp. Excepting this account of the siege, in which the Jews are evidently called 'a congregation or tribe' (ram), and some remarks about the same 'tribe' at the end of Chapter IV, all the other details which are mentioned have reference only to Irânians; but they are said to be the sayings of Âtûr-farnbag as to the MS. which that tribe call really their Gyêmarâ (Chaps. I, 2, 3; IV, 8), as the name can be most plausibly read. Most of the strictly Irânian details have manifestly been derived from the same sources as were consulted by the writer of Dk. VII, that is, from the Pahlavi versions of the Spend and Kîtradâd Nasks. It would probably be hazardous to suppose that the Jewish compilers of the Gemara could have had access to these sources, and it might be preferable to assume that Ātūr-farnbag was himself compiling a record of Zoroastrian traditions for the use of some converts from Judaism, to take the place of the Gemara of their former faith.

15. The Zaratûst-nâmak of Zâd-spâram is contained in the latter half (Zs. XII-XXIII) of the first series of his Selections, the former half of which, being a paraphrase of the first half of the Bundahis, has been translated in S. B. E., vol. v, pp. 155-186. In Chapter XII Zâd-spâram relates two of the earliest legends referring to Mazda-worship, which he had found in old MSS. The first of these describes the appearance of the archangel Spendarmad, wearing a golden sacred girdle, at the court of king Mânûskîhar, 428¹ years before the coming of the religion to Zaratûst when he went to his conference with the sacred beings. The other is the legend of the warrior Sritô, the seventh brother, who was sent by Kaî-Ûs to kill the frontier-settling ox which threatened him, 300 years before the coming of the religion, with future execration by Zaratûst.

16. Chapter XIII refers to the descent of Zaratûst's glory upon his mother at her birth, and the combination of his spiritual and worldly natures; also detailing his genealogy. Chapter XIV describes the attempts of the demons to destroy him before and at his birth, when Vohûmanô entered his reasoning powers and made him laugh with delight and utter one form of the Ahunavair formula. Chapter XV is about the five Karap brothers, with their first cousins the Āûsikhshes, all descended from the demon of Wrath and a sister of king Mânûskîhar; also about the four brothers of Zaratûst who seem to be unmentioned elsewhere.

17. Chapter XVI details the attempts of one of the Karaps to destroy Zaratûst during his infancy, and the means by which he is preserved; it also explains who Râgh and Nôdar were. In Chapter XVII one of the Karaps foretells the future success of Zaratûst. In Chapter XVIII his father hears him accused of folly, and takes him to a Karap to be cured. In Chapter XIX the chief Karap comes to the house of Zaratûst's father, and is invited to consecrate the food set before him; but Zaratûst objects and a quarrel ensues, which so much disturbs the Karap that he leaves the house, and drops dead from his horse on the road home. In Chapter XX instances are given of Zaratûst's righteous desires, his compassionate assistance of people fording a river, his liberal disposition, his abandoning worldly desires, his pity for dogs, his wish for a good-looking wife, and his acceptance of progress even from the wicked, during his youth.

¹ The MSS. have 528, but this would be twenty-eight years before the accession of Mânûskîhar, see the synopsis in § 55.

18. Chapter XXI relates that, at thirty years of age, on his way to the festival of spring, he saw in a vision all mankind following Mêdyômâh, his first cousin, into his presence. He then went on to the bank of the Dâtîh, and crossed its four channels, when he met Vohûmanô who led him to the assembly of the archangels, where he received instruction from Aûharmazd and saw the omniscient wisdom; the archangels also subjected him to various ordeals.

19. Chapter XXII refers to his conferences with the seven archangels, each at a different place, and extending over ten years. In Chapter XXIII, Mêdyômâh is converted at the end of these ten years. The next two years are spent on the conversion of Vistâsp, in which Zaratûst is assisted by some of the sacred beings, and the narrative ends by giving the dates of several other conversions, births, and deaths. But after its 300th year the religion is disturbed and the monarchy contested; referring, no doubt, to the effects of Alexander's conquest of Persia.

20. These three narratives appear to be the only connected statements of the Zoroastrian legend that remain extant in Pahlavi, and all three seem to be chiefly derived from the Sâsânian Pahlavi version of the Spend Nask, with some probable additions from the similar version of the Kitradâd Nask, as may be gathered from the summary accounts of the contents of these Nasks given in Dk. VIII, xiii, 20-xiv, 15, and translated in S. B. E., vol. xxxvii, pp. 31-34. There are, however, allusions to other legends regarding Zaratûst to be found scattered about in Pahlavi literature, to which we shall return after mentioning the manuscript authorities for the texts translated in this volume.

21. The chief existing authority for the Pahlavi text of the Dînkard, Books III-IX, and the only independent one for Book VII, is the MS. B in Bombay, which has been fully described in S. B. E., vol. xxxvii, pp. xxxiii-xxxvii; it will therefore be sufficient here to give a short statement of the information which was there detailed at full length. This MS., written in 1659, was an unbound quarto volume of 392 folios when it was brought from Irân to Surat in 1783; after which time 70 folios became detached from various parts of the MS., but nearly all these had been discovered more than twenty years ago.

22. The writer of the MS. not only recorded the date of his own work, but also copied two previous colophons of his predecessors, with dates corresponding to A. D. 1516 and 1020, and it appears that there had been an intermediate copy about 1355. The MS. of 1020 had been copied at Bakdâd, possibly from the original MS. of the last editor of the Dînkard, which must have been completed about A. D. 900.

23. For the text of Dk. V we have a second authority, independent of B, in the MS. K43 at Copenhagen (see S. B. E., vol. xxxvii, pp. xxxvii-viii), written shortly after 1594 and also descended from the MS. of 1020.

24. The Selections of Zâd-spam are found in some of the old MSS., which also contain the Dâdistân-î Dînik (see S. B. E., vol. xviii, pp. xv-xvii). Of the two MSS. used for the text of Zâd-spam's Zaratûst-nâmak, K35 was brought from Irân to Copenhagen in 1843. It has lost many folios, both at the beginning and end; but, before it was so mutilated, a copy (BK) of it was made, which is now in Bombay and contains a copy of its colophon, the date of which corresponds to A. D. 1592. For the text of Zs. xxii, 4-xxiv, 19, which has been lost from K35, the translator is indebted to this old copy. The other MS. authority T, belonging to Ervad Tehmuras in Bombay

(a copy of which has been used), is dated two generations earlier.

25. Regarding the period of Zād-spāram's career we are well informed by the date of the third Epistle of Mānūskihar, corresponding to A.D. 881, at which time Zād-spāram was probably in the prime of life; but his Selections were certainly compiled as late as A.D. 900, or about the same time as the completion of the Dīnkard. So that the Pahlavi texts, from which these three narratives of the Zoroastrian legends have been translated, were no doubt all written about A.D. 900, and the information they contain was nearly all derived from the Pahlavi versions of two of the Nasks.

26. We have reason to believe that the Pahlavi versions of Avesta texts were completed in the fourth century and revised in the sixth, after the downfall of the heretic Mazdak. This may not only be clearly inferred from the traditional account of the compilation and restorations of the Avesta and Zand, preserved in Dk. IV, 21-36, and translated in S. B. E., vol. xxxvii, pp. 412-418; but is also in accordance with the actual condition of the Pahlavi versions of the liturgical Avesta texts. With the exception of a few interpolated passages, the whole of these Pahlavi versions might have been written, or revised, in the time of king Shahpūhar II (A.D. 309-379). And the exceptional passages mention no persons or events of a later date than the reign of king Khūsrō I (A.D. 531-578); being merely references to such persons as Mazdak, the heretic, and certain commentators who lived about that time.

27. If we examine the Zoroastrian legends, translated in this volume, we shall also find it difficult to discover a passage that clearly alludes to any historical personage of later date than Khūsrō I, who is named in Dk. V, iii, 3; VII, vii, 26, although the compiler of the Dīnkard had the traditions of 250 years of Arab rule to draw upon for facts, if he had been disposed to continue the statements of the Pahlavi Spend Nask down to his own time. No doubt, these traditions may have intensified his denunciations of the devastators in Dk. VII, vii, 29-38; viii, 4-9, but, like most Pahlavi writers, he is careful not to mention Muhammadanism. Dk. VII, vii, 33, 34 seem to refer to some particular individual of this later time; but the references to Kaisar and Khâkân, the Turkish demons with dishevelled hair, the Arab, and Shedâspô (Theodosius?) of Arûm, may all have been taken from a Pahlavi version revised in the time of Khûsrô I.

28. That the original Pahlavi version was translated from an Avesta text, though many Pahlavi commentaries were intermingled, appears certain. Apart from the numerous quotations from revelation (dênô), which may be safely assumed to have had an Avesta original, there are many passages interspersed with glosses, such as the Pahlavi translators habitually used, as well as numerous sentences beginning with a verb, an Avesta peculiarity which generally disappears in an English translation. Regarding the age of this Avesta text it would be hazardous to speculate without further information than we yet possess.

29. The principal details connected with the Zoroastrian legends which have been noticed in other Pahlavi and Pâzand texts, with references to the passages where they occur, are as follows :—

Gôsûrvan informed of the future coming of Zaratûst in Bd. IV, 4. Z.'s genealogy and family in Bd. XXXII, 1-10.

Summary account of Z. and Zoroastrianism, from the creation to the resurrection, in Dk. VIII, xiv, 1-15.

The abode of Z.'s father, when Z. was born, was on the bank of the Dârega river (Bd. XX, 32; XXIV, 15).

150 demons were prevented from destroying Z., before his birth, by the presence of a fire in his father's house (Sls. X, 4; XII, 11; Sd. XVI, 3).

Detailed account of the birth of Z. in Dk. IX, xxiv, 1-18.

When Z. first saw the archangels, he thought they were arch-demons (Ep. I, x, 9).

Omniscient wisdom temporarily conferred upon Z., and what he then saw (Dk. IX, viii, 1-6; Byt. I, 1-5; II, 5-22).

He saw the soul of Davâns tormented in hell, excepting one foot (AV. XXXII, 1-6; Sls. XII, 29; Sd. IV, 3-11).

He also saw a mortal with children and an immortal without any, and preferred the former (Dd. XXXVII, 43).

And he beheld the terrible condition of Keresâsp's soul (Dk. IX, xv, 1-4).

Advice of Aôharmanas'd to Zaratûst (Sd. XXV, 6-9; LXXXI, 2-16).

The demon Envy (Aresh) converses with Z. in Dk. IX, xxxi, 6-11.

Aharman tempts Z. with the promise of 1000 years dominion, in Mkh. LVII, 24-29.

About Maîdôk-mâh, in Dk. IX, xlv, 19.

Z. coming to preach to king Vistâsp, in Sg. X, 64-68.

Archangels assist Z. in converting Vistâsp, also the war with Argâsp, in Dk. VIII, xi, 2-4.

The war of the religion with Argâsp mentioned in Bd. XII, 33.

The families of Zaratûst, Hvôv, and Vistâsp mentioned in Dk. VIII, xxix, 25.

About Frashôstar and Gâmâsp in Dk. VIII, xxxviii, 68; IX, xlii, 8, 9; xlv, 17, 18.

About Kaî-Vistâsp, Frashôstar, Porûtâst, Gâmâsp, and Hûtôs in Dk. IX, xlv, 3-5.

Brâd-rûkhsh, or Brâdrô-rêsh the Tûr, mentioned as destroying the righteous man, in Dd. LXXII, 8; Sd. IX, 5; Dk. VIII, xxxv, 13; IX, x, 3.

The last millenniums mentioned in Dk. IX, xxxix, 18; xli, 6-8.

Events in the last two millenniums, in Byt. II, 22-III, 62.

The resurrection described in Bd. XXX.

30. Beyond the frequent occurrence of the names of the chief actors in the traditions, there are not many references to the Zoroastrian legends in the extant Avesta. This is owing to the fact that three-fourths of the Avesta texts, including the Nasks specially devoted to these legends, have been lost. The chief references to them that still survive in the Avesta are as follows:—

The passing on of the kingly glory from ruler to ruler, from Haoshyang,ha to Kava-Haosrava, from Zarathustra to Kava-Vistâspa and the Saoshyant, in Yt. XIX, 25-90.

The terror of the demons on hearing of the birth of Z., in Vd. XIX, 43-47.

Z. mentioned as son of Pourushaspa in Yt. V, 18.

Verethraghna gives Z. strength, health, vigour, and keenness of sight (Yt. XIV, 33).

References to Z.'s conference with Ahura Mazda, and his rejection of the demons, in Yas. XII, 5, 6.

The demons attempt to destroy Z., and to tempt him, but are repelled by recitations, in Vd. XIX, 1-10.

Commentary on the Ahunavair, in Yas. XIX.

Z. converses with Haoma, in Yas. IX, 1-16.

Fate of the soul after death revealed to Z., in Vd. XIX, 26-34.

Z. is taught various spells, in Yt. XIV, 34-38.

He prays that he may convert the queen Hutaosa, in Yt. IX, 26; XVII, 46.

References to the battle with Aregad-aspa, in Yt. V, 109, 113, 116, 117; IX, 30; XVII, 50, 51.

Z.'s reply to Frashaostra regarding the ritual, in Yas. LXXI, 1-11.

There are also other references to Kava-Vîstâspa, Frashaostra, Gâmâspa, Pouruîstâ, Maidhyômau, the Haêkadaspas, Spitamas, and Saoshyants. And the Fravashis of all the righteous persons receive homage in Yt. XIII. Of the unbelievers, the Karapans and Kavis are mentioned several times in the Gâthas and Yasts, including the Hôma Yast; and the Usikshsh once in the Gâthas.

31. So far as these references in the Avesta extend, they agree with the Pahlavi versions of the legends, and occasionally state some further particulars. We may, therefore, safely conclude that these Pahlavi versions present a fairly complete view of the Zoroastrian legends current in Sâsânian times. But we have another means of testing this conclusion more fully in the Persian Zartust-nâmah, translated by Eastwick in the Appendix to The Parsi Religion, as contained in the Zand-Avasta, by John Wilson, D. D. (Bombay: 1843).

32. This Zartust-nâmah contains 1570 Persian couplets, composed by Zartust Bahrâm Pazdû, apparently at the ancient city of Raî, and finished on August 12, 1278. But Eastwick's English translation was made from a good MS. of this poem, written by Dastûr Barzû Qiyâmu-d-dîn (= Kâmdîn) in 1636, belonging to the Wilson Collection and now in the library of Lord Crawford at Wigan. Zartust Bahrâm relates how a priest of Raî, named Kaî-Kâûs, son of Kaî-Khusrô, showed him an old Pahlavi MS.

narrating the history of Zartust, and offered to interpret it, if he would undertake to paraphrase it, in Persian verse, for the information of others.

33. After mentioning Z.'s grandfather and father, descended from king Frêdûn, a frightful dream of his mother is related, in which she sees herself attacked by wild beasts eager for the destruction of her son, who drives them away. She relates her dream to an astrologer, who prognosticates a wonderful career for the unborn child ; but this dream is an addition to the Pahlavi texts.

34. The child is born, and laughs at birth, exciting admiration among the women and dismay among the magicians. Dûrânsarûn, their chief, comes to see the child, and tries to kill him with a dagger ; but his hand is withered, and the magicians carry off the child, who is exposed to death from fire, oxen, horses, and wolves, but all in vain, as his mother brings him home safe on each occasion. Another magician, named Bartarûsh, then foretells that Z. cannot be destroyed, and will establish a new religion ; and he repeats this to the child's father, naming Gustâsp as his future protector. This narrative corresponds with Dk. VII, iii, 2-31 ; but then follows the addition that he was confided to the care of an old man, named Barzînkârûs, till he completed his seventh year.

35. Then Dûrânsarûn and Bartarûsh went together to see him, and tried their magic arts upon him in vain (ibid. 32, 33). Afterwards, when Z. was sick, Bartarûsh supplied him with filthy drugs, but he threw them on the ground, which seems to be another version of Zs. XVIII, 5, 6. Then follows a paraphrase of Dk. VII, iii, 34-48, and Zs. XX, 4, 5 ; XXI, 1-20, 23-27, with some additional remarks about worship and the Avesta being taught to Z. The conferences with the six archangels are more detailed than in Zs. XXII, and more ritualistic in their tendency.

36. When Z. returns to the earth, he is met by the demons and magicians, who oppose him, but are killed or dispersed by the utterance of an Avesta text ; in which account we have an extreme condensation of Dk. VII, iv, 36-46, 57-62. He then goes to the court of king Gustâsp, where he is hospitably received by the king, surrounded by his princes and wise men. With the latter Z. enters into argument, and overcomes them all successively. This is repeated, till all the learned of the realm are vanquished in argument, in the course of three successive days.

37. Then Z. produces the Avesta and Zand, and reads a chapter ; but the king hesitates to accept it, until he learns more about it ; and Z. retires to his lodgings. In the meantime, the wise men form a conspiracy to ruin Z., by secreting in his lodgings, with the connivance of his doorkeeper, many of the impure things used by sorcerers. The next day, while the king and Z. are examining the Avesta, the wise men denounce Z. as a sorcerer ; his lodgings are searched, and the impurities are brought to the king, who becomes angry and commits Z. to prison.

38. Now the king had a magnificent black horse, and when Z. had been a week in prison, this horse fell sick, and was found with its four feet drawn up to its belly. When the king was informed, he summoned his wise men, but they could suggest no remedy ; so the king and all his people remained fasting all day and lamenting, and the jailer forgot to take any food to Z. till the evening, when he told Z. about the state of the black horse.

39. Z. requested the jailer to inform the king that he could cure the horse ; and the king, on hearing this the next day, releases Z., who undertakes to restore the horse's limbs to their natural state, on receiving four solemn promises, one for the cure of each leg. Three of these promises are that the king, his son Isfendyâr (= Spend-dâd), and the queen, should each undertake to accept his religion and never forsake it ; and the fourth promise is that the false accusation of sorcery, made by the wise men, should be investigated.

40. After each promise Z. prays vehemently, and each limb is restored to use. While, on the confession of Z.'s doorkeeper, the wise men are convicted of fraudulent deceit, and are sent to execution. The Persian version is here a highly embellished paraphrase of Dk. VII, iv, 64-70, especially in the horse episode.

41. King Gustâsp next asks Z. to pray for information as to the king's future position in the other world, also that he may become invulnerable, omniscient as to worldly affairs, and immortal ; but Z. tells him that he must be satisfied with the first wish for himself, and the remaining three for other persons. The next day, while the king is sitting in court with Z. present, horsemen arrive, who are the archangels Bahman and Ardabahist, with the spirits of the Khûrdâd and Gusâsp fires. They are sent to testify the truth of Z.'s mission, and to urge the king to accept the religion ; this he does, and they then depart ; when Z. informs the king that his four wishes will be granted, as he will soon see. For some of these details see Dk. VII, iv, 74-82.

42. Zartust then performs the Darun ceremony, having provided wine, perfume, milk, and a pomegranate. After reciting prayers from the Avesta, he gives the wine to the king to drink, who then falls into a trance and sees his own future position in heaven, and those of others. His son Peshôtan receives the milk which makes him immortal. The perfume, or incense, is given to Gâmâsp who obtains knowledge of all events till the resurrection. And Isfendyâr, the warlike son of Gustâsp, eats one grain of the pomegranate and becomes invulnerable. The Pahlavi versions are silent about the king's four wishes and their fulfilment, except such hints as may be conveyed in Dk. VII, iv, 84-86. Afterwards, Z. reads the Avesta to the king and comments upon it ; concluding with praises of the creator.

43. To this narrative Zartust Bahrâm adds a further episode of Z. asking for immortality, at the time when he went with Bahman to confer with the creator. His request is refused, but the creator gives him a drop of liquid to drink, like honey, and he sees everything in both worlds, as in a vision. When he wakes up, he relates what he saw in heaven and hell ; and also describes a tree with seven branches of gold, silver, copper, brass, lead, steel, and mixed iron, respectively, overshadowing the world. The creator explains that these seven branches represent seven powerful personages who arise in successive ages of the world. The golden branch is Z. himself, the silver is Gustâsp, the copper is an Askânian king, the brass is Ardashîr the Sâsânian, the lead is king Bahrâm (Gôr), the steel is Nôshêrvân who destroys the heretic Mazdak, and the mixed iron is the malicious monarch who upsets the true faith. Then follow many details of the lamentable evils which then occur; and when the Hazârahs¹ appear, the condition of Irân becomes still worse, as described in Byt. II, III, until the arrival of king Bahrâm the Hamâvand from India, and Peshôtan from Kangdiz, who restore the Irânian monarchy and religion.

44. This additional narrative is evidently a paraphrase of the Pahlavi Bahman Yast, translated in S. B. E., vol. v, pp. 191-235; and that Pahlavi text appears to be merely an enlarged edition of Fargard VII of the Sûzkar Nask, of which a short summary is given in Dk. IX, viii.

45. From the foregoing epitome of the Persian Zartust-nâmah, it will be evident that its author's information was a combination of the statements still surviving in Dk. VII and Zs. XII-XXIII, so far as they suited his fancy and convenience. Many statements are omitted, others either condensed, or greatly elaborated; but very few novelties can be detected, excepting such as are clearly due to the writer's own imagination. Whether any small residuum of these novelties can be attributed to other sources than the Persian writer's fancy, must remain doubtful until some older authority for such details is discovered.

46. With regard to Z.'s vision of heaven and hell, which is mentioned in Zartust Bahrâm's final episode, his immediate informant was certainly Byt. II, 11-13; but the original authority was the Spēnd Nask, as summarized in Dk. VIII, xiv, 7, 8, although Dk. VII omits this incident, and Zs. XXI, 21, 22 merely mentions the bodily appearance of the omniscient wisdom, without referring to Z.'s vision. The details of the conferences with the six archangels, which are summarized in Dk. VIII, xiv, 9, as having existed in the Spēd Nask, are also omitted in Dk. VII, though briefly stated in Zs. XXII.

¹ Those specially belonging to the latter millenniums, probably meaning the people who were expected to make most of the last two centuries intolerably wicked.

47. It is worthy of notice that Z. was first sent to offer his religion to the Kîgs and Karaps and their sovereign, Aûrvâtâ-dang the Tûr (see Dk. VII, iv, 2-20), who seem to have received his doctrines favourably, excepting his advocacy of Khvêtûk-das¹, which led to their rejection of his proposal. He was next sent to the Karap Vêdvôist (ibid. 21-28), whom Aûharmazd had hitherto befriended; but this Karap was rejected for illiberality and arrogance. Z. then went to Parshad-tôrâ in Sagâstân (ibid. 31-35), taking some Hô-m-water with him, to cure an infirm bull belonging to this chieftain, as soon as the latter had accepted the religion in public; the chieftain assented to the religion, though only privately, but this was sufficient to obtain the cure of his bull. It was only after these three trials that the conversion of king Vistâp was attempted.

48. There is some difficulty in understanding the exact difference between the primeval religion and that taught by Zaratûst. When Dk. VII, i, 9-11 speaks of Aûharmazd talking with Masyê and Masyâôî; or Hadish tells them of Aûharmazd, the archangels, and the Ahunavair (ibid. 12, 13); or the sacred beings are said to have taught them the primitive arts (ibid. 14); or we are told of the existence of demons in the times of Hôshâng and Tâkhmôrup (ibid. 18, 19); or of Ashavahistô in the time of king Pâtakhsrôbô (ibid. 34); it may be urged that the mention of these beings in connection with the men of those times is no proof that their existence was known then. Because it only shows that the old writers, being satisfied that these beings existed in their own time and were immortal, only logically assumed that they must have existed in former times. The really weak point in their argument being the assumption of the existence of such beings in their own time.

49. Safer conclusions may be formed by noticing the dogmas that Zaratûst most strongly advocates and reprobates. When he goes to his first conference (Dk. VII, iii, 56-62) he goes in search of righteousness. When he went to Aûrvâtâ-dang, as mentioned above, he advocated the praise of righteousness, scorn of the demons, and the observance of ceremonies; but it was only his scorn of the demons, which took the form of Khvétûk-das, that the Karaps really rejected. In Dk. VII, iv, 14, he says, 'worldly righteousness is the whole worship of the demons, and the end of the Mazda-worship of Z.' Though the Hôrn plant was sacred before Z.'s birth (ibid. ii, 22-47), the Hôrn-water (ibid. iv, 29-35) seems to have been a distinctive token of Z.'s religion; also chanting the Ahunavair (ibid. iv, 38, 41, 42, 56, 61) and the Avesta in general (ibid. 63). The perverted religion and demonizing of the Kîgs and Karaps appear to have been the worst faults he had to find with them (ibid. 64, 67). And the archangels tell Vistâsp that the world requires the good religion which proceeds through Z.'s recitation, so he should chant the Ahunavair and Ashem-vohû, and not worship the demons (ibid. 79, 80). Again, when Dûrâsrôb and Brâzrôk-rêsh partake of food with Pôrûshâspô and Zaratûst (ibid. iii, 34, 38), the latter does not object to the form of worship proposed, but to the person selected to conduct it; and he then proclaims his own reverence for the righteous and the poor.

¹ For the meaning of this term, as defined by the texts which use it, see S. B. E., vol. xviii, pp. 389-430.

50. From these statements we may conclude that the old writers, who have handed down these legends from ancient times, were of opinion that Zaratûst was not so much the founder of a totally new religion, as he was a reformer who retained as much of the prior religion as was not seriously objectionable. While strongly insisting upon the necessity of reverencing all good spirits, he strictly prohibited all propitiation of evil spirits. His law was to resist and destroy all that is evil and injurious to man, and to respect and honour all that is good and beneficial to him. According to the legends, he seems to have found little gross idolatry, in the form of image-worship, to reprobate. From the times of the idol-worship encouraged by Dahâk in Bâpêl (Dk. VII, iv, 72), and of the destruction of the celebrated idol-temple on the shore of Lake Kêkast by Kaî-Khûsrôî (ibid. i, 39; Mkh. ii, 95), we find nothing in the legends about this form of idolatry, till 'the oppressiveness of infidelity and idol-worship,' shortly after the downfall of the Sâsânians, is lamented (Dk. VII, viii, 6). Demon-worship (ibid. iii, 35; iv, 30; vii, 17, 36, 37; viii, 7, 34), although a term sometimes applied to idolatry, seems to be often used in its literal sense of 'worship of evil spirits,' one form of which is described by Zarâtûst (ibid. iv, 47-53).

51. Another interesting study, for which these Zoroastrian legends supply materials, is the traditional chronology which they contain; and how far it will be found, upon examination, to harmonize with the system stated in Bd. XXXIV, or to explain the manifest inaccuracies of that system. The matter is rather complicated, but the Zoroastrian system can be connected with the European system of chronology with some degree of probability.

52. The epoch of Zoroastrian chronology is 'the coming of the religion,' but it has long been doubtful whether this event was the birth of Zarâtûst, or his going to conference with the sacred beings, or the acceptance of the religion by Vistâsp. Any doubt, however, as to the meaning of the phrase, has now been removed by the statement in Dk. VII, viii, 51, that the first century of the religion is that from the time when Zarâtûst came forth to his conference, which event happened when he was thirty years old (ibid. iii, 51, 60, 62). It is also stated, in Bd. XXXIV, 7, that Vistâsp reigned thirty years before the coming of the religion, that is, before Zarâtûst went to his conference. From these data it is evident that the traditional Zoroastrian chronology makes the birth of Zarâtûst coincide with the accession of Vistâsp.

53. The nearest date to these events, which is well defined in both the Zoroastrian and European systems of chronology, is that of the death of Alexander, near mid-summer in B.C. 323, which Bd. XXXIV, 7, 8, places 272 years after the coming of the religion, that is, after the thirtieth year of Vistâsp's reign. And if this were the first year of the religion, the death of Alexander must have occurred in its 273rd year, according to the Bundahis.

54. But this has to be reconciled with the statement in Zs. XXIII, 12, that, after its 300th year, 'the religion is disturbed and the monarchy is contested;' which statement is expressed more definitely by AV. I, 2-6, when it asserts that the religion remained in purity for 300 years, but then Alexander came to Irân and destroyed the monarchy. If these statements be accepted literally, they imply that Alexander invaded Irân either in the 300th year of the religion, or shortly after that date, but certainly not before it. We cannot place Alexander's invasion of Irân itself at a later date than the battle of Gaugamela (B.C. 331); and if this were the 300th year of the religion, the death of Alexander (B.C. 323) must have occurred in its 308th, instead of its 273rd year, and the coming of the religion would have to be put back thirty-five years. This may be done with some plausibility by assuming an omission of thirty-five years between the reigns of Hûmâi and Dârâi, where the Bundahis passes from traditional to historical personages. Alexander's invasion must also have been a good and sufficient reason for the dissolution of the hundred-discipledom, or priestly college, established by Sênô, which lasted only till the 300th year, as Zs. XXIII, 11 informs us.

55. If we now adopt the abbreviations A. R. for 'anno religionis' and B. R. for 'before the religion,' we are prepared to compile the following synopsis of Zoroastrian Chronology according to the millennial system of the Bundahis, extended to the end of time, but dealing only with traditional matters, combined with the European dates of the same events, deduced from the synchronism of A. R. 300 with B. C. 331, as stated above in § 54:—

B. R. 9000, B. C. 9630. Beginning of the first millennium of Time; and formation of the Fravashis, or primary ideas of the good creations, which remain insensible and motionless for 3000 years (Bd. I, 8; XXXIV, 1).

„ 6000, B. C. 6630. Beginning of the fourth millennium, when the spiritual body of Zaratûst is framed together, and remains 3000 years with the archangels (Dk. VII, ii, 15, 16), while the primeval man and ox exist undisturbed in the world, because the evil spirit is confounded and powerless (Bd. I, 20, 22; III, 1, 3, 5; XXXIV, 1).

- B. R. 3000, B. C. 3630. Beginning of the seventh millennium, when the evil spirit rushes into the creation on new-year's day, destroys the primeval ox, and distresses Gâyômarđ, the primeval man (Bd. I, 20; III, 10-20, 24-27; XXXIV, 2). Z. appears to remain with the archangels for 2969 years longer.
- „ 2970, B. C. 3600. Gâyômarđ passes away (Bd. III, 21-23; XXXIV, 2).
- „ 2930, B. C. 3560. Masyê and Masyâôi had grown up (Bd. XV, 2; XXXIV, 3).
- „ 2787, B. C. 3417. Accession of Hôshâng (Bd. XXXIV, 3).
- „ 2747, B. C. 3377. Accession of Tâkhmôrup (ibid. 4).
- „ 2717, B. C. 3347. Accession of Yim (ibid.).
- „ 2000, B. C. 2630. Beginning of the eighth millennium. Accession of Dahâk (ibid. 4, 5).
- „ 1000, B. C. 1630. Beginning of the ninth millennium. Accession of Frêđûn (ibid. 5, 6).
- „ 500, B. C. 1130. Accession of Mânûskîhar (ibid. 6).
- „ 428, B. C. 1058. Spendarmad comes to Mânûskîhar at the time of Frâsiyâv's irrigation works (Zs. XII, 3-6). The MSS. have B. R. 528, but to bring this date into the reign of Mânûskîhar would be inconsistent with the millennial arrangement; while to assume a clerical error of one century is a probable explanation, as it makes the date more consistent with the allusion to Frâsiyâv, whose irrigation works, mentioned in Bd. XX, 34; XXI, 6, must have been carried out in the latter part of Mânûskîhar's reign.
- „ 380, B. C. 1010. Accession of Aûzôbbô (Bd. XXXIV, 6).
- „ 375, B. C. 1005. Accession of Kaî-Kqbâd (ibid. 6, 7).
- „ 360, B. C. 990. Accession of Kaî-Ûs (ibid. 7).
- „ 300, B. C. 930. Zaratûst first mentioned by the ox that Srtô killed (Zs. XII, 7-20).
- „ 210, B. C. 840. Accession of Kaî-Khûsrôî (Bd. XXXIV, 7).
- „ 150, B. C. 780. Accession of Kaî-Loharâsp (ibid.).
- „ 45, B. C. 675. The Glory descends from heaven at the birth of Dûkdak (Zs. XIII, 1).
- „ 30, B. C. 660. Accession of Kaî-Vistâsp (Bd. XXXIV, 7). Vohûmanô and Ashavahistô descend into the world with a stem of Hôm (Dk. VII, ii, 24). Zaratûst is born (ibid. v 1).

- B. R. 23, B. C. 653. Z. is seven years old when two Karaps visit his father, and Dûrâsrôbô dies (Dk. VII, iii, 32, 34, 45).
- „ 15, B. C. 645. Z. is fifteen years old when he and his four brothers ask for their shares of the family property (Zs. XX, 1).
- „ 10, B. C. 640. Z. leaves home at the age of twenty (ibid. 7).
- A. R. I, B. C. 630. Beginning of the tenth millennium. Z. goes forth to his conference with the sacred beings on the 45th day of the 31st year of Vistâsp's reign (Dk. VII, iii, 51-62; viii, 51; Zs. XXI, 1-4).
- „ 3, B. C. 628. Z. returns from his first conference in two years, and preaches to Aûrvâtâ-dang and the Karaps without success (Dk. VII, iv, 2-20).
- „ 11, B. C. 620. After his seventh conference, in the tenth year he goes to Vistâsp; Mêdyômâh is also converted (ibid. 1, 65; Zs. XXI, 3; XXIII, 1, 2, 8).
- „ 13, B. C. 618. Twelve years after Z. went to conference, Vistâsp accepts the religion, though hindered for two years by the Karaps (Dk. VII, v, 1; Zs. XXIII, 5, 7).
- „ 20, B. C. 611. A Kavîg, son of Kûndah, is converted (Zs. XXIII, 8).
- „ 30, B. C. 601. Defeat of Argâsp and his Khyons (ibid.).
- „ 40, B. C. 591. Vohûnêm is born (ibid.). About this time the Avesta is written by Gâmâsp from the teaching of Z. (Dk. IV, 21; V, iii, 4; VII, v, 11).
- „ 48, B. C. 583. Z. passes away, or is killed, aged seventy-seven years and forty days, on the 41st day of the year (Dk. V, iii, 2; VII, v, 1; Zs. XXIII, 9).
- „ 58, B. C. 573. Arrival of the religion is known in all regions (Dk. VII, vi, 12).
- „ 63, B. C. 568. Frashôstar passes away (Zs. XXIII, 10).
- „ 64, B. C. 567. Gâmâsp passes away (ibid.).
- „ 73, B. C. 558. Hangâûrûsh, son of Gâmâsp, passes away (ibid.).
- „ 80, B. C. 551. Asmôk-khanvatô passes away, and Akht the wizard is killed (ibid.).
- „ 91, B. C. 540. Accession of Vohûman, son of Spend-dâd (Bd. XXXIV, 7, 8).
- „ 100, B. C. 531. Sênô is born (Dk. VII, vii, 6).
- „ 200, B. C. 431. Sênô passes away (ibid.; Zs. XXIII, 11).
- „ 203, B. C. 428. Accession of Hûmâf (Bd. XXXIV, 8).

[Here ends the fragment of the old millennial system preserved in the Bundahis which omits thirty-five years in this place, as explained in § 54, with the effect of postponing the end of the millennium. It then proceeds to finish the chronology in its own fashion; mentioning only three historical names, which are here added; the thirty-five omitted years being also inserted.]

- A. R. 268, B. C. 363. Accession of Dārâi (ibid.).
 „ 280, B. C. 351. Accession of Dārâi, descendant of Dārâi (ibid.).
 „ 294, B. C. 337. Accession of Alexander¹ (ibid.).
 „ 300, B. C. 331. Invasion by Alexander. Sênô's hundred-discipledom ends, the religion is disturbed, and the monarchy contested (Zs. XXIII, 11, 12; AV. I, 2-6).
 „ 308, B. C. 323. Death of Alexander (Bd. XXXIV, 8).
 „ 400, B. C. 231. Benightedness arises (Dk. VII, vii, 9).
 „ 440-560, B. C. 191-71². Orthodoxy is still upheld by four successive high-priests (Dk. VII, vii, 8-10).
 „ 800-950, A. D. 170-320. The ninth and tenth centuries are represented as very evil and miserable (ibid. viii, 2-45, 61).
 „ 971, A. D. 341. Aûshêðar is born (ibid. 55-57).
 „ 1001, A. D. 371. Beginning of the eleventh millennium, when the sun stands still for ten days, and Aûshêðar is thirty years old and confers with the sacred beings (ibid. 58-60).
 „ 1400-1500, A. D. 770-870. In this century the wizard Mahrkûs produces seven awful winters successively, in which most of mankind and animals perish, including himself (ibid. ix, 3).
 „ 1971, A. D. 1341. Aûshêðar-mâh is born (ibid. 18-20).
 „ 2001, A. D. 1371. Beginning of the twelfth millennium, when the sun stands still for twenty days, and Aûshêðar-mâh is thirty years old and confers with the sacred beings (ibid. 21-23).
 „ 2971, A. D. 2341. Sôshâns is born (ibid. x, 15-18).
 „ 3001, A. D. 2371. Beginning of the preparation for the Renovation, when the sun stands still for thirty days, and Sôshâns is thirty years old (ibid. 19); but another passage (ibid. xi, 2) implies that this is the date of his birth.
 „ 3028, A. D. 2398. The renovation of the universe occurs at the end of the fifty-seventh year of Sôshâns (ibid. 4, 7).

¹ He became king of Macedon B. C. 336, and of Persia in 331.

² The erroneous dates in the Bundahis chronology (see § 57) alter this period to B. C. 156-36.

56. We must suppose that the millennial chronology, which the Bundahis discontinues in the middle of the tenth millennium, was originally completed to the end of Time, as attempted in this synopsis, in accordance with the statements in Byt. and Dk. But the allusions to future events and denunciations of coming evils were, no doubt, of a mythological or general character, such as those still surviving in Dk. VII, vii, 29-32; viii, 40, 41, 44-46, 48-60; ix-xi. Whenever we meet with seemingly prophetic descriptions and denunciations, which clearly allude to historical events, such as those in Dk. VII, vii, 3-28; viii, 2, 10, 23, 32-36, 42, 43, 47, 61, they must, of course, be treated as interpolations of a later date than the events themselves. And there are several passages that may belong to either class.

57. It has been already shown, in § 54, that the death of Alexander, which the Bundahis places in A. R. 273, must have occurred in A. R. 308 according to other traditional records. If this error of thirty-five years stood alone, it might be considered accidental; but when we find that the Bundahis supplies only 284 years for the Askânians, to fill up the whole interval of 548 years between Alexander and Ardashîr, son of Pâpak, we must conclude that these two errors were intended for the purpose which they both fulfil, that of postponing the end of the tenth millennium. On the other hand, the Sâsânians who ruled for 425 years, are allowed 460 years in the Bundahis, which just counter-balances the thirty-five years omitted after the time of Hûmâî. This third error may be considered unintentional, as it probably arose from counting the year of each succession twice over, first in the reign of the deceased king, and again in that of his successor.

58. The extent to which the Bundahis chronology is distorted, by these three errors, will be better understood on inspection of the following tabular statement than from any description of the results, merely observing that the year of the religion (A. R.) is given according to Bundahis dates in the first column, and according to real dates in the second. Several intermediate events have been inserted, for the sake of illustration, and each of their Bundahis dates includes its proper proportion of the errors¹:—

Bd. date. A. R.	Real date. A. R.		Real date. B. C.	Bd. date. B. C.
265,	300.	Invasion by Alexander . . .	331,	331.
273,	308.	Death of Alexander . . .	323,	323.
321,	400.	Real date of A. R. 400 . . .	231,	275.
400,	553.	Bd. date of A. R. 400 . . .	78,	196.
528,	800.	Real date of A. R. 800 . . .	A. D. 170,	68.
557,	856.	Accession of Ardashîr . . .	226,	39.
605,	900.	Real date of A. R. 900 . . .	270, A. D.	10.
647,	939.	Accession of Shahpûhar II . . .	309,	52.
713,	1000.	Real date of A. R. 1000 . . .	370,	118.
786,	1068.	Accession of Yazdakarđ II . . .	438,	191.
800,	1081.	Bd. date of A. R. 800 . . .	451,	205.
841,	1118.	Accession of Kavâd . . .	488,	246.
884,	1158.	Execution of the Mazdakites . . .	528,	289.
887,	1161.	Accession of Khûsrô I . . .	531,	292.
900,	1173.	Bd. date of A. R. 900 . . .	543,	305.
951,	1220.	Accession of Khûsrô II . . .	590,	356.
1000,	1265.	Bd. date of A. R. 1000 . . .	635,	405.
1017,	1281.	Death of Yazdakarđ III . . .	651,	422.

59. The object of preparing this statement has been to ascertain the reason for the intentional errors in the Bundahis chronology, and the probable period at which they were introduced. It has been mentioned, in § 57, that the effect of both the errors, which are not accidental, has been to postpone the end of the tenth millennium, but they also postpone the dates of some other events which are mentioned in the Zoroastrian legends.

60. Thus, we are told in Dk. VII, vii, 9, that benightedness arises after A.R. 400, which is postponed by the errors from B. C. 231 to 78, but both of these times seem to have been equally unpropitious to the Zoroastrians. Then we learn (ibid. 10, 11) that in the fifth and sixth centuries, say A.R. 440–560, orthodoxy is still upheld by four successive high-priests. This period is postponed by the errors from B. C. 191–71 to 156–36 (see p. xxxi, n. 2), and Zoroastrianism was probably flourishing the whole time. So far, no reason for the alterations can be discovered, as the vague description of events, supplied by the old writer, appears to be just as applicable to the original periods as to the altered ones.

¹ The basis of calculation is the real date of each event and real century, but the Bd. date of each Bd. century. The only Bd. data are 284 years from the death of Alexander to the accession of Ardashîr, and 460 years from the latter to the death of Yazdakarđ III, as stated in § 57.

61. We are further informed (Dk. VII, viii, 2-45) that much evil and misery occur in the ninth and tenth centuries (A.R. 800-1000), at all events until the birth of Aûshêdar (ibid. 55-57) in A.R. 971; and such events as war, invasion, fall of monarchy, oppression, persecution, infidelity, and apostasy are mentioned. Aûshêdar confers with the arch-angels in A.R. 1001 (ibid. 58-60), and the evils afterwards pass away till A.R. 1400-1500 (ibid. ix, 3), when frightful winters occur. The evil period A.R. 800-971 was originally A.D. 170-341, or from the middle of the reign of Vologeses III to the middle of that of Shahpûhar II. But the Bundahis postpones this period to A. D. 451-608, or from the time of the Armenian revolt in the reign of Yazdakard II, to that of the first total defeat of a Persian army by the Arabs near Dhû-Qâr in the reign of Khûsrô II. The evil times were probably expected to continue till the end of the millennium, or later, as in the case of Zaratûst himself; for Aûshêdar does not go to his conference till A.R. 1001, and might not be expected to begin to preach till A.R. 1011. These dates, originally A.D. 371-381, comprising the remainder of the reign of Shahpûhar II, would be altered by Bd. to A. D. 636-645, a period which includes the last two great battles with the Arabs, that decided the downfall of the Sâsânian dynasty, though king Yazdakard III lived some six years longer as a fugitive¹.

62. It is hardly possible that king Ardashîr (A.D. 226-241) and his chancellor Tanvasar, when collecting and revising their sacred books, would have compiled the original traditional system of chronology, however general might have been the terms in which the evils were described by the records they possessed, because it would have been a voluntary confession that they had no power to remedy the evils of their own time. But if they found the system in an ancient document, they might have been quite willing to admit that evils existed, owing to their enemies, which would have become much worse if they had not been mitigated by their own exertions. In fact, an old document prophesying evil which actually occurred at the time specified, could be used as evidence of the truth of their religion, and would therefore be carefully preserved. And it is quite certain that, if they had altered the chronology of an old document which foretold the time of the downfall of the monarchy, they could not have correctly guessed that time before the downfall occurred. For these reasons we must conclude that the original system of chronology, handed down by the Bundahis, was neither compiled nor altered in the time of Ardashîr.

¹ The authorities consulted, for Persian historical facts and dates, have been Nöldeke, Aufsätze zur persischen Geschichte; and A. von Gutschmid, Geschichte Irans und seiner Nachbarländer von Alexander dem Grossen bis zum Untergang der Arsaciden: edited by Nöldeke.

63. For the long reign of Shahpûhar II (A.D. 309-379) the original tradition predicted not only a continuation of evil times, but also the birth and education of a new apostle, Aûshêdar, for the next millennium, who was expected to put an end to evil for about four centuries. His birth was to take place in A. D. 341, and his conference was to commence in 371. These dates are so well defined that, if we could discover any important religious teacher to whom they could refer, we might be justified in believing that the original chronology was compiled in his time. Unfortunately, we know very little of the internal history of Persia during this reign; there was war with the Romans in 337-350 and 358-363, and on the eastern frontiers in the intervening period; also a persecution of the Christians, beginning about 339; all of which fairly represent the predicted evils.

64. Regarding the priesthood and religious history of the reign, we have only the traditions handed down in Pahlavi texts to guide us. In these we are told that Âtûrpâd, son of Mâraspend (Dk. VII, vii, 19), was born in the steel period (Dk. IX, viii, 4), and lived in the reign of king Shahpûhar II, son of Aûhar mazd (AV. p. 145 n), being high-priest over the religion (Dd. XXXVII, 36). He also collected and preserved the Nasks (Dk. VIII, i, 22), and, after he had proved his orthodoxy by ordeal (Sg. X, 70, 71), the king proclaimed his intention of not allowing any more heterodoxy (Dk. IV, 27¹). In his old age he obtained a son, after devout prayer, and named him Zarātûst (Pandnâmak, 1); but this son also bore the Avesta title of Avarethrabau (Dk. VII, vii, 20, 21; VIII, xiii, 18), who is called the son of Râstare-vaghent in Yt. XIII, 106, showing that this latter Avesta title was adopted by Âtûrpâd himself. Finally, we meet with another Âtûrpâd, son of Zarātûst, described in Peshotan's Dk. III, cxxxvii, 2, as high-priest in the reign of Yazdakard I (A.D. 399-420), son of Shahpûhar, and also mentioned in Pahl. Yas. p. 120, ll. 14, 15 Sp. (translated in Dk. VIII, i, 7 n).

65. We have here, evidently, three successive high-priests, father, son, and grandson, and all celebrated men. The father had been employed in collecting and revising, or probably translating, some of the sacred books, and then, after a religious discussion, submitted himself to the ordeal of melted metal, as a test of his orthodoxy. The king was convinced, and his proclamation meant persecution of the heterodox, such as was commenced about A.D. 339, as regards the Christians. So that we may safely assume that Âtûrpâd's ordeal took place shortly before this date, and probably shortly after 337, when the Roman war commenced. As we must also certainly assume that the original chronology could not have come into existence at a much later date than 341, when so remarkable an event as the birth of a new apostle was fixed by it to occur, we have to consider who this apostle could have been; and whether it may not have been intended to identify him with Âtûrpâd's own son.

66. In the first place, is such a suspicion consistent with known dates? To represent Aûshêdar, according to the original chronology, the son must have been born A.D. 341 (§ 63); and we may suppose that the time of Aûshêdar's conference (371) would represent the time of Âtûrpâd's death, when his son succeeded him in the high-priesthood. If Âtûrpâd were aged eighty-one at his death, he would have been fifty-one at the birth of his son, or approaching old age; and he would have been born in 290, or nineteen years before the king. His grandson may have been born in 365, when his father Zaratûst was twenty-four, and may have succeeded that father in the high-priesthood about 400, the second year of king Yazdakard I. As all these dates are reasonably consistent with the few facts that are known, there seems to be no impossibility in the hypothesis that the original chronology of Aûshêdar's birth may have had some connection with the date of the birth of Âtûrpâd's son. The dates assumed, with regard to these three high-priests, which may be slightly varied, are as follows:—

¹ See S. B. E., vol. xxxvii, p. 415.

Âtûrpâd,	born	290,	high-priest	320,	died	371.
Zaratûst,	"	341,	"	371,	"	400.
Âtûrpâd,	"	365,	"	400,	"	420, or later.

67. On the other hand, we must recollect that the time of the birth of Aûshêdar was not an isolated date which could be varied at pleasure, to suit any circumstances that might arise; but it was intimately connected with the dates of birth of three other apostles, which were each placed at the same distance from the ends of three other millenniums. It would perhaps be more difficult to suit a new millennial system of chronology, to the accidental year of a particular child's birth, than to have the child born in a particular year of an old system already existing. And, if so, it may be safer to assume that Âtûrpâd, knowing the year of the expected birth, took measures to secure the fulfilment of the prophecy, so far as the birth was concerned. If the child did not turn out so capable of regenerating the world as had been expected, that was a matter for posterity to explain. Under such circumstances of merely seeming fulfilment of a single particular, fraudulently obtained, the original prediction might be of any age.

68. It does not appear that the priestly councillors assembled by Khûsrô I (Byt. I, 7), made any alteration in the original chronology, although they slightly revised the Pahlavi Vendidad. In fact, the priests, who must have been long expecting the end of Zarātûst's millennium, were probably looking forward for the approaching downfall of the Sâsânian monarchy, which might readily be understood, as the surest sign of the termination of this period, from such statements as those in Dk. VII, viii, 1, 2. At any rate, the alterations in the chronology, for the purpose of postponing the end of the tenth millennium till A.D. 635, would not have been made till some time after the termination of the monarchy in 651, but probably long before the compilation of the Bundahis about 900. The effects of these alterations upon the dates of the evil ninth and tenth centuries, and upon those of the birth, conference, and preaching of Aûshêdar, have been already stated in § 61. And their object has evidently been to adapt the old predictions as much as possible to real events; for which purpose also, the predictions themselves have probably been often made more definite than they were originally.

69. It follows, from the foregoing investigation, that the original chronology must have existed A.D. 341, and, in fact, we have found no sufficient reason for supposing that it was compiled as late as Sâsânian times. While the alterations, we find in the Bundahis, could have hardly been made till after 651.

70. Regarding the age in which Zarātûst lived, the dates stated in the synopsis of traditional chronology (§ 55), are B.C. 660–583, while the reign of Vistâsp, which extends to the fabulous length of 120 years, or 660–540, evidently represents a short dynasty, including Hystaspes and his next four forefathers, if we accept the traditional identification of Vistâsp with the father of Darius I. But the names of those four forefathers, which are known on the unimpeachable authority of the Behistûn inscription of Darius himself, render it almost impossible to accept this traditional identification, as they differ totally from those of the forefathers of Vistâsp in the Avesta. The two dynasties are as follows:—

Behistûn : Hakhâmanis	Avesta : Kavi Kavâta
Kaispis	Kava Usa
Ariyârâmna	Kava Husrava
Arshâma	Aurvadâspa
Vistâspa	Kava Vistâspa ¹

Unless it can be shown that these two series of names have the same meaning in two different languages, there seems little chance of proving the identity of the two dynasties. We may, however, quote the instances of the high-priest Âtûrpâd = Âtare-pâta and his son Zaratûst = Zarathustra being called Râstare-vaghent and Avarethra-bau, respectively, in the Avesta (see § 64); but these latter names seem more like titles than translations.

71. The date of Zoroaster and his religion has formerly been fully discussed by Windischmann² and others, and the question has been lately re-examined by Williams Jackson³. He divides the ancient statements, that have been made on the subject, into three classes: those which declare that Zaratûst lived before B.C. 6000, those which associate his name with Ninus and Semiramis, and the native tradition which, as we have seen, places his life in the period B.C. 660-583. Singularly enough, the oldest writers, those who lived only two to four centuries after the traditional period of the lifetime of Zaratûst, are those who report that he lived some 6000 years before that period. Pliny the Elder (Nat. Hist. XXX, 2) quotes Eudoxus (B.C. 368) as stating that Zaratûst existed 6000 years before the death of Plato, that is, B.C. 6347, which is also confirmed by Aristotle. And he quotes Hermippus (about B.C. 250) as placing him 5000 years before the Trojan war, that is, B.C. 6184. A third mode of describing this period

¹ These were the reigning sovereigns, but the last two are descended from a collateral branch, and their actual pedigree is as follows:—Kavi Kavâta, Kavi Aipivanghu, Kavi Pisanangh, Manus, Uzava, Aurvadâspa, Kava Vistâspa (Bd. XXXI, 28, 29).

² Zoroastrische Studien, von Fr. Windischmann, edited by Spiegel, 1863; pp. 121-165, 260-313.

³ On the date of Zoroaster, by A. V. Williams Jackson; Journal of American Oriental Society, vol. xvii, pp. 1-22.

seems to have been used by Xanthus of Lydia (B.C. 500–450)¹ who stated that Zaratûst lived 6000 years before Xerxes, as quoted by Diogenes Laertius, that is, B.C. 6485.

72. Three or four other classical writers mention similar statements, and Jackson points out that these extravagant dates are probably owing to the European writers misunderstanding Persian statements with reference to the pre-existence of Zaratûst's Fravashi. It will, in fact, be seen from the synopsis (§ 55) that the traditional account is that the spiritual body of Zaratûst was framed together as early as the beginning of the fourth millennium, which occurred B.C. 6630, and this may be accepted as a close approximation to the three dates, B.C. 6347, 6184, and 6485, indicated by the ancient writers, considering that their statements are made in even thousands of years.

73. Pliny also mentions, on the authority of other writers who are not named, that another Zoroaster, a Proconnesian, lived a little before the time of Osthanes who accompanied Xerxes to Greece (B.C. 480). And, so far as time is concerned, this Zoroaster might have been the traditional Zaratûst who died 103 years before this journey of Osthanes.

74. The old statements about Zoroaster or Oxyartes, the Magian king of Bactria in the time of Ninus and Semiramis, can hardly refer to the traditional Zaratûst who is never represented as a king, although the supreme Zarathustra of the Avesta was apparently a ruling priest. The time in which this Bactrian lived is also very uncertain, for though Semiramis has recently been placed about B.C. 800, her position in Albîrûnî's tables is certainly 1200 years earlier.

75. It seems, therefore, that the ancient statements, regarding the date of Zaratûst, reported by Pliny and corroborated by a few other classical writers, can be fully explained from the traditional system of chronology used in Pahlavi texts, by identifying the classical Zoroaster of the seventh millennium B.C. with the traditional Zaratûst in his ante-natal spiritual state, after he had ceased to be a mere Fravashi, or primary idea, and had become an intelligent, moving, and personal existence, but still a spirit. While the later Zoroaster of Pliny, who flourished before the fifth century B.C., must have lived about the same time as the same traditional Zaratûst after he came into the worldly existence, and may reasonably be identified with him, although Pliny had little information to give about him.

¹ There are some doubts as to the correctness of these dates.

76. It will be noticed that this explanation depends entirely upon the peculiarly artificial system of the traditional chronology, in which the whole of time is assumed to consist of twelve millenniums devoted to different purposes; and if this particular system had not been in use at the time the statements, quoted by Pliny and Diogenes Laertius, were made, those statements could not have been explained as referring to the same individual. But if they do not refer to the same individual, we have only the options of rejecting all the statements, or believing an impossible date to be literally correct; neither of which decisions would be altogether satisfactory to a judicious mind. The only reasonable conclusion seems to be that the chronology based upon the twelve millenniums was in use in the fifth century B.C., about which time the earliest quoted statement seems to have been made.

77. It will also be observed that this millennial chronology is inextricably associated with the idea of the primeval existence of all good creations in the state of Fravashis. These are described as spiritual existences who remained three millenniums unthinking, unmoving, and intangible (Bd. I, 8); and the next three millenniums they still remained undisturbed by evil, mankind being represented, for that period, by Gâyômarô in the world (Bd. XXXIV, 1) and by the spiritual form of Zaratûst in heaven (Dk. VII, ii, 15), while the animals were symbolized by the primeval ox for the same period. Six millenniums, which are half the duration of time, were thus appropriated to Fravashis, spiritual and embodied, probably before the birth of Plato, if we may rely upon classical statements; and it must have been before this date that the series of millenniums was arranged for all future history, till Time was expected to merge once more into Eternity at the renovation of the universe.

78. As we have seen that Zoroastrian tradition is very consistent in fixing the date of Zaratûst's activity about the end of the seventh century B.C., it may be asked, why have Avesta scholars so strongly insisted upon its greater antiquity? They may have had several reasons, but three, at least, were important. First, they had the classical statements which, as we have seen (§ 71), generally placed Zaratûst as far back as the seventh millennium B.C., on the testimony of persons who lived from two to four centuries after the traditional date of Zaratûst's death. No one, of course, could believe in the literal accuracy of the number of millenniums, which referred, as we have seen, to an imaginary period of spiritual existence, but this number was considered merely as an exaggeration which might be reduced to any amount that seemed reasonable. At the same time, this evidence for antiquity was quite sufficient, in the second place, to discredit the traditional date, of which these old authorities seemed ignorant, though it was a period then comparatively recent. And, if this discredit had not been sufficient to shake the faith of Avesta scholars in the traditional date of Zaratûst, they still had a third reason for their scepticism, when they discovered that the language of the Avesta was not merely a sister of Sanskrit, but that a large portion of it was sister to the oldest Sanskrit with which they were acquainted, and which appeared to them certainly older than the time of Gautama Buddha, who lived about one generation later than the traditional Zaratûst.

79. How far Avesta scholars were justified in their conclusions must be left for future ages to determine; at present we have no really historical information about the origin of Zoroastrianism, and must still consider it as decidedly prehistoric; though, it may be admitted that the Parsi calendar, as used in Persia, so far agrees with tradition, that it still bears witness to its own original institution in the reign of Darius Hystaspes, as will be seen from the following details.

80. The Parsi year consists of twelve months, each consisting of thirty days, with five additional days added at the end of the year, and the total number of 365 days never varies, so that, whenever a leap-year occurs in our calendar, the beginning of the Parsi year retreats one day in the Christian calendar. In this manner, the total number of days which the beginning of the Parsi year has retreated, since the institution of their calendar, records the number of leap-years which would have occurred in the same period of Christian years, if the regular leap-years had existed the whole time; and four times the number of leap-years would be the total number of years. But as leap-years have not been used the whole time, we have to calculate from astronomical data.

81. In the first place, we want to know at what season the Parsi year originally began, and we learn this from Bd. XXV, 7, 20, where we are told that the winter of the rectified year ends with the five extra days, and the spring begins with the first month; which means that the rectified year begins with the vernal equinox. We also have to observe that, retreating at the rate of one day every four years, the beginning of the year retreats all round the year in 1460 years; and we know from general history that the period, with which we have to deal, is much more than 1460 years and less than 2920. Then we have to ascertain the exact length of the tropical year, which astronomers say is 365.2422 days, with an infinitesimal decrement, quite inappreciable in the period we have in view.

82. We may calculate back from any vernal equinox which occurs not too far from noon, say that of March 22, 1865, when the beginning of the Parsi year, according to Persian reckoning, had retreated to August 24, 1864, or 210 days, in addition to a previous retreat of a whole year of 365 days, or altogether 575 days since the establishment of the calendar. So that the difference between the Parsi year of 365 days and the correct tropical year of 365.2422 days had then accumulated to a total of 575 days. Dividing the accumulated error of 575 days by the annual increment of 0.2422 of a day, we obtain a quotient of 2374 years, including A.D. 1865, as the time in which this error had accumulated, and this carries us back to B.C. 510 as an approximate date of the establishment of the Parsi calendar, with the first day of the year coinciding with the vernal equinox.

83. This date is, however, liable to some modifications for errors of observation on the part of the ancient astronomers, one of which errors, being constantly in one direction, must be taken into account. These old observers were not aware of the effect of refraction, which always makes the night seem somewhat shorter than it is in reality ; and this would lead them to antedate the vernal equinox by rather more than a day ; so that they would observe an apparent equinox in B.C. 505 on the same day in the Parsi year as that on which the real equinox occurred in B.C. 510. The most probable date of the establishment of the Parsi calendar is therefore B.C. 505, with a margin of four to eight years in either direction for accidental errors of observation.

84. A few years before this period we know, from the cuneiform inscriptions of Behistûn, that Darius Hystaspes used an older calendar, when recording his early victories over insurgents, which consolidated his empire. It was a time when he was introducing many reforms in the government, and, being a believer in Auramazdâ, his most influential advisers would probably be Zoroastrian priests. If they thought it necessary to reform the old calendar, the adoption of strictly Zoroastrian names for the new months and days in the Parsi calendar would be fully explained.

85. But, besides this ordinary civil calendar, in which new-year's day was constantly retreating, the Persians had a rectified calendar for religious purposes, which intercalated an extra month from time to time, for the purpose of bringing new-year's day forward again to the vernal equinox, and restoring the festivals to their proper seasons. It is this calendar which is used in Bd. XXV, and its days and months are distinguished by the epithet vəhîkākîg (veh + îk + ak + îg), 'belonging to what is really good,' or vehîkāk, 'belonging to the really good,' which, in this connection, may be best expressed by the word 'rectified.'

86. This intercalation is described by Albîrûnî in various passages¹ which inform us that, after the new-year's day had retreated more than a month from the vernal equinox, the king would order the priests to arrange for the solemn proclamation of an extra month to be intercalated, between the last month of the year and the five extra days, by merely moving those five days from the end of the twelfth month to the end of the first month of the next year. The effect of this was to put an extra month into the earlier year which, beginning with the first month, would also end with the first month augmented by the five extra days as the usual termination of the year. All following years would begin with the second month, and end with the first month and the five extra days, until the second intercalation, when a year of thirteen months and five days would be again obtained, by merely moving the five extra days to the end of the second month which would thus become the last month of the year, while the third month would begin the year until the third intercalation. By these means, any number of intercalations could be made without any additional month being named, and the position of the five extra days always indicated the end of the rectified year, and that the rectified first month, which followed them, was to become the last month of the preceding year at the next rectification, or intercalation.

87. If the Parsi calendar, as used in Persia, were established B.C. 505, as we have calculated, it ought to have been rectified by an intercalation of one month about each of the following years:—B.C. 381, 257, 133, 10, A.D. 115, 239, 363, 487, 610. Albîrûnî (p. 121), however, has recorded only one intercalation of two months in the time of Yazdakard I (A.D. 399–420), son of Shahpûhar, when the five extra days were removed to the end of the original eighth month Âbân, where they remained until Albîrûnî's own time (Alb. p. 56), about A.D. 1000. The reason for intercalating two months at once, was because the time for the seventh intercalation (A.D. 363) was already long past; so the eighth was added three or four score years in advance, being due in 487.

¹ Sachau's Albîrûnî's Chronology of Ancient Nations, pp. 12, 13, 38, 53–56, 121, 184, 185, 220, 221.

88. All that Albîrûnî says about this double intercalation is quite in accordance with the original establishment of the calendar by Darius Hystaspes, and would render any date more than thirty-seven years later than his reign impossible¹. With regard to the earlier intercalations (which must have occurred to account for the movement of the five extra days) that of A.D. 115 was neither in the reign of Vologeses I, nor in that of Vologeses III, one of whom must have been the Askânian renovator of the Avesta. That of A.D. 239, if carried out punctually, would have been at the extreme end of the reign of Ardashîr; but the intercalations seem to have been usually delayed, as in the case of that of 363 which was delayed for thirty to fifty years, although it ought to have been carried out under the direction of one of those ultra-orthodox high-priests, Âtûrpâd son of Mâraspend, or his son Zaratûst, in the reign of Shahpûhar II.

89. It is worthy of notice that the names of both the days and months, which have come down to us in this calendar of Darius, include the names of the six Amesha-spentas, which, according to Darmesteter's hypothesis, were not invented till the time of Vologeses I, in the first century A.D. We have positive evidence that the calendar of twelve months of thirty days each, with five extra days to complete the year, must have been established in the time of Darius. This fact being recorded mechanically by the extent of the retreat of the Persian Parsis' new-year's day down to the present time, and by the number of months intercalated in their religious calendar down to the fifth century A.D., being known from the position of the five extra days in the rectified calendar. We have no evidence of any change of names having been made in this calendar at any time ; and only positive and indisputable evidence could be admitted, because reformers of calendars are hardly ever satisfied with mere change of names, and the calendar itself is a permanent witness that no alteration can have been made in any other particular, since the time of Darius.

¹ If the calendar had been established thirty-eight years after the death of Darius, the seventh intercalation would not have been due till one year after the death of Yazdakard I.

90. Darmesteter's theory of a late origin for the Avesta having been mentioned, it may be allowable to add, that the likelihood of this theory does not increase upon closer examination. It is a brilliant hypothesis, very carefully prepared to meet ordinary criticism ; but it does not appear to convince Avesta scholars in general, for want of sufficient evidence, as it is very necessary to distinguish carefully between possibilities and probabilities ; the former being not admissible as evidence, unless corroborated by positive facts. Its chief use has been in checking the tendency to exaggerate the age of the Avesta, but it seems itself to be an exaggeration in the opposite direction, a returning swing of the ever-restless pendulum of judgment. On the other hand, the traditional age of the religion cannot be fairly considered as exaggerated, for the chief difficulty in accepting it as sufficiently old, is that the nearer our researches penetrate to that time the less real light we obtain.

E. W. WEST.

April, 1897.

ABBREVIATIONS USED IN THIS VOLUME.

A. D. for Anno Domini; Alb. for Albîrûnî's Chronology of Ancient Nations, translated by Sachau; A. R. for Anno Religionis; Ar. for Arabic; A. V. for the Book of Ardâ-Vîrâf; Av. for Avesta; B for Bombay MS. of Dînkard, brought from Irân in 1783; B. C. for Before Christ; Bd. for Bundahis (S. B. E. v, 1-151), and Band (volume); Beh. for Behistûn inscription; BK for an old copy of K35, made when this MS. was more complete than it is now; B. R. for Before the Religion; Byt. for Bahman Yast (S. B. E. v, 189-235); Chald. for Chaldee; Chap. for chapter; Chaps. for chapters; Dd. for Dâdistân-î Dînik (S. B. E. xviii, 1-276); Dk. for Dînkard (S. B. E. xxxvii, 1-397, 406-418, and this volume); ed. for editor or edition; Ep. for Epistles of Mânûskîhar (S. B. E. xviii, 277-366); Études irân. for Études irâniennes; Farh. Oîm for Farhang-i Oîm-aêvak; gen. for genitive case; Gesch. der Sas. for Geschichte der Perser und Araber zur Zeit der Sâsâniden; Gf. for the Tale of Gôst-î Fryânô; Heb. for Hebrew; Ibid. for ibidem; Ind. vers. for Indian version; J. for Jâmâsp's old MS.; K for University Library at Kopenhagen; L for India Office Library at London; l. for line; ll. for lines; Mkh. for Mainyô-i Khirad (S. B. E. xxiv, 1-113); MS. for manuscript; MSS. for manuscripts; n. for footnote; nom. for nominative case; p. for page; Pahl. for Pahlavi; Pers. for Persian; pp. for pages; Pt. for Peshotan's old MS.; S. B. E. for Sacred Books of the East; Sd. for Sad-dar (S. B. E. xxiv, 253-361); Sg. for Sikand-gumânîk Vigâr (S. B. E. xxiv, 115-251); Sls. for Shâyast-lâ-shâyast (S. B. E. v, 237-406); Sp. for Spiegel's edition; T for Tehmuras's MS. of Dd., Zs., &c.; Vd. for Vendidad, ed. Geldner; Vig. for Vigîrkard-î Dînik; Visp. for Visperad, ed. Geldner; vol. for volume; Westerg. Frag. for Westergaard's Fragments; Yas. for Yasna, ed. Geldner; Yt. for Yast, ed. Geldner; YZ. for Geiger's Yâtkâr-i Zarîrân; Z. for Zaratûst; Zs. for Selections of Zâd-spam, first series.

MARVELS OF ZOROASTRIANISM

AS STATED IN

THE SEVENTH AND FIFTH BOOKS

OF THE

DĪNKARD

AND IN THE

SELECTIONS OF ZÂD-SPARAM

CHAPTERS XII-XXIV.

OBSERVATIONS.

1. For all divisions into chapters and sections the translator is chiefly responsible, as the stops found in the manuscripts are not used systematically.

2. Italics are used for any English words which are not expressed, or fully understood, in the original text, but are added to complete the sense of the translation.

3. Italics occurring in Oriental words, or names, represent certain peculiar Oriental letters (see the 'Transliteration of Oriental Alphabets' at the end of this volume), or certain abbreviated modes of writing Pahlavi letters. Italic a, ā, b, d, e, ē, h, i, ī, k, l, p, r, sh, u, v, zd indicate no change of pronunciation; but g should be sounded like j, hv like wh, k like ch in 'church,' s like sh, and Avesta z like French j.

4. In the translation words in parentheses are merely explanatory of those that precede them, and often translate Pahlavi glosses in the original text.

5. For the meaning of the abbreviations, used in the notes, see the explanatory list after the Introduction.

6. The manuscripts used for the Dīnkard are :—

B (written A.D. 1659), the only independent authority for Book VII; it was brought from Irān to Surat in 1783, and one folio, at the end of Chap. iv, appears to be missing.

K 43 (written A.D. 1594 and later), No. 43 in the University Library at Kopenhagen, which contains another independent authority for Book V in its later portion.

7. The manuscripts used for the Selections of Zād-spāram are :—

K 35 (probably written A.D. 1572), No. 35 in the same library, which was brought from Irān by Prof. Westergaard in 1843, along with No. 43.

T, a copy of a MS. about fifty years older, belonging to Ervad Tehmuras Dinshawji Ankalesaria of Bombay.

MARVELS OF ZOROASTRIANISM.

DĪNKARD.—BOOK VII.

CHAPTER I.

1. For the gratification of the creator Aûharmazd, even through the complete superiority of the Mazda-worshipping religion, adorned by omniscience, in the world.

2. The seventh book is about the marvellousness of the greatest reminder of the Mazda-worshipping religion, Zaratûst¹ of the Spitâmas; also of the mindfulness of that illustrious one by Aûharmazd, and of his religion, arisen through the word of Aûharmazd, being blessed among those of the region of king Vistâsp; from the Exposition of the Good Religion².

3. But, before that, there is purposely written whatever was the progress of the character and effect of the good religion and its first acceptor in the spiritual and worldly existences; and, after that,

¹ Nearly always spelt Zaratûkhsht in the MS., the counterpart of the Persian form Zaratuhsht or Zaraduhsht.

² This Nikêzô-î Vêh-dênô was evidently the name of an older book, from which the Dînkard quotes much of its information on religious matters.

the prophets, apostles, and upholders in the period as far as Zaratûst, whose guardian spirit is revered, and their religion, which is this, due to the utterance and splendour with which they have been blessed with prophecy among mankind ¹.

4. According to the Mazda-worshipping religion and the Exposition of the Good Religion, it is the nature of Aûharmazd's disposition and his knowledge as to the complete obtainment of the first creature, the archangel Vohûmanô, and the first progress spiritually among the archangels and the other sacred beings of the spiritual and worldly existences, and materially in Gâyômarô, the first man, through concurrent and complete acceptance from the creator Aûharmazd, and the needful atonement in his own period through meditation, and the smiting thereby of the fiend of that period and the opposition thereof, by thinking of the creator's teaching, that constitute the whole of that first utterance ² of the religion of Aûharmazd.

5. According to the declaration of the good religion about the production of existence, which is the praise of him who was the causer of existence and creator, the beneficent spirit, the first craving among mankind was this, that 'we be happy and be the creation of Aûharmazd;' and the last, as regards the preservation of a remedy for mankind, is this, that 'the best is this, that the formation of lives be perfect now, though rendered sickly by him; and the spiritual existences of mankind be so now, though the destroyer has come to the creatures.' 6. For human beings of the lineage of Gâyômarđ this is the one thing good, when they shall perform their duty and good works; and one's work is to smite one's own opposing fiend; an instance presentable to any of the lineage, that it is important for every one of you to smite his own opposing fiend, is the freedom from molestation which occurs thereby, and the non-contamination of the creatures by the destroyer; and it is that effect which the creator of creation has produced for it.

¹ This preliminary matter occupies the whole of Chap. I.

² The Yathâ-ahû-vairyô, or most sacred religious formula of the Parsis.

7. And this, too, is declared by the good religion, that through a true-spoken statement Gâyômarđ attained to the good spiritual lordship¹ of the arch-angels (that is, he was fit for the supreme heaven²).

8. And after Gâyômarđ, at various periods until the ever-favouring³ Zaratûst of the Sptâmas, whose guardian spirit is revered; much also was his acquaintance with knowledge, and his work was the preservation of the mankind of that time in which he came into notice; moreover he became requisite for conference with the creator; and because of their superior carrying on of destiny⁴, by command of the

¹ Reading hû-ahûîh, Av. hvanghevi. This section is one of the numerous quotations from the Pahlavi version of a lost Avesta text. When we are furnished with a complete Pahl.-Av. vocabulary, it will be possible to recover much of the original Avesta of such quotations, with some degree of certainty.

² Pahl. garôdmânîg. Such glosses and comments, inserted by the Pahlavi translator, are always marked as parenthetical.

³ Pahl. hamâî-bâhar; it might be read hamâî-bîdâr, 'ever vigilant.'

⁴ Reading vakhsh (= Pers. bakhsh), which is usually expressed by its Zvâris equivalent gadđ (traditionally gadman), and this means both 'destiny' and 'the star, or glory, of destiny' (Av. hvarenô, Pers. khura). Here the first letter of vakhsh is omitted, and this error converts the word into khayâ, the Zvâris of gân, 'life.'

creator, it is declared in the good religion, that the combined titles of prophet (vakhshvar), acceptor, and promoter are enumerated of them.

9. As Gâyômarđ passed away, *it*¹ came to Masyê and Masyâôi², the second of worldly beings who were the progeny of Gâyômarđ the first; and it is declared, by the word of Aûharmazd, that he spoke to them, when they had been produced by him, thus: 'You are the men I produce, you are the parents of the parents of all embodied existence; and so do you men not worship the demons, for the possession of complete mindfulness is the best thing produced by me for you, so that you may fully observe duty and ordinances with complete mindfulness.' 10. And the bountifulness of Aûharmazd was extolled by them, and they went on with their own duty; they also performed the will of the creator, enjoyed the advantage of the many duties of the world, and practised next-of-kin marriage for procreation, union, and the complete progress of the creations in the world, which are the best good works of mankind. 11. The creator showed them the sowing of corn, as declared in the words of Aûharmazd thus: 'This is thine, O Masyê! which is an ox; thine, too, is this corn; and thine those other appliances; henceforth thou shouldst know them well.'

This must have also occurred twice in a previous copy of the MS. in § 28, where the word is written gân, 'life,' in the MS. B. In S. B. E., vol. xxxvii, Dk. VIII, xiii, 20, vakhsh has been erroneously translated 'word.'

¹ The glorious destiny. §§ 9 and 10 have been previously translated in S. B. E., vol. xviii, pp. 411, 412.

² Literally 'man and woman' who grew up as plants from the earth fertilized by Gâyômarđ, the prototype of the human race; see Bd. XV, 1-5.

12. This, too, is declared by the good religion, that Aûharmazd spoke to Hadish¹, one of the sacred beings thoroughly worthy through righteousness, thus: 'O Hadish, who art thoroughly worthy through righteousness! thou shouldst proceed to Masyê and Masyâôî, thou shouldst procure thy² corn and bread from Masyê and Masyâôî, and shouldst bless theirs thus: "This corn comes up owing to you, and, as it came unto you from Aûharmazd and the archangels, may the corn extend from you unto your descendants without disturbance from the demons;" and two Ahunavairs³ are to be recited for the staying away of the demon and fiend.' 13. And Hadish, the thoroughly worthy through righteousness, went to Masyê and Masyâôî, and he procured his corn and bread from Masyê and Masyâôî, and it was given by them; he also blessed them thus: 'May this corn come up from you, as from the archangels! as it came unto you from Aûharmazd and the archangels, may it extend from you unto your descendants, without disturbance from the demons;' and two Ahunavairs were recited by him, for the staying away of the demon and fiend.

14. And, owing to the explanation of the sacred beings, Masyê and Masyâôî attained also to the manufacture of clothing, the tending of sheep, house-building, and primitive carpentry, the agriculture and husbandry of the ancients, and the memory of their original state; and these proceeded from them through their lineage, presenting an example and ¹ Mentioned in Visp. i, 9 : ii, 11 : ix, 5, and recognized as a spirit in Pahl. Visp. i, 31 (Sp.). The spirit who assists the husbandman, see Études irân. ii, 201.

² The MS. has 'his,' as in § 13, by mistake.

³ Two of the sacred Yathâ-ahû-vairyô formulas.

spreading in the world, to artificers among the plenitude of artificers.

15. And after that, the destiny to be carried on came to Sâmak¹, who was their son, and the descent of their collateral descendants was on to each region and each quarter of the world, to that extent which the creator chose for that region and quarter; and thereby there was a completion of the progress and spreading of mankind into the various regions and quarters.

16. At another time it came to Vâêgered and Hôshâng² of the early law (pês-dâd), for providing in the world the law of husbandry, or cultivation of the world, and of sovereignty or protection of the world. 17. And through their companionship and united force, given by religion, the sovereignty and cultivation of the world were prepared through progress and a succession of provisions of Aûharmazd's creatures, as well as the religion appointed by Aûharmazd. 18. And through that glory of destiny (gadâ) two-thirds of the demons of Mâzanô³ and the seven evil-instructed *ones*⁴ of Aêshm were destroyed by Hôshâng.

19. After that it came to Tâkhmôrup⁵ the well-armed, and through that glory the demon and evil mankind, the wizard and witch, were smitten by him; idolatry was also cast out by him, and he propagated in his time the reverence and service of the creator; the evil spirit, converted into the shape of a horse, was also carrying him for thirty winters.

¹ See Bd. XV, 24-26.

² Grandsons of Sâmak, see Bd. XV, 28, and Sachau's Albirûnî's Chronology of Ancient Nations, pp. 206, 212.

³ The idolators of Mâzandarân. See Yt. XIX, 26.

⁴ Called 'seven powers' in Bd. XXVIII, 15.

⁵ See Bd. XXXI, 2, and Yt. XIX, 28, 29.

20. And it came, at another time, for the conference with Aûharmazd, to Yim¹ the splendid, the son of Vîvangha; and owing to his accepting the four classes of the religion, which are priesthood, warriorship, husbandry, and artisanship, there are the four classes which are priesthood, warriorship, husbandry, and artisanship, and thereby the world was improved, extended, and developed; he also rendered even the creatures, in a measure, immortal, undecaying, hungerless, thirstless, plentiful, and fully-settled. 21. And in the good religion² it is declared, by the word of the creator Aûharmazd to Yim, thus: 'Then do thou widen my world! (that is, make up its measure more), then do thou extend my world! (that is, make it up larger), and then thou shouldst accept from me the protection, nourishment, and chieftainship of the world; and do thou effect such watchfulness over it, that no one shall be able to occasion the wounding or injury of another.'

22. And this was accepted and done by Yim, as Aûharmazd commanded him; and through the same glory he widened the earth three-thirds larger than that which it was theretofore. 23. And, in that realm of his, the cattle and men of the realm were made immortal by him, and the other creations, water, vegetation, and the various foods, imperishable.

24. And this, too, is declared by the good religion, that the world was made by him like the supreme heaven in pleasantness; also the enclosure made by Yim, constructed by him according to all the commands of the creator³, about guarding the creatures from perishing through the winter of

¹ See Bd. XXXI, 3-5, and Yt. XIX, 31-33.

² In Vd. II, 4.

³ As detailed in Vd. II, 22-31, 40, 41.

Mahrkûs, and likewise many other wonders are reported by the good religion.

25. And it came, at another time, by command of the creator, to Frêdûn the Âspîgân ¹ when he was in the pregnant womb, owing to the share of husbandry in the avocations of the religion, through allotment from the glory of Yim, and through its triumphant splendour. 26. And Frêdûn, through that triumphant splendour, became a responder to Dahâk ² from the pregnant womb, and that degraded fiend was averted and paralysed by him; having come to nine years of age, he proceeded about his destruction, and through that victory Dahâk was smitten by him ³, the creatures were saved and relieved thereby, those of Mâzandar and Mâda were smitten, their ravage and mischief were removed from the region of Khvanîras, and the region of Khvanîras was preserved for his three sons. 27. And owing to his husbandry, which is the third avocation of the religion, pestilence and disease were disturbed by the medical treatment even of pestilence itself, and he exhibited to mankind also many other wonders produced and useful occupation for the world.

28. And, in the life-time of Frêdûn, the same destiny came to Atrik ⁴, son of Frêdûn, owing to introduction by the creator, and was diffused in him, and he practised humility; the life ⁵ which is perfect is brought through a prayer from his father Frêdûn,

¹ See Bd. XXXI, 7, 8, and Yt. XIII, 131; XIX, 36.

² The Arab usurper, or usurping dynasty, that conquered Yim in his old age; see Bd. XXXI, 5, 6.

³ See Yt. XIX, 37.

⁴ See Bd. XXXI, 9, 10.

⁵ Probably 'destiny;' the initial letter of vakhsh, 'destiny,' has been omitted, and this blunder converts the word into khayâ, 'life.'

and that life ¹ came to him from the creator through the blessing of Frêdûn.

29. And it came, through his mother, to a descendant of Frêdûn and descendant of Aîrlê; it proceeded with the angel Nêryôsang to Mânûskîhar ², and its entire progress was in the lineage of Aîrlê. 30. And it came to Mânûskîhar, the monarch of Irân, and through it many wonder-wrought actions were performed by him; he smote Salm and Tûg in revenge for Aîrlê ³, he was a responder to the superfluities of foreign countries, he arranged the realm of Irân, improved and fertilised the land of Irân, and made the country of Irân victorious over foreigners.

31. At another time it came to Aûzôbô, son of Tûmâsp ⁴, a descendant of Mânûskîhar the monarch of Irân; and, through that destiny and glory combined, the new-born came to mature activity and the proportions of a man during childhood, through agriculture; he disclosed his lamenting mother to the countries of Irân, he marched on to the destruction of foreigners, to drive out and make them outcast from the land of Irân; he also defeated the village-terrifier of the country of Irân, the wizard who frightened his father and fellow-immortals, Frangrâsiyâk of Tûr ⁵; and he developed and ferti-

¹ See note 5 on preceding page.

² Here spelt Nêresang and Mânûsr. The former is the usual spiritual messenger of Aûharmazd; and for the lineage of the latter see Bd. XXXI, 9-14. It appears that the glorious destiny was preserved by the angel Nêryôsang for some generations, and he conveyed it to the grandfather of Mânûskîhar (see Chap. II, 70).

³ The three sons of Frêdûn, among whom he divided his dominions, with the usual result of triumvirates.

⁴ See Bd. XXXI, 23; XXXIV, 6.

⁵ See Yt. XIX, 56-64, 77, 82, 93, and Bd. XXXI, 14, 15, 18, 21, 22, 35; XXXIV, 6; where the Av. form Frangrasyan is further lised the country of Irân, and increased the many streams and cultivated lands in the country of Irân.

32. At another time it came to Kerêšaspô the Sâman¹, owing to the share of warriorship which is the second avocation of the religion, through allotment from the glory of Yim²; and, through it, the serpent Srôbôvar which was swallowing horses and swallowing men, the golden-heeled demon Gandarepô, and much other production of adversity by the demon and the fiend—the murderess of the creatures—were destroyed by him.

33. At another time it came to Kaš-Kobâd³, the progenitor of the Kayâns; through it he arranged the realm of Irân, he united the sovereignty with himself in the Kayân race, and he thereby occasioned much splendour and actions of advantage to the creatures.

34. And it came to Pâtakhsrôbô⁴, son of Aîryêshvâ⁵, son of Tâz, who was king of the Arabs, through the mindfulness of the archangel Ashavahistô, and his enquiry about it from its own tribe⁶—for the demon of greediness (âzô), with one similarly corrupted into Frâšyâv, as it is also hereafter in Chap. II, 68; Zs. XII, 3.

¹ A famous hero whose exploits, like those of Hercules, have given birth to many legends; see S. B. E., vol. xviii, pp. 369–382.

² Compare § 25.

³ See Yt. XIX, 71; Bd. XXXI, 24, 25, 28; XXXIV, 7.

⁴ Or Pâtâsrôbô, spelt Pâtsrôbô in Pahl. Vd. XX, 4 (Sp.).

⁵ Or Aîryêshnîg; evidently the same as Virafsang in Bd. XXXI, 6, which is spelt Avirafshanêg and Âirafshanig in two MSS. of the Irânian Bundahis. Hence we may conclude that Pâtakhsrôbô was a brother of Zâînîgâv, and a great-uncle of Dahâk; but how his daughters could have been married to the three sons of Frêdûn, as stated in the Kîtrâdâd Nask (see Dk. VIII, xiii, 9), is a chronological difficulty that throws doubt upon this identification.

⁶ The people of the primitive faith, who are supposed to have destined, had rushed for the destruction of him who was very gentle to that tribe ¹—as he had a full inclination for the ascendancy of the portion whose guidance to the lofty priestly master was owing to the archangel Ashavahistô, just as the fish image ² of that other portion was for falling into the river ; and it is declared that he came to the ceremonial of Zarâtûst.

35. At another time it came to Kat-Arsh and his brothers ³, the descendants of Kobâd ; through it they have been all-experienced and powerful, heedful and performing wonders ; and the eldest brother of them, Kat-Ûs, seized upon the sovereignty of the seven regions, and became very illustrious and full of glory. 36. At the same time it came to Aôshnar ⁴ who became fully sagacious (pûr-zîr), owing to the glory of Yim, when he was in his mother's womb, and many wonders were taught by him to his mother, through speaking from the mother's womb ; also at his birth he vanquished the maleficent spirit by uttering answers to the questions of the deadly Frâkîh the demon-worshipper. 37. He also attained to the chancellorship (farmâdârîh) of Kat-Ûs, and became administrator (râyintâr) in his realm of the seven regions ; the frontier speech (vîmand-gôbisnîh) was also explained and taught by him, already practised most of the duties upheld by Zarathustra before his appearance as a reformer.

¹ Indicating that the Arab subjects of the king had revolted, because he favoured those of the primitive faith who, no doubt, gained further favour by putting down the rebellion.

² Or it may be 'fish priest,' as karapô, 'a heathen priest,' and kerpô, 'shape, image,' are written alike in Pahlavi letters.

³ See Yt. XIX, 71 ; Bd. XXXI, 25.

⁴ See Yt. XIII, 131 ; Dd. XLVIII, 33.

and much other learning of advantage to mankind who are unaffected by the utterance of replies of a foreigner; he also advised the Irânian country with the best-instructed counsel.

38. And its coming to Kaī-Sīyāvakhsh¹ the illustrious, through the wondrous-formed Kangdez being held by him for the retention of protection for the much splendour and suitable glory of the religion, from which the restoration of time, the re-arrangement of the realm of Irân, and the reunion of power and triumph with the religion of Aûharmazd are manifest.

39. It came to Kaī-Khûsrôī², son of Sīyāvakhsh, and through it he smote and vanquished Frangrâstyâk³ of Tûr, the wizard, and his fellow-miscreation Kêrsêvazd⁴ of those of Vakgir⁵, and many other very evil devastators of the world; he also joined in the destruction of that idol-temple which was on the shore of Lake Kêkast⁶, and demolished that fiendishness which was awful. 40. On account of the desirableness of means for the renovation of the universe, he is also on a throne (namêkô), which is assuredly selected by that destiny, at a secret place where there is an immortal preserver for his body until the renovation, through the will of the creator.

41. And it came from him, after Zaratûst of the Spîtâmas came to the conference of the creator

¹ See Yt. XIX, 71, 77; Bd. XXXI, 25; Byt. III, 25, 26.

² See Yt. XIX, 74, 77, 93; Bd. XXXI, 25.

³ See § 31.

⁴ Brother of Frangrâstyâk, see Yt. XIX, 77; Bd. XXXI, 15.

⁵ Reading Vakgiragânô, probably the inhabitants of the Bakyîr mountain, mentioned in Bd. XII, 2, 20 as a stronghold of Frâsiyâv (= Frangrâstyâk).

⁶ See Bd. XVII, 7; Mkh. II, 95.

Aûharmazd, and accepted from the omniscient creator Aûharmazd unmixed freedom from pollution, the comprehensive and also recited acquaintance with the knowledge and work of priesthood, warriorship, husbandry, and artisanship, and the separate portions of the Mazda-worshipping revelation (dênô) brought to king Kai-Vistâsp by command of the creator, illuminated by the great splendour in that supreme sovereign of the sacred beings, and propagated by the learned of the region, in the regions which are seven, through the good eloquence which is owing to the succession of creatures until the renovation of the universe. 42. And through its production by those who will be his sons, Aûshêdar, Aûshêdar-mâh, and Sôshâns¹, the renovation in the existence of the creatures of Aûharmazd is immortal; and a more remindful statement of its splendour, glory, and marvellousness is a statement that is written and found below².

43. And there have also been others before Zarâtûst, the prophet (vakhshvar) of desired fame in the Mazda-worshipping religion; for it is declared that, at times, some came from the spiritual beings to him who was more of a leader, and mankind have become as captivated by the solicitation and interrogation of that affair, as now by the solicitation and interrogation of the religion; the necessity for that period is not now necessary, because all mankind are made acquainted with the religion, and Zaratûst of the Spîtâmas, whose guardian spirit is righteous, is to be revered.

¹ The Pahlavi transcripts of the Avesta names, Ukhshyad-ereta, Ukhshyad-nemangh, and Saoshyâs, of the three apostles expected to revive and renovate the Parsi religion in successive millenniums. According to the imperfect chronology of the Bundahis, the millennium of Aushêdar-mâh has now nearly one-fourth elapsed.

² See Chap. XI, 7-11.

44. Now, that which is declared in the world is written, about the splendour, glory, and marvellousness of the prophet of the Mazda-worshipping religion, the best of creations, whose guardian spirit is revered, Zaratûst of the Spîtâmas; and ten chapters are published here, as to the information from the Avesta, and in benediction of the religion of Aûharmazd¹.

45. That of it which is before the birth of that glorious one from his mother in the present world.

46. That of it which is from the birth of that illustrious one onwards, till his coming to a conference with Aûharmazd.

47. That of it which is from the conference onwards, till his pre-eminence over prophecy in the world, and the acceptance of the religion by the exalted Kaî-Vistâsp.

48. That of it which is onwards from that, till the departure (vîkhêzô) of that pure soul to the existence which is best.

49. That of it which is also successively after that, in the reign of the obedient king Kaî-Vistâsp.

50. That of it which is after that, until the collapse (angâvisnô) of the sovereignty of Irân.

51. That of it which is also after that, until the end of the millennium of Zaratûst and the arrival of Aûshêdar.

52. That of it which is also after that, until the end of the millennium of Aûshêdar and the arrival of Aûshêdar-mâh.

¹ Then follow the headings of these ten Chapters (II to XI).

53. That of it which is also after that, until the end of the millennium of Aûshêdar-mâh and the arrival of Sôshâns.

54. And that of it from the arrival of the Triumphant Benefiter, until the wonder of the renovation and future existence; a statement of them each separately.

CHAPTER II.

1. About the marvellousness of the manifestations before ¹ the birth of that most auspicious of offsprings from his mother ².

2. One marvel is this which is declared, that the creator passed on that glory of Zaratûst through the material existences of the creatures ³ to Zaratûst; when the command arose from Aûhar-mazd, the coming of that glory from the spiritual existence to the worldly, and to the material substance (mâdîyâtö) of Zaratûst, is manifested as a great wonder to the multitude (val kabadânö).

3. Just as revelation mentions it thus: 'Thereupon, when Aûharmazd had produced the material (dahisnö) of Zaratûst, the glory then, in the presence of Aûharmazd, fled on towards the material of Zaratûst, on to that germ; from that germ it fled on, on *to the light which is endless*¹; from the light which is endless² it fled on, on to that of the sun; from that of the sun it fled on, on to the moon; from that moon it fled on, on to those stars; from those stars it fled on, on to the fire which was in the house of Zôis³; and from that fire it fled on, on to the wife of Frâhîmravanâ-zôis⁴, when she brought forth that girl who became the mother of Zaratûst.

¹ The MS. has patas for pês.

² The contents of this chapter are thus mentioned in the summary of the Spend Nask (Dk. VIII, xiv, 1 in S.B.E., vol. xxxvii, p. 31):—'The Spend contains particulars about the origin and combination of the material existence, guardian spirit, and soul (or glory) of Zaratûst; how the creation of each one occurred in the spiritual existence, and in what mode it was produced for the worldly existence; how their connection with the parents arose, the coming of the parents together, the combination in the mother, and the birth from the mother; and whatever is on the same subject.'

³ The writer uses two Arabic words: mâdîyâtö-i 'halqö.'

4. Of that splendour, escaped at the same time into the earth and into the sky, the father-in-law's ignorance is declared, so that it is said by those in the village of the more instructed and invoking Zôis⁵, as to the self-combustion which burns the fire, that fuel is not necessary for its use. 5. Then they went on to the governor (kêdö), and he explained to them concerning that same (that is, he spoke to them) thus: 'The full glory of embodied existence

¹ Perplexed by the repetitions, some copyist has evidently omitted this phrase by mistake.

² Pahl. anagar, a transcript of Av. anaghra which is always translated by Pahl. asar, 'endless.' The 'endless light' is the abode of Aûharmazd, see Bd. I, 2.

³ Written in Pâzand.

⁴ Also written in Pâzand. In Bd. XXXII, 10, it is stated that 'the name of the father of the mother of Zaratûst was Frâhimravâ' (or Fereâhimruvânâ in the Irânian version); but very little reliance can be placed on such Pâzand readings of names originally written in Pahlavi.

⁵ Here written in Pahlavi letters which can also be read Zandîh. In the text, the two preceding adjectives, farhakhtar va-khvân, might be read Farâkht-ruvânân as the beginning of the name. But, as it stands, the text implies that Zôis, the father-in-law of his son Frâhîm-ravanâ's wife, was the master of the house, which is the usual oriental arrangement.

is the glory of life apart from the body, so that all diligence devoid of this is only movement.'

6. And it is declared that the demons, on account of their defeat by that glory in maintaining¹ adversity for the girl, were bringing on to that district three armaments (hênô), winter, the demon of pestilence, and oppressive enemies; and a suspicion was cast by them into the minds of those of the district, that this harm happened to the district owing to the witchcraft of this girl; so that those of the district quarreled dreadfully with the parents, as to the witchcraft of antagonism in the girl, and about putting her out from that district.

7. And the father of that girl spoke even these words to those of the district, with much reason, about the unjust assertion of witchcraft relative to the girl, that is: 'When this girl was brought forth among those of mine, her whole destiny (vakhsh) was afterwards set forth by that manifest radiance of fire, where it brought out radiance from all over her in the dark night. 8. When this girl sits in the interior of the house, wherein there is no fire, and in the chamber (sarâ1) of fire they increase its intensity (bûrzô), it is lighter there, where and when this girl sits, than there where they increase the intensity of the fire; one is dazzled by the radiance from her body, and that of a wizard would not have been so glorious.'

9. Even then, owing to the influence (sârtnisnô) of the demons, and the Kavîg and Karap² of the

¹ Reading dêrîh, but it may be gârîh for kârîh, 'producing.'

² The Karaps were apparently idolatrous priests, especially those before the conversion of Vistâsp by Zaratûst; one being called 'a wizard' in Chap. III, 5, 42-44, another 'unsanctified' in IV, 24, district, they did not become satisfied; so the father ordered the girl to go to Padīragtarâspô¹, the father of a family in the country (matâ) of the Spîtâmas, in the district (rûdastâk) of Alâk; and the girl obeyed the command of her father. 10. That disturbance which the demons caused, with evil intention, for the expatriation of that girl, the sacred beings assiduously made the reason for the coming of the girl for marriage to Pôrûshâspô, the father of Zaratûst, through her father sending the girl to the dwelling of Padīragtarâspô, the father of Pôrûshâspô.

11. One *marvel*² is this which is declared, that when that girl, in going to that family, stood on the loftiest place in the country of the Spîtâmas, and it is surveyed by her, a great wonder is manifested to the girl, just as revelation mentions: 'It is their³ a third is 'deadly' in IV, 67, and a demon himself is a Karap in IV, 61, and has Karaps under his control in II, 45. The following Karaps are named in the time of Zaratûst:—Dûrâsrôbô mentioned in Chap. III, 4-41; Brâdrôk-rêsh in III, 20-34, who is called a Tûrânian in III, 28; Vaêdvôist in IV, 21-24; and Zâk in IV, 67. Some others are named by other writers. The Kavîgs, Kaîs, or Kîgs are mentioned with the Karaps in Chaps. II, 9; III, 50; IV, 2, 6, 14, 64, 67; VIII, 26, 40, as equally objectionable, but their avocation as officials is not defined. Both classes seem to have held official rank, but whether their titles were tribal or official is uncertain. The Avesta calls them Karapan and Kavi; the latter word being also the royal title of the Kayân dynasty, of which Vistâsp was a member. Compare Zs. XV, 1-4; XXIII, 8.

¹ So also in §§ 13, 70. In Bd. XXXII, 1, 2, the two old MSS. of the Irânian Bundahis have Padtarâsp thrice and Pîrtarâsp once; K 20 has Spîtarasp and Paitiresp; K 20 b has Padirtarâspô and Paitirispô; and M6 has Padirtarâsp and Paitiresp. Zs. XIII, 6, has Purtarâspô.

² One of the marvellous manifestations mentioned in § 1.

³ Probably we should read: 'It is the voice of those sacred beings' who are mentioned in § 10. As the word yazdân, 'sacred beings,' is exactly similar, in Pahlavi, to shân (in valdshân, 'their'

voice is carried away to her from them; "do thou proceed to that village which is theirs; it is very depressed in height and very wide in breadth, in which he who is living and the cattle mostly walk together; besides, for thy assistance that village is divinely fashioned and compassionate." 12. Thereupon that damsel stopped, and also fully observed that their recital seems to be for the conveyance of this statement, that my action should be such as was ordered me by my father also. 13. Then that damsel thoroughly washed her hands, and proceeded from them to that village which was Padīragtarâspô's, and the glory came to Pôrûshâspô, the son of Padīragtarâspô.

14. One marvel is this which is declared, that the creator Aûharmazd passed on the guardian spirit (fravâhar) of Zaratûst, to the parents of Zaratûst, through (le-*k*adôn) Hôm¹, by a marvel produced by cultivation. 15. Again, too, revelation says that, when the separation (burînô) of the third millenium occurred, at the end of the 3,000 years of spiritual existence without a destroyer, (after the creatures were in spiritual existence, and before the arrival of the fiend); then the archangels framed Zaratûst together, and they seated the guardian spirit within, having a mouth, having a tongue, and the proclaimer of the celestial mansions.

or 'those'), a copyist would be liable to the blunder of leaving out the final word in writing valēshân yasdân. Or the original writer himself may not have quoted enough of the text he was reading, to make his meaning clear.

¹ A sacred and mythical tree, described in Bd. XVIII, 1-3, and often personified as a sacred being. It is now represented, in Parsi ceremonies, by twigs of a particular plant brought from Persia.

16. Then the three millenniums of Zaratûst¹ were the number manifest to them through observation by the eye, and it seemed that he became just like an archangel through bodily contact with (ham-kerpîh)² the archangels. 17. And when the separation of the third millennium occurred, after the framing of Zaratûst together, and before the conveying of Zaratûst down to the worldly state, at the end of the 3,000 years of worldly existence with a destroyer, then Aûharmazd argued with Vohûmanô and Ashavahistô³ thus: 'Is his mother beheld by you, so that we may produce Zaratûst?'

18. And Ashavahistô spoke in reply thus: 'Thou art aware even of that, O propitious one! about the Zaratûst we shall produce, and thou and we have produced, thou knowest, O Aûharmazd! and to us who are the other archangels do thou announce the place, because its appearance thou knowest, thou propitious spirit Aûharmazd!'

19. Then Aûharmazd argued with Vohûmanô and the reminding by Ardavahistô⁴, Shatraver, Spendarmad, Khûrdad, and Amûrdad⁵, saying:

¹ Meaning the period of Zaratûst's existence merely as a guardian spirit, the first period of the destroyer (§ 17) who then remained powerless in confusion (see Bd. I, 22).

² Or 'sheltering with' (ham-karîkîh).

³ The personifications of the Avesta phrases for 'good thought' and 'perfect rectitude,' who are two of the seven that hold a superior position among sacred beings, somewhat similar to that of archangels. When a Parsi speaks of Aûharmazd as the first of the Ameshaspendas, or archangels, he does not put him on an equality with the rest, any more than we put a commander-in-chief on an equality with his troops when we call him a good soldier.

⁴ Another pronunciation of Ashavahistô.

⁵ These last four archangels are personifications of the Avesta

'The conveying of Zaratûst down does not seem to be for me, because, having a mouth and having a tongue, he will be a proclaimer to the world of embodied beings. 20. If we convey Zaratûst down on to the world of embodied beings, having a mouth and having a tongue, as a proclaimer of the celestial mansion, this is evident: they will say, concerning the origin of him who is my righteous man, that we frame him together with the water, with the land, with the plants, and with the animals¹. 21. Therefore we will carry off there, to the village of Pôrûshâspô, him whom they will call Zaratûst of good lineage of both natures, both of Nêryôsang² who is of the archangels, and of Yim who is of mankind.'

22. Then the archangels framed together a stem of Hôm the height of a man, excellent in colour, and juicy where fresh; also to carry off the guardian spirit of Zaratûst to that stem of theirs, the archangels made it go forth thither from that endless light, and gave it up there also to the instinctive intellect (âsnô vîr). 23. Likewise their carrying off was manifest around, and a wall was openly displayed round them, but a restless one; the Hôm was constantly provided with a mouth, where it was suitable, and sap constantly oozed from the Hôm where it was moist.

24. And when thirty³ years of the 3,000 years of phrases for 'desirable dominion, bountiful devotion, completeness or health, and immortality.'

¹ That is, as an inferior and irresponsible being.

² Here spelt Nêrôsang; see Chaps. I, 29; II, 70; and Zs. XIII, 6, for this angel's influence on the royal race.

³ The MS. has 330 years, but the time intended is evidently that shortly before the birth of Zaratûst, and this third 3,000 years well-disturbed¹ worldly existence remained, Vohûmanô and Ashavahistô then associated their pre-eminence together, and turned off into the embodied existence ; there they came up to where two birds had settled in quest of progeny, and seven years before the serpents devoured the inexperienced progeny. 25. For their own designs, Vohûmanô and Ashavahistô went on, and those birds consulted them thus: 'We have to offer homage, and our want is that Hô̄m.'

26. The circumstances of those associated together in pre-eminence and the request of these for that Hô̄m were a double marvel ; Vohûmanô seized one of those birds by both legs, and the other by one ; he also brought them that Hô̄m, and gave it up to them there, on that tree within their nest. 27. And they uncovered above the serpents, that have gone up to the progeny of the birds ; then that guardian spirit of Zaratûst started up, and the serpents on the tree rushed also from them away towards the demons ; but that guardian spirit of Zaratûst smote them on the jaws, and the serpents fell down and expired, which events have also occurred among them till now, having been requisite as regards a depriver of life (gân-gîr) and any one of that species. 28. And that Hô̄m was connected with that tree ; and on the summit of that tree, there ended either when Vistâspô accepted the religion, in Zaratûst's forty-second year, or when Zaratûst received the religion in his thirtieth year, but this earlier date is the more likely.

¹ This word, hû-aîbigadîg, is written in Pahlavi precisely like an-aîbigadîg, 'without a destroyer,' though its meaning is the reverse, which is an unexpected cause of perplexity to a cursory reader.

where the nest of the birds was, it grew constantly fresh and golden-coloured¹.

29. After the coming of her who bore Zaratûst, to Pôrûshâspô for marriage, Vohûmanô and Arda-vahistô, thus associated together in their pre-eminence, came up there to Pôrûshâspô in the cattle-pasture of the Spîtâmas, and their thoughts were confined to that Hôm brought by them. 30. Then Pôrûshâspô walked forth, with spiritual desire, up to the water of the Dâit², because the requirement of the spirits is the spiritual knowledge³ that spirits are ever-beneficial; and that Hôm was also seen by him, when it had grown on that tree, on the inside of the nest. 31. Then Pôrûshâspô thought thus: 'It is for me, really (madam-îk-am) to proceed and, even as there is no reaching by me up to that Hôm, that tree must be cut down, for apart from that, O Hôm of Aûharmazd! thou seemest fresh, so that the benefit of something from thee will be advantageous.'

32. Then Pôrûshâspô walked on and washed their clothes acquiescently (patâstg), and here a great wonder was manifest to Pôrûshâspô. 33. About this it says that, all the while that Pôrûshâspô washed their clothes, Vohûmanô then proceeded from the uppermost third of the tree unto the middle of it, whereon it was the desire of Pôrû-

¹ Or it may be 'verdant.'

² Av. Dâitya, a mythic river in Afrân-vêg (Bd. XX, 13); a favourite place for religious rites, see Yt. V, 17, 104, 112; IX, 25, 29; XVII, 45, 49, 61. Or it may be merely mayâ-f shêd, 'brilliant water.'

³ Reading mainôg-dânisnîh, but the MS. has mainôg dênô-dânîh which might be translated 'spiritual knowledge of religion,' though the latter Pahlavi word is unusual.

shâspô to be conveyed. 34. Then Pôrûshâspô, having washed the clothes, walked up to it and, thereupon gathering up the whole of that Hôm, all of it was then also appropriated by him through assistance like that of that archangel, just as what thou offerest for the food-sustenance of a friend's son of two years or three years of age; and it seemed to him that archangel's joyful payment.

35. Carrying off their Hôm, Pôrûshâspô spoke of it to his noble (mas) wife thus: 'So thou, O Dûk-dâûb! shouldst keep their Hôm in custody, all the while that their Hôm fulfils duty and routine.'

36. One marvel is this which is declared, that the coming of the nature (gôhar) of the body of Zaratûst, through water and vegetation, to the bodies of his parents, is manifested as a great wonder of the creator to the multitude. 37. As revelation mentions it thus: 'Thereupon, when Aûharmazd had produced the material (dahisnô) of Zaratûst¹, the nature of his body then, in the presence of Aûharmazd, fled on towards the material of Zaratûst.'

38. About Khûrdad and Mûrdad² bringing the cloud-water down in a compassionate manner ever anew, drop by drop, and completely warm, for the delight of sheep and men, and—with as much seed as the roving of two rampant bulls would thereby cast upon the plants which have grown, all of every species—they are casting it upon those other plants at that time, even upon the dry ones; and the nature of Zaratûst came from that water to those plants.

¹ Compare § 3.

² These two archangels have special charge of water and vegetation (see Sls. XV, 25-29), and here they are represented as acting in a manner usually ascribed to Tistar, the Dog-star.

39. One marvel is this which is declared, that, in order that the nature of Zaratûst shall come unto his parents, after¹ the mounting of the archangels Pôrûshâspô drives six white cows, with yellow ears, up to those plants. 40. And here is manifested a great wonder, such as revelation mentions thus: Two² of those cows, unimpregnated, had become full of milk, and the nature of Zaratûst came from the plants to those cows, and is mingled with the cows' milk; it is owing thereto that Pôrûshâspô drove those cows back. 41. And Pôrûshâspô spoke to Dûkdâûb thus: 'O Dûkdâûb! in two of those cows, which are unimpregnated and have not calved, milk has appeared; do thou milk those cows, which are the splendour and glory of the cows and of any embodied existence whatever.' 42. And Dûkdâûb arose and, taking that pail of hers which had a four-fold capacity, she also milked from them the milk which was in them, and a great part of what they gave up to her she had to throw away; and the nature of Zaratûst was in that milk.

43. One marvel is this which is manifested in the struggle of the adversary for concealing and spoiling that milk, just as revelation mentions thus: Thereupon, at that time, the demons formed themselves into an assembly, and the demon of demons growled thus: 'You demons become quite unobservant: that food is really supplied fresh, so that the formation is settled which will extend as far as to that man who will be the righteous Zaratûst; which of you will undertake his destruction, all the while that he exists for mankind, so as to make him more contemptibly impotent?' 44. *Kêshmâk*¹, astute in evil, growled thus: 'I will undertake his destruction.' 45. Astute in evil, he rushed away with thrice fifty of the demons who are Karaps of Kêshmâk; and that village was partly uprooted and partly destroyed² by him, fellow-workers were ruined, and the number of fellow-eaters of broken victuals, attending the great, was not broken up, among whom was he that had repelled his authority.

¹ Reading akhar instead of adên, 'then.'

² In some places the singular number is used, in others the plural.

46. It is declared that, afterwards, Pôrûshâspô asked again for that Hô^m from Dûkdâûb, and he pounded it, and with that cows' milk³, into which the nature of the body of Zaratûst had come, he here mingled the guardian spirit of Zaratûst, and the nature of the body came at once into union with it.

47. One marvel is this which is declared, that Pôrûshâspô and Dûkdâûb drank up that Hô^m and milk, when they were mingled together and announced to Aûharmazd; and here occurred a combination of the glory, guardian spirit, and bodily nature of Zaratûst into a manchild. 48. And a great wonder is manifested to both of them, through that which revelation mentions thus: Thereupon, both have embraced the first *time*⁴ with desire

¹ The whirlwind demon; see Bd. XXVIII, 24. Compare Chap. IV, 61.

² The usual effects of a hurricane.

³ The mingling of milk with pounded Hô^m still constitutes part of the Parsi ceremonial; see Haug's Essays, 3rd ed., p. 405.

⁴ Pahl. 'koâ 2 lââ fratûm vapidâv havând.'

for a son, and the demons shouted out unto them, in the villainous speech of sinfulness, thus: 'Why shouldst thou act like this, vile¹ Pôrûshâspô?' whereupon they started up like people who are ashamed. 49. A second time they have embraced, and the demons shouted out unto them, in villainous speech; whereupon they started up like people who are ashamed. 50. A third time they have embraced thus, with desire for a son; and the demons shouted out unto them, in villainous speech; whereupon they started up like people who are ashamed. 51. And they spoke with one another about it, and continued at this duty, and accomplished it², saying: 'We will not so stop without accomplishing something, not even though both Râk and Nôdar should arrive here together³.' 52. Then that manchild who was the righteous Zaratûst became complete, and here below there came together the nature of the body, the guardian spirit, and the glory of Zaratûst in the womb of his mother.

53. One marvel is this which is declared, that, after the combination of Zaratûst in the womb of his mother, the demons strove anew wonderfully to cause the death of Zaratûst in his mother's womb, and she who bore him was rendered sickly by them through the sharpest of sharp and afflictive pain, until she wished to ask the wizard physicians for a desirable remedy. 54. And here is manifested a great wonder, just as revelation says: 'It is then a voice of theirs is carried away there to her from the higher region, from Aûharmazd and from the archangels, thus: "Thou damsel who goest! do not proceed thither, because anything of theirs is destruction through wizard medical treatment; for healthfulness wash thy hands thoroughly, and those hands shall take firewood, and upon it thou shalt offer meat for the sake of the infant, thou shalt offer up cows' butter to the fire for his sake; thou shalt likewise heat it at the fire for his sake, and shalt quaff (pâimês) it off at the proper time for his sake, and thou will become well."' 55. Then at once that damsel washed her hands thoroughly, and she did just as she had heard, and became well¹.

¹ Reading anâg, but it may be intended for hanâ=aê, 'O.'

² Pahl. 'afshân madam hâr suftô, aêghshânô pavan akôsh frâz vaîdûntô.'

³ Evidently an old proverb, implying a fixed determination whatever catastrophe may happen, even if one's ancestors of the eleventh or twelfth generation shall appear. Nôdar (Av. Naotara) was a son of King Mânûsîhar (Bd. XXXI, 13, 23), and Râk was a nephew of Nôdar (Bd. XXXI, 31), doubtless the same as Ragan (Bd. XXXII, 1; XXXIII, 3) which seems to be a Pâzand misreading of Aîrikô, or Êrikô, see Zs. XVI, 11-13, and compare the genealogies in Chap. II, 70 and Zs. XIII, 6. The proverb is used again in Chap. III, 19, and the names are mentioned in III, 39.

56. One marvel is this which is manifested to the multitude when three days remained to his coming² forth; in the manner of the sun, at the approach of its uprising, when its first advancing twilight is diffused, his body is then announced as revelation says: 'It is then when in those last three nights during which Zaratûst was in the womb, where he still subsisted three days till afterwards born, that the village of Pôrûshâspô became all luminous. 57. Then spoke the horse-owners and cattle-owners of the Spîtâmas, in running away, thus: "It is requisite to be forgiven³; the village of Pôrûshâspô, on which

¹ Compare Zs. XIV, 2-5.

² Literally 'going.'

³ Apparently an appeal for mercy.

that fire¹ is in every crevice, is disturbed by confusion²." 58. Then, on running together again, they said: "It is not fully forgiven for the village of Pôrûshâspô; fire is on it in every crevice and it is disturbed by confusion; unto him is born, at his house, a brilliant manchild."

59. This, too, is one of the wonders, when the report of the marvellousness of the birth of that manchild and of his great glory, is due to statements of Yim and also others, brilliant in carrying on the destiny which had entered them from the sacred beings. 60. Wherein Yim spoke to the demons thus: 'Here below the pure and righteous Zaratûst will be born, who will produce for you who are demons that absence of intercession which is prepared for you (that is, he will produce for you a thoroughly-harassed actual inactivity, an absence of intercession so that you are not able to pray on your own account, and no one prays for you).'

61. It is declared that the report about the birth of Zaratûst, and concerning his prophesying, is explained (avazandî-hastô) only by the illustrious, such as Yim and Frêdûn and many learned people; but the sacred beings are also heard through the tongues of the animals scattered in the world, in order that even that witness shall arise as regards his prophesying. 62. Just like that which is declared, that in the reign of Kat-Ûs there was an ox, and a splendour had come to his body from the sacred beings; and whenever a dispute as to the frontier arose between Irân and Tûrân, that ox was brought, and the boundary between Irân and Tûrân

¹ Assuming that nîram stands for nîrâ, a variant of nûrâ.

² Or 'terrified with fear.'

was truly shown by him. 63. And because, when an Irânian had to seek a decision as to a Tûrânian in a dispute and lies occurred, the Tûrânians were constantly convicted through the showing of the boundary by the ox, and happened to be defeated by the Irânians—and, besides that, their envy also arose as to Kat-Ûs, even of his ownership—therefore, on account of his possession of that wonder, the Tûrânians proceeded about the smiting and destruction of that ox, and through their sorcery and witchcraft the mind of Kat-Ûs was disturbed about that ox, and he went to a warrior, whose name was Sritô¹, and ordered him to kill that ox; so that man came to smite the ox. 64. And here is manifested a wonder of importance by that ox, such as revelation mentions thus: 'To him spoke the ox, in grave words, thus: "Thou shouldst not murder me, O Sritô! thou seventh² of those of this race; you will atone for this malice when Zaratûst, the most desirous of righteousness among the existences, arrives and proclaims thy bad action in revelation; and the distress in thy soul becomes such as is declared by that passage where it says: 'As death occurs to him, that of Vadak³ and the like occurs.'"' 65. It is declared that that man, when this wonder was thus seen by him proceeding from the ox, did not kill it, but went back to Kat-Ûs and told him what he had seen. 66. Kat-Ûs then still, on account of the amazing deceitfulness of the demons and wizards, ordered the same man to smite that ox;

¹ This legend is also told, with further details, in Zs. XII, 7-25.

² Compare Zs. XII, 10.

³ The mother of Dahâk, who first committed adultery in an aggravated form (see Dd. LXXII, 5; LXXVIII, 2).

and that man proceeded also again to the ox, and though it was carrying on still much of that talk, he did not lend an ear to it, but killed it.

67. Regarding the sole-created ox¹, too, it is declared that, on meeting its destruction by the evil spirit, it bellowed thus: 'Though thou thinkest it as to us, O evil spirit, astute in evil! that thou art in every way a winner by destruction, it is not to our destruction thou art even then an attainer in every way (that is, it is not possible for thee so to annihilate that we shall not arise again); even now I proclaim that that man, Zaratûst of the Spîtâmas, will arrive in that last revolution, who will produce distress for the demons, the assistants of the demon, and also the wicked who are bipeds.'

68. Likewise the marvellousness of Zaratûst's defeat of the demons, owing to his glory and by means of his sagacity, even before he had come into the world by birth; when Frâsîyâv² the wizard is amazingly distressed through seeking that glory of his by desire of the demons, just as revelation³ mentions thus: 'Thereupon Frâsîyâv, the very powerful Tûrânian, rushed away, O Zaratûst of the Spîtâmas! to the wide-formed ocean a first, a second, and a third time; and he wished to obtain that glory which is specially for those of the countries of Irân, for the born and the unborn, and which is for the righteous one; but he did not attain to that glory.'

¹ Pahl. tôrâ-î aêvak-dâdô, the primeval ox, from whom the animals and plants have all descended (see Bd. III, 14, 17, 18; IV, 1-5; X, 1; XIV, 1-3; XXVII, 2).

² The same person as Frangrâsîyâk of Chaps. I, 31, 39; II, 69; XI, 3.

³ In Yt. XIX, 56-62; V, 42.

69. And this, too, is mentioned, that to all the seven regions the villain Frangrâstyâk rushed away, and the glory of Zaratûst was sought by him ¹.

70. Here is an enumeration of the worthy lineage of Zaratûst ²:—Zaratûst was son of Pôrûshâspô, son of Pađragtarâspô, of Urugadhasp*, of Haêkadâspô*, of Kikhshnus*, of Paêtrasp*, of Aregadharsn*, of Hardhar*, of Spîtâm, of Vaêdist*, of Nayâzem* ³, of Atrîk ³, of Dûrâsrôbô, of Mânûskêihar monarch of Irân, of Mânûs-khûrnar, of Mânûs-khûrnâk whom Nêrôksang implanted in ⁴ Vîzak*, daughter of Airyak*, son of Thritak*, of Bitak*, of Frazûsak*, of Zûsak*, of Fragûzak* ⁵, of Gûzak* ⁶, daughter of Atrîk, son of Frêdûn monarch of Khvanîras, son of Pûr-tôrâ the Âspîgân, of Nêvak-tôrâ the Âspîgân, of Sôg-tôrâ the Âspîgân, of Bôr-tôrâ the Âspîgân, of Kardâr-tôrâ ⁷ the Âspîgân, of Siyah-tôrâ the Âspîgân, of Spêtô-tôrâ the Âspîgân, of Gêfar-tôrâ the Âspîgân, of Ramak-tôrâ ⁸ the Âspîgân, of Vanô-fravîsn the Âspîgân, of Yim monarch of the seven

¹ See Yt. XIX, 82.

² Compare the genealogy in Zs. XIII, 6 ; Bd. XXXII, 1, and that quoted there from the Vigîrkard-i Dênîg. The names marked here with an asterisk are written in Pâzand, or partly so.

³ Ayazem, of Ragan, in Bd. The latter name is Ragîsn in Vig., but Êrîkô in Zs. XVI, 13.

⁴ This wants confirmation, but varzîd bên can hardly be a name as assumed in Vig., where it is altered to Varzîd-dên.

⁵ The g is of the old form like s.

⁶ The G is omitted, but see Bd. XXXI, 14.

⁷ Or Kûtâl-tôrâ ; this generation is omitted both in the Vigîrkard and Bundahis.

⁸ This generation is interlined in the MS. of the Dînkard. The Bundahis, XXXI, 7, also omits Nêvak-tôrâ ; and the Vigîrkard omits Bôr-tôrâ, Siyah-tôrâ, Spêtô-tôrâ, and Ramak-tôrâ. The termination tôrâ is merely the Zvâris equivalent of gau. In Irânian MSS. the Pahlavi t and û are practically written alike in most cases.

regions, son of Vîvangha, of Ayang, *had, of Anang, *had, son of Hôshâng the Pêsdâdian monarch of the seven regions, son of Fravâk, of Sîyâmak, of Masyâ, of Gâyômarđ the first man.

CHAPTER III.

1. About the marvellousness which is manifested after the birth of that most auspicious of offsprings from his mother, till his coming to a conference with Aûharmazd¹.

2. One marvel is this which is declared, that on being born he laughed outright; the seven midwives (dayah)², who sat around him, were quite frightened thereby; and those terrified ones spoke thus: 'What was this, on account of grandeur or contempt? when, like the worthy man whose pleasure is due to activity, the man's child so laughs at the birth owing to him.' 3. Pôrûshâspô also spoke thus: 'Bring out this manchild to the sheepskin clothing which is soft; the affair was owing to thee, owing to the virtue of thee who art Dûkdâûb, that the advent of glory and coming of radiance to this manchild was openly seen when he laughed outright at his birth.'

4. One marvel is this which is declared, that Pôrûshâspô afterwards went to a Karap, Dûrásrôbô by name, who was the most renowned for witchcraft in that district, and informed him of the birth of Zaratûst and the wonders which were manifested

¹ The contents of this chapter refer chiefly to 'the rearing of Zaratûst.' For the other matters mentioned in Dk. VIII, xiv, 2, see Zs. XIV, 6-12.

² Sls. X, 15 prescribes 'ten women.' Zs. XIV, 13 mentions 'seven wizards (yâtûkô).'

therein; he also brought him to the house for the purpose of seeing Zaratûst. 5. That wizard, owing to the coming on of vexation at that glory in Zaratûst, desired with evil intention a really mischievous deceit (shêdö), to compress with his paws (gôv) the tender head of that full-glorious child, to cause his death. 6. And here is manifested a great wonder to the multitude, just as revelation mentions it thus: 'Thereupon the paws of that deadly one (mar) are driven back to behind him (that is, reversed (aûskûn) backwards); nor ever after did that deadly one become again a devourer of meat with his jaws by means of those paws.' 7. That Karap also, besides that, examined the marks and evil specks on Zaratûst¹; and Pôrûshâspô, in awful alarm as to the dispersion of the emanation of splendour (âp-dihîh) from Zaratûst, hastened (sârîniâ) to make Zaratûst invisible.

8. One marvel is this which is declared, that the Karap Dûrâsrôbô, through witchcraft, cast such fear of Zaratûst into the mind of Pôrûshâspô, and so injured the mind of Pôrûshâspô, that, owing only to that very fear as regards himself, he asked the Karap for the death of Zaratûst. 9. Also about² the mode of putting to death for which Pôrûshâspô, owing to the distraction (vishôpisnô) by which he becomes helpless, asks Dûrâsrôbô; and that Karap is bringing much firewood together, and to shelter (nipâyîdanô) Zaratûst amid that firewood, to stir up a fire, and to make it blaze with the wood were the remedy he arranged (vîrâstô); and Pôrûshâspô acted accordingly. 10. And here is manifested a great wonder to the multitude, just as revelation mentions it thus : 'Neither was fire among the vegetation on a tree (that is, it does not come on), nor has fire seized upon plants ; but on rushed, at dawn ¹, that son-loving mother, and she came forth to him intelligently (hûshûmônd), and seizing him, thereby removed him with her right hand aloft as he sat ².'

¹ Compare Zs. XVI, 1-3.

² Pahl. madam-mâ, where mâ=ki, 'what? whatever,' is used for -ik, 'also,' as often happens.

11. One marvel is this which is declared, that after Pôrûshâspô spoke to the Karap Dûrâsrôbô about the fire not burning the child, he asked anew about putting Zaratûst to death ; then to ensconce (nipâyîdanô) Zaratûst in a narrow path, and despatch many oxen on that path, so that he may be trampled on by the feet of the oxen at night, were the remedy that Karap proposed (girâyîdô) to Pôrûshâspô ; and Pôrûshâspô acted accordingly. 12. Here also is manifested a wonder of grandeur to the multitude, just as revelation mentions : 'It was that ox walked on which had become sorrowful (that is, its sorrow was great owing to another ox) and it was aged and walked before that one (before the leading ox), it also hastened before that other (that is, it stood up before Zaratûst), and he was greatly pitied by it for the whole day, so that it kept away the oxen from him, being the first that walked thither and the last that walked away ; on rushed at dawn that son-loving mother, forth to him she came intelligently, and seizing him, thereby removed him with her right hand aloft as he sat¹.

¹ Reading pavan aûsh, but it might be pavan hûsh, 'with sense,' here and in § 14, where there is nothing to indicate that the child was out all night, but in §§ 12, 18 he is evidently rescued the next morning.

² Pahl. 'madam pavan aûstakô.' Compare Zs. XVI, 7.

13. One marvel is this which is declared, that Pôrûshâspô came a second time (īdanō) to that Karap also about the oxen not trampling on Zaratûst, and asked anew about the mode of putting Zaratûst to death; then to ensconce Zaratûst near a drinking-pool (āvkhûr) in the domain (gêhân), and to drive many horses to that drinking-pool, so that he may be trampled on by the hoofs of the horses, were the substituted² remedy that Karap proposed; and Pôrûshâspô acted accordingly. 14. And here is manifested a great wonder to the multitude, just as revelation mentions thus: 'That horse walked on which had become fully-hoofed (that is, its hoofs were very thick); it is yellow-eared and it walks before that one (before the leading horse), and it hastens before that other (that is, it stood up before Zaratûst), and was the first that walked on thither, and the last that walked away; on rushed at dawn that son-loving mother, forth to him she came intelligently, and seizing him, thereby removed him with her right hand aloft as he sat³.'

15. One marvel is this which is declared, that Pôrûshâspô came again to that Karap, spoke also about the horses, too, not trampling on Zaratûst, and asked anew as to what may be the mode of putting

¹ Compare Zs. XVI, 5.

² Possibly 'supplementary' or 'gratuitous.' The word is nîrmatō which, as a noun, means the gratuity or honorarium paid to a priest for acting as a substitute for another. Its etymology is obscure, unless it be an abbreviation of nîrūmandī, 'strength,' used in the legal sense of 'refresher.'

³ Compare Zs. XVI, 6.

Zaratûst to death ; then to have Zaratûst carried off into the den (sûrâk) where a wolf's cubs (hûnûskân) are slaughtered, so that when the wolf arrives and sees the slaughtered cubs, she will wrathfully growl and mangle Zaratûst in revenge for those cubs, was the remedy that Karap proposed ; and Pôrûshâspô acted accordingly. 16. And here is manifested a great wonder to the multitude, just as revelation mentions : ' It is when that wolf came on, several Yûgyâsts¹, towards Zaratûst, the wolf was struck dumb by the assistance of the sacred beings, so that its mouth was down at the cubs, one with the other.'

17. One marvel is this which is declared, that Srôsh² the righteous and Vohûmanô proceeded to him, and a woolly (kûrûsak) sheep was brought by them unto him ; the nurses (dâyagân)³ also were terrified, apart from him, the whole night. 18. Then on rushed at dawn that son-loving mother, forwards from the position of that woolly sheep she walked, and she, the mistress of the domain (zan-î gehân), spoke thus : ' Thou runnest on violently (ûtayûtô) in excess ;' for she considered in this way, that ' the wolf is so much better to that son than thou art⁴ good to me, when I shall show *his*⁵ bone or blood in thy sight⁶.' 19. Forwards to him has she come

¹ The Yûgyâst is a distance of sixteen Roman miles of a thousand paces each (see Dk. VIII, xx, 19, note). But the writer of the scripture here quoted could have had no idea of the distance he was mentioning.

² A sacred being who personifies 'obedience,' and is a special protector of man, particularly at night.

³ It may also be read dehîgân, 'the country-folk.'

⁴ Or 'she would be.'

⁵ Or 'they show my.'

⁶ This seems to be a bitter reproach addressed to her husband ; but the ambiguity of the Pahlavi makes its exact meaning rather uncertain.

intelligently and, seizing him, she thereby removed him, through the grace (dahisnō) of the sacred beings, aloft as he sat; and she, the mistress of the domain, spoke thus: 'I shall not give thee up again, my son, not even though both Râk and Nôdar should arrive here together¹.'

20. And it is declared that, afterwards, the Karap Dûrâsrôbô, with a malicious disciple, came to the same district and noticed about the advancement of Zaratûst; and they saw no means for injuring or putting him to death, but his condition (mindavam) was a marvel as full of vigour as this which is declared, that Brâdrôk-rêsh, the Karap, growled thus:—21. 'Then I, who am the most far-seeing of the people in that district of ours as to witchcraft, see upon their district that well-directing (that is, he understands good commands) produce of development (that is, the increase which continually becomes more, which has come and which will arrive), with good flocks (that is, he understands to keep good sheep), with good herds (that is, he understands to keep a herd which is better than another's), the well-exerting (that is, he understands to do work which is better than another's), well-fighting (that is, he understands to do battle well), and perfectly liberal (that is, he understands to exercise beneficial liberality) bantling (hûnûskō) of Pôrûshâspô², in the three nights while he was begotten out of his parents. 22. Unto him will Vohûmanô come in the embodied world (that is, Vohûmanô will come unto Zaratûst), and conducting him unto a conference, his good religion will extend into the seven regions of the earth; and so I shall not even let him produce in his mind (that is, he will not know) where and how I shall murder him; and a token of this matter, that one speaks truly, is this, that I state it beforehand, promptly after the full hearing of the statement of the matter, when you heard this statement.'

¹ See Chap. II, 51. Compare Dk. V, ii, 4; Zs. XVI, 8-13.

² The Pahlavi version of an Avesta text, here translated, is a fair specimen of the complication produced by appending a gloss to every epithet. It is useful as a combination of translation and lexicon, but it is apt to be perplexing, unless all the glosses are carefully omitted by the reader who can dispense with a lexicon.

23. Pôrûshâspô advanced, conveyed in a four-in-hand chariot¹; then, on hearing that statement, and when they had heard that statement, Pôrûshâspô started forth, conveyed in that four-in-hand chariot.

24. And Pôrûshâspô spoke to Brâdrôk-rêsh, the Karap, thus: 'Brâdrôk-rêsh, thou Karap! whatever men they shall behold, cry out when at birth; even the offspring of that secluded person they behold in death, cry out when at birth²; but what was that which they beheld at the birth of my son?' 25. When at birth he laughed outright; was that also beheld in thy son, when at birth did he laugh outright?

26. When Vohûmanô comes unto him, into this embodied existence, it is also said by him on his return: "O Pôrûshâspô! where is thy servant³?" So, O Karap! concerning him who is my son, it is beheld that he was seen sagaciously by thee.'

For restoring the original Avesta, the Pahlavi translation, without the glosses, is usually the best guide.

¹ Pahl. 4-ayûgîsnô râê (Av. kathruiyukhta and ratha).

² This seems to be the meaning of Pahl. 'zag-fk tanô armêstô-dahîsnîh pavan frâz khadîtund margîh, amat pavan zerkhûnîsnô, barâ bekhûnd.'

³ Pahl. 'Pôrûshâspô! aêghat bandakô?'

27. And ¹ when Pôrûshâspô enquired of him thus : 'What was the matter with thee when, through bringing thee unto that son of mine, he was thereby offered ; and thou lookedst long up away from him in height, and thou lookedst long down away from him in depth, and thou lookedst long out away from him in different directions?' 28. The Tûrânian, Brâdrôk-rêsh the Karap, spoke in reply thus : 'When through bringing me unto that son was thy offering of him, and I ² looked long up away from him in height, then the radiance and glory out of him kept together up to the sun, and through him ³ I have accompanied them on the boundary of its radiance and glory ; so that I saw this, that mankind through speaking to the soul may attain to the firmament of the sun ; but this, namely, how the routine (dâdistânô) is in the supreme heaven, was not seen by me. 29. When through bringing me unto that son of thine was thy offering of him, and I looked long down in depth away from thy offering of him, then the radiance and glory out of him kept together unto the sky which is below this earth, and through him ⁴ to the boundary of its radiance and glory ; but this, namely, how the routine is in that sky, was not seen by me. 30. And when through bringing me unto that son of thine was thy offering of him, and I looked long out away from him in different directions, then the radiance and glory from him kept together for adorning this earth, and

¹ The first five words of § 28 are here inserted in the MS., so as to combine the two sentences in a perplexing manner.

² The MS. has afat for afam by mistake.

³ Or 'that.'

⁴ The differences of form in §§ 28-30 are probably due to errors of copyists.

through him I have accompanied them on the boundary of its radiance and glory ; so that I saw this, that only from the action of this one the future existence will arise ; but the routine of the future existence was not seen by me. 31. This son of thine thinks thus : “ I will make a grander material existence than that of any other ; ” so he will also make thy spiritual one, where thou goest : and this son of thine will remain in the great protection of Vistâsp, not in thine.’

32. One marvel is this which is declared, that when Zaratûst was seven years old, that Dûrâsrôbô being joined by Brâdrôk-rêsh the Karap at the village of Pôrûshâspô, on account of the little previous seeing of Zaratûst by the latter, they saw Zaratûst in that neighbourhood when a hut (kâdâkô) was constructed by him with the children ; and they sat with evil intention to injure the mind of Zaratûst through witchcraft, and for that reason fear and terror were cast by them upon the children. 33. Here a great wonder became manifest to them, owing to the powerful intellect, cautiousness, and practice of Zaratûst, just as revelation mentions thus : ‘ When the other children were excessively terrified at their own silliness of speech, Zaratûst did not quite close the eye in his mind as regards them.’

34. One marvel is this which is declared, that when these two Karaps came to the dwelling of Pôrûshâspô, he ordered the preparation of food for their eating ; and his prepared food is chewed up (frâz khayâi-alt), with a gobletful (pûr dôlakô) of mare’s milk. 35. He also spoke to Dûrâsrôbô thus : ‘ Thou art the most spirit-worshipping¹ of mankind

¹ Literally ‘ demon-worshipping ; ’ it is not clear that idolatry is in our district; do thou worship this of mine.' 36. A great marvel, owing to the sagacity of Zaratûst at a childish age, is just as revelation mentions that Zaratûst spoke thus: 'I worship this, O father! it is not that which it is necessary for me to worship that he should worship.' 37. And Pôrûshâspô spoke thus: 'It is not that of mine thou worshipping, and it is that of mine he should worship.' 38. As many as three times those persons (gabrâân) carried on those assertions; when up stood Zaratûst and spoke concerning them, and he broke forth with that eternal statement¹, namely: 'The righteous I reverence, men or women; the poor I reverence, men or women; not the wicked, men or women; when any one whatever shall join Pôrûshâspô, where he shall be celebrating worship, the worship shall then be suitable to the worshippers, that is, he shall worship that which it is necessary to worship.'

39. One marvel is this which is declared, that afterwards Dûrâsrôbô the Karap shouted to Zaratûst thus: 'Evil was thy reckoning² which, owing to the conduct of fate (bâhar), I, the foremost of the existences embodied in Râk and Nôdâr³, bring to thee; I am made further worthy where thy fate is carried away from me; now is the joy (parkân) which I convey to him⁴ through bringing it on, and this intended, but rather some form of worship antecedent to Zoroastrian Mazda-worship which latter had not yet been established. The author of this legend must have supposed that it differed very little from the religion of Pôrûshâspô.

¹ Reading sakhûn-i leyalmin which is written in Pahlavi exactly like dashinô rigelð, 'the right foot.'

² Pahl. marakð, possibly for marg, 'death.'

³ See Chap. II, 51, note.

⁴ Probably referring to his companion Brâzrôk-rêsh who, accord-will occur, so that I may observe he will kill thee with the evil eye in the house.' 40. And here is a great wonder which became manifest about Zaratûst, in the sagacity of his reply to that deadly one at that childish age, which was just like this which revelation mentions, that Zaratûst spoke thus : 'Without the joy of a murderer I observe, with propitiousness and complete mindfulness, that it is thee I notice in that house which is thine ¹.'

41. One marvel is that which, after this reply of Zaratûst to Dûrâsrôbô, became manifest in that Karap, just as revelation mentions thus : 'The deadly one became disabled and stupefied as long as the milking of ten mares in milk whose milker is only one.'

42. One marvel is this which is declared, that when that wizard emerged from that stupefaction, he then shouted again to Zaratûst in the same manner, Zaratûst uttered that same reply, and the deadly one became anew disabled and stupefied as long as the milking of twenty mares full of milk whose milker is only one.

43. One marvel is this which is declared, that again when that wizard emerged from that stupefaction, he then shouted to Zaratûst in the same manner, Zaratûst uttered that same reply, and the deadly one becomes anew disabled and stupefied as long as the milking of thirty mares full of milk whose milker is only one.

44. One marvel is this which is declared, that when that wizard emerged from that stupefaction, he ing to most accounts, was the murderer of Zaratûst in his old age. This tradition is mentioned in Dk. VII only here and in § 22.

¹ Alluding to Dûrâsrôbô's own fate, see § 45.

then grumbled thus : ‘ Do ye have the horse driven for us, and turn round the chariot wherein you harness it ; for really this smiting one (ganâk) will destroy me through the arrival of the sacred text and through his possession of authority.’ So they had the horse driven, and it was harnessed to the chariot by them.

45. And here is manifested a great wonder to the multitude, just as revelation mentions thus : ‘ When he had proceeded several Yûgyâsts¹ in driving, he stopped in his distress through being terrified, and this occurred which I mention for a warning², his semen was expelled, so that it arose in his skin and burst it³, and his loin thereby broke from his thigh ; he then died outright, then his progeny, and then the offspring of his progeny.’

46. One marvel is this which is declared that, even before the coming of Zarathûst to a conference⁴, there is manifested in him a mind which is more capacious than the whole world, and more exalted than every worldly possession, with an understanding whose strength is perfectly selected, an intellect of all-acquiring power, and a sagacity of all-deciding ability ; also with the much heedfulness of the kingly glory, and the full desire for righteousness, the efficacious diligence and authority, and even the superiority in mightiness and grandeur of the priestly glory. 47. Also the handsomeness of body and completeness of strength which are in the character of these four classes of his, which are priesthood,

¹ See § 16 n.

² Pahl. ‘avô pêš yemale/ûnam.’

³ Or ‘in his back and broke it,’ if we suppose that pôst, ‘skin,’ stands for pôst, ‘back.’ Compare the same legend in Zs. XIX, 1-8.

⁴ With the sacred beings.

warriorship, husbandry, and artisanship; besides a perfect friendship for the sacred beings and the good, and an awful enmity for the demons and the vile. 48. That is the nature by which the habits (dâdōh) of mankind and bipeds, the perfection and completeness of the sacred beings through the creativeness of Aûharmazd, and its own commemoration of them are provided. 49. So that the sacred beings shall bring a report, as to his superiority, from every one of those who are and were and will be, and of his coming for reminding us of Aûharmazd and of the lord-and-mastership (ahû-va-radîh) of the world, also of the preservation of the creations therein (ayîpö-dahisnân), from the destroyer, by the tongue of the many-mannered (kabad-sarâdakö) sage, the fully-virtuous one of the age producing no harm (avazand-dahîg) in the world. 50. And the demons on this account, that this is he whom many Kîts¹ and Karaps have to influence the good to confound and destroy, then also kept their promise and practised friendship.

51. And on the completion of thirty years beyond his birth², the archangel Vohûmanô came on in commemoration of Aûharmazd, when he was bringing his Hô-m-water (mayâ-i Hô-mîgân)³ from the river Aêvatâk¹, just as this which revelation mentions thus: 'When Zaratûst came forth to the third effluent (barâ-tagisnîh), that of the good Dâiti, he further proceeded through that; and when he marched onwards from that, a man was seen by him, who marched from the southern quarter. 52. That was Vohûmanô, and it seemed to him that Vohûmanô was of early form (so that he is more discerning as to a person) and foreseeing (that is, he was beforehand in everything); it seemed to him that Vohûmanô was as much in height as three men's spears; and it seemed to him, as to Vohûmanô that a glossy twig (arûs tâk) was brought by him in his hand, through carrying off which branch the plant was not injured by him; that became the spiritual twig of the religion, and this was indicated by it, that it is necessary to proceed as uninjuriously by the religion. 53. There is some one who says that it became a reminder of the spiritual existence, and this was indicated by it, that it is necessary to proceed as uninjuriously in the world, so that peace may exist with every one.

¹ See Chap. II, 9 n.

² The remaining contents of this and the following chapter are thus summarized in Dk. VIII, xiv, 3, 4:—‘His attainment on maturity, at thirty years of age, to a conference with Aûharmazd; and the occurrence of seven conferences in ten years. Many marvels, owing to him are published therein, just as there are some which, collected and selected, are noticed by the Dînkard manuscript,’ that is, in this seventh book, in which, however, the details of the seven conferences do not occur; but some are mentioned in Zs. XXI, 8-XXII, 13.

³ See Visp. XI, 2.

54. When he came onward to the fourth effluent, as far as the Aûshân-rûd of the good Dâiti (which was the name of it) and he was in it, Zaratûst was bringing the Hôm-water from the middle of it; and on the ascent Zaratûst, bringing his right foot out of the Aûshân-rûd, covered himself with his clothes, and upon that Vohûmanô, advancing, joined him in front.

¹ Literally 'single-flowing.' In Bd. XXIX, 4, 5, it is Nâivtâk which has been translated as 'navigable' in Bd. XX, 34, and as 'flowing in a channel' in Dk. VIII, xxxvii, 38, 42; IX, xvi, 16.—From § 54 it appears to have been a channel of the good Dâiti river which flows from Aîrân-vêg (see Bd. XX, 13).

55. And that man enquired of him thus: 'Who art thou; from whom of them art thou¹?' He replied: 'I am Zaratûst² of the Spîtâmas.'

56. The words of Vohûmanô were: 'O Zaratûst of the Spîtâmas! about what is thy foremost distress (that is, for what is thy need when thou becomest quite distressed); about what is thy foremost endeavour; and for what is the tendency of thy desire (lak kâmakô-dahisnth)?' 57. The reply of Zaratûst was thus: 'About righteousness, I consider my foremost distress; about righteousness my foremost endeavour; and for righteousness the tendency of my desire (that is, my need is for that thing, and I am a distressed seeker of righteousness).'

58. The words of Vohûmanô were: 'O Zaratûst of the Spîtâmas! that which is righteousness is existing (that is, a real thing is, as it were, that which is righteousness), so that whatever is that which is righteousness is thus what is one's own.' 59. And Zaratûst spoke thus: 'That which is righteousness exists, and concerning that I am completely clear and aware; but where and how is that radiance which is that whose arrival is through Vohûmanô.'

60. And Vohûmanô spoke to him thus: 'O Zaratûst of the Spîtâmas! deposit this one garment which thou carriest, so that we may confer with him by whom thou art produced and by whom I am produced, who is the most propitious of spirits, who is the most beneficent of existences, and who is he that I, who am Vohûmanô, am testifying (that is, I am a reminder of him).'

¹ See Pahl. Yas. XLII, 7 c (Sp.).

² According to the numbering of the folios in the old Bombay MS., written in 1659, nine folios were here separated from it last century. They contained the text as far as the end of Chap. IV, and the first eight of them were found at Naosâri about twenty years ago and copied. But all Indian copies, written before that time, omit this mislaid text. See S. B. E., vol. xxxvii, pp. xxxvi, xxxvii.

61. Thereupon, Zaratûst thought thus: 'Good is he who is the creator, who is better than this reminder.' 62. Then they proceeded in company, Vohûmanô and Zaratûst; Vohûmanô first and Zaratûst after.

CHAPTER IV.

1. About the marvellousness which is manifested from the first conference onwards till the end of the seventh conference which occurred within the duration of ten years, also his pre-eminence in prophecy in the world, and the acceptance of the religion by the exalted Kai-Vistâsp, as happened after the ten years of conference.

2. In the first two years, one marvel is this which is declared, that when he was back from the first conference, he then, by the first command of the lord and creator Aûharmazd, recited the unique formula (âyînô) in an assemblage (ram) of Kîgs and Karaps, the prophecy of his Mazda-worshipping religion and commemoration of Aûharmazd, as he chanted with a loud voice, and invited mankind to the religion of Aûharmazd. 3. Just as this passage of revelation mentions thus: 'Thereupon, the thorough inspection for this material existence of those with a sacred girdle, provided with dwellings and provided with cattle, was altogether arranged by Zaratûst.'

4. And when their announcement (nivêdisnô) for speaking to be heard was issued¹, then Zaratûst, on becoming exalted, called out unto the embodied world of righteousness to extol righteousness and to scorn the demons². 5. 'The homage of the Mazda-worship of Zaratûst, and the ceremonial and obeisance for the archangels are the best for you I assert; and of deprecation (ayazisnîh) for the demons next-of-kin marriage is really the best intimation, so that, from the information which is given as to the trustworthiness of a good work, the greatest are the most intimate of them, those of father and daughter, son and she who bore him, and brother and sister.'

6. It is declared that, upon those words, innumerable demon-worshipping Kîgs and Karaps have rushed upon Zaratûst and strove for his death, just like this which revelation states:—'It is then a number (mar) have run away who have sat in the vicinity of Tûr's progeny (hûnûskö)³, the arbitrator; and the shame of the brother of Tûr arose, like that of a person whose shame was that they spoke of his next-of-kin marriage so that he might contract it.'

7. This Tûr was Aûrvâtâ-dang⁴ the Tûr, the scanty giver, who was like a great sovereign of that ¹ From this point §§ 4-8 and 11 have been already translated in S. B. E., vol. xviii, pp. 412, 413, in illustration of the meaning of Khvêtûk-das in Sasanian times and later.

² Av. staomî ashem; nâismî daêvô (Yas. XI, 19; XII, 1).

³ An opprobrious term for the progeny of evil beings and animals, also used by a Karap when speaking of Zaratûst in Chap. III, 21.

⁴ As this name has not been found in the extant Avesta, its correct reading is uncertain. In Zs. XX, 8, it can be read Aûrvâtô-dih, in which dih is the Pahl. translation of Av. dang, hu, of which dang is a Pahl. transliteration; and the whole name may mean 'friendly to the province,' which seems suitable to this particular ruler. The MS. appears to have deng.

quarter; many troops and much power were also maintained by him, and the multitude (mar) told him they would seize the great one from him who is little.

8. But the progeny of Aûrvâtâ-dang the Tûr, the scanty giver, spoke thus: 'Should we for that speech destroy him, this great one who mingles together those propitious words for us—where we are thus without doubt as to one thing therein, such as next-of-kin marriage, that it is not necessary to contract it—it would make us ever doubtful whether it might be necessary to contract it.'

9. And Aûrvâtâ-dang the Tûr, the scanty giver, spoke thus: 'Thou shalt not destroy that man whom mine eyes have seen as the most loving-eyed of the whole embodied existence; he will attain strength, for it has not seemed to me, when thou destroyest him on this account, that wisdom has arisen for a long time; so that no rule (âhankö) of wisdom will arise, in this earth, which is so counselling (hanga-manig) as this one is (that is, when they destroy a man who is counselling, wisdom will not arise for a long while).'

10. Aûrvâtâ-dang the Tûr, the scanty giver to his own people, also spoke thus: 'For me thou art a pure man who is counselling.'

11. And Zaratûst spoke thus: 'I shall not always be that quiet speaker, by¹ whom that I have mentioned is the most propitious thing to be obtained; and of interfering² speaking and managing the temper there is a next-of-kin marriage, and the high-priest who has contracted ¹ it is to perform the ceremonial.'

¹ Or 'from.'

² It may be 'parenthetical or ambiguous.'

12. And here the good spiritual lordship and mightiness of glory of Zaratûst, those which are provided for commemoration of the supreme lord and creator Aûharmazd, are manifested as a great wonder to the multitude, and there is rendered visible the great pre-eminence which is in him as a prophet of the creatures, which for the baseness (nankth) of the deceitful Agash ², the secret-moving and deceiving-natured, is the concealed control of a good disposition. 13. Then idleness, like even the habit of fear and nature of apostasy, is an attractor of every one of the multitude, when it extends to much length; little by little, too, that guide and combatant becomes a petitioner for greatness, and it is manifest through that compassion (tang-libbemâth) and superior mindfulness of his, and through the glory of that stout champion, there are much fame and treasure.

14. The nobles of Aûrvâtâ-dang the Tûr, the ruler of the land, were angry and clamourers for Zaratûst's death; but he invited the Kîgs and Karaps to the religion of Aûharmazd, just as this passage of revelation states that Zaratûst also spoke thus: 'Worldly righteousness, O Aûrvâtâ-dang, thou Tûr and scanty giver! is the whole of the worship of the demons and the termination of the Mazda-worship of Zaratûst.' 15. And Aûrvâtâ-dang the Tûr, the scanty giver, spoke thus: 'O Zaratûst of the Spîtâmas! thou shalt not attract me to this evil in which thou really art.'

¹ Or, perhaps, 'celebrated.'

² The demon of the evil eye (see Bd. XXVIII, 33); Av. Ag-hashî, Vd. XX, 3, 7, 9.

16. Zaratûst also spoke thus: 'Aûharmazd' enquired of me thus: "O Zaratûst! when thou hast come away to us, among the spiritual lords, who of the people in thy material existence was the protector of the powerful men who are warriors, that was most seeking benefit, most seeking cattle, most extensively associating, most fully-supplying (that is, he gives out most things), and most hospitable¹ (that is, one saw the door of a prince's (khidîvö) treasury)?" I replied to him thus: "Aûrvâitâ-dang the Tûr, the scanty giver."

17. 'And he spoke in reply to me thus: "Him, O Zaratûst! thou shalt attract, first of the men who are warriors, to thinking about, speaking about, and acting about this religion which is Aûharmazd's and Zaratûst's. 18. If you attract him, O Zaratûst! and he believes in it and also gives currency to this religion of thine, and sits before thee in discipleship, this that one calls discipleship of thine he shall undertake, and the religion he hears fully he shall propagate (rûbâk va bîdûnyên); he is also ever after, O Zaratûst! the first of the men who are warriors, the one most seeking benefit, most seeking cattle, most extensively associating, and most hospitable of those who have yet been born and who will henceforth be born. 19. And if you do not attract him, O Zaratûst! and he does not believe in it, nor gives currency to this religion of thine, nor hears it, nor even sits before thee, nor would sit before thee, so that it is obvious to me that he is not attracted, thou shalt speak unto him thus, O Zaratûst: 'Thou art a stricken supplicant for righteousness, and a producer of lamentation for the souls of Tanâpûhar sinners worthy of death;' for even so it is, and for this reason he becomes worthy of death, because the existence of the religion is known to him." 20. What I tell thee, O Aûrvâltâ-dang, thou Tûr and scanty giver! is that thou art a stricken supplicant for righteousness, a producer of lamentation for the souls of Tanâpûhar sinners worthy of death.'

¹ Literally 'most many-doored.'

21. One prodigy of the demons is specified, who was the enemy of whatever sacred beings there are, a Karap, Vaêdvôist ¹ by name, of those unsanctified (ayastân) by Aûharmazd ². 22. And Aûharmazd spoke thus: 'I so befriend that man, O Zaratûst! who is put forward by me over the creatures, whom thou shalt invite (khvânês), I who am Aûharmazd, because I am through righteousness opposed to harm (that is, through virtue I keep harm away from the creatures), and the archangels are opposed to harm. 23. Therefore do thou proceed, O Zaratûst! and thou shalt demand from him for me (that is, keep as my property) a hundred youths of vigour (tôsh tal) ³, girls, and teams of four horses; so do thou speak to him thus: "O Vêdvôist! Aûharmazd demands from thee a hundred youths of vigour, girls, and teams of four horses; if thou givest them

¹ Here written in Pâzand, but the Pahlavi form, Vêdvôist, occurs in §§ 23, 24.

² Or 'of the non-worshippers of Aûharmazd.'

³ For an instance of gifts of slaves see the Pahlavi inscription on an engraved stone from Baghdâd, in Indian Antiquary, vol. xi, p. 224, ll. 2, 3 of inscription: 'kevan bîdûn va-kanîgakô . . . lakhvâr . . . shedrûnam . . . va-zak shibâ rîdô va-shibâ kanîgakôân shedrûnt:'—'Now . . . I send back a slave-boy and slave-girl . . . and those seven slave-boys and seven slave-girls are sent.' This inscription was probably engraved in the seventh century, judging from the forms of the letters.

to him, splendour and glory are thine through that giving; and if thou dost not give to him, evil destiny is thine through that not-giving.”

24. Then Zaratûst walked on to that Vêdvoist of those unsanctified, and spoke to him thus: ‘O Vêdvoist of the unsanctified! that which Aûharmazd demands from thee is a hundred youths of vigour, girls, and teams of four horses; if thou givest them to him, splendour and glory are thine through that giving; and if thou dost not give to him, evil destiny is thine through that not-giving.’ 25. And that Karap shouted in reply to Zaratûst thus: ‘For me there is no more from thee (that is, there is no opulence for me from thy action), nor from Aûharmazd; I am more of a divinity (bagtar) and am more forward in opulence than even Aûharmazd; many droves of a thousand swine are also acquired by me.’

26. On went Zaratûst, up to Aûharmazd and up to the archangels, and Zaratûst spoke thus: ‘O Aûharmazd, propitious spirit, creator of the world of embodied beings, thou righteous one! thus spoke he in reply to me: “For me there is no more from thee, nor from Aûharmazd; I am more of a divinity than thee or even Aûharmazd, and many droves of a thousand swine are acquired by me.”’

27. And Aûharmazd spoke thus: ‘Owing to the splendour and glory of those which are ours, O Zaratûst! that man has acquired arrogance (that is, the cattle we produced are the many cattle of his arrogance). 28. This will be his retribution for it then, however, when he does not reach further alive at the end of the third night¹; in that third night they will have stood aloof from alongside his life (that is, they will have stood away from assisting it); those seven of them who are radiant and bright-eyed (spêdō dōtsar) make him rush up on high, and up there on high he shall be fed upon mouldy bread (parnân).'

¹ Apparently the third night after death, on the passing away of

29. One marvel is the great healthfulness owing to the Hô-m-water and the bringing of this by Zaratûst from the river Dâtî, which is manifested when Vohûmanô was conveying him to the conference.

30. Just as is declared in the words of Aûharmazd to Zaratûst thus: 'For them is the Hô-m-water which thou bringest, O Zaratûst! not for those demon-worshipping people who worship the demons, or for a satisfier of courtezans (gêh-vigâr); they shall sprinkle it on to that bull thou shalt bring forward, who is a four-year-old of exhausted vigour, black-haired and useful; on drinking up the water, that bull will become quite sound from that infirmity.'

31. Thereupon, Zaratûst went on first into the embodied existence, on which dwelt, at the end of Sagâstân¹, that same Parshad whose title was Tôrâ (the Bull). 32. Parshad-tôrâ² also spoke to him which the soul is supposed to have its destination determined, until the resurrection (see Hâdôkht Nask, II, 18; III, 17). If the seven sacred beings who stand aloof from him be the archangels, they treat Vêdvoist very leniently; but this legend treats of a period which it assumes to be earlier than the laws of Zaratûst.

¹ The modern Sîstân, bordering upon Afghânistân and Bulûkistân.

² Av. Parshad-gau, mentioned twice in Yt. XIII, 96, 127, but it is not certain that both allusions refer to the same individual. The name also occurs in Bd. XXIX, 5, but only in one old MS.; in all others another name is given, though the locality appears to be thus: 'O Zaratûst of the Spîtâmas! give me this Hô-m-water which thou bringest.' 33. And Zaratûst spoke thus: 'Do thou praise righteousness, O Parshad-tôrâ! and scorn the demons; also utter the profession¹ of the Mazda-worship of Zaratûst among the iniquitous.' 34. It was praised by Parshad-tôrâ, and the demons were scorned by him; yet he did not speak among the iniquitous as to his accepting the Mazda-worship of Zaratûst. 35. Forward to him came Zaratûst at that praise of righteousness, for him was that Hô-m-water which Zaratûst brought; not for those demon-worshipping people who have worshipped the demons, but for that bull of his which Zaratûst brought forward, a four-year-old of exhausted vigour, black-haired and useful; owing to that bringing forward of the water, the bull became quite sound from that infirmity.

36. One marvel is that which is declared regarding the rushing of the evil spirit for the slaughter of Zaratûst, just as revelation² mentions thus: 'From the northern quarter forth rushed the deadly evil spirit, and thus shouted he, astute in evil, the deadly evil spirit: "Rush on, O fiend! and destroy the righteous Zaratûst."' 37. On to him they rushed, the fiend, the demon Bûd, and secret-moving Pestilence, the deceiver. 38. Zaratûst chanted aloud the Ahunavair; the fiend was confounded at that, and away they rushed, the demon Bûd and secret-moving Pestilence, the deceiver. 39. And the fiends shouted thus: "Thou art scornfully observing, O evil spirit! (that is, anything to the purpose thou nearly the same. In § 31 the first part of the name is here written Parshêd.

¹ The Fravarânê, Yas. XI, 16.

² Pahl. Vd. XIX, 1-4.

dost not thoroughly observe, and what thou orderest us to do is not possible); the death of him who is Zarâtûst of the Spîtâmas is not contemplated by us."

40. Owing to the full glory of the righteous Zarâtûst, he perceived in his mind thus: "The wicked demons, astute in evil, consult together about my death;" and up stood Zarâtûst, forth went Zarâtûst.'

41. Here is manifested a great wonder to the multitude, in that which is mentioned thus: 'And a stone was put forth by the righteous Zarâtûst, that was held in his hand, and the size of a hut, and which was obtained by him from the creator Aûharmazd, the spiritual Yathâ-ahû-vairyô ¹.'

42. And one marvel is this which is manifested not only in the country of Irân to Irânians, but in every land and to every race: the shattering of the demons' bodies through the chanting of the Ahunavair aloud by Zarâtûst. 43. Just as that which *a passage*² mentions thus: 'I worship the resources of the Kayân glory, with which the righteous Zarâtûst was associated in thinking about, speaking about, and acting about the religion which was, of all embodied existences, the most righteous in righteousness, the most lordly in sovereignty, the most radiant in radiance, and the most glorious in glory. 44. At his appearance³ the demons have fallen before him, at his appearance their semen (mâyagân) also drops, at his appearance the courtesan is also withdrawn by them from mankind; on hearing¹ him they lamented, very violently is it lamented by the demons. 45. By the Ahunavair, which the righteous Zaratûst chanted aloud to them, all the demons are seized and buried in the earth, where the complete shattering of their bodies is manifest.' 46. So that, after the shattering of their bodies, it became evident to those in the world that they were not able to do mischief in the bodily form of a demon, and they have been declared of the nature of sacred beings to mankind, but mankind fully understood that they are not sacred beings, but demons.

¹ The first three words of the Ahunavair formula.

² See Yt. XIX, 78-81.

³ Reading *vênâv*dahakih, but the first letter is omitted in all three occurrences of the word.

47. Zaratûst revealed (gushâftô) to mankind by the word of Aûharmazd, how in this religion the latter tells in words to Zaratûst where and how, in the embodied existence, mankind consider a demon as exalted or as a high-priest, because they are where they say that they must consider some one as high-priest. 48. So Aûharmazd spoke to Zaratûst thus: 'How do they who are good people, O Zaratûst! consider a demon as exalted? and how are they that even tell a demon thus: "We should accept you," because the demons speak thus: "It will happen to you"?''

49. And Zaratûst spoke thus: 'Only for the reason, O Aûharmazd! that people hasten on to that which is a jungly plain without dwellings, where no one resides from the departure of light until sun-

¹ If the word be Pahlavi, it is probably intended for snâyân, 'hearing'; but it may be merely an approximate transcript of Av. snaodhentis, which word, if this be the case, must have puzzled Sasanian scholars as much as it does those of the present time. As a transcript, the word might be read snôdîyân, and we might guess the meaning of the phrase to be 'thereupon weeping they lamented.'

rise arrives, when it is two Hâsars¹ of night, and again silently (agôp) from sunset until their returning together when the two Hâsars of night are gone, they hear that no work, no men, and no voices of dogs are there. 50. Then they say as to that, on arriving back, thus: "We have consulted with the demons there; when we request (zâêm) monarchy (sâstârîh) and leadership from them, they give them to us; when we request the possession of flocks and opulence from them, they give them to us."

51. Then Aûharmazd spoke thus: 'How can they do such a thing for them, O Zaratûst! (that is, how does it happen that it is continually given by them for those that speak thus: "It happened to us")?'

52. And Zaratûst spoke thus: 'They speak variously, O Aûharmazd! as to that generosity; there is one who speaks thus: "I have ever after been possessing more flocks, so long as I am in consultation with the demons;" and there is another who speaks thus: "I have ever after been worse and more ill-fated, so long as we are in consultation with those demons;" according as they possess a full subsistence for themselves from the demons (that is, when they diversely subsist fully on whatever they bespeak from the demons).' 53. Zaratûst also spoke thus: 'So they speak about it, O Aûharmazd! thus: "Observe further, where any one of us returns he is either shrunk together (that is, he holds his head down to his chest), or shrunk away (that is, he looks quite aside), or is only pleasantly cast down and, owing to acquiescence in him, the demons tempt (nes,hünd) him away out of mankind.”’

¹ Av. hâthra, which, as a measure of time, varies from one to two hours (see Farh. Oîm, p. 43, ll. 1-3).

54. And Aûharmazd spoke thus: ‘According to thy wish, do thou, O Zaratûst! fully observe thy existence, upwards from the head, downwards from the sole¹ of the foot, and afar on various sides; and thou shouldst beseech before and behind and in every direction, for we are not as to thee as the demons are as to mankind, we give away everything only in invisibility; but the demons, through close connection, when they rush out, tempt only with pleasantness. 55. Even unto thee, O Zaratûst! a fiend will rush, a female, golden-bodied and full-bosomed (so that she wears a bodice), and she rushes to request companionship from thee; a female, golden-bodied and full-bosomed, to request conversation from thee, to request co-operation from thee. 56. But thou shouldst not grant her companionship, nor conversation, nor shalt thou prescribe any conduct for her; afterwards, to revert her downwards, thou shalt utter aloud that triumphant saying the Yathâ-ahû-vairô.’

57. Zaratûst proceeded to the habitable and friendly world, for the purpose of fully observing that beaten track (khâpisnô) of the embodied existence; then that fiend came forward when he sat in the vicinity of a garment—that garment² which, when Vohûmanô was conveying him to the conference, was deposited by him—a female, golden-bodied and full-bosomed, and companionship, conversation, and co-operation were requested by her from him; she also whined (dandīdō): 'I am Spendarmad¹.'

¹ Assuming that lêlyâ stands for zêrih; the only difference, in Pahlavi writing, being in the first letter.

² See Chap. III, 60.

58. And Zarātūst spoke thus: 'She who is Spendarmad was fully observed by me in the light of a cloudless day, and that Spendarmad appeared to me fine behind and fine before and fine all round (that is, in all positions she was handsome); do thou turn thy back, and I shall know if thou art Spendarmad.'

59. And the fiend spoke to him thus: 'O Zarātūst of the Spītāmas! where we are, those who are females are handsome in front, but frightfully hideous behind; so do not make a demand for my back.' 60. After she had protested a third time, the fiend turned her back, and she was seen by Zarātūst behind in the groin; and when matter was exuded, it was full of serpents, toads, lizards, centipedes, and frogs.

61. And that triumphant saying, the Yathâ-ahû-vairyô, was uttered aloud by Zarātūst; then that fiend was annihilated, and Kêshmāk² the Karap rushed forth. 62. And he grumbled in leaving, thus: 'The misery which is here below is such as I have obtained, because, owing to thee, I thought that thy sacred beings were more joyful than any heroes who through defeat go to hell; I proceed more joyfully than the sacred beings, as regards the life in the body, so that I fully deceive the life in thy body, and thou art fully deceived by me as regards thine.'

¹ The female archangel Bountiful Devotion, in whose special charge are the earth and virtuous women; see Sls. XV, 5, 20-24.

² See Chap. II, 44, 45.

63. Zaratûst also revealed (gushûftö) this secret to mankind, and their knowledge how to test a demon is manifested therein, even by a great wonder of the same nature to mankind: the visible rushing of the demons into the world before Zaratûst, and their bodies being afterwards shattered by the loud chanting of revelation by Zaratûst from the Avesta announced, which was the acceptance of its truth by the ruler Vistâsp and the people of that time; and if this had not been so, and Vistâsp and those of his time were not accepting the Avesta which was announced by Zaratûst in this fashion, through their considering it false, it would not have reached unto us.

64. One marvel is this, with which, too, he who was Zaratûst became aware from revelation, about the vileness and perverted religion of Zâk of the deadly Karaps of Vistâsp and many other Kals and Karaps who were at the residence of Vistâsp, their combination for the death of Zaratûst, the preparation for severe abuse of him to Vistâsp, and influencing Vistâsp for his death by command of Vistâsp, which extends to awful imprisonment and punishment. 65. Afterwards, too, his knowledge about his preservation therefrom, the manifestation of his wondrousness, and the evidence concerning his attainment unto prophesying; also after the continuance of the last questioning of the ten years of conference, his departure alone, by the advice and command of Aûharmazd, to the residence of Vistâsp and the precinct (var) of that terrible conflict. 66. His uttering, on the horse-course (aspânvar) of Vistâsp, a reminder of the power and triumph of Aûharmazd over himself, as he invited Vistâsp to the religion of Aûharmazd ; and with great wisdom Vistâsp heard the words of Zaratûst, on account of his own complete mindfulness and spiritual knowledge of ritual, and would have asked for an outpouring of prophecy.

67. But thereupon, too—before the words of Zaratûst were fully heard by him, and he could have understood the character of Zaratûst—owing to the demonizing of the deadly Zâk and the rest of those Kîgs and Karaps, spoken out with slanderous knowledge and perverse actions to Vistâsp about Zaratûst, there then occurred his consignment of Zaratûst to that confinement and punishment as stated in the words of Zaratûst thus : ‘I have spoken about their three enquiries, and I am bound by thirty of them, I with thirty-three fetters of murderers, wicked ones, and demon-worshippers¹. 68. But the hunger of manhood’s inclination² violently affected the strength of my legs, but the hunger of manhood’s inclination violently affected the force of my arms, but the hunger of manhood’s inclination violently affected the hearing of my ears, but the hunger of manhood’s inclination violently affected the sight of my eyes, and it would force away my bosom up to my back (so that it³ would stay behind at my back) through the continuance of that deadly hunger of manhood’s inclination.’

69. And here, through the mightiness of Zaratûst—who proceeded alone to the terrible combat with evil, where there became manifest, in the mode which is written, the descent of his life into so much punishment, due to hunger and thirst, heavy fetters, and other misery unto which the strength of human nature is attaining, but unto which it is not destined — is manifested a great wonder to king Vistâsp and his officials, when his full-glorious person was found by them alive in awfulness, imprisonment, and those other transformations (padgastakîh) of long-continued starvation.

¹ Compare Zs. XXIII, 5.

² Reading gûsn-girâth ; but it might be dûs-vîrâth, ‘bad provision.’ He was left to starve to death in prison.

³ The bosom. The idea of the writer appears to have been that in case of utter starvation the chest would totally collapse, so that the breast bone would touch the spine.

70. One marvel is this, that the sacred beings contrived, for the sake of (va/ vahân-i) his preservation from that awfulness, a body possessing life, and on his account it became lifeless and imperceptible; afterwards, in the great session of Vistâsp and the assembly of the world, Zaratûst, through the strength and blessedness of the true word, restored the same body anew, like that which is issuing in the statement of the wonder about the splendid horse of Vistâsp¹.

71. One marvel is his telling and disclosing the thoughts of king Vistâsp and of those of the realm, and many other concealed matters, through spiritual perception.

72. One marvel is several matters of evil deceit (vad gamâs) which Dahâk had done in Bâpêl²

¹ This very slight allusion to the cure of Vistâsp's horse by Zaratûst is sufficient to show that this legend existed in the ninth century; but the writer of the Dînkard seems inclined to trace it back to a tale that he vaguely relates in the earlier part of this section, and which he evidently found in older writings; this tale, however, does not mention a horse, but only an animated body. The Persian Zaratûst-nâma develops the legend of the sick horse, whose legs are drawn up to its belly, into 160 couplets.

² Babylon; see Yt. V, 29-31; XV, 19-21.

through witchcraft, and mankind had come to idol-worship through that seduction, and its increase was the destruction of the world; but through the triumphant words of the religion, which Zaratûst proclaimed opposing it, that witchcraft is all dissipated and disabled.

73. One marvel is this which is manifested, with wonders owing to Zaratûst, in controversy about the religion with the famous learned of the realm, among whom, known for learning in the world, are the investigators (girâyagânö) of the words of speech; and among those things which are more surprisingly controversial are those later (sibastar) words which are to save their creatures by a later religion. 74. Also to proclaim its truth intelligibly, and to make king Vistâsp and those previously learned men without doubt as to the truth of the religion, the creator Aûharmazd sends some spirits, Vohûmanô, Ashavahistô, and the propitious fire¹, as a reminder to Vistâsp about the true prophesying of Zaratûst, and the desire of Aûharmazd for the acceptance of the religion of Mazda-worship by Vistâsp and for its propagation in the world.

75. The wondrousness which is manifested to Vistâsp and those of the realm—both through the travelling (vâzîdanö) of those archangels down from the sky to the earth, and in their travelling to the abode of Vistâsp—was like this which revelation mentions thus: ‘Then he who is the creator Aûharmazd spoke to them, to Vohûmanô, Ashavahistô, and also the fire of Aûharmazd, the propitious, thus: “Proceed! you who are archangels, unto the abode of Vistâsp, whose resources (afzâr) are cattle and who is far and widely famed, with a view to his reliance upon this religion (that is, till he shall stand up for this religion); and, as regards the answering words of the righteous Zaratûst of the Spîtâmas, to approve the nature (zag sân) of those words." 76. The archangels proceeded unto the abode of Vistâsp, whose resources are cattle and who is far and widely famed; their radiance, in that lofty residence, seemed to him, that Vistâsp, a heaven of complete light, owing to their great power and triumph; this was so that, when he thus looked upon it, the exalted Kaî-Vistâsp trembled, all his courtiers (pêsakô) trembled, all his chieftains (padô) were confused, and he of the superior class was like the driver of a chariot-horse.

¹ Compare Zs. XXIII, 7.

77. 'And the fire of Aûharmazd spoke, in the words of heroes, thus: "Fear not, for there is no fearing for thee, thou exalted Kaî-Vistâsp! they have not come for alarming thy abode, as a reminder of the deputed envoys of Argâsp¹; there have not come, for alarming thy abode, the two Khyôns of

¹ Av. Aregad-aspa, king of the Hvyaonas (Pahl. Khyôns), mentioned in Yt. V, 109, 113, 116; XVII, 50; XIX, 87. His war with Vistâsp, for the purpose of compelling the latter to abjure his new religion, is described in the Yâdkâr-i Zarîrân (see Geiger in Sitzungsberichten der p.-p. und h. Classe der k. bayer. Akad. der Wiss. 1890, Bd. II, pp. 43-84). Argâsp sends two envoys, Vîdrafs the wizard and Nâmkhvâst of the Hazârs, to demand Vistâsp's submission; this is refused defiantly by advice of Zarîr, the king's brother; and both nations prepare for war. When the Irânians meet the Khyôns, Vistâsp consults his vazîr Gâmâsp, who prognosticates prodigious slaughter. And, after losing most of their chieftains (including twenty-three brothers and sons of Vistâsp), the Irânians utterly annihilate the Khyôn army. This war is called the 'war of the religion' in Bd. XII, 33; Byt. III, 9.

Argâsp who demand tribute and revenue (sâk va-bâzö); and there has not come, for alarming thy abode, the all-overpowering thief who is an injurer, or the dog who is a highwayman. 78. We are three who have come over (taristö) to thy abode, Vohû-manô, Ashavahistô, and also the fire of the propitious lord; of these thy knowledge is most wisely most just. 79. If thou helpst vision, so that it becomes wisdom for thee, the worldly existence requires the good religion of the Mazda-worshippers, which proceeds purely through the recitation which Zaratûst of the Spîtâmas teaches. 80. Do thou chant the Ahunavair, do thou praise perfect righteousness¹, and utter no worship² for the demons! because the desire of Aûharmazd, as regards thee, is for thy reliance upon this religion; it is also the desire of the archangels, and the desire, as regards thee, of the other sacred beings who are beneficent (sapîrdahakö) and righteous.

81. "And as the recompense in this life, if you praise the good and pure religion of the righteous Zaratûst of the Spîtâmas, we will give unto thee a long reign and sovereignty, and the long lifetime of a life of 150 years; we will give unto thee Good Integrity and Rectitude³ which is long-continued in desire for constantly assisting, good for assistance through constantly assisting, and not passing away ; and we will give unto thee a son, Pêshyôtan¹ is his name, he is immortal, and so is undecaying, hungerless, and thirstless, living and predominant in both existences, those of the embodied beings and of the spirits. 82. But, as the recompense in this life, if you do not praise the good and pure religion of the righteous Zaratûst of the Spîtâmas, we will not convey thee up on high, and we will order thine end ; the vultures which are mindful of decay will see and eat up those and these of thine, thy blood will reach the ground, and the waters will not reach thy body.”

¹ That is, recite the Yathâ-ahû-vairyô and the Ashem-vohû formulas.

² Pahl. a-aîzîsnîh, literally, a 'non-worship,' which may mean something worse than 'no worship;' but 'execration or malediction' is usually expressed by gazîsn, 'cursing,' which is written exactly like yazîsn, 'worship.'

³ Pahl. Aharîsvang and Râē-astîsnîh, the equivalents of Av. Ashis-vanguhi and Rasāstât who are spiritual personifications of the qualities mentioned in the text.

83. One marvel is that connected with the confidence (vâvari-hastanö) of Vistâsp in the religion, even through that occurrence of the speech of the archangels ; and, afterwards, the obedience (patya-sâi?) of his thoughts in the case of the delays through the bloodshed owing to Argâsp² the Khyôn and his attendant heroes (pas-gurdânö) throughout the same Khyôns, because of the acceptance of the religion. 84. Also, for the sake of daily and visibly showing to Vistâsp the certified victory over Argâsp and the Khyôns, and his own superior position, unceasing rule, splendour, and glory, the creator Aûhar Mazda sends, at the same time, the angel Nêryôsang³ to the abode of Vistâsp, as a reminder for the archangel Ashavahistô to give to Vistâsp to drink of that fountain of life, for looking into the existence of the spirits, the enlightening food by means of which great glory and beauty are seen by Vistâsp.

¹ Written Pêshyâtanö, both here and in Chap. V, 12. He is the immortal priestly ruler of Kangdez, who was expected to come to restore the religion in Irân in the time of Aûshêdar, see Bd. XXIX, 5 ; Byt. III, 25-32, 36-42, 51, 52.

² Here written Argadâspô ; see § 77.

³ Written Nêrôksang here and in § 85.

85. Just as this passage of revelation mentions thus: 'And he who is the creator Aûharmazd spoke to the angel Nêryôsang thus: "Proceed and travel, O Nêryôsang the assembler¹! unto the abode of Vistâsp, whose resources are cattle and who is far and widely famed, and thou shalt say this to Ashavahistô, thus: 'O Ashavahistô! do thou authoritatively take this fine saucer (tastô), which is fully finer than the other saucers that are made (that is, the cup (gâm) is as fine as is possible to make for royalty), and carry up to Vistâsp the Hôm and Vars² (mûi) which are for us; and do thou give it³ unto the ruler Vistâsp to drink up, by whose word it is accepted.'" 86. Ashavahistô authoritatively taking the fine saucer from him, also, thereupon, gave it unto the exalted ruler Kai-Vistâsp to drink *from*⁴; and the ruler of the country (dîh), the exalted Kai-Vistâsp, lay down when divested of his robes, and he spoke to Hûtôs⁵ thus: "You, O Hûtôs! are she

¹ Compare Vd. XXII, 7.

² A lock of three, five, or seven hairs from the tail of a white bull, that is tied to a metal thumb-ring which is put into the Hôm-strainer when the Hôm-juice is about to be poured through it. See Haug's Essays, 3rd ed., pp. 397-403. This ring and lock of hair may be the relic of a hair-sieve that may have been used for straining the Hôm-juice in former times.

³ The saucer, or cup, of strained Hôm-juice.

⁴ The foregoing twenty-six words, excepting two, have been here repeated by the writer of the old Bombay MS., after turning over a folio.

⁵ Av. Hutaosa, wife of Vistâsp and descendant of Nôdar (Av. Naotara); see Yt. XV, 35, 36. According to the later authority of the Yâdkar-i Zarîân, § 48, she was also a sister of Vistâsp.

whom the prompt ability (têzō hûnar) of Zaratûst of the Spîtâmas should reach; and through the diligence of the prompt ability of Zaratûst of the Spîtâmas, you¹ would expound the religion of Aûharmazd and Zaratûst.”’

87. One marvel is this which is declared; that when Vistâsp, accepting the religion, praises righteousness, the demons in hell are disabled, and the demon Aeshm² rushes to the country of the Khyôns and to Argâsp, the deadly one of the Khyôns, because he was the mightiest of the tyrants at that time; and the most hideous of all, of so many of them in the country of the Khyôns, are poured out by him for war.

88. And here, too, is manifested a great wonder also to the host (ram) of Irân who have been coming there, unto the residence of Argâsp the Khyôn, like this which revelation mentions thus: ‘Then, just at the time his legion is separately displayed, Aeshm the unredeemable (tanâpûharak) adheres (gêrevêdō) to him, as being himself without escort (agurôh), and quite opposes (barâ sperêzêdō) him, because: “You, who are a Khyôn, have become unlucky through want of success after you engage in conflict.”’ 89. Henceforth, it is not that the victory of Irân has come over foreigners and Khyôns—through companionship at the abode of that man who is mightier by the birth of Zaratûst

The similarity of her name to that of Atossa, the wife and sister of Cambyses, whom Darius afterwards married, is striking.

¹ As the verbal forms of the present third person singular and second person plural are alike in Pahlavi, it is doubtful which personal pronoun to use.

² The demon of Wrath; see Bd. XXVIII, 15-17.

of the Spîtâmas—when that hideous sovereignty of Argâsp, the deadly Khyôn, is swallowed up by him (Vistâsp), for the confusion of the deadly species (that is, they are further smitten by him, one through the other; and are swallowed together by him, mutually struggling and through mutually devouring). 90. And apart from him, that bitter and well-hardened Khyôn that is quite disabled by him the good Vistâsp, that deadly fiend is disturbed about him of eloquent abilities (Zaratûst); and so he grumbled at the hideous sovereignty thus: ‘Prompt ability comes into existence and the Khyôn came; thereupon prompt ability comes into existence and the Irânian has come ¹.’

.

CHAPTER V.

1. About the marvellousness which is manifested from the acceptance of the religion by Vistâsp onwards till the departure (vîkhêzô) of Zaratûst, whose guardian spirit is revered, to the best existence, when seventy-seven years² had elapsed onwards from his birth, forty-seven onwards from his conference, and thirty-five years onwards from the acceptance of the religion by Vistâsp¹.

¹ According to the numbering of the folios of the old MS. of 1659 (brought from Persia to India in 1783) one folio, numbered 313 in Persian words, is here missing. It has not yet been found in India, and, owing to folio 312 apparently completing a sentence, and folio 314 evidently beginning a new chapter, the loss of text is hardly perceptible. It would have filled the next two pages.

² The MS. has ‘57 years,’ through ۵۰ ‘50’ being written instead of ۷۰ ‘70’; but see Chap. III, 51 which states the interval of thirty years between his birth and conference.

2. One marvel is this which is declared that, when Zaratûst chanted revelation in the abode of Vistâsp, it was manifest to the eye that it is danced to with joyfulness, both by the cattle and beasts of burden, and by the spirit of the fires which are in the abode. 3. By which, too, a great wonder is proclaimed, like this which revelation mentions thus: 'There seemed a righteous joyfulness of all the cattle, beasts of burden, and fires of the place, and there seemed a powerfulness of every kind of well-prepared spirits and of those quitting the abode (mân-hishânö), "that will make us² henceforth powerful through religion," when they fully heard those words which were spoken by the righteous Zaratûst of the Spîtâmas.'

4. And one marvel is the provision, by Zaratûst, of the achievement of ordeal, that indicator of the acquitted and incriminated for sentence by the judge, in obscure legal proceedings; of which it is said in revelation there are about (k'igûn) thirty-three kinds. 5. These, too, the disciples of Zaratûst kept in use, after that time, until the collapse of the monarchy of Irân; and the custom of one of them is that of pouring melted metal on the breast, as in the achievement of the saintly (hû-fravardö) Âtûrpâd son of Mâraspend, through whose preservation a know-

¹ The contents of this chapter and the next, as far as VI, 11, may be connected with the following summary in Dk. VIII, xiv, 9:—'Information also as to many other things which are marvellous, and as to a summary of the statements of these seven enquiries, which is derived from knowledge of every kind.' For the seven enquiries, see Zs. XXII.

² Or, perhaps, 'make the abode.'

ledge about the religion was diffused in the world ; and of the manifestation, too, through that great wonder, this is also said, on the same subject, in the good religion, that of those many, when they behold that rite of ordeal, it convinces the wicked ones ¹.

6. One marvel is that which is afterwards manifested, after the former captivity of Zaratûst ² and his speaking about the religion to Vistâsp and those of the realm ³, such as the acceptance of the religion by Vistâsp and that which Zaratûst said to him at his original arrival, as regards the declaration of a ruler's religion, thus : 'Thine is this disposition, and this religion which is calling (khrôsakô) is a property of that description which thou putttest together, O Kai-Vistâsp ! so that if thou wilt accept this disposition of thine, thou wilt possess this religion which exists (that is, the learning of learnings), and be the ruler that shall cause its progress ; thou will possess in this disposition of thine, as it were, a new support (stûnakô), and any one will uphold thee by upholding it, as thou art the possessor of the support of this religion.' 7. Also the victory of Vistâsp over Argâsp the Khyôn and other foreigners in that awful battle ⁴, just as Zaratûst explained unto Vistâsp in revelation ; and much which is declared by revelation.

8. One marvel is the disclosure by Zaratûst, in complete beneficence, medical knowledge, acquaintance with character, and other professional retentiveness (ptshakô-gîrûkîh), secretly and completely, of what is necessary for legal knowledge and spiritual

¹ §§ 4, 5 are already translated in AV. p. 145.

² See Chap. IV, 67-69.

³ See Chap. IV, 73.

⁴ See Chap. IV, 88-90.

perception ; also the indication, by revelation, of the rites for driving out pestilence (sēgō), overpowering the demon and witch, and disabling sorcery and witchcraft. 9. The curing of disease, the counter-action of wolves and noxious creatures, the liberating of rain, and the confining of hail, spiders, locusts, and other terrors of corn and plants and adversaries of animals, by the marvellous rites which are also relating to the worship of Khûrdad and Amûrdad¹, and many other rites which were kept in use until the collapse of the monarchy of Irân ; and there are some which have remained even till now², and are manifested with a trifle of marvellousness by the sacred fires. 10. And the disclosure to mankind of many running waters from marvellous streams (ardâyâ), and remedies for sickness which are mixed (fargardakō) by well-considering physicians ; many are spiritual and celestial, gaseous (vâyīg) and earthy ; and the worldly advantage of others, too, is the praise (lāfō) which ought to come to one for angelic³ wisdom.

11. One is the marvel of the Avesta itself, which, according to all the best reports of the world, is a compendium of all the supremest statements of wisdom.

12. One marvel is the coming of this also to ¹ These two archangels personify health and immortality, respectively (see Chap. II, 19), and are supposed to have special charge of water and plants.

² The ninth century, unless this phrase be copied from one of the sources of the Dînkard.

³ The MS. has yazdânō-khirađōîh which has the meaning given in the text ; but this word can also be read gehânō-khirađōîh, 'worldly wisdom,' though gehânō is the more usual orthography.

Vistâsp, which the archangels announced as a recompense for accepting the religion ¹, as he saw Pêshyôtan the happy ruler, that immortal and undecaying son, not wanting food, large-bodied, completely strong, fully glorious, mighty, victorious, and resembling the sacred beings; the unique splendour of Pêshyôtan for the sovereignty of Kangdez in yonder world, as allotted to him by the creator Aûharmazd, is manifested even through that great wonder to the multitude ².

CHAPTER VI.

1. About the marvellousness which is manifested after the departure (vîkhêzô) of Zaratûst, whose guardian spirit is revered, to the best existence, and in the lifetime of Vistâsp.

2. One marvel is this which is declared by revelation, about the provision of a chariot ³ by Srîtô ⁴ of the Vîsraps ⁵; this is through a famous wonder and

¹ See Chap. IV, 81.

² It is singular that nothing is stated here about the death or departure of Zaratûst, which event, according to § 1, ought to have concluded this chapter. But in Chap. III, 39, Dûrâsrôb evidently foretells that Zaratûst will be killed by the evil eye of Brâdrôk-rêsh. In Dk. V, iii, 2, the killing of Zaratûst by Brâdrô-rêsh the Tûr is merely mentioned. In Zs. XXIII, 9, it is stated that Zaratûst passes away (vidîrêdô) forty-seven years after his conference and preaching to Vistâsp. While the modern Persian Zaratûst-nâma does not mention his death, though it speaks of Bartarûsh as his chief enemy in his younger days. But compare Chap. III, 22.

³ Pahl. rāē which is written exactly like the Pahlavi ciphers for twenty-two and, no doubt, stands for Av. ratha.

⁴ So spelt ten times in §§ 2-11, but here Srâtô. It is also Srîtô in Dk. V, iii, 2.

⁵ Pahl. Vîsrapân in §§ 9, 11 and Dk. V, iii, 2; but here it is the coming of a report about the marvellousness of that chariot to Vistâsp, Vistâsp's begging that chariot from Sṛitô, and Sṛitô saying in reply to Vistâsp: 'That chariot is for a righteous man, in which the soul of Sṛitô in the lifetime of Sṛitô's body¹, and that of that man in the lifetime of his body, come visibly together once in the worldly existence.' 3. And the soul of Sṛitô, through the generosity of that Sṛitô, presents that chariot to the eyesight of that man of righteousness; thereby it becomes evident he had seen it, and is told not to act in another manner. 4. The exalted Kai-Vistâsp, as becoming from revelation more particularly aware of this marvel about the future at that time, and for the sake of this marvel being published to the worldly existence (gêhânîgîh), and of his becoming Visrapân, and in § 7 the first letter is omitted, leaving only îsrapân. In Pahl. Vd. XX, 11 (Sp.) we have Sṛit-î, 𐭪𐭫𐭮𐭩 (in L₄), which latter name may also be îsrapânô, though more likely to be read Sêrzânô when considered by itself. It is almost certain that the person mentioned in Pahl. Vd. XX, 11 is intended to be the same as that named here in the text. But it is doubtful if this person be the Av. Thrîta son of Sâyuzdri (or Sâizdri) of Yt. V, 72; XIII, 113. As the legend in the text appears to refer to the soul of Sṛitô, or Thrîta, revisiting the world to meet Vistâsp, this Sṛitô may have been the warrior Sṛitô, the seventh brother, employed by Kai-Ûs, about 350 years earlier, to kill the frontier-settling ox of that time, but there seem to be no means of so identifying him with absolute certainty.

¹ This is the literal meaning of the Pahl. 'mûn rūbân-î Sṛitô pavan zîndagîh-î Sṛitô tanô,' but it is not quite consistent with Sṛitô's return to the earth as a spirit. The Indian copyists seem to have observed this, as they have omitted several words, so as to alter the meaning to the following:—'That chariot is for a man of the righteous, with whom Sṛitô in the lifetime of that man's body comes visibly together, &c.' But the sentence is not quite grammatical.

more invoking for the supremacy of the Mazda-worshipping religion, became discernible by those of the realm, is sought for, and is most attended.

5. A great wonder became manifest to Vistâsp and those of the world, just as revelation mentions thus: 'Thereupon the archangels are letting forth the soul of that Srîtô from the light of the supreme heaven, from the light on to the earth created by Aûharmazd; and the soul of Vistâsp proceeded from him into the light to meet it. 6. Vistâsp proceeded on to the propitious south (rapîtvinô); he was producing more gain than the gainers, and he was more inquisitive than the inquisitive; to all whom he saw he spoke, and unto such as spoke he listened; when he gazed at them looking simultaneously they stood up, and obeisance was offered by them unto the soul and person of Vistâsp.'

7. Immediately upon that no delay occurred until there came on at a run—besides the soul of Srîtô of the Vîsraps—the most horrid (agrandtûm) of demons, from the horrid northern quarter of the horrid destroyer (zadâr), that was himself black, and his deeds, too, were very black. 8. And as he comes himself, so also he grumbles to the soul of Srîtô thus: 'Give a maintenance (khvârag) to Vistâsp who is thy driver¹, for the sake of good fellowship and service, and for that, righteousness is suitable unto a pure one; do not give it as a thing which is protective (that is, do not give it for the sake of worldly gratuity), but for love of the righteousness which is owing to the perfect existences.'

9. When those words were fully heard by Srîtô of the Vīsraps, the early bestower (levīnō-vakhsh), he stood still and so he spoke in words thus: 'For righteousness I give thee, O mighty Kaī-Vistāsp! this chariot which is without a driver, only for love of the righteousness which is owing to the perfect existences.' 10. As much for righteousness as is best for righteousness, and as much for the soul as is best for the soul, the gift of the whole was secured (that is, its acceptance was announced as often as three times).

¹ This speech seems intended as veiled irony.

11. Then that chariot became two chariots, one spiritual and the other worldly; in the worldly one the exalted Kaī-Vistāsp travelled forth unto the village of the Nōdars¹ in the joyfulness of good thoughts, and in the spiritual one the soul of Sritō of the Vīsraps travelled forth unto the best existence.

12. One marvel is this which is declared that in fifty-seven years onwards from the acceptance of the religion by Zaratūst², the arrival of the religion is published in the seven regions³; and within the lifetime of Vistāsp, the circumstance (aêdûnōh) is manifested by the coming of some from other regions to Frashōstar of the Hvōbas⁴ for enquiry about the ¹ Nōdar (Av. Naotara) was a son of king Mânûskīhar (Bd. XXXI, 13) and an ancestor of king Vistāsp. Vistāsp being a descendant of Kaī-Kavâd (Bd. XXXI, 28, 29) who was the adopted son of Aûzōbō (Bd. XXXI, 24) a son of Zâgh, son of Masvâk, son of Nōdar (Bd. XXXI, 23 corrected from XXXIII, 5). Hûtôs, the wife of Vistāsp, was also of the village of the Nōdars (Yt. XV, 35).

² That is fifty-seven years after the conference of Zaratūst (see Chap. V, 1).

³ See the summary in Dk. VIII, xiv, 10:—'Likewise, about the communication of Zaratūst's knowledge of the Mazda-worshipping religion to the world, his attracting mankind to the religion, and the ages, after Zaratūst, until the renovation of the universe.'

⁴ Av. Ferashaostrō Hvōgvō (Yas. LI, 17); he was a brother religion, even as revelation mentions thus: 'Two whose names are thus, Spītōis¹ and Arezrâspô², who have hastened unto Frashôstar of the Hvôbas in search of wisdom.'

13. Thus much splendour and wonder of Vistâsp and those of the realm regarding Zaratûst³, and thus much due to the coming of the archangels from the sky to the earth before Vistâsp, as evidence about the true prophesying of Zaratûst⁴; and that, too, about Pêshyôtan⁵, the chariot of Sritô⁶, and other subjects seen written above, are declared by the Avesta, which is the same that they accepted from Zaratûst, as the culmination⁷ (avarîgânîh) of Aûharmazd's words. 14. And if this splendour, glory, and wonder that are written above as regards what those learned men of the realm saw—which are in the statement revealed by the Avesta—had not occurred, king Vistâsp and those learned men of the realm would not have seen what this Avesta had revealed to them—which was thus much splendour and wonder reported by it to them—and not one word about leaving its preservation to us would be annexed.

of Gâmâsp (Dk. V, ii, 12 ; iii, 4 ; Zs. XXIII, 10), and the father of Zaratûst's wife Hvôvi. The Hvôvas (Pahl. Hvôbas) were a numerous family.

¹ Av. gen. Spītōis (Yt. XIII, 121). He was high-priest of Fradaḍafsh, the south-east region.

² Av. Ereẓrâspa (ibid.) He was high-priest of Vîdaḍafsh, the south-west region (see Bd. XXIX, 1). These foreign envoys were brothers, each being a son of Uspâsnu.

³ See Chap. IV, 73.

⁴ See Chap. IV, 74-82.

⁵ See Chap. V, 12.

⁶ See §§ 2-11.

⁷ See Chap. V, 11.

CHAPTER VII.

1. About the marvellousness which is manifested after the time of Vistâsp until the collapse (hangaf-tanö) of the sovereignty of Irân.

2. There is marvellousness which is manifested after Vistâsp until the collapse of the sovereignty of Irân, apart from the blessedness of ordeal, the accomplishment of other Avestic rites, the great power over the sacred fires, and many other religious observances which were connected with the disciples of Zaratûst.

3. Even after the devastation which happened owing to Alexander, those who were rulers after him brought back much to the collection from a scattered state¹; and there are some who have ordered the keeping of it in the treasury of Shapân².

4. Likewise there is to be brought forward what there is concerning the names of rulers and high-priests, such as arrive for it at times and periods, which are each consecutive, as organizers of the religion and the world; also of the tyrant or apostate, who is manifest at various periods, for the disturbance of the religion and monarchy and the penance of the world, with the coming of the penitential one.

¹ Referring to king Valkhas the Askânian (probably Vologeses I, see S. B. E., vol. xxxvii, p. 413); possibly also to Ardashir Pâpakân.

² So here, but usually written Shapîgân, and sometimes Shas-pîgân. It was no doubt a royal treasury, and Dk. V, iii, 4, calls it so, but uses the words gangö-î khûdâyân, in which Gâmâsp is said to have deposited the Avesta and Zand written in gold upon ox-hides. If Shapîgân be a corruption of shâyagân, 'royal,' it is singular that some copyist has not corrected the spelling.

5. Such as Vohûmanô, son of Spend-dâd¹, of the rulers, about whom it says even this in the Avesta, that he is Vohûmanô, the just, who is the most efficient of the assembly of Mazda-worshippers.
 6. And Sênôv² of the high-priests, as about him it says even this: 'The religion becomes a hundred years old when Sênôv is born, and two hundred years when he passes away; he was also the first Mazda-worshipper with a life of a hundred years, and who walks forth upon this earth with a hundred disciples.'

7. Also Alexander of the devastators, as it says even this of him in revelation³, that in those three winters, which are of like purpose (ham-ayâzakô), that Aeshm⁴ would set up a deadly king in the impenitent world, who is the evil-destined Alexander.

8. And of the high-priests are Arezvâk⁵, the interpretation of whose name is 'the pure word;'
 Srûtvôk-spâdâk⁶, the interpretation of whose name is 'the propitious recitation;'
 Zrayanghau⁶, the interpretation of whose name is 'the ocean existence;'
 and Spentô-khratvau⁶, the interpretation of ¹ Av. Spentô-dâta of Yt. XIII, 103, a son of Vistâsp, with whom Avesta dynastic history ends. He was the Persian Isfendiyâr, and his son Vohûmanô is unknown to the Avesta. The Kitradâd Nask (Dk. VIII, xiii, 18) mentions a 'Namûn, son of Spend-shêd,' which probably stands for 'Vohûmanô, son of Spend-dâd,' but this appears to have been in a Pahlavi supplement compiled in Sasanian times. He is also mentioned in Bd. XXXIV, 8, a chapter 'about the computation of years by the Arabs,' according to the Irânian Bundahis.

² Av. Saêna of Yt. XIII, 97, where the last clause of the passage here translated from the Avesta occurs. Compare Zs. XXIII, 11.

³ Not in the extant Avesta.

⁴ The demon of Wrath.

⁵ Av. gen. Erezvau and Srûtvô-spâdau in Yt. XIII, 115.

⁶ These two names are written in their Av. gen. forms, as they occur in Yt. XIII, 115.

whose name is 'the propitious wisdom.' 9. Because it says even this about them, namely: 'I mention thy manifestation, and also the tokens of its publicity when this religion of thy Mazda-worshippers becomes four hundred years *old*¹; in this law benightedness (lêlyâîh) arises, and the embodied existences see the manifestation through calculation of the planets and also the stars; and whoever, too, are mine are so for a century, through the average opinion of thirty medium winters for a man²; and the righteous Arezvâk and those three others are they of the most righteous existences, over whom they are the most masterly and most authoritative in that time.' 10. And this, too, that they who glorify the religion of the Mazda-worshippers in the fifth and sixth centuries are they; and no persons save their souls, except those who remain for the arrival of the four³ interpretations that arise through the authority of these four individuals, Arezvâk, Srûtô-spâdhau⁴, Zrayang, hau, and Spentô-khratvau who, all four of them, seek their thoughts, words, and deeds in the sacred text (mânsar).

11. Also Rashn-rêsh⁵ is the apostate of that

¹ If the chronology in Bd. XXXIV, 7, 8 were correct, the interval between the first revelation of the religion and the death of Alexander would be 272 years, and this would make the 400th year of the religion coincide with B. C. 195.

² That is, for a generation. The meaning appears to be, that these four successive high-priests insure the continuance of orthodox religion for more than a century, or well into the sixth century of the religion, as mentioned in § 10.

³ The MS. has the cipher for 'three,' by mistake.

⁴ Here written in Avesta characters.

⁵ In Dk. III, cxcviii, 2, this apostate is said to have been an time, as *some one*¹ says unto Rashn, one of the sacred beings, and about many besides this one, thus: 'All who are creatures of the beneficent spirit are distressed by their persecution, but put trust in those men, Arezvâk and those three others.'

12. And of the organizers of the period is Artakhshatar², son of Pâpak, as it says even this about him, namely: 'Which is that ruler who is powerful, more striving than the Kayâns, and mighty, an embodiment of the sacred commandments and awfully armed³; in whose abode Aharisvang⁴, the virtuous and radiant, walks forth in maiden form, beneficent and very strong, well-formed, high-girded, and truthful, of illustrious race and noble?

13. Whoever it is that, on the occurrence of strife, seeks prosperity for himself with his own arm; whoever it is that, on the occurrence of strife, encounters the enemies with his own arm.'

14. Tanvasar⁵ is also for his assistance, as it says associate (ham-pâfgar) of the Christian ecclesiastic Akvân, and yells out ten admonitions contradicting those of the righteous Sênôv who is mentioned in § 6 (see Peshotan's edition, vol. v, pp. 239, 311). It does not follow that he was a contemporary of Sênôv, and here he seems to be placed fully two centuries later.

¹ Probably Aûharmazd.

² The founder of the Sâsânian dynasty, who reigned as king of the kings of Persia, A.D. 226-241.

³ Most of these qualities are applied to the angel Srôsh, the personification of obedience (see Yas. LVII, 1); also to Kavi Vistâspa and Karsna, son of Zbaurvant, in Yt. XIII, 99, 106.

⁴ Av. Ashis vanguhi, 'good rectitude,' personified as a female angel; her description is given in Yt. XIII, 107, and is similar to that of Anâhita in Yt. V, 64.

⁵ So spelt here and in §§ 17, 18, thrice in all; it is also thrice spelt Tansar, in Dk. III, last chapter, 7; IV, 25, 25, and this mis-spelling has led to the mis-pronunciation Tôsar. It appears, however, that Tanvasar is a transposition of Tanvars, 'hairy-this, too, about them : ‘ Zaratûst asked again thus : “ Who is he who is the most salutary for a country, which the demons have exhausted of everything virtuous, over which his authority is brought and which is wicked and teaching falsehood ? ” 15. Âû-harmazd spoke thus : “ An autocrat (sâstâr), to cure a country, who has not gone mad (that is, he does not annoy the good) and is well-directing (that is, he gives virtuous commands), who is also of noble race, and likewise a priest who is acquainted with war, of a famous province, and righteous, are most salutary for that country. 16. And I tell thee this, that the apostasy of destruction is just like the four-legged wolf which the world gives up to running astray (vardak-takhshishnîh) (that is, owing to its action they are leading it off as astray; which is so that even he who is not opulent is rendered sickly, that they (the apostates) may take away his things by the hand of the assassin (khûnyân); and they shall lead the world, the dwelling for his residence, into wandering. 17. But that wicked (avârûnô) strife descended upon that country, besides that wicked demon-worship, besides that wicked slander; and not even that wicked strife, nor that wicked demon-worship, nor that wicked slander, is dissipated from bodied,’ because we are told that Tansar, or Tanvasar, was so called on account of all his limbs being covered with hair (vars). This statement occurs in the introduction to Tanvasar’s letter to Gushnaspsâh (Ar. Gasnasf-shâh), king of Paðashkhvârgar (Ar. Farshvâdgar) and Tabaristân; and is made on the authority of an old Pahlavi copyist, Bahrâm Khûrzâd, whose Pahlavi was translated into Arabic by Ibn al-Muqaffa in the middle of the eighth century, and that into Persian early in the thirteenth century (see Darmesteter’s edition in Journal Asiatique for 1894, pp. 185-250, 502-555).

that country until the time when they attach the grant of approval to him, the spiritual leader, the eloquent (pûr-gûftâr), truthful-speaking, and righteous Tanvasar. 18. And it is when they grant approval to the spiritual leader, the truthful speaker of eloquence, the righteous Tanvasar, that those of the country obtain redress (bêshâzagânih) when they seek it, and no deviation (anâyûînakôih) from the religion of Zaratûst.”’

19. As to the nature of the questions and statements of the organizer of the religion, Âtûrpâd¹ son of Mâraspend, about the connection of the glory with the race, it also says this, that ‘though righteousness may arise from the statements and prosperity of the Tûrânians when extracted by questions, it is said that its acceptance occurs there through complete mindfulness²; they benefit the embodied world of righteousness, and produce distress for the fiend; in like manner, they rely upon Vohûmanô, and Zaratûst is their delight through the report of the birth of Zaratûst from us who are archangels. 20. This liberality for thee is from us who are archangels, and Âtûrpâd, the very best well-destined man arose; and this, too, do thou say about him, that it is the steel age in which that man, the organizer of development and organizer of righteousness, Âtûrpâd son of Mâraspend, of the convocation, begets Avarethrabau³.’

¹ A high-priest who was prime minister of king Shahpûhar II (A.D. 309-379). He is often mentioned in Pahlavi writings, but in the Avesta he is only alluded to, apparently, by the title Râstarevaghent in Yt. XIII, 106.

² A translation of Av. spenta-ârmaiti, the archangel Spendârmad.

³ So written, all three times in Pâzand. He is the Avarethra-

21. This Avarethrabau, too, is an organizer whose righteous guardian spirit we reverence, and in memory of Mânûskîhar, the well-destined, and a progenitor of Âtûrpâd¹, it says that 'only from him comes Avarethrabau;' and then also arises this one of the adversaries of the religion, the apostate of apostates, whom they have even called the Mazdag-like (Mazdagîg-iê)². 22. As it says this, too, about them, namely: 'This religion of mine thou dost survey with thoughts of spiritual life, thou dost very thoroughly inspect it, O Zaratûst! when many, aware of apostates, call the performance of righteousness and even the priesthood innocence, and few are frank and practising it.' 23. In the revelation of the Mazda-worshippers is this, namely: 'Thoroughly look into revelation, and seek a remedy for them and any whatever of them who have become disturbing in the embodied existence, and uncaptivated by the orthodox (âyîn-a û mînd) righteousness which is owing to the perfect existences; and so they divide the religion of the Mazda-worshippers through division of race, they speak regarding the action of their own followers, and give the endowment to their own. 24. They grant supplies of food, so that they may say the food is proportional to the hunger; they speak of procreation, and say that they say lineage is through the mothers; and they approve of wolfishness, so that they would act something like bangh, son of Râstare-vaghent of Yt. XIII, 106, better known as Zaratûst, son of Âtûrpâd in his old age, for whom the Andar'z-î Âtûrpâd-î Mâraspendân was written.

¹ Whose pedigree is traced back to Mânûskîhar in Bd. XXXIII, 3.

² Probably some disciple of Mânih, the heretic who had been put to death A.D. 276-7. Mazdag was put to death A.D. 528. See S.B.E., vol. xxxvii, pp. 257 n, 278 n.

wolves in the performance of gratifying their desires, like that of the wolf's progeny behind the mother. 25. Moreover, they form their lineage through the mothers; buying their women as sheep, they shall carry off for profit even that son or brother who is the progeny, those that we have produced for your companionship; you are not predominant, but have remained in companionship; you do not even believe them, but you do not establish an ordeal, although it is evident that you will be acquitted; they lie even to their children, so that the advance of the promise-breaker is through them, and even in their own persons¹.

26. Here it speaks about the organization of the religion by the glorified² Khûsrô, son of Kavâd, thus: 'Upon their lingering behind, a man is produced who is righteous, the Glorified *one*², an approver (khênîdâr) of speech who is wise, whom the convocation, on hearing the words that he utters, speaks of as a high-priest; that is when he gives out penance (srôshîgîh), so that he may effect the punishment of sinners. 27. The constant outpouring of perplexity (pêk shâridan) by the perverters is the fear of that hero, as regards that convocation, when he casts them forth by expulsion from the vicinity, so that he may make them extinguished very quickly; owing to that, they, whose producer is even he who is a person destroying the righteous man, become gloomy on account of the Glorified one, through his smiting the spiritual life of apostasy; just as now, when he who is gloomy, and of scattered intellect, is gloomy owing to you of the Spitâmas.' 28. This, too, it states, namely: 'In every way, I tell thee, O Zarâtûst of the Spitâmas! that their time is mistrustful (avâvar) as to him who is an open friend, and most deceitful both to the wicked and the righteous; the Glorified one is a controller (ayûkhtâr) exalting the creatures, and whoever is possessing the creatures of the righteous *ones*¹, so that he remains again at work in the doings of the Glorified one, is he who is a combiner of the actions and an utterer of the true replies of that Glorified one.'

¹ This quotation, from a Pahlavi version of an Avesta text, would probably be very applicable to the state of the Persian people at many periods in the fourth and fifth centuries, when heresy was prevalent and orthodox Zoroastrianism was by no means universal. Some of the evils mentioned are inseparable from slavery at all times.

² Literally 'immortal-souled,' Anôshak-rûbân, the usual title of king Khûsrô I, who reigned A.D. 531-578. Before he became king, A.D. 528 or 529, he had summoned an assembly of priests to condemn the heretic Mazdag, when the last important revision of the Pahlavi versions of the Avesta probably took place (see Byt. I, 6-8, and Nöldeke's Gesch. der Sas. pp. 463-466).

29. And about the occurrence of a symptom of the devastators of the sovereignty and religion of the country of Irân one wonder, which is associated with the religion, is even this which it mentions thus: 'Thereupon, when the first symptom of a ravager of the country occurs, O righteous Zarâtûst! then the more aggressive and more unmerciful in malice becomes the tyrant of the country, and through him, too, they ravage (rêshênd) the house, through him the village, through him the community, through him the province, and through him even the whole of that manifestation in the country of any teaching whatever that occurs through the ravager of the country; and so the country should keep a man who is observant and learned on the watch, because information is in his mind. 30. *Thereupon, when the second symptom of a ravager of the country occurs, &c.*¹

¹ Of the good spirits.

31. Thereupon, when the third symptom of a ravager of the country occurs, the priestly people are disturbing the tradition, so that they speak nothing wisely; it is even on this account they do not accept them, and it is not when one speaks truly that the ravager of the country believes them, and through him, too, they ravage the house, through him the village, through him the community, through him the province, and through him even the whole of that manifestation in the country of any teaching whatever that occurs through the ravager of the country; and so, too, the country should keep a man who is observant and learned on the watch, because information is in his mind. 32. Thereupon, when the fourth symptom of a ravager of the country occurs, it upsets the replenishment of the fires, and upsets those men of the righteous, so that they shall not undertake the care of them; and thus they shall not convey the holy-water to him who is a priestly authority, so that they may not produce the seizing upon the stipend of the priestly authorities by him who is the ravager of the country; through him, too, they ravage the house, through him the village, through him the community, through him the province, and through him even the whole of that manifestation in the country of any teaching whatever that occurs through the ravager of the country; and so, too, the country should keep a man who is observant and learned on the watch, because information is in his mind.'

¹ The whole of this section is omitted in the old MS., evidently by mistake. Perhaps the second symptom of devastation was connected with the evil deeds of the warrior class, but this is very uncertain. Passages of four or five words are also omitted by the MS. in §§ 31, 32.

33. About the collapse of the sovereignty of Irân, it also states this, namely: 'That very villain (mar), O Zaratûst! brings those provinces on to running astray, so that he may make those quite dissevered which constitute the existence of that powerful sovereignty; and then he is a thorough assailant of the righteous, then he is an assailant of the righteous with eagerness. 34. That same deadly one (mar), O Zaratûst! does not continue living long afterwards; moreover his offspring disappear (that is, they perish utterly); but his soul falls to the bottom of the gloomy existence which is horrible hell, and upon their bodies every kind of unseemly unhappiness comes from themselves, owing to their own actions when they give approval to the imprisonment of a guardian of spiritual affairs who is eloquent, true-speaking, and righteous. 35. Against that deadly one he contends, O Zaratûst! for the spiritual lordship and priestly authority that I approve as good for the whole embodied existence; also against the preparation of a decree to produce evil decisions, and against the dismissal of litigants, whether heterodox or orthodox, who are of a family of serfs of a far-situated village and are making petitions.'

36. 'And as to the land, too, over which he wanders, the evil spirit utterly devastates their country through pestilence and other misery; and, moreover, strife which is tormenting falls upon that country, besides demon-worship which is iniquitous, and besides slander which is iniquitous. 37. And the strife which is iniquitous is not to be dissipated (apâst-aitanö) from that country, nor the demon-worshippers who are iniquitous, nor the slander which is iniquitous, before the time when they give approval to him, to the priest who is a guardian of spiritual affairs, who is eloquent, true-speaking, and righteous; and it is when they give him approval, that they obtain healthfulness for their country when they pray for it, and not irregularly from him, O Zaratûst!'

38. And this which is recounted is a statement that is execrated (nafrîg-aitö) by many, details from the Avesta as to occurrences that will arise after Vistâsp until the dispersion (angâvisnö) of the sovereignty of Irân from the country of Irân; it is also declared that this which is written happened to the knowledge of those of the world. 39. This, too, is about the evidence of the above:—'And if this which is declared from the Avesta, as to what happens after Kaî-Vistâsp until the end of the sovereignty of Irân, should not have happened, and it being the pre-eminence of the Avesta which really became this present treasure, it thereby ensues, owing to its position in that *former*¹, and the manifest absence of the destruction of those rulers and high-priests from Vistâsp onwards in this *latter*², that it could not be connected with us³.'

¹ The above declaration from the Avesta.

² The present Avesta itself.

³ Meaning perhaps that, for some good reason, it could not be communicated to us in the extant Avesta. If § 39 be not a later addition to this chapter, it implies that the prophetic quotations from the Avesta, regarding the history of the religion after the time

CHAPTER VIII.

1. About the marvellousness which is manifested and is openly specified after the collapsing of the sovereignty of Irân and the country of Irân; also the end of the millennium of Zaratûst and the arrival of Aûshêdar the descendant of Zaratûst¹.

2. There is this marvellousness, really over-throwing the blessedness of the knowledge of former government, revealed by the Avesta about the ninth and tenth centuries, that which is an indicator of circumstances (aêdûnôih) now visible, such as the dispersion of the sovereignty of Irân from the country of Irân, the disturbance of just law and custom, the predominance of those with dishevelled hair², and the haughty profession of ecclesiastics³.

3. Also the collection and even connection of all their four systems of belief (vâvarî-hastanô)⁴ to-of Vistâsp, were no more extant in the Avesta, when the Dînkard was compiled, than they are now.

¹ The contents of Chaps. VII–XI have some connection with the following summary in Dk. VIII, xiv, 11, 12:—‘And about the nature of the advancement of the people of the period, the separation of centuries and millenniums, and the signs, wonders, and perplexity which are manifested in the world at the end of each millennium in the world. Also as to the birth and arrival of Aûshêdar, son of Zaratûst, at the end of the first millennium, and a report of him and his time, and of the many destroyers of the organizers of the period between Zaratûst’s millennium and the coming of Aûshêdar.’

² This meaning for vigârđō-vars is chiefly based upon the use of vigârđ in AV. XXXIV, 5, for a woman’s hair being ‘combed.’ These invaders of Irân from the east, at the end of the first millennium of the religion, are mentioned in Byt. II, 22, 24, 28; III, 1, 6, 13. They are called ‘Turkish demons’ in § 47.

³ The Byzantine Christians.

⁴ Zoroastrianism, Muhammadanism, Christianity, and either Judaism or Idolatry.

gether for the upper rank; the coming of one working with the sacred beings to the inferior, the transient, and the captive of the period; and the dispersion and downfall of dependent and public men in their time.

4. The disappearance of a disposition for wisdom from the foreigners in the countries of Irân, which is an indication of shame at the truth of the religion, and at the praise, peace, liberality, and other goodness whose provision has lodgement in a disposition for wisdom. 5. Also the abundance of the decisions of apostasy, the falsehood, deceit, slander, quarrel-someness, fraudulence, ingratitude, discord, stinginess, and other vileness whose real connection is a disposition to devour, neglecting heedfulness for the archangels of fire, water, and worldly *existence*¹.

6. The oppressiveness of infidelity and idol-worship, the scarcity of freedom, the extreme predominance of avarice in the individuals (tanö) of mankind, the plenitude of different opinions about witchcraft, and the much inclination of many for paralyzing the religion of the sacred beings.

7. The annihilation of the sovereignty of mankind one over the other, the desolation of localities and settlements by severe actual distress, and the evil foreign potentates who are, one after the other, scattering the valiant; the destruction among cattle and the defilement of the spirit of enjoyment, owing to the lodgement of lamentation and weeping in the countries of Irân, the clamour of the demon-worshipper in the country, and the unobtainable stature, non-existent strength, blighted destiny, and short life of mankind. 8. Also the abundance of ordinances (âyinö)¹ of various descriptions, the approval of the apostate among tyrants and the non-approval of the Zoti² who is well-disposed and wise, the coming of the Zoti to want, and all the other adversity, disruption, and running astray which are overpowering even in districts and localities of the countries of Irân.

¹ Ashavahistô, Khûrdad, and Spendarmad.

9. The maintenance of no ritual (apandth) of the religion of the sacred beings; the weakness, suffering, and evil habits of those of the good religion; the lamentation and recantation (khûstûkth) of the upholders of the religion; and the wickedness and extermination of good works in most of the countries of Irân. 10. Also much other misery in these two centuries is recounted in the Avesta, which passed away with them and is also now so visible therein, and manifestly occurs in them.

11. This, too, is a statement (nisang-1) as to them, which revelation mentions thus: 'That is the age mingled with iron (that is, from every side they perceive it is of iron) in which they bring forth into life him who is a sturdy praying apostate. 12. This is their sturdiness, that their approval is unobservant of both doctrines (âinakö); and this is their praying, that whenever it is possible for them they shall cause misery to others; also when an old man publicly advances into a crowd (galakö) of youths, owing to the evil times in which that man who is learned is born, they are unfriendly to him (that is, they are no friends of the high-priests of the priestly assembly). 13. They are freely speaking (that is, they utter phrases smoothly), they are wicked and are fully maliciously talking, so that they shall make the statements of priests and high-priests useless; they also tear asunder the spiritual lordship and priestly authority, and shall bring the ruler and priestly authority into evil behaviour as vicious, but they bring together those who are singular. 14. Anything they say is always mischief (agîh), and that district which had a judge they cast into the smiting precinct, into hell; it is misery without any intermission they shall inflict therein, till they attain unto damnation (darvandîh) through the recitation they persevere in, both he who is the evil progeny disseminated by the apostate and he who is the villainous wolf full of disaster and full of depravity.'

¹ Or it may be hênô, 'squadrons.'

² The chief officiating priest in religious ceremonies.

15. 'Here below they fight, the friend with him who is a friend, they also defraud (zivênd) him of his own work (that is, whenever it is possible for them, they shall seize upon his property), and they give it to him from whom they obtain prosperity in return; if not, they seek him who is acting as a confederate (nishîn-gûn), and they make that other one defraud the poor man (so that they shall seize upon his property); they also cheat him when he shall make complaint. 16. I shall not again produce such for thee, no friend here for him who is a friend, no brother for him who is a brother, no son for him who is a father, nor yet a father for him who is a son; admonished, but not convinced, they become the abode of the will of the place, so that they subsist in every single place where it is necessary for them to be, in each that is necessary for them they march on together, and on the way they reflect upon the path of blessedness and the manifold learning they utter owing to knowledge of me¹.'

17. 'These three, our increase, learning, and reward, we fully understand through the ascendancy of him who is ignoble, and through the downfall of him who is noble and superior to him of little thorough instruction who, in every thing, will be at the foot of the tyrant. 18. Thinking of a priest one becomes spiritual, thinking of a tyrant one becomes a Kavīg²; a demon in disposition is an incipient demon, a Kavīg in disposition is himself attracted towards a youth.'

19. Then, when character and wisdom recede from the countries of Irân (that is, they depart), so that destitution and also winter, produced by demons who are worshipping the demon, rush together from the vicinity of disaster (vôighn) on to the countries of Irân, where even rain becomes scanty and pestilence is secretly advancing and deceiving, so that deaths become numerous; thus even he of perverted wisdom, who is wicked, and the apostate also, who is unrighteous, rush together in companionship. 20. As what one says they all exclaim thus: 'Consume and destroy, O ruler! for it is to be consumed and destroyed by thee; destroy even the fire, consume even as food those who are the protection of the association enforcing religious obedience, and those leading on the poor man of the righteous dispensation by their guidance.' 21. So that they shall make him thoroughly detached and smite him;

¹ So far, this statement (§§ 11-16) seems to be ascribed to Aṭharmazd; but what follows (§§ 17, 18, 20) appears to represent the sentiments of some Irânians of those later times.

² See Chap. II, 9 n.

likewise wisdom is the wealth they bring him, and it is when property is being carried off by them, that the wisdom conveyed by them arises.

22. 'And in that age, O righteous one of the Sptâmas! the coming of my desire is not purely for thee, nor is a thorough belief of the departure of life, so that the bringing and conducting of a speaker of promises (mitragôv) is not necessary; those of the perfect apostate injure this discourse of thine, the Avesta and Zand, so that they shall make it thoroughly weak; and those of the perfect apostate harass their own souls, for love of the wealth which he produced.'

23. And about the ninth and tenth centuries this also it says, that, 'as that age proceeds, this is what occurs, O Zaratûst of the Sptâmas! when many apostates utter the righteousness of priestly instruction and authority, which is wickedness towards me, they cause begging for water, they wither vegetation, and they put down all excellence which is due to the manifestation of righteousness.'

24. Again Zaratûst enquired of him thus: 'What do they so produce by that, O Aûharmazd! when they cause begging for water, they wither vegetation, and they put down all excellence due to the manifestation of righteousness?' 25. And Aûharmazd spoke thus: 'They so produce those things among them, O Zaratûst! when they mention a greater reward for bantlings and relations than that of their own souls (that is, they talk more concerning their allowance, where it is that for their own). 26. Moreover, they give to the Kîgs and Karaps, for some repute with the shepherd people of the husbandman, and with the swift-horsed people of the warrior, as though they would provide us¹ here below with a large share of meat, that they would make our privilege, just as we¹ here supply him with meat whom we render greatly precious. 27. The property of even a wicked man here below, O Zaratûst! in the average opinion among the disorganized (anârâstânö) is a dignified provision (that is, we form a strong opinion, the approval of which is more to be asserted as being the opinion of a poor righteous man, about a worthy righteous man whose manifest righteousness is a homage (franâmisnö) to duty and good works).'

28. Again he enquired of him thus: 'Is there so perfect a manifestation here below, in the age of the worldly existence of the religion of the Mazda-worshippers (that is, is there a lodgement of the religion of the Mazda-worshippers in any one)?' 29. And Aûharmazd spoke thus: 'It is so, among those men of mine², O Zaratûst! for here below there are priests who are eloquent, and they, too, are men voluble and requisite in the embodied existence, all-beneficent and producing the destruction of harm and the wizard; the people of the wicked tyrant say also regarding them, that, excepting thee, O Zaratûst! they rightly practise righteousness more largely, more powerfully, and more volubly. 30. Blind are those of the fiend, who are consulting with thee and are unaware of the tyrant; and observant are also those of the fiend who consult with them and think of their intelligence, and oppose the imbecile (anâkâsîh-aûmônd) apostate who is near them, so that they say¹ this, namely: "As to this which thou tellest us, it is evidently not so as thou sayest," of which they speak thus: "This duty of thy man is not mine (that is, it is not necessary for me to perform) nor thine (that is, it is not necessary even for thee to perform), because it is not this which is righteousness (that is, not a good work)." 31. For this one is produced for these words and thoughts of thine, of whom thou, too, art aware, he who is whatever is here below of Aûshêdar² of thoughtful controversy, O Zaratûst of the Spîtâmas! for he brings into notice, through the intermingling of his own soul, him who is righteous, or has not become so.'

¹ The archangels.

² Reading minam, instead of madam which is unintelligible here.

32. This, too, he says, namely: 'Of those, O Zaratûst of the Spîtâmas! who come in the ninth and tenth centuries, I tell thee that they are of the fiend of Greed (Âzi); it is in her womb that they are to be fashioned, they who assist those who would be vicious, through pre-eminence in leadership, or through excellence in subserviency.'

33. And this, too, it says about them: 'Those men are much to be destroyed;' so it is said by Aûharmazd that 'these who are righteous, who carry away a corpse in this world, distress their fire, according to every high-priest³, and even long-flowing water; their bodies, which are really cess-pools⁴ of a terrible character, become very assisting for the tormentors whose corpses are grievously wicked. 34. Concerning them I tell thee, O Zara-

¹ To the apostate.

² See §§ 55-60 and Chap. I, 42 n. Here spelt Aûkhshêdar.

³ Reading dastûr, instead of vastûr.

⁴ Pahl. mayâ-vakhdûn = Pers. âb-gîr.

tûst of the Spîtâmas! that, in the ninth and tenth centuries, there come those who are the brood of the fiend and the wound-producer (reshgâr)¹ of the evil spirit; even one of them is more to be destroyed than ten demon-worshippers²; they also produce extermination for these who are mine, for these of my religion, whom they call a provision for destruction (that is, when it is possible to live in our way, and ours are wicked, they diminish in superiority).

35. Even the iniquity that they shall commit in leadership and subserviency, the sin which is smiting thee, they call a trifle (khalakö), O pure one of the Spîtâmas! and the smiter, they say, is he whom these of thy religion of Mazda-worshippers smite.

36. Besides thee, O Zaratûst! they distress those duties, too, which are to be acquired by thy people (lagânö); they think scornfully of this ceremonial of thine, scornfully of thy worship, O Zaratûst! and they think scornfully of both the two blessed utterances³, the Avesta and Zand, which were proclaimed to thee by me who am the most propitious of spirits.

37. They foster villainous outrage, and they say the best work for mankind is immoderate fighting whose joyfulness is due to actions that are villainous; those, too, that they exterminate are the existences due to the spirits, they exterminate their own souls, they exterminate the embodied existences of the world; and they produce lamentation for the soul, and even the religion, as regards what is the mode of controlling orthodox people together with the iniquitous of the same period.'

38. And this, too, it says, that Zaratûst enquired

¹ Or it may be riyâgâr, 'hypocrite.'

² Or 'idolators.'

³ Pahl. vâfrîgânîh = Av. urvâtâ.

of Aûharmazd thus: 'So what shall we prescribe for those who are not capable, through being poor (that is, they have no means), nor have they troops, nor a protector over them, and they have many persecutors?' 39. And Aûharmazd spoke thus: 'The strong-minded¹ man, through understanding, is a token of the development of those who, not being in the army, are capable; their persecutors also are many, and the passing over of authority is owing to the iniquitous of the same period.'

40. This, too, it says, that Zaratûst enquired thus: 'Is he, O Aûharmazd! who is a Kaî or a Karap, or he who is a most evil ruler in authority, mingled again with the good?' 41. And Aûharmazd spoke thus: 'Even he².'

42. Zaratûst also enquired thus: 'Is he, too, O Aûharmazd! who is one of those of the good sovereignty, mingled again with the good; or these, such as the Kaisar and Khâkân³?' 43. And Aûharmazd spoke thus: 'Even that former, O Zaratûst!'

44. About the same iniquitous⁴ this, too, he says, namely: 'When they are aware and understand about the sayings (galimakö) due to righteousness, they are pleased, so that a bribe seems better to them than duty and good works; they love the darkness rather than light, the existence they love

¹ Assuming that tôshtö-mînisnô is a miswriting of toshînô-mînisnô.

² That is, after expiating his misdeeds by his allotted punishment. The last thirteen Pahlavi words of §§ 42, 43 are also added here by mistake in the MS.

³ The Byzantine emperor and the sovereign Khân of the invaders from the east.

⁴ Mentioned in §§ 37, 39.

is the worst existence rather than the best existence, and they promote difficulty. 45. Concerning them, too, I tell thee that they are more to be destroyed than the leaping (shasṗō) serpent which is like a wolf or a lion, and they ever advance in malice and persecution from that time till when that man arrives who is *Kitrô-mêhônō*¹ the righteous, with the victorious club. 46. He has marched with fifty triplets of men² who are disciples, powerful and tall, looking after duties and ordinances, wide-shouldered, stout-armed, and very hairy (kabad-milth), so that their appearance is rough and of a black colour³, wherefore the demon and the iniquity proceeding from him fear them. 47. He also smites the evil spirit, together with his creatures; and those three manifest branches, that worship the fiend with simultaneous worship, are really these who march for eminent service on horses, even the Turkish demons with dishevelled hair, the Arab, and also Shedâspô⁴ the ecclesiastical Arûman.

¹ So spelt here, but in Dk. IX, xli, 6, it is Kitrâg-mêhônō, and other slight variations occur in the best MSS. of Bd. XX, 7, 31; XXIX, 5; Byt. III, 25, 26; Dd. XC, 3; but they can all be traced to an original Kitrô-mêhan = Av. Kithrô-maêthanem, 'of the racial home,' a title applied both to the river and the immortal sacerdotal ruler of Kangdez. The latter is supposed to be Pêshyôtanō, a son of king Vistâsp, who is expected to restore religious rites in Irân and throughout the world.

² With 150 disciples, as stated in Byt. III, 27, 29, 42. Here it is written levatē 50 3-gabrâân.

³ Byt. III, 27, 29, 42, states that they wear black marten fur.

⁴ In Byt. III, 3, 5, 8, 21, this name is written Shêdâspth which can also be read Shêdâsfas, and is probably a corrupt pronunciation of the name of some Byzantine emperor or general (such as Theodosius) who had signally defeated the Persians some time in the fifth to seventh century, in which period Zaratûst's millennium probably ended.

48. 'And he has then to attract men, contented and discontented, mostly through the incentive of duty; he who is not contented (that is, not agreeing with what he says) contentedly pays respect to him, O Zaratûst! (so that he brings him into the religion). 49. Likewise, through that club, he makes one press in the same manner; so that one is distressed by his hand to hold others in contempt, through the valiant arm and through the youthful bodily organs. 50. And he attaches power and triumph to his religion of Aûharmazd, and through that power and triumph they become ever respected thenceforth, when those arrive who are the sons of Zaratûst, who shall produce the renovation in an existence undecaying and immortal, hungerless and thirstless, the long-continued perpetuity including all.'

51. And about the separation (burînakö) of the ten centuries in the one millennium of Zaratûst, and the tidings of *Aûshêdar*¹, son of Zaratûst, it says also this, namely: 'When that century fully elapses which is the first of the religion of the Mazda-worshippers, from the time when Zaratûst came forward to his conference, what is the separation of this first century?' 52. And Aûharmazd spoke thus: 'The sun conceals itself.' 53. 'What is the separation after the second, third, fourth, fifth, sixth, seventh, eighth, ninth, or tenth century?' 54. And Aûharmazd spoke thus: 'The sun conceals itself.'

55. Then, when thirty winters of the tenth century are unelapsed (that is, thirty winters are remaining) a maiden, who is Shemig-abû², walks up to the water ; she that is the mother of that famous Aūshêdar, and her former lineage is from Vôhû-rôkô-i Frahânyân¹ in the family of Îsadvâstar, the son of Zaratûst that is brought forth by Arang. 56. Then she sits in that water and drinks it, and ~~she~~ kindles in a high degree those germs which were the third of the last that the righteous Zaratûst was dropping forth originally, and they introduce that son whose name is the Developer of Righteousness². 57. Though she is fifteen years old, the girl (kanîg) has not before that associated with men³ ; nor afterwards, when she becomes pregnant, has she done so before the time when she gives birth.

¹ See Chap. I, 42.

² 'Having a renowned father,' the Zvâris of Av. Srûta*d*-fedhri, Yt. XIII, 141.

58. When that man becomes thirty years old, the sun stands still in the zenith (bâlistô) of the sky for the duration of ten days and ten nights, and it arrives again at that place where it was first appointed by allotment, where it occupies one finger-breadth out of the four finger-breadths, and it shines over all the regions which are seven. 59. So, too, O Zaratûst ! of them themselves, their declaration is thus, that they know that the separation of the millennium, which this religion has heard about by listening, is thus ; and of those who do not even then know, that it is something which is different.

60. Then, when that man becomes thirty years old, he confers with the archangels, the good rulers and good providers ; on the morrow, in the daylight of the day, it is moreover manifest, when the embodied existence is thus undistressed—without

¹ See Yt. XIII, 97.

² The Pahlavi interpretation of Aūshêdar which is an imperfect transcript of the Av. Ukhshyad-ereta of Yt. XIII, 128.

³ Pahl. 'levatô gabrâânô barâ vepayîdô.'

a Kai and without a Karap (that is, not deaf and blind to the affairs of the sacred beings), and is to be appropriated (that is, has not made its own self apart from the affairs of the sacred beings), and is produced full of life—that it has become extending (vâlân), and remains again great in various places in Aîrân-vêg where the good Dâitt¹ is.

61. These are the characteristics as regards the two centuries which are the ninth and tenth; the accuracy of what was to come has continued and this has happened, and both are declared as regards the accuracy which is stated on evidence as to what will happen.

CHAPTER IX.

1. About the marvellousness which is after the end of the millennium of Zaratûst and the arrival of Aûshêdar, until the end of the millennium of Aûshêdar and the arrival of Aûshêdar-mâh; and as to tidings of the same period.

2. The marvellousness of Aûshêdar as to birth², glory of person, sayings and actions; the standing of the sun ten days amid the sky³; the perishing of the fiend of the four-legged race; the production of a three-spring cloudless influence⁴ for vegetation; the weakening of superfluity and destitution; the extreme strengthening of alliance; the gratification due to the good friendship of foreigners; the great increase of the wisdom of religion; and the praise

¹ See Chap. III, 51, 54; Bd. XX, 13. It is the name of a river.

² See Chap. VIII, 55-57.

³ See Chap. VIII, 58.

⁴ Pahl. '3-zaremde an-avargarh.'

of Aûshêdar's smiting with a serpent-scurge of several kinds in the religion of the Mazda-worshippers.

3. The mightiness of the resources in the fifth century of the same millennium; the manifestation of the wizard Mahrkûs¹ for seven years, in the year which is reported in all the regions which are seven; the coming on and arrival of the winter of Mahrkûs, the perishing of most of mankind and animals within three winters and in the fourth, through the awfulness of those winters and the witchcraft of Mahrkûs; and the dying away of Mahrkûs of scanty progeny (gasûkô-zahisnô), during the fourth winter, through the Dâhmân Âfrîn². 4. The opening of the enclosure made by Yim, the coming of mankind and animals therefrom, and the complete progress of mankind and animals again, arising specially from them.

5. After those winters, the abundant and great increase in the milk of cattle, and the abundant nourishment of mankind by milk; the less distress of body in cattle, the fullness and prosperity of the world, the celebrity of assembled mankind, and the great increase of liberality. 6. Also the feebleness of poverty among mankind, just like what revelation mentions thus: 'Even so he, O Zarātūst! though he be more unfortunate than he who is accepting from him, is like the creator whose bounty of permanent liberality does thus, in the embodied existence, remain in his dwelling.'

¹ Av. Mahrkûsha of Westergaard's Fragment VIII, 2, who is evidently a wizard or fiend; according to Pahl. Vd. II, 49 (Sp.) the evil winter which was foretold to Yim is called the winter of Markûs. In later times this name has been understood as Heb. Malkôš, 'autumnal rain;' so the idea of the fatal freezing winter of Mahrkûs, the intender of death, was abandoned for that of the deluging rain of Malkôš, as in Mkh. XXVII, 28. In Dd. XXXVII, 94, both snow and rain are mentioned as produced by Mahrkûs or Markûs (as it is always written in Pahlavi), and in Sd. IX, 5 only his name is stated. The most complete account of him is given in our text.

² The Âfrîn of the Ameshâspends.

7. And this, too, it says, namely: 'When that winter passes away, of which it is said that it is boisterous and destructive¹, then a wild beast, black and wide-travelling, walks up to the Mazda-worshippers, and thus it thinks, that they who worship Mazda will therefore not finally hate us more than him who is their own progeny, the son whom they thus bring up as a Mazda-worshipper here below, in fondness and freedom from malice towards well-yielding cattle.

8. 'Then Ashavahistô calls out to the Mazda-worshippers from the upper region, and thus he speaks: "You are for the worship of Mazda; let no one of you become such a slaughterer of cattle as the slaughterers you have been before. 9. Recommend increase in gifts, recommend neighbourliness in person; are you worshipping Mazda? do you slaughter cattle? do you slaughter those of them which give you assistance, which speak to you thus: 'On account of your helpfulness one tells you that you are worshipping Mazda and you may eat?' I am in neighbourliness before that, until the time when you exclaim: 'Mine are the serpent and toad.'

10. "'And you recommend increase, you recommend neighbourliness, and the Mazda-worshippers slaughter cattle, even those of them who give them assistance, so that you are worshipping Mazda and you eat; I am in neighbourliness before that, until the time when you exclaim: 'Mine are the serpent and toad.'

¹ The Pahlavi version of Av. 'stakhrahê meretô zaya' in Westerg. Frag. VIII, 2.

11. "Contentedly the Mazda-worshippers slaughter cattle, contentedly the cattle of the Mazda-worshippers let them butcher¹, and contented are the cattle when they do not butcher them; contentedly the Mazda-worshippers eat cattle, and contented are the cattle when they eat them. 12. And then, when there are spirits, the slaughterers and whatever they slaughter, the butchers and whatever they butcher, and the eaters and whatever they eat are alike watched by them."

13. And this, too, it says, namely: 'When that century fully elapses, which is the fifth in the second millennium as regards the religion of the Mazda-worshippers, then of all those who are upon the earth, the existences which are both wicked and righteous, two-thirds in the land of Irân are righteous and one-third wicked; and so likewise the Tûrânians and those who are around Irân remain non-Irânian around Irân; the chief increase in dwellings here below, of those in the embodied existence, remains just as now.'

14. And this, too, it says, namely: 'When that millennium has fully elapsed, which is the first of the religion of the Mazda-worshippers, what is the separation after the first century?' 15. And Aûhar-mazd spoke thus: 'The sun conceals itself.' 16. 'And what is the separation after the second, third, fourth, fifth, sixth, seventh, eighth, ninth, or tenth century?' 17. And Aûharmazd spoke thus: 'The sun conceals itself.'

¹ Assuming that bū'r'zâva and stands for bū'r'nēnd which occurs in § 12.

18. Then, when thirty winters of the tenth century are unelapsed (arânakō), a maiden, who is Shapîr-abû¹, walks up to the water; she that is the mother of that good Aûshêdar-mâh², and her former lineage is from Vôhû-rôkô-i Frahânyân³ in the family of Îsadvâstar, the son of Zaratûst that is brought forth by Arang. 19. Then she sits in that water and drinks it, and she kindles in a high degree those germs which were the second of the last that the righteous Zaratûst was dropping forth originally, and they introduce that son whose name is the Developer of Worship⁴ (that is, he augments liberality). 20. Though fifteen years old, the damsel (zihânakō) has not before that associated with men; nor yet afterwards, when she becomes pregnant, has she done so before the time when she gives birth⁵.

21. When that man becomes thirty years old, the sun stands still in the zenith of the sky for the duration of twenty days and nights⁶, and it shines over all the regions which are seven. 22. So, too, the declaration of them themselves is that they know

¹ 'Having a good father,' the Zvâris of Av. Vanghu-fedhri, Yt. XIII, 142.

² See Chap. I, 42.

³ See Chap. VIII, 55-57.

⁴ The Pahlavi interpretation of Aûshêdar-mâh which is an imperfect transcript of the Av. Ukhshyad-nemangh of Yt. XIII, 128.

⁵ Compare the summary in Dk. VIII, xiv, 13, as follows:— 'The arrival of Aûshêdar-mâh, son of Zaratûst, at the end of the second millennium; information about him and his time, and the destroyers of the organizers who were within the millennium of Aûshêdar.'

⁶ The MS. omits a clause here, which occurs in Chap. VIII, 58, possibly by mistake, as part of it is given in Chap. X, 19.

that the separation of the millennium, which this religion has heard about by listening, is even thus; and of those who do not even then know, that it is something which is different.

23. When that man becomes thirty years old, he confers with the archangels, the good rulers and good providers; on the morrow, in the daylight of the day, it is moreover manifest, when the embodied existence is thus undistressed—without a Kaī and without a Karap (that is, not blind and not deaf to the affairs of the sacred beings), and is to be appropriated (that is, has not made its own self apart from the affairs of the sacred beings), and is produced full of life—that it has become extending, and is again great in various places in Aīrân-vêg where the good Dâitī is.

CHAPTER X.

1. About the marvellousness which is after the end of the millennium of Aûshêdar and the arrival of Aûshêdar-mâh, until the end of the millennium of Aûshêdar-mâh and the arrival of Sôshâns; and as to tidings of the same period.

2. The marvellousness of Aûshêdar-mâh as to birth¹, glory of person, sayings, and actions; the standing of the sun amid the sky twenty days long²; and the increase of the milk of cattle arrives at a maximum (avartûm), just as what it says, that one milks only one mature cow (tôrâ az) for a thousand men, and that he brings as much milk as a thousand men require; also the feebleness of hunger and thirst is just as it says, that by only a single ration one becomes satisfied for three nights, and whoever eats a leg of mutton has plenty for himself for three days and nights. 3. The diminution of decay and extension (vêshth) of life, the increase of humility and peace, and the perfection of liberality and enjoyment in the world.

¹ See Chap. IX, 18-20.

² See Chap. IX, 21.

4. Like this which revelation states, that, when the first ten winters in the last millennium pass away, the Mazda-worshippers then make enquiry together thus: 'Are we really more hairy-headed (sar-vars-ik-tar) than occurred before, owing to the well-yielding cattle, so that food and clothing are less necessary for us? Has affection come to us more completely, owing to those cattle, than it was ours before? Have we grown up less deteriorated in the hair, by old age, than those grown up before? Are the thoughts, words, and deeds of our women and children more instructed than they were before?'

5. And has this thing occurred, that he is classed as disqualified who in training a child has become quite retrogressive (pas-ûruzd), and is his penalty arranged? Does the fiend think of the Karap class, and are they utterly destroyed by her through those whose thoughts are most evil, devoid of righteousness, and devoid of a liking for righteousness? 6. Near here, in the disturbance of the existences, does that happen as heard by us from the ancients, when listening to the true proclaimers of the Mazda-worshippers? And now, even when our numbers are so greatly maintaining this dispensation, do we sanctify (aharâytnem) righteousness (that is, do we perform duty and good works) more vociferously and more strenuously?'

7. This, too, it says, even that no one passes away in the last millennium, other than those whom they smite with a scaffold weapon¹, and those who pass away from old age. 8. When fifty-three years of that millennium of his have remained, the sweetness and oiliness in milk and vegetables are so completed that, on account of the freedom of mankind from wanting meat, they shall leave off the eating of meat, and their food becomes milk and vegetables. 9. When three years have remained, they shall leave off even the drinking of milk, and their food and drink become water and vegetables.

10. And in his millennium are the breaking (lānakō) of the fetters of Dahāk², the rousing of Kerēsāspō³ for the smiting of Dahāk, the arrival of Kai-Khūsrō⁴ and his companions for the assistance of Sōshāns in the production of the renovation of the universe, and the provision of most of mankind with the Gāthic disposition and law; also the occurrence of many other wonders and marvels is manifest in that millennium of his.

11. And this, too, it says, namely: 'When that millennium has fully elapsed, which is the second of the religion of the Mazda-worshippers, what is the separation after the first century?' 12. And Aūharmazd spoke thus: 'The sun conceals itself.' 13. 'And what is the separation after the second,

¹ Reading pavan dār snesh, as in some modern copies; but the old MS. of 1659 has run the last two words together, so as to produce pavan dārêgūsh, 'as destitute,' which must be wrong.

² For details see Byt. III, 55-57; Bd. XXIX, 9; Dd. XXXVII, 97; Dk. IX, xv, 2. It may be noticed that this release of the demoniacal tyrant is expected to follow the triumph of strict vegetarianism.

³ See further Byt. III, 59-61; Bd. XXIX, 7, 8.

⁴ See Mkh. XXVII, 59-63; LVII, 7; Dd. XXXVI, 3.

third, fourth, fifth, sixth, seventh, eighth, ninth, or tenth century?' 14. And Aûharmazd spoke thus : 'The sun conceals itself.'

15. And when thirty winters of the tenth century are unelapsed, that maiden, who is Gôbâk-abû¹, walks up to the water; she that is the mother of that testifying Sôshâns who is the guide to conveying away the opposition of the destroyer, and her former lineage is from Vôhû-rôkô-î Frahânyân² in the family of Îsadvâstar, the son of Zaratûst that is brought forth by Arang. 16. 'That maiden whose title is All-overpowerer is thus all-overpowering, because through giving birth she brings forth him who overpowers all, both the affliction owing to demons, and also that owing to mankind³.' 17. Then she sits in that water, when she is fifteen years old, and it introduces into the girl him 'whose name is the Triumphant Benefiter, and his title is the Body-maker; such a benefiter as benefits (savînêdô) the whole embodied existence, and such a body-maker, alike possessing body and possessing life, as petitions about the disturbance of the embodied existences and mankind⁴.' 18. Not before that has she associated with men; nor yet afterwards, when she becomes pregnant, has she done so before the time when she gives birth⁵.

¹ 'Having a testifying father,' the Pahlavi of Av. Eredad-fedhri, Yt. XIII, 142.

² See Chap. VIII, 55-57.

³ The Pahlavi version of Yt. XIII, 142, latter clause.

⁴ From the Pahlavi version of Yt. XIII, 129.

⁵ Compare the summary in Dk. VIII, xiv, 14, 15, as follows:— 'The coming and arrival of Sôshâns, son of Zaratûst, at the end of the third millennium, the destroyers of the organizers who were within the millennium of Aûshêdar-mâh, the arrival of Sôshâns, 19. When that man becomes thirty years old, the sun stands still in the zenith of the sky for the duration of thirty days and nights, and it arrives again at that place where it was appointed by allotment.

CHAPTER XI.

1. About the marvellousness which is after the end of the millennium of Aûshêdar-mâh and the arrival of the Triumphant Benefiter, until the end of the fifty-seventh year of Sôshâns and the production of the renovation among the existences.

2. Concerning the marvellousness of Sôshâns as to splendour and glory of person, it says that 'when the coming of the last rotation of those rotations of the seasons of Aûshêdar-mâh occurs, the man Sôshâns is born¹ whose food is spiritual and body sunny (that is, his body is as radiant as the sun);' also this, that 'he looks on all sides with six-eyed power (6-dôtsarîh), and sees the remedy for persecution by the fiend.'

3. This, too, that with him is the triumphant Kayân glory 'which the mighty Frêdûn² bore when Az-î Dahâk³ was smitten by him; also Kaî-Khûsrôî⁴ was bearing it when the Tûr Frangrâstîyâk⁵ was smitten by him; also Frangrâstîyâk bore it when the Drvê Zênîgâk⁶ was smitten by him; and Kaîand information about Sôshâns and his time. Also, as to the renovation of the universe and the future existence, it is declared that they arise in his time.'

¹ The date here indicated seems to be about twenty-eight years later than that intended in Chap. X, 15-19.

² See Chap. I, 25.

³ See Chap. I, 26.

⁴ See Chap. I, 39.

⁵ See Chap. I, 31, 39.

⁶ Av. Drvau Zainigâus, an Arab chieftain who invaded Irân

Vistâsp¹ shall bear it when you fully attract him to righteousness, and through it he shall carry off the fiend from the concerns of the world of righteousness².

4. And this, too, that in fifty-seven of his years there occur the annihilation of the fiendishness of the two-legged race and others, and the subjugation of disease and decrepitude, of death and persecution, and of the original evil of tyranny, apostasy, and depravity; there arise a perpetual verdant growth of vegetation and the primitive gift of joyfulness; and there are seventeen years of vegetable-eating, thirty years of water-drinking, and ten years of spiritual food.

5. And all the splendour, glory, and power, which have arisen in all those possessing splendour, glory, and power, are in him on whom they arrive together and for those who are his, when many inferior human beings are aroused splendid and powerful; and through their power and glory all the troops of the fiend are smitten. 6. And all mankind remain of one accord in the religion of Aûharmazd, owing to the will of the creator, the command of that apostle, and the resources of his companions.

7. At the end of the fifty-seven years the fiend and Aharman are annihilated, the renovation for the future existence occurs, and the whole of the good creation is provided with purity and perfect in early times and killed many with his evil eye, till the Irânians invited Frangrâstiyâk to destroy him (see Darmesteter's French translation of part of Chap. XLI of Irânian Bundahis in Annales du Musée Guimet, vol. xxii, p. 401).

¹ See Chap. I, 41.

² From a Pahlavi version of Yt. XIX, 92, 93, with the second and third clauses transposed.

splendour. 8. Just as revelation states thus: 'When that millennium has fully elapsed, which is the third of the religion of the Mazda-worshippers, that Mazda-worshipper whose name is so Triumphant¹ then marches forward from the water Kanyisâ² with a thousand companions and also maidens of restrained disposition and blindly-striving behaviour³; and he smites the wicked people who are tyrannical, and annihilates them.'

9. Then those Mazda-worshippers smite, and none are smiting them. 10. Then those Mazda-worshippers produce a longing for a renovation among the existences, one ever-living, ever-beneficial, and ever desiring a Lord. 11. 'Then I, who am Aûharmazd, produce the renovation according to the longing among the existences, one ever-living, ever-beneficial, and ever desiring a Lord.'

¹ See Chap. X, 17.

² Reading the name as Pâzand; if it were Pahlavi it would have to be read Kân-mâsâf, because Irânian Pâz. yi is very like Pahl. mâ. It is Kyânsih in Bd. XIII, 16; XX, 34; XXI, 6, 7, and represents Av. Kâsava, the brackish lake or sea of Sagastân.

³ Reading 'va-bigar-ik-i vand khîm va-kûr-kakhô râs,' and assuming that bigar is Ar. bikr, as an Arabic word is occasionally used in the Dînkard (see Chap. II, 2 n) though very rarely. Bd. XXX, 17, mentions 'fifteen men and fifteen damsels' as assisting Sôshâns at the time of the renovation of the universe.

DĪNKARD.—BOOK V.

CHAPTER I.

1. The triumph of the creator Aûharmazd, and glory of complete wisdom, is the divine (ahûtg) religion of Mazda-worship.

2. The fifth book is about the sayings of the saintly Âtûr-farnbag¹, son of Farukhzâd, who was the leader of the orthodox, even as to the manuscript which is called Gyêmarâ². 3. The collected replies of Âtûr-

¹ He was the leader of the orthodox about A.D. 815-835, and held a religious disputation with the heretic Abâlis in the presence of the Khalîfah Al-Mâmûn (A.D. 813-833), as detailed in the Mâdgân-i Gugastak Abâlis. He was also the first compiler of the Dînkard, probably of its first two Books, which are not yet discovered, as well as of some of the materials for the other Books. (See S. B. E., vol. xxxvii, p. 411, n. 1.)

² The name of this MS. can be only guessed. It occurs three times in each of the two MS. authorities, B and K₄₃, and the simplest reading of five of these six occurrences would be Sîmrâ, so that the remaining one (Sarmâ) may be neglected as a corruption. A final â in Pahlavi is a very certain indication of a Semitic word, for if a final of similar form occurs in an Irânian word, it represents either h or kh; so if the name were Irânian, its most probable reading would be Sîmurkh. But, in § 3, it is intimated that the MS. belonged to an ancient tribe, or congregation (ram); it also seems, from Chap. IV, 8, 9, that the religion of this tribe was not so inconsistent with Zoroastrianism as to prevent its members being taught that orthodox faith; and §§ 4, 5 of the present chapter appear to quote from that MS. some farnbag, son of Farukhzâd, the leader of the orthodox, about several significant questions that are the wonder of the moderns, which are like the friendly words, spoken by him as to those of the ancient tribe¹ (kâd mon-ramân) who call it really their Gyêmarâ, which are obtaining² a like wonder for them openly accessible to him³.

4. About the unswerving and co-operating chieftainship of those forefathers who went in mutually-friendly command of troops, and the complete enclosure of that tribe within the military control of Bûkht-Narsîh⁴. 5. About the disabling of vicious habits and evil deeds, which are entirely connected, and of the heinous demon-worship and mischief which particulars regarding the siege of Jerusalem by Nebuchadnezzar. From these circumstances we may suspect that Âtûr-farnbag, while collecting materials for his Dînkard, had asked some Jewish friends what information their MSS. contained regarding the old Persians, as the two peoples had been in contact, more or less, ever since the time of the Achaemenian dynasty. If he did so enquire, the Jews would naturally search in the Talmud, in which references to the Persians still survive, though the text is no longer complete. The question is, therefore, whether the MS., whose name has been provisionally read Sîmrâ, can have had any connection with the Talmud. It will be at once evident to any Pahlavi student that Pahl. sî may be read gyê equally well, and that we have no better reason for reading Sîmrâ than for the Gyêmarâ, which has been put into the text, as a suggestion that Âtûr-farnbag was really referring to the Gemarâ of the Jews, the supplement to their commentary upon Scripture. Whether this can be clearly proved remains to be seen, and positive evidence seems scanty.

¹ Or 'congregation.'

² Or 'including (vandîg).'

³ Pahl. 'mûnsânō ham-shkûp-vindîg frâs aûbas yehamtûnisîg.' From which it appears as if there had been a mutual interchange of information between him and his Jewish friends.

⁴ The Pahlavi form of Bu'ht-i-najar, or Nebuchadnezzar.

are owing to them, through the ruler Kaî-Loharâsp¹ being sent, with Bûkht-Narsih, from the country of Irân to Bêtâ-Makdis² of Arûm, and their remaining in that quarter. 6. And the orthodox belief in the rude particulars of religious custom in the mutual deliberation of those of the tribe, the acquaintance with religion of a boor (durûstakö-1), the difficult arrangements, and the enquirer doubtful of the religion after the many controversial, deliberative, and cause-investigating questions and answers adapted to the importunities of that wordy disciple³.

7. About how the accepting of this religion by the prophets before Zaratûst *occurred*⁴, how the pure and saintly Zaratûst of the Spîtâmas came⁵, and who will afterwards come as bringers of the same pure and good religion *hereafter*⁶. 8. That is, of the prophets, apostles, and accepters of the religion, there were they who accepted it concisely and completely such as Gâyômarâd was, from whom came irregularly (durûstakö) such as Masyê and Styâmak, Hâôshâng, Tâkhmôrup, Yim, Frêdûn, Mânûskêthar, the Sâmân, the Kayân, and also many other leaders in those times⁷. 9. And their acceptance expressly at various times is produced for action, and thereby the adversity of the creatures is removed, benefit

¹ The father of Kaî-Vistâsp (see Bd. XXXI, 28, 29; XXXIV, 7). His expedition to Jerusalem is mentioned in Pahl. Mkh. XXVII, 67, and by some Arab writers.

² 'The holy place,' a title of Jerusalem.

³ Not identified. From this point to Chap. IV, 7, Âtûr-farnbag must have used the same authorities as the writer of Dk. VII; but he returns to the Gyêmarâ in Chap. IV, 8.

⁴ Dk. VII, i, 7-40.

⁵ Ibid. 41.

⁶ Ibid. 42.

⁷ See the details in Dk. VII, i, 7-40. §§ 1-8 have been already translated in Grundriss der iranischen Philologie, ii, 93-94.

and prosperity are sought, the world is controlled, and the creator and good creations are propitiated.

CHAPTER II.

1. In the pure light and equal to the archangels—collected together and reckoned together, since the original creation, and completely unmixed—Zarātūst was spiritually fashioned and provided und defectively for the acceptance and propagation of the religion in the world¹. 2. And when he is sent for the manifestation of restrained saintliness (môkîh) and bodily substance, great glory and radiance become as much discernible in him as the same had come into the posterity of Yim who are Pôrûshâspô², his father, and Dûkdâûb³ who is his mother; and also while he is being born and for the duration of life, he produced a radiance, glow, and brilliance from the place of his own abode, that issued intensely and strongly, like the splendour of fire, to distant lands⁴.

3. Also about the wizards and witches, tyrants, Kîgs, and Karaps, and other miscreants who have produced outrage for him during his birth and childhood, with desire for his destruction; who have manifestly come about his death or disablement, and even so far as those who have come into the visible assembly about the destruction of his glory and other causes of helplessness⁵. 4. And also including the wolves and other wild beasts, to whom he was

¹ Dk. VII, ii, 1, 2, 14-21, 36-42, 46, 47; Zs. XIII, 4.

² Ibid. 13.

³ Ibid. 3-8; Zs. XIII, 1-3.

⁴ Ibid. 56-58; Zs. XIV, 7.

⁵ Dk. VII, iii, 5-14; Zs. XVI, 1-7.

cast forth by those of Pôrûshâspô's kinsmen who were wizards, and the kindred of those frequenting demon-worship, but only as a test ¹.

5. In like manner it is declared that, on account of Vohûmanô being welcome to him, he laughed outright at birth ². 6. His coming for conference with Aûharmazd ³, and owing to his accepting the religion, Aharman and many demons and fiends have come to him with exhibition of fear, offering of service, and the argument and entreaty of supplicants ; and all these have returned from him disapprovingly, defeatedly, and confusedly, through the pure proclamation of his Avesta, the unique perfection of Aûharmazd's will ⁴, and the indication of a prepared armament (vîrâstô-zênih), a declared reward, a powerful sovereignty, and a way of injury to the destroyer.

7. Also the triumph of the sacred beings in the end, and the peculiarity of the joint control of the demons ; how, before that, they rushed openly into the world and have dwindled, their bodily forms are shattered ⁵, and they are so converted into secret decay, that their supplicants, deceived and deceivers, became awful disputants through confession of it.

8. And when, through completely accepting the religion from Aûharmazd, he came to the obedient king Kai-Vistâsp to attract those of the world, he exhibited glorious actions of many kinds and the ¹ Dk. VII, iii, 15-19 ; Zs. XVI, 8-11.

² Ibid. 2 ; Zs. XIV, 12, 13.

³ Ibid. 60-iv, 1 ; Zs. XXI, 11-XXII, 13.

⁴ Dk. VII, iv, 36-41, 61, 62.

⁵ Ibid. 42. 44-46, 63.

smiting of demons and fiends ; and he openly spoke the thoughts of king Vistâsp and many of the multitude about hidden matters¹, thus : ' A person is possessing life only by destiny, and without his body, but with a like destiny, the person possessing life is restored ;' he was also opposing many wizards, demon-worshippers, demon-consulters, and those seduced *by*² deceivers who are awful disputants.

9. And this was the utterance of those twelve stars whose names are those of the twelve zodiacal constellations, and the primitive learned of Bâpêl³, that have come to these, who are asking questions of the chief rulers of Khvanîras, have to justify it, in the controversy, with the spiritual and material customs and rude observances which are diversely manifested, onwards from the time of Yim the splendid and the evidence of it, discernible with him, was that of Vohûmanô, Ashavahistô, the fire, and some other good spirits⁴.

10. Afterwards, too, the estimating and weighing of the whole utterance of the religion of Aûharmazd were held out by him to Vistâsp and those of the world, as very accountably a wonder ; and further, too, he remained as it were more conflicting with fellow-disputants than his own words opposing the fellow-disputants.

11. Also when, through the effect of glory and the struggle for being saved, every class of apostles and prophets and manifestation of tokens and such-like were, with certain and striking evidence, casting down blessings, even thereupon the obedient king

¹ Dk. VII, iv, 65, 71.

² B has ' and demon-separatists (va-shêdâ-gvîdakân).'

³ Dk. VII, iv, 72.

⁴ Ibid. 74, 85 ; Zs. XXIII, 7.

Kaī-Vistâsp's fear of the adversary of religion, and also other causes, arose, on account of which he was then accepting the propagation of the religion¹, when its great glory and beauty² were seen by him. 12. At first, Zarīr³, Spend-dâd⁴, Frashôstar, and Gâmâsp⁵, several of the realm who were noble, conspicuous, and well-acting, the good and princes of mankind, beheld visibly the will and desirableness of Aûharmazd and the archangels, and the progressive religion of the creatures, fit for those completely victorious (hûktragântg).

13. Lastly, the seizure and capturing (gīrīnīšnō) by the demons are beheld and watched; and they have remained opposing, owing to the number of idolators competing wranglingly. 14. And much conflict and slaughter occurred, which arose purely, so that the mingling of the religion in the world proceeded⁶.

15. There are also his pure new bringers and complete controllers of the same religion, Aûshêdar⁷, Aûshêdar-mâh⁸, and Sôshâns⁹; and through the complete progress of this religion of Aûharmazd, all the good creatures become without disturbance and all-radiant¹⁰.

¹ Dk. VII, iv, 87.

² K43 has varâzō; but B, omitting the first letter, has lāfō, 'praise.'

³ A brother and commander-in-chief of Vistâsp, killed in the battle with Argâsp, see Bd. XXXI, 29; YZ. 54-56.

⁴ A son of Vistâsp; see Dk. VII, vii, 5; YZ. 82-85.

⁵ Two brothers, see Chap. III, 4; Dk. VII, vi, 12; Zs. XXIII, 10.

⁶ See Chap. III, 1.

⁷ Dk. VII, viii, 55-ix, 13.

⁸ Dk. VII, ix, 18-x, 10.

⁹ Dk. VII, x, 15-xi, 5.

¹⁰ Dk. VII, xi, 6-11.

CHAPTER III.

1. About that which is manifested as regards the propitiousness, forward intellect, and complete virtue of Zaratûst, it is openly declared that, according to his explaining statements, there occurred such events as the victory of Kai-Vistâsp and the Irânians over Argâsp¹ and an army of Khyôns and other foreigners of innumerable kinds, and details on that subject; also other assistance of Vistâsp and those of the realm in other necessities.

2. The killing of Zaratûst himself by Brâdrô-rêsh² the Tûr; the provision of a chariot by Srtô³ of the Visraps; and whatever is on those subjects.

3. Also, specially, matters in the times to come, each consecutively, when therein arrive devastators such as Alexander⁴, and the killer of Akre-khiradô⁵, Mahrkûs⁶, Dahâk⁷, and other devastators; extenders of belief (vîravîsn-vâlân) such as the Messiah (Mashikh), Mânih⁸, and others; periods such as the steel age⁹, that mingled with iron, and others; and organizers, restorers, and introducers of religion, such

¹ Dk. VII, iv, 77, 83, 84, 87-90; v, 7; this victory occurred in the thirtieth year of the religion, see Zs. XXIII, 8.

² Dk. VII, v, 12 n.

³ Dk. VII, vi, 2-11.

⁴ Dk. VII, vii, 7.

⁵ Or Aghrêrad (Av. Aghraêratha), killed by his brother Frâsîyâv or Frangrâsîyâk of Tûr, see Bd. XXIX, 5; XXXI, 15, 20-22.

⁶ Dk. VII, i, 24; ix, 3.

⁷ Ibid. i, 26.

⁸ A heretic who flourished A.D. 216-242; see Dk. IX, xxxix, 13 n.

⁹ According to Byt. II, 21, 22, the steel age was the time of Khûsrô Anôshêrvân, and that mingled with iron at the end of Zaratûst's millennium.

as Artakhshatar ¹, Âtûrpâd ², Khûsrôï ³, Pêshyôtan ⁴, Aûshêdar, Aûshêdar-mâh, Sôshâns ⁵, and others.

4. The formation of custom, and the indications which have come to manifestation and will arrive at various periods; and the proclamation of these, too, by Gâmâsp ⁶, from the teaching of Zaratûst, is what he wrote, together with the Avesta and Zand, upon oxhides, and it was written with gold, and kept in the royal treasury ⁷. 5. And it was from it the high-priests of the rulers made many copies; and afterwards, too, it is from it that it happened, both to the less intelligent and the corrupters, that they were introducing different opinions and different views.

CHAPTER IV.

1. About the selectness and perfection of the race of Irân, that is, how the destroyer and the mingling of defects came into the creation, first into the distribution of the race [of mankind] ⁸ from the children of Sîyâmak ⁹, and good intellect, good disposition,

¹ Ardâshîr Pâpakân (A.D. 226-241), the founder of the Sâsânian dynasty.

² Son of Mâraspend, and prime minister of Shahpûhar II (A.D. 309-379).

³ Anôshêrvân (A.D. 531-578).

⁴ A son of Vistâsp and immortal ruler of Kangdez, see Dk. VII, iv, 81.

⁵ See Chap. II, 15.

⁶ See Chap. II, 12.

⁷ This was the original Avesta prepared by order of Vistâsp, as stated in the last chapter of Dk. III, § 3 (see S. B. E., vol. xxxvii, p. xxxi).

⁸ B omits the words in brackets.

⁹ Son of Masyê, called Sâmak in Dk. VII, i, 15.

proper affection, proper praise, proper modesty, observance of hope, liberality, truth, generosity, good friendship, and other capability, glory, and proper duty are more particularly included for Fravâk¹, and again altered for frontier peoples.

2. Such-like goodness and glory, again, through selection from a promiscuous origin—even till the coming on of various new contaminations, from the demons, among the children of Fravâk—were for Hâôshâng and Vâêgered², as Hâôshâng through superior glory was ruler of the world, and Vâêgered³ through provincial government (dahyûkânih) became the cultivator and cherisher of the world; and their well-destined descendants³ aggrandized the race of the monarchs among the well-born provincial governors (dahyûkân).

3. In union, such-like glory and goodness proceeded, mutually connected, in various ages as settled by the annals (mâdîgân), and the frontiers of Atûr⁴ are penetrated; also in various annals there were in succession such men as Tâkhmôrup, Yim, Frêdûn the Âspîgân, and Aîrîk of Irân, the progenitor of Mânûs, Mânûs-khvârnar, and Mânûs-kîhar⁵.

4. And, besides including this one, who was a monarch of superior glory, and other monarchs such as are also in the same race⁶, the Kayâns⁷ were

¹ Son of Sîyâmak; he was progenitor of the fifteen undeformed races of mankind (see Bd. XV, 25, 30, 31).

² Dk. VII, i, 16-18.

³ K43 has 'children.'

⁴ Probably Assyria; but it is possible to read atval as Ar. a/val, and to translate 'ancient frontiers.'

⁵ For the foregoing names see Dk. VII, i, 19-30; ii, 70.

⁶ Such as Âûzôbô in Dk. VII, i, 31.

⁷ From Kaî-Kobâd to Kaî-Khûsrô, as stated in Dk. VII, i, 33-40.

chosen. 5. Even thus, as regards the Kayâns, the annals have always to consider him who is monarch as the right one, who is a fellow-descendant of the lineage, and in whom the glory is residing.

6. The creator Aôharmazd has informed Nêryô-sang¹, his own reminder, that a similar instance is the supreme Zaratûstship, and the glory of the religion due to the same; also many other reasons, which are recountable, are declared in the Avesta, indications known only to an Irânian person of the best lineage. 7. And this, too, he has said, namely: 'Great glory and goodness of this description are appropriatable by the same race, and are even now² visibly manifest.'

8. About what are the requirements of the tribe of those who call this really their Gyêmarâ and how they are effected by our acquaintance with revelation, that is, by much recitation of it; only, several occasions (yâvar 1-*k*and) are necessary in these times. 9. Also action and precaution are possible for them, and among the actions and precautions one is to assume more especially law and custom, and whatever was perverted by us and again made true; and, as to those taught, several persons who are intellectual, seeking means, and friends of the soul, have come to teach complete delusions to them; also for the same tribe and whomever it is proper to teach, when it is necessary for them, even a worldly priestly authority is guiding for that same tribe, because he has come¹.

¹ The usual messenger of Aôharmazd, see Dk. VII, iv, 84, 85.

² B has 'even anew,' by writing kevan backwards, which converts the word into navak. From Chap. I, 7 to this point, the compiler could have found very little of his materials in a Jewish MS., excepting such as had been recently obtained from Persian sources.

¹ It would seem that the tribe professed a different religion, but one that bore some resemblance to the Parsi faith in certain essential particulars. The remaining five-sixths of Dk. V are devoted to a miscellaneous collection of religious subjects, resembling a Rivâyat.

SELECTIONS OF ZÂD-SPARAM.

SELECTIONS OF ZÂD-SPARAM¹.

CHAPTER XII.

1. About the coming of the religion at a given time being a resemblance such-like as the birth of a child through two united powers, which are the reception of semen by females in procreation, and delivering it back to the fathers, and a period of struggling and intermingling, especially by two means: a monarchy with ² religion of the same tenets (ham-vâk-dênôih), and the existence of similar tenets to those of the monarchy in the custom of the religion. 2. The religion of the Mazda-worshippers, when the period of material

¹ Zâd-sparam was Dastûr of Sîrkân, about thirty parasangs south of Kirmân, in A. D. 881. At a later date, probably about A. D. 900, he compiled three series of Selections, from religious texts then extant, and these have been preserved by the Parsis in the same MSS. as contain the Dâdistân-î Dînk (see the Introduction). The first eleven chapters of this first series of Selections have been already translated in S. B. E., vol. v, pp. 155-186, as they refer to some of the subjects detailed in the Bundahis. The remaining chapters are here translated, except the last which refers to the Nasks and Gâthas, and will be found in S. B. E., vol. xxxvii, pp. 401-405. The MS. authorities for the text are K35 and T (see p. 2 and Introduction).

² T has 'devoid of.'

organization is being converted again into a spiritual nature, became manifest on the earth, first through Spendarmâd¹ and afterwards through Aûharmâzd, like the reception of a child by mothers and delivering it back to the fathers.

3. The manifestation of the religion through Spendarmâd was at that time when Frâsiyâv² kept back the water from the country of Irân, and brought the water again; in damsel form she was a speaker for its manifestation, in reply to foreigners, at the house of Mânûskêhar³, the monarch of the country of Irân. 4. She was also dressed, and wore radiant clothing which shone out on all sides for the length of a Hâsar⁴, which is a distance, like a Parasang; and, tied on her waist, she wore a golden sacred girdle which was the religion of the Mazda-worshippers itself.

5. As to the belt of the religion, it is that to which are connected the thirty-three fetters upon the thirty-three sins⁵, according to which all sin is divided; so that (kû) the damsels, by whom the tied sacred girdle of Spendarmâd was seen, have become impetuous (taftlgö) after that for a tied girdle, on account of its seeming beautiful.

6. And this was the motherhood which is supplied through Spendarmâd, as a gift, in the year 528

¹ The female archangel who has special charge of the earth and virtuous women (see Dk. VII, ii, 19 n).

² See Dk. VII, i, 31; and regarding his irrigation canals, see Bd. XX, 17, 34; XXI, 6.

³ See Dk. VII, i, 29.

⁴ A thousand steps of the two feet, or Roman mile; see Bd. XXVI, 1.

⁵ Thirty sins are detailed in Mkh. XXXVI, and thirty-three good works in XXXVII (see S. B. E., vol. xxiv, pp. 71-75).

before Zaratûst came out to his conference¹, which is one of their statements from the annals of the religion in a manuscript of the ancients.

7. The name of Zaratûst is also cited on the earth at 300 years before his conference². 8. For Irân, at the supplication even of the priests in the land, and for the sake of the pacification of a dispute arisen, Aûharmazd produced a great ox, by whom the boundary of Irân next to Tûrân was intimated by pawing with his hoofs, and he was kept in a jungle. 9. Whenever contention arose, the boundary was fully made known by that ox, until it was the wish of Kaî-Ûs to take, fully covetously, a portion of the land of Tûrân back into Irân, and he saw that the ox is about to act very ill-naturedly, because it was not besought with forms which were prescribed for it, where a boundary was intimated by it³.

10. There were seven brothers, and he who was the seventh was called Sritô¹ the Seventh, the largest in body and chief in strength, belonging to those instructed in many subjects for Kai-Ûs, and he was among his princes. 11. Kai-Ûs summoned him into his presence and ordered him thus: 'Go and kill that ox in the jungle!'

¹ If this coming to conference with the spirits be 'the coming of the religion,' in the thirtieth year of Vistâsp's reign, then, according to Bundahis chronology, these 528 years will carry us back to twenty-eight years before the accession of Mânûskîhar. As any alteration in the date of Mânûskîhar's accession would disturb the millennial arrangement of Bd. XXXIV, it is probable that some copyist has miswritten the ciphers, and we ought to read 428. This legend appears not to occur elsewhere.

² According to Bd. XXXIV, 7, Kaî-Ûs reigned from 360 to 210 years before 'the coming of the religion.' At this point a dislocation of the text occurs in all existing MSS., owing to the misplacement of a loose folio in some unknown copy written before 1530; the contents of this folio, §§ 8-16, are found in the existing MSS. three folios further on (after Chap. XIV, 14), and are here restored to their original position, as determined by the meaning of the text.

³ T has 'by that ox.' This legend is also told in Dk. VII, ii, 62-66.

12. Sritô went, and the ox whom he wished to kill expostulated with him, in human words, thus: 'Do not kill me! for though thou canst kill me, he whose guardian spirit is in the Hôm, the death-dispeller, will also become manifest on the earth, he whose name is Zaratûst of the Spîtâmas², and will proclaim thy bad action in the world. 13. And the distress in thy soul becomes such as is declared in revelation thus: "As it occurs to him, so it does to Vadak³, when they mention his iniquity," and thy death becomes the like and, owing to death, it is mixed up with hers (that is, owing even to hers is the death of Sritô).'

14. When those words were heard by him, Sritô turned back, and went again to Kai-Ûs; also by his manner, and even apart from this, he stated⁴ what the ox had spoken with awfulness, and also thus:

¹ Sritô, the seventh son (compare Dk. VII, ii, 64), is not easy to identify. He could not have been Thrîta the father of Keresâspa, because this Thrîta the Sâmân is said to have been a third son in Pahl. Yas. IX, 30 (Sp.). He may have been Sritô of the Vîsraþs, whose soul visited Vistâsp in the latter part of his reign, about 350 years later, regarding which a legend is related in Dk. VII, vi, 2-11, and again mentioned in Dk. V, iii, 2; but there is a want of corresponding details for identification.

² This is the citation of his name mentioned in § 7.

³ The mother of Dahâk, whose iniquity is considered as equal to that of the evil spirit, see Dd. LXXII, 5; Dk. IX, x, 3.

⁴ T has 'also by his manner he intimated and separately stated.'

'I am more desirous than any one who is in the earth created by righteousness, that you should now order destruction for the ox.'

15. And Kaî-Ûs uttered his will, with the conviction of superior wisdom, thus: 'It is not certain whether he whose guardian spirit is in the Hôm, the death-dispeller, is himself, or not; and if he be, and be born ¹, whether he will become manifest, or not;' and he commanded with severity, thus: 'Go and kill it!'

16. And Sritô spoke thus: 'It is not that I am without strength to kill, because its reprieve by me was owing to its remonstrance, mentioned to me, that a high-priest is to arise ².'

17. So it is declared thus, in another revelation (dênô zagâi) ³, when the Tûrânians were backward in heart, Kaî-Ûs spoke thus: 'Go out to a certain jungle, in which dwell many chiefs of the witches, and they will cut thee up without any striving of heart.'

18. And Sritô went up to the jungle, where many witches saw him, who kept their jaws open, and they spoke about the handsome man thus: 'Slay and do not spare!' 19. And compassion having gone out of his heart, he went back to the other jungle and, with his fist, he broke the back of the ox in three places; and the ox, awfully convulsed (skiftö barhamakö), kept up an outcry.

20. After the slaughter of the ox, owing to its convulsed state which was heard by him, the

¹ T omits 'and be born.'

² The misplaced folio, which begins with § 8, ends here, but it is not quite certain that a few lines of text are not still missing.

³ T has 'at another time (dên zagâi).'

remembrance of it then became grievous to Sritô ; and he went back to Kat-Ûs, and informed him how it was, and begged him that he should finish off by slaying him¹, because his life was not desirable.

21. Kat-Ûs spoke thus : 'Shall I slay thee, for it was not designed by thee?'

22. And Sritô spoke thus : 'If thou wilt not slay me, then I shall slay thee.'

23. Again Kat-Ûs spoke thus : 'Do not thou slay me, for I am the monarch of the world.'

24. Sritô continued his discontent, until Kat-Ûs ordered him thus : 'Go out to a certain jungle, because a witch in the shape of a dog is in it, and she will slay thee.'

25. Then Sritô went out to that jungle, and that witch in the shape of a dog was seen by him ; after he smote the witch, she became two ; and he constantly smote them till they became a thousand, and the host (girdô) of them slew Sritô on the spot.

CHAPTER XIII.

1. About the glory of Zaratûst becoming manifest even before his birth, it is thus declared, that forty-five years before the time when Zaratûst came out to his conference², when Frênö gave birth to the mother of Zaratûst³, whom they called Dûkâak, it

¹ T has 'that he should command the slaying of him.'

² That is, forty-five years before he was thirty years old (see Chap. XXI, 1-14).

³ It is necessary to translate in this manner, to agree with Dk. VII, ii, 3, but the text, which is ambiguous, runs as follows:—
'amat Frênög (Frênö-î?) Zaratûst am, zyarân Dûkâakög karîuntô, came down from the endless light, in the manner of fire, and mingled with the fire which was before her; and from the fire it mingled with the mother of Zaratûst¹.

2. For three nights it was manifest, to all passers-by, as a species of fire in the direction of the house, and passers on the road always saw great radiance.

3. Also when she became fifteen years old, the radiance of that glory which was in her, was even such that, on the path she was walking along, its brightness was then shed by her².

4. About the combination of Zaratûst, whose guardian spirit is revered; that is, his guardian spirit, in the Hôm, and his glory are given the cow's milk, by his father and mother drinking it up³, and his spiritual life (ahvô) came into the combination, as was proclaimed by his statements in the manuscript about the Guidance of the Ceremonial⁴.

5. About the backward connection of Zaratûst with Aûharmazd, through the two who are Yim, the best of the worldly existences, and Nêryôsang of the spirits. 6. The enumeration of the lineage of Zaratûst is Zaratûst, son of Pôrûshaspô⁵, of Purtarâspô, zerkhûntô;’ which might also be translated thus: ‘when Frênô, the mother of Zaratûst, whom they called Dûkzâk, was born.’ This Frênô, whether mother or daughter, does not seem to correspond with any Frêni mentioned in the Avesta.

¹ See Dk. VII, ii, 2, 3.

² Ibid. 7, 8.

³ Ibid. 46, 47.

⁴ Not identified, but probably like the Nîrangistân.

⁵ This genealogy was, no doubt, derived originally from the same source as that in Dk. VII, ii, 70, but there are several variations, especially in orthography, which are here preserved, unless clearly copyist's blunders. The names marked with an asterisk are written in Pâzand.

of Ahûrvadâspô, of Hâêkadâspô, of Kîkhshnûs, of Paîtiraspô, of Aregadarst*, of Kharedhar*, of Spîtâmân, of Vaêdîstô, of Ayazem, of Fris, of Arig*, of Dûrasrôbô, of Mânûskîhar, of Mânûs-khûrnar, of Mânûs-khûrnâk, whom Nêryôsang the messenger of Aûharmazd brought, and whose mother was Vîzag, daughter of Aryag, of Sritak, of Bitak, of Frazûsak, of Zûsak, of Fragûzag, of Gûzag, daughter of Airtê, son of Frêdûn of the Âspigâns to the total of ten Âspigâns, of Yim, of the Vîvang, has, of the Ayang, has, of the Anang, has, of Hôshâng, of Fravâk, of Siyâmak, of Masiyâ, of Gâyômarz.

CHAPTER XIV.

1. About the wonderful striving of the fiend for the destruction of Zaratûst. 2. When it became near to his birth, the Fever demon, the Pain demon, and the Wind demon of Aharman, each one with 150 demons, have come out to kill Zaratûst, and from his spirit they have gone forth to his mother. 3. And she is hurried from there by Fever, Pain, and Wind; and at the distance of one league (para-sang) there was a wizard, Impudent (Storkö) by name, who was the most medical of wizards; in hope of practice he stood up from his seat, as she stopped in her progress.

4. A messenger of Aûharmazd uttered a cry thus: 'Do not go to a wizard! for they are not healing (bêshazintdâr) for thee; but go back to the house, wash thy hands on the morrow with cow's butter held over the fire, also burn (tâpö) ¹ firewood and incense for thy own self and thy progeny which is in thy womb.' 5. And she acted accordingly and became well¹; and the co-operators of the demon, and those of equal power, who had not obtained their remedy from her body, are again exposed², and spoke thus: 'On account of the existence of fire from all sides we have not succeeded; it is a help for every one who is her friend more than opponent; therefore it was not for us, because of the power within her.'

¹ T has 'consume (viddzö).'

6. The same night as she gave birth, Aharman selected commanders and arrayed his champions (gûrd); there are some who are with one thousand demons, and there are some who are with two thousand demons; pursuing and attacking they have contended. 7. The opposing stand of the sacred beings³, especially of the glory itself at the family⁴ fire, was manifest at that birth; and for its splendour and brightness (padrôkô), settled opposite a distant place, they have then found no remedy.

8. At last, Aharman sends Akômanô⁵ on, and spoke to him thus: 'Thou canst be very spiritual, who canst be most intimate; thou canst go with deceit into the mind of Zaratûst, and make him turn

¹ Compare Dk. VII, ii, 53-55.

² T has 'and all the co-operators who had entered her body, and those of equal power who had reached them, returned helpless from them.'

³ Thus summarized in Dk. VIII, xiv, 2:—'Also about the arrival of both spirits, the good one for developing, and the evil one for destroying; the victory of the good spirit, and the rearing of Zaratûst.' The 'rearing' is continued in Chaps. XV-XX.

⁴ Assuming that 𐬔𐬀𐬎𐬌 stands for 𐬔𐬀𐬎𐬌 dûdak.

⁵ The archdemon of 'evil thought' (Bd. XXVIII, 7) and special opponent of Vohûmanô, the archangel of 'good thought.'

his mind to us who are demons.' 9. And Aûharmazd sends Vohûmanô on against him; Akômanô advanced to the front, and had come forward to the door, and wished to go inside.

10. Vohûmanô schemingly (êârakögarîhâ) turned¹ back, and exclaimed to Akômanô thus: 'Go inside!' 11. Akômanô imagined thus: 'There is nothing to be accomplished by me of what was mentioned to me, for Vohûmanô has gone back.' 12. And Vohûmanô went inside, and mingled with the reason (vârôm) of Zaratûst, and Zaratûst laughed outright², for Vohûmanô is a gratifying spirit.

13. Also seven wizards³ were seated before him, and owing to the light in the dwelling, his having laughed at birth was conveniently seen, which is opposed to the habit of the rest of mankind who cry out at birth and are quite terrified.

14. Also, at the same time of birth, he authoritatively accepted the religion from Aûharmazd, as it is stated in revelation, that he spoke at birth thus: 'As is the will of the spiritual lord (ahvô) mayst thou be who art the officiating priest (zôtô) (that is, mayst thou be the leader of the creatures)⁴.'

15. As Zaratûst, on account of his worldly body, spoke with a worldly voice, Aûharmazd spoke in reply to him, on account of the spirits, thus: 'So

¹ Assuming that stô stands for vastô.

² Compare Dk. VII, iii, 2; V, ii, 5. This laughing is not mentioned in Dk. IX, xxiv.

³ 'Seven midwives' are mentioned in Dk. VII, iii, 2.

⁴ This is one form of the Pahlavi Ahunavair (see Dk. IX, xxiv, 4). At this point the text in the MSS. is interrupted by the erroneous insertion of Chap. XII, 8-16, the contents of a loose folio in some former copy, which have been restored to their original position in this translation.

mayst thou be the priestly authority (rad' shâe), and so mayst thou be virtuous, owing to whatsoever righteousness occurs; and I confidently proclaim thee righteous (that is, I am thy controller) ¹.'

16. Another day, Pôrûshaspô went and enquired of the wizards who kept in front at the place, thus: 'What is the cause when infants cry out at birth, beyond that which occurs when they laugh outright ²?' 17. And they replied thus: 'Because those who are made to cry have seen mortality as their end, and those having laughed have seen their own righteousness.'

CHAPTER XV.

1. About the brothers who were a band of opponents of Zaratûst. 2. The Karaps and Aûsikhshes ³ were brothers' sons, and have become the devastation (gâstâragîh) of the Irânians; the devastators of the Irânians (Êrânân) were from Kôkharêd ⁴, and Kôkharêd was born from Aêshm and Mânûsak, the sister of Mânûskêthar ⁵. 3. At the place where Zaratûst was born, five brothers have been, whose names were Brâd-rûkhsh, Brâd-rôyisn, Brâd-rêsh the Tûr, Hazân, and Vadast ⁶. 4. Their

¹ Compare Dk. IX, xxiv, 4. ² Compare Dk. VII, iii, 24, 25.

³ Av. 'Karapâ Usikhsh-kâ' of Yas. XLIV, 20 c; the Kavâ, a third class of pre-Zoroastrian priests, is also mentioned ibid. 20 d. Compare Dk. VII, ii, 9 n.

⁴ Av. Kahvaredha, Yas. LX, 6, 7 (Sp.) where it is translated by kâstâr, 'diminisher, devastator,' of whom it is here said to be the father; see also Yt. III, 9, 12, 16.

⁵ Compare the legend of the descent of the ape and bear from a demon and Yimak, sister of Yim, in Bd. XXIII, 1.

⁶ As these names do not occur in the Avesta, their pronunciation brotherhood of five—of which the middle one was Brâd-rêsh the Tûr, who became more of an adversary of Zaratûst—was a semblance of the brotherhood of five who were sons of Pôrûshaspô, of whom the middle one was Zaratûst.

5. Of the four brothers of Zaratûst, the names of the two before Zaratûst were Ratûstar and Rangûstar, and of the two after him Nodarigâ and Nivêdis¹.

6. The middle position of Zaratûst is for the reason that he is so produced at that time, as an inter-medium of the early narrators and the later narrators, that three millenniums came before him and three after. 7. So that he has prescribed to the creatures in what manner he would teach the ancients as to what had occurred, and in what manner it is also to be done as regards what will occur; as is stated in the Gâthas² thus: 'Both those I ask of thee, O Aûharmazd! even whatever has happened till now, and whatever shall happen henceforth?'

CHAPTER XVI.

1. About the trials (aûzmâyisnô) which occurred has to be guessed so as to give a probable meaning to the Pahlavi spelling. The writing of the last name is complicated; it is written  and  in the two MS. authorities, which forms can be most obviously read Vasam and Saman, but Saman can also be read as the Zvâris yadâ=dast, 'a hand;' this leads to the conclusion that the original name underlies the form Vadast, and this is confirmed by the name of the Karap Vaêdvôist written at full length in Dk. VII, iv, 21-24. See ibid. ii, 9 n.

¹ These brothers seem unmentioned elsewhere, and the existence of the elder two would imply another mother. The pronunciation of the names is guessed.

² Pahl. Yas. XXXI, 14 a.

to him whose practice was lawful, and the signs of prophecy that are seen therein, it is thus declared, namely; 'Another day, when the child had been born, Pôrûshaspô called one of those five brothers of the race of Karaps, and spoke thus: "Fully observe the marks and specks of my son Zaratûst."' "

2. The Karap went and sat down before Zaratûst, and the head of Zaratûst was thereupon severely twisted by him, in order that he should be killed; but he, being fearless, watched the wizards whose terror was distressing¹. 3. As it was in those ten nights for hospitality, Aûharmazd sent Spendarmad, Arêdvisûr, and Ardâi-fravard² down to the earth, by way of female care; thereupon no variation occurred to the child, and, further, the hand of that Karap was withered³, and that wizard demanded the life⁴ of Zaratûst from Pôrûshaspô for the harm from him, which sprang upon himself from his own action.

4. At the same time Pôrûshaspô took Zaratûst, and gave him to the Karap, that he might do with him according to his own will. 5. He seized him and threw him out, at the feet of the oxen who were going on a path to the water; the leader of that drove of oxen stood still in his vicinity, and 150 oxen, which walked behind it, were kept away from him thereby; and Pôrûshaspô took him, and carried him back to the house⁵.

6. Also the second day, the Karap threw him out

¹ Assuming that vôshîg stands for vêshîg=bêshîg.

² The three female spirits that represent the earth, pure water, and guardian spirits, respectively.

³ Compare Dk. VII, iii, 4-7.

⁴ Assuming that the MS. dênô stands for gân.

⁵ Compare Dk. VII, iii, 11, 12.

at the feet of the horses; and the leader of the horses stood still in the vicinity of Zaratûst, and 150 horses, which walked behind it, were kept away from him thereby; and Pôrûshaspô took him, and carried him back to the house ¹.

7. Also the third day, firewood is gathered together by the Karap, and Zaratûst is deposited on it by him, the fire is stirred up by him, yet with the same result (ham-bûn-ik), the child is not burnt by it, and those marks, which existed and were made upon him, were a preservation from it ².

8. And the fourth day, he is thrown by the Karap into the lair (âshyânakö) of a wolf; the wolf was not in the lair, and when it wished to go back to the den (sûrâkö), it stopped when it came in front of some radiance, in the manner of a mother, at the place where its cub was. 9. In the night, Vohûmanô and Srôsh the righteous brought a woolly (kûrû-sakö) sheep with udder full of milk into the den, and it gave milk to Zaratûst, in digestible draughts (guvârakö guvârakö), until daylight ³.

10. In the dawn, the mother of Zaratûst went to that place, in the expectation that it would be necessary to bring a skeleton out of the den, and the woolly sheep came out and ran away; his mother supposed that it was the wolf, and she spoke thus: 'Thou hast devoured to repletion; mayst thou endure for ever without it!' 11. She went farther, and when she saw Zaratûst quite safe, she then took him up and spoke thus: 'I will not give thee to any one during life, not though both the provinces of Râgh and Nôdar should arrive here together ⁴.'

¹ Compare Dk. VII, iii, 13, 14.

² Ibid. 9, 10.

³ Ibid. 15-17; V, ii, 4.

⁴ Ibid. 18, 19.

12. Because these princes were among the spiritual from two provinces which are in Âtûr-pâdakân, such as are at sixty leagues (parasang) from Kîst; Zaratûst arose from Râgh, and Vistâsp from Nôdar.

13. And of these two provinces, Râgh was according to the name of Êrikö, son of Dûrêsrôbô, son of Mânûskêthar¹, from whom arose the race of Zaratûst; and Nôdar was according to the name of Nôdar, son of Mânûskêthar, from whom arose the race of Vistâsp.

CHAPTER XVII.

1. These were his tokens at birth:—One day, one of those five brothers of the Karaps saw Zaratûst, and he looked a long while upwards, downwards, and on all sides around².

2. Pôrûshaspô enquired thus: 'What was there when thou lookedst upwards, what when thou lookedst downwards, and what when thou lookedst on all sides?'³

3. And he replied thus, namely: 'When I looked upwards, it was for this reason, when I saw that our souls³ that go up to the sky, will go up to the best

¹ Compare Chap. XIII, 6; Dk. VII, ii, 70.

² Compare Dk. VII, iii, 27-30.

³ Assuming that the MS. gad, 'glory, or destiny,' has lost an initial n, with which it was originally nismd = Chald. נִשְׁמָה 'the soul;' as the copyists have not been aware of the existence of this Zvâris equivalent for rûbân, 'the soul,' for some centuries, it has been altered into gad, by the omission of its first letter, in nearly all but the very oldest existing MSS., such as K20 and M6 in Bd. XV, 3-5, and even there the medial m is really missing, though apparently existing in the final d; the irregularity of using s for sh is common in Pahlavi.

*existence*¹, owing to the words of this soul of mankind. 4. When I looked downwards, I saw that, owing to the action of this one, the demon and fiend, the wizard and witch become buried below the earth, and fall paralyzed back to hell. 5. And when I looked on all sides, I saw that the words of this one will extend through the whole earth; and when they have become as the law of the seven regions, each person is kept clothed with a robe (kapâh) of seven skins, in which the glory of the seven archangels has arisen.'

6. And Brâd-rûkhsh the Tûr went forth; when he went to the right side (arakö), Zaratûst hastened away to the left, and when he went to the left side, Zaratûst hastened to the right, and he is thereby concealed from Brâd-rûkhsh the Tûr, who has not met with him.

CHAPTER XVIII.

1. About his diverse want of participation (gvîd akhvêsth) with his parents this also is declared, that the demons, at an assembly of wizards, produced an outcry for a conference (ham-vâkô lâyisnô) thus: 'That son of Pôrûshaspô is senseless and foolish and secretly corrupted; no one, man or woman, will consider or accept him as exalted.'

2. The tidings came to Pôrûshaspô, and Pôrûshaspô spoke unto Zaratûst thus: 'I thought that I had begotten a son who would become a priest, a warrior, and a husbandman, and now thou wouldst be foolish and secretly corrupted; thou shouldst proceed to the Karaps, so that they may cure thee.'

¹ The ordinary heaven; see Dd. XX, 3.

3. Zaratûst gave answer thus: 'I am he that is thy son, a priest, warrior, and husbandman.' 4. And, by command of Pôrûshaspô he harnessed two horses to a chariot (vardînô), and he went with Pôrûshaspô.

5. When they came to the place according to the decision of Pôrûshaspô, into the presence of one Karap of those said five brethren, that wizard took a cup and made water, and spoke thus: 'This he should drink who is a son of thine, so that he may become well;' and he acted with this conviction, that so he would change to the same nature as theirs.

6. Zaratûst spoke to Pôrûshaspô thus: 'Thou mayst give it back to him who is thy protector and high-priest;' and he arose (âkhêgîd)¹ and went back to their place.

7. On the way, Zaratûst gave their two horses water, on account of their thirst; and he thought thus: 'Unprofitable was my going to the residence of the Karaps, except in this manner, when, through giving water to the horses, my soul was then expanded.'

CHAPTER XIX.

1. About his interfering talk (andarg-gôbisnôth) with the iniquitous, this also is declared, that one day Dûrêsrôbô¹ the Karap, as it were from the same five brethren, came out to the house of Pôrûshaspô; and Pôrûshaspô placed a bowl (gâmakö) of mare's milk before him, and spoke to him thus: 'Consecrate it.'

¹ T has 'he saluted (nîyâyîd).'¹ This legend has not yet been found elsewhere.

2. Zaratûst expostulated with Pôrûshaspô thus: 'I will consecrate it.' 3. Pôrûshaspô spoke thus: 'He should consecrate, and the grace is to be offered up by you²;' and as many as three times they mutually disputed.

4. Then up stood Zaratûst, and his right foot struck at the bowl and emptied it, and he spoke thus: 'I reverence righteousness, I reverence the righteous and the poor, men and women; do thou, O Pôrûshaspô! prepare a portion for him in whom there is worthiness.'

5. And Dûrêsrôbô spoke unto Zaratûst thus: 'As some of my portion of daily food was first thrown away by thee, it is I who will bring it on both thy lives, and will utterly destroy thee.' 6. Zaratûst spoke interruptingly³ thus: 'With complete mindfulness I will look upon thee with both eyes, and will utterly destroy thee.'

7. And, for a long time, they constantly looked, one at the other, with unshrinking gaze; but the divine nature of Zaratûst is victorious over the witchcraft of that wizard, and Dûrêsrôbô is further disturbed; he also asked for his horse and spoke thus: 'On account of this boy, it is impossible for me to stay.'

¹ So spelt in Zs., but Dûrâsrôbô in Dk.; also the former has always Pôrûshaspô, but the latter Pôrûshâspô. Compare the same legend in Dk. VII, iii, 34-45.

² Pahl. 'valâ aê yazêdô, alêd vâg dahisnô.'

³ Or 'inwardly.'

8. He sat upon the horse, and when he had gone a little way, he fell off from the horse, through severe distress, and died ; and the children of his children's children have died upon the same spot ¹.

CHAPTER XX.

1. About the righteousness of his desires it is thus declared, that when he became fifteen years old, the sons of Pôrûshaspô demanded a portion from their father, and their portions are allotted out by him. 2. Among the clothes there was a girdle, the width of which was four finger-breadths; and of the four ² portions around and the girdle, which it was possible to bring forth, Zaratûst selected the latter and tied it on himself. 3. This was owing to the precepts (parvânakân) of Vohûmanô who came into his reason at birth ; as to whatever is not the custom his mind was now quite closed, and in that which is the custom it was impetuously exercised by him.

4. About his compassionate disposition and the streams of the Arag province ³, this also is declared,

¹ Probably meaning that he died childless.

² The MSS. have 'three,' but there were five sons (Chap. XV, 5), and the numbers are written in ciphers which are very easily corrupted.

³ Pahl. 'Aragistân ôdhâvô (T dhâ)' = 'ôdhâ-î Arangîstânô' of P. Vd. I, 77 (Sp.); compare Av. 'upa aodhaêshu Rang, hayau,' of Vd. I, 19; Yt. XII, 18. In the Irânian Bd. XX, 8 we are told that 'the Arang river is that of which it is said that it comes out from Albûrz in the land of Sûrak, which they call also Sham (Shâm); and it passes on through the land of Êgiptôs, which they call also Misr, and there they call it the swift river Êgiptôdis.' It is that there was a river, and from them the body of a naked woman floated, for the reason that, on account of the strength and swiftness of the river, a woman, except when she was quite naked while she was in it, was not able to pass; and an old person, such as he who is of seventy years and is called in revelation a Hânô¹, for want of power (apâdîyâvandîh râî), was not able to go back through it by his own strength. 5. Zaratûst came on to the bank of the water, and of women and old people seven persons had come, and are passed on by him, in the manner of a bridge²; it was an emblem of the spiritual performers³ of bridging work, that is, of those providing a passage to heaven.

6. About his liberal disposition it is declared, that the fodder of Pôrûshaspô, which was stored for the beasts of burden, was not only for the beasts of Pôrûshaspô in a scarcity, but also for distribution among the beasts of others, which, owing to their hunger on account of the scarcity, then constantly ate off the tails of each other; and it was given to them plentifully.

7. About his abandoning worldly desire, and his laying hold of righteousness of way, this, too, is declared, that when he became twenty years old, without the consent (bên akâmakîh) of his father and mother, he wandered forth and departed from one of the two mythical rivers which were supposed to bound the Irânian world, and seems to represent the Aras as a northern and the Nile as a western boundary. Arang often becomes Arag in Pahlavi, just as sang becomes sag.

¹ Av. hanô in Vd. III, 19, 20; &c.

² Probably holding each other's hands.

³ The sacred beings who assist the righteous souls to pass over the Kinvad bridge.

their house, and openly enquired thus: 'Who is most desirous of righteousness and most nourishing the poor?' 8. And they spoke thus: 'He who is the youngest (kêhistô) son of Aûrvaitô-dih¹ the Tûr, who every day gives an iron caldron (gâmak), which is the height of a horse, full of bread and milk and other food, unto the poor.' 9. Zaratûst went on to that place, and with his co-operation, for the nourishment of the poor, some of the chief men performed duty by carrying forth food for the poor.

10. About his compassion, not only upon mankind, but also his other creatures, this, too, is declared, that a bitch was seen by him, which had given birth to five² puppies, and it was three days then that she had not obtained food³. 11. Whom-ever she saw, she then advanced her mouth towards him, and became as it were prostrated; Zaratûst provided a remedy, by swiftly bringing up bread for her, but when he was bringing it she had expired.

12. About his own desire for the good quality⁴ of a wife, on account also of the will of his parents, and his not mingling his own seed before a suitable obtainment, this, too, is declared, that when his father sought a wife for him, Zaratûst argued with the bride (nêshâ) thus: 'Show me thy face, so that I may find out (barkhâm) its kind of appearance, and this, too, whether its appearance be undesirable, or shall not be gratifying;' and the bride turned away her face from him. 13. And Zaratûst spoke thus:

¹ See Dk. VII, iv, 7 n.

² T has 'seven,' but this difference may have arisen from an erroneous mode of writing the ciphers in T.

³ T has 'a bone for food.'

⁴ T has 'good child-bearing.'

‘Whoever takes away a sight from me, does not practise respect for me.’

14. About his having accepted progress even from the iniquitous, that listened sinfully desirous, who accepted so much advantageousness as was manifest, this, too, is declared, that he came into an assembly who were well known in the place for much knowledge, and he enquired of them thus: ‘What is most favourable for the soul?’ 15. And they spoke thus: ‘To nourish the poor, to give fodder to cattle, to bring firewood to the fire, to pour Hô-m-juice into water, and¹ to worship many demons with words, with the words which are called revelation (dênô).’ 16. Then Zaratûst nourished the poor, foddered the cattle, brought firewood to the fire, and squeezed Hô-m into water, but never are any demons whatever worshipped with words by Zaratûst.

CHAPTER XXI.

1. About his coming to thirty years of age it is thus declared, that on the lapse of thirty years onwards from his appearance, on the day Anêrân of the month Spendarmad², he had proceeded in that direction in which there occurred the so-called festival of spring (gasnô-i vahâr)³, forty-five days beyond

¹ T inserts ‘not’ here, which is clearly wrong, and must have been introduced by some copyist who did not observe that the assembly, though learned, was sinful; and that the object of the anecdote is to exhibit Zaratûst’s ability to distinguish between good works and sin, when still untaught by the sacred beings.

² On the last day of the twelfth Parsi month.

³ The Maidhyôzaremayâ season-festival, held on the fifteenth day of the second Parsi month.

new-year's day, at a place become specially noted, where people went, from many quarters, out to the place of festival (gasnōkâr).

2. When Zaratûst, for the sake of going off to the festival place, halted on the way in walking, he chanced upon a solitary (aêvatâk) plain, and he saw, in a vision, that mankind and a much-adorned worldly existence were kept away to the north, so that all the people in the earth have become fully manifest in the north. 3. And he at the head (pavan têkh) of them was Mêdyômâh, son of Ârâstâi¹, even as Ârâstâi was brother of Pôrûshaspô²; Mêdyômâh was the leader of all mankind who have gone out to the presence of Zaratûst, and he became their guide, so that first Mêdyômâh and afterwards the whole material existence are attracted.

4. And about his coming out to the conference, on the lapse of those forty-five days, at the place of festival at dawn on the day Dadvô³-pavan-Mitrô of the month Ardavahistô. 5. And Zaratûst, for the purpose of squeezing the Hôm, went forth to the bank of the water of the Dâltih, because it is the river⁴ of the conference for the supremacy (patih) of Zaratûst, and is the water of *Âvân*⁵ which has consisted of four channels (bêtâ). 6. Zaratûst also

¹ See Yt. XIII, 95.

² So Mêdyômâh was first cousin of Zaratûst, and became his first convert; see also Chap. XXIII, 1.

³ The Pahlavi letters represent Av. dadhvau, 'creator'; compare the Khvârizmian name ددو of the fifteenth day of the month in Sachau's Albîrûnî, p. 57, l. 35. The date here given is the fifteenth of the second month, as in § 1.

⁴ Assuming that rud stands for rûd.

⁵ Probably Anâhita, the female spirit of pure water, mentioned by her title Arêdvisûr in Chap. XVI, 3.

passed on through it; and its first channel was up to the ankle¹, the second up to the knee, the third up to the parting of the two thighs, and the fourth up to the neck. 7. This was an indicator that his religion comes four times to supremacy; the manifestations of which are through Zaratûst, Aûshêdar, Aûshêdar-mâh, and Sôshâns².

8. When he came up from the water, and put on his clothes, he then saw the archangel Vohûmanô³ in the form (âyûtnakô) of a man, handsome, brilliant, and elegant, who wore his hair curve-tailed⁴, because the curved tail is an indication of duality; who had put on and wore a dress like silk, than which there was no making anything superior, for it was light itself; and his height was nine times as much as that of Zaratûst.

9. He also enquired of Zaratûst⁵ thus: 'Who mayst thou be, and from whom of them mayst thou be? also what is mostly thy desire, and the endeavour in thy existence?' 10. And he replied thus: 'I am Zaratûst of the Spîtâmas; among the existences righteousness is more my desire, and my wish is that I may become aware of the will of the sacred beings, and may practise so much righteousness as they exhibit to me in the pure existence.'

11. And Vohûmanô directed Zaratûst⁶ thus: 'Do

¹ Literally 'up to the leg (zang).'

² The past and future apostles of Zoroastrianism. For the last three, see Dk. VII, ix-xi.

³ Compare Dk. VII, iii, 51-54.

⁴ Assuming that vagdumak is a variant of the usual gagdûmak. The scorpion (vagdum) would be a sign of duality, as, being a noxious creature, it was produced by the evil spirit Aharman.

⁵ Compare Dk. VII, iii, 55-59.

⁶ Compare ibid. iii, 60-62.

thou proceed to an assembly of the spirits!’ 12. As much as Vohûmanô walked on in nine steps, Zaratûst did in ninety steps, and when he had gone ninety steps farther than him, he saw the assembly of the seven archangels. 13. When he came within twenty-four feet of the archangels, he then did not see his own shadow on the ground, on account of the great brilliancy of the archangels; the position of the assembly was in Irân, and in the direction of the districts on the bank of the water of the Dâîtth. 14. Zaratûst offered homage, and spoke thus: ‘Homage to Aûharmazd, and homage to the archangels!’ and he went forward and sat down in the seat of the enquirers.

15. As to the asking of questions by Zaratûst, he enquired of Aûharmazd thus: ‘In the embodied world which is the first of the perfect ones, which the second, and which the third?’ 16. And Aûharmazd replied thus: ‘The first perfection is good thoughts, the second good words, and the third good deeds.’

17. Zaratûst also enquired thus: ‘Which thing is good, which is better¹, and which is the best of all habits?’ 18. And Aûharmazd replied thus: ‘The title² of the archangels is good, the sight of them is better, and carrying out their commands is the best of all habits.’

19. Afterwards he demonstrated the duality of the original evolutions (bûn gastânô)³, and the divergence in each control, and spoke thus: ‘Of those spirits, he who was wicked preferred the

¹ Both MSS. have ‘worse’ here.

² This title, ameshaspenta, is ‘immortal benefactor.’

³ The two prime movers in creation.

practice which is iniquitous (Aharman's desire was for the practice which is iniquitous), and the spirit of righteousness, the propitious (Aûharmazd) prefers righteousness¹. 20. Specially he demonstrated the divergence in each control of the exhibitors of light, and he spoke thus: 'Neither our thoughts², nor desires, nor words, nor deeds, nor religion, nor spiritual faculties *agree*³; he who is loving light, his place is with the luminaries; and he who is loving darkness is with the dark ones⁴.'

21. On the same day also, his omniscient wisdom appeared three times: as regards the same first questions, it pointed out the sky in great light and splendour, and in its exhibition of the prevention of darkness, at the sight of which it becomes an opposing existence as regards that darkness. 22. And it exhibited its own appearance proportionally to the sky, when it kept its head at the summit of the sky, its feet at the bottom of the sky, and its hands reached to both sides of the sky; the sky also kept it covered, in the manner of a garment.

23. The six archangels⁵ were manifest by their similar stature (ham-basnîh), in such manner that it is obvious each one successively is apparently one finger's breadth shorter than the other. 24. The archangels exhibited three kinds of achievement

¹ Quoted from Pahl. Yas. XXX, 5 ab. The words in parentheses are glosses inserted by the Pahlavi translator.

² Both MSS. have 'spirits' by inserting a stroke in the middle of the Pahlavi word.

³ An imperfect quotation, omitting glosses, from Pahl. Yas, XLIV, 2 cde (Sp.).

⁴ A similar idea is expressed in Vd. XIX, 30, but the Pahlavi version of half of it is lost, ⁵ Apart from Aûharmazd, their president.

(pasâkhtan)¹ for the religion; first, by means of fires, and Zaratûst walked three steps on them, with the words, 'good thoughts, good words, and good deeds,' and was not burnt; and secondly, hot metal is poured on to his chest, cooled thereby, and, grasping it with his hand, he held it for the archangels. 25. Aûharmazd spoke thus: 'After the establishment of the pure religion, when a dispute occurs in the religion, those who are thy disciples will pour it on to a spiritual lord, they will take it up with the hand, and will thoroughly believe in him who is over the whole embodied existence.' 26. The third was cutting with a knife, and the vital parts (ahvôn) becoming visible, which are inside the abdomen, with a flowing forth of blood; and, after the hands are rubbed over it, it became healed. 27. And this is pointed out, namely: 'Thy and thy correlative religionists' accepting of the pure religion is, as to the steadfast in other religions, such that, through such-like burning of fire, pouring of hot metal, and through an operation with a sharp instrument, there is no perversion from the good religion.'

CHAPTER XXII.

1. About the seven questionings (7-frasnôth), with reference to religion, of the seven archangels, which occurred in seven places².

2. For the occurrence of the first questioning³, that of Aûharmazd, the person of Zaratûst, who was

¹ By way of ordeal, a relic of the old faith in incantation.

² Compare Dk. VIII, xiv, 5, 6, 9.

³ This has been narrated in the preceding chapter.

the upholder of Aûharmazd, came out to a conference on the bank of the water of Dâtîh¹.

3. For the occurrence of the second, which is Vohûmanô's, five animals out of the five species² which are the worldly tokens of Vohûmanô, have come with Zaratûst to a conference on Hûgar and Aûsind³; and on that day also, before their coming out to the conference, their tongues are fully liberated and spoke with human words. 4. And among the rest⁴ is a fish of one species, Arzuvâ⁵ by name; of those in burrows (khanôlgânô) are the white ermine and white marten; of the flying creatures (vâyan-dagân) is the Karsipt⁶, a bird like a species of water-fowl; of the wide-travellers (farâkhvô-raftârânô) is the hare which is showing wild beasts the way to the water; and of those suitable for grazing (karakô-argânlgân) is the white ass-goat; with human words they also accepted the religion from Aûharmazd. 5. With the chieftainship of the five species they are intrusted, so that the like animals also, with their own voices, and as much as their knowledge is capable, shall recount the powerfulness of the religion.

¹ See Dk. VII, iii, 51, 54.

² These species, which are named in § 4, are those mentioned in the Avesta, Visp. I, 1.

³ Av. Hukairya of Yt. XII, 24, and Us-hindu of Yt. VIII, 32, described in Bd. XII, 5, 6, as two neighbouring mountains, for the pure water of Arêdvisûr falls from the summit of Hûgar to Aûsind which stands in the circumambient ocean.

⁴ The remainder of K 35, the MS. brought by Westergaard from Kirmân, is lost; but an old copy of it (BK, see the Introduction) exists in Bombay, which supplies the missing text, as an authority independent of T.

⁵ See Bd. XIV, 26; apparently the same as the Ariz, or Kar, the chief of fish, ibid. XVIII, 3, 5; XXIV, 13.

⁶ See Bd. XIV, 23; XIX, 16; XXIV, 11.

6. And freedom from assault, exemption from persecution, and proper maintenance of the five species of animals, were prescribed by him ¹ to Zaratûst with seemingly very awful admonition.

7. For the occurrence of the third questioning, which is Ardavahistô's, the spirits of the fires have come out with Zaratûst to a conference at the Tôgân water ²; and, in that questioning, care for the proper maintenance of the Varahrân fire ³, and the propitiation of all fires, is explained to him.

8. For the occurrence of the fourth questioning, which is Shatvêr's, the spirits of the metals have come with Zaratûst to a conference at Sarâî ⁴, a settlement on the Mîvân ⁴; and he was fully admonished about various proper preservations of the metals, and as to not producing warlike accoutrements of gold.

9. For the occurrence of the fifth questioning, which is Spendarmad's, the spirits of the regions, frontiers, stations (aûstâmân), settlements (rûdastâkân), and districts, as many as were desirable, have come out with Zaratûst to a conference where there is a spring (khânîgô-aê) which comes out from the Asnavad mountain ⁵, and goes into the Dâitîh, like those of Satavês who is blowing the Pâîrîgs ⁶. 10. And Zaratûst was also thus ad-

¹ By Vohûmanô, as the protector of useful animals.

² Possibly the Tegend river, the Zend or Zôndak of Bd. XX, 7, 15.

³ The Bahrâm, or sacred fire at places of worship.

⁴ Names not clearly identified, and readings uncertain.

⁵ In Âtûr-pâtakân, and the Gûsnasp, fire was established upon it (see Bd. XII, 2, 26; XVII, 7).

⁶ Pahl. 'Satavês-i Pâîrîg damânô ânô kîgûn.' Referring probably to Yt. VIII, 8, 9. Satavês is the southern chieftain of the stars, as correctly stated in the Irânian Bûndahis (compare Bd. II, 7; XIII, 12); and the Pâîrîgs are meteors.

monished by her, about the care and propitiation of the earth: that each district is to be intrusted to a faithful testifier (gôkâs-i vâvar), each settlement to a judge acquainted with the law, each station to an officiating priest (magôpatô) of just intentions, and each frontier to a pure priestly authority (radô); over all is proclaimed the councillor of the spirits, the supreme priest (magôpatânô magôpatô), and through him the sovereignty of Aûhar mazd is provided.

11. For the occurrence of the sixth questioning, which is Khûrdad's, the spirits of seas and rivers have come with Zaratûst to a conference at the Asnavad mountain¹, and he was told about the care and propitiation of water.

12. For the occurrence of the seventh questioning, which is Amûrdad's, the spirits of plants have come out with Zaratûst to a conference on the precipitous bank of the *Darega*², on the bank (bâr) of the water of Dâtîth, and different places; and he was informed about the care and propitiation of plants.

13. The seven questionings are explained within the length of these winters, which are of five months, and within ten years³.

¹ See § 9.

² Pahl. 'pavan Daregân zbâr' = Av. 'Dregya paiti zbarahi' of Vd. XIX, 4; a mythical river in Aîrân-vêg, where Pôrûshaspô resided (Bd. XX, 32).

³ The Pahlavi is rather vague, but it is clear that Zaratûst starts for his conference at thirty years of age (Chap. XXI, 1), returns from it ten years later (Chap. XXIII, 1), and the conversion of Vistâsp occupies two years longer (Chap. XXIII, 5), occurring when Zaratûst was forty-two years old and thirty-five years before his passing away at the age of seventy-seven (Chap. XXIII, 9).

At this point another dislocation of text occurs in all existing

CHAPTER XXIII.

1. On the completion of revelation, that is, at the end of the ten years, Mēdyômâh, son of Ârâstâl, became faithful to Zaratûst.

2. Afterwards, on having obtained his requests¹, he came back to the conference of Aûharmazd, and he spoke thus: 'In ten years only one man has been attracted by me.' 3. And Aûharmazd spoke thus: 'There will be days when so few are not attracted by you, who are themselves the occasion of the resurrection of the world; when, apart from Dahâk², the beneficence of the formation of the renovation of the universe attracts every one besides, and the impenitence of Dahâk is destroyed.'

4. When he came out from the presence of Aûharmazd, with the same paradox, he thereby indicated his religion as complete to Spendarmad through his intelligence.

5. In the two years after that³, the Kavigs and MSS., owing to the accidental interpolation of three loose folios of another text, between this chapter and the next, in some unknown copy written before 1530. In the MSS. the text is written continuously, without division into chapters. But the connection of this chapter with the next one, which is here restored to its proper position, is clearly shown by the reference to the 'ten years' of conference, with which this chapter ends, and the next one begins. The accidentally interpolated text is here classified as Chaps. XXIV and XXV, but its real connections have not yet been traced.

¹ That is, the replies of the archangels to his enquiries.

² See Dk. VII, i, 26. He was chained by Frêdûn in Mount Dimâvand, to escape in the latter days, to be slain by Keresâsp, and to be specially punished at the resurrection (Bd. XII, 31; XXX, 16; Byt. III, 55-61).

³ See Dk. VII, iv, 2.

Karaps of Vistâsp, in the manner of opponents (hamêstarânîh), propounded thirty-three enquiries (khvâstakö)¹ to him, so that by command of Vistâsp he became the explainer of those thirty-three enquiries. 6. Of the thirty-three habits² of iniquity, come for opposition to the religion of the sacred beings; of the declaration, by revelation, of those thirty-three indications of fetters³; and of the restraint of the thirty-three iniquitous practices by the thirty-three best good works, there are statements in revelation. 7. Including the acceptance of the religion by Vistâsp from Zaratûst, after the redemonstration of its judicially multiform prophecy and spiritual character, which are looked into through the evidence of three speakers about them, the archangels who, with worldly manifestation, have become apparent unto Vistâsp and his councillors and mighty ones; they are Vohûmanô, Arda-vahistô, and the Bûrzîn-Mitrô fire⁴.

8. About the reward which existed before the beneficence of Zaratûst, and its being seen how, through guidance by Aûharmazd, it is demonstrated by him to those of the world, so that Mêdyômâh is attracted in the tenth year in the forest of reedy hollows (kanyâstânö⁵ vêsakö) which is the haunt of swine of the wild-boar species (khazûrâ-î varâzö gâs); in the twentieth year the Kavîg who is son

¹ See Dk. VII, iv, 67.

² Reading sôn = Pers. sân; but the MSS. have dênô, 'religions.' The thirty sins and thirty-three good works, detailed in Mkh. XXXVI, XXXVII, are certainly referred to at the end of this section.

³ Compare Chap. XII, 5, and Dk. VII, iv, 67.

⁴ See Dk. VII, iv, 74.

⁵ Hybrid Zvâris of Pers. nayistân.

of Kûndah¹ is attracted; in the thirtieth year the Khyôns² arrive, who make an incursion (vardakö) into the countries of Irân, owing to the Kavîgs, those who are more of their own race; and in the fortieth year Vohûnêm, son of Avarôstar³, is born.

9. In the forty-seventh year Zaratûst passes away, who attains seventy-seven years and forty days in the month Ardavahistô, on the day Khûr⁴; and for eight rectified (vêhikakö) months, till the month Dadvô and day Khûr, he should be brought forward as to be revered.

10. In the same month Ardavahistô, in the sixty-third⁵ year, Frashôstar⁶ passed away, and in the sixty-fourth year Gâmâsp⁷, the same as became the priest of priests after Zaratûst; in the seventy-third year Hangâûrûsh, son of Gâmâsp⁸; in the eightieth year Asmôk-khanvatô⁹, and also in the eightieth

¹ Or Kûnîh which is the name of a demon (see Sg. XVI, 13, 16, 18, 19); but such an identification is uncertain.

² Av. Hvyaona of Yt. IX, 30, 31; XVII, 50, 51. Compare Dk. VII, iv, 77, 83, 84, 87-90; v, 7.

³ Av. gen. 'Vohu-nemang,hô Avâraostrôis' of Yt. XIII, 104.

⁴ The eleventh day of the second month.

⁵ T has 43d, and the date is lost in the other MS. authority. But 43d is highly improbable for two reasons: first, it would make this date the only one out of chronological order in the series here given; secondly, it would render it inconsistent with the statement, in Dk. VII, vi, 12, that two priests came, from other regions, to ask Frashôstar about the religion, fifty-seven years after it had been accepted by Zaratûst. By substituting 63d (the Pahlavi cipher most likely to be corrupted into 43d) both these inconsistencies are removed.

⁶ See Dk. VII, vi, 12; V, ii, 12.

⁷ See Dk. V, ii, 12; iii, 4.

⁸ Av. gen. 'Hang,haurushô Gâmâspanahê' of Yt. XIII, 104.

⁹ Av. gen. 'Asmô-hvanvatô' of Yt. XIII, 96, and Westergaard's Yt. XXII, 37.

year Kabad-ûs-spâê¹, who is called also Akht the wizard, is killed.

11. Of the six great upholders of the religion there are the two daughters of Zaratûst, whose names are Frênö and Sritö², with Aharûbö-stôtö, son of Mêdyômâh³, and another three, who are renowned for their religion for a hundred years, who are Vohûnêm⁴ that is born in the fortieth year of the religion, Sênô⁵ is afterwards born and passes away in the two-hundredth year, and as to his hundred-discipledom⁶, it exists day and night till the three-hundredth year. 12. Afterwards the religion is disturbed and the monarchy is contested (gangt-aîtö).

13. About the three customs (dâdö) which Zaratûst prescribed as the best:—The first of them is this: 'Do not go without others, except with magisterial authority (apatkâr radîhâ);' the second is: 'Though they shall proceed unlawfully as to you, consider your actions lawfully beforehand;' and the third is: 'Next-of-kin marriage, for the ¹ As kabad is Zvâris for 'many,' we may assume that kabad-ûs = Av. nom. pourus which usually becomes pouru in compounds; so that the compound name, or title, in the text, probably represents Av. Pouruspâdha (Yt. X, 109, 111), 'having many troops,' a suitable title for Akht the wizard (Av. Akhtya of Yt. V, 82) who is said, in Gf. I, 2, to have invaded a district with an army of seven myriads. He was killed, in Zoroastrian fashion, by the recital of a religious formula.

² There was a third daughter, Pôrukîst (see Bd. XXXII, 5), but she may not have survived her father.

³ Av. gen. 'Ashastvô Maidhyôî-maung,hôis' of Yt. XIII, 106.

⁴ See § 8.

⁵ He was born in the 100th year; see Dk. VII, vii, 6.

⁶ This seems to be the sixth upholder of the religion, the third of those lasting about a century.

sake of the pure progress of your race, is the best of the actions of the living, which are provided for the proper begetting of children ¹.'

CHAPTER XXIV.

1. About the five dispositions of priests, and the ten admonitions with which all instruction as to religion is connected ².

2. Of those five dispositions the first is innocence.

3. The second is discrimination among³ thoughts, words, and deeds; [to fully distinguish the particulars of destruction from indestructiveness, such as

¹ This chapter ends the first series of Selections of Zâd-spāram, and is immediately followed in the MSS. by a second series. It is evident from the extent of this chapter, as compared with the amount of text contained in the three misplaced folios (see p. 162, n. 3), that this chapter could have occupied only about one folio and a half in the dislocated MS., so that the second series must have commenced on the same folio as contained the end of this chapter, and that Chaps. XXIV, XXV cannot have belonged to this series. The three misplaced folios contain two distinct texts; the first (Chap. XXIV) is an Irânian version of the Five Dispositions of priests and the Ten Admonitions, and is here translated; the second (Chap. XXV) contains some details about the Nasks and Gâthas, and has been already translated in S.B.E., vol. xxxvii, pp. 401-405.

² This Irânian version of the Dispositions and Admonitions is more complete than the Indian version, which, like the Bundahis, was brought from Irân five or six centuries ago, and is found in two MSS. (Pt. and J) written in India about 500 years ago, and now in the libraries of Dastûrs Dr. Peshotan and Dr. Jâmâsp, respectively. Passages which occur only in the Irânian version are here enclosed in brackets, and other differences between the two versions are mentioned in the notes.

³ The Indian version has 'of.'

noxious creatures from cattle ; and of production from unproductiveness, such as the righteous and worthy from the wicked and unworthy].

4. The third is authoritativeness, because that priestly master is always wiser and speaking more correctly who is taught wisely and teaches with more correct words.

5. The fourth is to¹ [understand and consider the ceremonial as the ceremonial of Aûharmazd, and the essentials with all goodness, beneficence, and authority; to be steadfast in his religion, and to consider the indications of protection (sâyag)² which are established for his religion. 6. To maintain the reverence of the luminaries prayerfully, also the reverence of the emanations³ from the six⁴ archangels, be they fire, be they earth, or be they of bodily form, and of the creatures which are formed by them ; also the pure cleansing from dead matter, menstruation, bodily refuse, and other hurtfulness ; this is in order that they may be characterised, and thereby constituted, as better-principled, more sensible⁵, and purer, and they may become less faulty. 7. The reverence of mankind is to consider authoritatively about knowledge and property ; the reverence of cattle is about fodder, little hardship, and moderate maintenance ; the reverence of plants is about sowing and ripening for the food of the worthy. 8. The ceremonial which is glorifying all

¹ Ind. vers. has only: 'to celebrate the ceremonial of the sacred beings with the correct words, inward prayers, and complete mastery of the text (narm-nasgîhâ) in the ritual.' It omits §§ 6-8 altogether.

² T has 'limit (kûstak).'

³ T has 'issue.'

⁴ T has 'seven.'

⁵ Or 'more fragrant ;' hû-bôdtar has both meanings.

the sacred beings, praises the luminaries and worldly creations improperly, and is antagonistic to them, because complete glorification is proper through complete recitation of the ritual; and the ceremonial of any one whatever is his own proper duty professionally, so long as it is possible to keep proceeding with very little sinfulness].

9. The fifth is to struggle prayerfully¹, day and night, with your own fiend², and all life long not to depart from steadfastness, nor allow your proper duty³ to go out of your hands.

10. And the first of those ten admonitions is to proceed with good repute, for the sake of occasioning approving remarks *as to*⁴ the good repute of your own guardian and teacher, high-priest and master⁵.

11. The second is to become awfully refraining from evil repute, for the sake of evil repute not occurring to relations and guardians.

12. The third is not to beat your own teacher with a snatched-up stick, and not to bring scandal upon his name, for the sake of annoying him, by uttering that which was not heard from your own teacher.

13. The fourth is that whatever is taught liberally by your own teacher, you have to deliver back to the worthy, for the sake of not extorting a declaration of renown from the righteous⁶.

14. The fifth is that the reward of doers of good

¹ Ind. vers. has: 'to remain in diligence intelligently.'

² Ind. vers. has: 'opponent.'

³ Ind. vers. has: 'steadfastness in religion, and to be diligent in your proper duty.' But it omits the rest of the sentence.

⁴ Ind. vers. has: 'for the sake of the appropriateness of.'

⁵ Or 'father.'

⁶ T has: 'not extracting the purity of the righteous.'

works and the punishment of criminals have to be established by law, for the sake of progress¹.

15. The sixth is to keep the way of the good open to your house, for the sake of making² righteousness welcome in your own abode.

16. The seventh is that, for the sake of not developing the fiend insensibly in your reason, you are not to keep it with the religion of the good³, nor to remain in impenitence of sin.

17. The eighth⁴ is that, for the sake of severing the fiend from the reason, you have to force malice away from your thoughts, and to become quickly repentant of sin.

18. The ninth is to fully understand the forward movement⁵ of the religion, also to keep the advancing of the religion further forwards, and to seek your share of duty therein; and on a backward movement, when adversity happens to the religion, to have the religion back again, and to keep your body in the continence (makavadîh) of religion.

19. The tenth is that there is to be a period of obedience (Srôshdârîh) towards the ruler and priestly authority, the high-priesthood of the religious⁶.

¹ Ind. vers. adds: 'of religion.'

² Ind. vers. inserts: 'a token of;,' and T has: 'making the righteousness of the sacred beings in writing welcome.'

³ Ind. vers. has: 'not to maintain malice with the good,' which is more probable, and kênô, 'malice,' is easily corrupted into dênô, 'religion,' in Pahlavi writing.

⁴ This eighth admonition is omitted in the Irânian MSS.

⁵ Ind. vers. adds: 'and backward movement.'

⁶ Chapter XXV, about the three divisions of revelation, is translated in S. B. E., vol. xxxvii, pp. 401-405.

INDEX.

OBSERVATIONS.

1. The references, in this index, are to books, chapters, and sections ; the chapters being denoted by the larger ciphers.

2. Though different forms of the same name may occur in the text, only one form is usually given in the index, to which the references to all forms are attached ; except when the forms differ so much as to be widely separated in the index.

3. Pâzand forms are printed in italics, as their orthography is usually corrupt. In all such italicised names any letters which would elsewhere be italic are printed in roman type.

4. Abbreviations used are :—Av. for Avesta, Dk. for Dînkard, Int. for Introduction, m. for mountain, meas. for measure, MS. for manuscript, n. for footnote, Pahl. for Pahlavi, patron. for patronymic, r. for river, Zs. for Selections of Zâd-spâram.

INDEX.

- Abâliş, heretic, Dk. V, 1, 2 n.
 Âbân, month, Int. 87.
 Aeshm, demon, Dk. VII, 1, 18; 4, 87, 88; 7, 7.
 Aêvatâk, r., Dk. VII, 3, 51.
 Agash, demon, Dk. VII, 4, 12.
 Aharişvang, angel, Dk. VII, 7, 12.
 Aharman, demon, Int. 13, 29; Dk. VII, 11, 7; V, 2, 6; Zs. 14, 6, 8; 21, 8 n, 19.
 Aharûbô-stôtô, man, Zs. 23, 11.
 Ahunavair, Int. 16, 30, 48, 49; Dk. VII, 1, 12, 13; 4, 38, 42, 45, 80.
 Ahûrvadâspô, man, Zs. 13, 6.
 Âîrân-vêg, land, Dk. VII, 2, 30 n; 8, 60; 9, 23.
 Âîrîk, man, Dk. VII, 2, 70; Zs. 13, 6;—prince, Dk. VII, 1, 28-30; 2, 70; V, 4, 3; Zs. 13, 6.
Airyak, man, Dk. VII, 2, 70; Zs. 13, 6.
 Âiryêfshnîg, man, Dk. VII, 1, 34 n.
 Âiryêfshvâ, man, Dk. VII, 1, 34.
 Akhrê-khiradô, prince, Dk. V, 3, 3.
 Akht, wizard, Int. 55; Zs. 23, 10.
 Akômanô, demon, Zs. 14, 8-11.
 Akvân, Christian priest, Dk. VII, 7, 11 n.
 Alâk or Arâk, district, Dk. VII, 2, 9.
 Albîrûnî, Int. 74, 86-88.
 Albûrz, m., Zs. 20, 4 n.
 Ameshaspentas, Int. 89.
 Amûrdad, angel, Dk. VII, 2, 19; 5, 9; Zs. 22, 12.
 Anâhita, angel, Zs. 21, 5 n.
Anang, bad, man, Dk. VII, 2, 70; Zs. 13, 6.
 Anêrân, day, Zs. 21, 1.
 Aôshnar, priest, Int. 3; Dk. VII, 1, 36.
 Arabs, Int. 10; Dk. VII, 1, 34; 8, 47.
 Arab victories, Int. 61.
 Arag, land, Zs. 20, 4.
 Arang, r., Zs. 20, 4 n.
 Arang, woman, Dk. VII, 8, 55; 9, 18; 10, 15.
 Ârâstâi, man, Zs. 21, 3; 23, 1.
 Archangels, Int. 4, 10, 11, 15, 18, 19, 29, 35, 48, 49, 55, 61; Dk. VII, 1, 4, 7, 12, 13, 34; 2, 16, 18, 21, 22, 34, 39, 54; 3, 51; 4, 5, 22, 26, 75, 76, 80, 83; 5, 12; 6, 5, 13; 7, 19, 20; 8, 5, 26 n, 60; 9, 23; V, 2, 1, 12; Zs. 17, 5; 21, 8, 12-14, 18, 23, 24; 22, 1; 23, 2 n, 7.
 Archdemons, Int. 4, 29.
 Ardâi-fravard, angel, Zs. 16, 3.
 Ardashîr the Sāsānian, Int. 43, 57, 58, 62, 88.
 Ardavahistô, angel, Int. 41; Dk. VII, 2, 19, 29; Zs. 22, 7; 23, 7; month, Zs. 21, 4; 23, 9, 10.
 Arêdvisûr, angel, Zs. 16, 3; 21, 5 n.
 Aregad-aspa, king, Int. 30.
Aregadbarsn, man, Dk. VII, 2, 70; Zs. 13, 6.
 Aresh, demon, Int. 29.
 Arezrâspô, priest, Dk. VII, 6, 12.
 Arezvâk, priest, Dk. VII, 7, 8-11.
 Argâsp, king, Int. 7, 29, 55; Dk. VII, 4, 77, 83, 84, 87-89; 5, 7; V, 2, 12 n; 3, 1.
 Aristotle, Int. 71.
 Ariyârâmma, ruler, Int. 70.
 Ariz, fish, Zs. 22, 4 n.
 Armenian revolt, Int. 61.
 Arshâma, ruler, Int. 70.
 Artakhshatar, king, Int. 9; Dk. VII, 7, 12; V, 3, 3.
 Arûm = Asia Minor, Dk. V, 1, 5.
 Arûman, nation, Dk. VII, 8, 47.
 Arzuva, fish, Zs. 22, 4.
 Ashavahistô, angel, Int. 11, 48, 55; Dk. VII, 1, 34; 2, 17, 18, 24, 25; 4, 74, 75, 78, 84-86; 8, 5 n; 9, 8; V, 2, 9.
 Ashem-vohû, Int. 49; Dk. VII, 4, 80 n.

- Ashir-vanguhi, angel, Dk. VII, 4, 81 n.
- Askânian, dynasty, Int. 43, 57.
- Asnavad, m., Zs. 22, 9, 11.
- Āspigân, patron., Dk. VII, 1, 25; 2, 70; V, 4, 3; Zs. 13, 6.
- Assyria, land, Dk. V, 4, 3 n.
- Atossa, queen, Dk. VII, 4, 86 n.
- Ātûr, land, Dk. V, 4, 3.
- Ātûr-farnbag, priest, Int. 14; Dk. V, 1, 2, 3.
- Ātûrpâd, priest, Int. 9, 64-67, 70, 88; Dk. VII, 5, 5; 7, 19-21; V, 3, 3.
- Ātûrpâdakân, land, Zs. 16, 12; 22, 9 n.
- Aûharmazd, Int. 4-6, 18, 29, 30, 47, 48; Dk. VII, 1, 1, 2, 4, 5, 9-13, 17, 20-22, 38, 41, 42, 44, 46; 2, 2, 3, 14, 17-19, 31, 37, 47, 54; 3, 1, 48, 49, 51; 4, 2, 12, 14, 16, 17, 21-27, 30, 41, 47-49, 51-54, 65, 66, 74, 75, 77, 80, 84-86; 5, 12; 6, 5, 13; 7, 15; 8, 16 n, 24, 25, 29, 33, 38-43, 50, 52, 54; 9, 15, 17; 10, 12, 14; 11, 6, 11; V, 1, 1; 2, 6, 8, 10, 12, 15; 4, 6; Zs. 12, 2, 8; 13, 5, 6; 14, 4, 9, 14, 15; 15, 7; 16, 3; 21, 14-16, 18, 19, 23 n, 25; 22, 2, 4, 10; 23, 2-4, 8; 24, 5.
- king, Int. 64.
- Auramazdâ, Int. 84.
- Aurvadaspa, king, Int. 70.
- Āurvâtâ-dang, king, Int. 6, 47, 49, 55; Dk. VII, 4, 7-10, 14-16, 20.
- Āurvâtô-dih, king, Zs. 20, 8.
- Āûshân-rûd, r., Dk. VII, 3, 54.
- Āûshêdar, apostle, Int. 10, 11, 55, 61, 63, 66-68; Dk. VII, 1, 42, 51, 52; 4, 81 n; 8, 1, 31, 51, 55; 9, 1, 2; 10, 1; V, 2, 15; 3, 3; Zs. 21, 7.
- Āûshêdar-mâh, apostle, Int. 11, 12, 55; Dk. VII, 1, 42, 52, 53; 9, 1, 18; 10, 1, 2; 11, 1, 2; V, 2, 15; 3, 3; Zs. 21, 7.
- Āûsikshh, Int. 16; Zs. 15, 2.
- Āûsind, m., Zs. 22, 3.
- Āûzôbb, king, Int. 55; Dk. VII, 1, 31; 6, 11 n; V, 4, 4 n.
- Āwân, angel, Zs. 21, 5.
- Avarethrabau, priest, Int. 9, 64, 70; Dk. VII, 7, 20, 21.
- Avarôtar, man, Zs. 23, 8.
- Avesta, Int. 7, 30, 36, 37, 42, 49, 55, 64, 70, 78, 90; Dk. VII, 1, 44; 4, 63; 5, 11; 6, 13, 14; 7, 5, 38, 39; 8, 2, 10, 22, 36; V, 2, 6; 4, 6.
- Avesta scholars, Int. 78, 79, 90.
- Avestic rites, Dk. VII, 7, 2.
- Avirafshanêg, man, Dk. VII, 1, 34 n.
- Āyang, bad, man, Dk. VII, 2, 70; Zs. 13, 6.
- Āyazem, man, Dk. VII, 2, 70 n; Zs. 13, 6.
- Az-i Dahâk, king, Dk. VII, 11, 3.
- Babylon, Dk. VII, 4, 72, n.
- Bactria, Int. 74.
- Bahman, angel, Int. 41, 43.
- Bahman Yast, MS., Int. 44.
- Bahrâm Gôr, king, Int. 43.
- Bahrâm-i Hamâvand, king, Int. 43.
- Bahrâm Khûrzâd, copyist, Dk. VII, 7, 14 n.
- Bakyîr, m., Dk. VII, 1, 39 n.
- Bâpêl, city, Int. 50; Dk. VII, 4, 72; V, 2, 9.
- Bartârûsh, karap, Int. 34, 35; Dk. VII, 5, 12 n.
- Barzînkârûs, man, Int. 34.
- Barzû Kâmdîn, dastûr, Int. 32.
- Behistûn inscription, Int. 70, 84.
- Bêtâ-Makdis = Jerusalem, Dk. V, 1, 5.
- Bitak, man, Dk. VII, 2, 70; Zs. 13, 6.
- Bôr-tôrâ, man, Dk. VII, 2, 70.
- Brâd-rêsh = Brâdrôk-rêsh, Int. 29; Zs. 15, 3.
- Brâdrôk-rêsh, karap, Int. 49; Dk. VII, 2, 9 n; 3, 20, 24, 28, 32, 39 n; 5, 12 n; V, 3, 2.
- Brâd-rôyisn, karap, Zs. 15, 3.
- Brâd-rukshh, karap, Zs. 15, 3; 17, 6.
- Bûd, demon, Dk. VII, 4, 37, 38.
- Buddha, Int. 78.
- Bûkht-Narsîh = Nebuchadnezzar, Int. 14; Dk. V, 1, 4, 5.
- Bundahis, MS., Int. 15, 53-59, 61, 62, 68, 69.
- Bûrzîn-Mitrô, fire, Zs. 23, 7.
- Cambyes, king, Dk. VII, 4, 86 n.
- Ch in Oriental words is printed K.
- Christian persecution, Int. 63, 65.
- Chronology, Int. 51-89.
- Creator, Dk. VII, 1, 4-6, 8, 10, 11, 15, 19, 21, 24, 25, 28, 41; 2, 2;

- 3, 61; 4, 2, 12, 41, 74, 75, 84, 85; 5, 12; 9, 6; 11, 6; V, 1, 1, 9; 2, 1; 4, 6.
- Dâdistân-i Dînîk, MS., Int. 24; Zs. 12, o n.
- Dadvô, month, Zs. 23, 9.
- Dadvô-pavan-Mitrô, day, Zs. 21, 4.
- Dahâk, king, Int. 12, 50, 55; Dk. VII, 1, 26, 34 n; 4, 72; 10, 10; V, 3, 3; Zs. 12, 13 n; 23, 3.
- Dâhmân Âlîrîn, ritual, Int. 11; Dk. VII, 9, 3.
- Dâit, r., Dk. VII, 2, 30.
- Dâitî, r., Int. 5, 18; Dk. VII, 3, 51, 54; 4, 29; 8, 60; 9, 23; Zs. 21, 5, 13; 22, 2, 9, 12.
- Dârâi, king, Int. 54, 55.
- Darega, r., Int. 29; Zs. 22, 12.
- Darius Hystaspes, Int. 70, 79, 84, 88, 89; Dk. VII, 4, 86 n.
- Darmesteter's hypothesis, Int. 89, 90.
- Darun, rite, Int. 42.
- Davâns, man, Int. 29.
- Demons, Int. 30, 36, 48, 49; Dk. VII, 1, 9, 12, 13, 18, 19, 34; 2, 6, 9, 10, 43, 45, 48-50, 53, 60, 66-68; 3, 47, 50; 4, 4, 5, 14, 33-35, 40, 42, 44-48, 50, 52-54, 63, 80, 87; 5, 8; 6, 7; 7, 14; 8, 46; V, 2, 6, 8, 13; Zs. 14, 2, 5, 6; 17, 4; 18, 1.
- Demon-worship, Int. 50; Dk. VII, 4, 30, 35, 67; 7, 17, 36; V, 1, 5; 2, 4.
- Demon-worshipper, Dk. VII, 1, 36; 7, 37; 8, 7, 34; V, 2, 8.
- Destroyer, Dk. VII, 1, 5, 6; V, 2, 6.
- Dhû Qâr, defeat at, Int. 61.
- Dimâvand, m., Zs. 23, 3 n.
- Dînkard, MS., Int. 1, 2, 21-23; Dk. V, 1, 2 n.
- Diogenes Laertius, Int. 71, 76.
- Dk. V, i-iv, contents, Int. 14.
- Dk. VII, Int. 2; contents, Int. 3-13.
- Dûkâûb, woman, Int. 55; Dk. VII, 2, 35, 41, 42, 46, 47; 3, 3; V, 2, 2; Zs. 13, 1.
- Dûrânsarûn, karap, Int. 34, 35.
- Dûrâsrôbô, karap, Int. 49, 55; Dk. VII, 2, 9 n; 3, 4, 8, 9, 11, 20, 32, 35, 39, 41; 5, 12 n; Zs. 19, 1, 5, 7.
- prince, Dk. VII, 2, 70; Zs. 13, 6; 16, 13.
- Drvê Zênigâk, chief, Dk. VII, 11, 3.
- Eastwick's translation of the Zartust nâmah, Int. 31, 32.
- Êgiptos, land, Zs. 20, 4 n.
- Enclosure made by Yim, Dk. VII, 1, 24.
- Epistle of Mânûsîhar, Int. 25.
- Êrikô, man, Dk. VII, 2, 70 n; Zs. 16, 13.
- Eudoxus, Int. 71.
- Evil spirit, Int. 55; Dk. VII, 1, 19; 2, 67; 4, 36, 39; 8, 47.
- Exposition of the good religion, MS., Int. 2; Dk. VII, 1, 2, 4.
- Farukhzâd, priest, Dk. V, 1, 2, 3.
- Fiend, Int. 13; Dk. VII, 1, 6, 12, 13, 26, 32; 4, 36-39, 55, 57, 59-61; 8, 30, 32; 9, 2; 10, 5; 11, 7; V, 2, 6, 8; Zs. 17, 4.
- Five dispositions of priests, MS., Zs. 24, 1-9.
- Fradadafsh, region, Dk. VII, 6, 12 n.
- Fragûzak*, man, Dk. VII, 2, 70; Zs. 13, 6.
- Frahânyân, patron., Dk. VII, 8, 55; 9, 18; 10, 15.
- Frâhîmravânâ, man, Dk. VII, 2, 3.
- Frâkîh, heretic, Dk. VII, 1, 36.
- Frangrâsîyâk, king, Dk. VII, 1, 31, 39; 2, 69; 11, 3.
- Frashôstar, priest, Int. 29, 30, 55; Dk. VII, 6, 12; V, 2, 12; Zs. 23, 10.
- Frâsiyâv = Frangrâsîyâk, Int. 55; Dk. VII, 1, 39 n; 2, 68; V, 3, 3 n; Zs. 12, 3.
- Fravâk, man, Dk. VII, 2, 70; V, 4, 1, 2; Zs. 13, 6.
- Fravashis, spirits, Int. 30, 55, 72, 75, 77.
- Frazûsak*, man, Dk. VII, 2, 70; Zs. 13, 6.
- Frêdûn, king, Int. 33, 55; Dk. VII, 1, 25, 26, 28, 29, 34 n; 2, 61, 70; 11, 3; V, 1, 8; 4, 3; Zs. 13, 6; 23, 3 n.
- Frênô, woman, Zs. 13, 1; another, 23, 11.
- Frîr, man, Zs. 13, 6.
- Gandarepô, monster, Dk. VII, 1, 32.
- Gâthas quoted, Zs. 15, 7.
- Gaugamela, battle, Int. 54.
- Gâyômarz, man, Int. 3, 55, 77; Dk. VII, 1, 4, 6-9; 2, 70; V, 1, 8; Zs. 13, 6.

- Gêfar-tôrâ, man, Dk. VII, 2, 70.
 Gôbâk-abû, woman, Dk. VII, 10, 15.
 Good works, Dk. VII, 1, 6.
 Gôûrvan, Int. 29.
 Gushnasphâh, king, Dk. VII, 7, 14 n.
 Gûnasp fire, Int. 41; Zs. 22, 9 n.
 Gustâsp, king, Int. 34, 36, 41-43.
Gûzak, princess, Dk. VII, 2, 70; Zs. 13, 6.
 Gyêmarâ, Int. 14; Dk. V, 1, 2, 3; 4, 8.
 Gâmâsp, priest, Int. 29, 30, 42, 55; Dk. VII, 4, 77 n; 6, 12 n; 7, 3 n; V, 2, 12; 3, 4; Zs. 23, 10.
 Hadish, angel, Int. 3, 48; Dk. VII, 1, 12, 13.
 Haêkadâspas, family, Int. 30.
 Haêkadâspô, man, Dk. VII, 2, 70; Zs. 13, 6.
 Hakhâmanîs, ruler, Int. 70.
 Hangâûrûsh, priest, Int. 55; Zs. 23, 10.
 Hânô, septuagenarian, Zs. 20, 4.
 Haoma, angel, Int. 30.
 Haoshyangha, king, Int. 30.
Hardbar, man, Dk. VII, 2, 70; Zs. 13, 6.
 Hâsar of length, Zs. 12, 4.
 — time, Dk. VII, 4, 49.
 Hazân, karap, Zs. 15, 3.
 Hazârâhs, Int. 43.
 Heaven (best existence), Dk. VII, 6, 1, 11.
 — (supreme), Dk. VII, 1, 7, 24.
 Hercules, Dk. VII, 1, 32 n.
 Hermippus, Int. 71.
 Hôrn-juice, Dk. VII, 4, 85; Zs. 20, 15.
 Hôrn plant, Int. 49, 55; Dk. VII, 2, 14, 22, 23, 25, 26, 28-31, 34, 35, 46; 4, 85; Zs. 12, 12, 15; 13, 4; 20, 16; 21, 5.
 Hôrn-strainer, Dk. VII, 4, 85.
 Hôrn-water, Int. 5, 6, 47; Dk. VII, 3, 51, 54; 4, 29, 30, 32, 35.
 Hôshâng, king, Int. 3, 48, 55; Dk. VII, 1, 16, 18; 2, 70; V, 1, 8; 4, 2; Zs. 13, 6.
 Hûgar, m., Zs. 22, 3.
 Hûmâi, queen, Int. 54, 55, 57.
 Hundred-discipledom, Int. 54, 55.
 Hûtôs, queen, Int. 29, 30; Dk. VII, 4, 86; 6, 11 n.
 Hvôbas, tribe, Int. 29; Dk. VII, 6, 12.
 Hvôvi, woman, Dk. VII, 6, 12 n.
 Hvyâonas, nation, Dk. VII, 4, 77 n.
 Hystaspes, king, Int. 70.
 Idolators, Dk. VII, 1, 18 n.
 Idolatry, Int. 50; Dk. VII, 1, 19; 4, 72.
 Idol-temple, Int. 50; Dk. VII, 1, 39.
 India, Int. 43.
 Irân, land, Int. 9, 43, 54; Dk. VII, 1, 30, 31, 33, 38, 50; 2, 62, 68; 4, 42, 81 n, 88, 89; 5, 5, 9; 7, 1, 2, 29, 33, 38, 39; 8, 1, 2, 4, 7-9, 19; 9, 13; V, 1, 5; 4, 1, 3; Zs. 12, 3, 8, 9; 21, 13; 23, 8.
 Irânian, Int. 14; Dk. VII, 2, 63, 70 n; 4, 90; V, 4, 6.
 Irânian Bundahîs, Dk. VII, 1, 34 n; 2, 9 n; 7, 5 n; Zs. 22, 9 n.
 — country, Dk. VII, 1, 37.
 — monarchy, Int. 43.
 Irânians, Int. 11, 14; Dk. VII, 2, 63; 4, 42, 77 n; 8, 16 n; 11, 3 n; V, 3, 1; Zs. 15, 2.
 Îsadvâstar, man, Dk. VII, 8, 55; 9, 18; 10, 15.
 Isfendyâr, prince, Int. 39, 42; Dk. VII, 7, 5 n.
 J in Oriental words is printed G.
 Jerusalem, Int. 14; Dk. V, 1, 2 n.
 Jews, Int. 14; Dk. V, 1, 2 n.
 Kabad-ûr-spâê, wizard, Zs. 23, 10.
 Kaî=Kavig, Dk. VII, 4, 64; 8, 40, 60; 9, 23.
 Kaî-Arsh, prince, Dk. VII, 1, 35.
 Kaî-Kâûs, priest, Int. 32.
 Kaî-Khûsrôî, king, Int. 12, 50, 55; Dk. VII, 1, 39; 10, 10; 11, 3; V, 4, 4 n.
 Kaî-Kobâd, king, Int. 55; Dk. VII, 1, 33; 6, 11 n; V, 4, 4 n.
 Kaî-Loharâsp, king, Int. 14, 55; Dk. V, 1, 5.
 Kaîsar, Int. 27; Dk. VII, 8, 42.
 Kaî-Siyâvakhsh, prince, Dk. VII, 1, 38.
 Kaî-Ûs, king, Int. 3, 15, 55; Dk. VII, 1, 35, 37; 2, 62, 63, 65, 66; 6, 2 n; Zs. 12, 9-11, 14, 15, 17, 20, 21, 23, 24.
 Kaî-Vistâsp, king, Int. 3, 29, 55; Dk. VII, 1, 41, 47, 49; 4, 1, 76, 77, 86; 5, 6; 6, 4, 9, 11; 7, 39; 11, 3; V, 1, 5 n; 2, 8, 11; 3, 1.
 Kangdez, fortress, Int. 7, 10, 43;

- Dk. VII, 1, 38; 4, 81 n; 5, 12; V, 3, 3 n.
 Kanyisâ, lake, Dk. VII, 11, 8.
 Kar, fish, Zs. 22, 4 n.
 Karap, Int. 4-6, 16, 17, 47, 49, 55; Dk. VII, 2, 9, 45; 3, 4, 7-9, 11, 13, 15, 20, 24, 26, 28, 32, 34, 39, 41, 50; 4, 2, 6, 14, 21, 25, 61, 64, 67; 8, 26, 40, 60; 9, 23; 10, 5; V, 2, 3; Zs. 15, 2; 16, 1-4, 6-8; 17, 1; 18, 2, 5, 7; 19, 1; 23, 5.
 Karapans, Int. 30.
 Kardâr-tôrâ, man, Dk. VII, 2, 70.
 Karvîpt, bird, Zs. 22, 4.
 Karsna, man, Dk. VII, 7, 12 n.
 Kavâd, king, Int. 58; Dk. VII, 7, 26.
 Kava Husrava, king, Int. 30, 70.
 — Kavâta, king, Int. 70.
 — Usa, king, Int. 70.
 Kavîg, Int. 4, 55; Dk. VII, 2, 9; 8, 18; Zs. 23, 5, 8.
 Kavis, Int. 30.
 Kavi Vistâspa, king, Int. 30, 70; Dk. VII, 7, 12 n.
 Kayân glory, Dk. VII, 4, 43; 11, 3.
 Kayâns, Int. 3; Dk. VII, 1, 33; 2, 9 n; 7, 12; V, 1, 8; 4, 4, 5.
 Kerêsâspô, hero, Int. 12, 29; Dk. VII, 1, 32; 10, 10; Zs. 23, 3 n.
 Kêrsêvazd, prince, Dk. VII, 1, 39.
 Khâkân, Int. 27; Dk. VII, 8, 42.
 Khalîfah, Al-Mâmûn, Dk. V, 1, 2 n.
 Khûr, day, Zs. 23, 9.
 Khûrdad, angel, Dk. VII, 2, 19, 38; 5, 9; 8, 5 n; Zs. 22, 11.
 Khûrdâd fire, Int. 41.
 Khûsrô I, king, Int. 9, 26, 27, 58, 68; Dk. VII, 7, 26; V, 3, 3.
 — II, king, Int. 58, 61.
 Khvanîras, region, Dk. VII, 1, 26; 2, 70; V, 2, 9.
 Khvêtûkdas, Int. 6, 47, 49; Dk. VII, 4, 4 n.
 Khyôns, nation, Int. 7, 55; Dk. VII, 4, 77, 83, 84, 87-90; 5, 7; V, 3, 1; Zs. 23, 8.
 Kîg, Int. 6, 47, 49; Dk. VII, 2, 9 n; 3, 50; 4, 2, 6, 14, 67; 8, 26; V, 2, 3.
 Kirmân, town, Zs. 12, 0 n.
 Kobâd, king, Dk. VII, 1, 35.
 Kôkharêd, Zs. 15, 2.
 Kûndah, Int. 55; Zs. 23, 8.
 Kûtâl-tôrâ, man, Dk. VII, 2, 70 n.
 Kaispîr, ruler, Int. 70.
 Kêkast, lake, Int. 50; Dk. VII, 1, 39.
 Kêshmak, demon, Dk. VII, 2, 44, 45; 4, 61.
 Kikbîshnus, man, Dk. VII, 2, 70; Zs. 13, 6.
 Kinvad bridge, Zs. 20, 5 n.
 Kîst, Zs. 16, 12.
 Kitradâd nask, Int. 3, 14, 20; Dk. VII, 1, 34 n; 7, 5 n.
 Kitrô-mêhônô, prince, Int. 10; Dk. VII, 8, 45.
 Macedon, Int. 55 n.
 Mâda, land, Dk. VII, 1, 26.
 Mâdigân-î Gugastak Abâlis, MS., Dk. V, 1, 2 n.
 Mahrkûs, wizard, Int. 11, 55; Dk. VII, 1, 24; 9, 3; V, 3, 3.
 Maidhyôzaremayâ, festival, Int. 18; Zs. 21, 1 n.
 Mânih, heretic, Dk. VII, 7, 21 n; V, 3, 3.
 Mânûrak, princess, Zs. 15, 2.
 Mânûsir, for Mânûsîhar, Dk. VII, 1, 29 n.
 Mânûs-khûrnâk, man, Dk. VII, 2, 70; V, 4, 3; Zs. 13, 6.
 Mânûs-khûrnar, man, Dk. VII, 2, 70; V, 4, 3; Zs. 13, 6.
 Mânûsîhar, king, Int. 15, 16, 55; Dk. VII, 1, 29-31; 2, 51 n, 70; 6, 11 n; 7, 21; V, 1, 8; 4, 3; Zs. 12, 3; 13, 6; 15, 2; 16, 13.
 Mâraspend, priest, Int. 64, 88; Dk. VII, 5, 5; 7, 19, 20.
 Marvels of Zoroastrianism, Int. 1.
 Marvâk, man, Dk. VII, 6, 11 n.
 Masyâôî, woman, Int. 48, 55; Dk. VII, 1, 9, 12-14.
 Masyê, man, Int. 48, 55; Dk. VII, 1, 9, 11-14; 2, 70; V, 1, 8; 4, 1 n; Zs. 13, 6.
 Mâzandar, land, Dk. VII, 1, 26.
 Mâzandarân, land, Dk. VII, 1, 18 n.
 Mâzanô, demons of, Dk. VII, 1, 18.
 Mazda, Dk. VII, 9, 7-10.
 Mazdag, heretic, Int. 26, 43; Dk. VII, 7, 21, 26 n.
 Mazdakites, sect, Int. 58.
 Mazda-worship, Int. 15, 49; Dk. VII, 1, 1, 2, 4, 41, 43, 44; 3, 35 n; 4, 2, 5, 14, 33, 34, 74, 79; 6, 4, 12 n; V, 1, 1.
 Mazda-worshippers, Dk. VII, 7, 5, 6, 9, 10, 23; 8, 28, 35, 51; 9, 2, 7, 8, 10, 11, 13, 14; 10, 4, 6, 11; 11, 8-10; Zs. 12, 2, 4.

- Mêdyômâh, man, Int. 18, 19, 29, 30, 55; Zs. 21, 3; 23, 1, 8, 11.
 Messiah, Dk. V, 3, 3.
 Millennial apostles, Int. 3.
 Misr, land, Zs. 20, 4 n.
 Mivân, river (?), Zs. 22, 8.
 Mûrdað, angel, Dk. VII, 2, 38.
 Nâmkhvâst of the Hazârs, Dk. VII, 4, 77 n.
 Nasks, Int. 64.
Nayâzem, man, Dk. VII, 2, 70.
 Nebuchadnezzar, king, Int. 14; Dk. V, 1, 2 n.
 Nêresang, for Nêryôsang, Dk. VII, 1, 29 n.
 Nêrôksang, for Nêryôsang, Dk. VII, 2, 21 n, 70; 4, 84 n.
 Nêryôsang, angel, Dk. VII, 1, 29; 2, 21; 4, 84, 85; V, 4, 6; Zs. 13, 5, 6.
 Nêvak-tôrâ, man, Dk. VII, 2, 70.
 Next-of-kin marriage, Dk. VII, 1, 10; 4, 5, 6, 8, 11; Zs. 23, 13.
 Ninus, king, Int. 71, 74.
 Nîrangistân, MS., Zs. 13, 4 n.
 Nîvêdir, man, Zs. 15, 5.
 Nôdar, man, Int. 17; Dk. VII, 2, 51; 3, 19, 39; 4, 86 n; 6, 11 n; Zs. 16, 11-13.
 Nôdarigâ, man, Zs. 15, 5.
 Nôdars, tribe, Dk. VII, 6, 11.
 Non-Îrânian, Dk. VII, 9, 13.
 Nôshêrvân, king, Int. 43.
 Numûdârih-i Yazisnô, MS., Zs. 13, 4.
 Oldest dates explained, Int. 72.
 Ordeal, Int. 7, 18, 64, 65; Dk. VII, 5, 4, 5; 7, 2; Zs. 21, 24-27.
 Osthane, Int. 73.
 Ox, frontier-settling, Dk. VII, 2, 62-66; Zs. 12, 8-25.
 — sole-created, Int. 55, 77; Dk. VII, 2, 67.
 Oxyartes, king, Int. 74.
 Padashkhvârgar, land, Dk. VII, 7, 14 n.
 Paðiragtarâspô, man, Dk. VII, 2, 9, 10, 13, 70.
Paêtrasp=Paitiraspo, man, Dk. VII, 2, 70; Zs. 13, 6.
 Pâirigs, meteors, Zs. 22, 9.
 Pâpak, prince, Dk. VII, 7, 12.
 Parshad-tôrâ, man, Int. 6, 47; Dk. VII, 4, 31-34.
 Parsi calendar, Int. 79-89; how rectified, Int. 85.
 Pâtakhsrôbô, king, Int. 3, 48; Dk. VII, 1, 34.
 Persia, Int. 55 n, 63, 79.
 Pêrdâdian, Int. 3; Dk. VII, 2, 70.
 Pêshyôtan, prince, Int. 7, 10, 42, 43; Dk. VII, 4, 81; 5, 12; 6, 13; V, 3, 3.
 Pestilence, demon, Dk. VII, 4, 37, 38.
 Plato, Int. 71, 77.
 Pliny the Elder, Int. 71, 73, 75, 76.
 Pôrûkâst, woman, Int. 29, 30.
 Pôrûshâspô, man, Int. 4, 30, 49; Dk. VII, 2, 10, 13, 21, 29-35, 39-41, 46-48, 56-58, 70; 3, 3, 4, 7-11, 13, 15, 21, 23, 24, 26, 27, 32, 34, 37, 38; V, 2, 2, 4; Zs. 13, 6; 14, 16; 15, 4; 16, 1, 3-6; 17, 2; 18, 1, 2, 4-6; 19, 1-4; 20, 1, 6; 21, 3.
 Pouruspâdha, wizard, Zs. 23, 10 n.
 Proconnesian Zoroaster, Int. 73.
 Purtarâspô, man, Zs. 13, 6.
 Pûr-tôrâ, man, Dk. VII, 2, 70.
 Ragan, man, Dk. VII, 2, 51 n, 70 n.
 Ragîun, man, Dk. VII, 2, 70 n.
 Râi, city, Int. 32.
 Râk, man, Dk. VII, 2, 51; 3, 19, 39; or Râgh, Int. 17; Zs. 16, 11-13.
 Ramak-tôrâ, man, Dk. VII, 2, 70.
 Rangûstar, man, Zs. 15, 5.
 Rasâstât, angel, Dk. VII, 4, 81 n.
 Rashn, angel, Dk. VII, 7, 11.
 Rashn-rêsh, apostate, Int. 9; Dk. VII, 7, 11.
 Râstare-vaghent, priest, Int. 64, 70; Dk. VII, 7, 19 n.
 Ratûstar, man, Zs. 15, 5.
 Renovation of the universe, Int. 13, 55, 77; Dk. VII, 1, 41, 42, 54; 10, 10; 11, 10, 11; Zs. 23, 3.
 Romans, Int. 63, 65.
 Sacred beings, Int. 6, 15, 19, 48, 52, 55; Dk. VII, 1, 4, 12, 14, 41; 2, 10, 61, 62; 3, 47-49; 4, 21, 46, 62, 70, 80; 5, 12; 8, 6, 60; V, 2, 7; Zs. 14, 7; 21, 10.
 Sacred fires, Dk. VII, 7, 2.
 Sagastân, land, Int. 6, 47; Dk. VII, 4, 31.
 Salm, prince, Dk. VII, 1, 30.
 Sâmak, man, Dk. VII, 1, 15.

- Sâmân, patron., Dk. VII, 1, 32; V, 1, 8.
 Sanskrit, Int. 78.
 Saoshyant, apostle, Int. 30.
 Sarâi, town, Zs. 22, 8.
 Sâsânian, Int. 9, 31, 50, 57, 68, 69.
 Satavêš, star, Zs. 22, 9.
 Selections of Zâd-spâram, Int. 1, 15, 24.
 Semiramis, queen, Int. 71, 74.
 Shahpûhar II, king, Int. 26, 58, 61, 63, 64, 88; Dk. VII, 7, 19 n.
 — III, king, Int. 64, 87.
 Sham = Shâm, land, Zs. 20, 4 n.
 Shapân, Dk. VII, 7, 3.
 Shapigân or Shaspigân, Dk. VII, 7, 3 n.
 Shapîr-abû, woman, Dk. VII, 9, 18.
 Shatraver, angel, Dk. VII, 2, 19.
 Shatvêr, angel, Zs. 22, 8.
 Shêdâsfar (Theodosius?), Int. 10, 27; Dk. VII, 8, 47 n.
 Shedâspô, Dk. VII, 8, 47.
 Shemîg-abû, woman, Dk. VII, 8, 55.
 Sirkân, town, Zs. 12, 0 n.
 Siyah-tôrâ, man, Dk. VII, 2, 70.
 Siyâmak, man, Dk. VII, 2, 70; V, 1, 8; 4, 1; Zs. 13, 6.
 Siyâvakhsh, prince, Dk. VII, 1, 39.
 Sôg-tôrâ, man, Dk. VII, 2, 70.
 Sôshâns, apostle, Int. 12, 13, 55; Dk. VII, 1, 42, 53; 10, 10, 15; 11, 1, 2; V, 2, 15; 3, 3; Zs. 21, 7.
 Spendarmad, angel, Int. 6, 15, 55; Dk. VII, 2, 19; 4, 57, 58; 8, 5 n; Zs. 12, 2, 3, 5, 6; 16, 3; 22, 9; 23, 4.
 — month, Zs. 21, 1.
 Spend-dâd, prince, Int. 39, 55; Dk. VII, 7, 5; V, 2, 12.
 Spend nask, Int. 1, 2, 14, 20, 27, 46; Dk. VII, 2, 1 n.
 Spentô-khratvau, priest, Dk. VII, 7, 8, 10.
 Spêtô-tôrâ, man, Dk. VII, 2, 70.
 Spîtâm, man, Dk. VII, 2, 70; Zs. 13, 6.
 Spîtâmas, tribe, Int. 30; Dk. VII, 2, 9, 11, 29, 57; 7, 27; 8, 22, 35.
 Spîtôir, priest, Dk. VII, 6, 12.
 Sritak = Thritak, man, Zs. 13, 6.
 Sritô, hero, Int. 8, 15, 55; Dk. VII, 2, 63, 64; 6, 2, 3, 5, 7-9, 11, 13; Zs. 12, 10, 12-14, 16, 18, 20, 22, 24, 25.
 Sritô, woman, Zs. 23, 11.
 Srôbôvar, snake, Dk. VII, 1, 32.
 Srôsh, angel, Dk. VII, 3, 17; Zs. 16, 9.
 Sritûvôk-spâdâk, priest, Dk. VII, 7, 8, 10.
 Sûdkar nask, Int. 44.
 Sûrak, land, Zs. 20, 4 n.
 Sênôv, priest, Int. 9, 54, 55; Dk. VII, 7, 6; Zs. 23, 11.
 Tabaristân, land, Dk. VII, 7, 14 n.
 Tâkhmôrup, king, Int. 48, 55; Dk. VII, 1, 19; V, 1, 8; 4, 3.
 Talmud, MS., Dk. V, 1, 2 n.
 Tanâpûhar, sin, Dk. VII, 4, 19, 20.
 Tanvasar, priest, Int. 9, 62; Dk. VII, 7, 14, 17, 18.
 Tâx, man, Dk. VII, 1, 34.
 Tegend, r., Zs. 22, 7 n.
 Ten admonitions, MS., Zs. 24, 10-19.
 Thritak, man, Dk. VII, 2, 70.
 Tistar, star, Dk. VII, 2, 38 n.
 Tôgân, r., Zs. 22, 7.
 Trojan war, Int. 71.
 Tôg, prince, Dk. VII, 1, 30.
 Tûmâsp, prince, Dk. VII, 1, 31.
 Tûr, land, Dk. VII, 1, 31, 39.
 — = Tûrânian, Int. 6, 47; Dk. VII, 4, 6-10, 14-16, 20; 5, 12 n; 11, 3; V, 3, 2; Zs. 15, 3, 4; 17, 6; 20, 8.
 Tûrân, land, Dk. VII, 2, 62; Zs. 12, 8, 9.
 Tûrânian, Dk. VII, 2, 9 n, 63, 68; 3, 28; 7, 19; 9, 13; Zs. 12, 17.
 Turkish demons, Dk. VII, 8, 47.
 Urugadbasp, man, Dk. VII, 2, 70.
 Usikhsh, Int. 30.
 Uspâsnu, man, Dk. VII, 6, 12 n.
 Vadak, woman, Dk. VII, 2, 64; Zs. 12, 13.
 Vadast = Vaêdvôirt, Zs. 15, 3.
 Vaêdist, man, Dk. VII, 2, 70; Zs. 13, 6.
 Vaêdvôirt, karap, Int. 6, 47; Dk. VII, 2, 9 n; 4, 21, 23, 24.
 Vâêgered, prince, Int. 3; Dk. VII, 1, 16; V, 4, 2.
 Vakgir, land, Dk. VII, 1, 39.
 Vanôfravîm, man, Dk. VII, 2, 70.
 Varahrân fire, Zs. 22, 7.
 Vars, hair, Dk. VII, 4, 85.

- Varstmânsar nask, Int. 10.
 Verethraghna, angel, Int. 30.
 Vîdadafsh, region, Dk. VII, 6, 12 n.
 Vidrafr, wizard, Dk. VII, 4, 77 n.
 Vigîrkard-i Dênig, MS., Dk. VII, 2, 70 n.
Virafsang, man, Dk. VII, 1, 34 n.
 Visperad, MS., Int. 3.
 Visraps, tribe, Dk. VII, 6, 2, 7, 9, 11; Zs. 12, 10 n.
 Virtâsp, king, Int. 6-10, 14, 19, 29, 47, 49, 52, 55, 70; Dk. VII, 1, 2; 2, 9 n; 3, 31; 4, 63-67, 69-71, 74-76, 83-85, 89, 90; 5, 1, 2, 6, 7, 12; 6, 1, 2, 5, 6, 8, 11 n, 12-14; 7, 1, 2, 5 n, 38, 39; V, 2, 8, 10; 3, 1; Zs. 16, 12, 13; 23, 5, 7.
 Vivangha, man, Dk. VII, 1, 20; 2, 70; Zs. 13, 6.
Vîzak, woman, Dk. VII, 2, 70; Zs. 13, 6.
 Vohûmanô, angel, Int. 5, 16, 55; Dk. VII, 1, 4; 2, 17, 19, 24-26, 29, 33; 3, 17, 22, 26, 51, 52, 54, 56, 58-60, 62; 4, 29, 57, 74, 75, 78; 7, 19; V, 2, 5, 9; Zs. 14, 9-12; 16, 9; 20, 3; 21, 8, 11, 12; 22, 3, 6 n.
 — king, Int. 9, 55; Dk. VII, 7, 5.
 Vohûnêm, man, Int. 55; Zs. 23, 8, 11.
 Vohû-rôkô, man, Dk. VII, 8, 55; 9, 18; 10, 15.
 Vologeses I, king, Int. 88, 89.
 — III, king, Int. 61, 88.
 Wilson's Parsi Religion, Int. 31.
 Witch, Dk. VII, 1, 19; 5, 8; V, 2, 3; Zs. 17, 4.
 Witchcraft, Dk. VII, 2, 6, 7, 63; 3, 4, 8; 4, 72; 5, 8; 8, 6.
 Wizard, Dk. VII, 1, 19, 31, 39; 2, 8, 53, 54, 66; 3, 5, 42-44; 8, 29; V, 2, 3, 4, 8; Zs. 14, 3, 13, 16; 16, 2, 3; 17, 4; 18, 1, 5.
 Wrath, demon, Int. 16.
 Xanthus of Lydia, Int. 71.
 Xerxes, king, Int. 71, 73.
 Yâdkâr-i Zarîrân, MS., Dk. VII, 4, 77 n, 86 n.
 Yathâ-ahû-vairiyô, Dk. VII, 1, 4 n, 12 n; 4, 41, 56, 61.
 Yazdakard I, king, Int. 64, 66, 87, 88 n.
 — II and III, kings, Int. 58, 61.
 Yim, king, Int. 55; Dk. VII, 1, 20-22, 24, 25, 26 n, 32, 36; 2, 21, 59-61, 70; 9, 4; V, 1, 8; 2, 2, 9; 4, 3; Zs. 13, 5, 6; 15, 2 n.
 Yimak, princess, Zs. 15, 2 n.
 Yim's enclosure, Int. 11.
 Yûgyâst, meas., Dk. VII, 3, 16, 45.
 Zâd-sparam, priest, Int. 15, 25; Zs. 12, 0 n.
 Zâgh, man, Dk. VII, 6, 11 n.
 Zâinîgâv, prince, Dk. VII, 1, 34 n.
 Zâk, karap, Dk. VII, 2, 9 n; 4, 64, 67.
 Zand, Int. 37; Dk. VII, 8, 22, 36; V, 3, 4.
 Zarathustra, apostle, Int. 30; Dk. VII, 1, 34 n.
 Zaratûst, apostle, Int. 1-4, 6-8, 10, 15-17, 19, 20, 29, 32-43, 46-50, 52, 55, 61, 70-75, 77, 78; Dk. VII, 1, 3, 34, 43, 51; 2, 2, 3, 9 n, 10, 14, 15-22, 24 n, 27, 29, 36-40, 42, 43, 46, 47, 52, 53, 56, 60, 61, 64, 68-70; 3, 1 n, 4, 5, 7-9, 11-16, 20, 22, 32, 33, 36, 38-43, 46, 51, 54, 57, 59, 61, 62; 4, 3-6, 11, 12, 14, 16-19, 22-27, 29-31, 33-36, 38, 40-43, 45, 47-49, 51-55, 57, 58, 60, 61, 63, 64, 66, 67, 69, 70, 72-74, 86, 90; 5, 1, 2, 4-8; 6, 1, 12, 13; 7, 2, 14, 18, 19, 22, 29, 33-35, 37; 8, 1, 24, 25, 27, 29, 36, 38, 40, 42, 43, 48, 50, 51, 55, 56, 59; 9, 1, 6, 18, 19; 10, 15; V, 1, 7; 2, 1; 3, 1, 2, 4; Zs. 12, 6, 7; 13, 1, 4-6; 14, 1, 2, 8, 12, 15; 15, 1, 3, 4-6; 16, 1-4, 6, 7, 9-13; 17, 1, 6; 18, 2, 3, 6, 7; 19, 2, 4-7; 20, 2, 5, 9, 11-13, 16; 21, 2, 3, 5-9, 11, 12, 14, 15, 17, 24; 22, 2, 3, 6-12, 13 n; 23, 1, 7-11, 13.
 Zaratûst of the Spîtamâs, Dk. VII, 1, 2, 8, 41, 43, 44; 2, 67, 68; 3, 55, 56, 58, 60; 4, 15, 32, 39, 59, 75, 79, 81, 82, 86, 89; 5, 3; 7, 28; 8, 23, 31, 32, 34; V, 1, 7; Zs. 12, 12; 21, 10.
 Zaratûst, priest, Int. 64, 66, 70, 88.
 Zaratûst-nâmak of Zs., contents, Int. 15-19; MSS., Int. 24.

-
- Zarâtûstship, Dk. V, 4, 6.
 Zarîr, prince, Dk. VII, 4, 77 n; V, 2, 12.
 Zartust Bahrâm Pazdû, writer, Int. 32, 43, 46.
 Zartust-nâmah, Persian, Int. 31, 45, 46; Dk. VII, 4, 70 n; 5, 12 n; contents, Int. 32-44.
 Zbaurvant, man, Dk. VII, 7, 12 n.
 Zend, r., Zs. 22, 7 n.
 Zôis, man, Dk. VII, 2, 3, 4.
 Zôndak, r., Zs. 22, 7 n.
 Zoroaster, Int. 74, 75.
 Zoroastrian epoch, Int. 52.
 — legends, Int. 14, 2c, 27, 51, 59; scattered in other Pahl. texts, Int. 29; in Av., Int. 30, 31.
 Zôti, priest, Dk. VII, 8, 8.
 Zrayang, hau, priest, Dk. VII, 7, 8, 10.
 Zûsak, man, Dk. VII, 2, 70; Zs. 13, 6.
-

ERRATUM.

P. 20, l. 4. The name of the district of Alâk should probably be read Arâk, as the province is called Râgh in Zs. XVI, 13.

TRANSLITERATION OF ORIENTAL ALPHABETS ADOPTED FOR THE TRANSLATIONS
OF THE SACRED BOOKS OF THE EAST.

CONSONANTS.	MISSIONARY ALPHABET.			Sanskrit.	Zend.	Phoen.	Persian.	Arabic.	Hebrew.	Chinese.
	I Class.		III Class.
	I Class.	II Class.	III Class.
Gutturales.
1 Tenuis	k			क	𐬕	𐤊	𐬑	𐤊	𐤊	k
2 " aspirata	kh			ख	𐬖	𐤋	𐬒	𐤋	𐤋	kh
3 Media	g			ग	𐬗	𐤌	𐬓	𐤌	𐤌
4 " aspirata	gh			घ	𐬘	𐤍	𐬔	𐤍	𐤍
5 Gutturo-labialis	q			ङ	𐬙	𐤎	𐬕	𐤎	𐤎
6 Nasalis	h (ng)			𑖅	{ 𐬚 (ng) 𐬛 (N) 𐬜 (ng/ko)
7 Spiritus asper	h			ह	𐬞	𐤏	𐬖	𐤏	𐤏	h, hs
8 " lenis	,			𑖆
9 " asper faucalis	'h			𑖇
10 " lenis faucalis	'h			𑖈
11 " asper fricatus	. . .	'h		𑖉
12 " lenis fricatus	. . .	'h		𑖊
Gutturales modificatae (palatales, &c.)
13 Tenuis	k			𑖋	𐬟	𐤐	𐬗	𐤐	𐤐	k
14 " aspirata	kh			𑖌	𐬠	𐤑	𐬘	𐤑	𐤑	kh
15 Media	g			𑖍	𐬡	𐤒	𐬓	𐤒	𐤒
16 " aspirata	gh			𑖎	𐬢	𐤓	𐬔	𐤓	𐤓
17 " Nasalis	ṅ			𑖏	𐬣	𐤔	𐬕	𐤔	𐤔

CONSONANTS (continued).	MISSIONARY ALPHABET.			Sanskrit.	Zend.	Pehlevi.	Persian.	Arabic.	Hebrew.	Chinese.
	I Class.	II Class.	III Class.
18 Semivocalis	y	...	...	य	𐬨 ^{init.} 𐬩𐬪	𐬨	ي	ي	י	y
19 Spiritus asper	...	(y)	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
20 " lenis	...	(y)	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
21 " asper assibilatus	...	s	...	श	𐬯𐬰	𐬯	ش	ش	ש	z
22 " lenis assibilatus	...	z	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
Dentales.
23 Tenuis	t	...	...	त	𐬢	𐬢	ت	ت	ת	t
24 " aspirata	th	...	...	थ	𐬣	𐬣	تھ	تھ	ת	th
25 " assibilata	...	...	TH	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
26 Media	d	...	...	द	𐬤	𐬤	د	د	ד	...
27 " aspirata	dh	...	...	ध	𐬥	𐬥	दھ	دھ	ד	...
28 " assibilata	...	...	DH	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
29 Nasalis	n	...	...	न	𐬦	𐬦	ن	ن	נ	n
30 Semivocalis	l	...	...	ल	𐬧	𐬧	ل	ل	ל	l
31 " mollis 1	...	l	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
32 " mollis 2	...	...	L	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
33 Spiritus asper 1	s	...	...	स	𐬳	𐬳	س	س	ס	s
34 " asper 2	...	s	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
35 " lenis	z	...	s (f)	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
36 " asperimus 1	...	...	z (g)	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
37 " asperimus 2	...	...	z (3)	...	...	...	...	...	...	...

Dentales modificatæ (linguales, &c.)

- 38 Tenuis
39 " aspirata
40 Media
41 " aspirata
42 Nasalis
43 Semivocalis
44 " fricata
45 " diacritica
46 Spiritus asper
47 " lenis t th d dh

n r
R sh zh

ॢ
ॣ
।
॥
० ॠ ॡ
ॢ
ॣ

।
॥
० ॠ ॡ
ॢ
ॣ

।
॥
० ॠ ॡ
ॢ
ॣ

।
॥
० ॠ ॡ
ॢ
ॣ

Labiales.

- 48 Tenuis
49 " aspirata
50 Media
51 " aspirata
52 Tenuissima
53 Nasalis
54 Semivocalis
55 " aspirata
56 Spiritus asper
57 " lenis
58 Anuvāra
59 Visarga

p ph
b bh
m w hw
f
v
m h

।
॥
० ॠ ॡ
ॢ
ॣ

।
॥
० ॠ ॡ
ॢ
ॣ

।
॥
० ॠ ॡ
ॢ
ॣ

।
॥
० ॠ ॡ
ॢ
ॣ

VOWELS.	MISSIONARY ALPHABET.				Sanskrit.	Zend.	Pehlvi.	Persian.	Arabic.	Hebrew.	Chinese.
	I Class.		III Class.
	II Class.
1 Neutralis	0				...	...	...	...	...	...	...
2 Laryngo-palatalis	ē				...	...	...	...	...	...	...
3 " labialis	ō				...	...	...	...	...	...	...
4 Gutturalis brevis	a				...	...	...	...	...	...	...
5 " longa	ā		(a)		...	...	...	...	...	...	...
6 Palatalis brevis	i				...	...	...	...	...	...	...
7 " longa	ī		(i)		...	...	...	...	...	...	...
8 Dentalis brevis	u				...	...	...	...	...	...	...
9 " longa	ū				...	...	...	...	...	...	...
10 Lingualis brevis	ri				...	...	...	...	...	...	...
11 " longa	rī				...	...	...	...	...	...	...
12 Labialis brevis	u				...	...	...	...	...	...	...
13 " longa	ū		(u)		...	...	...	...	...	...	...
14 Gutturo-palatalis brevis	e				...	...	...	...	...	...	...
15 " longa	ē (ai)				...	...	...	...	...	...	...
16 Diphthongus gutturo-palatalis	āi				...	...	...	...	...	...	...
17 " " " "	ei (ēi)				...	...	...	...	...	...	...
18 " " " "	oi (ōu)				...	...	...	...	...	...	...
19 Gutturo-labialis brevis	o				...	...	...	...	...	...	...
20 " longa	ō (au)				...	...	...	...	...	...	...
21 Diphthongus gutturo-labialis	āu		(au)		...	...	...	...	...	...	...
22 " " " "	eu (ēu)				...	...	...	...	...	...	...
23 " " " "	ou (ōu)				...	...	...	...	...	...	...
24 Gutturalis fracta	ā				...	...	...	...	...	...	...
25 Palatalis fracta	ī				...	...	...	...	...	...	...
26 Labialis fracta	ū				...	...	...	...	...	...	...
27 Gutturo-labialis fracta	ō				...	...	...	...	...	...	...

OXFORD
PRINTED AT THE CLARENDON PRESS
BY HORACE HART, M.A.
PRINTER TO THE UNIVERSITY

A CATALOGUE

OF

Clarendon Press Publications.

Contents.

	PAGE
I. Literature and Philology	1-54
§ 1. Dictionaries, Grammars, &c.	1-5
§ 2. Anglo-Saxon and English	6
§ 3. European Languages, Mediaeval and Modern	17
1. French, Italian, &c.	17
2. German, &c.	20
3. Scandinavian	23
§ 4. Classical Languages	24
1. Latin	24
2. Greek	32
§ 5. Oriental Languages	45
§ 6. Anecdota Oxoniensia Series	52
II. Theology	55-67
A. The Holy Scriptures, &c.	55
B. Fathers of the Church, &c.	60
C. Ecclesiastical History, &c.	62
D. Liturgiology	64
E. English Theology	65
III. History, Biography, &c.	68-77
IV. Law	78
V. Philosophy, Logic, &c.	80
VI. Physical Science and Mathematics, &c.	82-90
VII. Art and Archaeology	91
VIII. Palaeography	92

Clarendon Press, Oxford.

I. LITERATURE AND PHILOLOGY.

SECTION I.

DICTIONARIES, GRAMMARS, &c.

ANGLO-SAXON. An Anglo-Saxon Dictionary, based on the MS. Collections of the late JOSEPH BOSWORTH, D.D. Edited and enlarged by Prof. T. N. TOLLER, M.A.

Parts I-III. A-SÁR. 4to, stiff covers, 15s. each.

Part IV. Sect. I. SÁR-SWÍÐRIAN. 8s. 6d.

„ Sect. II. SWÍÐ-SNEL-ÝTMEST. 18s. 6d.

* * A Supplement, which will complete the Work, is in active preparation.

— The Student's Dictionary of Anglo-Saxon. By H. SWEET, M.A., Ph.D., LL.D. Small 4to, 8s. 6d. net.

ARABIC. A Practical Arabic Grammar. Compiled by A. O. GREEN, Lieut.-Colonel, R.E.

Part I. Third Edition. Enlarged. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

Part II. Third Edition. Revised and Enlarged. 10s. 6d.

BENGALI. A Grammar of the Bengali Language; Literary and Colloquial. By JOHN BEAMES. Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.; cut flush, 6s.

BOHEMIAN. A Grammar of the Bohemian (or Čech) Language. By W. R. MORFILL, M.A. Crown 8vo, 6s.

Oxford: Clarendon Press. London: HENRY FROWDE, Amen Corner, E.C.

BURMESE. A Burmese Reader. By R. F. ST. ANDREW
ST. JOHN, Hon. M.A. Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

CELTIIC. Ancient Cornish Drama. Edited and translated by E. NORRIS, with a Sketch of Cornish Grammar, an Ancient Cornish Vocabulary, &c. 2 vols. 8vo, 21s.

The Sketch of Cornish Grammar separately, stitched, 2s. 6d.

CHINESE. A Handbook of the Chinese Language. By JAMES SUMMERS. 8vo, half-bound, 28s.

ENGLISH. A NEW ENGLISH DICTIONARY, on Historical Principles: founded mainly on the materials collected by the Philological Society. Imperial 4to. Edited by J. A. H. MURRAY, LL.D., &c.

				£	s.	d.
Vol. I.	{ A } { B }	By Dr. Murray	Half-morocco	2	12	6
Vol. II.	C	By Dr. Murray	Half-morocco	2	12	6
Vol. III.	{ D } { E }	By Dr. Murray } By Mr. Bradley }	Half-morocco	2	12	6
Vol. IV.	{ F } { G }	By Mr. Bradley	Half-morocco	2	12	6
Vol. V.	H—K.	By Dr. Murray. In the Press.	} For details see page 6.
Vol. VI.	L—N.	By Mr. Bradley. In the Press.

FINNISH. A Finnish Grammar. By C. N. E. ELIOT, M.A.
Crown 8vo, roan, 10s. 6d.

GOTHIC. A Primer of the Gothic Language. Containing the Gospel of St. Mark, Selections from the other Gospels, and the Second Epistle to Timothy. With Grammar, Notes, and Glossary. By JOSEPH WRIGHT, M.A., Ph.D. Second Edition. Extra fcap. 8vo, cloth, 4s. 6d.

GREEK. A Greek-English Lexicon, by H. G. LIDDELL, D.D., and ROBERT SCOTT, D.D. Eighth Edition, Revised. 4to, 1l. 16s.

— An Intermediate Greek-English Lexicon, founded upon the Quarto Edition. Small 4to, 12s. 6d.

— A Greek-English Lexicon, abridged from the Quarto Edition, chiefly for the use of Schools. Square 12mo, 7s. 6d.

— A Concordance to the Septuagint and the other Greek Versions of the Old Testament (including the Apocryphal Books).
By the late EDWIN HATCH, M.A., and H. A. REDPATH, M.A. In six Parts. Imperial 4to, 21s. each.

— Supplement, Fasc. I. Containing a Concordance to the Proper Names occurring in the Septuagint. By H. A. REDPATH, M.A.
Imperial 4to, 16s.

Oxford: Clarendon Press.

GREEK (continued). A copious Greek-English Vocabulary, compiled from the best authorities. 24mo, 3s.

— Etymologicon Magnum. Ad Codd. mss. recensuit et notis variorum instruxit T. GAISFORD, S.T.P. fol. 1l. 12s.

— Suidæ Lexicon. Ad Codd. mss. recensuit T. GAISFORD, S.T.P. Tomi III. fol. 2l. 2s.

HEBREW. A Hebrew and English Lexicon of the Old Testament, with an Appendix containing the Biblical Aramaic, based on the Thesaurus and Lexicon of GESSENIUS, by FRANCIS BROWN, D.D., S. R. DRIVER, D.D., and C. A. BRIGGS, D.D. Small 4to, 2s. 6d. each.
Parts I-IX. קט"ט—א

— Gesenius' Hebrew Grammar, as Edited and Enlarged by E. KAUTZSCH. Translated from the Twenty-fifth German Edition by the late Rev. G. W. COLLINS, M.A. The Translation revised and adjusted to the Twenty-sixth Edition by A. E. COWLEY, M.A. 8vo, 21s.

— The Book of Hebrew Roots, by ABU 'L-WALID MAHWAN IBN JANAH, otherwise called RABBI YONAH. Now first edited, with an Appendix, by AD. NEUBAUER, M.A. 4to, 2l. 7s. 6d.

— A Treatise on the use of the Tenses in Hebrew. By S. R. DRIVER, D.D. Third Edition. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

HINDŪSTĀNĪ. A HindŪstānī Grammar. By A. O. GREEN, Lieut.-Colonel, R.E. Crown 8vo, cloth.
Part I. 8s. 6d. Part II. 7s. 6d.

ICELANDIC. An Icelandic-English Dictionary, based on the MS. collections of the late RICHARD CLEASBY. Enlarged and completed by G. VIGFÚSSON, M.A. 4to, 3l. 7s.

— A List of English Words the Etymology of which is illustrated by comparison with Icelandic. Prepared in the form of an Appendix to the above. By W. W. SKEAT, Litt.D. Stitched, 2s.

— An Icelandic Primer, with Grammar, Notes, and Glossary. By HENRY SWEET, M.A., Ph.D. Second Edition. Extra fcap. 8vo, 3s. 6d.

— An Icelandic Prose Reader, with Notes, Grammar, and Glossary, by Dr. GUÐBRAND VIGFÚSSON and F. YORK POWELL, M.A. Extra fcap. 8vo, 10s. 6d.

LATIN. A Latin Dictionary, founded on Andrews' edition of Freund's Latin Dictionary, revised, enlarged, and in great part re-written, by CHARLTON T. LEWIS, Ph.D., and CHARLES SHORT, LL.D. 4to, 1l. 5s.

London: HENRY FROWDE, Amen Corner, E.C.

Latin (continued). A School Latin Dictionary. By CHARLTON T. LEWIS, Ph.D. Small 4to, 18s.

— An Elementary Latin Dictionary. By CHARLTON T. LEWIS, Ph.D. Square 8vo, 7s. 6d.

— Scheller's Dictionary of the Latin Language, revised and translated into English by J. E. RIDDLE, M.A. fol. 21s.

— Contributions to Latin Lexicography. By HENRY NETTLESHIP, M.A. 8vo, 21s.

MELANESIAN. The Melanesian Languages. By ROBERT H. CODRINGTON, D.D. 8vo, 18s.

RUSSIAN. A Grammar of the Russian Language. By W. R. MORFILL, M.A. Crown 8vo, 6s.

SANSKRIT. A Practical Grammar of the Sanskrit Language, arranged with reference to the Classical Languages of Europe, for the use of English Students, by Sir M. MONIER-WILLIAMS, D.C.L. Fourth Edition. 8vo, 15s.

— A Sanskrit-English Dictionary, Etymologically and Philologically arranged, with special reference to cognate Indo-European Languages. By Sir MONIER MONIER-WILLIAMS, M.A., K.C.I.E., with the collaboration of Prof. E. LEUMANN, Ph.D., and Prof. E. CAPELLER, Ph.D., and other Scholars. New Edition, greatly Enlarged and Improved. 4to, cloth, bevelled edges, 3l. 13s. 6d.; Half-morocco, 4l. 4s.

— Nalopākhyānam. Story of Nala, an Episode of the Mahā-Bhārata: the Sanskrit text, with a copious Vocabulary, and an improved version of Dean MILMAN's Translation, by Sir M. MONIER-WILLIAMS, D.C.L. Second Edition, Revised and Improved. 8vo, 15s.

